[8] It seems trite but necessary to say that the First Amendment to our Constitution was designed to avoid these ends by avoiding these beginnings. There is no mysticism in the American concept of the State or of the nature or origin of its authority. We set up government by consent of the governed, and the Bill of Rights denies those in power any legal opportunity to coerce that consent. Authority here is to be controlled by public opinion, not public opinion by authority.

[9] The case is made difficult not because the principles of its decision are obscure but because the flag involved is our own. Nevertheless, we apply the limitations of the Constitution with no fear that freedom to be intellectually and spiritually diverse or even contrary will disintegrate the social organization. To believe that patriotism will not flourish if patriotic ceremonies are voluntary and spontaneous instead of a compulsory routine is to make an unflattering estimate of the appeal of our institutions to free minds. We can have intellectual individualism *642 and the rich cultural diversities that we owe to exceptional minds only at the price of occasional eccentricity and abnormal attitudes. When they are so harmless to others or to the State as those we deal with here, the price is not too great. But freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom. The test of its substance is the right to differ as to things that touch the heart of the existing order.

[10] If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein. If there are any circumstances which permit an exception, they do not now occur to us. [FN19]

FN19 The Nation may raise armies and compel citizens to give military service. Selective Draft Law Cases (Arver v. United States), 245 U.S. 366, 38 S.Ct. 159, 62 L.Ed. 349, L.R.A.1918C, 361, Ann.Cas.1918B, 856. It follows, of course, that those subject to military discipline are under many duties and may not claim many freedoms that we hold inviolable as to those in civilian life.

[11] We think the action of the local authorities in compelling the flag salute and pledge transcends constitutional limitations on their power and invades the sphere of intellect and spirit which it is the purpose of the First Amendment to our Constitution to reserve from all official control.

The decision of this Court in Minersville School District v. Gobitis and the holdings of those few per curiam decisions which preceded and foreshadowed it are overruled, and the judgment enjoining enforcement of the West Virginia Regulation is affirmed.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice ROBERTS and Mr. Justice REED adhere to the views expressed by the Court in *643 Minersville School District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493, and are of the opinion that the judgment below should be reversed.

Mr. Justice BLACK and Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, concurring.

We are substantially in agreement with the opinion just read, but since we originally joined with the Court in the Gobitis case, it is appropriate that we make a brief statement of reasons for our change of view.

Reluctance to make the Federal Constitution a rigid bar against state regulation of conduct thought inimical to the public welfare was the controlling influence which moved us to consent to the Gobitis decision. Long reflection convinced us that although the principle is sound, its application

1188 in the particular case was wrong. Jones v. Opelika, 316 U.S. 584, 623, 62 S.Ct. 1231, 1251, 86 L.Ed. 1691, 141 A.L.R. 514. We believe that the statute before us fails to accord full scope to the freedom of religion secured to the appellees by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

The statute requires the appellees to participate in a ceremony aimed at inculcating respect for the flag and for this country. The Jehovah's Witnesses, without any desire to show disrespect for either the flag or the country, interpret the Bible as commanding, at the risk of God's displeasure, that they not go through the form of a pledge of allegiance to any flag. The devoutness of their belief is evidenced by their willingness to suffer persecution and punishment, rather than make the pledge.

No well-ordered society can leave to the individuals an absolute right to make final decisions, unassailable by the State, as to everything they will or will not do. The First Amendment does not go so far. Religious faiths, honestly held, do not free individuals from responsibility to conduct themselves obediently to laws which are either imperatively necessary to protect society as a whole from grave *644 and pressingly imminent dangers or which, without any general prohibition, merely regulate time, place or manner of religious activity. Decision as to the constitutionality of particular laws which strike at the substance of religious tenets and practices must be made be this Court. The duty is a solemn one, and in meeting it we cannot say that a failure, because of religious scruples, to assume a particular physical position and to repeat the words of a patriotic formula creates a grave danger to the nation. Such a statutory exaction is a form of test oath, and the test oath has always been abhorrent in the United States.

Words uttered under coercion are proof of loyalty to nothing but self- interest. Love of country must spring from willing hearts and free minds, inspired by a fair administration of wise laws enacted by the people's elected representatives within the bounds of express constitutional prohibitions. These laws must, to be consistent with the First Amendment, permit the widest toleration of conflicting viewpoints consistent with a society of free men.

Neither our domestic tranquillity in peace nor our martial effort in war depend on compelling little children to participate in a ceremony which ends in nothing for them but a fear of spiritual condemnation. If, as we think, their fears are groundless, time and reason are the proper antidotes for their errors. The ceremonial, when enforced against conscientious objectors, more likely to defeat than to serve its high purpose, is a handy implement for disguised religious persecution. As such, it is inconsistent with our Constitution's plan and purpose.

Mr. Justice MURPHY, concurring.

I agree with the opinion of the Court and join in it.

The complaint challenges an order of the State Board of Education which requires teachers and pupils to participate in the prescribed salute to the flag. For refusal to conform with the requirement the State law prescribes expulsion. *645 The offender is required by law to be treated as unlawfully absent from school and the parent or guardian is made liable to prosecution and punishment for such absence. Thus not only is the privilege of public education conditioned on compliance with the requirement, but non-compliance is virtually made unlawful. In effect compliance is compulsory and not optional. It is the claim of appellees that the regulation is invalid as a restriction on religious freedom and freedom of speech, secured to them against State infringement by the First and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. DP A reluctance to interfere with considered state action, the fact that the end sought is a desirable one, the emotion aroused by the flag as a symbol for which we have fought and are now fighting again,--all of these are understandable. But there is before us the right of freedom to believe, freedom to worship one's Maker according to the dictates of one's conscience, a right which the Constitution specifically shelters. Reflection has convinced me that as a judge I have no loftier duty or responsibility than to uphold that spiritual freedom to its farthest reaches.

The right of freedom of thought and of religion as guaranteed by the Constitution 1189 against State action includes both the right to speak freely and the right to refrain from speaking at all, except in so far as essential operations of government may require it for the preservation of an orderly society,--as in the case of compulsion to give evidence in court. Without wishing to disparage the purposes and intentions of those who hope to inculcate sentiments of loyalty nd patriotism by requiring a declaration of allegiance as a feature of public education, or unduly belittle the benefits that may accrue therefrom, I am impelled to conclude that such a requirement is not essential to the maintenance of effective government and orderly society. To many it is deeply distasteful to join in a public chorus of affirmation of private belief. By some, including 646 the members of this sect, it is apparently regarded as incompatible with a primary religious obligation and therefore a restriction on religious freedom. Official compulsion to affirm what is contrary to one's religious beliefs is the antithesis of freedom of worship which, it is well to recall, was achieved in this country only after what Jefferson characterized as the 'severest contests in which I have ever been engaged.' [FN20]

FN20 See Jefferson, Autobiography, vol. 1, pp. 53--59.

I am unable to agree that the benefits that may accrue to society from the compulsory flag salute are sufficiently definite and tangible to justify the invasion of freedom and privacy that it entailed or to compensate for a restraint on the freedom of the individual to be vocal or silent according to his conscience or personal inclination. The trenchant words in the preamble to the Virginia Statute for Religious Freedom remain unanswerable: '* * * all attempts to influence (the mind) by temporal punishment, or burthens, or by civil incapacitations, tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, * * *.' Code Va.1919, s 34. Any spark of love for country which may be generated in a child or his associates by forcing him to make what is to him an empty gesture and recite words wrung from him contrary to his religious beliefs is overshadowed by the desirability of preserving freedom of conscience to the full. It is in that freedom and the example of persuasion, not in force and compulsion, that the real unity of America lies.

Mr. Justice FRANKFURTER, dissenting.

One who belongs to the most vilified and persecuted minority in history is not likely to be insensible to the freedoms guaranteed by our Constitution. Were my purely personal attitude relevant I should whole-heartedly associate myself with the general libertarian views in the Court's opinion, representing as they do the thought and 647 action of a lifetime. But as judges we are neither Jew nor Gentile, neither Catholic nor agnostic. We owe equal attachment to the Constitution and are equally bound by our judicial obligations whether we derive our citizenship from the earliest or the latest immigrants to these shores. As a member of this Court I am not justified in writing my private notions of policy into the Constitution, no matter how deeply I may cherish them or how mischievous I may deem their disregard. They duty of a judge who must decide which of two claims before the Court shall prevail, that of a State to enact and enforce laws within its general competence or that of an individual to refuse obedience because of the demands of his conscience, is not that of the ordinary person. It can never be emphasized too much that one's own opinion about the wisdom or evil of a law should be excluded altogether when one is doing one's duty on the bench. The only opinion of our own even looking in that direction that is material is our opinion whether legislators could in reason have enacted such a law. In the light of all the circumstances, including the history of this question in this Court, it would require more daring than I possess to deny that reasonable legislators could have taken the action which is before us for review. Most unwillingly, therefore, I must differ from my brethren with regard to legislation like this. I cannot bring my mind to believe that the 'liberty' secured by the Due Process Clause gives this Court authority to deny to the State of West Virginia the attainment of that which we all recognize as a legitimate legislative end, *1190 namely, the promotion of good citizenship, by employment of the means here chosen.

Not so long ago we were admonished that 'the only check upon our own exercise of power is our own sense of self-restraint. For the removal of unwise laws from the statute books appeal lies, not to the courts, but to the ballot and to the processes of democratic government.' 648 United States v.

Butler, 297 U.S. 1, 79, 56 S.Ct. 312, 325, 80 L.Ed. 477, 102 A.L.R. 914 (dissent). We have been told that generalities do not decide concrete cases. But the intensity with which a general principle is held may determine a particular issue, and whether we put first things first may decide a specific controversy.

The admonition that judicial self-restraint alone limits arbitrary exercise of our authority is relevant every time we are asked to nullify legislation. The Constitution does not give us greater veto power when dealing with one phase of 'liberty' than with another, or when dealing with grade school regulations than with college regulations that offend conscience, as was the case in Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343. In neither situation is our function comparable to that of a legislature or are we free to act as though we were a superlegislature. Judicial self-restraint is equally necessary whenever an exercise of political or legislative power is challenged. There is no warrant in the constitutional basis of this Court's authority for attributing different ro les to it depending upon the nature of the challenge to the legislation. Our power does not vary according to the particular provision of the Bill of Rights which is invoked. The right not to have property taken without just compensation has, so far as the scope of judicial power is concerned, the same constitutional dignity as the right to be protected against unreasonable searches and seizures, and the latter has no less claim than freedom of the press or freedom of speech or religious freedom. In no instance is this Court the primary protector of the particular liberty that is invoked. This Court has recognized, what hardly could be denied, that all the provisions of the first ten Amendments are 'specific' prohibitions, United States v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 152, 58 S.Ct. 778, 783, 82 L.Ed. 1234, note 4. But each specific Amendment, in so far as embraced within the Fourteenth Amendment, must be equally respected, and the function of this 649 Court does not differ in passing on the constitutionality of legislation challenged under different Amendments.

When Mr. Justice Holmes, speaking for this Court, wrote that 'it must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts', Missouri, Kansas & Texas R. Co. v. May, 194 U.S. 267, 270, 24 S.Ct. 638, 639, 48 L.Ed. 971, he went to the very essence of our constitutional system and the democratic conception of our society. He did not mean that for only some phases of civil government this Court was not to supplant legislatures and sit in judgment upon the right or wrong of a challenged measure. He was stating the comprehensive judicial duty and role of this Court in our constitutional scheme whenever legislation is sought to be nullified on any ground, namely, that responsibility for legislation lies with legislatures, answerable as they are directly to the people, and this Court's only and very narrow function is to determine whether within the broad grant of authority vested in legislatures they have exercised a judgment for which reasonable justification can be offered.

The framers of the federal Constitution might have chosen to assign an active share in the process of legislation to this Court. They had before them the well-known example of New York's Council of Revision, which had been functioning since 1777. After stating that 'laws inconsistent with the spirit of this constitution, or with the public good, may be hastily and unadvisedly passed', the state constitution made the judges of New York part of the legislative process by providing that 'all bills which have passed the senate and assembly shall, before they become laws', be presented to a Council of which the judges constituted a majority, 'for their revisal and consideration'. Art. III, New York Constitution of 1777. Judges exercised this legislative function in New York 650 for nearly fifty years. See Art. I, s 12, New York Constitution of 1821. But the framers of the Constitution denied such legislative powers to the federal judiciary. *1191 They chose instead to insulate the judiciary from the legislative function. They did not grant to this Court supervision over legislation.

The reason why from the beginning even the narrow judicial authority to nullify legislation has been viewed with a jealous eye is that it serves to prevent the full play of the democratic process. The fact that it may be an undemocratic aspect of our scheme of government does not call for its rejection or its disuse. But it is the best of reasons, as this Court has frequently recognized, for the greatest caution in its use.

The precise scope of the question before us defines the limits of the constitutional power that is in issue. The State of West Virginia requires all pupils to share in the salute to the flag as part of school training in citizenship. The present action is one to enjoin the enforcement of this requirement by those in school attendance. We have not before us any attempt by the State to punish disobedient children or visit penal consequences on their parents. All that is in question is the right of the state to compel participation in this exercise by those who choose to attend the public schools.

We are not reviewing merely the action of a local school board. The flag salute requirement in this case comes before us with the full authority of the State of West Virginia. We are in fact passing judgment on 'the power of the State as a whole'. Rippey v. Texas, 193 U.S. 504, 509, 24 S.Ct. 516, 517, 48 L.Ed. 767; Skiriotes v. Florida, 313 U.S. 69, 79, 61 S.Ct. 924, 930, 85 L.Ed. 1193. Practically we are passing upon the political power of each of the forty-eight states. Moreover, since the First Amendment has been read into the Fourteenth, our problem is precisely the same is it would be if we had before us an Act of Congress for the District of Columbia. To suggest that we are here concerned 651 with the heedless action of some village tyrants is to distort the augustness of the constitutional issue and the reach of the consequences of our decision.

Under our constitutional system the legislature is charged solely with civil concerns of society. If the avowed or intrinsic legislative purpose is either to promote or to discourage some religious community or creed, it is clearly within the constitutional restrictions imposed on legislatures and cannot stand. But it by no means follows that legislative power is wanting whenever a general non-discriminatory civil regulation in fact touches conscientious scruples or religious beliefs of an individual or a group. Regard for such scruples or beliefs undoubtedly presents one of the most reasonable claims for the exertion of legislative accommodation. It is, of course, beyond our power to rewrite the state's requirement, by providing exemptions for those who do not wish to participate in the flag salute or by making some other accommodations to meet their scruples. That wisdom might suggest the making of such accommodations and that school administration would not find it too difficult to make them and yet maintain the ceremony for those not refusing to conform, is outside our province to suggest. Tact, respect, and generosity toward variant views will always commend themselves to those charged with the duties of legislation so as to achieve a maximum of good will and to require a minimum of unwilling submission to a general law. But the real question is, who is to make such accommodations, the courts or the legislature?

This is no dry, technical matter. It cuts deep into one's conception of the democratic process--it concerns no less the practical differences between the means for making these accommodations that are open to courts and to legislatures. A court can only strike down. It can only say 'This or that law is void.' It cannot modify or qualify, it cannot make exceptions to a general requirement. 652 And it strikes down not merely for a day. At least the finding of unconstitutionality ought not to have ephemeral significance unless the Constitution is to be reduced to the fugitive importance of mere legislation. When we are dealing with the Constitution of the United States, and more particularly with the great safeguards of the Bill of Rights, we are dealing with principles of liberty and justice 'so rooted in the traditions and conscience of our people as to be ranked as fundamental'--something without which 'a fair and enlightened system of justice would be impossible'. Palko v. Connecticut, 302 U.S. 319, 325, 58 S.Ct. 149, 152, 82 L.Ed. 288; *1192Hurtado v. California, 110 U.S. 516, 530, 531, 4 S.Ct. 111, 118, 119, 292, 28 L.Ed. 232. If the function of this Court is to be essentially no different from that of a legislature, if the considerations governing constitutional construction are to be substantially those that underlie legislation, then indeed judges should not have life tenure and they should be made directly responsible to the electorate. There have been many but unsuccessful proposals in the last sixty years to amend the Constitution to that end. See Sen. Doc. No. 91, 75th Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 248--51.

Conscientious scruples, all would admit, cannot stand against every legislative compulsion to do positive acts in conflict with such scruples. We have been told that such compulsions override religious scruples only as to major concerns of the state. But the determination of what is major and what is minor itself raises questions of policy. For the way in which men equally guided by reason appraise importance goes to the very heart of policy. Judges should be very diffident in setting their judgment against that of a state in determining what is and what is not a major concern, what means are appropriate to proper ends, and what is the total social cost in striking the balance of imponderables.

What one can say with assurance is that the history out of which grew constitutional provisions for religious equality *653 and the writings of the great exponents of religious freedom--Jefferson, Madison, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin--are totally wanting in justification for a claim by dissidents of exceptional immunity from civic measures of general applicability, measures not in fact disguised assaults upon such dissident views. The great leaders of the American Revolution were determined to remove political support from every religious establishment. They put on an equality the different religious sects--Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Catholics, Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, Huguenots--which, as dissenters, had been under the heel of the various orthodoxies that prevailed in different colonies. So far as the state was concerned, there was to be neither orthodoxy nor heterodoxy. And so Jefferson and those who followed him wrote guaranties of religious freedom into our constitutions. Religious minorities as well as religious majorities were to be equal in the eyes of the political state. But Jefferson and the others also knew that minorities may disrupt society. It never would have occurred to them to write into the Constitution the subordination of the general civil authority of the state to sectarian scruples.

The constitutional protection of religious freedom terminated disabilities, it did not create new privileges. It gave religious equality, not civil immunity. Its essence is freedom from conformity to religious dogma, not freedom from conformity to law because of religious dogma. Religious loyalties may be exercised without hindrance from the state, not the state may not exercise that which except by leave of religious loyalties is within the domain of temporal power. Otherwise each individual could set up his own censor against obedience to laws conscientiously deemed for the public good by those whose business it is to make laws.

The prohibition against any religious establishment by the government placed denominations on an equal footing--*654 it assured freedom from support by the government to any mode of worship and the freedom of individuals to support any mode of worship. Any person may therefore believe or disbelieve what he pleases. He may practice what he will in his own house of worship or publicly within the limits of public order. But the lawmaking authority is not circumscribed by the variety of religious beliefs, otherwise the constitutional guaranty would be not a protection of the free exercise of religion but a denial of the exercise of legislation.

The essence of the religious freedom guaranteed by our Constitution is therefore this: no religion shall either receive the state's support or incur its hostility. Religion is outside the sphere of political government. This does not mean that all matters on which religious organizations or beliefs may pronounce are outside the sphere of government. Were this so, instead of the separation of church and state, there would be the subordination of the state on any matter deemed within the sovereignty of the religious conscience. Much that is the concern of temporal authority affects the spiritual interests of men. But it is not enough to strike down a non-discriminatory 1193 law that it may hurt or offend some dissident view. It would be too easy to cite numerous prohibitions and injunctions to which laws run counter if the variant interpretations of the Bible were made the tests of obedience to law. The validity of secular laws cannot be measured by their conformity to religious doctrines. It is only in a theocratic state that ecclesiastical doctrines measure legal right or wrong.

An act compelling profession of allegiance to a religion, no matter how subtly or tenuously promoted, is bad. But an act promoting good citizenship and national allegiance is within the domain of governmental authority and is therefore to be judged by the same considerations of power and of constitutionality as those involved in the many *655 claims of immunity from civil obedience because of religious scruples.

That claims are pressed on behalf of sincere religious convictions does not of itself establish their constitutional validity. Nor does waving the banner of religious fredom relieve us from examining into the power we are asked to deny the states. Otherwise the doctrine of separation of church and state, so cardinal in the history of this nation and for the liberty of our people, would mean not the disestablishment of a state church but the establishment of all churches and of all religious groups.

The subjection of dissidents to the general requirement of saluting the flag, as a measure conducive to the training of children in good citizenship, is very far from being the first instance of exacting obedience to general laws that have offended deep religious scruples. Compulsory vaccination, see Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 49 L.Ed. 643, 3 Ann.Cas. 765, food inspection regulations, see Shapiro v. Lyle, D.C., 30 F.2d 971, the obligation to bear arms, see Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 267, 55 S.Ct. 197, 206, 79 L.Ed. 343, testimonial duties, see Stansbury v. Marks, 2 Dall. 213, 1 L.Ed. 353, compulsory medical treatment, see People v. Vogelgesang, 221 N.Y. 290, 116 N.E. 977--these are but illustrations of conduct that has often been compelled in the enforcement of legislation of general applicability even though the religious consciences of particular individuals rebelled at the exaction.

Law is concerned with external behavior and not with the inner life of man. It rests in large measure upon compulsion. Socreates lives in history partly because he gave his life for the conviction that duty of obedience to secular law does not presuppose consent to its enactment or belief in its virtue. The consent upon which free government rests is the consent that comes from sharing in the process of making and unmaking laws. The state is not shut out from a domain because the individual conscience may deny the state's claim. The individual conscience 656 may profess what faith it chooses. It may affirm and promote that faith--in the language of the Constitution, it may 'exercise' it freely--but it cannot thereby restrict community action through political organs in matters of community concern, so long as the action is not asserted in a discriminatory way either openly or by stealth. One may have the right to practice one's religion and at the same time owe the duty of formal obedience to laws that run counter to one's beliefs. Compelling belief implies denial of opportunity to combat it and to assert dissident views. Such compulsion is one thing. Quite another matter is submission to conformity of action while denying its wisdom or virtue and with ample opportunity for seeking its change or abrogation.

In Hamilton v. Regents, 293 U.S. 245, 55 S.Ct. 197, 79 L.Ed. 343, this Court unanimously held that one attending a state-maintained university cannot refuse attendance on courses that offend his religious scruples. That decision is not overruled today, but is distinguished on the ground that attendance at the institution for higher education was voluntary and therefore a student could not refuse compliance with its conditions and yet take advantage of its opportunities. But West Virginia does not compel the attendance at its public schools of the children here concerned. West Virginia does not so compel, for it cannot. This Court denied the right of a state to require its children to attend public schools. Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070, 39 A.L.R. 468. As to its public schools, West Virginia imposes conditions *1194 which it deems necessary in the development of future citizens precisely as California deemed necessary the requirements that offended the student's conscience in the Hamilton case. The need for higher education and the duty of the state to provide it as part of a public educational system, are part of the democratic faith of most of our states. The right to secure such education in institutions not maintained by public funds is unquestioned. 657 But the practical opportunities for obtaining what is becoming in increasing measure the conventional equipment of American youth may be no less burdensome than that which parents are increasingly called upon to bear in sending their children to parochial schools because the education provided by public schools, though supported by their taxes, does not satisfy their ethical and educational necessities. I find it impossible, so far as constitutional power is concerned, to differentiate what was sanctioned in the Hamilton case from what is nullified in this case. And for me it still remains to be explained why the grounds of Mr. Justice Cardozo's opinion in Hamilton v. Regents, supra, are not sufficient to sustain the flag salute requirement. Such a requirement, like the requirement in the Hamilton case, 'is not an interference by the state with the free exercise of religion when the liberties of the Constitution are read in the light of a century and a half of history during days of peace and war.' 293 U.S. 245, 266,

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

55 S.Ct. 197, 206, 79 L.Ed. 343. The religious worshiper, 'if his liberties were to be thus extended, might refuse to contribute taxes * * * in furtherance of any other and condemned by his conscience as irreligious or immoral. The right of private judgment has never yet been so exalted above the powers and the compulsion of the agencies of government.' Id., 293 U.S. at page 268, 55 S.Ct. at page 206, 79 L.Ed. 343.

Parents have the privilege of choosing which schools they wish their children to attend. And the question here is whether the state may make certain requirements that seem to it desirable or important for the proper education of those future citizens who go to schools maintained by the states, or whether the pupils in those schools may be relieved from those requirements if they run counter to the consciences of their parents. Not only have parents the right to send children to schools of their own choosing but the state has no right to bring such schools 'under a strict governmental control' or give 'affirmative direction 658 concerning the intimate and essential details of such schools, intrust their control to public officers, and deny both owners and patrons reasonable choice and discretion in respect of teachers, curriculum and textbooks'. Farrington v. Tokushige, 273 U.S. 284, 298, 47 S.Ct. 406, 408, 409, 71 L.Ed. 646. Why should not the state likewise have constitutional power to make reasonable provisions for the proper instruction of children in schools maintained by it?

When dealing with religious scruples we are dealing with an almost numberless variety of doctrines and beliefs entertained with equal sincerity by the particular groups for which they satisfy man's needs in his relation to the mysteries of the universe. There are in the United States more than 250 distinctive established religious denominations. In the state of Pennsylvania there are 120 of these, and in West Virginia as many as 65. But if religious scruples afford immunity from civic obedience to laws, they may be invoked by the religious beliefs of any individual even though he holds no membership in any sect or organized denomination. Certainly this Court cannot be called upon to determine what claims of conscience should be recognized and what should be rejected as satisfying the 'religion' which the Constitution protects. That would indeed resurrect the very discriminatory treatment of religion which the Constitution sought forever to forbid. And so, when confronted with the task of considering the claims of immunity from obedience to a law dealing with civil affairs because of religious scruples, we cannot conceive religion more narrowly than in the terms in which Judge Augustus N. Hand recently characterized it:

'It is unnecessary to attempt a definition of religion; the content of the term is found in the history of the human race and is incapable of compression into a few words. Religious belief arises from a sense of the inadequacy of reason 659 as a means of relating the individual to his fellow-men *1195 and to his universe. * * * (It) may justly be regarded as a response of the individual to an inward mentor, call it conscience or God, that is for many persons at the present time the equivalent of what has always been thought a religious impulse.' United States v. Kauten, 2 Cir., 133 F.2d 703, 708.

Consider the controversial issue of compulsory Bible-reading in public schools. The educational policies of the states are in great conflict over this, and the state courts are divided in their decisions on the issue whether the requirement of Bible-reading offends constitutional provisions dealing with religious freedom. The requirement of Bible-reading has been justified by various state courts as an appropriate means of inculcating ethical precepts and familiarizing pupils with the most lasting expression of great English literature. Is this Court to overthrow such variant state educational policies by denying states the right to entertain such convictions in regard to their school systems because of a belief that the King James version is in fact a sectarian text to which parents of the Catholic and Jewish faiths and of some Protestant persuasions may rightly object to having their children exposed? On the other hand the religious consciences of some parents may rebel at the absence of any Bible-reading in the schools. See State of Washington ex rel. Clithero v. Showalter, 284 U.S. 573, 52 S.Ct. 15, 76 L.Ed. 498. Or is this Court to enter the old controversy between science and religion by unduly defining the limits within which a state may experiment with its school curricula? The religious consciences of some parents may be offended by subjecting their children to the Biblical account of creation, while another state may offend parents by prohibiting a teaching of biology that contradicts such Biblical account. Compare Scopes v. State, 154 Tenn. 105, 289 S.W. 363, 53 A.L.R. 821. What of conscientious *660 objections to what is devoutly felt by parents to be the poisoning of impressionable minds of children by chauvinistic teaching of history? This is very far from a fanciful suggestion for in the belief of many thoughtful people nationalism is the seed-bed of war.

There are other issues in the offing which admonish us of the difficulties and complexities that confront states in the duty of administering their local school systems. All citizens are taxed for the support of public schools although this Court has denied the right of a state to compel all children to go to such schools and has recognized the right of parents to send children to privately maintained schools. Parents who are dissatisfied with the public schools thus carry a double educational burden. Children who go to public school enjoy in many states derivative advantages such as free text books, free lunch, and free transportation in going to and from school. What of the claims for equity of treatment of those parents who, because of religious scruples, cannot send their children to public schools? What of the claim that if the right to send children to privately maintained schools is partly an exercise of religious conviction, to render effective this right it should be accompanied by a quality of treatment by the state in supplying free textbooks, free lunch, and free transportation to children who go to private schools? What of the claim that such grants are offensive to the cardinal constitutional doctrine of separation of church and state?

These questions assume increasing importance in view of the steady growth of parochial schools both in number and in population. I am not borrowing trouble by adumbrating these issues nor am I parading horrible examples of the consequences of today's decision. I am aware that we must decide the case before us and not some other case. But that does not mean that a case is dissociated from the past and unrelated to the future. We must decide this *661 case with due regard for what went before and no less regard for what may come after. Is it really a fair construction of such a fundamental concept as the right freely to exercise one's religion that a state cannot choose to require all children who attend public school to make the same gesture of allegiance to the symbol of our national life because it may offend the conscience of some children, but that it may compel all children to attend public school to listen to the King James version although it may offend the consciences of their parents? And what of the larger issue of claiming immunity from obedience to a general civil regulation that has a reasonable 1196 relation to a public purpose within the general competence of the state? See Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 535, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070, 39 A.L.R. 468. Another member of the sect now before us insisted that in forbidding her two little girls, aged nine and twelve, to distribute pamphlets Oregon infringed her and their freedom of religion in that the children were engaged in 'preaching the gospel of God's Kingdom'. A procedural technicality led to the dismissal of the case, but the problem remains. McSparran v. City of Portland, 318 U.S. 768, 63 S.Ct. 759, 87 L.Ed. 1139.

These questions are not lightly stirred. They touch the most delicate issues and their solution challenges the best wisdom of political and religious statesmen. But it presents awful possibilities to try to encase the solution of these problems within the rigid prohibitions of unconstitutionality.

We are told that a flag salute is a doubtful substitute for adequate understanding of our institutions. The states that require such a school exercise do not have to justify it as the only means for promoting good citizenship in children, but merely as one of diverse means for accomplishing a worthy end. We may deem it a foolish measure, but the point is that this Court is not the organ of government to resolve doubts as to whether it will fulfill its purpose. Only if there be no doubt that any reasonable *662 mind could entertain can we deny to the states the right to resolve doubts their way and not ours.

That which to the majority may seem essential for the welfare of the state may offend the consciences of a minority. But, so long as no inroads are made upon the actual exercise of religion by the minority, to deny the political power of the majority to enact laws concerned with civil matters, simply because they may offend the consciences of a minority, really means that the consciences of a minority are more sacred and more enshrined in the Constitution than the consciences of a majority.

We are told that symbolism is a dramatic but primitive way of communicating ideas. Symbolism is inescapable. Even the most sophisticated live by symbols. But it is not for this Court to make psychological judgments as to the effectiveness of a particular symbol in inculcating concededly indispensable feelings, particularly if the state happens to see fit to utilize the symbol that represents our heritage and our hopes. And surely only flippancy could be responsible for the suggestion that constitutional validity of a requirement to salute our flag implies equal validity of a requirement to salute a dictator. The significance of a symbol lies in what it represents. To reject the swastika does not imply rejection of the Cross. And so it bears repetition to say that it mocks reason and denies our whole history to find in the allowance of a requirement to salute our flag on fitting occasions the seeds of sanction for obeisance to a leader. To deny the power to employ educational symbols is to say that the state's educational system may not stimulate the imagination because this may lead to unwise stimulation.

The right of West Virginia to utilize the flag salute as part of its educational process is denied because, so it is argued, it cannot be justified as a means of meeting a 'clear and present danger' to national unity. In passing it deserves to be noted that the four cases which unanimously*663 sustained the power of states to utilize such an educational measure arose and were all decided before the present World War. But to measure the state's power to make such regulations as are here resisted by the imminence of national danger is wholly to misconceive the origin and purpose of the concept of 'clear and present danger'. To apply such a test is for the Court to assume, however unwittingly, a legislative responsibility that does not belong to it. To talk about 'clear and present danger' as the touchstone of allowable educational policy by the states whenever school curricula may impinge upon the boundaries of individual conscience, is to take a felicitous phrase out of the context of the particular situation where it arose and for which it was adapted. Mr. Justice Holmes used the phrase 'clear and present danger' in a case involving mere speech as a means by which alone to accomplish sedition in time of war. By that phrase he meant merely to indicate that, in view of the protection given to utterance by the First Amendment, in order that mere utterance may 1197 not be proscribed, 'the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent.' Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52, 39 S.Ct. 247, 249, 63 L.Ed. 470. The 'substantive evils' about which he was speaking were inducement of insubordination in the military and naval forces of the United States and obstruction of enlistment while the country was at war. He was not enunciating a formal rule that there can be no restriction upon speech and, still less, no compulsion where conscience balks, unless imminent danger would thereby be wrought 'to our institutions or our government'.

The flag salute exercise has no kinship whatever to the oath tests so odious in history. For the oath test was one of the instruments for suppressing heretical beliefs. *664 Saluting the flag suppresses no belief not curbs it. Children and their parents may believe what they please, avow their belief and practice it. It is not even remotely suggested that the requirement for saluting the flag involves the slightest restriction against the fullest opportunity on the part both of the children and of their parents to disavow as publicly as they choose to do so the meaning that others attach to the gesture of salute. All channels of affirmative free expression are open to both children and parents. Had we before us any act of the state putting the slightest curbs upon such free expression, I should not lag behind any member of this Court in striking down such an invasion of the right to freedom of thought and freedom of speech protected by the Constitution.

I am fortified in my view of this case by the history of the flag salute controversy in this Court. Five times has the precise question now before us been adjudicated. Four times the Court unanimously found that the requirement of such a school exercise was not beyond the powers of the states. Indeed in the first three cases to come before the Court the constitutional claim now sustained was deemed so clearly unmeritorious that this Court dismissed the appeals for want of a substantial federal question. Leoles v. Landers, 302 U.S. 656, 58 S.Ct. 364, 82 L.Ed. 507; Hering v. State Board of Education, 303 U.S. 624, 58 S.Ct. 752, 82 L.Ed. 1087; Gabrielli v. Knickerbocker, 306 U.S. 621, 59 S.Ct. 786, 83 L.Ed. 1026. In the fourth case the judgment of the district court upholding the state law was summarily affirmed on the authority of the earlier cases. Johnson v. Deerfield, 306 U.S. 621, 59 S.Ct. 791, 83 L.Ed. 1027. The fifth case, Minersville District v. Gobitis, 310 U.S. 586, 60 S.Ct. 1010, 84 L.Ed. 1375, 127 A.L.R. 1493, was brought here because the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit ran counter to our rulings. They were reaffirmed after full consideration, with one Justice dissenting.

What may be even more significant than this uniform recognition of state authority is the fact that every Justice--*665 thirteen in all--who has hitherto participated in judging this matter has at one or more times found no constitutional infirmity in what is now condemned. Only the two Justices sitting for the first time on this matter have not heretofore found this legislation inoffensive to the 'liberty' guaranteed by the Constitution. And among the Justice who sustained this measure were outstanding judicial leaders in the zealous enforcement of constitutional safeguards of civil liberties--men like Chief Justice Hughes, Mr. Justice Brandeis, and Mr. Justice Cardozo, to mention only those no longer on the Court.

One's conception of the Constitution cannot be severed from one's conception of a judge's function in applying it. The Court has no reason for existence if it merely reflects the pressures of the day. Our system is built on the faith that men set apart for this special function, freed from the influences of immediacy and form the deflections of worldly ambition, will become able to take a view of longer range than the period of responsibility entrusted to Congress and legislatures. We are dealing with matters as to which legislators and voters have conflicting views. Are we as judges to impose our strong convictions on where wisdom lies? That which three years ago had seemed to five successive Courts to lie within permissible areas of legislation is now outlawed by the deciding shift of opinion of two Justice. What reason is there to believe that they or their successors may not have another view a few years hence? Is that which was 1198 deemed to be of so fundamental a nature as to be written into the Constitution to endure for all times to be the sport of shifting winds of doctrine? Of course, judicial opinions, even as to questions of constitutionality, are not immuntable. As has been true in the past, the Court will from time to time reverse its position. But I believe that never before these Jehovah's Witnesses *666 cases (except for minor deviations subsequently retraced) has this Court overruled decisions so as to restrict the powers of democratic government. Always heretofore, it has withdrawn narrow views of legislative authority so as to authorize what formerly it had denied.

In view of this history it must be plain that what thirteen Justices found to be within the constitutional authority of a state, legislators can not be deemed unreasonable in enacting. Therefore, in denying to the states what heretofore has received such impressive judicial sanction, some other tests of unconstitutionality must surely be guiding the Court than the absence of a rational justification for the legislation. But I know of no other test which this Court is authorized to apply in nullifying legislation.

In the past this Court has from time to time set its views of policy against that embodied in legislation by finding laws in conflict with what was called the 'spirit of the Constitution'. Such undefined destructive power was not conferred on this Court by the Constitution. Before a duly enacted law can be judicially nullified, it must be forbidden by some explicit restriction upon political authority in the Constitution. Equally inadmissible is the claim to strike down legislation because to us as individuals it seems opposed to the 'plan and purpose' of the Constitution. That is too tempting a basis for finding in one's personal views the purposes of the Founders.

The uncontrollable power wielded by this Court brings it very close to the most sensitive areas of public affairs. As appeal from legislation to adjudication becomes more frequent, and its consequences more far-reaching, judicial self-restraint becomes more and not less important, lest we unwarrantably enter social and political domains wholly outside our concern. I think I appreciate fully the objections to the law before us. But to deny that it presents a question upon which men might reasonably *667 differ appears to me to be intolerance. And since men may so reasonably differ, I deem it beyond my constitutional power to assert my view of the wisdom of this law against the view of the State of West Virginia.

Jefferson's opposition to judicial review has not been accepted by history, but it still serves as an admonition against confusion between judicial and political functions. As a rule of judicial self-restraint, it is still as valid as Lincoln's admonition. For those who pass laws not only are under duty to pass laws. They are also under duty to observe the Constitution. And even though legislation relates to civil liberties, our duty of deference to those who have the responsibility for making the laws is no less relevant or less exacting. And this is so especially when we consider the accidental contingencies by which one man may determine constitutionality and thereby confine the political power of the Congress of the United States and the legislatures of forty-eight states. The attitude of judicial humility which thse considerations enjoin is not an abdication of the judicial function. It is a due observance of its limits. Moreover, it is to be borne in mind that in a question like this we are not passing on the proper distribution of political power as between the states and the central government. We are not discharging the basic function of this Court as the mediator of powers within the federal system. To strike down a law like this is to deny a power to all government.

The whole Court is conscious that this case reaches ultimate questions of judicial power and its relation to our scheme of government. It is appropriate, therefore, to recall an utterance as wise as any that I knew in analyzing what is really involved when the theory of this Court's function is put to the test of practice. The analysis is that of James Bradley Thayer:

'* * * there has developed a vast and growing increase of judicial interference with legislation. This is a very different 668 state of things from what our fathers contemplated, a century and more ago, in framing the new system. Seldom, indeed, as they imagined, under our system, *1199 would this great, novel, tremendous power of the courts be exerted,-- would this sacred ark of the covenant be taken from within the veil. Marshall himself expressed truly one aspect of the matter, when he said in one of the later years of his life: 'No questions can be brought before a judicial tribunal of greater delicacy than those which involve the constitutionality of legislative acts. If they become indispensably necessary to the case, the court must meet and decide them; but if the case may be determined on other grounds, a just respect for the legislature requires that the obligation of its laws should not be unnecessarily and wantonly assailed.' And again, a little earlier than this, he laid down the one true rule of duty for the courts. When he went to Philadelphia at the end of September, in 1831, on that painful errand of which I have spoken, in answering a cordial tribute from the bar of that city he remarked that if he might be permitted to claim for himself and his associates any part of the kind things they had said, it would be this, that they had 'never sought to enlarge the judicial power beyond its proper bounds, nor feared to carry it to the fullest extent that duty required.'

'That is the safe twofold rule; nor is the first part of it any whit less important than the second; nay, more; to-day it is the part which most requires to be emphasized. For just here comes in a consideration of very great weight. Great and, indeed, inestimable as are the advantages in a popular government of this conservative influence,--the power of the judiciary to disregard unconstitutional legislation,--it should be remembered that the exercise of it, even when unavoidable, is always attended with a serious evil, namely, that the correction of legislative mistakes comes from the outside, and the people thus lose the political experience, and the moral education and stimulus that come from fighting the question out in the ordinary way, and correcting their own errors. If the decision in Munn v. Illinois and the 'Granger Cases,' twenty-five years ago, and in the 'Legal Tender Cases,' nearly thirty years 669 ago, had been different; and the legislation there in question, thought by many to be unconstitutional and by many more to be ill- advised, had been set aside, we should have been saved some trouble and some harm. But I venture to think that the good which came to the country and its people from the vigorous thinking that had to be done in the political debates that followed, from the infiltration through every part of the population of sound ideas and sentiments, from the rousing into activity of opposite elements, the enlargement of ideas, the strengthening of moral fibre, and the growth of political experience that came out of it all,--that all this far more than outweighed any evil which ever flowed from the refusal of the court to interfere with the work of the legislature.

'The tendency of a common and easy resort to this great function, now lamentably too common, is to dwarf the political capacity of the people, and to deaden its sense of moral responsibility. It is no light thing to do that.

'What can be done? It is the courts that can do most to cure the evil; and the opportunity is a very great one. Let them resolutely adhere to first principles. Let them consider how narrow is the function which the constitutions have conferred on them,--the office merely of deciding litigated cases; how large, therefore, is the duty intrusted to others, and above all to the legislature. It is that body which is charged, primarily, with the duty of judging of the constitutionality of its work. The constitutions generally give them no authority to call upon a court for advice; they must decide for themselves, and the courts may never be able to say a word. Such a body, charged, in every State, with almost all the legislative power of the people, is entitled to the most entire and real respect; is entitled, as among all rationally permissible opinions as to what the constitution allows, to its own choice. Courts, as has often been said, are not to think of the legislators, but of the legislature,--the great, continuous body itself, abstracted from all the transitory individuals who may happen to hold its power. It is this majestic representative of the people whose action is in question, a coordinate department of the government *670 charged with the greatest functions, and invested, in contemplation of law, with whatsoever wisdom, virtue, and knowledge the exercise of such functions requires.

1200 'To set aside the acts of such a body, representing in its own field, which is the very highest of all, the ultimate sovereign, should be a solemn, unusual, and painful act. Something is wrong when it can ever be other than that. And if it be true that the holders of legislative power are careless or evil, yet the constitutional duty of the court remains untouched; it cannot rightly attempt to protect the people, by undertaking a function not its own. On the other hand, by adhering rigidly to its own duty, the court will help, as nothing else can, to fix the spot where responsibility lies, and to bring down on that precise locality the thunderbolt of popular condemnation. The judiciary, to-day, in dealing with the acts of their coordinate legislators, owe to the country no greater or clearer duty than that of keeping their hands off these acts wherever it is possible to do it. For that course--the true course of judicial duty always--will powerfully help to bring the people and their representatives to a sense of their own responsibility. There will still remain to the judiciary an ample field for the determinations of this remarkable jurisdiction, of which our American law has so much reason to be proud; a jurisdiction which has had some of its chief illustrations and its greatest triumphs as in Marshall's time, so in ours, while the courts were refusing to exercise it.' J. B. Thayer, John Marshall, (1901) 104-10.

Of course patriotism cannot be enforced by the flag salute. But neither can the liberal spirit be enforced by judicial invalidation of illiberal legislation. Our constant preoccupation with the constitutionality of legislation rather than with its wisdom tends to preoccupation of the American mind with a false value. The tendency of focusing attention on constitutionality is to make constitutionality synonymous with wisdom, to regard a law as all right if it is constitutional. Such an attitude is a great enemy of liberalism. Particularly in legislation affecting freedom of thought and freedom of speech much which should offend a free-spirited society is constitutional. Reliance *671 for the most precious interests of civilization, therefore, must be found outside of their vindication in courts of law. Only a persistent positive translation of the faith of a free society into the convictions and habits and actions of a community is the ultimate reliance against unabated temptations to fetter the human spirit.

Aided by a long history as an identifiable religious sect and as a successful and self-sufficient segment of society, the Amish have demonstrated sincerity of their religious beliefs, interrelationship of beliefs with their mode of life, the vital role that beliefs and daily conduct play in continuing survival of Old Order Amish communities, and hazards presented by a state's enforcement of a compulsory education law generally valid as to others; beyond this, they have carried their burden of demonstrating the adequacy of their alternative mode of continuing informal vocational education; in light of this, state had to show with more particularity how its admittedly strong interest in compulsory education would be adversely affected by granting the Amish an exemption. Respondents, members of the Old Order Amish religion and the Conservative Amish Mennonite Church, were convicted of violating Wisconsin's compulsory school attendance law (which requires a child's school attendance until age 16) by declining to send their children to public or private school after they had graduated from the eighth grade. The evidence showed that the Amish provide continuing informal vocational education to their children designed to prepare them for life in the rural Amish community. The evidence also showed that respondents sincerely believed that high school attendance was contrary to the Amish religion and way of life and that they would endanger their own salvation and that of their children by complying with the law. The State Supreme Court sustained respondents' claim that application of the compulsory school- attendance law to them violated their rights under the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment, made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment. Held:

2. Respondents have amply supported their claim that enforcement of the compulsory formal education requirement after the eighth grade would gravely endanger if not destroy the free exercise of their religious beliefs. Pp. 1533--1535.

Aided by a history of three centuries as an identifiable religious sect and a long history as a successful and self-sufficient segment of American society, the Amish have demonstrated the sincerity of their religious beliefs, the interrelationship of belief with their mode of life, the vital role that belief and daily conduct play in the continuing survival of Old Order Amish communities, and the hazards presented by the State's enforcement of a statute generally valid as to others. Beyond this, they have 206 carried the difficult burden of demonstrating the adequacy of their alternative mode of continuing informal vocational education in terms of the overall interests that the State relies on in support of its program of compulsory high school education. In light of this showing, and weighing the minimal difference between what the State would require and what the Amish already accept, it was incumbent on the State to show with more particularity how its admittedly strong interest in compulsory education would be adversely affected by granting an exemption to the Amish. p(p). granting an exemption to the Amish. 207 Mr. Chief Justice BURGER delivered the opinion of the Court.

On petition of the State of Wisconsin, we granted the writ of certiorari in this case to review a decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court holding that respondents' convictions for violating the State's compulsory school-attendance law were invalid under the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment. For the reasons hereafter stated we affirm the judgment of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin.

Respondents Jonas Yoder and Wallace Miller are members of the Old Order Amish religion, and respondent Adin Yutzy is a member of the Conservative Amish Mennonite Church. They and their families are residents of Green County, Wisconsin. Wisconsin's compulsory school-attendance law required them to cause their children to attend public or private school until reaching age 16 but the respondents declined to send their children, ages 14 and 15, to public school after they complete the eighth grade. [FN1] The children were not enrolled in any private school, or within any recognized exception to the compulsory-attendance law, [FN2] and they are conceded to be subject to the Wisconsin statute.

FN1. The children, Frieda Yoder, aged 15, Barbara Miller, aged 15, and Vernon Yutzy, aged 14, were all graduates of the eighth grade of public school.

FN2. Wis.Stat. s 118.15 (1969) provides in pertinent part:

'118.15 Compulsory school attendance
'(1)(a) Unless the child has a legal excuse or has graduated from high school, any person having under his control a child who is between the ages of 7 and 16 years shall cause such child to attend school regularly during the full period and hours, religious holidays excepted, that the public or private school in which such child should be enrolled is in session until the end of the school term, quarter or semester of the school year in which he becomes 16 years of age.
'(3) This section does not apply to any child who is not in proper physical or mental condition to attend school, to any child exempted for good cause by the school board of the district in which the child resides or to any child who has completed the full 4-year high school course. The certificate of a reputable physician in general practice shall be sufficient proof that a child is unable to attend school.
'(4) Instruction during the required period elsewhere than at school may be substituted for school attendance. Such instruction must be approved by the state superintendent as substantially equivalent to instruction given to children of like ages in the public or private schools where such children reside.
'(5) Whoever violates this section . . . may be fined not less than $5 nor more than $50 or imprisoned not more than 3 months or both.'
Section 118.15(1)(b) requires attendance to age 18 in a school district containing a 'vocational, technical and adult education school,' but this section is concedly inapplicable in this case, for there is no such school in the district involved.

208 On complaint of the school district administrator for the public schools, respondents were charged, tried, and convicted of violating the compulsory-attendance law in Green County Court and *1530 were fined the sum of $5 each. [FN3] Respondents defended on the ground that the application 209 of the compulsory-attendance law violated their rights under the First and Fourteenth Amendments. [FN4] The trial testimony showed that respondents believed, in accordance with the tenets of Old Order Amish communities generally, that their children's attendance at high school, public or private, was contrary to the Amish religion and way of life. They believed that by sending their children to high school, they would not only expose themselves to the danger of the censure of the church community, but, as found by the county court, also endanger their own salvation and that of their children. The State stipulated that respondents' religious beliefs were sincere.

FN3. Prior to trial, the attorney for respondents wrote the State Superintendent of Public Instruction in an effort to explore the possibilities for a compromise settlement. Among other possibilities, he suggested that perhaps the State Superintendent could administratively determine that the Amish could satisfy the compulsory-attendance law by establishing their own vocational training plan similar to one that has been established in Pennsylvania. Supp.App. 6. Under the Pennsylvania plan, Amish children of high school age are required to attend an Amish vocational school for three hours a week, during which time they are taught such subjects as English, mathematics, health, and social studies by an Amish teacher. For the balance of the week, the children perform farm and household duties under parental supervision, and keep a journal of their daily activities. The major portion of the curriculum is home projects in agriculture and homemaking. See generally J. Hostetler & G. Huntington, Children in Amish Society: Socialization and Community Education, c. 5 (1971). A similar program has been instituted in Indiana. Ibid. See also Iowa Code s 299.24 (1971); Kan.Stat.Ann. s 72--1111 (Supp. 1971).
The Superintendent rejected this proposal on the ground that it would not afford Amish children 'substantially equivalent education' to that offered in the schools of the area. Supp.App. 6.

FN4. The First Amendment provides: 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof . . .'

In support of their position, respondents presented as expert witnesses scholars on religion and education whose testimony is uncontradicted. They expressed their opinions on the relationship of the Amish belief concerning school attendance to the more general tenets of their religion, and described the impact that compulsory high school attendance could have on the continued survival of Amish communities as they exist in the United States today. The history of the Amish *210 sect was given in some detail, beginning with the Swiss Anabaptists of the 16th century who rejected institutionalized churches and sought to return to the early, simple, Christian life de-emphasizing material success, rejecting the competitive spirit, and seeking to insulate themselves from the modern world. As a result of their common heritage, Old Order Amish communities today are characterized by a fundamental belief that salvation requires life in a church community separate and apart from the world and worldly influence. This concept of life aloof from the world and its values is central to their faith.

A related feature of Old Order Amish communities is their devotion to a life in harmony with nature and the soil, as exemplified by the simple life of the early Christian era that continued in America during much of our early national life. Amish beliefs require members of the community to make their living by farming or closely related activities. Broadly speaking, the Old Order Amish religion pervades and determines the entire mode of life of its adherents. Their conduct is regulated in great detail by the Ordnung, or rules, of the church community. Adult baptism, which occurs in late adolescence, is the time at which Amish young people voluntarily undertake heavy obligations, not unlike the Bar Mitzvah of 1531 the Jews, to abide by the rules of the church community. [FN5]

FN5. See generally J. Hostetler, Amish Society (1968); J. Hostetler & G. Huntington, Children in Amish Society (1971); Littell, Sectarian Protestantism and the Pursuit of Wisdom: Must Technological Objectives Prevail?, in Public Controls for Nonpublic Schools 61 (G. Erickson ed. 1969).

Amish objection to formal education beyond the eighth grade is firmly grounded in these central religious concepts. They object to the high school, and higher education generally, because the values they teach *211 are in marked variance with Amish values and the Amish way of life; they view secondary school education as an impermissible exposure of their children to a 'wordly' influence in conflict with their beliefs. The high school tends to emphasize intellectual and scientific accomplishments, self-distinction, competitiveness, worldly success, and social life with other students. Amish society emphasizes informal learning-through-doing; a life of 'goodness,' rather than a life of intellect; wisdom, rather than technical knowledge, community welfare, rather than competition; and separation from, rather than integration with, contemporary worldly society.

Formal high school education beyond the eighth grade is contrary to Amish beliefs, not only because it places Amish children in an environment hostile to Amish beliefs with increasing emphasis on competition in class work and sports and with pressure to conform to the styles, manners, and ways of the peer group, but also because it takes them away from their community, physically and emotionally, during the crucial and formative adolescent period of life. During this period, the children must acquire Amish attitudes favoring manual work and self-reliance and the specific skills needed to perform the adult role of an Amish farmer or housewife. They must learn to enjoy physical labor. Once a child has learned basic reading, writing, and elementary mathematics, these tratis, skills, and attitudes admittedly fall within the category of those best learned through example and 'doing' rather than in a classroom. And, at this time in life, the Amish child must also grow in his faith and his relationship to the Amish community if he is to be prepared to accept the heavy obligations imposed by adult baptism. In short, high school attendance with teachers who are not of the Amish faith--and may even be hostile to it-- interposes a serious barrier to the integration of the Amish child into *212 the Amish religious community. Dr. John Hostetler, one of the experts on Amish society, testified that the modern high school is not equipped, in curriculum or social environment, to impart the values promoted by Amish society.

The Amish do not object to elementary education through the first eight grades as a general proposition because they agree that their children must have basic skills in the 'three R's' in order to read the Bible, to be good farmers and citizens, and to be able to deal with non-Amish people when necessary in the course of daily affairs. They view such a basic education as acceptable because it does not significantly expose their children to wordly values or interfere with their development in the Amish community during the crucial adolescent period. While Amish accept compulsory elementary education generally, wherever possible they have established their own elementary schools in many respects like the small local schools of the past. In the Amish belief higher learning tends to develop values they reject as influences that alienate man from God.

On the basis of such considerations, Dr. Hostetler testified that compulsory high school attendance could not only result in great psychological harm to Amish children, because of the conflicts it would produce, but would also, in his opinion, ultimately result in the destruction of the Old Order Amish church community as it exists in the United States 1532 today. The testimony of Dr. Donald A. Erickson, an expert witness on education, also showed that the Amish succeed in preparing their high school age children to be productive members of the Amish community. He described their system of learning through doing the skills directly relevant to their adult roles in the Amish community as 'ideal' and perhaps superior to ordinary high school education. The evidence also showed that the Amish have an excellent *213 record as law-abiding and generally self-sufficient members of society.

Although the trial court in its careful findings determined that the Wisconsin compulsory school-attendance law 'does interfere with the freedom of the Defendants to act in accordance with their sincere religious belief' it also concluded that the requirement of high school attendance until age 16 was a 'reasonable and constitutional' exercise of governmental power, and therefore denied the motion to dismiss the charges. The Wisconsin Circuit Court affirmed the convictions. The Wisconsin Supreme Court, however, sustained respondents' claim under the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment and reversed the convictions. A majority of the court was of the opinion that the State had failed to make an adequate showing that its interest in 'establishing and maintaining an educational system overrides the defendants' right to the free exercise of their religion.' 49 Wis.2d 430, 447, 182 N.W.2d 539, 547 (1971).

I

[1][2] There is no doubt as to the power of a State, having a high responsibility for education of its citizens, to impose reasonable regulations for the control and duration of basic education. See, e.g., Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925). Providing public schools ranks at the very apex of the function of a State. Yet even this paramount responsibility was, in Pierce, made to yield to the right of parents to provide an equivalent education in a privately operated system. There the Court held that Oregon's statute compelling attendance in a public school from age eight to age 16 unreasonably interfered with the interest of parents in directing the rearing of their off-spring, including their education in church-operated schools. As that case suggests, the values of parental direction of the religious upbringing *214 and education of their children in their early and formative years have a high place in our society. See also Ginsberg v. New York, 390 U.S. 629, 639, 88 S.Ct. 1274, 1280, 20 L.Ed.2d 195 (1968); Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 43 S.Ct. 625, 67 L.Ed. 1042 (1923); cf. Rowan v. United States Post Office Dept., 397 U.S. 728, 90 S.Ct. 1484, 25 L.Ed.2d 736 (1970). Thus, a State's interest in universal education, however highly we rank it, is not totally free from a balancing process when it impinges on fundamental rights and interests, such as those specifically protected by the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment, and the traditional interest of parents with respect to the religious upbringing of their children so long as they, in the words of Pierce, 'prepare (them) for additional obligations.' 268 U.S., at 535, 45 S.Ct., at 573.

[3] It follows that in order for Wisconsin to compel

school attendance beyond the eighth grade against a claim that such attendance interferes with the practice of a legitimate religious belief, it must appear either that the State does not deny the free exercise of religious belief by its requirement, or that there is a state interest of sufficient magnitude to override the interest claiming protection under the Free Exercise Clause. Long before there was general acknowledgment of the need for universal formal education, the Religion Clauses had specifically and firmly fixed the right to free exercise of religious beliefs, and buttressing this fundamental right was an equally firm, even if less explicit, prohibition against the establishment of any religion by government. The values underlying these two provisions relating 1533 to religion have been zealously protected, sometimes even at the expense of other interests of admittedly high social importance. The invalidation of financial aid to parochial schools by government grants for a salary subsidy for teachers is but one example of the extent to which courts have gone in this regard, notwithstanding that such aid programs were legislatively determined to be in the public interest and the service of sound educational policy by States and by Congress. *215Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971) ; Tilton v. Richardson, 403 U.S. 672, 91 S.Ct. 2091, 29 L.Ed.2d 790 (1971). See also Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 18, 67 S.Ct. 504, 513, 91 L.Ed. 711 (1947).

[4][5] The essence of all that has been said and written on the subject is that only those interests of the highest order and those not otherwise served can overbalance legitimate claims to the free exercise of religion. We can accept it as settled, therefore, that, however strong the State's interest in universal compulsory education, it is by no means absolute to the exclusion or subordination of all other interests. E.g., Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963); McGowan v. Maryland, 366 U.S. 420, 459, 81 S.Ct. 1101, 1122, 6 L.Ed.2d 393 (1961) (separate opinion of Frankfurter, J.); Prince v. Marssachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 165, 64 S.Ct. 438, 441, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944).

II

[6][7][8] We come then to the quality of the claims of the respondents concerning the alleged encroachment of Wisconsin's compulsory school-attendance statute on their rights and the rights of their children to the free exercise of the religious beliefs they and their forbears have adhered to for almost three centuries. In evaluating those claims we must be careful to determine whether the Amish religious faith and their mode of life are, as they claim, inseparable and interdependent. A way of life, however virtuous and admirable, may not be interposed as a barrier to reasonable state regulation of education if it is based on purely secular considerations; to have the protection of the Religion Clauses, the claims must be rooted in religious belief. Although a determination of what is a 'religious' belief or practice entitled to constitutional protection may present a most delicate question, [FN6] the very concept of ordered liberty precludes *216 allowing every person to make his own standards on matters of conduct in which society as a whole has important interests. Thus, if the Amish asserted their claims because of their subjective evaluation and rejection of the contemporary secular values accepted by the majority, much as Thoreau rejected the social values of his time and isolated himself at Walden Pond, their claims would not rest on a religious basis. Thoreau's choice was philosophical and personal rather than religious, and such belief does not rise to the demands of the Religion Clauses.

FN6. See Welsh v. United States, 398 U.S. 333, 351--361, 90 S.Ct. 1792, 1802--1807, 26 L.Ed.2d 308 (1970) (Harlan, J., concurring in result); United States v. Ballard, 322 U.S. 78, 64 S.Ct. 882, 88 L.Ed. 1148 (1944).

Giving no weight to such secular considerations, however, we see that the record in this case abundantly supports the claim that the traditional way of life of the Amish is not merely a matter of personal preference, but one of deep religious conviction, shared by an organized group, and intimately related to daily living. That the Old Order Amish daily life and religious practice stem from their faith is shown by the fact that it is in response to their literal interpretation of the Biblical injunction from the Epistle of Paul to the Romans, 'be not conformed to this world . . .' This command is fundamental to the Amish faith. Moreover, for the Old Order Amish, religion is not simply a matter of theocratic belief. As the expert witnesses explained, the Old Order Amish religion pervades and * *1534 determines virtually their entire way of life, regulating it with the detail of the Talmudic diet through the strictly enforced rules of the church community.

The record shows that the respondents' religious beliefs and attitude toward life, family, and home have remained constant--perhaps some would say static-- in a period of unparalleled progress in human knowledge generally and great changes in education. [FN7] The respondents *217 freely concede, and indeed assert as an article of faith, that their religious beliefs and what we would today call 'life style' have not altered in fundamentals for centuries. Their way of life in a church-oriented community, separated from the outside world and 'worldly' influences, their attachment to nature and the soil, is a way inherently simple and uncomplicated, albeit difficult to preserve against the pressure to conform. Their rejection of telephones, automobiles, radios, and television, their mode of dress, of speech, their habits of manual work do indeed set them apart from much of contemporary society; these customs are both symbolic and practical.

FN7. See generally R. Butts & L. Cremin, A History of Education in American Culture (1953); L. Cremin, The Transformation of the School (1961).

As the society around the Amish has become more populous, urban, industrialized, and complex, particularly in this century, government regulation of human affairs has correspondingly become more detailed and pervasive. The Amish mode of life has thus come into conflict increasingly with requirements of contemporary society exerting a hydraulic insistence on conformity to majoritarian standards. So long as compulsory education laws were confined to eight grades of elementary basic education imparted in a nearby rural schoolhouse, with a large proportion of students of the Amish faith, the Old Order Amish had little basis to fear that school attendance would expose their children to the worldly influence they reject. But modern compulsory secondary education in rural areas is now largely carried on in a consolidated school, often remote from the student's home and alien to his daily home life. As the record so strongly shows, the values and programs of the modern secondary school are in sharp conflict with the fundamental mode of life mandated by the Amish religion; modern laws requiring compulsory secondary education have accordingly engendered great concern and conflict. [FN8] *218 The conclusion is inescapable that secondary schooling, by exposing Amish children to worldly influences in terms of attitudes, goals, and values contrary to beliefs, and by substantially interfering with the religious development of the Amish child and his integration into the way of life of the Amish faith community at the crucial adolescent stage of development, contravenes the basic religious tenets and practice of the Amish faith, both as to the parent and the child.

FN8. Hostetler, supra, n. 5, c. 9; Hostetler & Huntington, supra, n. 5.

The impact of the compulsory-attendance law on respondents' practice of the Amish religion is not only severe, but inescapable, for the Wisconsin law affirmatively compels them, under threat of criminal sanction, to perform acts undeniably at odds with fundamental tenets of their religious beliefs. See Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 605, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 1147, 6 L.Ed.2d 563 (1961). Nor is the impact of the compulsory-attendance law confined to grave interference with important Amish religious tenets from a subjective point of view. It carries with it precisely the kind of objective danger to the free exercise of religion that the First Amendment was designed to prevent. As the record shows, compulsory school attendance to age 16 for Amish children carries with it a very real threat of undermining the Amish community and religious practice as they exist today; they must either abandon belief and be assimilated into 1535 society at large, or be forced to migrate to some other and more tolerant region. [FN9]

FN9. Some States have developed working arrangements with the Amish regarding high school attendance. See n. 3, supra. However, the danger to the continued existence of an ancient religious faith > cannot be ignored simply because of the assumption that its adherents will continue to be able, at considerable sacrifice, to relocate in some more tolerant State or country or work out accommodations under threat of criminal prosecution. Forced migration of religious minorities was an evil that lay at the heart of the Religion Clauses. See, e.g., Everson v. Board of Education, 330 U.S. 1, 9--10, 67 S.Ct. 504, 508--509, 91 L.Ed. 711 (1947); Madison, Memorial and Remonstrance Against Religious Assessments, 2 Writings of James Madison 183 (G. Hunt ed. 1901).

219 [9] In sum, the unchallenged testimony of acknowledged experts in education and religious history, almost 300 years of consistent practice, and strong evidence of a sustained faith pervading and regulating respondents' entire mode of life support the claim that enforcement of the State's requirement of compulsory formal education after the eighth grade would gravely endanger if not destroy the free exercise of respondents' religious beliefs.

III

Neither the findings of the trial court nor the Amish claims as to the nature of their faith are challenged in this Court by the State of Wisconsin. Its position is that the State's interest in universal compulsory formal secondary education to age 16 is so great that it is paramount to the undisputed claims of respondents that their mode of preparing their youth for Amish life, after the traditional elementary education, is an essential part of their religious belief and practice. Nor does the State undertake to meet the claim that the Amish mode of life and education is inseparable from and a part of the basic tenets of their religion--indeed, as much a part of their religious belief and practices as baptism, the confessional, or a sabbath may be for others.

[10] Wisconsin concedes that under the Religion Clauses religious beliefs are absolutely free from the State's control, but it argues that 'actions,' even though religiously grounded, are outside the protection of the First Amendment. [FN10] But our decisions have rejected the idea that 220 religiously grounded conduct is always outside the protection of the Free Exercise Clause. It is true that activities of individuals, even when religiously based, are often subject to regulation by the States in the exercise of their undoubted power to promote the health, safety, and general welfare, or the Federal Government in the exercise of its delegated powers. See, e.g., Gillette v. United States, 401 U.S. 437, 91 S.Ct. 828, 28 L.Ed.2d 168 (1971); Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 6 L.Ed.2d 563 (1961); Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944); Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 25 L.Ed. 244 (1879). But to agree that religiously grounded conduct must often be subject to the broad police power of the State is not to deny that there are areas of conduct protected by the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment and thus beyond the power of the State to control, even under regulations of general applicability. E.g., Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963); Murdock v. Pennsylvania, 319 U.S. 105, 63 S.Ct. 870, 87 L.Ed. 1292 (1943); Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303--304, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940). This case, therefore, does not become easier because respondents were convicted for their 'actions' in refusing to send their children to the public high school; in this context belief and action cannot be neatly confined in *1536 logic-tight compartments. Cf. Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S., at 612, 91 S.Ct., at 2111, 29 L.Ed.2d 745.

> FN10. That has been the apparent ground for decision in several previous state cases rejecting claims for exemption similar to that here. See, e.g., State v. Garber, 197 Kan. 567, 419 P.2d 896 (1966), cert. denied, 389 U.S. 51, 88 S.Ct. 236, 19 L.Ed.2d 50 (1967); State v. Hershberger, 103 Ohio App. 188, 144 N.E.2d 693 (1955); Commonwealth v. Beiler, 168 Pa.Super. 462, 79 A.2d 134 (1951).

[11][12] Nor can this case be disposed of on the grounds that Wisconsin's requirement for school attendance to age 16 applies uniformly to all citizens of the State and does not, on its face, discriminate against religions or a particular religion, or that it is motivated by legitimate secular concerns. A regulation neutral on its face may, in its application, nonetheless offend the constitutional requirement for governmental neutrality if it unduly burdens the free exercise of religion. Sherbert v. Verner, supra; cf. Walz v. Tax Commission, 397 U.S. 664, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970). The Court must not ignore the danger that an exception *221 from a general obligation of citizenship on religious grounds may run afoul of the Establishment Clause, but that danger cannot be allowed to prevent any exception no matter how vital it may be to the protection of values promoted by the right of free exercise. By preserving doctrinal flexibility and recognizing the need for a sensible and realistic application of the Religion Clauses

> 'we have been able to chart a course that preserved the autonomy and freedom of religious bodies while avoiding any semblance of established religion. This is a 'tight rope' and one we have successfully traversed.' Walz v. Tax Commission, supra, at 672, 90 S.Ct., at 1413.

We turn, then, to the State's broader contention that its interest in its system of compulsory education is so compelling that even the established religious practices of the Amish must give way. Where fundamental claims of religious freedom are at stake, however, we cannot accept such a sweeping claim; despite its admitted validity in the generality of cases, we must searchingly examine the interests that the State seeks to promote by its requirement for compulsory education to age 16, and the impediment to those objectives that would flow from recognizing the claimed Amish exemption. See, e.g., Sherbert v. Verner, supra; Martin v. City of Struthers, 319 U.S. 141, 63 S.Ct. 862, 87 L.Ed. 1313 (1943); Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147, 60 S.Ct. 146, 84 L.Ed. 155 (1939).

The State advances two primary arguments in support of its system of compulsory education. It notes, as Thomas Jefferson pointed out early in our history, that some degree of education is necessary to prepare citizens to participate effectively and intelligently in our open political system if we are to preserve freedom and independence. Further, education prepares individuals to be self-reliant and self-sufficient participants in society. We accept these propositions.

*222 However, the evidence adduced by the Amish in this case is persuasively to the effect that an additional one or two years of formal high school for Amish children in place of their long-established program of informal vocational education would do little to serve those interests. Respondents' experts testified at trial, without challenge, that the value of all education must be assessed in terms of its capacity to prepare the child for life. It is one thing to say that compulsory education for a year or two beyond the eighth grade may be necessary when its goal is the preparation of the child for life in modern society as the majority live, but it is quite another if the goal of education be viewed as the preparation of the child for life in the separated agrarian community that is the keystone of the Amish faith. See Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S., at 400, 43 S.Ct., at 627, 67 L.Ed. 1042.

The State attacks respondents' position as one fostering 'ignorance' from which the child must be protected by the State. No one can question the State's duty to protect children from ignorance but this argument does not square with the facts disclosed in the record. Whatever their idiosyncrasies as seen by the majority, this record strongly shows that the Amish community has been a highly successful 1537 social unit within our society, even if apart from the conventional 'mainstream.' Its members are productive and very law-abiding members of society; they reject public welfare in any of its usual modern forms. The Congress itself recognized their self-sufficiency by authorizing exemption of such groups as the Amish from the obligation to pay social security taxes. [FN11]

> FN11. Title 26 U.S.C. s 1402(h) authorizes the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to exempt members of 'a recognized religious sect' existing at all times since December 31, 1950, from the obligation to pay social security taxes if they are, by reason of the tenets of their sect, opposed to receipt of such benefits and agree to waive them, provided the Secretary finds that the sect makes reasonable provision for its dependent members. The history of the exemption shows it was enacted with the situation of the Old Order Amish specifically in view. H.R.Rep.No.213, 89th Cong., 1st Sess., 101--102 (1965).

> The record in this case establishes without contradiction that the Green County Amish had never been known to commit crimes, that none had been known to receive public assistance, and that none were unemployed.

> FN12. Dr. Erickson had previously written: 'Many public educators would be elated if their programs were as successful in preparing students for productive community life as the Amish system seems to be. In fact, while some public schoolmen strive to outlaw the Amish approach, others are being forced to emulate many of its features.' Erickson, Showdown at an Amish Schoolhouse: A Description and Analysis of the Iowa Controversy, in Public Controls for Nonpublic Schools 15, 53 (D. Erickson ed. 1969). And see Littell, supra, n. 5, at 61.

We must not forget that in the Middle Ages important values of the civilization of the Western World were preserved by members of religious orders who isolated themselves from all worldly influences against great obstacles. There can be no assumption that today's majority is *224 'right' and the Amish and others like them are 'wrong.' A way of life that is odd or even erratic but interferes with no rights or interests of others is not to be condemned because it is different.

The State, however, supports its interest in providing an additional one or two years of compulsory high school education to Amish children because of the possibility that some such children will choose to leave the Amish community, and that if this occurs they will be ill-equipped for life. The State argues that if Amish children leave their church they should not be in the position of making their way in the world without the education available in the one or two additional years the State requires. However, on this record, that argument is highly speculative. There is no specific evidence of the loss of Amish adherents by attrition, nor is there any showing that upon leaving the Amish community Amish children, with their practical agricultural training and habits of industry and self-reliance, would become burdens on society because of educational shortcomings. Indeed, this argument of the State appears to rest primarily on the State's mistaken assumption, already noted, that the Amish do not provide any education for their children beyond the eighth grade, but * *1538 allow them to grow in 'ignorance.' To the contrary, not only do the Amish accept the necessity for formal schooling through the eighth grade level, but continue to provide what has been characterized by the undisputed testimony of expert educators as an 'ideal' vocational education for their children in the adolescent years.

There is nothing in this record to suggest that the Amish qualities of reliability, self-reliance, and dedication to work would fail to find ready markets in today's society. Absent some contrary evidence supporting the *225 State's position, we are unwilling to assume that persons possessing such valuable vocational skills and habits are doomed to become burdens on society should they determine to leave the Amish faith, nor is there any basis in the record to warrant a finding that an additional one or two years of formal school education beyond the eighth grade would serve to eliminate any such problem that might exist.

Insofar as the State's claim rests on the view that a brief additional period of formal education is imperative to enable the Amish to participate effectively and intelligently in our democratic process, it must fail. The Amish alternative to formal secondary school education has enabled them to function effectively in their day-to-day life under self-imposed limitations on relations with the world, and to survive and prosper in contemporary society as a separate, sharply identifiable and highly self-sufficient community for more than 200 years in this country. In itself this is strong evidence that they are capable of fulfilling the social and political responsibilities of citizenship without compelled attendance beyond the eighth grade at the price of jeopardizing their free exercise of religious belief. [FN13] When Thomas Jefferson emphasized the need for education as a bulwark of a free people against tyranny, there is nothing to indicate he had in mind compulsory education through any fixed age beyond a basic education. Indeed, the Amish communities singularly parallel and reflect many of the virtues of Jefferson's ideal of the 'sturdy yeoman' who would form the basis of what he considered as the *226 ideal of a democratic society. [FN14] Even their idiosyncratic separateness exemplifies the diversity we profess to admire and encourage.

FN13. All of the children involved in this case are graduates of the eighth grade. In the county court, the defense introduced a study by Dr. Hostetler indicating that Amish children in the eighth grade achieved comparably to non-Amish children in the basic skills. Supp.App. 9--11. See generally Hostetler & Huntington, supra, n. 5, at 88--96.

FN14. While Jefferson recognized that education was essential to the welfare and liberty of the people, he was reluctant to directly force instruction of children 'in opposition to the will of the parent.' Instead he proposed that state citizenship be conditioned on the ability to 'read readily in some tongue, native or acquired.' Letter from Thomas Jefferson to Joseph Cabell, Sept. 9, 1817, in 17 Writings of Thomas Jefferson 417, 423--424 (Mem. ed. 1904). And it is clear that, so far as the mass of the people were concerned, he envisaged that a basic education in the 'three R's' would sufficiently meet the interests of the State. He suggested that after completion of elementary school, 'those destined for labor will engage in the business of agriculture, or enter into apprenticeships to such handicraft art as may be their choice.' Letter from Thomas Jefferson to Peter Carr, Sept. 7, 1814, in Thomas Jefferson and Education in a Republic 93--106 (Arrowood ed. 1930). See also id., at 60--64, 70, 83, 136--137.

The requirement for compulsory education beyond the eighth grade is a relatively recent development in our history. Less than 60 years ago, the educational requirements of almost all of the States were satisfied by completion of the elementary grades, at least where the child was regularly and lawfully employed. [FN15] 1539 The independence *227 and successful social functioning of the Amish community for a period approaching almost three centuries and more than 200 years in this country are strong evidence that there is at best a speculative gain, in terms of meeting the duties of citizenship, from an additional one or two years of compulsory formal education. Against this background it would require a more particularized showing from the State on this point to justify the severe interference with religious freedom such additional compulsory attendance would entail.

Even today, an eighth grade education fully satisfies the educational requirements of at least six States. See Ariz.Rev.Stat.Ann. s 15--321, subsec. (Mississippi has no compulsory education law.) A number of other States have flexible provisions permitting children aged 14 or having completed the eighth grade to be excused from school in order to engage in lawful employment. E.g., Colo.Rev.Stat.Ann. ss 123--20--5, 80--6--1 to 80--6--12 (1963); Conn.Gen.Stat.Rev. ss 10--184, 10--189 (1964); D.C.Code Ann. ss 31--202, 36--201 to 36--228 (1967); Ind.Ann.Stat. ss 28--505 to 28--506, 28--519 (1948); Mass.Gen.Laws Ann., c. 76, s 1 (Supp.1972) and c. 149, s 86 (1971); Mo.Rev.Stat. ss 167.031, 294.051 (1969); Nev.Rev.Stat. s 392.110 (1968); N.M.Stat.Ann. s 77--10--6 (1968). An eighth grade education satisfied Wisconsin's formal education requirements until 1933. See Wis.Laws 1927, c. 425, s 97; Laws 1933, c. 143. (Prior to 1933, provision was made for attendance at continuation or vocational schools by working children past the eighth grade, but only if one was maintained by the community in question.) For a general discussion of the early development of Wisconsin's compulsory education and child labor laws, see F. Ensign, Compulsory School Attendance and Child Labor 203--230 (1921).

We should also note that compulsory education and child labor laws find their historical origin in common humanitarian instincts, and that the age limits of both laws have been coordinated to achieve their related objectives. [FN16] In the context of this case, such considerations, 228 if anything, support rather than detract from respondents' position. The origins of the requirement for school attendance to age 16, an age falling after the completion of elementary school but before completion of high school, are not entirely clear. But to some extent such laws reflected the movement to prohibit most child labor under age 16 that culminated in the provisions of the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938. [FN17] It is true, then, that the 16-year child labor age limit may to some degree derive from a contemporary impression that children should be in school until that age. But at the same time, it cannot be denied that, conversely, the 16-year education limit reflects, in substantial measure, the concern that children under that age not be employed under conditions hazardous to their health, or in work that should be performed by adults.

FN16. See, e.g., Joint Hearings, supra, n. 15, pt. 1, at 185--187 (statement of Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor), pt. 2, at 381--387 (statement of Katherine Lenroot, Chief, Children's Bureau, Department of Labor); National Child Labor Committee, 40th Anniversary Report, The Long Road (1944); 1 G. Abbott, The Child and the State 259--269, 566 (Greenwood reprint 1968); L. Cremin, The Transformation of the School, c. 3 (1961); A. Steinhilber & C. Sokolowski, State Law on Compulsory Attendance 3--4 (Dept. of Health, Education, and Welfare 1966).

The requirement of compulsory schooling to age 16 must therefore be viewed as aimed not merely at providing educational opportunities for children, but as an alternative to the equally undesirable consequence of unhealthful child labor displacing adult workers, or, on the other hand, forced idleness. [FN18] The two kinds of statutes--compulsory school attendance and child labor laws-- tend to keep children of certain ages off the labor market and in school; this regimen in *1540 turn provides opportunity to prepare for a livelihood of a higher order than that which children could pursue without education and protects their health in adolescence.

FN18. See materials cited n. 16, supra; Casad, Compulsory Education and Individual Rights, in 5 Religion and the Public Order 51, 82 (D. Giannella ed. (1969).

In these terms, Wisconsin's interest in compelling the school attendance of Amish children to age 16 emerges as somewhat less substantial than requiring such attendance 229 for children generally. For, while agricultural employment is not totally outside the legitimate concerns of the child labor laws, employment of children under parental guidance and on the family farm from age 14 to age 16 is an ancient tradition that lies at the periphery of the objectives of such laws. [FN19] There is no intimation that the Amish employment of their children on family farms is in any way deleterious to their health or that Amish parents exploit children at tender years. Any such inference would be contrary to the record before us. Moreover, employment of Amish children on the family farm does not present the undesirable economic aspects of eliminating jobs that might otherwise be held by adults.

> FN19. See, e.g., Abbott, supra, n. 16 at 266. The Federal Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 excludes from its definition of '(o)ppressive child labor' employment of a child under age 16 by 'a parent . . . employing his own child . . . in an occupation other than manufacturing or mining or an occupation found by the Secretary of Labor to be particularly hazardous for the employment of children between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years or detrimental to their health or well-being.' 29 U.S.C. s 203(l).

IV

[13] Finally, the State, on authority of Prince v. Massachusetts, argues that a decision exempting Amixh children from the State's requirement fails to recognize the substantive right of the Amish child to a secondary education, and fails to give due regard to the power of the State as parens patriae to extend the benefit of secondary education to children regardless of the wishes of their parents. Taken at its broadest sweep, the Court's language in Prince, might be read to give support to the State's position. However, the Court was not confronted in Prince with a situation comparable to that of the Amish as revealed in this record; this is shown by the 230 Court's severe characterization of the evils that it thought the legislature could legitimately associate with child labor, even when performed in the company of an adult. 321 U.S., at 169--170, 64 S.Ct., at 443--444. The Court later took great care to confine Prince to a narrow scope in Sherbert v. Verner, when it stated:

> 'On the other hand, the Court has rejected challenges under the Free Exercise Clause to governmental regulation of certain overt acts prompted by religious beliefs or principles, for 'even when the action is in accord with one's religious convictions, (it) is not totally free from legislative restrictions.' Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 603, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 1146, 6 L.Ed.2d 563. The conduct or actions so regulated have invariably posed some substantial threat to public safety, peace or order. See, e.g., Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 25 L.Ed. 244; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 49 L.Ed. 643; Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645 . . ..' 374 U.S., at 402--403, 83 S.Ct., at 1793.

This case, of course, is not one in which any harm to the physical or mental health of the child or to the public safety, peace, order, or welfare has been demonstrated or may be properly inferred. [FN20] The record is to the contrary, and *1541 any reliance on that theory would find no support in the evidence.

> FN20. Cf. e.g., Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 49 L.Ed. 643 (1905); Wright v. DeWitt School District, 238 Ark. 906, 385 S.W.2d 644 (1965); Application of President and Directors of Georgetown College, Inc., 118 U.S.App.D.C. 80, 87--90, 331 F.2d 1000, 1007--1010 (1964) (in-chambers opinion), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 978, 84 S.Ct. 1883, 12 L.Ed.2d 746 (1964).

Contrary to the suggestion of the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, our holding today in no degree depends on the assertion of the religious interest of the child as contrasted with that of the parents. It is the parents who are subject to prosecution here for failing to cause their children to attend school, and it 231 is their right of free exercise, not that of their children, that must determine Wisconsin's power to impose criminal penalties on the parent. The dissent argues that a child who expresses a desire to attend public high school in conflict with the wishes of his parents should not be prevented from doing so. There is no reason for the Court to consider that point since it is not an issue in the case. The children are not parties to this litigation. The State has at no point tried this case on the theory that respondents were preventing their children from attending school against their expressed desires, and indeed the record is to the contrary. [FN21] The State's position from the outset has been that it is empowered to apply its compulsory-attendance law to Amish parents in the same manner as to other parents--that is, without regard to the wishes of the child. That is the claim we reject today.

FN21. The only relevant testimony in the record is to the effect that the wishes of the one child who testified corresponded with those of her parents. Testimony of Frieda Yoder, Tr. 92--94, to the effect that her personal religious beliefs guided her decision to discontinue school attendance after the eighth grade. The other children were not called by either side.

Our holding in no way determines the proper resolution of possible competing interests of parents, children, and the State in an appropriate state court proceeding in which the power of the State is asserted on the theory that Amish parents are preventing their minor children from attending high school despite their expressed desires to the contrary. Recognition of the claim of the State in such a proceeding would, of course, call into question traditional concepts of parental control over the religious upbringing and education of their minor children recognized in this Court's past decisions. It is clear that such an intrusion by a State into family decisions in the area of religious training would give rise to grave questions of religious freedom comparable to those raised here *232 and those presented in Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925). On this record we neither reach nor decide those issues.

The State's argument proceeds without reliance on any actual conflict between the wishes of parents and children. It appears to rest on the potential that exemption of Amish parents from the requirements of the compulsory-education law might allow some parents to act contrary to the best interests of their children by foreclosing their opportunity to make an intelligent choice between the Amish way of life and that of the outside world. The same argument could, of course, be made with respect to all church schools short of college. There is nothing in the record or in the ordinary course of human experience to suggest that non-Amish parents generally consult with children of ages 14--16 if they are placed in a church school of the parents' faith.

Indeed it seems clear that if the State is empowered, as parens patriae, to 'save' a child from himself or his Amish parents by requiring an additional two years of compulsory formal high school education, the State will in large measure influence, if not determine, the religious future of the child. Even more markedly than in Prince, therefore, this case involves the fundamental interest of parents, as contrasted with that of the State, to guide the religious future and education of their children. The history and culture of Western civilization reflect a strong tradition of parental concern for the nurture and upbringing of their children. This primary role of the parents in the upbringing of their children is now established beyond debate 1542 as an enduring American tradition. If not the first, perhaps the most significant statements of the Court in this area are found in Pierce v. Society of Sisters, in which the Court observed:

'Under the doctrine of Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 43 S.Ct. 625, 67 L.Ed. 1042, 29 A.L.R. 1146, we think it entirely plain that the Act *233 of 1922 unreasonably interferes with the liberty of parents and guardians to direct the upbringing and education of children under their control. As often heretofore pointed out, rights guaranteed by the Constitution may not be abridged by legislation which has no reasonable relation to some purpose within the competency of the State. The fundamental theory of liberty upon which all governments in this Union repose excludes any general power of the State to standardize its children by forcing them to accept instruction from public teachers only. The child is not the mere creature of the State; those who nurture him and direct his destiny have the right, coupled with the high duty, to recognize and prepare him for additional obligations.' 268 U.S., at 534--535, 45 S.Ct., at 573.

[14] The duty to prepare the child for 'additional obligations,' referred to by the Court, must be read to include the inculcation of moral standards, religious beliefs, and elements of good citizenship. Pierce, of course, recognized that where nothing more than the general interest of the parent in the nurture and education of his children is involved, it is beyond dispute that the State acts 'reasonably' and constitutionally in requiring education to age 16 in some public or private school meeting the standards prescribed by the State.

[15] However read, the Court's holding in Pierce stands as a charter of the rights of parents to direct the religious upbringing of their children. And, when the interests of parenthood are combined with a free exercise claim of the nature revealed by this record, more than merely a 'reasonable relation to some purpose within the competency of the State' is required to sustain the validity of the State's requirement under the First Amendment. To be sure, the power of the parent, even when linked to a free exercise claim, may be subject to limitation under Prince *234 if it appears that parental decisions will jeopardize the health or safety of the child, or have a potential for significant social burdens. But in this case, the Amish have introduced persuasive evidence undermining the arguments the State has advanced to support its claims in terms of the welfare of the child and society as a whole. The record strongly indicates that accommodating the religious objections of the Amish by forgoing one, or at most two, additional years of compulsory education will not impair the physical or mental health of the child, or result in an inability to be self-supporting or to discharge the duties and responsibilities of citizenship, or in any other way materially detract from the welfare of society.

In the fact of our consistent emphasis on the central values underlying the Religion Clauses in our constitutional scheme of government, we cannot accept a parens patriae claim of such all-encompassing scope and with such sweeping potential for broad and unforeseeable application as that urged by the State.

V

[16][17] For the reasons stated we hold, with the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, that the First and Fourteenth Amendments prevent the State from compelling respondents to cause their children to attend formal high school to age 16. [FN22] Our disposition of this case, 1543 however, in no way *235 alters our recognition of the obvious fact that courts are not school boards or legislatures, and are ill-equipped to determine the 'necessity' of discrete aspects of a State's program of compulsory education. This should suggest that courts must move with great circumspection in performing the sensitive and delicate task of weighing a State's legitimate social concern when faced with religious claims for exemption from generally applicable education requirements. It cannot be overemphasized that we are not dealing with a way of life and mode of education by a group claiming to have recently discovered some 'progressive' or more enlightened process for rearing children for modern life.

FN22. What we have said should meet the suggestion that the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court recognizing an exemption for the Amish from the State's system of compulsory education constituted an impermissible establishment of religion. In Walz v. Tax Commission, the Court saw the three main concerns against which the Establishment Clause sought to protect as 'sponsorship, financial support, and active involvement of the sovereign in religious activity.' 397 U.S. 664, 668, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 1411, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970). Accommodating the religious beliefs of the Amish can hardly be characterized as sponsorship or active involvement. The purpose and effect of such an exemption are not to support, favor, advance, or assist the Amish, but to allow their centuries-old religious society, here long before the advent of any compulsory education, to survive free from the heavy impediment compliance with the Wisconsin compulsory-education law would impose. Such an accommodation 'reflects nothing more than the governmental obligation of neutrality in the face of religious differences, and does not represent that involvement of religious with secular institutions which it is the object of the Establishment Clause to forestall.' Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 409, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1797, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963).

[18] Aided by a history of three centuries as an identifiable religious sect and a long history as a successful and self-sufficient segment of American society, the Amish in this case have convincingly demonstrated the sincerity of their religious beliefs, the interrelationship of belief with their mode of life, the vital role that belief and daily conduct play in the continued survival of Old Order Amish communities and their religious organization, and the hazards presented by the State's enforcement of a statute generally valid as to others. Beyond this, they have carried the even more difficult burden of demonstrating the adequacy of their alternative mode of continuing informal vocational education in terms of precisely those overall interests that the State advances in support of its program of compulsory high school education. In light of this convincing *236 showing, one that probably few other religious groups or sects could make, and weighing the minimal difference between what the State would require and what the Amish already accept, it was incumbent on the State to show with more particularity how its admittedly strong interest in compulsory education would be adversely affected by granting an exemption to the Amish. Sherbert v. Verner, supra.

Nothing we hold is intended to undermine the general applicability of the State's compulsory school-attendance statutes or to limit the power of the State to promulgate reasonable standards that, while not impairing the free exercise of religion, provide for continuing agricultural vocational education under parental and church guidance by the Old Order Amish or others similarly situated. The States have had a long history of amicable and effective relationships with church-sponsored schools, and there is no basis for assuming that, in this related context, reasonable standards cannot be established concerning the content of the continuing vocational education of Amish children under parental guidance, provided always that state regulations are not inconsistent with what we have said in this opinion. [FN23]

> FN23. Several States have now adopted plans to accommodate, Amish religious beliefs through the establishment of an 'Amish vocational school.' See n. 3, supra. These are not schools in the traditional sense of the word. As previously noted, respondents attempted to reach a compromise with the State of Wisconsin patterned after the Pennsylvania plan, but those efforts were not productive. There is no basis to assume that Wisconsin will be unable to reach a satisfactory accommodation with the Amish in light of what we now hold, so as to serve its interests without impinging on respondents' protected free exercise of their religion.

Affirmed.

1544 Mr. Justice POWELL and Mr. Justice REHNQUIST took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

*237 Mr. Justice STEWART, with whom Mr. Justice BRENNAN joins, concurring.

This case involves the constitutionality of imposing criminal punishment upon Amish parents for their religiously based refusal to compel their children to attend public high schools. Wisconsin has sought to brand these parents as criminals for following their religious beliefs, and the Court today rightly holds that Wisconsin cannot constitutionally do so.

This case in no way involves any questions regarding the right of the children of Amish parents to attend public high schools, or any other institutions of learning, if they wish to do so. As the Court points out, there is no suggestion whatever in the record that the religious beliefs of the children here concerned differ in any way from those of their parents. Only one of the children testified. The last two questions and answers on her cross-examination accurately sum up her testimony:

'Q. So I take it then, Frieda, the only reason you are not going to school, and did not go to school since last September, is because of your religion?
'A. Yes.
'Q. That is the only reason?
'A. Yes.' (Emphasis supplied.)

It is clear to me, therefore, that this record simply does not present the interesting and important issue discussed in Part II of the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice DOUGLAS. With this observation, I join the opinion and the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Justice WHITE, with whom Mr. Justice BRENNAN and Mr. Justice STEWART join, concurring.

Cases such as this one inevitably call for a delicate balancing of important but conflicting interests. I join the opinion and judgment of the Court because I cannot 238 say that the State's interest in requiring two more years of compulsory education in the ninth and tenth grades outweighs the importance of the concededly sincere Amish religious practice to the survival of that sect.

This would be a very different case for me if respondents' claim were that their religion forbade their children from attending any school at any time and from complying in any way with the educational standards set by the State. Since the Amish children are permitted to acquire the basic tools of literacy to survive in modern society by attending grades one through eight and since the deviation from the State's compulsory-education law is relatively slight, I conclude that respondents' claim must prevail, largely because 'religious freedom--the freedom to believe and to practice strange and, it may be, foreign creeds--has classically been one of the highest values of our society.' Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 612, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 1150, 6 L.Ed.2d 563 (1961) (Brennan, J., concurring and dissenting).

The importance of the state interest asserted here cannot be denigrated, however:

> 'Today, education is perhaps the most important function of state and local governments. Compulsory school attendance laws and the great expenditures for education both demonstrate our recognition of the importance of education to our democratic society. It is required in the performance of our most basic public responsibilities, even service in the armed forces. It is the very foundation of good citizenship. Today it is a principal instrument in awakening the child to cultural values, in preparing him for later professional training, and in helping him to adjust normally to his environment.' Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 493, 74 S.Ct. 686, 691, 98 L.Ed. 873 (1954).

*1545 *239 As recently as last Term, the Court reemphasized the legitimacy of the State's concern for enforcing minimal educational standards. Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S., 602, 613, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 2111, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971). [FN1] Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925), lends no support to the contention that parents may replace state educational requirements with their own idiosyncratic views of what knowledge a child needs to be a productive and happy member of society; in Pierce, both the parochial and military schools were in compliance with all the educational standards that the State had set, and the Court held simply that while a State may posit such standards, it may not pre- empt the educational process by requiring children to attend public schools. [FN2] In the present case, the State is not concerned with the maintenance of an educational system as an end in itself, it is rather attempting to nurture and develop the human potential of its children, whether Amish or non- Amish: to expand their knowledge, broaden their sensibilities, kindle their imagination, foster a spirit of free inquiry, and increase their human understanding and tolerance. It is possible that most Amish 240 children will wish to continue living the rural life of their parents, in which case their training at home will adequately equip them for their future role. Others, however, may wish to become nuclear physicists, ballet dancers, computer programmers, or historians, and for these occupations, formal training will be necessary. There is evidence in the record that many children desert the Amish faith when they come of age. [FN3] A State has a legitimate interest not only in seeking to develop the latent talents of its children but also in seeking to prepare them for the life style that they may later choose, or at least to provide them with an option other than the life they have led in the past. In the circumstances of this case, although the question is close, I am unable to say that the State has demonstrated that Amish children who leave school in the eighth grade will be intellectually stultified or unable to acquire new academic skills later. The statutory minimum school attendance age set by the State is, after all, only 16.

FN1. The challenged Amish religious practice here does not pose a substantial threat to public safety, peace, or order; if it did, analysis under the Free Exercise Clause would be substantially different. See Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U.S. 11, 25 S.Ct. 358, 49 L.Ed. 643 (1905); Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944); Cleveland v. United States, 329 U.S. 14, 67 S.Ct. 13, 91 L.Ed. 12 (1946); Application of President and Directors of Georgetown College, Inc., 118 U.S.App.D.C. 80, 331 F.2d 1000, cert. denied, 377 U.S. 978, 84 S.Ct. 1883, 12 L.Ed.2d 746 (1964).

FN2. 'No question is raised concerning the power of the State reasonably to regulate all schools, the inspect, supervise and examine them, their teachers and pupils; to require that all children of proper age attend some school, that teachers shall be of good moral character and patriotic disposition, that certain studies plainly essential to good citizenship must be taught, and that nothing be taught which is manifestly inimical to the public welfare.' Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 534, 45 S.Ct. 571, 573, 69 L.Ed. 1070 (1925).

FN3. Dr. Hostetler testified that though there was a gradual increase in the total number of Old Order Amish in the United States over the past 50 years, 'at the same time the Amish have also lost members (of) their church' and that the turnover rate was such that 'probably two-thirds (of the present Amish) have been assimilated non-Amish people.' App. 110. Justice Heffernan, dissenting below, opined that '(l)arge numbers of young people voluntarily leave the Amish community each year and are thereafter forced to make their way in the world.' 49 Wis.2d 430, 451, 182 N.W.2d 539, 549 (1971).

Decision in cases such as this and the administration of an exemption for Old Order Amish from the State's compulsory school-attendance laws will inevitably involve the kind of close and perhaps repeated scrutiny of religious practices, as is exemplified in today's opinion, which the Court has heretofore been anxious to avoid. But such entanglement does not create a forbidden 1546 establishment of religion where it is essential to implement free *241 exercise values threatened by an otherwise neutral program instituted to foster some permissible, nonreligious state objective. I join the Court because the sincerity of the Amish religious policy here is uncontested, because the potentially adverse impact of the state requirement is great, and because the State's valid interest in education has already been largely satisfied by the eight years the children have already spent in school.

Mr. Justice DOUGLAS, dissenting in part.

I

I agree with the Court that the religious scruples of the Amish are opposed to the education of their children beyond the grade schools, yet I disagree with the Court's conclusion that the matter is within the dispensation of parents alone. The Court's analysis assumes that the only interests at stake in the case are those of the Amish parents on the one hand, and those of the State on the other. The difficulty with this approach is that, despite the Court's claim, the parents are seeking to vindicate not only their own free exercise claims, but also those of their high-school-age children.

It is argued that the right of the Amish children to religious freedom is not presented by the facts of the case, as the issue before the Court involves only the Amish parents' religious freedom to defy a state criminal statute imposing upon them an affirmative duty to cause their children to attend high school.

First, respondents' motion to dismiss in the trial court expressly asserts, not only the religious liberty of the adults, but also that of the children, as a defense to the prosecutions. It is, of course, beyond question that the parents have standing as defendants in a criminal prosecution to assert the religious interests of their *242 children as a defense. [FN1] Although the lower courts and a majority of this Court assume an identity of interest between parent and child, it is clear that they have treated the religious interest of the child as a factor in the analysis.

> FN1. Thus, in Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645, a Jehovah's Witness was convicted for having violated a state child labor law by allowing her nine-year-old niece and ward to circulate religious literature on the public streets. There, as here, the narrow question was the religious liberty of the adult. There, as here, the Court analyzed the problem from the point of view of the State's conflicting interest in the welfare of the child. But, as Mr. Justice Brennan, speaking for the Court, has so recently pointed out, 'The Court (in Prince) implicitly held that the custodian had standing to assert alleged freedom of religion . . . rights of the child that were threatened in the very litigation before the Court and that the child had no effective way of asserting herself.' Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 438, 446 n. 6, 92 S.Ct. 1029, 1034, 31 L.Ed.2d 349. Here, as in Prince, the children have no effective alternate means to vindicate their rights. The question, therefore, is squarely before us.

Second, it is essential to reach the question to decide the case, not only because the question was squarely raised in the motion to dismiss, but also because no analysis of religious-liberty claims can take place in a vacuum. If the parents in this case are allowed a religious exemption, the inevitable effect is to impose the parents' notions of religious duty upon their children. Where the child is mature enough to express potentially conflicting desires, it would be an invasion of the child's rights to permit such an imposition without canvassing his views. As in Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645, it is an imposition resulting from this very litigation. As the child has no other effective forum, it is in this litigation that his rights should be considered. And, if an Amish child desires to attend high school, and is mature enough to have that desire respected, the State may well be able to override the parents' religiously motivated objections.

1547 *243 Religion is an individual experience. It is not necessary, nor even appropriate, for every Amish child to express his views on the subject in a prosecution of a single adult. Crucial, however, are the views of the child whose parent is the subject of the suit. Frieda Yoder has in fact testified that her own religious views are opposed to high-school education. I therefore join the judgment of the Court as to respondent Jonas Yoder. But Frieda Yoder's views may not be those of Vernon Yutzy or Barbara Miller. I must dissent, therefore, as to respondents Adin Yutzy and Wallace Miller as their motion to dismiss also raised the question of their children's religious liberty.

II

This issue has never been squarely presented before today. Our opinions are full of talk about the power of the parents over the child's education. See Pierce v. Cociety of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510, 45 S.Ct. 571, 69 L.Ed. 1070; Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 43 S.Ct. 625, 67 L.Ed. 1042. And we have in the past analyzed similar conflicts between parent and State with little regard for the views of the child. See Prince v. Massachusetts, supra. Recent cases, however, have clearly held that the children themselves have constitutionally protectible interests.

These children are 'persons' within the meaning of the Bill of Rights. We have so held over and over again. In Haley v. Ohio, 332 U.S. 596, 68 S.Ct. 302, 92 L.Ed. 224, we extended the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment in a state trial of a 15-year-old boy. In re Gault, 387 U.S. 1, 13, 87 S.Ct. 1428, 1436, 18 L.Ed.2d 527, we held that 'neither the Fourteenth Amendment nor the Bill of Rights is for adults alone.' In In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 90 S.Ct. 1068, 25 L.Ed.2d 368, we held that a 12-year-old boy, when charged with an act which would be a crime if committed by an adult, was entitled to procedural safeguards contained in the Sixth Amendment.

*244 In Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School District, 393 U.S. 503, 89 S.Ct. 733, 21 L.Ed.2d 731, we dealt with 13-year-old, 15-year-old, and 16-year-old students who wore armbands to public schools and were disciplined for doing so. We gave them reflief, saying that their First Amendment rights had been abridged.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

'Students in school as well as out of school are 'persons' under our Constitution. They are possessed of fundamental rights which the State must respect, just as they themselves must respect their obligations to the State.' Id., at 511, 89 S.Ct., at 739.

In West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628, we held that school-children, whose religious beliefs collided with a school rule requiring them to salute the flag, could not be required to do so. While the sanction included expulsion of the students and prosecution of the parents, id., at 630, 63 S.Ct., at 1181, the vice of the regime was its interference with the child's free exercise of religion. We said: 'Here . . . we are dealing with a compulsion of students to declare a belief.' Id., at 631, 63 S.Ct., at 1182. In emphasizing the important and delicate task of boards of education we said:

'That they are educating the young for citizenship is reason for scrupulous protection of Constitutional freedoms of the individual, if we are not to strangle the free mind at its source and teach youth to discount important principles of our government as mere platitudes.' Id., at 637, 63 S.Ct., at 1185.

On this important and vital matter of education, I think the children should be entitled to be heard. While the parents, absent dissent, normally speak for the entire family, the education of the child is a matter on which the child will often have decided views. He may want to be a pianist or an astronaut or an 1548 oceanographer. *245 To do so he will have to break from the Amish tradition. [FN2]

FN2. A significant number of Amish children do leave the Old Order. Professor Hostetler notes that '(t)he loss of members is very limited in some Amish districts and considerable in others.' J. Hostetler, Amish Society 226 (1968). In one Pennsylvania church, he observed a defection rate of 30%. Ibid. Rates up to 50% have been reported by others. Casad, Compulsory High School Attendance and the Old Order Amish: A Commentary on State v. Garber, 16 Kan.L.Rev. 423, 434 n. 51 (1968).

It is the future of the student, not the future of the parents, that is imperiled by today's decision. If a parent keeps his child out of school beyond the grade school, then the child will be forever barred from entry into the new and amazing world of diversity that we have today. The child may decide that that is the preferred course, or he may rebel. It is the student's judgment, not his parents', that is essential if we are to give full meaning to what we have said about the Bill of Rights and of the right of students to be masters of their own destiny. [FN3] If he is harnessed to the Amish way of life *246 by those in authority over him and if his education is truncated, his entire life may be stunted and deformed. The child, therefore, should be given an opportunity to be heard before the State gives the exemption which we honor today.

FN3. The court below brushed aside the students' interests with the offhand comment that '(w)hen a child reaches the age of judgment, he can choose for himself his religion.' 49 Wis.2d 430, 440, 182 N.W.2d 539, 543. But there is nothing in this record to indicate that the moral and intellectual judgment demanded of the student by the question in this case is beyond his capacity. Children far younger than the 14- and 15-year-olds involved here are regularly permitted to testify in custody and other proceedings. Indeed, the failure to call the affected child in a custody hearing is often reversible error. See, e.g., Callicott v. Callicott, 364 S.W.2d 455 (Tex.Civ.App.) (reversible error for trial judge to refuse to hear testimony of eight-year-old in custody battle). Moreover, there is substantial agreement among child psychologists and sociologists that the moral and intellectual maturity of the 14-year-old approaches that of the adult. See, e.g., J. Piaget, The Moral Judgment of the Child (1948); D. Elkind, Children and Adolescents 75--80 (1970); Kohlberg, Moral Education in the Schools: A Development View, in R. Muuss, Adolescent Behavior and Society 193, 199--200 (1971); W. Kay, Moral Development 172--183 (1968); A. Gesell & F. Ilg, Youth: The Years From Ten to Sixteen 175--182 (1956). The maturity of > Amish youth, who identify with and assume adult roles from early childhood, see M. Goodman, The Culture of Childhood 92--94 (1970), is certainly not less than that of children in the general population.

The views of the two children in question were not canvassed by the Wisconsin courts. The matter should be explicitly reserved so that new hearings can be held on remand of the case. [FN4]

> FN4. Canvassing the views of all school-age Amish children in the State of Wisconsin would not present insurmountable difficulties. A 1968 survey indicated that there were at that time only 256 such children in the entire State. Comment, 1971 Wis.L.Rev. 832, 852 n. 132.

III

I think the emphasis of the Court on the 'law and order' record of this Amish group of people is quite irrelevant. A religion is a religion irrespective of what the misdemeanor or felony records of its members might be. I am not at all sure how the Catholics, Episcopalians, the Baptists, Jehovah's Witnesses, the Unitarians, and my own Presbyterians would make out if subjected to such a test. It is, of course, true that if a group or society was organized to perpetuate crime and if that is its motive, we would have rather startling problems akin to those that were raised when some years back a particular sect was challenged here as operating on a fraudulent basis. United States v. Ballard, 322 U.S. 78, 64 S.Ct. 822, 88 L.Ed. 1148. But no such factors are present here, and the *1549 Amish, whether with a high or low criminal 247 record, [FN5] certainly qualify by all historic standards as a religion within the meaning of the First Amendment.

> FN5. The observation of Justice Heffernan, dissenting below, that the principal opinion in his court portrayed the Amish as leading a life of 'idyllic agrarianism,' is equally applicable to the majority opinion in this Court. So, too, is his observation that such a portrayal rests on a 'mythological basis.' Professor Hostetler has noted that '(d)rinking among the youth is common in all the large Amish settlements.' Amish Society 283. Moreover, '(i)t would appear that among the Amish the rate of suicide is just as high, if not higher, than for the nation.' Id., at 300. He also notes an unfortunate Amish 'preoccupation with filthy stories,' id., at 282, as well as significant 'rowdyism and stress.' Id., at 281. These are not traits peculiar to the Amish, of course. The point is that the Amish are not people set apart and different.

The Court rightly rejects the notion that actions, even though religiously grounded, are always outside the protection of the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment. In so ruling, the Court departs from the teaching of Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 164, 25 L.Ed. 244, where it was said concerning the reach of the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment, 'Congress was deprived of all legislative power over mere opinion, but was left free to reach actions which were in violation of social duties or subversive of good order.' In that case it was conceded that polygamy was a part of the religion of the Mormons. Yet the Court said, 'It matters not that his belief (in polygamy) was a part of his professed religion: it was still belief and belief only.' Id., at 167, 25 L.Ed. 244.

Action, which the Court deemed to be antisocial, could be punished even though it was grounded on deeply held and sincere religious convictions. What we do today, at least in this respect, opens the way to give organized religion a broader base than it has ever enjoyed; and it even promises that in time Reynolds will be overruled.

In another way, however, the Court retreats when in reference to Henry Thoreau it says his 'choice was philosophical 248 and personal rather than religious, and such belief does not rise to the demands of the Religion Clauses.' That is contrary to what we held in United States v. Seeger, 380 U.S. 163, 85 S.Ct. 850, 13 L.Ed.2d 733, where we were concerned with the meaning of the words

'religious training and belief' in the Selective Service Act, which were the basis of many conscientious objector claims. We said:

> 'Within that phrase would come all sincere religious beliefs which are based upon a power or being, or upon a faith, to which all else is subordinate or upon which all else is ultimately dependent. The test might be stated in these words: A sincere and meaningful belief which occupies in the life of its possessor a place parallel to that filled by the God of those admittedly qualifying for the exemption comes within the statutory definition. This construction avoids imputing to Congress an intent to classify different religious beliefs, exempting some and excluding others, and is in accord with the well-established congressional policy of equal treatment for those whose opposition to service is grounded in their religious tenets.' Id., at 176, 85 S.Ct., at 859.

Welsh v. United States, 398 U.S. 333, 90 S.Ct. 1792, 26 L.Ed.2d 308, was in the same vein, the Court saying:

> 'In this case, Welsh's conscientious objection to war was undeniably based in part on his perception of world politics. In a letter to his local board, he wrote: "I can only act according to what I am and what I see. And I see that the military complex wastes both human and material resources, that it fosters disregard for (what I consider a paramount concern) human needs and ends; I see that the means we employ to 'defend' our 'way of life' profoundly change that way of life. I see that in our failure to *1550 *249 recognize the political, social, and economic realities of the world, we, as a nation, fail our responsibility as a nation." id., at 342, 90 S.Ct., at 1797.

The essence of Welsh's philosophy, on the basis of which we held he was entitled to an exemption, was in these words:

> "I believe that human life is valuable in and of itself; in its living; therefore I will not injure or kill another human being. This belief (and the corresponding 'duty' to abstain from violence toward another person) is not 'superior to those arising from any human relation.' On the contrary: it is essential to every human relation. I cannot, therefore, conscientiously comply with the Government's insistence that I assume duties which I feel are immoral and totally repugnant." Id., at 343, 90 S.Ct., at 1798.

I adhere to these exalted views of 'religion' and see no acceptable alternative to them now that we have become a Nation of many religions and sects, representing all of the diversities of the human race. United States v. Seeger, 380 U.S., at 192--193, 85 S.Ct., at 867--868 (concurring opinion).

OPENING SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Watchtower Defendants want this Court to believe this case is about the correctness of the Watchtower Defendants' religious tenets and doctrine and therefore an impermissible clergy malpractice case. It is not. This case is about young children who were devastatingly violated by the Watchtower Defendants' appointed agent who used his appointed position of trust and authority within that organization to criminally, sexually abuse children entrusted to his care by the Watchtower Defendants. It is also a case about the Watchtower Defendants' intentional conduct in not only covering up the abuse, but also actively preventing the reporting of this and other instances of abuse within the organization. At the same time, the Watchtower Defendants continued to appoint this particular agent, as well as other agents, to positions of trust and authority after the Watchtower Defendants knew of their propensity to use their appointed positions in the organization to sexually abuse innocent children. Finally, it is a case about this Nation's and the state of California's compelling state interest in protecting its children from the crime of sexual abuse through the application of secular laws designed to hold accountable those responsible for such abuse.

Nothing in the First Amendment prohibits this Court from addressing the Watchtower Defendants' knowing appointment and protection of a pedophile who criminally assaulted Plaintiffs after the Watchtower Defendants were on notice that he would do just that if they continued to appoint him to a position of authority over children. Also, the First Amendment does not bar this Court from addressing the Watchtower Defendants' liability for their intentional conduct in coercing the silence of victims and preventing the reporting of abuse, not for religious reasons, but to protect the Watchtower Defendants from liability for their own conduct in knowingly continuing to appoint pedophiles to positions of leadership with authority over children without even taking the minimal step of warning members of the congregations to which they were appointed or reporting the abuse to the proper secular authorities.

None of the cases regarding clergy malpractice, as cited by the Watchtower Defendants in their Memorandum of Points and Authorities, address the duty of a religious organization in the context in which Plaintiffs brings their claims. To the contrary, those on point take exception to any argument that the First Amendment bars claims arising out of the criminal abuse of children. The Watchtower Defendants repeatedly misstated the law in their brief regarding the First Amendment and sexual abuse of children, as explained more fully below. Based on all the arguments contained herein, the Watchtower Defendants' Demurrer should be denied.

STANDARD FOR REVIEWING DEMURRER

As Watchtower Defendants' properly stated, for purposes of a demurrer, all material allegations of a complaint are accepted as true. For the purpose of determining the merits of a demurrer, the material facts alleged in the complaint are deemed admitted. Ross v. Universal Studios Credit Union (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 537. A demurrer admits all facts properly pled no matter how unlikely or improbable. Kervian v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 225, 229. Effect must be given to every allegation in the complaint, and the demurrer must be overruled if the complaint states, or from its averments it can reasonably be inferred, a plaintiff has a cause of action against the defendant on any theory. Beason v. Griff (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 382. If a complaint states any valid claim entitling plaintiff to relief, the demurrer must be denied. Quelimane Co., Inc. v Stewart Title Guar. Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 26, 28.

ARGUMENT

I

THE FIRST AMENDMENT

A. The Majority of Jurisdictions in the United States Find No First Amendment Bar To Claims Against Religious Organizations Arising Out of the Sexual Abuse of Children.

Consistent with related United States Supreme Court decisions, the majority of jurisdictions in the United States, including California, find no burdening of First Amendment liberties in the pursuit of claims against religious organizations for tortious conduct arising out of sexual misconduct by one of the organization's agents. The majority of jurisdictions refute the ability of religious organizations to hide behind the First Amendment as a way of avoiding their responsibility for the sexual abuse of children. The Florida Supreme Court recently summarized the position of these courts as follows: "The issue presented in this case is whether the First Amendment bars a third-party tort action against a religious institution grounded on the alleged tortious conduct of one of its clergy. We conclude that the First Amendment does not provide a shield behind which the church may avoid liability for harm caused to a child parishioner arising from the alleged sexual assault or battery by one of it clergy...We thus join the majority of both state and federal jurisdictions that have found no First Amendment bar under similar circumstances." Malicki v. Doe (Fla. 2002) 814 So.2d 347, 351 (emphasis added).

Plaintiffs refer this Court to the following additional decisions supporting the rights of Plaintiffs to have their claims heard by this Court. Interestingly, the first five of these cases were relied upon by the Watchtower Defendants in their Memorandum of Points and Authorities, despite the legal holdings and conclusions of these cases entirely supporting Plaintiffs: Richelle v. Roman Catholic Archbishops (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, 612 (A fiduciary duty independent of a claim of seduction exists, and recovery for its breach does not violate the First Amendment if it falls into one of two patterns: "either a minister is alleged to have taken advantage of a woman he is counseling, or a cleric is said to have sodomized young children under his charge") (emphasis added); Amato v. Greenquist (Ill. App. 1997) 679 N.E.2d 446, 451 (The First Amendment would not bar a claim that a cleric counselor used his position as a spiritual counselor to sexually exploit a counselee. "In the context of spiritual counseling, the free exercise clause is relevant only if the defendant can show that the conduct that allegedly caused the plaintiff's distress was in fact part of the belief and practices of the religious group....clerics cannot, using the shield of the First Amendment masquerade in the form of marriage counselors and then prey on their counselees."); Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church (1952) 344 U.S. 94, 109 (The First Amendment bar is not absolute and is non-existent where religion is used as an excuse for shielding criminal conduct. "Legislative power to punish subversive or hostile action cannot be doubted. If such action should actually be attempted by a cleric, neither his robe nor his pulpit would be a defense."); Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church (N.D. Texas 1995) 898 F. Supp. 1169 (The First Amendment does not bar claims of professional negligence and breach of fiduciary duty brought by a church member against a minister); Isely v. Capuchin Province (E.D. Mich. 1995) 880 F. Supp. 1138 (The First Amendment does not bar a claim for negligent supervision by a student who was a victim of sexual abuse); Bivin v. Wright (Ill. App. 1995) 656 N.E.2d 1121 (The First Amendment comes into play only when the church defendant can legitimately allege that the sexual conduct of its minister was part of its religious beliefs or practices or was in any way sanctioned by the church); F.G. v. MacDonell (N.J. 1996) 677 A.2d 258 ("When sexual conduct is involved, the fear of treading on doctrinal matters is minimal, and to establish a standard of care involves 'no impenetrable barrier.'"); Nutt v. Norwich Roman Catholic Defendants (D. Conn. 1995) 921 F. Supp. 66 (The Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment does not bar claims for negligent employment based upon alleged sexual abuse by a priest); Moses v. Defendants of Colorado (Colo. 1993) 863 P.2d 310 (The First Amendment does not bar an adult parishioner's claims against bishop and diocese for breach of fiduciary duty and negligent hiring and supervision grounded on the sexual relationship between parishioner and priest); Destanfano v. Gabrian (Colo. 1988) 763 P.2d 275 (The First Amendment does not bar a parishioner's claims for breach of fiduciary duty and negligent hiring and supervision grounded on a sexual relationship with church leader); Alberts v. Devine, 479 N.E.2d 113 (Mass. 1985); Smith v. O'Connell (D.R.I. 1997) 986 F. Supp. 73 (The First Amendment does not bar a minor's claims for negligent supervision against a church for sexual molestation by a priest); Smith v. Privette (N.C. 1998) 495 S.E.2d 395 (A claim of negligent retention and supervision against a church arising out of inappropriate sexual acts by minister is not barred by the First Amendment); Mrozka v. Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis (Minn. Ct. App. 1992) 482 N.W. 2d 806 (The First Amendment does not bar imposition of punitive damages against a church based upon priest's sexual abuse of a child); Konkle v. Henson (Ind. Ct. App. 1996) 672 N.E. 2d 450 (The First Amendment does not bar claims for negligent hiring and supervision against a church for sexual molestation); Byrd v. Faber (Oh. 1991) 565 N.E.2d 584 (Negligent hiring and supervision claims brought by a sexually abused child are not barred by the First Amendment); Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Defendants of Brooklyn (1997) 654 N.Y.S.2d 791 (A child's negligent supervision and retention claims against a diocese are not barred by the First Amendment); Bear Valley Church of Christ v. Dubose (Colo. 1996) 928 P.2d 1315 (The First Amendment does not bar a child's various tort claims against pastor and church for "pattern of inappropriate touching".); Bivin v. Wright (Ill. Ct. App. 1995) 656 N.E.2d 1121; F.G. v. MacDonell (N.J. 1997) 696 A.2d 697 (The First Amendment does not bar claim against church for negligent supervision of minister for inappropriate sexual contact); Martinez v. Primera Assemblea de Dios, Inc. (Tex. Ct. App. May 15, 1998) No. 05-96-01458, 1998 WL 242412 (The First Amendment does not bar parishioner's negligence claims against a church based upon allegations that church elder sexually assaulted her); C.J.C. v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop of Yakima (Wash. 1999) 985 P.2d 262 (The First Amendment does not bar minor sexual abuse victim from bringing tort claims against a priest and church.); Doe v. Hartz (N.D. Iowa 1997) 970 F. Supp. 1375 (The First Amendment did not bar negligent supervision claim against church brought by adult for improper sexual contact by priest.).

Plaintiffs' claims are consistent with those permitted by the above referenced decisions, which consistently found no burdening of First Amendment freedoms, despite the defendants' religious nature.

B. Religious Conduct May Be Burdened by Secular Laws Supporting a Compelling State Interest.

Even when the pursuit of claims against a religious organization burdens First Amendment freedoms, those claims are not barred by the First Amendment where the pursuit of those claims is supported by a compelling state interest. It has never been the law of the United States or the State of California that religious organizations or persons may engage in or support unlawful conduct under a claim that their religious doctrine compels them to do so. Employment Division, Department of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 879, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 1600, 108 L.Ed. 2d 876. "We have never held that an individual's religious beliefs excuse him from compliance with an otherwise valid law prohibiting conduct that the state is free to regulate. On the contrary, the record of more than a century of our free exercise jurisprudence contradicts that proposition." Id. "Laws are made for the government of actions, and while they cannot interfere with mere religious belief and opinions, they may with practices....Can a man excuse his practices to the contrary because of his religious belief? To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and in effect to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself." Reynolds v. United States (1879) 98 U.S. 145, 166-167, 25 L.Ed. 244. "Nothing we have said is intended even remotely to imply that, under the cloak of religion, persons may, with impunity, commit frauds upon the public". Cantwell v. Connecticut (1940) 310 U.S. 296, 306, 60 S.Ct. 900, 904, 84 L.Ed. 1213.

1. Regulated "Religious" Conduct

The United States Supreme Court has consistently taken the position that religious conduct may be regulated by secular laws that are neutrally applied in support of a compelling state interest. In United States v. Lee (1982) 455 U.S. 252, the United States Supreme Court considered whether or not the state could interfere with the Amish community's religious beliefs against the payment of taxes without violating the First Amendment. The United States Supreme Court held that the Amish could be required to pay social security taxes despite the fact that the payment of such taxes burdened Amish religious beliefs. The Court stated:

> We therefore accept appellee's contention that both payment and receipt of social security benefits is forbidden by the Amish faith. Because the payment of the taxes or receipt of benefits violates Amish religious beliefs, compulsory participation in the social security system interferes with their free exercise rights. The conclusion that there is a conflict between the Amish faith and the obligations imposed by the > social security system is only the beginning, however, and not the end of the inquiry. Not all burdens on religion are unconstitutional. See, e.g., Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 64 S.Ct. 438, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944); Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 25 L.Ed. 244(1879). The state may justify a limitation on religious liberty by showing that it is essential to accomplish an overriding governmental interest. Thomas v. Review Bd. Of Indiana Employment Security Div. 450 U.S. 707, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 67 L.Ed.2d 624 (1981); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 828, 28 L.Ed.2d 168(1971); Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963). (Emphasis added.)

Id. at 257-258. Thus where the compelling interests of society necessitate the restriction of certain actions, such interests are paramount over any contrary religious conduct.

Other U.S. Supreme Court opinions and those of numerous other jurisdictions across this Nation have found no bar to neutrally applied secular laws that allegedly burden First Amendment freedoms where the law is supported by a compelling state interest. See e.g. Reynolds v. United States (1879) 98 U.S. 145; Jones v. Wolf (1979) 443 U.S. 595, 604 (Secular laws may interfere with religious practices where required by compelling societal interest. To hold otherwise would make every citizen a law unto himself.); General Council of Finance and Administration of the United Methodist Church v. Superior Court of California (1978) 439 U.S. 1369 (The First and the Fourteenth Amendments do not prevent a court from independently examining decisions of a church in a secular dispute between a church and a third party.); Maryland and Virginia Eldership of the Churches of God v. Church of God at Sharpsburg, Inc. (1970) 396 U.S. 367 (Courts may resolve church property disputes that do not require examination of tenets of faith); Davis v. Beason (1890) 133 U.S. 333 (First Amendment was never intended to be invoked in the name of religion as a protection against legislation inimical to the peace, good order, and morals of society.); Cantwell v. Connecticut (1940) 310 U.S. 296 ("Nothing we have said is intended to even remotely imply that, under the cloak of religion, persons may, with impunity, commit frauds on the public."); Bob Jones University v. United States (1983) 461 U.S. 574 (State may enforce tax-exemption laws against religious school that racially discriminates for religious reasons.) McBride v McCorkle (N.J. App. 1957) 130 A.2d 881 (Prisoner could be denied the First Amendment right to attend Mass on Sundays as required by his religious beliefs due to the compelling state interest in preserving order and discipline in the prison); Christenson v. Erickson (Or. Ct. App 1989) 99 Or. App. 104, 781 P.2d 383 (Claims by victim of child sexual abuse against a church for negligent supervision, breach of fiduciary duty, intentional infliction of emotional distress and respondeat superior are not barred by First Amendment.); Martinelli v. Bridgeport Roman Catholic Church (2nd Cir. 1999) 196 F.2d 409 (First Amendment does not prohibit a court from finding a fiduciary relationship between diocese and child parishioner who was sexually abused by priest.); Moses v. Defendants of Colorado (Colo. 1993) 863 P.2d 310 (The First Amendment does not bar an adult parishioner's claims against bishop and diocese for breach of fiduciary duty and negligent hiring and supervision grounded on the sexual relationship between parishioner and priest); Smith v. O'Connell (D.R.I 1997) 986 F.Supp. 73 (The First Amendment does not bar a minor's claims for negligent supervision against a church for sexual molestation by a priest); *Byrd v. App. 1995) 656 N.E. 2d 1121 (Negligence action against church for failure to protect plaintiffs from sexual misconduct of its clergy would not violate First Amendment.); F.G. v. MacDonell (N.J. 1997) 696 A.2d 697 ("When sexual conduct is involved, the fear of treading on doctrinal matters is minimal, and to establish a standard of care involves 'no impenetrable barrier.'"); Sanders v. Jane Doe (Fla. 2002) 814 So.2d 347, 365 (The First Amendment does not provide a shield behind which the church may avoid liability for harm caused to a child parishioner arising from the alleged sexual assault or battery by one of it clergy); Bollard v. California Province of the Society of Jesus (9th Cir. 1999) 196 F.3d 940, 947-48 (Court does not violate the First Amendment when it examines the nature and severity of sexual harassment of a novice by a religious order and what measures, if any, were taken to prevent or correct it.).

The enforcement of secular laws against child sexual abuse in no way burdens the Watchtower Defendants' religious beliefs. Even if it did, however, the State of California has a compelling state interest in protecting its children from the heinous crime of child sexual abuse. Plaintiffs are asking this Court to enforce secular child abuse laws against the Watchtower Defendants, who happen to be entities that make up a religious organization, just as this Court would enforce such laws against any secular individual or entity.

The government's ability to regulate "religious" conduct is particularly strong when necessitated by a compelling state interest regarding the safety and health of children. In Prince v. Commonwealth of Massachusetts (1944) 64 S.Ct. 438, a case involving the regulation of religious conduct by members of the Watchtower Defendants' organization, the United States Supreme Court definitively ruled the First Amendment did not preclude the state from acting to enforce neutrally applied secular laws designed to protect the safety and welfare of a child, even though the enforcement of such laws violated the dictates of the child's and her family's religious beliefs as members of the Watchtower Defendants' organization. "The right to practice religion freelydoes not include the liberty to expose the community or a child to communicable disease or the latter to ill health or death." Id. at 167. (Emphasis added.) The court further ruled the "state's authority over children's activities is broader than over like actions of adults....A democratic society rests, for its continuance, upon the healthy well-rounded growth of young people into full maturity as citizens, with all that implies. It may secure this against impeding restraints and dangers, within a broad range of selection." Id. According to the United States Supreme Court, such broad range of selection includes the curtailment of religious conduct that endangers a child's health and well-being. Id.

Consistent with Prince, the United States District Court, W.D. Washington in Jehovah's Witnesses v. King County Hospital Unit No.1 (W.D. Washington 1967) 278 F.

Supp 488, judgment affirmed, 88 S.Ct. 1260 (1961), ruled the "right to practice religion freely does not include liberty to expose the child to ill health or death." Id. at 504. Similarly, the New Jersey Court of Appeals found the First Amendment provided no constraint on the government's ability to limit religious conduct to protect the health of a child whose parents were Jehovah's Witnesses. The Jehovah's Witness parents refused a blood transfusion for their child solely on the basis of their religious tenets. The court found that although the parents were in fact acting according to the religious tenets of the Jehovah's Witnesses, there was no First Amendment bar to interfering with the parents' religious conduct because it put the health of their child at risk. The court pointed out specifically that "while freedom to believe is absolute, freedom to exercise one's beliefs is not and must be considered in light of the general public welfare." Id.

Consistent with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and the majority of courts across this Nation, as discussed above, this Court should rule nothing in the First Amendment even remotely implies that, under the cloak of religion, persons and organizations may, with impunity, foster, protect, aid and abet the perpetration of the heinous crime of child sexual abuse, even if religious freedoms are thereby burdened. To hold otherwise would place religious institutions in a preferred position over secular institutions, "a concept both foreign and hostile to the First Amendment." Malicki, (Fla. 2002) 814 So.2d 347.

C. The Religious Aspects of an Organization May be Referenced for Context, Without Offending First Amendment Protections.

Plaintiffs are not asking this Court to rule on whether the Watchtower Defendants' religious beliefs are valid or have been properly applied. Instead, Plaintiffs reference the spiritual aspect of his relationship with the Watchtower organization to establish the context in which their secular claims against the Watchtower Defendants, arising out of the crime of sexual abuse, must be understood. Establishing this context does not violate the Watchtower Defendants' First Amendment rights and privileges. The discussion by the court in Martinelli v. Bridgeport Roman Catholic Diocesan (2nd Cir. 1999) 196 F.2d 409, 431 regarding the consideration of religious principles for factual context is helpful in explaining this distinction. In examining the religious teachings regarding the relationship of a bishop to a child parishioner for purposes of determining the existence of a fiduciary relationship, the court explained that evidence of religious teachings and tenets, submitted not to determine their validity, but to establish the factual predicates of a civil cause of action is properly allowed and does not violate the First Amendment. There is a distinction between the proper consideration of religious principles as facts and an improper decision that religious principles are true or false. For example, the proposition of a particular religion may be examined to determine the character of the relationship between Plaintiffs and the church, but not to assess its truth. As the court stated:

> ....Where a person's beliefs are alleged to give rise to a special legal relationship between him and his church, we may be required to consider with other relevant evidence the nature of that person's beliefs in order properly to determine whether the asserted relationship in fact exists. In doing so, we judge nothing to be hersay, support no dogma, and acknowledge no beliefs or practices of any sect to be the law.
> The obvious distinction between the proper use of religious principles as facts and an improper decision that religious principles are true or false bears a certain family resemblance to the more mundane rules of hearsay. Evidence of a statement made out of court may be inadmissible as hearsay to prove the truth of the facts asserted in it, but may be admissible for the non-hearsay purposes of proving that the statement was made or that other facts can be inferred from the making of the statement. See Fed.R.Evid. 801(c). Similarly, the proposition advanced by a particular religion that "a bishop is like a 'shepherd' to the 'flock' of parishioners" cannot be considered by a jury to assess its truth or validity or the extent of its divine approval or authority, but may be considered by the same jury to determine the character of the relationship between a parishioner and his or her bishop.

Consistent with the above authority, Plaintiffs are merely asking this Court to consider the factual context of Plaintiffs' claims, not to determine the validity of religious beliefs. See also, Moses (Colo.1993) 863 P.2d 310 (Extensive inquiry into the internal workings and controls of the Episcopal Church did not implicate the First Amendment as the court was not required to interpret or judge the religious doctrine behind such practices. Instead, the evidence established the factual context out of which the dispute arose.);

General Board of the Church of the Nazarene (Az. 2002) 54 P.3d 349 (Inquiry into church structure and religious documents on purely secular terms did not violate the First Amendment as such was necessary to establish the factual context of the dispute.); JC2 v. Grammond (D.Or. 2002) 232 F.Supp. 2d 1166 (Examination of a number of the church's cannons did not violate the First Amendment as the court was not called upon the evaluate the correctness of these cannons.); General Council on Finance and Administration of the United Methodist Church v. Superior Court of California (1978) 439 U.S. 1369 (The First and Fourteenth Amendments do not prevent a court from examining the structure and actual operation of a hierarchical church.)

D. The Watchtower Defendants Cite No United States Supreme Court Case Relevant to Plaintiffs' Claims Supporting Their Alleged First Amendment "Defense."

The Watchtower Defendants cite a total of seven United States Supreme Court cases to allege a defense that the First Amendment "precludes" this litigation against their organization. Not a single one of these cases supports their argument that Plaintiffs' claims are barred. In fact, these cases are either immaterial to the issues to be addressed by this Court or actually support Plaintiffs' causes of action alleged in the Complaint.

1. Lemon v. Kurtzman

The Watchtower Defendants cited Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602 for the proposition "the state and government cannot entangle itself in religious affairs." While that general proposition is true, it is not an issue before this Court. Plaintiffs are not asking this Court to "entangle itself in religious affairs", but instead to apply secular law to secular conduct. In Lemon v. Kurtzman, the United States Supreme Court held the government could not become involved in promoting a religion by providing government funds to religious schools. Any such funding violated the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment because it had the impermissible effect of giving significant aid to a religious enterprise. Nothing in Plaintiffs' Complaint asks this Court to fund or participate in the religious instruction of children. Plaintiffs are asking this Court to protect them from, and hold Watchtower Defendants liable for, the crime of child sexual abuse. There is nothing religious about that "affair".

2. Watson v. Jones

The Watchtower Defendants cited Watson v. Jones (1871) 80 U.S. 679 for the proposition "the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly held 'civil courts exercise no jurisdiction' over 'a matter which concerns theological controversy.'" Again, Plaintiffs' claims do not ask this Court to resolve a theological controversy. They are is asking this Court to resolve a secular controversy about the crime of child sexual abuse. An examination of the court's ruling in Watson v. Jones actually confirms Plaintiffs' argument that their claims pose no First Amendment violation. Watson v. Jones involved a dispute between two factions of a church over who was entitled to the exclusive use of church property. Articulating the difference between purely ecclesiastical matters, which a court is precluded from deciding, and secular matters, which are properly before a court even if a religious institution is involved, the court stated: "religious organizations come before us in the same attitude as other voluntary associations for benevolent and charitable purposes, and their rights of property, or of contract, are equally under the protection of the law, and the actions of their members subject to its restraints." Id. at 714. "The possession of the elders, though accompanied with larger and more efficient powers of control, is still a fiduciary possession." Id. at 721. "In this country, the full and free right to entertain any religious belief, to practice any religious principle, and to teach any religious doctrine which does not violate the laws of morality and property, and which does not infringe personal rights, is conceded to all." Id. at 728 (Emphasis added). However, "when a civil right depends upon an ecclesiastical matter, it is the civil court and not the ecclesiastical which is to decide. The civil tribunal tries the civil right and no more, taking the ecclesiastical decisions out of which the civil right arises as it finds them." Id. at 731 (Emphasis added). Therefore, "if the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church should undertake to try one of its members for murder, and punish him with death or imprisonment, its sentence would be of no validity in a civil court or anywhere else." Id. at 733 (Emphasis added). Watson v. Jones makes clear that secular courts are not precluded from deciding secular matters even when such matters involve the decisions of a religious entity.

3. Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich

The Watchtower Defendants cited*Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich* (1971) 426 U.S. 696 for a similar proposition as Watson. However, just as in Watson, the U.S. Supreme Court in Serbian similarly acknowledged courts may resolve church disputes that do not require the court to determine disputes about the meaning or validity of religious beliefs.

4. Presbyterian Church v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Mem'l Presbyterian Church

Presbyterian Church v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Mem'l Presbyterian Church (1976) 393 U.S. 440, also cited by the Watchtower Defendants, makes the same acknowledgment as in Watson and Serbian. In Presbyterian Church, the court was asked to not only interpret religious doctrine, but decide which faction in a church held the correct religious doctrine. The court appropriately held that it could not do that. However, the court specifically noted civil courts do not inhibit free exercise of religion merely by deciding disputes involving churches. Neutral principles of law, which have been developed for use in secular disputes as well, can be applied without 'establishing' churches in violation of the First Amendment. Id. at 449.

5. Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church

The Watchtower Defendants cited Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church (1952) 344 U.S. 94, for the proposition that claims of negligent hiring, supervision and retention against religious organizations with regard to sexual abuse by clergy are barred by the First Amendment. The Watchtower Defendant's again misstate the law as nothing in Kedroff supports their interpretation or their argument. Kedroff involved the viability of a New York statute purporting to transfer control of a religious entity from one governing religious body to another. The court said that kind of interference in the internal governance of a church was barred by the First Amendment. Even in that context, however, the court was careful to point out the First Amendment bar is not absolute and is, non-existent where religion is used as an excuse for shielding criminal conduct. "Legislative power to punish subversive or hostile action cannot be doubted. If such action should actually be attempted by a cleric, neither his robe nor his pulpit would be a defense. But in this case no problem of punishment for the violation of law arises. There is no charge of subversive or hostile action by an ecclesiastic. Here there is transfer by statute of control over churches." Id. at 6. Again, nothing in Kedroff supports the Watchtower Defendants' argument that claims of negligent retention and supervision for the known criminal sexual abuse by an agent of a religious organization are barred by the First Amendment. To the contrary, Kedroff supports Plaintiffs' arguments that even religious organizations are not free to hide their criminal conduct behind a "veil of religious freedom."

6. Gonzales v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manila

Similarly Gonzales v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manila (1929) 280 U.S.1, cited by Watchtower Defendants, had nothing to do with sexual abuse of any kind or any notice of such abuse on the part of the church. Gonzales concerned whether a court had to abide by the determinations of a church, made pursuant to canonical law, about what qualifications have to be met to be recognized as a chaplain. Gonzales says nothing about the First Amendment conferring a right on the church, in the name of religion, to not only turn a blind eye to the known sexual abuse of children by one of its appointed agents, but to also actively conceal such abuse, coerce the silence of victims, and intentionally prevent the reporting of such abuse for the church's own protection from liability.

7. West Virginia State Board of Educ. v. Barnette

West Virginia State Board of Educ. v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624 is the only United States Supreme Court decision cited by the Watchtower Defendants even arguably relevant. However, it still does not support a dismissal of Plaintiffs' claims. Barnette, the United States Supreme Court had to determine whether or not a local school board could require a Jehovah's Witness child to salute the flag in a public school, since such an act was against his religion. The court found that such a requirement violated the First Amendment because it was fundamental to the principles of liberty that publically funded education could not impose a particular political ideology that was partisan to any race, creed, party or faction. The court also found no compelling state interest since Congress had, by law, made flag observance voluntary. Unlike in Barnette, there is no argument in this case that some religious ideology of the Watchtower Defendants requires the abuse of children. Even if there were, however, there is a compelling state interest against conduct consistent with any such ideology.

The case law cited by the Watchtower Defendants simply does not stand for the propositions they assert in their demurrer. Repeatedly, they misstate the law. A proper reading, interpretation, and application of the law addressed above whole-heartedly refutes their arguments and supports the viability of Plaintiffs' causes of actions.

II

PLAINTIFFS PLED VIABLE CLAIMS FOR COMMON LAW NEGLIGENCE AND NEGLIGENT SUPERVISION AND RETENTION

The Watchtower Defendants argue Plaintiffs' claims for common law negligence, negligent supervision and retention and breach of fiduciary duty are barred by the First Amendment. However, they cite a number of cases which neither apply to the allegations before this Court nor support their arguments.

A. Negligence – Breach of Duty to Warn of Forseeable Harm

Plaintiffs pled a viable claim for negligent breach of a duty to warn of foreseeable harm. Under general negligence principles, a person is obligated to exercise due care in his actions so as not to create an unreasonable risk of harm to others. This duty is owed to the class of persons who it is reasonably foreseeable may be injured as a result of a person's actions. Schwartz v. Helms Bakery Limited (1967) 67 Cal.2d 232, 240-244; Lugtu v. California Highway Patrol (2001) 26 Cal.4th 703. This duty includes the duty not to place another person in a situation in which the other person is exposed to an unreasonable risk of harm through the reasonably foreseeable conduct of a third person. Lugtu, at 716. As even the cases cited by the Watchtower Defendants recognize, this duty exists especially where the defendant stands in some special relationship to either the person whose conduct needs to be controlled or in a relationship to the foreseeable victim. Tarasoff v. Regents of the University of California (1976) 17 Cal.3d 425. See also Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278 (acknowledging a duty to protect another from harm where a special relationship exists).

Peterson v. San Francisco Cmty College Dist (1984) 36 Cal.3d 799, cited by the Watchtower Defendants for the opposite proposition, recognizes a duty of care to warn and protect another from foreseeable harm where there is a relationship between the victim or the third party actor. Citing the Restatement Second Torts, §315, the court stated: "In considering whether one owes another a duty of care, several factors must be weighed including among others: The forseeability of the harm to plaintiff, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to the defendant and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with liability for the resulting breach." Id. at 806.

Plaintiffs pled an agency relationship between the Watchtower Defendants and their appointed elder, who perpetrated the sexual abuse of Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs also pled forseeability. They alleged the Watchtower Defendants knew about their agent's prior abuse of children in the Watchtower Defendants' organization and of his propensity to continue to abuse such children. They also pled that despite this knowledge, the Watchtower Defendants continued to place their agent in positions of authority where he could abuse other children. Plaintiffs' claims unquestionably satisfy the Peterson factors.

Nothing in the First Amendment bars Plaintiffs' claims for breach of duty to warn of foreseeable harm. This Court does not have to validate or determine anything about the Watchtower Defendants' religious tenets or doctrine to determine the Watchtower Defendants' appointed agent was a pedophile and the Watchtower Defendants knew its agent was sexually abusing children, yet continued to place him in positions where it was foreseeable he would abuse Plaintiffs and other children. Also, this Court does not have to analyze the Watchtower Defendants' religious tenets or doctrines to determine they have intentionally acted to prevent the reporting of abuse; thereby creating the very conditions which caused Plaintiffs' injuries. This cause of action should survive this demurrer.

B. Negligent Retention and Supervision

Plaintiffs asserted legitimate claims for negligent supervision and retention against the Watchtower Defendants. Plaintiffs alleged the Watchtower Defendants had actual prior notice that their agent, Edward Villegas, repeatedly used his appointed position to sexually abuse children under their care. The Watchtower Defendants engaged in intentional conduct to not only conceal this information from Plaintiffs and others, but also to coerce the silence of victims. The Watchtower Defendants further aided and abetted the abuse through an intentional policy of preventing the reporting of child abuse. The Watchtower Defendants engaged in this intentional tortious conspiracy in violation of both the civil and criminal law, not for any religious reason, but to protect themselves from liability for their tortious conduct in appointing and protecting known pedophiles.

Numerous courts in various jurisdictions have found no First Amendment bar to claims for negligent supervision and retention of known child abusers. By way of example, Plaintiffs refer this Court to the following cases: Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn (N.Y. App. Div. 1997) 229 A.D.2d 159, 654 N.Y.S.2d 791 (A church can be held liable for the negligent hiring, retention and supervision of a priest for sexual abuse of children.); Moses v. Diocese of Colo (Colo 1993) 863 P.2d 310 (en banc), cert. denied, (1994) 511 U.S. 1137; Bear Valley Church of Christ v. DuBose (Colo. 1996) 928 P.2d 1315 (Free exercise clause of First Amendment did not protect church from liability for negligent supervision and discipline and minister who sexually abused child in the church.); Doe v. Dorsey (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.1996) 683 So.2d 614 ("Just as the state may prevent a church from offering human sacrifices, it may protect its children against injuries caused by pedophiles by authorizing civil damages against a church that knowingly (including should know) creates a situation in which such injuries are likely to occur."); Konkle v. Henson (Ind.Ct.App.1996) 672 N.E.2d 450 (First Amendment did not bar action against church and church associations for negligent hiring and retention of minister who sexually abused child.); Erickson v. Christenson (1989) 99 Or. App. 104, 977 P.2d 1157. This cause of action should survive this demurrer.

C. The Watchtower Defendants' Authorities Do Not Provide a Basis for Barring Plaintiffs' Negligence Claims.

The Watchtower Defendant's cited numerous cases for the proposition that Plaintiffs' negligence claim is barred by the First Amendment. None of these cases support a bar of Plaintiffs' claims in this case. Again, the Watchtower Defendants have relied on numerous cases, yet misstated the clear holdings and conclusions enumerated by the various courts, as discussed below.

1. Schmidt v. Bishop

Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. 321 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) applies New York law and is not binding on this Court. Further, it does not support a First Amendment bar of Plaintiffs' claims. Schmidt is essentially a statute of limitations case. The plaintiff in Schmidt had been sexually assaulted as a child by her pastor, but had failed to bring a claim for the intentional tort of sexual assault within the one year statute of limitation. Since the claim was time barred, Plaintiff tried to articulate a negligence claim to get around the statute of limitation. The court held the plaintiff could not bring a negligence claim against the pastor for what was essentially an intentional tort under New York law. The court also held the plaintiff could not bring her fraud claim asserted against the assaulting pastor because the alleged fraud was neither independent of, nor subsequent to, the intentional tort that was time barred. Accordingly, there was no fraud claim against the employing church. The court dismissed the claims against the church stating because the claims against the perpetrator had been dismissed, the court had no choice but to also dismiss those against the church as vicarious. The only direct claim made against the church was a claim for negligent supervision and retention, which the court dismissed, not because the claim was impermissible under the First Amendment, but because the pastor had left the denomination before the abuse. Only in dicta did the court address the First Amendment issue regarding negligent supervision and retention claims against a church and then only in the context of a claim that a church was negligent for failing to properly supervise the way in which a pastor carried out its religious tenets.

That is not the issue before this Court and New York, as well numerous other jurisdictions including California, permit negligent retention and supervision claims against religious organizations for a cleric's known sexual abuse of children. Contrast with Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn (N.Y. App. Div. 1997) 229 A.D.2d 159, 654 N.Y.S.2d 791, which was decided after Schmidt and found a church can be held liable for the negligent hiring, retention and supervision of a priest for sexual abuse of children.

2. Richelle v. Roman Catholic Archbishops

The Watchtower Defendants' relied on Richelle v. Roman Catholic Archbishops, (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, to argue Plaintiffs' negligence claims are barred by the First Amendment. Richelle actually supports the permissibility of Plaintiffs' position, not the Watchtower Defendants'. Significantly, Richelle is not a case about the sexual assault of a child. It instead involves the application of the California "anti-heart-balm statute". This statute eliminates any cause of action for sexual conduct between two consenting adults, even if that sexual conduct is constrained through "the use of arts, persuasion, or wiles to overcome resistance." Because such sexual conduct is neither criminal nor tortious under California law, the plaintiff in Richelle was required to demonstrate the breach of some duty independent of a claim of seduction. "A plaintiff cannot, in other words, camouflage an abolished action with the catchwords of common law." The plaintiff argued she had alleged the "breach of a duty separate and independent of any duty not to seduce because the priest stood in a special relationship with her." Id. at 267-268. The court recognized that although a pastor could not be held liable for clergy malpractice, he could be held liable for breach of fiduciary duty. In fact, the California court expressly said a fiduciary duty independent of the claim of seduction would exist and recovery for its breach would not violate the First Amendment if it fell into one of two patterns: "either a minister is alleged to have taken advantage of a woman he is counseling, or a cleric is said to have sodomized young children under his charge. Because no credible argument can be made that such conduct is even 'arguably religious' or caused by the promptings of spiritual duty, these torts are not shielded by protestations of religious liberty." Id. at 612. (Emphasis added.) The Richelle plaintiff's claims did not fall into either category. Therefore, the sole basis upon which she could claim the existence of a fiduciary duty was her "religious belief" that her priest could be trusted. Accordingly, the court held that because it could not determine whether a fiduciary relationship existed without evaluating the plaintiff's religious beliefs, her claims were barred by the First Amendment. The court then ruled the claims against the religious organization that hired the priest had to be dismissed due to the absence of any legally recognizable injury.

Contrary to the Watchtower Defendants' representations, the court did not rule "claims against a religious organization, for the sexual misconduct of one of its agents, were barred by the First Amendment." In fact, the court expressly stated it was not making such a ruling.

3. Dausch v. Rykse

The Watchtower Defendants also relied upon Dausch v. Rykse (7th Circuit 1994) 52 F.3d 1425. Dausch applies Illinois, not California, law. It also involves consensual sex between two adults, not the criminal and tortious conduct of child sexual abuse. As such, it provides no precedent for this Court's dismissal of Plaintiffs' claims. In Dausch, an adult church member asserted claims against her pastor and the church for his sexual misconduct in a counseling relationship. Her sole claims against the church were for "professional" or clergy malpractice, breach of fiduciary duty and negligent infliction of emotional distress. Id. at 1427. The court held a claim for clergy malpractice was not recognized under Illinois law. Although the court summarily dismissed Ms. Dausch's negligent hiring and retention claims on First Amendment grounds, it did so because they were asserted solely in connection with a claim of clergy malpractice. The court was careful to point out it was following closely the reasoning of Schmidt. As discussed above, the First Amendment issue arose in Schmidt solely because the plaintiff was time barred from asserting an intentional tort against the perpetrator of the abuse. Therefore, she tried to reach the pastor by claiming the pastor was negligent in fulfilling his religious duties to her. It was the dismissal of this claim against the pastor as impermissible under the First Amendment that necessitated the dismissal of the claim against his principal, the church. Furthermore, the court in Dausch dismissed the negligent retention and supervision claims against the employing church because "there was no allegation the church defendants knew or should have known of the pastor's improper relations or of the need to exercise control over him." (Unlike Dausch, that allegation has been made in this case.) With respect to the claim for breach of fiduciary duty, the court found it could not determine the existence of a fiduciary duty under any general principles of Illinois law. Therefore, the only remaining basis upon which to determine such a duty would be an impermissible inquiry into religious tenets, which it could not do under the First Amendment. As discussed below, no such obstacle exists in this case.

4. Amato v. Greenquist

Finally, the Watchtower Defendants cited Amato v. Greenquist (Ill. App. 1997) 679 N.E.2d 446, for the proposition that this Court cannot consider Plaintiffs' claims because "to permit claims for clergy malpractice would require courts to establish a standard of reasonable care for religious practitioners practicing their respective faiths." (Defendant's Memorandum of Points and Authorities, p. 4.) What they do not tell this Court, however, is that Amato, unlike this case before this Court, actually involved a claim of clergy malpractice. They also failed to mention to this Court that Amato specifically holds claims such as those brought by Plaintiffs in this case, are not barred by the First Amendment.

In Amato, a grown man brought a claim for professional negligence in a counseling relationship because the priest who was counseling the man was also having sex with the man's wife. In holding that this man's claims were precluded by the First Amendment, the court was careful to distinguish this man's case from cases involving sexual exploitation of a plaintiff. The court stated where a cleric counselor "used his position to sexually exploit the counselee....in the context of spiritual counseling, 'the free exercise clause is relevant only if the defendant can show that the conduct that allegedly caused the plaintiff's distress was in fact part of the belief and practices of the religious group....clerics cannot, using the shield of the first amendment 'masquerade in the form of marriage counselors and then prey on their counselees. " Id. at 451. (Emphasis added.) The First Amendment comes into play only when the church defendant can legitimately allege the sexual conduct of its minister was part of its religious beliefs or practices or was in any way sanctioned by the church. Id., citing Bivin v. Wright (Ill. App. 1995) 656 N.E.2d 1121. Even then, "when sexual conduct is involved, the fear of treading on doctrinal matters is minimal, and to establish a standard of care involves 'no impenetrable barrier.'" Id., citing F.G. v. MacDonell (N.J. 1996) 677 A.2d 258.

5. Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley

Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, relied on by the Watchtower Defendants, is also inapplicable. Nally addresses the limited issue of when a third party has a duty to prevent a suicide. The court's decision in*Nally* reflects its grave concern regarding the chilling effect of imposing a duty on "non-therapist counselors", whether religious or secular, to prevent suicide. Even though the Nally plaintiff's claim against the church defendants was "for teaching certain Protestant religious doctrines that conflicted with Nally's Catholic upbringing...", the court mentions the issue of "constitutionality" only in dicta and then, only in passing, stating: "....differing theological views espoused by the myriad of religions in our state and practiced by church members, it would certainly be impractical and quite possibly unconstitutional to impose such a duty of care on pastoral counselors."

Nally is not applicable to the issues before this Court and certainly provides no authority for finding Plaintiffs' claims for breach of a duty to warn of the foreseeable harm of child abuse by its agents who was a known pedophile is barred by the First Amendment.

6. Additional Cases Relied on by Defendants

As discussed above, the Watchtower Defendants' reliance on Kedroff for the position Plaintiffs are barred by the First Amendment from bringing negligent supervision claims is misstatement of the case law by Defendants to this Court. The other cases, cited by the Watchtower Defendants, similarly do not support a First Amendment bar to Plaintiffs' claims. In fact, both Doe v. Hartz (N.D. Iowa) 970 F.Supp 1375, and Isely v. Capuchin Province (E.D. Mich 1995) 580 F.Supp. 1138, 1151, expressly deny the First Amendment constitutes a bar to a negligent supervision and retention claim against a religious entity, especially at the pleading stage. (Isely dismissed these claims, not as barred by the First Amendment, but because the Wisconsin Supreme Court has never recognized a tort for negligent supervision in any context.)

In Ayon v. Gourley (D. Colo. 1998) 47 F.Supp 2d. 1246, there was no allegation the church had any notice or prior knowledge of their agent-priest's sexual abuse of the plaintiff or anyone else. In fact, there was no allegation the church defendant even knew about the abuse of plaintiff by their agent until the complaint was filed. The only allegation made was the church defendant learned of the abuse of "a boy" two years after the assaults on the plaintiff ended. Thus, the court could not look to the neutral principle of notice to determine the negligent retention and supervision claim. Instead, the court by necessity would have to examine the inner-disciplines of the church to see if they were sufficient to screen out an individual unknown as a pedophile.

The Watchtower Defendants quoted from Schmoll v. Chapman Univ (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1434, as a related California case, when in fact, Schmoll is not related at all. Schmoll addressed the judicially created "ministerial exception" barring a court from evaluating the financial arrangements between a church and its minister. It has nothing to do with whether the First Amendment bars consideration of a negligent supervision and retention claim due to prior notice that an agent of the church was sexually abusing children and likely to continue doing so if allowed to remain in a leadership position with the church.

Specifically, Schmoll concerned whether a court could look at a religious universities inner policies for reducing a chaplain's hours and benefits for financial reasons.

Ehrens v. Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod (S.D.N.Y. 2003) 269 F.Supp.2d 328, is a summary judgment case in which the court allowed the negligent supervision and retention claims to proceed beyond the pleading stage. In response to the defendant's summary judgment motion, the court found there was no evidence the church had any notice prior to the assault on the plaintiff as a minor. Plaintiffs in this case alleged notice.

Plaintiffs properly pled a negligence claim, and accordingly, their claims should survive this demurrer.

III

PLAINTIFFS PLED VIABLE CLAIMS FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY AND FRAUD

A. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Plaintiffs alleged facts demonstrating both a duty arising out of the special relationship of trust and confidence between the Watchtower Defendants and Plaintiffs and the Watchtower Defendants' violation of that duty to Plaintiffs' great harm. As alleged, the Watchtower Defendants exercise absolute control over the moral, spiritual and educational development of members and their children. They then train and appoint male leaders to positions of authority and instruct members, especially children, to obey these leaders in all matters. Failure to comply with the Watchtower Defendants' instructions results in dire circumstances for children. As part of this control, the Watchtower Defendants assume responsibility for the welfare of members and their children, forbidding any resort to outside resources such as law enforcement or mental health care providers. In particular, they assume and insist on full responsibility for the investigation, determination and resolution of all claims of child abuse among their membership. They are the sole resource to which vulnerable women and children are permitted to turn for protection and help in overcoming this trauma. These allegations articulate facts sufficient to demonstrate a special relationship of trust and confidence that is fiduciary in nature. The Watchtower Defendants' own documents acknowledge the fiduciary nature of this relationship. (See Exhibit A, attached hereto). This determination can be made without any evaluation of religious tenets or policies.

The breach of that duty can be neutrally decided as well. Plaintiffs alleged the Watchtower Defendants, with full knowledge that their appointed elder, Edward Villegas, was a pedophile who continuing to use his appointed position as an elder to abuse or aid in abusing Plaintiffs and others, intentionally withheld that information from Plaintiffs and instead held Villegas out to be a leader who could be trusted. Plaintiffs also alleged intentional tortious conduct on the part of the Watchtower Defendants to aid, abet and protect pedophiles by preventing the reporting of child abuse.

The Watchtower Defendants cited only one case which found a First Amendment bar regarding a claim for breach of fiduciary duty for the crime of sexual assault of a child, H.R.B. v. J.L.G. (Mo.Ct. App. 1995) 913 S.W.2d 92, which nevertheless acknowledged a split in authority and stated there were other theories of liability pursuant to which a church could be held liable for the sexual abuse of a child by one of its clergy. Id. at 98-99. The court further acknowledged, "Tort actions against religious groups or persons are not offensive to the First Amendment if based on purely secular activities, unrelated to their religious functions; if the alleged wrongdoing was clearly outside the tenets of the religion, not withstanding its religious pretext, then it is actionable." Id. at 98. (Emphasis added.) That is what the Watchtower Defendants have presented this Court - a religious pretext to avoid liability for both the intentional withholding of information vital to the Plaintiffs' safety and protection and the intentional prevention of the reporting of child abuse in circumvention of both criminal and secular law.

Numerous courts have seen through that pretext and held religious organizations cannot avoid their fiduciary duties by hiding behind the First Amendment in the context of sexual abuse. California is one of those jurisdictions. In Richelle, the court recognized although a pastor could not be held liable for clergy malpractice, he could be held liable for breach of fiduciary duty. In fact, the court expressly said a fiduciary duty independent of the claim of seduction would exist and recovery for its breach would not violate the First Amendment if it fell into one of two patterns: "either a minister is alleged to have taken advantage of a woman he is counseling, or a cleric is said to have sodomized young children under his charge." By way of further example, Plaintiffs refer this Court to the following authorities: Erickson v. Christenson (1989) 99 Or. App. 104, 977 P.2d 1157 (the Oregon Court of Appeals found the plaintiff had stated viable causes of action for negligent supervision, breach of fiduciary duty, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and respondeat superior and such claims did not violate the Free Exercise clause of the First Amendment.); Jones by Jones v. Trane (1992) 591 N.Y.S.2d 927, 931; Moses v. Defendants of Colorado (Colo. 1993) 863 P.2d 310 (The First Amendment does not bar an adult parishioner's claims against bishop and diocese for breach of fiduciary duty and negligent hiring and supervision grounded on sexual relationship between parishioner and priest); Destanfano v. Gabrian (Colo. 1988) 763 P.2d 275 (The First Amendment does not bar parishioner's claims for breach of fiduciary duty and negligent hiring and supervision grounded on sexual relationship with church leader); Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church (N.D. Texas 1995) 898 F. Supp. 1169 (The First Amendment does not bar claims of professional negligence and breach of fiduciary duty brought by church member against a minister).

California lines up with the jurisdictions finding no First Amendment bar to claims for breach of fiduciary duty claim against a religious organization where the relationship is between a cleric and a child. Therefore, this Court should deny the Watchtower Defendants' Demurrer to Plaintiffs' breach of fiduciary duty claims.

B. Fraud and Fraudulent Concealment.

Under California law, the elements of fraud are: a material misrepresentation the speaker knew was false when made or was ignorant of the truth; made with the intent it be acted upon by a person who had the right to rely on its truth and who was ignorant of its falsity; and that person relied upon the misrepresentation and was injured thereby. Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal.4th 631, 638.

The fraud alleged by Plaintiffs does not require an analysis of the Watchtower Defendants' religious tenents. Therefore Schmidt, a case from New York and the sole case relied upon by the Watchtower Defendants in regard to Plaintiffs' fraud claims, is inapplicable. Plaintiffs alleged the Watchtower Defendants knowingly and intentionally, not only withheld information about known sexual predators, but also prevented the reporting of abuse in direct violation of the criminal and civil law. They have thus defrauded Plaintiffs, the community, and the government. Plaintiffs relied upon the Watchtower Defendants' omissions and false representations to his and this community's severe detriment.

PLAINTIFFS PLED VIABLE CLAIMS AGAINST THE WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS UNDER THE LEGAL THEORIES OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR, RATIFICATION, ALTER EGO AND SINGLE BUSINESS ENTERPRISE, AS WELL AS NEGLIGENT USURPATION OF INVESTIGATORY FUNCTION

A. Respondent Superior

Under Count I, Plaintiffs asserted, that as an agent and alter ego of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, Edward Villegas, repeatedly committed sexual battery upon the persons of the Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs further alleged the Watchtower Defendants knew about the abuse, continued to appoint Heard to positions where he could continue to abuse children, and then in conspiracy with each other intentionally acted to prevent the reporting of such abuse. In so doing, they have ratified Villegas' conduct and are therefore liable for the sexual battery to Plaintiffs under the legal theory of respondeat superior.

The Watchtower Defendants argue they cannot be held liable under a theory of respondeat superior because sexual abuse is outside the course and scope of an elder's duties, citing Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal.3d 202. In Mary M., the Supreme Court of California held a police officer could be acting within the course and scope of his duties for purposes of respondeat superior liability if the officer misused the authority of his office to commit the rape. The footnote referenced by the Watchtower Defendants states employees who do not have this kind of authority "may" be acting outside the scope of their authority. Plaintiffs alleged the Watchtower Defendants have a level of authority over them equivalent to that of a police officer. Plaintiffs were taught to obey the Watchtower Defendants without question and as having ultimate authority.

The footnote in Mary M. cites to Rita M. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop. The Watchtower Defendants rely on Rita M. for the proposition there can be no respondeat superior liability for sexual abuse by a priest. That is not what Rita M. says. Rita M. held sexual abuse was outside the scope of a priest's duties and because there was no evidence of ratification, there could be no respondeat superior liability. Unlike Rita M., Plaintiffs in this case alleged, and will produce, evidence of ratification by the Watchtower Defendants. Therefore, Plaintiffs has asserted a legitimate claim for respondeat superior liability against the Watchtower Defendants.

B. Ratification

Plaintiffs asserted claims for sexual assault, negligence, fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, intentional tortious prevention of reporting of child abuse, and the like, based on the theory the Watchtower Defendants ratified their agent's conduct. Specifically, Plaintiffs asserted the Watchtower Defendants knew about the sexual abuse of their agent and not only continued to place him in positions of authority where he could continue to abuse children, but actively prevented the reporting of the abuse through an intentional policy of coercing and silencing victims. Under California law, "ratification" is a recognized theory for holding persons responsible for the tortious conduct of others.

Once again, the Watchtower Defendants misrepresented the holdings of the cases they rely upon in attacking Plaintiffs' ratification claims. For example, the Watchtower Defendants cited Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 1478, in support of their argument that for ratification to occur, the act must have been done for the benefit of the principal. But that is not what Fretland says. The Watchtower Defendants are attempting to create an illusion, quoting only a portion of the a court's opinion, and then taking that portion completely out of context, and then arguing their assertion "is the law." The entire referenced quote is as follows:

> Ratification is the voluntary election by a person to adopt in some manner as his own an act which was purportedly done on his behalf by another person, the effect of which, as to some or all persons, is to treat the act as if originally authorized by him. [Citations.] A purported agent's act may be adopted expressly or it may be adopted by implication based on conduct of the purported principal from which an intention to consent to or adopt the act may be fairly inferred, including conduct which is 'inconsistent with any reasonable intention on his part, other than that he intended approving and adopting it.' [Citations.]" (Rakestraw v. Rodrigues (1972) 8 Cal.3d 67, 73 [104 Cal.Rptr. 57, 500 P2d1401].)
> Fretland, 69 Cal.App.4th at 1490-1491.

The Fretland court also stated:

> The Iverson court recognized that the prohibition against imposing vicarious liability on an employer does not apply when there was "positive misconduct" by the employer such as when the employer "ratified" the tortious conduct of its employee and thereby became "liable for the employee's wrongful conduct as a joint participant." (Iverson, supra, 143 Cal.App.3d at p. 228.) Other courts have also recognized that an employer can be held civilly liable as a joint participant in assaultive conduct committed by its employee pursuant to the doctrine of ratification. (See Herrick v. Quality Hotels, Inns & Resorts, Inc. (1993) 19 Cal.App.4th 1608, 1618 [24 Cal.Rptr.2d 203]; Hart v. National Mortgage & Land Co. (1987) 189 Cal.App.3d 1420, 1432 [235 Cal.Rptr. 68], disagreed with on other grounds in Mogilefsky v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal.App.4th 1409, 1415-1416 [26 Cal.Rptr.2d 116].)

Plaintiffs alleged that by continuing to appoint a known pedophile to positions of authority where he could abuse children and by intentionally coercing the silence of victims and others, the Watchtower Defendants adopted their agent's conduct as their own. These allegations sufficiently articulate a viable claim for ratification.

The Watchtower Defendants also misrepresent the import of Emery v. Visa International (2002) 95 Cal. App.4th 952. They cite Emery for the proposition that under California law, a principal cannot ratify the conduct of an agent unless that agent acts on behalf of the principle. Emery, however, dealt with an attempt to create an agency relationship by ratification. In Emery, the alleged bad actor had no relationship to the alleged principle, nor was there any evidence the alleged principle knew anything about the conduct complained of. Instead, the plaintiff argued that by not doing anything about conduct it did not even know about, the alleged principal ratified a third party's conduct and thereby created an agency relationship by ratification. In that context, the court said one has to be acting on behalf of another to create an agency by ratification.

Plaintiffs, in this case, do not need ratification to create an agency relationship. Elders are appointed directly by the Watchtower Defendants and serve at their behest. (See Exhibit B, The Watchtower Defendants answer in Federal Court in a matter styled No. CS-02-0190-WFN; Erica Rodriguez, vs. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al; In the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington). Plaintiffs alleged the Watchtower Defendants not only knew about this abuse, but continued to appoint their agent to positions where the abuse could continue and also intentionally acted to prevent the reporting and disclosure of their agents' abuse. They thereby ratified it by their own conduct.

C. Failure to Report/Criminal Aiding and Abetting/Negligent Usurpation of Investigatory Function

If this Court has any doubt the Watchtower Defendants ratified their agent's conduct in sexually abusing Plaintiffs, it need only look at the Watchtower Defendants' arguments regarding their civil and criminal liability for failing to report. The Watchtower Defendants argue the mandatory reporting requirements of California Penal Code, Section 11166, do not apply to them in this case because clergy did not become mandatory reporters until January 1, 1997. They also argue there is no civil liability for aiding and abetting a criminal by harboring him and/or preventing his apprehension by law enforcement officers, in violation of California Penal Code Section 32.

Neither of the above arguments helps the Watchtower Defendants. The above cited criminal statutes set a standard by which their conduct may be judged. The Watchtower Defendants owed Plaintiffs a duty of care to not actively prevent the reporting of child abuse and thereby prevent law enforcement officials from apprehending these pedophiles. They also owed him a duty to report. Whether these laws in and of themselves create civil causes of action, does not preclude their use to define the standard by which the Watchtower Defendants were required to act. The argument the mandatory duty to report did not apply to clergy until January 1, 1997 does not prevent the reporting statute from setting a standard of care. In addition, and perhaps even more importantly, the reporting statute speaks directly against the Watchtower Defendants' claims they have not ratified their elder, Edward Villegas' conduct.

Section 11166(3)(A) expressly provides prior to January 1, 2004, clergy may report, with immunity, any knowledge or reasonable suspicion a child may have been sexually abused, even if they did not previously report it, even if it occurred prior to 1997, and even if the victim has reached the age of majority. Plaintiffs recently learned that in response to an October 1991 article in the Watchtower Defendants' magazine "Awake" regarding child sexual abuse, the Watchtower Defendants received hundreds of letters from members of their organization articulating both abuse by elders, ministerial servants and pioneers, and also actions by the Watchtower Defendants in preventing the reporting of such abuse. If the Watchtower Defendants' do not have a policy of concealing and actively preventing the reporting of child abuse and if, as the Watchtower Defendants claim, they have not ratified the conduct of their agents in abusing Plaintiffs and others, then where are the reports permitted by Section 11166(3)(A) regarding this outcry of abuse by their agents?! At a time when the Watchtower Defendants are indeed mandatory reporters under California law, they have failed to take any steps to avail themselves of the opportunity to notify authorities of the hundred of claims of abuse from their own members regarding elders, ministerial servants, pioneers and others who are still in appointed positions of leadership within the Watchtower Defendants' organization. They have also deliberately acted to silence the outcry. This is both gross ratification and a gross breach of their own duty of care to Plaintiffs and others.

D. Alter Ego and Single Business Enterprise

Plaintiffs pled these theories as a basis for holding the Watchtower Defendants liable for the torts of each other. Plaintiffs does not assert these theories a causes of action, but as theories of liability.

CONCLUSION

For all the reasons stated herein above, Plaintiffs respectfully requests this Court deny the Watchtower Defendant's Demurrer in its entirety, or alternatively, grant leave to amend if necessarily required by this Court.

CONFIDENTIAL TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS - July 20, 1998

CONFIDENTIAL TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Dear Brothers:

We are here providing, for your future reference, information that was presented at the 15-hour supplementary course for congregation elders on certain serious matters.

Child Molestation: The Society's letter to all bodies of elders dated March 14, 1997, page 2, paragraph 5, states: "[Give the Society a report on anyone who is currently serving or who formerly served in a Society-appointed position in your congregation who is known to have been guilty of child molestation in the past. " Reports indicate that some elders think this direction does not apply if before his baptism the person sexually abused a child. However, even in such a situation, the elders should write the branch office. This is true even if what occurred was many years ago. If any body of elders has not yet reported such a matter, they should immediately do so. Furthermore, any correspondence put in the confidential congregation file about an individual accused of child molestation, proven or otherwise, should be marked "Do Not Destroy" and be kept indefinitely.

In the Kingdom Ministry School Supplementary Course for Congregation Elders there was a panel discussion in Unit 5b, "USE DISCERNMENT IN HANDLING SERIOUS MATTERS." This portion of the course addressed questions related to the problems associated with child abuse. Question 6 to the panel asked: "What factors should be considered in determining what congregation privileges, if any, a former child molester can enjoy?" The answer included the statement: "There are also legal considerations." Some have inquired about how and why legal considerations should affect our recommendations of those who have been guilty of child abuse in the past.

Those who are appointed to privileges of service, such as elders and ministerial servants, are put in a position of trust. One who is extended privileges in the congregation is judged by others as being worthy of trust. This includes being more liberal in leaving children in their care and oversight. The congregation would be left unprotected if we prematurely appointed someone who was a child abuser as a ministerial servant or an elder. In addition, court officials and lawyers will hold responsible any organization that knowingly appoints former child abusers to positions of trust, if one of these, thereafter, commits a further act of child abuse. This could result in costly lawsuits, involving dedicated funds that should be used to further the Kingdom work. So, legal considerations must also be weighed along with the degree of notoriety, the extent of the misconduct, how many years ago the sin occurred, and how the brother is now viewed by the congregation and people In the community including those he victimized.

Scriptural Freedom to Remarry: The 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 1, describes a situation where an adulterous mate unilaterally obtains a divorce over the objection of the innocent mate. In such a case, the guilty one is not free to remarry.

What if the innocent mate consents to the divorce by signing the divorce papers? Does this free the guilty mate to remarry? Yes, Jesus' counsel at Matthew 5:37 applies here: "Let your Yes mean Yes, your No, No." If the innocent mate, perhaps in an effort to protect herself financially or to obtain custody of children, agrees to a divorce obtained by her adulterous husband, the adulterous one is then free to remarry. Although the innocent one may claim forgiveness, by signing the divorce papers she indicates her rejection of the adulterous mate. Since she has rejected that one, she holds no further claim on him, and he is Scripturally free to remarry .

Another situation involving the Scriptural freedom to remarry is where an unscriptural divorce is obtained and then, some time later, one of the mates commits fornication. In such a case, does either one have a Scriptural basis to remarry?

If a man takes the initiative and divorces his mate without a Scriptural basis and his divorced wife later commits adultery, both are free to remarry. This is because, by his previous unscriptural action of divorcing his wife, the husband has given evidence of his wanting to reject her. What is stated in the 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 6, applies: "A person who commits adultery after having been divorced by his or her mate on unscriptural grounds would be Scripturally free to remarry, since he or she had already been rejected by the mate that obtained the divorce. " However, the converse is not necessarily true.

If the one who initiated the unscriptural divorce later commits adultery, that one is still obligated to confess to the mate, although they are legally divorced. The innocent mate must be given the opportunity to determine whether to forgive or not. However, in both cases, the one committing adultery would need to meet with a judicial committee.

While the principles outlined above should prove helpful in handling inquiries from publishers about the Scriptural freedom to remarry , the elders should always exercise extreme caution when providing an answer. They should never inform a publisher that there appears to be a basis for Scriptural freedom to divorce and remarry , unless conclusive evidence has been established (1) that adultery was committed, (2) that the innocent mate has rejected the guilty one, and (3) that a legal, final divorce has been obtained. Because of the numerous factors involved in such matters, in many cases it will be best to write the Society. When doing so, always provide as many details as possible, including the names of the individuals involved. The Society will then provide the needed assistance.

When a divorced brother or sister wishes to remarry , the elders should kindly request to see the divorce papers to make sure that that one is legally free to do so. They should also determine that it has been established that both parties involved are Scripturally free to remarry . (Matt. 19:9) This will help servants of Jehovah to preserve the cleanness of the congregation and avoid entering adulterous marriages. Always review the Society's letter to all bodies of elders.

there is a branch committee that provides spiritual oversight over the activities in the country or countries under their jurisdiction, and allege that Jehovah's Witnesses assigned as volunteers at branch offices are commonly referred to as "Bethelites," or members of the "Bethel" family; admit that there are three Bethel complexes in the United States located in Brooklyn, Patterson and Wallkill, New York; admit that the Executive Offices, Treasurer's Office, the majority of the Writing Department, and the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses are located in Brooklyn, New York; admit that the United States branch Service Department and most of the Legal Department are located in Patterson, New York; admit that among the duties of the Service Department are the spiritual oversight of the congregations, elders, circuit and district overseers, and the preaching activity of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States; further admit that from time to time the Service Department issues letters that provide spiritual assistance and guidance to congregations elders, circuit and district overseers, and to congregations, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 9 of plaintiff's complaint.

10. With reference to paragraph 10 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses provides spiritual oversight over the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide and further admit that the Governing Body oversees the appointment of spiritually qualified men to provide spiritual oversight over branches, districts, circuits and congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the earth, but deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 10 of plaintiff's complaint.

11. 12. With reference to paragraph 12 of plaintiff's complaint, allege that individual Jehovah's Witnesses exercise free choice as to whether or not they want to follow direction, guidance and policies promulgated by the organization, and further allege that many choose not to follow such direction. Further allege that no one is capable of, or expected to follow such to perfection, and deny the specific allegations in paragraph 12 of plaintiff's complaint.

13. With reference to paragraph 13 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants allege that there is much more to an individual Jehovah's Witness becoming a publisher than the ritual of baptism. Baptism is merely the final step. Further allege that publishers do not donate personally or collect donations because they are directed by the Governing Body or the local congregation. Defendants further allege that a publisher's choice to do so is on a voluntary basis based upon their own free will. Further allege that there is no record kept of what individual publishers do in this regard, and that some undoubtedly are incapable of donating and/or do not collect donations. Defendants deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 13 of plaintiff's complaint.

14. With reference to paragraph 14 of plaintiff's complaint, allege that some adult male publishers will never be eligible to be elders. Further allege that the recommendation for someone to be an elder is made by the entire local body of elders, and not by the Service Committee of the local congregation; allege that the recommendation is sent to the United States branch where it is then reviewed by appointed elders in the Service Department. Further, defendants allege that publishers are not told that all elders are exemplary, and allege that publishers know that elders are imperfect humans who make mistakes, and further that some of them fall away from the faith and are far from exemplary. Further allege that when it becomes known that an elder is no longer conducting himself in an exemplary fashion, he is removed. Defendants deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 14 of plaintiff's complaint.

15. With reference to paragraph 15 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants allege that publishers are encouraged, but not expected, to teach Bible truths to others, to include the good news of God's Kingdom, and deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 15 of plaintiff's complaint.

16. With reference to paragraph 16 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that at various times in the past Manuel Beliz was associated with the Othello North Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses and that he was a resident of the state of Washington during this association. Defendants further admit that subsequently, upon information and belief, Manuel Beliz was convicted of felony crimes involving sexual abuse of a minor and remains incarcerated in the state of Washington. Further allege that Manuel Beliz was disfellowshipped for a period of time, during which time Mr. Beliz would not have been one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Defendants deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 16 of plaintiff's complaint.

III.

VENUE

17. Admit that venue is proper in this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1391, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 17 of plaintiff's complaint.

With reference to paragraph 18 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that John White is an elder in the Othello North Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, and further admit that congregation elders administer spiritual counsel and discipline as needed to publishers associated with their local congregation, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 18 of plaintiff's complaint.

20. Deny paragraph 20 of plaintiff's complaint for lack of present information upon which to form a basis for belief.

21. With reference to paragraph 21 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that, upon information and belief, plaintiff and her family moved to Sacramento, California, and for a period of time were members of the Las Palmas Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses at that location, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 21 of plaintiff's complaint.

22. With reference to paragraph 22 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that in June, 1996, plaintiff reported to Las Palmas Congregation elders Carlos Chicas and Milton Melendez that she had been sexually abused by Manuel Beliz, and deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 22 of plaintiff's complaint.

With reference to paragraph 24 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that Manuel Beliz was disfellowshipped in 1996 and reinstated in 1998; admit that plaintiff provided information to police authorities in Sacramento, California, and Othello, Washington, which led to the subsequent arrest and conviction of Manuel Beliz, but deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 24 of plaintiff's complaint.

25. With reference to paragraph 25 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that Manuel Beliz was convicted of felony criminal sexual conduct with a minor in the Adams County Superior Court in Ritzville, Washington, and further admit that John White provided testimony to the court at the time of sentencing of Mr. Beliz, but deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 25 of plaintiff's complaint.

26. With respect to paragraph 26 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants deny that Washington had an applicable statute mandating any report by church ministers, to include elders of the Othello North Spanish Congregation to report allegations of child abuse to law enforcement authorities, and specifically deny any lawful duty to do so under circumstance of the information related by plaintiff to church elders in Sacramento and/or as subsequently related to elder John White of the Othello North Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. Further allege that the applicable Washington statute (RCW 26.44.030) imposes no such requirement or duty as a matter of law. Defendants allege that the decision on reporting plaintiff's allegations to law enforcement authority was left to the sole discretion of plaintiff and/or her parents, and defendants deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 26 of plaintiff's complaint.

27. With reference to paragraph 27 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants admit that Manuel Beliz was subsequently convicted on felony charges based upon the information provided by the plaintiff to law enforcement authorities, but deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 27 for lack of present information upon which to form a basis for belief.

28. Deny paragraph 28 of plaintiff's complaint for lack of present information upon which to form a basis for belief.

29. With reference to paragraph 29 of plaintiff's complaint, these defendants reallege their response to paragraph 26 of plaintiff's complaint, as if more fully set forth herein; admit that John White is an elder with the Othello North Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, and that Carlos Chicas is an elder of the Las Palmas Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Sacramento, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 29 of plaintiff's complaint.

31. Deny paragraph 31 of plaintiff's complaint.

32. With respect to paragraph 32 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants allege upon information and belief that elders John White and Carlos Chicas acted appropriately upon receiving information from plaintiff, but deny all of the remaining allegations of paragraph 32 of plaintiff's complaint.

33. Deny paragraph 33 of plaintiff's complaint.

42. Deny paragraph 42 of plaintiff's complaint.

With reference to paragraph 43 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants allege first knowledge of plaintiff's claims of sexual abuse by Manuel Beliz when such information was first provided in June, 1996; deny that any fiduciary duty was owed to plaintiff under the circumstances herein; deny that any duty was breached under the circumstances herein; and further deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 43 of plaintiff's complaint.

44. Deny paragraph 44 of plaintiff's complaint for lack of present information upon which to form a basis for belief, and specifically deny that plaintiff was unable to discover any injury caused by the alleged abusive acts of Manuel Beliz as of the date of the first disclosure to these defendants in June, 1996.

FOR FURTHER ANSWER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT AND AS AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES THERETO, defendants allege as follows:

1. Plaintiff's complaint fails to set forth a cause of action for which relief can be granted as against these answering defendants.

2. Plaintiff's service of process on defendant Watchtower was insufficient. Process server Angelo Rivera, of Avenger Process Services, Inc., stated in an Affidavit of Service that he left a copy of the plaintiff's complaint with Watchtower employee Ms. Donna Bush; however, Watchtower does not now and has not ever employed anyone by the name of Donna Bush.

3. The plaintiff's complaint is barred by operation of RCW 4.16.340.

4. These answering defendants owed no legal duty, and no fiduciary duty, to plaintiff under the circumstances herein such that her claims fail to

5. Plaintiff's injuries and damages, if any, were due to the actions of Manuel Beliz, for whom these answering defendants have no lawful liability.

6. Plaintiff's injuries and damages, if any, were caused by the intervening, superseding actions or omissions of third-parties for whom these answering defendants have no lawful liability.

7. Plaintiff's injuries and damages, if any, resulted from her own fault, carelessness and negligence, and were not caused by the negligence of these answering defendants. If not the sole and proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries and damages, plaintiff's fault, carelessness and negligence was a contributing cause such that the amount of any damages must be reduced by the percentage of fault, carelessness or negligence as found to exist at the time of trial herein.

8. Plaintiff's claims are barred by the doctrine of laches.

9. Plaintiff's claims against these answering defendants must be dismissed under provisions of the United States Constitution, First Amendment, to specifically include the separation of church and state, and the freedom of religion.

10. Contrary to the assertions in plaintiff's complaint, RCW 26.44.030 does not require church ministers or clergy to report claims of sexual abuse of a minor, and any claims premised upon such allegation fail to state a claim for which relief can be granted herein.

11. Plaintiff has failed to mitigate her damages herein.

WHEREFORE, having fully answered plaintiff's complaint, and having asserted affirmative defenses thereto, these answering defendants pray that plaintiff's claim be dismissed with prejudice, and that these defendants be awarded their costs and disbursements herein, to include reasonable attorney

OPENING SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Defendant Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania (hereinafter "Watch Tower Pennsylvania") moved this Court for an Order quashing service of summons upon it and dismissing Plaintiffs' Complaint as to Watch Tower Pennsylvania on the grounds that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over it. In its Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of its Motion, Watch Tower Pennsylvania provides this Court with a basic synopsis of the requirements for in personam jurisdiction as handed down by the United States Supreme Court and applied by the California courts. The factual description of Watch Tower Pennsylvania and its relationship to Plaintiffs and the non-moving defendants, however, is woefully inadequate, if not purposefully misleading.

Before addressing the law, it is Plaintiffs' position the Court must first be provided with a fair description of the entity seeking an Order quashing service. It is Plaintiffs' position the Jehovah's Witnesses organization acts as a single business enterprise with the Watch Tower Pennsylvania having a chief role in California and worldwide.

II

NARROWING OF DEFENDANTS

A. PARTIES NAMED IN PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINT

In this Complaint, Plaintiffs alleged the Jehovah's Witnesses organization is controlled by a group of men called the Governing Body [Para. 22]. Plaintiffs further alleged the Governing Body sits at the top of a hierarchical structure of entities (incorporated and unincorporated), which act as agents, servants and alter egos for the Governing Body. The Governing Body uses these entities to operate, oversee and make policy for the worldwide organization of Jehovah's Witnesses. The Jehovah's Witnesses organization works as a single business enterprise on behalf of the Governing Body [Para. 23]. The Complaint also describes how the operation, oversight and policies of the Jehovah's Witnesses led to Plaintiffs' damages.

To pursue the theories pled in the Complaint, Plaintiffs named several legal entities as defendants including:

-Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.;

-Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc.;

-Watchtower Enterprises, L.L.C.;

-Watchtower Foundation, Inc.;

-Watchtower Associates, Ltd.;

-Kingdom Support Services, Inc.;

-Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Inc.;

-Religious Order of Jehovah's Witnesses;

-Napa Kingdom Hall dba Napa Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses - Jehovah's Witnesses Oak Knoll Congregation and Jehovah's Witnesses Sliverado Congregation.

B. PLAINTIFFS' INTENT TO DISMISS FIVE DEFENDANTS

Since filing the Complaint, Plaintiffs have gained a better understanding of the entities used by the Governing Body to operate and oversee the Jehovah's Witnesses organization relative to the allegations being made in Plaintiffs' Complaint.

First, Plaintiffs have determined Watchtower Enterprises, L.L.C., Watchtower Foundation, Inc., and Watchtower Associates, Ltd., are entities unrelated to the Jehovah's Witnesses organization. Plaintiffs will dismiss these three entities.

Second, Plaintiffs have determined Kingdom Support Services, Inc., and Religious Order of Jehovah's Witnesses are entities within the Jehovah's Witnesses organization, but have no connection to the matters alleged by Plaintiffs in their Complaint. Plaintiffs will dismiss these two entities.

The remaining defendants, collectively referred to in Plaintiffs' Complaint as Watchtower Defendants, are be as follows:

-Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.;

-Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc.;

-Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses;

-Napa Kingdom Hall dba Napa Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses - Jehovah's Witnesses Oak Knoll Congregation and Jehovah's Witnesses Sliverado Congregation.

As mentioned above, Plaintiffs allege the Governing Body operates, oversees and makes policy with respect to the worldwide operations of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization, which includes California. The Governing Body is an association that is not a partnership, corporation or other legally recognizable entity for purpose of litigation. The Governing Body, however, exists and has acted primarily through two corporate entities:

-Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

-Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc.

Watch Tower Pennsylvania has moved this Court to quash service of summons, but Watchtower New York has not.

III

PRELIMINARY CONSIDERATIONS

A. APPLICATION OF THE LAW DEPENDS ON GOOD FACTS

This Court is being called upon to determine whether its exercise of personal jurisdiction over Watch Tower Pennsylvania does or does not violate "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice". International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 316 [90 L.Ed. 95, 102, 66 S. Ct. 154, 161 A.L.R. 1057]. In making this determination, this Court must evaluate the facts of this case in determining whether personal jurisdiction would comport with 'fair play and substantial justice'. Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 460 citing Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 485 [85 L.Ed.2d 528, 105 S.Ct. 2174] (high court rejects use of talismanic jurisdictional formulas).

B. DISCOVERY NOT OBTAINED FROM WATCH TOWER PENNSYLVANIA

Plaintiffs filed their Complaint on July 23, 2003, and have not been afforded the opportunity to direct discovery to Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

1. Plaintiffs Request an Opportunity to Conduct Written Discovery

As mentioned above, Plaintiffs' Complaint was filed on July 24, 2003, and no discovery to any Defendant has been served, much less answered. Plaintiffs are confident this Court will find its exercise of personal jurisdiction over Watch Tower Pennsylvania to be appropriate and reasonable. To further support their position relative to Watch Tower Pennsylvania's continuous and systematic contacts in California, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court allow Plaintiffs the opportunity to conduct discovery with regard to Watch Tower Pennsylvania's contacts in California. Goehring v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal.App.4th 894, 911; see also Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal.App.3rd 703 [215 Cal. Rptr. 442], 711; School Dist. Of Okaloosa County v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 1126, 1132 (plaintiff may be given time to conduct discovery concerning the "contacts" issue before the trial court rules on a motion to quash service of summons); Ziller Electronics Lab GmbH v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal.App.3rd 1222, 1234; Weil & Brown, Cal Practice Guide: Civil Procedure Before Trial 1 (The Rutter Group 1997) P 3:386, p. 3-92, rev.#1 1995.

Attached hereto as Exhibit 1 is Plaintiffs' First Set of Interrogatories to Defendant Watch Tower Bible & Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc. Additionally, attached hereto as Exhibit 2 is Plaintiffs First Request for Production to Defendant Watch Tower Bible & Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc. Both of these discovery devices are narrowly drawn to obtain information regarding Watch Tower Pennsylvania's business activities and contacts in the state of California during the times relevant to Plaintiffs' allegations. These two sets of discovery will be served in the immediate future to address the jurisdictional issues, if required.

2. Plaintiffs Request an Opportunity to Depose Abrahamson

In support of Watch Tower Pennsylvania's Motion to Quash Service of Summons, Watch Tower Pennsylvania relies on the affidavit of Richard Abrahamson, its Secretary and Treasurer. In his affidavit, Mr. Abrahamson testified the "primary purpose of Watch Tower is to coordinate the worldwide activities of Jehovah's Witnesses." On its face, Plaintiffs do not quarrel with Mr. Abrahamson on this point; in fact, Plaintiffs agree Watch Tower Pennsylvania coordinated a number of activities relating to child sexual abuse, created and enforced policies relating to child sexual abuse, and engaged in continuing efforts to conceal sexual abusers and sexually abusive behavior. Additionally, Plaintiffs contend that "worldwide" certainly includes the state of California.

An obvious need exists to conduct discovery relative to Mr. Abrahamson's assertions and other "contact matters" about which Mr. Abrahamson may have knowledge. A deposition notice for Richard Abrahamson with respect to Watch Tower Pennsylvania's corporate organization, relationship to the Governing Body and other issues involving Watch Tower Pennsylvania's contacts with California is attached as Exhibit 3.

WATCHTOWER ADMISSIONS

A. PLAINTIFFS' ALLEGATIONS

In their Complaint, Plaintiffs made several serious allegations against the Jehovah's Witnesses organization – not the least of which is that several entities conspired to aid and abet known child molesters to rape and/or sexually assault children in California. Additionally, Plaintiffs alleged several entities conspired to conceal and/or suppress information about sexual abuse perpetrated by leaders appointed by the organization.

In their Complaint, Plaintiffs carefully described, based on information and belief, how the Jehovah's Witnesses organization is structured and how it functions relative to Plaintiffs' claims. The Defendants in this lawsuit have offered no organizational description to help the Court or Plaintiffs better understand their operations, oversight or policy-making. It is Plaintiffs' position this Court's decision as to the reasonableness of its exercise of jurisdiction over Watch Tower Pennsylvania depends on a fair understanding of Watch Tower Pennsylvania as it relates to the operation of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization.

In their Complaint, Plaintiffs sued Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of New York, Inc. (Watchtower New York), Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (CCJW) and the Watchtower Group, Inc. These entities have been served with Plaintiffs' Complaint and have not challenged this Court's exercise of personal jurisdiction.

B. RODRIGUEZ LITIGATION - WASHINGTON FEDERAL COURT

Watchtower New York and a Jehovah's Witnesses congregation were named as defendants in a lawsuit filed in United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington on May 29, 2002. A certified copy of the Complaint styled Erica Rodriguez v. Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al, is attached hereto as Exhibit 4. The lawsuit alleged, among other things, several corporate entities were acting in concert to aid and abet child abusers and to conceal the abuse. The lawsuit further alleged an unincorporated group of individuals known as the Governing Body is the ultimate decision-making group for all Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide and that the Governing Body acted through various incorporated and unincorporated entities to carry out the business and activities of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization in the state of Washington and worldwide (see paragraphs 4 through 6 of the Rodriguez Complaint attached as Exhibit 4). These allegations mirror those pled in the instant case.

C. WATCHTOWER ANSWER IN RODRIGUEZ

In response to the Rodriguez Complaint, Watchtower New York and the Washington congregation filed Defendants Watchtower and Othello (North) Spanish Congregation's Answer to Plaintiffs' Complaint (hereinafter the "Rodriguez Answer") on August 5, 2002. A certified copy of the Rodriguez Answer is attached hereto as Exhibit 5.[1] The Rodriguez Answer was signed by Donald Stone, Attorney for Watchtower New York and the Othello Congregation in the Rodriguez case.

1. Rule 8 of FRCP

For a qualification of an averment, the pleader shall specify so much of it as is true and material and shall deny only the remainder." [Emphasis added] See Mann v. Smith (5th Cir. 1986) 796 F.2d 79, 86.

2. Rule 11 of FRCP

Rule 11 (b) of the FRCP requires the following: "By presenting to the court (whether by signing, filing, submitting, or later advocating) a pleading, ... an attorney ... is certifying that to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances, -- (3) the allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support ... ." [Emphasis added]

Accordingly, by signing the Rodriguez Answer, Donald Stone, Esq., is making the representation to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Washington that the factual contentions contained therein have evidentiary support.

D. FACTUAL AVERMENTS IN RODRIGUEZ COMPLAINT

In Paragraphs 4 through 9 of her Complaint, Rodriguez made several factual averments relating to the organizational structure of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization; the allegations made by Rodriguez relative to the Jehovah's Witnesses' organizational structure are very similar to those alleged by Plaintiffs in the instant case. The Rodriguez Complaint alleges in Paragraph 5 that:

> The head of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses is the Governing Body, which consists of approximately 10-13 men, also known as the Faithful and Discreet Slave, ... The Governing Body served until October 2000 as members of the board of directors and officers of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc. and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. The Governing Body, as directors, used those two legal entities to direct all of the organization Jehovah's Witnesses and its affairs around the world.

E. WATCHTOWER ADMISSIONS IN RODRIGUEZ ANSWER

In the Rodriguez Answer, Watchtower New York and the Othello Congregation admitted the following in Paragraph 5:

> With reference to paragraph 5 of Plaintiff's complaint, admit that the Governing Body exercises spiritual oversight of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide; admit that such Governing Body presently consists of 11 men, who are part of what is known as the Faithful and Discreet Slave ... ; admit that some of the members of the Governing Body served as members of the Board of Directors and as officers of Watchtower (sic) Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc., and of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, until October, 2000; further admit that the Governing Body used Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, to help carry out the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide; admit that the Governing Body exercises spiritual oversight over the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide and oversees the appointment of congregation elders and ministerial servants; admit that the Governing Body has six committees (Chairman's, Writing, Teaching, Publishing, Personnel and Service); and admit that the Governing Body oversees the promulgation of policies and procedures for the spiritual, physical, and emotional welfare of all persons associating with Jehovah's Witnesses, ...

Watchtower New York and Othello Congregation further admit the following:

-Governing Body overseers (sic) the promulgation of policies and procedures for the spiritual, physical and emotional welfare of persons associating with Jehovah's Witnesses (paragraph 5);

-Governing Body has ultimate spiritual authority to bar a publisher [member] from serving in certain positions of responsibility with the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses (paragraph 6);

-Governing Body oversees the appointment of congregation elders (paragraph 8);

-Governing Body oversees the appointment of ministerial servants (paragraph 8);

-Governing Body oversees the appointment of circuit overseers (paragraph 9); and

-Governing Body oversees the appointment of district overseers (paragraph 9).

F. GOVERNING BODY CONTROLS THROUGH WATCH TOWER PENNSYLVANIA

Clearly, the Governing Body is the group of men responsible for organizational operations, oversight, and policy-making for the Jehovah's Witnesses organization. The Governing Body, however, operates, oversees and makes policy through corporate entities; one of those corporate entities is Watchtower New York, which is a defendant in this action and has not moved this Court to quash service of summons. The other corporation the Governing Body admittedly uses to carry out the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide (which, incidentally, includes California) is Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

It is not surprising, therefore, that Paragraph 4 of Richard E. Abrahamson's affidavit attached to Watch Tower Pennsylvania's Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion to Quash Service of Summons indicates the following: "The primary purpose of Watch Tower is to coordinate the worldwide activities of Jehovah's Witnesses."

Those worldwide activities, however, include activities in California; more specifically, those worldwide activities include activities in the Napa Kingdom Hall dba Napa Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses - Jehovah's Witnesses Oak Knoll Congregation and Jehovah's Witnesses Sliverado Congregation– the defendant congregation where Defendant Edward Villegas was allowed access to minor children after having been reported to the Watchtower Defendants that he was a sexual abuser.

G. PROPER FOCUS FOR COURT IS ON GOVERNING BODY

The focus should not be on where Watch Tower Pennsylvania has its office, mailing address and telephone number; rather, it should be on what continuous and systematic contacts the Governing Body has, and continues to have, in the state of California.

The Governing Body controls the operations, conducts oversight and promulgates policies for dozens of Jehovah's Witnesses Congregations in the state of California, including the congregations at issue in Plaintiffs' Complaint. The Governing Body appointed and removed hundreds of Elders, Ministerial Servants and Circuit Overseers in the state of California and continues to do so. It is clear the Governing Body's contacts in the state of California are the sort that more than approximate its physical presence. Since it is alleged and admitted by Defendants (albeit in a Washington Federal Court pleading) the Governing Body used Watch Tower Pennsylvania to help carry out the activities of the Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide (which includes California), this Court should find that it has general jurisdiction over Watch Tower Pennsylvania and deny its motion to quash service of summons.

OTHER CONTACTS

A. KINGDOM HALL FINANCING HANDLED BY WATCH TOWER PENNSYLVANIA

Each Jehovah's Witnesses congregation meets in a building called a Kingdom Hall (more than one congregation may share a physical Kingdom Hall building). The financing and insurance for those structures are handled through the Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

On August 1, 1997, Watch Tower Pennsylvania directed correspondence to all Elders and Accounts Servants of Congregations with Society Kingdom Hall Loans; presumably, many of those Elders and Accounts Servants are in California and may specifically be associated with the North Congregation, Red Bluff. The August 1st letter is attached hereto as Exhibit 6. The August 1st letter indicates loans have been extended to Jehovah's Witnesses congregations to finance or purchase Kingdom Hall buildings. Though it is unclear who is making the loan, it is clear the payments on the loans are supposed to be paid to the "Pennsylvania Corporation" (Watch Tower Pennsylvania). The letter provides enough information to glean the existence of a financial relationship (at least lender/borrower) between California congregations and Watch Tower Pennsylvania. Moreover, the letter communicates instructions rather than suggestions; it is clear the recipients were expected to follow the steps provided by Watch Tower Pennsylvania, use the forms provided by Watch Tower Pennsylvania and remit payment when instructed by Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

B. KINGDOM HALL SELF-INSURANCE HANDLED BY WATCH TOWER PENNSYLVANIA

The September 1, 1998, letter from Watch Tower Pennsylvania to all congregations (including those in California) describes the Kingdom Hall Assistance Arrangement (KHAA). The September 1st letter is attached hereto as Exhibit 7. In essence, KHAA is a self-insurance or excess coverage program for the Jehovah's Witnesses organization for claims arising from accidents/incidents at Kingdom Halls in California and elsewhere:

> "[T]he fund is used to purchase commercial "excess" insurance to protect congregations and the Society from possible catastrophic losses."

Essentially, Watch Tower Pennsylvania coordinates the collection of funds to purchase insurance to protect the congregations and the society – which includes the Governing Body and Watch Tower Pennsylvania. The KHAA program is operated by the Society's Risk Management Office within Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

The September 1, 1998, letter contains instructions, references and forms easily describing a relationship between Watch Tower Pennsylvania and the congregations (including those in California) that is not arms-length. Again, the Governing Body controls the operations, oversight and policy-making of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization and uses Watch Tower Pennsylvania to carry out those activities. The KHAA is simply another example of control and the use of Watch Tower Pennsylvania to exercise such control.

C. GILEAD SCHOOL HANDLED BY WATCH TOWER PENNSYLVANIA

In the course of the Governing Body exercising control over operations, oversight and policy-making of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization in California (and worldwide), the Governing Body trains selective members and appointed Elders at their Gilead School. The members and Elders in California (and nationwide) are to submit applications to Watch Tower Pennsylvania; more specifically, the applications are to be submitted to the attention of: "Service Committee of the Governing Body". The address, of course, is the same Brooklyn address shared by Watch Tower Pennsylvania, Watchtower New York and the Governing Body. These facts are borne out in a January 2, 1995 letter from Watch Tower Pennsylvania to all Bodies of Elders, including those in California. The January 2nd letter is attached hereto as Exhibit 8.

More significantly, the letter is from the Watch Tower Pennsylvania "FOR THE SERVICE COMMITTEE" of the Governing Body. Recall that the Governing Body exercises control over operations, oversight and policy-making of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization in California. The Service Committee is the single most significant committee of the Governing Body as it relates to appointment of Elders, removal of Elders, appointment of Ministerial Servants, removal of Ministerial Servants, and the oversight of day-to-day functioning of the congregations in California (and worldwide). We have already seen the admissions relating to the Governing Body using Watch Tower Pennsylvania to carry out its activities (see paragraph 5 of Rodriguez Answer attached hereto as Exhibit 5); the January 2, 1995, letter strongly suggests that Watch Tower Pennsylvania is (at least in part) the entity through which the Service Committee of the Governing Body works.

D. PUBLIC DIS-INFORMATION DISSEMINATED BY WATCH TOWER PENNSYLVANIA

One of the purposes of the conspiracy being carried out in the Jehovah's Witnesses organization involves its public reputation. While there is an enormous problem within the organization involving child sexual abuse (by members of the congregations and by leaders appointed by the Governing Body), the Governing Body is attempting to conceal that problem and further mislead the public into believing the Jehovah's Witnesses organization has particular policies and practices relative to child sexual abuse and is active in the protection of children from child sexual abusers.

To make these false representations, the Governing Body continues to use Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

On January 2, 2001 and on August 7, 2001, the Jehovah's Witnesses organization released two public statements, which Plaintiffs contend contain misleading information in furtherance of the conspiracy alleged in their Complaint. These two documents appear to originate from the "Public Affairs Office" for "Jehovah's Witnesses" (attached hereto as Exhibits 9 and Exhibit 10). The contact person is J.R. Brown, Director of the Public Affairs Office with its address at Watch Tower, 25 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, New York; telephone: 718-560-5600.

A February 7, 2002, letter from J.R. Brown, Director of the Office of Public Information to Dateline NBC (attached as Exhibit 11) clarifies the origination of Exhibit 9 and Exhibit 10 above. The February 7th letter bears the letterhead: "Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania", and references a department called the Office of Public Information; again, J.R. Brown is identified as its Director.

A May 9, 2002, letter from J.R. Brown, Director of the Office of Public Information to BBC Panorama (attached as Exhibit 12) provides additional misinformation regarding the handling of child sexual abuse outcries and allegations within the Jehovah's Witnesses organization. The May 9th letter describes the existence of a database of members and appointed leaders accused of sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses organization. The May 9th letter also bears the letterhead: "Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania", and references a department called the Office of Public Information; again, J.R. Brown is identified as its Director. The May 9th letter was produced by Watch Tower Pennsylvania in similar litigation in Texas.[2]

Watch Tower Pennsylvania continues to be involved in the ongoing conspiracy to conceal the abuses and suppress information about abusers while at the same time falsely claiming to have policies and procedures in effect to stem the abuses and investigate abusers.

E. SPECIFIC INVOLVEMENT IN CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE MATTERS BY WATCH TOWER PENNSYLVANIA

In the Affidavit of Richard E. Abrahamson, Watch Tower Pennsylvania is described as the entity coordinating the worldwide activities of Jehovah's Witnesses (which includes California); however, it does much more. Watch Tower Pennsylvania provides instruction to Bodies of Elders in Britain regarding child sexual abuse, reporting requirements, and how to follow the Watch Tower's instructions without "being seen to be involved in an 'attempt' or 'conspiracy to pervert the course of justice.'" On January 30, 1992, Watch Tower Pennsylvania directed instructions "To All Bodies of Elders in Britain" regarding the Elders' handling of duties involving legal issues or questions (attached hereto as Exhibit 13). By the instructions and information provided by Watch Tower Pennsylvania, it is clear Watch Tower Pennsylvania is involved in instruction, operation, oversight and policy-making relative to child sexual abuse and the impact of allegations on the Jehovah's Witnesses organization.

More importantly, the Court must recall the Governing Body is in control of the operation, oversight and policy-making of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization, and merely uses Watch Tower Pennsylvania to carry out its activities. Put differently, the Governing Body is specifically using Watch Tower Pennsylvania for instructional, operational, oversight and policy-making purposes relating to child sexual abuse and the handling of information related thereto. Discovery, if necessary, on this and other issues will further reveal the Governing Body's use of Watch Tower Pennsylvania in California (generally) and regarding child sexual abuse (specifically).

LEGAL STANDARD OF REVIEW ON MOTION TO QUASH

When a defendant moves to quash service of process on jurisdictional grounds, the plaintiff has the initial burden of demonstrating facts justifying the exercise of jurisdiction. Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc., 14 Cal.4th at 449. Once facts showing minimum contacts with the forum state are established, however, it out the activities of the Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide (which includes California). The focus, therefore, should not be on where Watch Tower Pennsylvania has its office, mailing address and telephone number; rather, it should be on what continuous and systematic contacts the Governing Body has in the state of California. This Court should make its jurisdictional determination based on the activities of the Governing Body, as well as Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

B. GENERAL JURISDICTION

Personal jurisdiction may be either general or specific. A nonresident defendant may be subject to the general jurisdiction of the forum if his or her contacts in the forum state are "substantial ... continuous and systematic." Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. supra, 14 Cal.4th at 445. When the activities of the nonresident defendant are extensive or wide-ranging, there is a constitutionally sufficient relationship to warrant jurisdiction for all causes of action asserted against the nonresident defendant. Boaz v. Boyle & Co. (1995) 40 Cal.App.4th 700, 717.

1. Activities Support General Jurisdiction

Based on the facts provided above (even without discovery), Watch Tower Pennsylvania's activities in California were substantial, continuous and systematic and were such that Watch Tower Pennsylvania approximated a physical presence. Watch Tower Pennsylvania is a corporation through which the Governing Body has operated the Jehovah's Witnesses organization in California (and worldwide) for quite some time. In addition to being the entity through which the Governing Body operated the Jehovah's Witnesses organization in California, Plaintiffs have provided the Court with evidence (even without discovery) indicating Watch Tower Pennsylvania is and has been intimately involved in (1) the financing of Kingdom Halls for the California congregations; (2) the providing of instructions, forms and timing of loan payments by California congregations; (3) the financing of self-insurance for Kingdom Halls (KHAA) in California; (4) the application process for California members and appointed elders to attend the Gilead School; (5) the duties of the Service Committee for the Governing Body; and (6) the continued dissemination of false information in California in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy. Plaintiffs anticipate the uncovering of far more activity once Plaintiffs are given the opportunity to conduct discovery.

Based on the evidence provided by Plaintiffs, it is easier to understand Richard Abrahamson's affidavit testimony that the "primary purpose of Watch Tower [Pennsylvania] is to coordinate the worldwide activities of Jehovah's Witnesses." The coordination of the Jehovah's Witnesses' activities in California involved activities that were substantial, continuous, systematic, extensive and wide-ranging which approximated a physical presence. Boaz v. Boyle & Co. (1995) 40 Cal.App.4th 700, 716-717.

2. Discovery Will Further Reveal Watch Tower Pennsylvania's Activities

It is undeniable the Jehovah's Witnesses organization has a substantial, continuous and systematic presence in California. The fact that the Governing Body (acting through Watch Tower Pennsylvania and others) appoints and removes the leaders of those California entities (congregations) suggests the California entities have no independent existence outside their relationship to the Jehovah's Witnesses organization. All of the significant business decisions of the California congregations are made by the Governing Body acting through Watch Tower Pennsylvania and others. Plaintiffs expect this relationship to be borne out in discovery.

C. SPECIFIC JURISDICTION

If the nonresident defendant does not have substantial and systematic contacts in the forum sufficient to establish general jurisdiction, he may be subject to the specific jurisdiction of the forum, if the defendant has deliberately engaged in significant activities within California. Virtualmagic Asia, Inc. v. Fil-Cartoons, Inc. (2002) 99 Cal.App.4th 228, 239. In making the determination that this Court has specific jurisdiction over Watch Tower Pennsylvania, this Court must determine Watch Tower Pennsylvania deliberately engaged in significant activities within California.

1. Watch Tower Pennsylvania's Contacts were Deliberate and Significant

Watch Tower Pennsylvania argues the affidavit of Richard Abrahamson "conclusively establishes" this Court lacks specific jurisdiction over Watch Tower Pennsylvania by arguing it was incorporated in Pennsylvania, has its office in Brooklyn and has never had an office, mailing address, or telephone number in California. The proper inquiry for this Court, however, is whether Watch Tower Pennsylvania "reached out beyond one state and created continuing relationships ... with citizens of another state [California]." If so, the nonresident defendant is subject to the regulation and sanctions in California for the consequences of its actions. Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. 14 Cal.4th 434, 447.

Did the Governing Body or Watch Tower Pennsylvania deliberately engage in significant activities in California? Did the Governing Body or Watch Tower Pennsylvania reach out and create continuing relationships with the citizens of California? The evidence and admissions discussed clearly demonstrate both the Governing Body and Watch Tower Pennsylvania created relationships with citizens of California and continue to do so. The Plaintiffs in this action are citizens of California with whom the Governing Body and Watch Tower Pennsylvania created relationship and ultimately injured.

2. Claims Alleged By Plaintiffs Are Related to Contacts

Plaintiffs alleged the Governing Body (through various incorporated and unincorporated entities including Watch Tower Pennsylvania) exercises control, oversight and policy-making for the Jehovah's Witnesses organization. Defendants admitted that relationship (albeit in a Washington Federal Court Pleading). Plaintiffs further alleged the organization has engaged in tortious and intentional behavior that has caused Plaintiffs' injuries. Plaintiffs alleged the Jehovah's Witnesses organization (controlled by the Governing Body through Watch Tower Pennsylvania and others) created policies that caused Plaintiffs' injuries, enforced policies that caused Plaintiffs' injuries, gave instructions that caused Plaintiffs' injuries and conspired to conceal the activities that caused Plaintiffs' injuries.

The claims alleged by Plaintiffs are directly related to the activities of the Governing Body by and through Watch Tower Pennsylvania.

3. Assertion Of Jurisdiction Comports With Fair Play

After making the determination the Governing Body, by and through Watch Tower Pennsylvania, has had significant contacts with California and that the litigation bears a substantial connection to those contacts, this Court's inquiry becomes whether it would be unfair to subject Watch Tower Pennsylvania to the jurisdiction of this Court. Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. 14 Cal.4th 434, 477. The Vons Court provides the following analysis:

> As the high court has explained, "When minimum contacts have been established, often the interests of the plaintiff and the forum in the exercise of jurisdiction will justify even the serious burdens placed on the ... defendant." (Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court, [citation omitted]) ... Moreover, considerations of judicial efficiency overwhelmingly favor litigation of all claims in a single forum. Because California already has invested judicial resources in this litigation apart from its substantive interest in the claims, the additional interest of efficiency favors this exercise of jurisdiction.

Id.

The factors to be weighed in determining undue hardship on a Watch Tower Pennsylvania support this Court's exercise of jurisdiction. Watch Tower Pennsylvania is represented by the same counsel group (Bullivant Houser Bailey PC) representing defendants that have already appeared in this case. Accordingly, Watch Tower Pennsylvania will not be put to extraordinary additional cost not already being borne by other instrumentalities of the Governing Body. Additionally, judicial efficiency overwhelmingly favors the litigation of all claims in California where four of the other Watchtower Defendants have submitted to this Court's jurisdiction.

D. SHIFTING THE BURDEN TO DEFENDANTS

Once facts showing minimum contacts with the forum state are established, the burden shifts to the defendant to demonstrate that the assumption of jurisdiction would be unreasonable. Malone v. Equitas Reinsurance Ltd. (2000) 84 Cal.App.4th 1430, 1436 citing Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. 14 Cal.4th 434, 449.

VIII

CONCLUSION

Without having yet conducted any discovery, Plaintiffs have provided this Court with evidence describing the operation of the Jehovah's Witnesses organization in California and how its operation has depended on Watch Tower Pennsylvania. Watch Tower Pennsylvania's activities are substantial, continuous and systematic such that this Court's exercise of jurisdiction over Watch Tower Pennsylvania does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. Accordingly, for all the reasons and arguments set forth hereinabove, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court to deny Defendants' Motion to Quash Service of Summons in its entirety, or alternatively, grant leave to conduct discovery on the jurisdictional issues before making a ruling.

and officers of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc. and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. The Governing Body, as directors, used those two legal entities to direct all of the organization Jehovah's Witnesses and its affairs around the world. The ultimate power of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses rests with the Governing Body which has authority over every person and all matters in the organization and its world wide operations including, but not limited to, the appointment of congregation officials, the promulgation of organizational policies and procedures, management of property and assets, conduct of organization controlled entities, the discipline of individual Jehovah's Witnesses and furthering the overall welfare of the organization and its followers, especially its children. The authority of the Governing Body in the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses is absolute. The Governing Body is organized into six committees: The Chairman's Committee, the Writing Committee, the Teaching Committee, the Publishing Committee, the Personnel Committee, and the Service Committee.

6. The central headquarters for the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses is located at 25 Columbia Heights, Brooklyn, New York 11201, the address of Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. The organization of Jehovah's Witnesses maintains a central repository of records of organization members (herein "publishers") at its facilities in Patterson, New York under the control of the Service Department, including the formal disciplinary history of all publishers. A publisher who has been disciplined by being removed from the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses has been disassociated or "disfellowshipped" and cannot be reinstated without the consent of the Governing Body or its appointed entities. The Governing Body has ultimate power to bar a publisher from serving in the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses in any capacity.

7. The Charter of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. states in part that its corporate purposes are, charitable, benevolent and religious purposes, the moral and mental improvement of men and women, the dissemination of Bible truths in various languages by means of the publication of tracts, pamphlets, papers and other religious documents, and for religious missionary work, and for the purposes of maintaining and conducting classes for the instruction of men and women on the premises or by mail.

8. The Governing Body administers the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses through a multi-level structure. The local level consists of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, such as the Defendant Othello Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. The congregations consist of elders, ministerial servants, pioneers and other congregational publishers.

A congregation's elders are appointed by the Governing Body as the spiritual leaders of the congregation and are held out by the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses as qualified spiritual shepherds. All of the elders of a congregation, whether they hold a specific servant position or not, make up the "body of elders." The specific servant positions within the body of elders are Presiding Overseer, Secretary, Service Overseer, Watchtower Study Conductor, Theocratic School Overseer and Book Study Overseer. The body of elders presides over certain congregational matters, including judicial matters, and all publishers must respect and obey decisions made by the body of elders. Judicial matters within a congregation include any infraction of what the Governing Body has deemed to be a breach of God's law. Allegations of child molestation made by and against publishers within a congregation are considered judicial matters and are handled by the body of elders, as directed by the Governing Body.

Ministerial servants are recommended by the body of elders and appointed by the Governing Body to administer the secondary administrative work of the congregations. According to the Governing Body, ministerial servants are viewed as examples to the flock and must be viewed with respect.

Pioneers are full time ministers who lead the door-to-door work putting in a set number of hours each month and are viewed as examples for the congregation and also are given due honor and respect.

9. The next level of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses is the Circuit Overseer. The Circuit Overseer generally appoints two foremost elders within the circuit to be Substitute Overseers, who fulfill the Circuit Overseers role when the Circuit Overseer is not available. All communication received at a congregation from a Circuit Overseer or a Sub-Circuit Overseers is considered to be instructions direct from the Governing Body. Each circuit has approximately twenty congregations.

The level above the circuit is the district, which has a District Overseer. Each district has approximately ten circuits.

Above the district level are the worldwide "zones" which are made up of branch members and a branch office. In the branch offices, there are Branch Committees to oversee the work in the countries of their jurisdiction. Working at branches around the world are volunteer Jehovah's Witnesses who are termed Bethelites.

In the United States Branch there are three Bethel complexes; one at the worldwide headquarters in Brooklyn, New York; one in Patterson, New York; one in Walkill, New York. The major departments at the Brooklyn complex are the Writing Department, Treasury Offices and Executive Offices, including some of the Governing Body offices such as the corporate heads. Each Governing Body member oversees a particular department. The major departments in the Patterson, New York complex are the Legal and Service Departments. The Service Department is responsible for overseeing the preaching work, assembly programs, and has direct oversight of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, including the elders, circuit and district overseers in the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses. The Service Department regularly issues letters to congregation elders, circuit and district overseers and congregations concerning administration, discipline, oversight and all matters pertaining to the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses. All of the entities discussed above ultimately answer to the Governing Body and the corporation known as the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

10. The Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses has comprehensive, pastoral and administrative responsibility including primary responsibility for developmental programs involving congregational publishers and youth, overseeing the work of adults called to assist in teaching and spreading the word, determining the worthiness of all publishers who attend the Kingdom Halls of Jehovah's Witnesses and based on that determination choosing men who are called to serve as ministerial servants, elders, circuit and district overseers, and other positions of responsibility within the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses. The Governing Body, through its departments and other entities, is authorized to initiate serious disciplinary proceedings against all publishers including disassociation, disfellowshipping, deletion, acceptance of resignation, reinstatement, restrictions, restoration of privileges, public and private reproof and marking.

11. Publishers are encouraged to believe that the overseers, from elder to the Governing Body, are "appointed by Holy Spirit" to their office, that decisions of each overseer within the scope of their authority are guided by the Holy Spirit and the overseers are specially endowed with wisdom and understanding from their reading of the Bible. These "gifts in men" are entrusted with Bible education, congregational activity and spiritual direction of all the publishers including the children of Jehovah's Witnesses that attend the local Kingdom Halls. Publishers are expected to seek and comply with the advice of congregation elders, ministerial servants, circuit and district overseers, Bethel elders, and ultimately the Governing Body on matters involving important decisions in their daily lives.

12. Without exception, all Jehovah's Witnesses must follow the direction, guidance and policies promulgated by the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses.

13. Individuals in the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses become publishers through a ritual of baptism. As directed by the Governing Body, publishers donate personally and collect donations through the local congregation and forward all monies to the home office in their respective country for international operations of the worldwide preaching work.

14. Adult male publishers are eligible to be "elders" of the church and elevated to this position by meeting certain Scriptural requirements. These male publishers are then recommended to the Service Department in Patterson, New York by the Service Committee of the local congregation to have met the precepts laid out by the Governing Body. Publishers are instructed that all elders are exemplary in conduct and are to be respected and obeyed if they are appointed.

15. All publishers are expected to prosthelitize the religion of Jehovah's Witnesses and to offer and provide religious instruction to prospective converts, including children.

16. At all times relevant, Defendant Manuel Beliz was one of Jehovah's Witnesses, and received appointments as ministerial servant and as an elder while associated with the Defendant Othello Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Othello, Washington. Defendant Manuel Beliz lived in the state of Washington at all times relevant herein, was tried and convicted of a felony in Washington, and is currently incarcerated in the state of Washington. Defendant Manuel Beliz has a history of sexual and physical abuse of children.

OPERATIVE FACTS

18. John White, at all times relevant, was an elder in the Othello Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. As directed by the Governing Body, the elders of the congregation have specific authority regarding dissemination of communication, and are authorized representatives of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses to receive reports of possible wrongdoing and offer congregational discipline to the organization's publishers.

19. Defendant Beliz met Plaintiff as the Defendant Othello Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses when she was an infant. Beliz started sexually abusing Plaintiff when she was four years old. Beliz' abuse continued on a weekly basis until Plaintiff's family moved out to Sacramento, California when Plaintiff was eleven years old.

20. During the seven years of sexual abuse, Defendant Beliz would warn Plaintiff that she would be shunned from the congregation and the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses if she told anyone about the abuse. Because Defendant was a ministerial servant at the Defendant Othello Spanish Congregation, Plaintiff feared she would and her family would be shunned and did not tell anyone about the abuse.

21. After Plaintiff and her family moved to Sacramento, they became members of the Las Palmas Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Sacramento, California.

22. As part of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses, Plaintiff and her parents were taught to respect the teachings of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses and to bring any problem with a fellow publisher to the elders. Pursuant to these instructions and teachings, Plaintiff reported the sexual abuse by Beliz to elders in the Las Palmas Congregation Carlos Chicas and Milton Malendez.

23. In accord with directions to publishers, policies and practices of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses, the elder Chicas told Plaintiff she should keep the matter within the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses. Chicas told Plaintiff that she should "not say anything" and that "we will take care of it." Chicas told Plaintiff that he would call the Othello Spanish Congregation and tell them about Beliz' sexual abuse of Plaintiff. Chicas did call John White at the Othello Spanish Congregation and told him about the Beliz' abuse of Plaintiff.

24. Plaintiff subsequently learned that Beliz was not disciplined in any way at first by the Othello Spanish Congregation after he report of his abuse. Beliz continued to minister and be active in the Othello Spanish Congregation for several months. It was only after repeated complaints to the Othello congregation that an announcement was read in October of 1996 that Beliz was disfellowshipped but was quickly reinstated in June of 1997. Plaintiff contacted Milton Malendez and told him she was planning to report Beliz to the police. Malendez warned Plaintiff that she would be disfellowshipped from the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses and her family would no longer speak to her. Plaintiff challenged Malendez, and asked him how she could be disfellowshipped if she was speaking the truth. Malendez confirmed that even if she was speaking the truth she still would be disfellowshipped. Plaintiff contacted the Sacramento police, who contacted the Othello police and Beliz was subsequently arrested.

25. Beliz was tried and convicted of several counts of criminal sexual conduct with a minor in the Superior Court of Washington for Adams County. At his sentencing, elder John White spoke and admitted to the court that the congregation knew that Beliz was a bad man in the 1980's and the 1990's but told the court if you punish Beliz now, he will be punished for the man he was, not the man he is now.

White also stated that he could not believe Defendant had abused the Plaintiff to the extent she had testified to.

26. At all times relevant, Washington had a mandatory reporting statute, requiring the report of suspected child abuse including sexual abuse to law enforcement authorities. Said statute mandates a report by ministers of suspected child abuse to designated authorities. At all times material, the elders of the Othello Spanish Congregation were "ministers" of the church defendants such that they had a duty to report under this reporting statute. None of the elders of the Othello Spanish Congregation reported the suspected abuse of Plaintiff to any designated authority.

27. Defendant Beliz was ultimately convicted of two counts of first degree child rape and two counts of first degree child molestation of Plaintiff Erica Rodriguez and was sentenced to prison for eleven years.

28. As a result of the sexual abuse, Plaintiff Erica Rodriguez has incurred and will continue to incur, costs for counseling and psychological treatment, has lost earning capacity and has suffered and will continue to suffer extreme, permanent emotional distress and psychological harm with accompanying physical manifestations.

29. The information reported to elders White, Chicas and Malendez was such that they were required by law to report the information to law enforcement authorities. The elders were agents of Defendant Othello Spanish Congregation and were acting in the course and scope of this agency in accordance with the organizational policies and practices of the Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

30. Despite knowing of his abuse of Plaintiff and others, the Othello Spanish Congregation gave Beliz the appointments of ministerial servant and elder in the Othello Spanish Congregation, rather than investigating and taking proper remedial action against Beliz and taking reasonable steps to protect children of the Congregation, including Plaintiff. As a direct result of the failure to report the child abuse by Beliz, the sexual abuse of the Plaintiff continued.

31. Prior to and during Beliz' physical and sexual abuse of Plaintiff, Defendants Othello Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses and Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York Inc., through agents and elders knew or had reason to know that Beliz had the propensity and an uncontrollable urge to engage in sexual abuse of children under his control, and that he had sexually abused one or more Jehovah's Witnesses' children under his control. Defendants negligently failed to take reasonable steps to prevent Beliz from further abusing children, including the Plaintiff.

32. After reports of suspected abuse were made to the elders of the Othello Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses by Plaintiff, the elders responded in accordance to the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses instructions, practices, policies and procedures, as promulgated by the Governing Body, in regard to possible abuse of children by one of Jehovah's Witnesses. The organization of Jehovah's Witnesses has specifically developed policies, practices and procedures that dictate the elders to be appropriate authorities to whom abuse by publishers is to be reported. The organization of Jehovah's Witnesses requires adherence to an ancient edict/policy that has been restated to the public and to the publishers within the organization repeatedly.

EYMANN - ALLISON - FENNESSY - HUNTER - JONES P.S.
601 WEST MAIN AVENUE, SUITE 801 • SPOKANE, WA 99201

The edict/policy requires two eyewitnesses to abuse before a matter can be established. Pursuant to this edict/policy, the elders are charged with investigating the accusation. The elders have no experience or training in child abuse investigation. Under this edict/policy, if the accused denies the charge, the elders require the accuser or victim to produce witnesses and/or supporting evidence to prove the allegation. The accuser and/or victims are required to prove they are telling the truth by producing people who watched the abuse happen, or present tangible proof such as photographs, DNA or physical evidence. Because child physical and sexual abuse is not susceptible to eyewitness, physical, photographic or other tangible proof and is not committed in the presence of eyewitnesses, the victims often cannot offer the required proof and the organization regards and adjudicates the accused innocent. The victim and/or accuser is required to not warn others, pursuant to practice, policy and procedure, or to speak about the matter to anyone under penalty of discipline by the organization which could include disfellowshipping. Disfellowshipping results in termination and isolation from family and all friends who are Jehovah's Witnesses until the victim/accuser agrees to live by the edict/policy of the organization. Further the victim/accuser is often intimidated and not encouraged to report suspected abuse by a publisher to the authorities outside the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses as it would bring reproach on God and the organization.

33. When one of Jehovah's Witnesses violates organizational policy and does not obey directives offered by the Body of Elders who operate the direction of the Governing Body, to remain silent about accusations of child molestation within the congregation, that publisher is sanctioned by the organization and sometimes disfellowshipped. In contrast, the accused Jehovah's Witness is routinely given sanctuary, protection, sympathy and support from the organization and other publishers. As a result of those policies and practices, Plaintiffs' mother was sanctioned by the organization for reporting her suspicions of Beliz' abuse of children, while the elders of the Othello Spanish Congregation spoke at Beliz's criminal sentencing hearing in support of the Defendant.

34. When Plaintiff brought the information to the elders in the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses, the elders acted in accord with the above-mentioned practice, policy, protocol and instructions in all respects and in the course and scope of their positions as agents of the church defendants. The organization's longstanding policy and practice of minimizing, defending and tolerating abuse by congregation publishers, negligently permitted the abuse to occur and breached a legal duty to Plaintiffs to protect them and to prevent said abuse from occurring.

35. Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society, Inc. knowingly allowed, permitted and encouraged Beliz' abuse of the Plaintiff in one or more of the following ways:

a. by Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society Inc.'s longstanding pattern and practice of: (1) openly and notoriously tolerating, minimizing and defending the abuse of children by publishers and elders; (2) blaming, humiliating and disciplining victims/accusers of abuse instead of the perpetrators; and (3) refusing and failing to report such abuse to law enforcement and governmental child welfare agencies and discouraging church publishers from making such reports and requiring church publishers to not make such reports.

b. by allowing Beliz to continue to have unsupervised, unlimited access to his own children and remain a publisher in good standing in the organization.

c. by failing to report Beliz' abuse of children to law enforcement or child protective agencies.

d. by failing to warn other organization publishers, family publishers and others at risk of Beliz' abuse.

e. by failing to train its employees, volunteers and appointed overseers to prevent, identify, investigate, respond to or report child abuse.

f. by failing to adopt policies and procedures for the protection of children or to appoint publishers and overseers in the congregation to monitor the implementation and compliance with such procedures that did exist.

g. by representing to the organization's membership and continuing Beliz as a publisher of the congregation in good standing, ultimately promoting him to ministerial servant and elder within the Othello Spanish Congregation.

36. Defendants' wanton negligence and breach of fiduciary duty are the result of intentional, conscious and outrageous indifference to the health, safety and welfare of the Plaintiff so as to constitute aggravating circumstances entitling Plaintiff to compensatory and enhanced compensatory damages.

37. The sexual abuse of Plaintiff and the circumstances under which it occurred caused Plaintiff to develop various coping mechanisms and symptoms of psychological distress, including great shame, guilt, self-blame, depression, repression and disassociation. As a result, Plaintiff was unable to perceive or know the existence or nature of their psychological and emotional injuries and their connection to the sexual abuse perpetrated upon her by Defendant Beliz.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION:

NEGLIGENCE

38. Plaintiff incorporates all paragraphs of this Complaint as if fully set forth under this count and further alleges:

39. By failing to report the suspected abuse of the Plaintiff, and by the other acts alleged herein, Defendant Othello Spanish Congregation and Defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., permitted the sexual abuse of the Plaintiff to continue to occur.

40. As a direct result of Defendants' negligent conduct, Plaintiff has suffered the injuries and damages alleged herein.

VI.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION:

BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

41. Plaintiff incorporates all paragraphs of this Complaint as if fully set forth under this count and further allege:

42. Defendants Othello Spanish Congregation and Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. had a special relationship to the Plaintiff, then a minor child, to protect her from harm.

43. Defendants negligently breached the fiduciary duty to Plaintiff by failing to take reasonable steps to prevent Beliz from continuing to molest Plaintiff, and/or by failing to warn or protect Plaintiff.

44. Child victims of sexual abuse by an authority figure are unlikely to openly disclose the abuse or seek counseling for the effects of it by reason of the position of authority of the perpetrator or the age of the victim until such time as the elders and other publishers of the organization of persons in control have acknowledged the crimes and offered spiritual support to the victim. Without such acknowledgment, the victim will tend to believe that they are responsible for the abuse and suffer in secrecy and silence and are unwilling and unable to openly disclose the abuse for fear of retribution, humiliation by the perpetrator or be disfellowshipped from the organization.

45. After receiving reports of Beliz' abuse of one or more children, Defendants with intent to keep that information from Plaintiff and other victims similarly situated thereby willfully concealed that information and has continually breached their duty to Plaintiff by failing to investigate adequately whether others had been victimized, failing to notify others that it was safe to disclose they had been abused by Beliz and failing publicly to acknowledge Beliz' crimes either to the public or within the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses.

46. As a direct result of Defendants' concealment of Beliz' crimes and its breach of fiduciary duty, the Plaintiff did not know that she was not at fault, did not know that she could be believed if she would report it and to various degrees maintained the secrecy of the abuse, blamed herself and failed to seek counseling for the effects of it and has thus been unable to heal from the effects of the abuse and discover or appreciate how the abuse had permanently and indelibly affected her psychological well-being. Thus Plaintiff did not discover Defendants' concealment of Beliz' crimes and its breach of fiduciary duty until two years within the filing of this complaint.

47. As a direct result of Defendants' negligent conduct, Plaintiff has suffered the injuries and damages alleged herein.

48. Defendants' concealment of Beliz' crimes and its breach of fiduciary duty was intentional and malicious and/or the result of reckless and outrageous indifference to a highly unreasonable risk of harm and a conscious indifference to Plaintiff's health, safety and welfare which conduct is socially intolerable and part of a longstanding pattern of concealing abuse of children by publishers and officials of the church. Plaintiff is entitled to enhanced compensatory damages.

a regular pioneer is a publisher who has demonstrated exemplary speech and conduct, and whose personal circumstances allow the spending of 840 hours per year in publicly preaching the good news of God's Kingdom. Defendants deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 8 of plaintiff's complaint.

9. With reference to paragraph 9 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants admit that congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are organized into circuits which are composed of a number of congregations, and further allege that a qualified elder serves as a circuit overseer to visit and provide spiritual encouragement to each congregation in the circuit. Defendants admit that substitute circuit overseers under the oversight of a Governing Body exist to visit congregations if the circuit overseer is unavailable to do so; admit that several circuits are organized into a district and that some of the congregations within the district are visited by a district overseer who is appointed by the Governing Body to provide spiritual encouragement to the congregations in the district of assignment; admit that periodically arrangements are made by the Governing Body to have qualified elders serve as zone overseers to visit one or more of the branch offices of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide; admit that in each of the branch offices of Jehovah's Witnesses around the world, there is a branch committee that provides spiritual oversight over the activities in the country or countries under their jurisdiction, and allege that Jehovah's Witnesses assigned as volunteers at branch offices are commonly referred to as "Bethelites," or members of the "Bethel" family; admit that there are three Bethel complexes in the United States located in Brooklyn, Patterson and Wallkill, New York; admit that the Executive Offices, Treasurer's Office, the majority of the Writing Department, and the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses are located in Brooklyn, New York; admit that the United States branch Service Department and most of the Legal Department are located in Patterson, New York; admit that among the duties of the Service Department are the spiritual oversight of the congregations, elders, circuit and district overseers, and the preaching activity of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States; further admit that from time to time the Service Department issues letters that provide spiritual assistance and guidance to congregations elders, circuit and district overseers, and to congregations, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 9 of plaintiff's complaint.

10. With reference to paragraph 10 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses provides spiritual oversight over the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide and further admit that the Governing Body oversees the appointment of spiritually qualified men to provide spiritual oversight over branches, districts, circuits and congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the earth, but deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 10 of plaintiff's complaint.

12. With reference to paragraph 12 of plaintiff's complaint, allege that individual Jehovah's Witnesses exercise free choice as to whether or not they want to follow direction, guidance and policies promulgated by the organization, and further allege that many choose not to follow such direction. Further allege that no one is capable of, or expected to follow such to perfection, and deny the specific allegations in paragraph 12 of plaintiff's complaint.

13. With reference to paragraph 13 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants allege that there is much more to an individual Jehovah's Witness becoming a publisher than the ritual of baptism. Baptism is merely the final step. Further allege that publishers do not donate personally or collect donations because they are directed by the Governing Body or the local congregation. Defendants further allege that a publisher's choice to do so is on a voluntary basis based upon their own free will. Further allege that there is no record kept of what individual publishers do in this regard, and that some undoubtedly are incapable of donating and/or do not collect donations. Defendants deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 13 of plaintiff's complaint.

14. With reference to paragraph 14 of plaintiff's complaint, allege that some adult male publishers will never be eligible to be elders. Further allege that the recommendation for someone to be an elder is made by the entire local body of elders, and not by the Service Committee of the local congregation; allege that the recommendation is sent to the United States branch where it is then reviewed by appointed elders in the Service Department. Further, defendants allege that publishers are not told that all elders are exemplary, and allege that publishers know that elders are imperfect humans who make mistakes, and further that some of them fall away from the faith and are far from exemplary. Further allege that when it becomes known that an elder is no longer conducting himself in an exemplary fashion, he is removed. Defendants deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 14 of plaintiff's complaint.

15. With reference to paragraph 15 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants allege that publishers are encouraged, but not expected, to teach Bible truths to others, to include the good news of God's Kingdom, and deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 15 of plaintiff's complaint.

16. With reference to paragraph 16 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that at various times in the past Manuel Beliz was associated with the Othello North Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses and that he was a resident of the state of Washington during this association. Defendants further admit that subsequently, upon information and belief, Manuel Beliz was convicted of felony crimes involving sexual abuse of a minor and remains incarcerated in the state of Washington. Further allege that Manuel Beliz was disfellowshipped for a period of time, during which time Mr. Beliz would not have been one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Defendants deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 16 of plaintiff's complaint.

III.

VENUE

17. Admit that venue is proper in this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1391, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 17 of plaintiff's complaint.

20. Deny paragraph 20 of plaintiff's complaint for lack of present information upon which to form a basis for belief.

21. With reference to paragraph 21 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that, upon information and belief, plaintiff and her family moved to Sacramento, California, and for a period of time were members of the Las Palmas Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses at that location, but deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 21 of plaintiff's complaint.

25. With reference to paragraph 25 of plaintiff's complaint, admit that Manuel Beliz was convicted of felony criminal sexual conduct with a minor in the Adams County Superior Court in Ritzville, Washington, and further admit that John White provided testimony to the court at the time of sentencing of Mr. Beliz, but deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 25 of plaintiff's complaint.

26. With respect to paragraph 26 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants deny that Washington had an applicable statute mandating any report by church ministers, to include elders of the Othello North Spanish Congregation to report allegations of child abuse to law enforcement authorities, and specifically deny any lawful duty to do so under circumstance of the information related by plaintiff to church elders in Sacramento and/or as subsequently related to elder John White of the Othello North Spanish Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. Further allege that the applicable Washington statute (RCW 26.44.030) imposes no such requirement or duty as a matter of law. Defendants allege that the decision on reporting plaintiff's allegations to law enforcement authority was left to the sole discretion of plaintiff and/or her parents, and defendants deny any remaining allegations of paragraph 26 of plaintiff's complaint.

27. With reference to paragraph 27 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants admit that Manuel Beliz was subsequently convicted on felony charges based upon the information provided by the plaintiff to law enforcement authorities, but deny the remaining allegations of paragraph 27 for lack of present information upon which to form a basis for belief.

31. Deny paragraph 31 of plaintiff's complaint.

32. With respect to paragraph 32 of plaintiff's complaint, defendants allege upon information and belief that elders John White and Carlos Chicas acted appropriately upon receiving information from plaintiff, but deny all of the remaining allegations of paragraph 32 of plaintiff's complaint.

36. Deny paragraph 36 of plaintiff's complaint.

37. Deny paragraph 37 of plaintiff's complaint for lack of present information upon which to form a basis for belief, and specifically deny that plaintiff was unable to discover any injury caused by the sexually abusive actions of Mr. Beliz as of the time of her disclosure of such information in June, 1996.

FOR FURTHER ANSWER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT AND AS AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES THERETO, defendants allege as follows:

1. Plaintiff's complaint fails to set forth a cause of action for which relief can be granted as against these answering defendants.

2. Plaintiff's service of process on defendant Watchtower was insufficient. TO ALL ELDERS AND ACCOUNTS SERVANTS OF CONGREGATIONS WITH SOCIETY KINGDOM HALL LOANS

Dear Brothers:

Re: Remittance Forms for Society Kingdom Hall Loans

Please find enclosed your yearly supply of Loan Remittance Forms (T-6) which are only to be used to make your monthly Kingdom Hall loan payment to the Pennsylvania Corporation. Further information regarding this T-6 form can be found in paragraph 20 of the Instructions for Congregation Accounting (S(d)-27). Please be sure to give these forms to the brother responsible for sending the loan payments to the Society.

You will find in your annual shipment of service forms a year's supply of green pre-addressed envelopes. These green envelopes are to be used to forward all your monthly congregation remittances to the Society following the directions outlined below:

1. Use the Loan Remittance Form (T-6) and write one check for your loan payment.
2. Use the Contribution Remittance Form (S(d)-20) and write one check for your contributions and payment on Congregation Account (including KHAA).
3. Use one green envelope to mail the above two forms and two checks by the sixth of each month.

The presiding overseer, secretary and the accounts servant should read this letter and become familiar with these procedures. May Jehovah continue to bless your loyal support of Kingdom arrangements. Rest assured of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

KEY FACTS ABOUT THE KINGDOM HALL ASSISTANCE ARRANGEMENT

September 1, 1998

(Replaces letter of October 1, 1995, which should be discarded)

WHAT IS THE KINGDOM HALL ASSISTANCE ARRANGEMENT (KHAA)?

The Society uses contributions designated for the KHAA to pay for property damage to Kingdom Halls as well as expenses and liability claims arising from accidents/incidents at Kingdom Halls. This is not a commercial insurance program. The Society's Risk Management Office administers the KHAA fund, using these contributions to make all payments. In addition, the fund is used to purchase commercial "excess" insurance to protect congregations and the Society from possible catastrophic losses.

If all other available avenues of aid are pursued first when a loss occurs, the KHAA funds remain available for cases of genuine need. A fine spirit is shown by those who give loving support to accident victims and provide volunteer labor for property repairs. Generally, family heads provide for their family's health needs, including accident-related expenses (w97 8/15 19,22). However, the Society is pleased to be able to render assistance when needed.

HOW DO WE PARTICIPATE IN THE KHAA?

Contributions Each year you will receive a letter suggesting a contribution amount based upon the needs of all those supported by the KHAA. Please send your contribution as soon thereafter as possible.

Existing Kingdom Halls The replacement costs for existing structures are reported to the Society on the Property Description Form (T-50). All congregations that own property were asked to update their values in 1997 by filling out one of these forms. If you have not already done so, please send a completed form to Risk Management at the above address. The Regional Building Committee may be able to help you calculate the replacement cost of your building.

Construction Prior to beginning construction, you should complete a Kingdom Hall Under Construction Form (T-56) available from Risk Management. If performance or other bonds are needed, please contact Risk Management. If the building project is canceled, please inform us in writing.

Purchased Buildings and Vacant Lots For newly purchased buildings, you should complete a Property Description Form (T-50). Vacant lots are automatically covered by your existing account.

Apartments Modest apartments on Kingdom Hall property, used by traveling ministers or special pioneers, can be included by request in the KHAA.

A Specific Certificate of Insurance may be obtained for certain cases, such as:

- General Liability coverage for rented facilities (such as are used by some congregations for the Memorial). Also, property damage assistance for contents owned by the congregation.
- Rental equipment damage, up to $10,000 per reported rental

In order for any special coverage to be in effect or for certificates to be issued, Risk Management needs to be notified in advance in writing.

Canceling KHAA Assistance If you wish to cancel your participation in the KHAA arrangement, please notify Risk Management in writing, providing the termination date. Your participation will not be automatically canceled due to failure to make the suggested contribution, so please provide cancellation notification in writing.

WHAT CAN WE DO TO KEEP KHAA COSTS DOWN?

Preventive maintenance is the key to controlling costs. Each year you will receive an Annual Congregation Property Documents & Safety Inspection Worksheet (T-34). Its purpose is to help you identify potential areas of property damage or accidents that could result in losses. Please take immediate action in correcting any noted problems and document the action taken. Please file the completed checklist in the file of the congregation that holds title to the property.

Of course, more is required to prevent losses than filling out a checklist once each year. Elders should take the lead in spotting and correcting potential problems and safety hazards. It is our fine attitude towards safety and maintaining our properties in good repair that enables us to operate the KHAA at a cost much lower than would be possible for other organizations through commercial insurance. Since the losses of all those that participate affect the balance of the KHAA fund, it is in everyone's interest to reduce losses.

Often steps can be taken to keep costs to a minimum after a loss does occur. In the case of property damage, quick action can go far in preventing further loss. For example, if a storm causes damage that results in a leak, fixing the leak prevents further damage and reduces the amount needed from the fund to care for the incident. The use of Regional Building Committees and volunteer labor can save valuable contributed funds. Careful shopping for high quality materials will prove economical in the long run.

In the case of bodily injury, prompt, loving care to the injured will ensure as full and quick a recovery as is possible.

HOW TO REPORT ACCIDENTS RESULTING IN BODILY INJURY

1. Please ensure that the injured party receives appropriate medical attention as soon as possible. In most instances of serious injury it is best for an ambulance to transport the injured to a medical facility.
2. Appoint an experienced, mature elder to handle the accident. This will include ensuring that all the steps outlined in this arrangement are followed. The elder should review the information in this letter and complete an Accident Report (T-5) within one week. Have two brothers present while documenting the information for the form. While filling out the report, please follow the questions provided therein. Please do not ask any other questions such as who or what may have been at fault or the cause of the accident. Furthermore, do not make any reference to any legal action.
3. Report the accident by phone immediately if there is any mention of legal action or correspondence comes from an attorney. Generally, this would only occur if a worldly person was injured on your property. If this should occur, please obtain his/her name and address as well as the names and addresses of any witnesses, along with a full description of the incident.
4. Do not make any statements of fault, responsibility or liability about the cause of the accident to the injured or any other party, including governmental officials.
5. If any professional medical treatment is given, please call Risk Management at (718) 625-3600 within 48 hours to report the accident. This should be done even if the individual has personal insurance and will not be submitting any bills to the congregation. Please have the following information when calling: the date of the accident, the name of the injured, the name of the congregation, the name of the coordinating elder, his telephone number, and his address. You will be assisted with reminders concerning these procedures and we will be available to provide answers concerning any questions you may have.

6. Keep in close touch with the injured party and their family to see what further assistance may be needed in the home, etc. If the injured is not one of Jehovah's Witnesses, kindly offer to provide additional assistance and make needed arrangements. Show genuine Christian love and concern.

7. After you complete the Accident Report (T-5), make a copy for the congregation files and send the original to Risk Management. When you receive any correspondence or bills related to the accident, please make a copy for the congregation files and forward the original to Risk Management.

The Society or its legal representative may contact the coordinating elder. Please keep in contact with the injured person if possible and notify Risk Management of any significant changes in the injured's status.

HOW TO REPORT INCIDENTS INVOLVING PROPERTY DAMAGE

1. Appoint an experienced elder to take the lead in managing the situation.

2. Protect the property from further damage, loss, or break-in.

3. Immediately report acts of theft and vandalism to the police. Please include a copy of the Police Report with the Property Loss Report (T-55) when this is sent to the Society.

4. In the event of a loss for which KHAA funds may be used, please contact Risk Management for recommendations on how to proceed.

5. Within 30 days after you discover the damage or loss, please send us bills or written estimates you obtained for all repairs or replacements made necessary by the loss along with the completed Property Loss Report (T-55). If you cannot do this within 30 days, contact Risk Management. (Less estimates should not include labor costs if you are planning to use volunteers to do the work.)

In conclusion, we thank you for your careful review of the foregoing information. We are confident that all will continue to make a diligent effort to apply the suggestions set forth so that accidents, property losses and their associated costs will be kept to a minimum. May Jehovah bless our united efforts in promoting the interests of his Kingdom.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Dear Brothers:

Beginning with the district conventions in 1995 we will change the way individuals submit preliminary applications for Gilead School. Up until the present time the preliminary Gilead application form has been given to those interested at district conventions and they have filled in the information and returned them to the brother conducting the meeting at the district convention and in turn that brother has forwarded them to the Society. However, beginning with the 1995 district convention those interested in applying for Gilead School will be given the application to take home with them, along with a covering letter. They will fill in the information requested in the first half of the form and then will turn the application over to the congregation service committee in the congregation where they are assigned as pioneers. The congregation service committee then will fill in the lower half of the application, answering all of the questions propounded thereon. The application will then be sent to the circuit overseer, unless he is due to visit within a few weeks, in which case it will be held for his visit to the congregation. The circuit overseer will give his rating of the individual as requested on the form. If either the service committee of the congregation, or the circuit overseer wish to make additional comments that may be done on the reverse side of the application. The application should be promptly forwarded to the following address at the conclusion of the visit of the circuit overseer or by the circuit overseer if the applications are forwarded to him:

Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society
Attention: Service Committee of the Governing Body
25 Columbia Heights
Brooklyn, NY 11201

It is very important that these applications be given attention at the time of the visit of the circuit overseer, or be sent to him if his visit to the congregation is not scheduled in the near future, so that the applications can be sent to the Service Committee of the Governing Body and be duly processed so that Gilead classes can be formed. Please bear in mind that if you do NOT RECOMMEND the individual you should make it clear in your rating of the individual and in answering question No. 7 on the form. We want only those who are well qualified for the training and schooling provided at Gilead and who to the best of your knowledge will do well if given an assignment as a missionary in a foreign land.

Be assured of our love and best wishes.

Statement

Jehovah's Witnesses abhor all forms of wickedness including child abuse. We do not condone the actions of those who exploit children by this terrible crime and such persons are disfellowshipped (excommunicated) from the congregation. A known child molester does not qualify for appointment as a church elder or for any other position of responsibility in any congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

If child abuse becomes known to our church elders, they strictly comply with applicable child abuse reporting laws. We also encourage the wrongdoers to do everything they can to set the matter straight with the authorities. Furthermore, we do not prohibit or discourage the victim or the victim's parents from reporting child abuse to the authorities even if the alleged perpetrator is one of Jehovah's Witnesses. If you would like to receive more information on how we report such matters, please contact Mario Moreno, Watchtower Legal Department. (845) 509-0416 or (845) 306-1000.

Statement

Sexual abuse of children is a terrible crime that can leave lasting emotional scars on its victims. Often, child molesters are attracted to organizations that have children as members, which makes protecting children from sexual abuse a complex and important societal concern.

Jehovah's Witnesses condemn child molestation, and they do not tolerate such activity within their membership. If there is sufficient evidence that someone has exploited children in this way, he may be disfellowshipped (excommunicated). A sincerely repentant former child molester may be allowed to remain a member of the faith, but he is strongly warned against being alone with children unless one of the parents or another responsible adult is also present. Moreover, as a protection to our children, former child molesters are not permitted to receive positions of responsibility in our religion.

If an accusation of child molestation is made against a member of the congregation, the elders immediately work to assure the safety of the victim. Also, they make every effort to comply with the law. This includes complying with laws that mandate reporting the incident to the proper authorities. This is even done when a child is the only one to report the wrong conduct or when the elders received the allegation of molestation in confidence.

The victim or the victim's family may also report the matter to the authorities. The have an absolute right to report and none should interfere with this. If you would like to receive more information on how we report such matters, please contact Mario Moreno, Watchtower Legal Department. (845) 509-0416 or (845) 306-1000.

Betsan Powys
BBC Panorama

Dear Ms. Powys:

This is in response to your fax of April 30, 2002, in which you advise us that BBC-TV is preparing a program on the way Jehovah's Witnesses handle child abuse matters. You have kindly offered us the opportunity to be interviewed on-camera; however, we must respectfully decline.

We are not opposed to giving interviews in general; however, it is likely that among those whose views will be expressed on your broadcast will be some persons who are Jehovah's Witnesses. In our view, it would be neither proper nor Scriptural for us to place ourselves in what might turn out to be an adversarial position with our Christian brothers and sisters in a public setting. (1 Corinthians 6:1-8; Ephesians 4:2) We trust that you will understand our position in this regard.

Although unable to participate in an interview, we are certainly willing to comment on the questions that you raised in your fax. We note that these center almost exclusively on the nature of the records that we keep on alleged child abusers. You tell us that it is vital that we answer your questions on our record-keeping procedures because of the "very serious nature of the allegations made to the programme," although you do not specify what the allegations are. First of all, however, please allow us to comment on the way that child abuse accusations are handled by Jehovah's Witnesses. We realize that you did not ask us to touch on this aspect; nevertheless, it is essential that we comment on it to provide an appropriate, frank answer.

In the United States, when any one of Jehovah's Witnesses is accused of an act of child abuse, the local elders are expected to investigate. The procedure is as follows. Two elders meet separately with the accused and the accuser to see what each says on the matter. If the accused denies the charge, the two elders may arrange for him to have the opportunity to confront the accuser in their presence. If during that meeting the accused still denies the charges and there are no others who can substantiate them, the elders cannot take action within the congregation at that time. Why not? As a Bible-based organization, we must adhere to what the Scriptures say, namely, "No single witness should rise up against a man respecting any error or any sin . . . at the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deuteronomy 19:15) Jesus reaffirmed this principle as recorded at Matthew 18:15-17.

When the branch office receives an allegation of child abuse, a check of the records might reveal that similar, uncorroborated allegations were lodged against the same person in the past, perhaps when he was living in another part of the country. When a second credible allegation by a different person is lodged against the same individual, the elders are authorized by the Scriptures to handle the case.

However, even if the elders cannot take congregational action, they are expected to report the allegation to the branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses in their country, if local privacy laws permit. Again, privacy laws permitting, a record is made at the branch office that the individual has been accused of child abuse. Each branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses keeps its own records, if that is allowed by local jurisdiction. In the United States we do not have records of child abusers who live in other lands. If privacy laws do not allow such records to be kept, the elders do whatever is permitted within the law to see to it that children are protected. The aim is to balance the right to privacy of the individual with the overriding need to protect the safety of children.—1 Timothy 5:19.

In addition to making a report to the branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses, the elders may be required by law to report even uncorroborated or unsubstantiated allegations to the authorities. If so, we expect the elders to comply. Additionally, the victim may wish to report the matter to the authorities, and it is his or her absolute right to do so. In the United States, reporting requirements vary from state to state. It can be quite a challenge to keep abreast of the reporting requirements, but our Legal Department makes every effort to do so.

If, when confronted, the accused confesses that he is guilty of child abuse, the elders take appropriate action. If he is not repentant, he will not be permitted to remain a member of the congregation. Even if he is repentant--is cut to the heart, and is thus resolutely determined to avoid such conduct in the future--what was stated in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower applies. The article said: "For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer [full-time missionary of Jehovah's Witnesses] or serve in any other special, full-time service." (1 Timothy 3:2, 7-10) We take such action because we are concerned with maintaining Bible standards and protecting our children. Everyone in our organization is expected to meet the same requirements, namely, to be clean physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually.—1 Corinthians 7:1; Ephesians 4:17-19; 1 Thessalonians 2:4.

In a few instances, individuals guilty of an act of child abuse have been appointed to positions within the congregation if their conduct has been otherwise exemplary for decades. All of the circumstances would need to be considered carefully. Suppose, for example, that a long time ago a 16-year-old boy had sexual relations with a consenting 15-year-old girl. Depending upon the U.S. jurisdictions where he lived when this happened, elders are required to report this as an incident of child abuse. Let us say that twenty years have passed. The child abuse reporting law may have changed; he may even have married the girl! Both have been living exemplary lives and they are respected. In such a rare case, the man could possibly be appointed to a responsible position within the congregation.

Our procedures have been refined over time. Our policy over the past several years has been that at least twenty years must have passed before an individual who committed an act of child abuse could even be considered for appointment to a responsible position in the congregation, if ever. The Bible teaches that individuals can repent of their sins and "turn to God by doing works that befit repentance," and we accept what the Bible says. (Acts 26:20) Still, the safety of our children is of the utmost importance, so we realize that the local elders must be very careful when recommending individuals who may have been guilty of an act of child abuse in the distant past.

You have been told that here in the United States we have compiled a list of 23,720 names of child abusers. That is false. First of all, the total number of names in our records is considerably lower than that. In addition, it is not meaningful to focus on the number of names we have in our records. This is because our figures include the names of many persons who have only been accused of child abuse whereas the charges have not been substantiated. We keep these records to document our compliance with what the law requires in many U.S. jurisdictions. Also included on our list are allegations made on the basis of so-called "repressed memories," the validity of which many authorities challenge. Then there are the names of persons who have been accused of abusing children before becoming Jehovah's Witnesses as well as individuals who have never been baptized Witnesses but whose names we are obliged to keep because of their association with the Witnesses. (An example of this would be a non-Witness father or step-father who is accused by his Witness children or step-children of abusing them.) To be safe, we also list the names of persons who may or may not be considered as child abusers, depending upon the jurisdiction where they live (for example, that 16-year-old boy who had sexual relations with the consenting 15-year-old girl). The name of an individual who was guilty of voyeurism or involved with child pornography, as further examples, would also be included on the list. And, to be sure, the list also includes names of persons who are actually guilty of child abuse. We do not apologize for keeping such records here in the United States. Apart from being legally needed, they have been very helpful to us in our efforts to protect the flock from harm. (Isaiah 32:2) Christian parents can rightly feel secure in the knowledge that such efforts are made to screen out possible child abusers from appointment to responsible positions within the congregation.

Ms. Powys, please do not conclude that we believe that our system is perfect. No human organization is perfect. But we do believe that we have a strong, Bible-based policy on child abuse. Anyone in a responsible position who is guilty of child abuse would be removed from his responsibilities without hesitation. We certainly would not knowingly transfer him to serve elsewhere.

Child abuse is abhorrent to us. Even one abused child is one too many. At least since 1981, our journals, The Watchtower and Awake!, have featured articles to educate both Witnesses and the public regarding the importance and need to protect children from child abuse. Among others, there was the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked!" published in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower; "Help For the Victims of Incest" in the October 1, 1983, Watchtower; "Your Child Is in Danger!", "How Can We Protect Our Children?", and "Prevention in the Home," all in the October 8, 1993, Awake!, as well as "Child Molesting—Every Mother's Nightmare" in the January 22, 1985, Awake! Over the years, as we have noted areas where our policies could be strengthened, we have followed through. We are continuing to refine them.

We trust that you will find the information in this letter to be helpful. As you will note, we have responded to the broad issues you raise rather than providing specific answers to your detailed list of questions. We note that you sent a similar list of questions to our offices in London. We understand they are answering your questions in accordance with their procedures and adherence to British law. With every good wish, I am,

Very truly yours,

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS IN BRITAIN

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Brothers:

We are writing to help all of you as individual elders be aware of a growing concern regarding the handling of your duties that may involve legal issues or questions. Owing to its importance, the presiding overseer should arrange for a special meeting of the body of elders to read and consider this letter carefully. Please do not make any copies of this letter, nor should it be read by others. It should be kept in the congregation's confidential files for any future reference that may be required by the body of elders.

In spreading the Kingdom message, it is appropriate that we be bold and outspoken. Jesus commanded that "what you hear whispered, preach from the housetops." (Matthew 10:27) Even when worldly authorities demand that we keep silent, we reply as did the apostles: "We cannot stop speaking about the things we have seen and heard." (Acts 4:20) The Christian congregation will continue to declare the Kingdom message boldly until Jehovah says the work is done.

Elders share the obligation to shepherd the flock. However, they must be careful not to divulge information about personal matters to unauthorized persons. There is "a time to keep quiet," when "your words should prove to be few." (Ecclesiastes 3:7; 5:2) Proverbs 10:19 warns: "In the abundance of words there does not fail to be transgression, but the one keeping his lips in check is acting discreetly." Problems are created when elders unwisely reveal matters that should be kept confidential. Elders must give special heed to the counsel: "Do not reveal the confidential talk of another." (Proverbs 25:9) Often the peace, unity, and spiritual well-being of the congregation are at stake. Improper use of the tongue by an elder can result in serious legal problems for the individual, the congregation and even the Society.

While we as Christians are ready to forgive others who may wrong us, those in the world are not so inclined. Worldly persons are quick to resort to lawsuits if they feel their 'rights' alleged wrongdoer or by witnesses should be kept in strict confidence. If it is necessary to continue at a later time a committee hearing, the members of the committee should submit to the chairman any personal notes they have taken. The chairman will keep these notes in a secure place to prevent breaches of confidentiality. The notes may be returned to the individual elders when the hearing resumes. Upon conclusion of the case, the chairman should place only necessary notes and documents, a summary of the case, and the S-77 forms in a sealed envelope for the congregation file. Nothing should be preserved outside of this sealed envelope (including unnecessary personal notes) by any elder on the committee. Obviously, no committee will ever allow judicial proceedings to be tape recorded or allow witnesses testifying before the committee to take notes.

Incorporated in the United States of America. Company registered in England No. 74273. Charity Reg. No. 241523

B. Child Abuse

Jehovah's people in no way condone crimes such as child abuse or endeavour to shield those committing offences of this nature. When elders receive reports of physical or sexual abuse of a child, they should contact the Society's Legal Desk immediately. Victims of such abuse need to be protected from further danger.—See "If the Worst Should Happen," Awake! January 22, 1985, page 8.

As members of the community in which Caesar still acts as God's minister and hence still has a certain authority, all in the Christian congregation would want to consider their personal and moral responsibility to alert the appropriate authorities in cases where there has been committed or there exists a risk that there might be committed a serious criminal offence of this type (see kr91, page 138). In child abuse cases such authorities might include the family doctor, the Social Services, the NSPCC, or the police.

C. Crimes and Criminal Investigations

In some cases the elders will form judicial committees to handle alleged wrongdoing that also could constitute a violation of Caesar's criminal laws (e.g. theft, assault, etc.). It is natural that the Christian congregation should find such situations to be distressing. There is clearly a need to balance the principle of "rendering Caesar's things to Caesar" (Matthew 22:21) with those concerning the spiritual cleanness of the congregation, such as 1 Corinthians 5:11-13. A case of this type should be considered on two levels.

Firstly, the secular Courts view it as their prerogative to examine criminal charges and to judge the matter. Should congregation elders become involved in a matter which is sub judice they are in jeopardy of being seen to be involved in an "attempt" or "conspiracy to pervert the course of justice." This view may be taken by the authorities if there appears to be any pressure placed on witnesses, or on the person accused, to make or to refrain from making statements. Should any party change his testimony between the congregation judicial hearing and the trial this may emerge in cross examination. In view of the serious consequences of conviction for a criminal offence the lawyers acting for the accused party may advise that the case is not discussed with anyone before the trial. In all cases where a brother or sister is charged with a criminal offence, and that offence is also a violation of God's law necessitating the formation of a judicial committee, please contact the Society's Legal Desk immediately.

Applying this counsel may result in a lengthy delay in dealing with a serious matter. In such an event the congregation must be patient and wait on Jehovah. It may be advisable for the brother who has been accused not to be used for assignments until the matter is resolved. A charge which is to be heard in Court has, at least to a limited extent, become a matter of public knowledge. The brother who has been charged, even if he is innocent, will wish to co-operate in maintaining the good name of the Christian congregation. Of course, every case is different and it is not possible to make rules to cover every situation.

The second level to consider is when the alleged wrongdoer has made a confession. The congregation judicial committee may then proceed on the basis of the confession without waiting for the trial to be completed. Naturally the confession should be in writing and signed, or else heard by more than one witness. In such instance there is no need for the testimony of witnesses to establish guilt. Caution should still be exercised in case the guilty party changes his testimony between the judicial hearing and the trial, perhaps on the advice of a worldly lawyer. Also, should further wrongdoing come to light during the trial it would be necessary for the matter to be re-examined, as is true of any judicial matter when additional wrongdoing is discovered.

D. Search Warrants and Subpoenas

1. A search warrant is a court order authorizing the police to search premises to locate evidence that may be used in a criminal prosecution. No elder should ever consent to the search of a Kingdom Hall or any other place where confidential records are stored. However, when armed with a search warrant the police do not need consent and may even use force to accomplish their task. Likely before obtaining a search warrant, the police or other governmental officials will make inquiries regarding confidential records, make request to obtain the records, or indicate that they will seek a search warrant if the elders(s) involved does not co-operate. In any such situation, the Society's Legal Desk should be contacted immediately.

If at any time an elder is confronted with a search warrant (whether given advance notice or not), the elder should first ask to read the warrant. After reading it he should ask if he can call for legal guidance and then telephone the Society's Legal Desk. If for some reason the Legal Desk cannot be contacted, the elder(s) involved should make every effort to obtain the assistance of a local solicitor for the purpose of protecting the confidentiality of the records. It may be impossible to stop determined officers from conducting the search authorized by the warrant. Conscientious elders will want to do all they reasonably and peaceably can to preserve the confidentiality of the congregation in harmony with the principle set out in Acts 5:29.

2. Subpoenas are demands for records or for the appearance of an individual at a trial or court hearing to give testimony. Subpoenas may be issued by a court or in some cases by a governmental agency or a solicitor. If an elder receives a subpoena, he should contact the Society's Legal Desk immediately. Never turn over records, notes, documents or reveal any confidential matter sought by subpoena without receiving direction from the Legal Desk.

In Scotland such orders are known as witness citations and diligence for recovery of documents.

E. When Lawsuits Are Threatened

If the congregation or the elders (in their capacity as elders) are threatened with a lawsuit the Society's Legal Desk should be contacted immediately. No statements should be made by any member of the body of elders about the merits or validity of an actual or threatened lawsuit without authorization from the Society.

F. Parental Rights And Responsibilities

Elders may learn that a publisher is facing a dispute over child care in a divorce proceeding. If parental rights are challenged on the basis of our Christian beliefs, or on the assertion that our beliefs are harmful to a child's best interests, the elders should immediately write to the Society's Legal Desk. In a rare emergency, a telephone call may be necessary. The Legal Desk will assess the facts and determine the degree of its involvement, if any, and whether to send a Litigation Pack. The Legal Desk may be able to suggest a local solicitor who would be prepared to undertake family litigation involving Jehovah's Witnesses, if that is requested. Elders have no authority to make any promises about the Society's paying legal fees or handling specific cases. There is no need to contact the Society if there is no indication that the beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses will be attacked in a child care dispute.

When you write to the Society's Legal Desk about a specific case, please provide the following information:

1. The names of the parents and their solicitors, if instructed.
2. The number of children involved and their ages.
3. A brief description of the facts, including the presence of any apostates.
4. A short assessment of the Christian parent's spiritual condition.—Is he or she new in the truth? Active? Inactive? Balanced?
5. The status of the legal proceedings.—Has the matter gone to court? Has the hearing date been set? If so, when?

G. When Servants and Publishers Move

A considerable number of publishers, including elders and ministerial servants, move from one congregation to another. Sometimes the circumstances surrounding their departure are unsettled. Some appointed brothers may be experiencing problems that have brought their qualifications into question. It is not uncommon for a body of elders to hold back in giving counsel, allowing a brother to move without discussing his problem. Thereafter, they decline to recommend his re-appointment in his new congregation. Often such a brother protests, requiring extensive correspondence between the bodies of elders. Much personal, and sometimes embarrassing, information must then be passed on. Such mishandling of things greatly increases the potential for serious repercussions. Problems can be avoided by the body of elders assuming its responsibility to inform a brother that he will not be favourably recommended, fully explaining the reasons why. Every effort should be made to resolve any difference before he leaves, eliminating any need for controversy involving his new congregation. The body should assign two elders to meet with him before he moves, letting him know whether they are recommending him to the new congregation.

This would likewise apply to publishers who move at a time when their personal conduct requires investigation by the elders. If serious accusations of wrongdoing have been made against an individual and he moves to another congregation before matters are finalized, usually it is best for the elders in the original congregation to follow through in handling matters, if possible and if distance permits. They are acquainted with the individual and the circumstances surrounding the alleged wrongdoing: this ordinarily puts them in the best position to get the facts and to handle the case. Handling matters in this way will eliminate the need to reveal confidential information about the private lives of individuals unnecessarily.

II. POINTS TO REMEMBER

A. Appreciate the Importance of Maintaining Confidentiality

Elders must exercise extraordinary caution when it comes to handling confidential information about the private lives of others. Do not mistakenly minimize the gravity of a breach of confidentiality. Unauthorized disclosure of confidential information can result in costly lawsuits. Even if a lawsuit turns out favourably, valuable time and energy that could have been devoted to Kingdom interests will be lost.

B. Do Not Make Statements to Secular Authorities Until You Receive Legal Advice from the Society

You are not legally required to make immediate responses to secular authorities about matters that could involve the disclosure of confidential information. Voluntarily allowing the Kingdom Hall or confidential records to be searched, where no search warrant is produced, could infringe on the legal rights of the congregation or of others. No statements should be made until you have an understanding of your legal position from the Society's Legal Desk.

C. Be Extremely Careful with Written Material

All material related to judicial matters should be kept in a safe place, accessible only to elders. Final reports on the handling of judicial matters should be placed in a sealed envelope in the congregation file. A judicial committee should avoid sending to an individual any kind of correspondence that accuses him of specific wrongdoing. (Note ks91, pages 110, 121.) Nothing should be put in writing to any disfellowshipped person to advise him of his status or the reasons for it without specific direction from the Society. The rules and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses do not require such written disclosures. Anything in writing submitted to a judicial committee should be kept in strict confidence. If a judicial committee disfellowships an individual, he should be informed orally of the action taken and of the right of appeal. If the wrongdoer refuses to attend the hearing, two members of the judicial committee should attempt to contact the individual at his home and inform him orally of the decision. If this is not possible, the two elders may be able to inform him by telephone.

D. Guard the Use of Your Tongue

Think before you speak. Do not discuss private and judicial matters with members of your family, including your wife, or with other members of the congregation. Be extremely careful not to disclose private information inadvertently when others are present, such as when speaking on the telephone with others listening in or nearby. At times, complicated judicial cases may necessitate consultation with an experienced, mature elder in another congregation or with the circuit overseer. Unless the circuit overseer is the elder consulted, only the pertinent details should be discussed and names should not be used.

Elders bear a heavy responsibility in ministering to the needs of the Christian congregation and observing confidentiality as they do so. (1 Corinthians 16:13) We trust that the information in this letter will help you carry this burden. Please be assured of our love and prayers. May Jehovah continue to bless you as you shepherd his flock.—1 Peter 5:1-3.

Your brothers.

Supreme Court of the United States

BURGER KING CORPORATION, Appellant
v.
John RUDZEWICZ.

No. 83-2097.

Argued Jan. 8, 1985.
Decided May 20, 1985.

Franchisor brought action against franchisee alleging breach of franchise obligations and trademark infringement. The United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida entered judgment in favor of franchisor and franchisee appealed. The Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, 724 F.2d 1505, reversed and denied rehearing, 729 F.2d 1468. The Supreme Court, Justice Brennan, held that: (1) where it was not clear that Court of Appeals had found Florida long-arm statute unconstitutional as applied, Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction over appeal; (2) jurisdictional statement would be treated as petition for writ of certiorari; and (3) exercise of long- arm jurisdiction over Michigan franchisee in Florida did not offend due process.

Reversed and remanded.

Justice Stevens dissented and filed an opinion in which Justice White joined.

Appellant is a Florida corporation whose principal offices are in Miami. It conducts most of its restaurant business through a franchise operation, under which franchisees are licensed to use appellant's trademarks and service marks in leased standardized restaurant facilities for a period of 20 years. The governing contracts provide that the franchise relationship is established in Miami and governed by Florida law, and call for payment of all required monthly fees and forwarding of all relevant notices to the Miami headquarters. The Miami headquarters sets policy and works directly with the franchisees in attempting to resolve major problems. Day-to-day monitoring of franchisees, however, is conducted through district offices that in turn report to the Miami headquarters. Appellee is a Michigan resident who, along with another Michigan resident, entered into a 20-year franchise contract with appellant to operate a restaurant in Michigan. Subsequently, when the restaurant's patronage declined, the franchisees fell behind in their monthly payments. After extended negotiations among the franchisees, the Michigan district office, and the Miami headquarters proved unsuccessful in solving 2177 the problem, headquarters terminated the franchise and ordered the franchisees to vacate the premises. They refused and continued to operate the restaurant. Appellant then brought a diversity action in Federal District Court in Florida, alleging that the franchisees had breached their franchise obligations and requesting damages and injunctive relief. The franchisees claimed that, because they were Michigan residents and because appellant's claim did not "arise" within Florida, the District Court lacked personal jurisdiction over them. But the court held that the franchisees were subject to personal jurisdiction pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute, which extends jurisdiction to any person, whether or not a citizen or resident of the State, who breaches a contract in the State by failing to perform acts that the contract requires to be performed there. Thereafter, the court entered judgment against the franchisees on the merits. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that "[j]urisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process."

Held: The District Court's exercise of jurisdiction pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute did not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Pp. 2181-2190.

*463 (a) A forum may assert specific jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant where an alleged injury arises out of or relates to actions by the defendant himself that are purposefully directed toward forum residents, and where jurisdiction would not otherwise offend "fair play and substantial justice." Jurisdiction in these circumstances may not be avoided merely because the defendant did not physically enter the forum. Pp. 2181-2185.

(b) An individual's contract with an out-of-state party cannot alone automatically establish sufficient minimum contacts in the other party's home forum. Instead, the prior negotiations and contemplated future consequences, along with the terms of the contract and the parties' actual course of dealing, must be evaluated to determine whether a defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum. Pp. 2185-2186.

(c) Here, appellee established a substantial and continuing relationship with appellant's Miami headquarters, and received fair notice from the contract documents and the course of dealings that he might be subject to suit in Florida. The District Court found that appellee is an "experienced and sophisticated" businessman who did not act under economic duress or disadvantage imposed by appellant, and appellee has pointed to no other factors that would establish the unconstitutionality of Florida's assertion of jurisdiction. Pp. 2186-2190.

724 F.2d 1505 (CA11 1984), reversed and remanded.

Joel S. Perwin argued the cause and filed briefs for appellant.

Thomas H. Oehmke argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee.

Justice BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The State of Florida's long-arm statute extends jurisdiction to "[a]ny person, whether or not a citizen or resident of this state," who, inter alia, "[b]reach[es] a contract in this state by failing to perform acts required by the contract to be performed in this state," so long as the cause of action *464 arises from the alleged contractual breach. Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984). The United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, sitting in diversity, relied on this provision in exercising personal jurisdiction over a Michigan resident who allegedly had breached a franchise agreement with a Florida corporation by failing to make required payments in Florida. The question presented is whether this exercise of long-arm jurisdiction offended "traditional conception[s] of fair play and substantial justice" embodied in the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Burger King Corporation is a Florida corporation whose principal offices are in Miami. It is one of the world's largest restaurant organizations, with over 3,000 outlets in the 50 States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and 8 foreign nations. Burger King conducts approximately 80% of its business through a franchise operation that the company styles the "Burger King System"--"a comprehensive restaurant format and operating system for the sale of uniform and quality food products." App. 46. [FN1] Burger King licenses its franchisees to use its trademarks and service marks for a period of 20 years and leases standardized restaurant facilities to them for the same term. In addition, franchisees acquire a variety of proprietary information concerning the "standards, specifications, procedures and methods for operating *465 a Burger King Restaurant." Id., at 52. They also receive market research and advertising assistance; ongoing training in restaurant management; [FN2] and accounting, cost-control, and inventory- control guidance. By permitting franchisees to tap into Burger King's established national reputation and to benefit from proven procedures for dispensing standardized fare, this system enables them to go into the restaurant business with significantly lowered barriers to entry. [FN3]

FN1. Burger King's standard Franchise Agreement further defines this system as "a restaurant format and operating system, including a recognized design, decor, color scheme and style of building, uniform standards, specifications and procedures of operation, quality and uniformity of products and services offered, and procedures for inventory and management control...." App. 43.

FN2. Mandatory training seminars are conducted at Burger King University in Miami and at Whopper College Regional Training Centers around the country. See id., at 39; 6 Record 540-541.

FN3. See App. 43-44. See generally H. Brown, Franchising Realities and Remedies 6-7, 16-17 (2d ed. 1978).

In exchange for these benefits, franchisees pay Burger King an initial $40,000 franchise fee and commit themselves to payment of monthly royalties, advertising and sales promotion fees, and rent computed in part from monthly gross sales. Franchisees also agree to submit to the national organization's exacting regulation of virtually every conceivable aspect of their operations. [FN4] Burger King imposes these standards and undertakes its rigid regulation out of conviction that "[u]niformity of service, appearance, and quality of product is essential to the preservation of the Burger King image and the benefits accruing therefrom to both Franchisee and Franchisor." Id., at 31.

FN4. See, e.g., App. 24-25, 26 (range, "quality, appearance, size, taste, and processing" of menu items), 31 ("standards of service and cleanliness"), 32 (hours of operation), 47 ("official mandatory restaurant operating standards, specifications and procedures"), 48-50 (building layout, displays, equipment, vending machines, service, hours of operation, uniforms, advertising, and promotion), 53 (employee training), 55-56 (accounting and auditing requirements), 59 (insurance requirements). Burger King also imposes extensive standards governing franchisee liability, assignments, defaults, and termination. See id., at 61-74.

Burger King oversees its franchise system through a two-tiered administrative structure. The governing contracts *466 provide that the franchise relationship is established in Miami and governed by Florida law, and call for payment of all required fees and forwarding of all relevant notices to the Miami headquarters. [FN5] The Miami headquarters sets policy and works directly with its franchisees in attempting to resolve major problems. See nn. 7, 9, infra. Day-to-day monitoring of franchisees, however, is conducted through a network of 10 district offices which in turn report to the Miami headquarters.

FN5. See id., at 10-11, 37, 43, 72-73, 113. See infra, at 2187.

The instant litigation grows out of Burger King's termination of one of its franchisees, 2179 and is aptly described by the franchisee as "a divorce proceeding among commercial partners." 5 Record 4. The appellee John Rudzewicz, a Michigan citizen and resident, is the senior partner in a Detroit accounting firm. In 1978, he was approached by Brian MacShara, the son of a business acquaintance, who suggested that they jointly apply to Burger King for a franchise in the Detroit area. MacShara proposed to serve as the manager of the restaurant if Rudzewicz would put up the investment capital; in exchange, the two would evenly share the profits. Believing that MacShara's idea offered attractive investment and tax-deferral opportunities, Rudzewicz agreed to the venture. 6 id., at 438-439, 444, 460.

Rudzewicz and MacShara jointly applied for a franchise to Burger King's Birmingham, Michigan, district office in the autumn of 1978. Their application was forwarded to Burger King's Miami headquarters, which entered into a preliminary agreement with them in February 1979. During the ensuing four months it was agreed that Rudzewicz and MacShara would assume operation of an existing facility in Drayton Plains, Michigan. MacShara attended the prescribed management courses in Miami during this period, see n. 2, supra, and the franchisees purchased $165,000 worth of restaurant equipment from Burger King's Davmor Industries division in *467 Miami. Even before the final agreements were signed, however, the parties began to disagree over site- development fees, building design, computation of monthly rent, and whether the franchisees would be able to assign their liabilities to a corporation they had formed. [FN6] During these disputes Rudzewicz and MacShara negotiated both with the Birmingham district office and with the Miami headquarters. [FN7] With some misgivings, Rudzewicz and MacShara finally obtained limited concessions from the Miami headquarters, [FN8] signed the final agreements, and commenced operations in June 1979. By signing the final agreements, Rudzewicz obligated himself personally to payments exceeding $1 million over the 20-year franchise relationship.

FN6. The latter two matters were the major areas of disagreement. Notwithstanding that Burger King's franchise offering advised that minimum rent would be based on a percentage of "approximated capitalized site acquisition and construction costs," id., at 23, Rudzewicz assumed that rent would be a function solely of renovation costs, and he thereby underestimated the minimum monthly rent by more than $2,000. The District Court found Rudzewicz' interpretation "incredible." 7 Record 649. With respect to assignment, Rudzewicz and MacShara had formed RMBK Corp. with the intent of assigning to it all of their interest and liabilities in the franchise. Consistent with the contract documents, however, Burger King insisted that the two remain personally liable for their franchise obligations. See App. 62, 109. Although the franchisees contended that Burger King officials had given them oral assurances concerning assignment, the District Court found that pursuant to the parol evidence rule any such assurances "even if they had been made and were misleading were joined and merged" into the final agreement. 7 Record 648.

FN7. Although Rudzewicz and MacShara dealt with the Birmingham district office on a regular basis, they communicated directly with the Miami headquarters in forming the contracts; moreover, they learned that the district office had "very little" decisionmaking authority and accordingly turned directly to headquarters in seeking to resolve their disputes. 5 id., at 292. See generally App. 5-6; 5 Record 167-168, 174-179, 182-184, 198-199, 217-218, 264-265, 292-294; 6 id., at 314- 316, 363, 373, 416, 463, 496.

FN8. They were able to secure a $10,439 reduction in rent for the third year. App. 82; 5 Record 222-223; 6 id., at 500.

*468 The Drayton Plains facility apparently enjoyed steady business during the summer of 1979, but patronage declined after a recession began later that year. Rudzewicz and MacShara soon fell far behind in their monthly payments to Miami. Headquarters sent notices of default, and an extended period of negotiations began among the franchisees, the Birmingham district office, and the Miami headquarters. After several Burger King officials in Miami had engaged in prolonged but ultimately unsuccessful negotiations with the franchisees 2180 by mail and by telephone, [FN9] headquarters terminated the franchise and ordered Rudzewicz and MacShara to vacate the premises. They refused and continued to occupy and operate the facility as a Burger King restaurant.

FN9. Miami's policy was to "deal directly" with franchisees when they began to encounter financial difficulties, and to involve district office personnel only when necessary. 5 id., at 95. In the instant case, for example, the Miami office handled all credit problems, ordered cost- cutting measures, negotiated for a partial refinancing of the franchisees' debts, communicated directly with the franchisees in attempting to resolve the dispute, and was responsible for all termination matters. Burger King commenced the instant action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida in May 1981, invoking that court's diversity jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a) and its original jurisdiction over federal trademark disputes pursuant to § 1338(a). [FN10] Burger King alleged that Rudzewicz and MacShara had breached their franchise obligations "within [the jurisdiction of] this district court" by failing to make the required payments "at plaintiff's place of business in Miami, Dade County, Florida," ¶ 6, App. 121, and also charged that they were tortiously infringing *469 its trademarks and service marks through their continued, unauthorized operation as a Burger King restaurant, ¶ ¶ 35-53, App. 130-135. Burger King sought damages, injunctive relief, and costs and attorney's fees. Rudzewicz and MacShara entered special appearances and argued, inter alia, that because they were Michigan residents and because Burger King's claim did not "arise" within the Southern District of Florida, the District Court lacked personal jurisdiction over them. The District Court denied their motions after a hearing, holding that, pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute, "a non-resident Burger King franchisee is subject to the personal jurisdiction of this Court in actions arising out of its franchise agreements." Id., at 138. Rudzewicz and MacShara then filed an answer and a counterclaim seeking damages for alleged violations by Burger King of Michigan's Franchise Investment Law, Mich.Comp.Laws § 445.1501 et seq. (1979).

FN10. Rudzewicz and MacShara were served in Michigan with summonses and copies of the complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4. 2 id., at 102-103.

After a 3-day bench trial, the court again concluded that it had "jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties to this cause." App. 159. Finding that Rudzewicz and MacShara had breached their franchise agreements with Burger King and had infringed Burger King's trademarks and service marks, the court entered judgment against them, jointly and severally, for $228,875 in contract damages. The court also ordered them "to immediately close Burger King Restaurant Number 775 from continued operation or to immediately give the keys and possession of said restaurant to Burger King Corporation," id., at 163, found that they had failed to prove any of the required elements of their counterclaim, and awarded costs and attorney's fees to Burger King.

Rudzewicz appealed to the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. [FN11] A divided panel of that Circuit reversed the *470 judgment, 2181 concluding that the District Court could not properly exercise personal jurisdiction over Rudzewicz pursuant to Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984) because "the circumstances of the Drayton Plains franchise and the negotiations which led to it left Rudzewicz bereft of reasonable notice and financially unprepared for the prospect of franchise litigation in Florida." Burger King Corp. v. MacShara, 724 F.2d 1505, 1513 (1984). Accordingly, the panel majority concluded that "[j]urisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process." Ibid.

FN11. MacShara did not appeal his judgment. See Burger King Corp. v. MacShara, 724 F.2d 1505, 1506, n. 1 (CA11 1984). In addition, Rudzewicz entered into a compromise with Burger King and waived his right to appeal the District Court's finding of trademark infringement and its entry of injunctive relief. See 4 Record 804-816. Accordingly, we need not address the extent to which the tortious act provisions of Florida's long-arm statute, see Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(b) (Supp.1984), may constitutionally extend to out-of-state trademark infringement. Cf. Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 788-789, 104 S.Ct. 1482, 1486-1487, 79 L.Ed.2d 804 (1984) (tortious out-of-state conduct); Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 776, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1479, 79 L.Ed.2d 790 (1984) (same).

[1][2] Burger King appealed the Eleventh Circuit's judgment to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2), and we postponed probable jurisdiction. 469 U.S. 814, 105 S.Ct. 77, 83 L.Ed.2d 25 (1984). Because it is unclear whether the Eleventh Circuit actually held that Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984) itself is unconstitutional as applied to the circumstances of this case, we conclude that jurisdiction by appeal does not properly lie and therefore dismiss the appeal. [FN12] Treating the jurisdictional *471 statement as a petition for a writ of certiorari, see 28 U.S.C. § 2103, we grant the petition and now reverse.

FN12. The District Court had found both that Rudzewicz fell within the reach of Florida's long-arm statute and that the exercise of jurisdiction was constitutional. The Court of Appeals did not consider the statutory question, however, because, as Burger King acknowledged at argument, that court "accepted the parties' stipulation" that § 48.193 reached Rudzewicz "in lieu of [making] a determination of what Florida law provides." Tr. of Oral Arg. 12. Burger King contends that an appeal is proper "on the basis of the Circuit Court's holding that given that stipulation the statute was unconstitutional as applied." Id., at 13 (emphasis added).

We disagree. Our "overriding policy, historically encouraged by Congress, of minimizing the mandatory docket of this Court in the interests of sound judicial administration," Gonzalez v. Automatic Employees Credit Union, 419 U.S. 90, 98, 95 S.Ct. 289, 294, 42 L.Ed.2d 249 (1974) (construing 28 U.S.C. § 1253), would be threatened if litigants could obtain an appeal through the expedient of stipulating to a particular construction of state law where state law might in fact be in harmony with the Federal Constitution. Jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2) is properly invoked only where a court of appeals squarely has "held" that a state statute is unconstitutional on its face or as applied; jurisdiction does not lie if the decision might rest on other grounds. Public Service Comm'n v. Batesville Telephone Co., 284 U.S. 6, 7, 52 S.Ct. 1, 76 L.Ed. 135 (1931) (per curiam). Consistent with "our practice of strict construction" of § 1254(2), Fornaris v. Ridge Tool Co., 400 U.S. 41, 42, n. 1, 91 S.Ct. 156, 157, n. 1, 27 L.Ed.2d 174 (1970) (per curiam), we believe that an appeal cannot lie where a court of appeals' judgment rests solely on the stipulated applicability of state law. Rather, it must be reasonably clear that the court independently concluded that the challenged statute governs the case and held the statute itself unconstitutional as so applied. The Court of Appeals did neither in this case, concluding simply that "[j]urisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process." 724 F.2d, at 1513.

Of course, if it were clear under Florida law that § 48.193(1)(g) governed every transaction falling within its literal terms, there could be no objection to a stipulation that merely recognized this established construction. But the Florida Supreme Court has not ruled on the breadth of § 48.193(1)(g), and several state appellate courts have held that the provision extends only to the limits of the Due Process Clause. See, e.g., Scordilis v. Drobnicki, 443 So.2d 411, 412-414 (Fla.App.1984); Lakewood Pipe of Texas, Inc. v. Rubati, 379 So.2d 475, 477 (Fla.App.1979), appeal dism'd, 383 So.2d 1201 (Fla.1980); Osborn v. University Society, Inc., 378 So.2d 873, 874 (Fla.App.1979). If § 48.193(1)(g) is construed and applied in accordance with due process limitations as a matter of state law, then an appeal is improper because the statute cannot be "invalid as repugnant to the Constitution ... of the United States," 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2), since its boundaries are defined by, rather than being in excess of, the Due Process Clause. See, e.g., Calder v. Jones, supra, 465 U.S., at 787-788, n. 7, 104 S.Ct., at 1486, n. 7; Kulko v. California

Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 90, and n. 4, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 1695-1696, and n. 4, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978).

[3][4] The Due Process Clause protects an individual's liberty interest in not being subject to the binding judgments of a *472 forum with which he has established no meaningful "contacts, ties, or relations." 2182*International Shoe Co. v. Washington*, 326 U.S., at 319, 66 S.Ct., at 160. [FN13] By requiring that individuals have "fair warning that a particular activity may subject [them] to the jurisdiction of a foreign sovereign," Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 218, 97 S.Ct. 2569, 2587, 53 L.Ed.2d 683 (1977) (STEVENS, J., concurring in judgment), the Due Process Clause "gives a degree of predictability to the legal system that allows potential defendants to structure their primary conduct with some minimum assurance as to where that conduct will and will not render them liable to suit," World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S.Ct. 559, 567, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980).

FN13. Although this protection operates to restrict state power, it "must be seen as ultimately a function of the individual liberty interest preserved by the Due Process Clause" rather than as a function "of federalism concerns." Insurance Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702-703, n. 10, 102 S.Ct. 2099, 2104-2105, n. 10, 72 L.Ed.2d 492 (1982).

[5][6][7] Where a forum seeks to assert specific jurisdiction over an out-of-state defendant who has not consented to suit there, [FN14] this "fair warning" requirement is satisfied if the defendant has "purposefully directed" his activities at residents of the forum, Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 774, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1478, 79 L.Ed.2d 790 (1984), and the litigation results from alleged injuries that "arise out of or relate to" those activities, *473*Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall*, 466 U.S. 408, 414, 104 S.Ct. 1868, 1872, 80 L.Ed.2d 404 (1984). [FN15] Thus "[t]he forum State does not exceed its powers under the Due Process Clause if it asserts personal jurisdiction over a corporation that delivers its products into the stream of commerce with the expectation that they will be purchased by consumers in the forum State" and those products subsequently injure forum consumers. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 297-298, 100 S.Ct., at 567-568. Similarly, a publisher who distributes magazines in a distant State may fairly be held accountable in that forum for damages resulting there from an allegedly defamatory story. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra; see also Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 104 S.Ct. 1482, 79 L.Ed.2d 804 (1984) (suit against author and editor). And with respect to interstate contractual obligations, we have emphasized that parties who "reach out beyond one state and create continuing relationships and obligations with citizens of another state" are subject to regulation and sanctions in the other State for the consequences of their activities. Travelers Health Assn. v. Virginia, 339 U.S. 643, 647, 70 S.Ct. 927, 929, 94 L.Ed. 1154 (1950). See also McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220, 222-223, 78 S.Ct. 199, 200-201, 2 L.Ed.2d 223 (1957).

FN14. We have noted that, because the personal jurisdiction requirement is a waivable right, there are a "variety of legal arrangements" by which a litigant may give "express or implied consent to the personal jurisdiction of the court." Insurance Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, supra, at 703, 102 S.Ct., at 2105. For example, particularly in the commercial context, parties frequently stipulate in advance to submit their controversies for resolution within a particular jurisdiction. See National Equipment Rental, Ltd. v. Szukhent, 375 U.S. 311, 84 S.Ct. 411, 11 L.Ed.2d 354 (1964). Where such forum-selection provisions have been obtained through "freely negotiated" agreements and are not "unreasonable and unjust," The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S. 1, 15, 92 S.Ct. 1907, 1916, 32 L.Ed.2d 513 (1972), their enforcement does not offend due process.

FN15. "Specific" jurisdiction contrasts with "general" jurisdiction, pursuant to which "a State exercises personal jurisdiction over a defendant in a suit not arising out of or related to the defendant's contacts with the forum." Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S., at 414, n.

9, 104 S.Ct., at 1872, n. 9; see also Perkins v. Benguet Consolidated Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437, 72 S.Ct. 413, 96 L.Ed. 485 (1952).

[8] We have noted several reasons why a forum legitimately may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident who "purposefully directs" his activities toward forum residents. A State generally has a "manifest interest" in providing its residents with a convenient forum for redressing injuries inflicted by out-of-state actors. • 2183 Id.*, at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201; see also Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 776, 104 S.Ct., at 1479. Moreover, where individuals "purposefully derive benefit" from their interstate activities, *474*Kulko v. California Superior Court*, 436 U.S. 84, 96, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 1699, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978), it may well be unfair to allow them to escape having to account in other States for consequences that arise proximately from such activities; the Due Process Clause may not readily be wielded as a territorial shield to avoid interstate obligations that have been voluntarily assumed. And because "modern transportation and communications have made it much less burdensome for a party sued to defend himself in a State where he engages in economic activity," it usually will not be unfair to subject him to the burdens of litigating in another forum for disputes relating to such activity. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201.

[9][10] Notwithstanding these considerations, the constitutional touchstone remains whether the defendant purposefully established "minimum contacts" in the forum State. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S., at 316, 66 S.Ct., at 158. Although it has been argued that foreseeability of causing injury in another State should be sufficient to establish such contacts there when policy considerations so require, [FN16] the Court has consistently held that this kind of foreseeability is not a "sufficient benchmark" for exercising personal jurisdiction. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 295, 100 S.Ct., at 566. Instead, "the foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis ... is that the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum State are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there." Id., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567. In defining when it is that a potential defendant should "reasonably anticipate" out-of-state litigation, the Court frequently has drawn from the reasoning of Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 1239-1240, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958):

FN16. See, e.g., World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 299, 100 S.Ct. 559, 568, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980) (BRENNAN, J., dissenting); Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 219, 97 S.Ct. 2569, 2588, 53 L.Ed.2d 683 (1977) (BRENNAN, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

"The unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum State. The application *475 of that rule will vary with the quality and nature of the defendant's activity, but it is essential in each case that there be some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws."

[11][12][13] This "purposeful availment" requirement ensures that a defendant will not be haled into a jurisdiction solely as a result of "random," "fortuitous," or "attenuated" contacts, Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 774, 104 S.Ct., at 1478; World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 299, 100 S.Ct., at 568, or of the "unilateral activity of another party or a third person," Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, supra, 466 U.S., at 417, 104 S.Ct., at 1873. [FN17] Jurisdiction is proper, however, 2184 where the contacts proximately result from actions by the defendant himself that create a "substantial connection" with the forum State. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201; see also Kulko v. California Superior Court, supra, 436 U.S., at 94, n. 7, 98 S.Ct., at 1698, n. 7. [FN18] Thus where the defendant "deliberately" has *476 engaged in significant activities within a State, Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 781, 104 S.Ct., at 1481, or has created "continuing obligations" between himself and residents of the forum, Travelers Health Assn. v. Virginia, 339 U.S., at 648, 70 S.Ct., at 929, he manifestly has availed himself of the privilege of conducting business there, and because his activities are shielded by "the benefits and protections" of the forum's laws it is presumptively not unreasonable to require him to submit to the burdens of litigation in that forum as well.

FN17. Applying this principle, the Court has held that the Due Process Clause forbids the exercise of personal jurisdiction over an out-of-state automobile distributor whose only tie to the forum resulted from a customer's decision to drive there, World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra; over a divorced husband sued for child-support payments whose only affiliation with the forum was created by his former spouse's decision to settle there, Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978); and over a trustee whose only connection with the forum resulted from the settlor's decision to exercise her power of appointment there, Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958). In such instances, the defendant has had no "clear notice that it is subject to suit" in the forum and thus no opportunity to "alleviate the risk of burdensome litigation" there. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567.

FN18. So long as it creates a "substantial connection" with the forum, even a single act can support jurisdiction. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201. The Court has noted, however, that "some single or occasional acts" related to the forum may not be sufficient to establish jurisdiction if "their nature and quality and the circumstances of their commission" create only an "attenuated" affiliation with the forum. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 318, 66 S.Ct. 154, 159, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945); World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 299, 100 S.Ct., at 568. This distinction derives from the belief that, with respect to this category of "isolated" acts, Id., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567, the reasonable foreseeability of litigation in the forum is substantially diminished.

[14][15] Jurisdiction in these circumstances may not be avoided merely because the defendant did not physically enter the forum State. Although territorial presence frequently will enhance a potential defendant's affiliation with a State and reinforce the reasonable foreseeability of suit there, it is an inescapable fact of modern commercial life that a substantial amount of business is transacted solely by mail and wire communications across state lines, thus obviating the need for physical presence within a State in which business is conducted. So long as a commercial actor's efforts are "purposefully directed" toward residents of another State, we have consistently rejected the notion that an absence of physical contacts can defeat personal jurisdiction there. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 774-775, 104 S.Ct., at 1478; see also Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S., at 788-790, 104 S.Ct., at 1486-1487; McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 222-223, 78 S.Ct., at 200-201. Cf. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 317, 63 S.Ct. 602, 605, 87 L.Ed. 777 (1943).

[16][17][18] Once it has been decided that a defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum State, these contacts may be considered in light of other factors to determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with "fair play and substantial justice." International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S., at 320, 66 S.Ct., at 160. Thus *477 courts in "appropriate case[s]" may evaluate "the burden on the defendant," "the forum State's interest in adjudicating the dispute," "the plaintiff's interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief," "the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies," and the "shared interest of the several States in furthering fundamental substantive social policies." World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 292, 100 S.Ct., at 564. These considerations sometimes serve to establish the reasonableness of jurisdiction upon a lesser showing of minimum contacts than would otherwise be required. See, e.g., Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 780, 104 S.Ct., at 1481; Calder v. Jones, supra, 465 U.S., at 788-789, 104 S.Ct., at 1486-1487; McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223-224, 78 S.Ct., at 201-202. On the other hand, where a defendant who purposefully has directed his activities at 2185 forum residents seeks to defeat jurisdiction, he must present a compelling case that the presence of some other considerations would render jurisdiction unreasonable. Most such considerations usually may be accommodated through means short of finding jurisdiction unconstitutional. For example, the potential clash of the forum's law with the "fundamental substantive social policies" of another State may be accommodated through application of the forum's choice-of-law rules. [FN19] Similarly, a defendant claiming substantial inconvenience may seek a change of venue. [FN20] Nevertheless, minimum requirements inherent in the concept of "fair play and substantial *478 justice" may defeat the reasonableness of jurisdiction even if the defendant has purposefully engaged in forum activities. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 292, 100 S.Ct., at 564; see also Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § § 36-37 (1971). As we previously have noted, jurisdictional rules may not be employed in such a way as to make litigation "so gravely difficult and inconvenient" that a party unfairly is at a "severe disadvantage" in comparison to his opponent. The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S. 1, 18, 92 S.Ct. 1907, 1917, 32 L.Ed.2d 513 (1972) (re forum-selection provisions); McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223-224, 78 S.Ct., at 201-202.

FN19. See Allstate Insurance Co. v. Hague, 449 U.S. 302, 307-313, 101 S.Ct. 633, 637-640, 66 L.Ed.2d 521 (1981) (opinion of BRENNAN, J.). See generally Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws § § 6, 9 (1971).

FN20. See, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) ("For the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought"). This provision embodies in an expanded version the common-law doctrine of forum non conveniens, under which a court in appropriate circumstances may decline to exercise its jurisdiction in the interest of the "easy, expeditious and inexpensive" resolution of a controversy in another forum. See Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. 501, 508-509, 67 S.Ct. 839, 843, 91 L.Ed. 1055 (1947).

[19][20] Applying these principles to the case at hand, we believe there is substantial record evidence supporting the District Court's conclusion that the assertion of personal jurisdiction over Rudzewicz in Florida for the alleged breach of his franchise agreement did not offend due process. At the outset, we note a continued division among lower courts respecting whether and to what extent a contract can constitute a "contact" for purposes of due process analysis. [FN21] If the question is whether an individual's contract with an out-of-state party alone can automatically establish sufficient minimum contacts in the other party's home forum, we believe the answer clearly is that it cannot. The Court long ago rejected the notion that personal jurisdiction might turn on "mechanical" tests, International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S., at 319, 66 S.Ct., at 159, or on "conceptualistic ... theories of the place of contracting or of performance," *479 Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S., at 316, 63 S.Ct., at 604. Instead, we have emphasized the need for a "highly realistic" approach that recognizes that a "contract" is "ordinarily but an intermediate step serving to tie up prior business negotiations with future consequences which themselves are the real object of the business transaction." Id., at 316-317, 63 S.Ct., at 604-605. It is these factors--prior negotiations and contemplated future consequences, along with the terms of the contract and the parties' actual course of dealing--that must be evaluated in determining whether the defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum.

FN21. See, e.g., Lakeside Bridge & Steel Co. v. Mountain State Construction Co., 445 U.S. 907, 909-910, 100 S.Ct. 1087, 1088-1089, 63 L.Ed.2d 325 (1980) (WHITE, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (collecting cases); Brewer, Jurisdiction in Single Contract Cases, 6 U.Ark. 2186 [21] In this case, no physical ties to Florida can be attributed to Rudzewicz other than MacShara's brief training course in Miami. [FN22] Rudzewicz did not maintain offices in Florida and, for all that appears from the record, has never even visited there. Yet this franchise dispute grew directly out of "a contract which had a substantial connection with that State." McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201 (emphasis added). Eschewing the option of operating an independent local enterprise, Rudzewicz deliberately "reach[ed] out beyond" Michigan and negotiated with a Florida corporation for the purchase of a long- term franchise and *480 the manifold benefits that would derive from affiliation with a nationwide organization. Travelers Health Assn. v. Virginia, 339 U.S., at 647, 70 S.Ct., at 929. Upon approval, he entered into a carefully structured 20-year relationship that envisioned continuing and wide-reaching contacts with Burger King in Florida. In light of Rudzewicz' voluntary acceptance of the long-term and exacting regulation of his business from Burger King's Miami headquarters, the "quality and nature" of his relationship to the company in Florida can in no sense be viewed as "random," "fortuitous," or "attenuated." Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S., at 253, 78 S.Ct., at 1239; Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 774, 104 S.Ct., at 1478; World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 299, 100 S.Ct., at 568. Rudzewicz' refusal to make the contractually required payments in Miami, and his continued use of Burger King's trademarks and confidential business information after his termination, caused foreseeable injuries to the corporation in Florida. For these reasons it was, at the very least, presumptively reasonable for Rudzewicz to be called to account there for such injuries.

FN22. The Eleventh Circuit held that MacShara's presence in Florida was irrelevant to the question of Rudzewicz's minimum contacts with that forum, reasoning that "Rudzewicz and MacShara never formed a partnership" and "signed the agreements in their individual capacities." 724 F.2d, at 1513, n. 14. The two did jointly form a corporation through which they were seeking to conduct the franchise, however. See n. 6, supra. They were required to decide which one of them would travel to Florida to satisfy the training requirements so that they could commence business, and Rudzewicz participated in the decision that MacShara would go there. We have previously noted that when commercial activities are "carried on in behalf of" an out-of-state party those activities may sometimes be ascribed to the party, International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320, 66 S.Ct. 154, 160, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945), at least where he is a "primary participan[t]" in the enterprise and has acted purposefully in directing those activities, Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S., at 790, 104 S.Ct., at 1487. Because MacShara's matriculation at Burger King University is not pivotal to the disposition of this case, we need not resolve the permissible bounds of such attribution.

The Court of Appeals concluded, however, that in light of the supervision emanating from Burger King's district office in Birmingham, Rudzewicz reasonably believed that "the Michigan office was for all intents and purposes the embodiment of Burger King" and that he therefore had no "reason to anticipate a Burger King suit outside of Michigan." 724 F.2d, at 1511. See also post, at 2190 (STEVENS, J., dissenting). This reasoning overlooks substantial record evidence indicating that Rudzewicz most certainly knew that he was affiliating himself with an enterprise based primarily in Florida. The contract documents themselves emphasize that Burger King's operations are conducted and supervised from the Miami headquarters, that all relevant notices and payments must be sent there, and that the agreements were made in and enforced from Miami. See n. 5, supra. Moreover, the parties' actual course of dealing repeatedly confirmed that decisionmaking authority was vested in the Miami headquarters *481 and that the district office served largely as an intermediate link between the headquarters and the franchisees. When problems arose over building design, site-development fees, rent computation, and the defaulted payments, Rudzewicz and MacShara learned that the Michigan office was powerless to resolve their disputes and 2187 could only channel their communications to Miami. Throughout these disputes, the Miami headquarters and the Michigan franchisees carried on a continuous course of direct communications by mail and by telephone, and it was the Miami headquarters that made the key negotiating decisions out of which the instant litigation arose. See nn. 7, 9, supra.

[22][23] Moreover, we believe the Court of Appeals gave insufficient weight to provisions in the various franchise documents providing that all disputes would be governed by Florida law. The franchise agreement, for example, stated:

> "This Agreement shall become valid when executed and accepted by BKC at Miami, Florida; it shall be deemed made and entered into in the State of Florida and shall be governed and construed under and in accordance with the laws of the State of Florida. The choice of law designation does not require that all suits concerning this Agreement be filed in Florida." App. 72.

See also n. 5, supra. The Court of Appeals reasoned that choice-of-law provisions are irrelevant to the question of personal jurisdiction, relying on

Hanson v. Denckla for the proposition that "the center of gravity for choice-of-law purposes does not necessarily confer the sovereign prerogative to assert jurisdiction." 724 F.2d, at 1511-1512, n. 10, citing 357 U.S., at 254, 78 S.Ct., at 1240. This reasoning misperceives the import of the quoted proposition. The Court in Hanson and subsequent cases has emphasized that choice-of-law analysis --which focuses on all elements of a transaction, and not simply on the defendant's conduct--is distinct from minimum-contacts jurisdictional analysis--which focuses at the threshold *482 solely on the defendant's purposeful connection to the forum. [FN23] Nothing in our cases, however, suggests that a choice-of-law provision should be ignored in considering whether a defendant has "purposefully invoked the benefits and protections of a State's laws" for jurisdictional purposes. Although such a provision standing alone would be insufficient to confer jurisdiction, we believe that, when combined with the 20-year interdependent relationship Rudzewicz established with Burger King's Miami headquarters, it reinforced his deliberate affiliation with the forum State and the reasonable foreseeability of possible litigation there. As Judge Johnson argued in his dissent below, Rudzewicz "purposefully availed himself of the benefits and protections of Florida's laws" by entering into contracts expressly providing that those laws would govern franchise disputes. 724 F.2d, at 1513. [FN24]

FN23. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S., at 253-254, 78 S.Ct., at 1239- 1240. See also Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 778, 104 S.Ct., at 1480; Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 98, 98 S.Ct., at 1700; Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S., at 215, 97 S.Ct., at 2585.

FN24. In addition, the franchise agreement's disclaimer that the "choice of law designation does not require that all suits concerning this Agreement be filed in Florida," App. 72 (emphasis added), reasonably should have suggested to Rudzewicz that by negative implication such suits could be filed there.
The lease also provided for binding arbitration in Miami of certain condemnation disputes, id., at 113, and Rudzewicz conceded the validity of this provision at oral argument, Tr. of Oral Arg. 37. Although it does not govern the instant dispute, this provision also should have made it apparent to the franchisees that they were dealing directly with the Miami headquarters and that the Birmingham district office was not "for all intents and purposes the embodiment of Burger King." 724 F.2d, at 1511.

[24][25] Nor has Rudzewicz pointed to other factors that can be said persuasively to outweigh the considerations discussed above and to establish the unconstitutionality of Florida's assertion of jurisdiction. We cannot conclude that Florida had no "legitimate interest in holding [Rudzewicz] answerable *483 on a claim related to" the contacts he had established in that State. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 776, 104 S.Ct., at 1479; see also 2188*McGee v. International Life Insurance Co.*, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201 (noting that State frequently will have a "manifest interest in providing effective means of redress for its residents"). [FN25] Moreover, although Rudzewicz has argued at some length that Michigan's Franchise Investment Law, Mich.Comp.Laws § 445.1501 et seq. (1979), governs many aspects of this franchise relationship, he has not demonstrated how Michigan's acknowledged interest might possibly render jurisdiction in Florida unconstitutional. [FN26] Finally, the Court of Appeals' assertion that the Florida litigation "severely impaired [Rudzewicz'] ability to call Michigan witnesses who might be essential to his defense and counterclaim," 724 F.2d, at 1512-1513, is wholly without support in the record. [FN27] And even to the extent that it is inconvenient *484 for a party who has minimum contacts with a forum to litigate there, such considerations most frequently can be accommodated through a change of venue. See n. 20, supra. Although the Court has suggested that inconvenience may at some point become so substantial as to achieve constitutional magnitude, McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201, this is not such a case.

FN25. Complaining that "when Burger King is the plaintiff, you won't 'have it your way' because it sues all franchisees in Miami," Brief for Appellee 19, Rudzewicz contends that Florida's interest in providing a convenient forum is negligible given the company's size and ability to conduct litigation anywhere in the country. We disagree. Absent compelling considerations, cf. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201, a defendant who has purposefully derived commercial benefit from his affiliations in a forum may not defeat jurisdiction there simply because of his adversary's greater net wealth.

FN26. Rudzewicz has failed to show how the District Court's exercise of jurisdiction in this case might have been at all inconsistent with Michigan's interests. To the contrary, the court found that Burger King had fully complied with Michigan law, App. 159, and there is nothing in Michigan's franchise Act suggesting that Michigan would attempt to assert exclusive jurisdiction to resolve franchise disputes affecting its residents. In any event, minimum-contacts analysis presupposes that two or more States may be interested in the outcome of a dispute, and the process of resolving potentially conflicting "fundamental substantive social policies," World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 292, 100 S.Ct., at 564, can usually be accommodated through choice-of-law rules rather than through outright preclusion of jurisdiction in one forum. See n. 19, supra.

FN27. The only arguable instance of trial inconvenience occurred when Rudzewicz had difficulty in authenticating some corporate records; the court offered him as much time as would be necessary to secure the requisite authentication from the Birmingham district office, and Burger King ultimately stipulated to their authenticity rather than delay the trial. See 7 Record 574-575, 578-579, 582, 598-599.

[26] The Court of Appeals also concluded, however, that the parties' dealings involved "a characteristic disparity of bargaining power" and "elements of surprise," and that Rudzewicz "lacked fair notice" of the potential for litigation in Florida because the contractual provisions suggesting to the contrary were merely "boilerplate declarations in a lengthy printed contract." 724 F.2d, at 1511-1512, and n. 10. See also post, at 2190 (STEVENS, J., dissenting). Rudzewicz presented many of these arguments to the District Court, contending that Burger King was guilty of misrepresentation, fraud, and duress; that it gave insufficient notice in its dealings with him; and that the contract was one of adhesion. See 4 Record 687-691. After a 3-day bench trial, the District Court found that Burger King had made no misrepresentations, that Rudzewicz and MacShara "were and are experienced and sophisticated businessmen," and that "at no time" did they "ac [t] under economic duress or disadvantage imposed by" Burger King. App. 157- 158. See also 7 Record 648-649. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52(a) requires that "[f]indings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous," and neither Rudzewicz nor the Court of Appeals has pointed to record evidence that would support a "definite and firm conviction" that the District Court's findings are mistaken. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S.Ct. 525, 542, 92 L.Ed. 746 (1948). See also *485 2189 Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 573-576, 105 S.Ct. 1504, ----, 84 L.Ed.2d 518 (1985). To the contrary, Rudzewicz was represented by counsel throughout these complex transactions and, as Judge Johnson observed in dissent below, was himself an experienced accountant "who for five months conducted negotiations with Burger King over the terms of the franchise and lease agreements, and who obligated himself personally to contracts requiring over time payments that exceeded $1 million." 724 F.2d, at 1514. Rudzewicz was able to secure a modest reduction in rent and other concessions from Miami headquarters, see nn. 8, 9, supra; moreover, to the extent that Burger King's terms were inflexible, Rudzewicz presumably decided that the advantages of affiliating with a national organization provided sufficient commercial benefits to offset the detriments. [FN28]

FN28. We do not mean to suggest that the jurisdictional outcome will always be the same in franchise cases. Some franchises may be primarily intrastate in character or involve different decisionmaking structures, such that a franchisee should not reasonably anticipate out-of-state litigation. Moreover, commentators have argued that franchise relationships may sometimes involve unfair business practices in their inception and operation. See H. Brown, Franchising Realities and Remedies 4-5 (2d ed. 1978). For these reasons, we reject Burger King's suggestion for "a general rule, or at least a presumption, that participation in an interstate franchise relationship" represents consent to the jurisdiction of the franchisor's principal place of business. Brief for Appellant 46.

III

[27] Notwithstanding these considerations, the Court of Appeals apparently believed that it was necessary to reject jurisdiction in this case as a prophylactic measure, reasoning that an affirmance of the District Court's judgment would result in the exercise of jurisdiction over "out-of-state consumers to collect payments due on modest personal purchases" and would "sow the seeds of default judgments against franchisees owing smaller debts." 724 F.2d, at 1511. We share the Court of Appeals' broader concerns and therefore reject any talismanic jurisdictional formulas; "the *486 facts of each case must [always] be weighed" in determining whether personal jurisdiction would comport with "fair play and substantial justice." Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 92, 98 S.Ct., at 1696-1697. [FN29] The "quality and nature" of an interstate transaction may sometimes be so "random," "fortuitous," or "attenuated" [FN30] that it cannot fairly be said that the potential defendant "should reasonably anticipate being haled into court" in another jurisdiction. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567; see also n. 18, supra. We also have emphasized that jurisdiction may not be grounded on a contract whose terms have been obtained through "fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power" and whose application would render litigation "so gravely difficult and inconvenient that [a party] will for all practical purposes be deprived of his day in court." The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S., at 12, 18, 92 S.Ct., at 1914, 1917. Cf. Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67, 94-96, 92 S.Ct. 1983, 2001-2002, 32 L.Ed.2d 556 (1972); National Equipment Rental, Ltd. v. Szukhent, 375 U.S. 311, 329, 84 S.Ct. 411, 421, 11 L.Ed.2d 354 (1964) (BLACK, J., dissenting) (jurisdictional rules may not be employed against small consumers so as to "crippl[e] their defense"). Just as the Due Process Clause allows flexibility in ensuring that commercial actors are not effectively 2190 "judgment proof" for the consequences of obligations they voluntarily assume in other States, McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201, so too does it prevent rules that would unfairly enable them to obtain default judgments against unwitting customers. Cf. United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41, 44, 73 S.Ct. 543, 545, 97 L.Ed. 770 (1953) (courts must not be " 'blind' " to what " '[a]ll others can see and understand' ").

FN29. This approach does, of course, preclude clear-cut jurisdictional rules. But any inquiry into "fair play and substantial justice" necessarily requires determinations "in which few answers will be written 'in black and white. The greys are dominant and even among them the shades are innumerable.' " Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 92, 98 S.Ct., at 1697.

FN30. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S., at 253, 78 S.Ct., at 1239; Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 774, 104 S.Ct., at 1478; World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 299, 100 S.Ct., at 568.

*487 For the reasons set forth above, however, these dangers are not present in the instant case. Because Rudzewicz established a substantial and continuing relationship with Burger King's Miami headquarters, received fair notice from the contract documents and the course of dealing that he might be subject to suit in Florida, and has failed to demonstrate how jurisdiction in that forum would otherwise be fundamentally unfair, we conclude that the District Court's exercise of jurisdiction pursuant to Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984) did not offend due process. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is accordingly reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Justice POWELL took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Justice STEVENS, with whom Justice WHITE joins, dissenting.

In my opinion there is a significant element of unfairness in requiring a franchisee to defend a case of this kind in the forum chosen by the franchisor. It is undisputed that appellee maintained no place of business in Florida, that he had no employees in that State, and that he was not licensed to do business there. Appellee did not prepare his French fries, shakes, and hamburgers in Michigan, and then deliver them into the stream of commerce "with the expectation that they [would] be purchased by consumers in" Florida. Ante, at 2182. To the contrary, appellee did business only in Michigan, his business, property, and payroll taxes were payable in that State, and he sold all of his products there.

Throughout the business relationship, appellee's principal contacts with appellant were with its Michigan office. Notwithstanding its disclaimer, ante, at 2185, the Court seems ultimately to rely on nothing more than standard boilerplate language contained in various documents, ante, at 2187, *488 to establish that appellee " 'purposefully availed himself of the benefits and protections of Florida's laws.' " Id., at 2187. Such superficial analysis creates a potential for unfairness not only in negotiations between franchisors and their franchisees but, more significantly, in the resolution of the disputes that inevitably arise from time to time in such relationships.

Judge Vance's opinion for the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit adequately explains why I would affirm the judgment of that court. I particularly find the following more persuasive than what this Court has written today:

"Nothing in the course of negotiations gave Rudzewicz reason to anticipate a Burger King suit outside of Michigan. The only face-to-face or even oral contact Rudzewicz had with Burger King throughout months of protracted negotiations was with representatives of the Michigan office. Burger King had the Michigan office interview Rudzewicz and MacShara, appraise their application, discuss price terms, recommend the site which the defendants finally agreed to, and attend the final closing ceremony. There is no evidence that Rudzewicz ever negotiated with anyone in Miami or even sent mail there during negotiations. He maintained no staff in the state of Florida, and as far as the record reveals, he has never even visited the state.

"The contracts contemplated the startup of a local Michigan restaurant whose profits would derive solely from food sales made to customers in Drayton Plains. The sale, which involved the use of an intangible trademark in Michigan and occupancy of a Burger King facility 2191 there, required no performance in the state of Florida. Under the contract, the local Michigan district office was responsible for providing all of the services due Rudzewicz, including advertising and management consultation. Supervision, moreover, emanated from that office alone. To Rudzewicz, the Michigan office was for all intents and purposes the embodiment *489 of Burger King. He had reason to believe that his working relationship with Burger King began and ended in Michigan, not at the distant and anonymous Florida headquarters.... "Given that the office in Rudzewicz' home state conducted all of the negotiations and wholly supervised the contract, we believe that he had reason to assume that the state of the supervisory office would be the same state in which Burger King would file suit. Rudzewicz lacked fair notice that the distant corporate headquarters which insulated itself from direct dealings with him would later seek to assert jurisdiction over him in the courts of its own home state....

"Just as Rudzewicz lacked notice of the possibility of suit in Florida, he was financially unprepared to meet its added costs. The franchise relationship in particular is fraught with potential for financial surprise. The device of the franchise gives local retailers the access to national trademark recognition which enables them to compete with better-financed, more efficient chain stores. This national affiliation, however, does not alter the fact that the typical franchise store is a local concern serving at best a neighborhood or community. Neither the revenues of a local business nor the geographical range of its market prepares the average franchise owner for the cost of distant litigation....

"The particular distribution of bargaining power in the franchise relationship further impairs the franchisee's financial preparedness. In a franchise contract, 'the franchisor normally occupies [the] dominant role'.... "We discern a characteristic disparity of bargaining power in the facts of this case. There is no indication that Rudzewicz had any latitude to negotiate a reduced rent or franchise fee in exchange for the added risk of suit in Florida. He signed a standard form contract whose terms were non- negotiable and which appeared *490 in some respects to vary from the more favorable terms agreed to in earlier discussions. In fact, the final contract required a minimum monthly rent computed on a base far in excess of that discussed in oral negotiations. Burger King resisted price concessions, only to sue Rudzewicz far from home. In doing so, it severely impaired his ability to call Michigan witnesses who might be essential to his defense and counterclaim. "In sum, we hold that the circumstances of the Drayton Plains franchise and the negotiations which led to it left Rudzewicz bereft of reasonable notice and financially unprepared for the prospect of franchise litigation in Florida. Jurisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process." 724 F.2d 1505, 1511-1513 (1984) (footnotes omitted).

Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

156 *311 Appeal from the Supreme Court of the State of Washington.

Mr. Henry C. Lowenhaupt, of St. Louis Mo., for appellant.

Mr. George W. Wilkins, of Olympia, Wash., for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice STONE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The questions for decision are (1) whether, within the limitations of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, appellant, a Delaware corporation, has by its activities in the State of Washington rendered itself amenable to proceedings in the courts of that state to recover unpaid contributions to the state unemployment compensation fund exacted by state statutes, Washington Unemployment Compensation Act, Washington Revised Statutes, s 9998--103a through s 9998--123a, 1941 Supp., and (2) whether the state can exact those contributions consistently with the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The statutes in question set up a comprehensive scheme of unemployment compensation, the costs of which are defrayed by contributions required to be made by employers to a state unemployment compensation fund. *312 The contributions are a specified percentage of the wages payable annually by each employer for his employees' services in the state. The assessment and collection of the contributions and the fund are administered by respondents. Section 14(c) of the Act, Wash.Rev.Stat. 1941 Supp., s 9998--114c, authorizes respondent Commissioner to issue an order and notice of assessment of delinquent contributions upon prescribed personal service of the notice upon the employer if found within the state, or, if not so found, by mailing the notice to the employer by registered mail at his last known address. That section also authorizes the Commissioner to collect the assessment by distraint if it is not paid within ten days after service of the notice. By ss 14(e) and 6(b) the order of assessment may be administratively reviewed by an appeal tribunal within the office of unemployment upon petition of the employer, and this determination is by s 6(i) made subject to judicial review on questions of law by the state Superior Court, with further right of appeal in the state Supreme Court as in other civil cases.

In this case notice of assessment for the years in question was personally served upon a sales solicitor employed by appellant in the State of Washington, and a copy of the notice was mailed by registered mail to appellant at its address in St. Louis, Missouri. Appellant appeared specially before the office of unemployment and moved to set aside the order and notice of assessment on the ground that the service upon appellant's salesman was not proper service upon appellant; that appellant was not a corporation of the State of Washington and was not doing business within the state; that it had no agent within the state upon whom service could be made; and that appellant is not an employer and does not furnish employment within the meaning of the statute.

The motion was heard on evidence and a stipulation of facts by the appeal tribunal which denied the motion *313 and ruled that respondent Commissioner was entitled to recover the unpaid contributions. That action 157 was affirmed by the Commissioner; both the Superior Court and the Supreme Court affirmed. 154 P.2d 801. Appellant in each of these courts assailed the statute as applied, as a violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and as imposing a constitutionally prohibited burden on interstate commerce. The cause comes here on appeal under s 237(a) of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C. s 344(a), 28 U.S.C.A. s 344(a), appellant assigning as error that the challenged statutes as applied infringe the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and the commerce clause.

The facts as found by the appeal tribunal and accepted by the state Superior Court and Supreme Court, are not in dispute. Appellant is a Delaware corporation, having its principal place of business in St. Louis, Missouri, and is engaged in the manufacture and sale of shoes and other footwear. It maintains places of business in several states, other than Washington, at which its manufacturing is carried on and from which its merchandise is distributed interstate through several sales units or branches located outside the State of Washington.

Appellant has no office in Washington and makes no contracts either for sale or purchase of merchandise there. It maintains no stock of merchandise in that state and makes there no deliveries of goods in intrastate commerce. During the years from 1937 to 1940, now in question, appellant employed eleven to thirteen salesmen under direct supervision and control of sales managers located in St. Louis. These salesmen resided in Washington; their principal activities were confined to that state; and they were compensated by commissions based upon the amount of their sales. The commissions for each year totaled more than $31,000. Appellant supplies its salesmen with a line of samples, each consisting of one shoe of a pair, which *314 they display to prospective purchasers. On occasion they rent permanent sample rooms, for exhibiting samples, in business buildings, or rent rooms in hotels or business buildings temporarily for that purpose. The cost of such rentals is reimbursed by appellant.

The authority of the salesmen is limited to exhibiting their samples and soliciting orders from prospective buyers, at prices and on terms fixed by appellant. The salesmen transmit the orders to appellant's office in St. Louis for acceptance or rejection, and when accepted the merchandise for filling the orders is shipped f.o.b. from points outside Washington to the purchasers within the state. All the merchandise shipped into Washington is invoiced at the place of shipment from which collections are made. No salesman has authority to enter into contracts or to make collections.

The Supreme Court of Washington was of opinion that the regular and systematic solicitation of orders in the state by appellant's salesmen, resulting in a continuous flow of appellant's product into the state, was sufficient to constitute doing business in the state so as to make appellant amenable to suit in its courts. But it was also of opinion that there were sufficient additional activities shown to bring the case within the rule frequently stated, that solicitation within a state by the agents of a foreign corporation plus some additional activities there are sufficient to render the corporation amenable to suit brought in the courts of the state to enforce an obligation arising out of its activities there. International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U.S. 579, 587, 34 S.Ct. 944, 946, 58 L.Ed. 1479; People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 246 U.S. 79, 87, 38 S.Ct. 233, 235, 62 L.Ed. 587, Ann.Cas.1918C, 537; Frene v. Louisville Cement Co., 77 U.S.App.D.C. 129, 134 F.2d 511, 516, 146 A.L.R. 926. The court found such additional activities in the salesmen's display of samples sometimes in permanent display rooms, and the salesmen's residence within the state, continued over a period of years, all resulting in a *315 substantial volume of merchandise regularly shipped by appellant to purchasers within the state. The court also held that the statute as applied did not invade the constitutional power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce and did not impose a prohibited burden on such commerce.

[1][2] Appellant's argument, renewed here, that the statute imposes an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce need not detain us. For 53 Stat. 1391, 26 U.S.C. s 1606(a), 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, s 1606(a), provides that 'No person required under a State law to make payments to an unemployment fund shall be 158 relieved from compliance therewith on the ground that he is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or that the State law does not distinguish between employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce and those engaged in intrastate commerce.' It is no longer debatable that Congress, in the exercise of the commerce power, may authorize the states, in specified ways, to regulate interstate commerce or impose burdens upon it. Kentucky Whip & Collar Co. v. Illinois Central R. Co., 299 U.S. 334, 57 S.Ct. 277, 81 L.Ed. 270; Perkins v. Pennsylvania, 314 U.S. 586, 62 S.Ct. 484, 86 L.Ed. 473; Standard Dredging Corp. v. Murphy, 319 U.S. 306, 308, 63 S.Ct. 1067, 1068, 87 L.Ed. 1416; Hooven & Allison v. Evatt, 324 U.S. 652, 679, 65 S.Ct. 870, 883; Southern Pacific Co. v. Arizona, 325 U.S. 761, 769, 65 S.Ct. 1515, 1520.

Appellant also insists that its activities within the state were not sufficient to manifest its 'presence' there and that in its absence the state courts were without jurisdiction, that consequently it was a denial of due process for the state to subject appellant to suit. It refers to those cases in which it was said that the mere solicitation of orders for the purchase of goods within a state, to be accepted without the state and filled by shipment of the purchased goods interstate, does not render the corporation seller amenable to suit within the state. See Green v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., 205 U.S. 530, 533, 27 S.Ct. 595, 596, 51 L.Ed. 916; International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, supra, 234 U.S. 586, 587, 34 S.Ct. 946, 58 L.Ed. 1479; Philadelphia & Reading R. Co. v. McKibbin, 243 U.S. 264, 268, 37 S.Ct. 280, 61 L.Ed. 710; People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., supra, 246 U.S. 87, 38 S.Ct. 235, 62 L.Ed. 587, Ann.Cas.1918C, 537. *316 And appellant further argues that since it was not present within the state, it is a denial of due process to subject it to taxation or other money exaction. It thus denies the power of the state to lay the tax or to subject appellant to a suit for its collection.

judgment in personam is grounded on their de facto power over the defendant's person. Hence his presence within the territorial jurisdiction of court was prerequisite to its rendition of a judgment personally binding him. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 733, 24 L.Ed. 565. But now that the capias ad respondendum has given way to personal service of summons or other form of notice, due process requires only that in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam, if he be not present within the territory of the forum, he have certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463, 61 S.Ct. 339, 343, 85 L.Ed. 278, 132 A.L.R. 1357. See Holmes, J., in McDonald v. Mabee, 243 U.S. 90, 91, 37 S.Ct. 343, 61 L.Ed. 608, L.R.A.1917F, 458. Compare Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 316, 319, 63 S.Ct. 602, 604, 606, 87 L.Ed. 777, 145 A.L.R. 1113. See Blackmer v. United States, 284 U.S. 421, 52 S.Ct. 252, 76 L.Ed. 375; Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 352, 47 S.Ct. 632, 71 L.Ed. 1091; Young v. Masci, 289 U.S. 253, 53 S.Ct. 599, 77 L.Ed. 1158, 88 A.L.R. 170.

[4][5] Since the corporate personality is a fiction, although a fiction intended to be acted upon as though it were a fact, Klein v. Board of Tax Supervisors, 282 U.S. 19, 24, 51 S.Ct. 15, 16, 75 L.Ed. 140, 73 A.L.R. 679, it is clear that unlike an individual its 'presence' without, as well as within, the state of its origin can be manifested only by activities carried on in its behalf by those who are authorized to act for it. To say that the corporation is so far 'present' there as to satisfy due process requirements, for purposes of taxation or the maintenance of suits against it in the courts of the state, is to beg the question to be decided. For the terms 'present' or 'presence' are *317 used merely to symbolize those activities of the corporation's agent within the state which courts will deem to be sufficient to satisfy the demands of due process. L. Hand, J., in Hutchinson v. Chase & Gilbert, 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 139, 141. Those demands may be met by such contacts of the corporation with the state of the forum as make it reasonable, in the context of our federal system of government, to require the corporation to defend the particular suit which is brought there. An 'estimate of the inconveniences' which would result to the corporation from a trial away from its 'home' or principal place of business is relevant in this connection. Hutchinson v. Chase & Gilbert, supra, 45 F.2d 141.

159 [6][7] 'Presence' in the state in this sense has never been doubted when the activities of the corporation there have not only been continuous and systematic, but also give rise to the liabilities sued on, even though no consent to be sued or authorization to an agent to accept service of process has been given. St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U.S. 350, 355, 1 S.Ct. 354, 359, 27 L.Ed. 222; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U.S. 602, 610, 611, 19 S.Ct. 308, 311, 312, 43 L.Ed. 569; Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 197 U.S. 407, 414, 415, 25 S.Ct. 483, 484, 485, 49 L.Ed. 810; Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, 213 U.S. 245, 255, 256, 29 S.Ct. 445, 448, 53 L.Ed. 782; International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, supra; cf. St. Louis S.W.R. Co. v. Alexander, 227 U.S. 218, 33 S.Ct. 245, 57 L.Ed. 486, Ann.Cas.1915B, 77. Conversely it has been generally recognized that the casual presence of the corporate agent or even his conduct of single or isolated items of activities in a state in the corporation's behalf are not enough to subject it to suit on causes of action unconnected with the activities there. St. Clair v. Cox, supra, 106 U.S. 359, 360, 1 S.Ct. 362, 363, 27 L.Ed. 222; Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U.S. 8, 21, 27 S.Ct. 236, 240, 51 L.Ed. 345; Frene v. Louisville Cement Co., supra, 77 U.S.App.D.C. 133, 134 F.2d 515, 146 A.L.R. 926, and cases cited. To require the corporation in such circumstances to defend the suit away from its home or other jurisdiction where it carries on more substantial activities has been thought to lay too great and unreasonable a burden on the corporation to comport with due process.

*318 While it has been held in cases on which appellant relies that continuous activity of some sorts within a state is not enough to support the demand that the corporation be amenable to suits unrelated to that activity, Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, supra; Green v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., supra; Simon v. Southern R. Co., 236 U.S. 115, 35 S.Ct. 255, 59 L.Ed. 492; People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., supra; cf. Davis v. Farmers' Co-operative Equity Co., 262 U.S. 312, 317, 43 S.Ct. 556, 558, 67 L.Ed. 996, there have been instances in which the continuous corporate operations within a state were thought so substantial and of such a nature as to justify suit against it on causes of action arising from dealings entirely distinct from those activities. See Missouri, K. & T.R. Co. v. Reynolds, 255 U.S. 565, 41 S.Ct. 446, 65 L.Ed. 788; Tauza v. Susquehanna Coal Co., 220 N.Y. 259, 115 N.E. 915; cf. St. Louis S.W.R. Co. v. Alexander, supra.

or occasional acts of the corporate agent in a state sufficient to impose an obligation or liability on the corporation has not been thought to confer upon the state authority to enforce it, Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, 43 S.Ct. 170, 67 L.Ed. 372, other such acts, because of their nature and quality and the circumstances of their commission, may be deemed sufficient to render the corporation liable to suit. Cf. Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U.S. 160, 37 S.Ct. 30, 61 L.Ed. 222; Hess v. Pawloski, supra; Young v. Masci, supra. True, some of the decisions holding the corporation amenable to suit have been supported by resort to the legal fiction that it has given its consent to service and suit, consent being implied from its presence in the state through the acts of its authorized agents. Lafayette Insurance Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 407, 15 L.Ed. 451; St. Clair v. Cox, supra, 106 U.S. 356, 1 S.Ct. 359, 27 L.Ed. 222; Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, supra, 213 U.S. 254, 29 S.Ct. 447, 53 L.Ed. 782; State of Washington v. Superior Court, 289 U.S. 361, 364, 365, 53 S.Ct. 624, 626, 627, 77 L.Ed. 1256, 89 A.L.R. 653. But more realistically it may be said that those authorized acts were of such a nature as to justify the fiction. Smolik v. Philadelphia & R.C. & I. Co., D.C., 222 F. 148, 151. *319 Henderson, The Position of Foreign Corporations in American Constitutional Law, 94, 95.

[9][10] It is evident that the criteria by which we mark the boundary line between those activities which justify the subjection of a corporation to suit, and those which do not, cannot be simply mechanical or quantitative. The test is not merely, as has sometimes been suggested, whether the activity, which the corporation has seen fit to procure through its agents in another state, is a little more or a little less. St. Louis S.W.R. Co. v. Alexander, supra, 227 U.S. 228, 16033 S.Ct. 248, 57 L.Ed. 486, Ann.Cas.1915B, 77; International Harvestor Co. v. Kentucky, supra, 234 U.S. 587, 34 S.Ct. 946, 58 L.Ed. 1479. Whether due process is satisfied must depend rather upon the quality and nature of the activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure. That clause does not contemplate that a state may make binding a judgment in personam against an individual or corporate defendant with which the state has no contacts, ties, or relations. Cf. Pennoyer v. Neff, supra; Minnesota Commercial Men's Ass'n v. Benn, 261 U.S. 140, 43 S.Ct. 293, 67 L.Ed. 573.

[11] But to the extent that a corporation exercises the privilege of conducting activities within a state, it enjoys the benefits and protection of the laws of that state. The exercise of that privilege may give rise to obligations; and, so far as those obligations arise out of or are connected with the activities within the state, a procedure which requires the corporation to respond to a suit brought to enforce them can, in most instances, hardly be said to be undue. Compare International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, supra, with Green v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., supra, and People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., supra. Compare Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, supra, 172 U.S. 619, 620, 19 S.Ct. 314, 315, 43 L.Ed. 569, and Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, supra, with Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, supra. See 29 Columbia Law Review, 187-195.

[12] *320 Applying these standards, the activities carried on in behalf of appellant in the State of Washington were neither irregular nor casual. They were systematic and continuous throughout the years in question. They resulted in a large volume of interstate business, in the course of which appellant received the benefits and protection of the laws of the state, including the right to resort to the courts for the enforcement of its rights. The obligation which is here sued upon arose out of those very activities. It is evident that these operations establish sufficient contacts or ties with the state of the forum to make it reasonable and just according to our traditional conception of fair play and substantial justice to permit the state to enforce the obligations which appellant has incurred there. Hence we cannot say that the maintenance of the present suit in the State of Washington involves an unreasonable or undue procedure.

[13][14][15] We are likewise unable to conclude that the service of the process within the state upon an agent whose activities establish appellant's 'presence' there was not sufficient notice of the suit, or that the suit was so unrelated to those activities as to make the agent an inappropriate vehicle for communicating the notice. It is enough that appellant has established such contacts with the state that the particular form of substituted service adopted there gives reasonable assurance that the notice will be actual. Knowles v. Gaslight & Coke Co., 19 Wall. 58, 61, 22 L.Ed. 70; McDonald v. Mabee, supra; Milliken v. Meyer, supra. Nor can we say that the mailing of the notice of suit to appellant by registered mail at its home office was not reasonably calculated to apprise appellant of the suit. Compare Hess v. Pawloski, supra, with McDonald v. Mabee, supra, 243 U.S. 92, 37 S.Ct. 344, 61 L.Ed. 608, L.R.A.1917F, 458, *321 and Wuchter v. Pizzutti, 276 U.S. 13, 19, 24, 48 S.Ct. 259, 260, 262, 72 L.Ed. 446, 57 A.L.R. 1230; cf. Bequet v. MacCarthy, 2 B. & Ad. 951; Maubourquet v. Wyse, 1 Ir.Rep.C.L. 471. See State of Washington v. Superior Court, supra, 289 U.S. 365, 53 S.Ct. 626, 77 L.Ed. 1256, 89 A.L.R. 653.

[16] Only a word need be said of appellant's liability for the demanded contributions of the state unemployment fund. The Supreme Court of Washington, construing and applying the statute, has held that it imposes a tax on the privilege of employing appellant's salesmen within the state measured by a percentage of the wages, here the commissions payable to the salesmen. This construction we accept for purposes of determining the constitutional validity of the statute. The right to employ labor has been 161 deemed an appropriate subject of taxation in this country and England, both before and since the adoption of the Constitution. Steward Machine Co. v. Davis, 301 U.S. 548, 579 et seq., 57 S.Ct. 883, 887 et seq., 81 L.Ed. 1279, 109 A.L.R. 1293. And such a tax imposed upon the employer for unemployment benefits is within the constitutional power of the states. Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., 301 U.S. 495, 508 et seq., 57 S.Ct. 868, 871 et seq., 81 L.Ed. 1245, 109 A.L.R. 1327.

Appellant having rendered itself amenable to suit upon obligations arising out of the activities of its salesmen in Washington, the state may maintain the present suit in personam to collect the tax laid upon the exercise of the privilege of employing appellant's salesmen within the state. For Washington has made one of those activities, which taken together establish appellant's 'presence' there for purposes of suit, the taxable event by which the state brings appellant within the reach of its taxing power. The state thus has constitutional power to lay the tax and to subject appellant to a suit to recover it. The activities which establish its 'presence' subject it alike to taxation by the state and to suit to recover the tax. Equitable Life Assur. Society v. Pennsylvania, 238 U.S. 143, 146, 35 S.Ct. 829, 830, 59 L.Ed. 1239; cf. International Harvester Co. v. Wisconsin Department of Taxation, 322 U.S. 435, 442 et seq., 64 S.Ct. 1060, 1064 et seq., 88 L.Ed. 1373; Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, supra, 318 U.S. 316--319, 63 S.Ct. 604--606, 87 L.Ed. 1722, 145 A.L.R. 113; *322 see General Trading Co. v. State Tax Com., 322 U.S. 335, 349, 64 S.Ct. 1028, 1030, 88 L.Ed. 1309, 1319.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice JACKSON took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Mr. Justice BLACK delivered the following opinion.

Congress, pursuant to its constitutional power to regulate commerce, has expressly provided that a State shall not be prohibited from levying the kind of unemployment compensation tax here challenged. 26 U.S.C. s 1606, 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, s 1606. We have twice decided that this Congressional consent is an adequate answer to a claim that imposition of the tax violates the Commerce Clause. Perkins v. Pennsylvania, 314 U.S. 586, 62 S.Ct. 484, 86 L.Ed. 473, affirming 342 Pa. 529, 21 A.2d 45; Standard Dredging Corp. v. Murphy, 319 U.S. 306, 308, 63 S.Ct. 1067, 1068, 87 L.Ed. 1416. Two determinations by this Court of an issue so palpably without merit are sufficient. Consequently that part of this appeal which again seeks to raise the question seems so patently frivolous as to make the case a fit candidate for dismissal. Fay v. Crozer, 217 U.S. 455, 30 S.Ct. 568, 54 L.Ed. 837. Nor is the further ground advanced on this appeal, that the State of Washington has denied appellant due process of law, any less devoid of substance. It is my view, therefore, that we should dismiss the appeal as unsubstantial, [FN1] Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Watson, 287 U.S. 86, 90, 92, 53 S.Ct. 32, 34, 35, 77 L.Ed. 180, 86 A.L.R. 174; and decline the invitation to formulate broad rules as to the meaning of due process, which here would amount to deciding a constitutional question 'in advance of the necessity for its decision.' Alabama State Federation of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 450, 461, 65 S.Ct. 1384, 1389, 89 L.Ed. 1725, 1734.

FN1 This Court has on several occasions pointed out the undesirable consequences of a failure to dismiss frivolous appeals. Salinger v. United States, 272 U.S. 542, 544, 47 S.Ct. 173, 174, 71 L.Ed. 398; United Surety Co. v. American Fruit Product Co., 238 U.S. 140, 35 S.Ct. 828, 59 L.Ed. 1238; De Beam v. L.Ed. 833.

*323 Certainly appellant can not in the light of our past decisions meritoriously claim that notice by registered mail and by personal service on its sales solicitors in Washington did not meet the requirements of procedural due process. And the due process clause is not brought in issue any more by appellant's further conceptualistic contention that Washington could not levy a tax or bring suit against the corporation because it did not honor that State with its mystical 'presence.' For it is unthinkable that the vague due process clause was ever intended to prohibit a State from regulating or taxing a business carried on within its boundaries simply because this is done by agents of a corporation organized and having its headquarters elsewhere. 162 To read this into the due process clause would in fact result in depriving a State's citizens of due process by taking from the State the power to protect them in their business dealings within its boundaries with representatives of a foreign corporation. Nothing could be more irrational or more designed to defeat the function of our federative system of government. Certainly a State, at the very least, has power to tax and sue those dealing with its citizens within its boundaries, as we have held before. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 63 S.Ct. 602, 87 L.Ed. 1722, 145 A.L.R. 1113. Were the Court to follow this principle, it would provide a workable standard for cases where, as here, no other questions are involved. The Court has not chosen to do so, but instead has engaged in an unnecessary discussion in the course of which it has announced vague Constitutional criteria applied for the first time to the issue before us. It has thus introduced uncertain elements confusing the simple pattern and tending to curtail the exercise of State powers to an extent not justified by the Constitution.

The criteria adopted insofar as they can be identified read as follows: Due process does permit State courts to 'enforce the obligations which appellant has incurred' if *324 it be found 'reasonable and just according to our traditional conception of fair play and substantial justice.' And this in turn means that we will 'permit' the State to act if upon 'an 'estimate of the inconveniences' which would result to the corporation from a trial away from its 'home' or principal place of business', we conclude that it is 'reasonable' to subject it to suit in a State where it is doing business.

It is true that this Court did use the terms 'fair play' and 'substantial justice' in explaining the philosophy underlying the holding that it could not be 'due process of law' to render a personal judgment against a defendant without notice to and an opportunity to be heard by him. Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 61 S.Ct. 339, 85 L.Ed. 278, 132 A.L.R. 1357. In McDonald v. Mabee, 243 U.S. 90, 91, 37 S.Ct. 343, 61 L.Ed. 608, L.R.A.1917F, 458, cited in the Milliken case, Mr. Justice Holmes speaking for the Court warned against judicial curtailment of this opportunity to be heard and referred to such a curtailment as a denial of 'fair play', which even the common law would have deemed 'contrary to natural justice.' And previous cases had indicated that the ancient rule against judgments without notice had stemmed from 'natural justice' concepts. These cases, while giving additional reasons why notice under particular circumstances is inadequate, did not mean thereby that all legislative enactments which this Court might deem to be contrary to natural justice ought to be held invalid under the due process clause. None of the cases purport to support or could support a holding that a State can tax and sue corporations only if its action comports with this Court's notions of 'natural justice.' I should have thought the Tenth Amendment settled that.

I believe that the Federal Constitution leaves to each State, without any 'ifs' or 'buts', a power to tax and to open the doors of its courts for its citizens to sue corporations whose agents do business in those States. Believing that the Constitution gave the States that power, I think it a judicial deprivation to condition its exercise upon this *325 Court's notion of 'fairplay', however appealing that term may be. Nor can I stretch the meaning of due process so far as to authorize this Court to deprive a State of the right to afford judicial protection to its citizens on the ground that it would be more 'convenient' for the corporation to be sued somewhere else.

There is a strong emotional appeal in the words 'fair play', 'justice', and 'reasonableness.' But they were not chosen by those who wrote the original Constitution or the Fourteenth Amendment as a measuring rod for this Court to use in invalidating State or Federal laws passed by elected legislative representatives. No one, not even those who most feared a democratic government, ever formally proposed that courts should be given power to invalidate legislation under any such elastic standards. Express prohibitions against certain types of legislation are found in the Constitution, and under the long settled practice, courts invalidate laws found to conflict with them. This requires interpretation, and interpretation, it is true, may result in extension of the Constitution's purpose. But that is no reason for reading the due process clause so as to restrict a State's power to tax and sue 163 those whose activities affect persons and businesses within the State, provided proper service can be had. Superimposing the natural justice concept on the Constitution's specific prohibitions could operate as a drastic abridgment of democratic safeguards they embody, such as freedom of speech, press and religion, [FN2] and the right to counsel. This *326 has already happened. Betts v. Brady, 316 U.S. 455, 62 S.Ct. 1252, 86 L.Ed. 1595. Compare Feldman v. United States, 322 U.S. 487, 494--503, 64 S.Ct. 1082, 1085--1089, 88 L.Ed. 1408, 154 A.L.R. 982. For application of this natural law concept, whether under the terms 'reasonableness', 'justice', or 'fair play', makes judges the supreme arbiters of the country's laws and practices. Polk Co. v. Glover, 305 U.S. 5, 17--18, 59 S.Ct. 15, 20, 21, 83 L.Ed. 6; Federal Power Commission v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co., 315 U.S. 575, 600, 62 S.Ct. 736, 750, 86 L.Ed. 1037, note 4. This result, I believe, alters the form of government our Constitution provides. I cannot agree.

> FN2 These First Amendment liberties--freedom of speech, press and religion--provide a graphic illustration of the potential restrictive capacity of a rule under which they are protected at a particular time only because the Court, as then constituted believes them to be a requirement of fundamental justice. Consequently, under the same rule, another Court, with a different belief as to fundamental justice, could at least as against State action, completely or partially withdraw Constitutional protection from these basic freedoms, just as though the First Amendment had never been written.

True, the State's power is here upheld. But the rule announced means that tomorrow's judgment may strike down a State or Federal enactment on the ground that it does not conform to this Court's idea of natural justice. I therefore find myself moved by the same fears that caused Mr. Justice Holmes to say in 1930:

'I have not yet adequately expressed the more than anxiety that I feel at the ever increasing scope given to the Fourteenth Amendment in cutting down what I believe to be the constitutional rights of the States. As the decisions now stand, I see hardly any limit but the sky to the invalidating of those rights if they happen to strike a majority of this Court as for any reason undesirable.' Baldwin v. Missouri, 281 U.S. 586, 595, 50 S.Ct. 436, 439, 74 L.Ed. 1056, 72 A.L.R. 1303.

United States Court of Appeals,
Fifth Circuit.

Stewart M. MANN, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
Dallas SMITH, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

Aug. 4, 1986.

Pretrial detainee at county jail brought civil rights action against county sheriff and deputy sheriff. The United States District Court for the Western District of Texas, Lucius D esta B unton, III, J., entered take nothing judgment in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The Court of Appeals, Patrick E. Higginbotham, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) county jail's policy of banning newspapers and magazines violated plaintiff's First Amendment rights, and (2) county jail's policy of limiting inmates' access to law books did not violate pretrial detainee's right of access to courts.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

*81 Stewart M. Mann pro se.

Patrick C. Appel, Baker & Botts, William J. Dyer, Houston, Tex., (Court Appointed--Not under Act), for plaintiff-appellant.

Mark H. Dettman, Midland, Tex., for defendants-appellees.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas.

Before GEE and HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judges, and HARVEY [FN*], Senior District Judge.

FN* District Judge of the Eastern District of Michigan, sitting by designation.

PATRICK E. HIGGINBOTHAM, Circuit Judge:

A pretrial detainee at a county jail was subjected to a general rule under which inmates were forbidden to receive newspapers and magazines. The proffered justification for this rule was a desire to reduce the threat of fires and clogged toilets. In view of the jail's policy of allowing inmates to possess other material that was flammable and capable of being used to interfere with the plumbing, we hold that the rule is too underinclusive to be upheld under the applicable first amendment test.

The plaintiff also claims that he was denied his constitutional right of access to the courts because jail officials refused to let him visit a law library while he was preparing this case. We conclude that the plaintiff in fact had meaningful access to the courts even though he was denied the use of a law library.

I

Stewart Mann was held on criminal charges in the Midland County (Texas) Jail for 98 days as a pretrial detainee. After pleading guilty to the charges, he was held an additional 13 days before being transferred to the Texas Department of Corrections. During this time, he chose to live in a small private cell because prisoners in larger, general-population cells sometimes had to sleep on mattresses on the floor. Mann complains that he was subjected to the following conditions by the defendants: [FN1]

FN1. Some of Mann's factual allegations were disputed at trial. He also pressed a number of other claims in the district court, but these have not been pursued on appeal.

(1) Pursuant to a general policy at the jail, he was denied access to newspapers and magazines.

(2) Although he was permitted to request that specific law books be brought to him at the jail, he was denied the opportunity to visit a law library and was not provided by the jail with personal assistance from persons trained in the law.

(3) He was seldom or never permitted to go outside his cell for physical exercise.

(4) Because of plumbing problems at the jail, he was deprived of access to hot water for some period of time.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(5) On one occasion, an unarmed guard expressed a desire to take Mann outside and murder him.

(6) In his complaint in this lawsuit, Mann alleged that a crime information computer in the jail building was being misused by other inmates. After being transferred to the state prison, the Midland County Sheriff's Department asked the warden of that institution to question Mann about his knowledge of the problem. The warden did so.

(7) Some inmates who worked as file clerks at the jail had access to files on other inmates.

Mann also complains (8) that the defendants' answers to his amended complaints in this lawsuit were identical to their answer to his original complaint; and (9) that the guilty plea he entered while he was living in the jail was coerced.

While at the county jail, Mann filed a pro se § 1983 complaint against the Midland County Sheriff and a Deputy Sheriff, in *82 which he asked for declaratory and injunctive relief. After being transferred to the state prison, he amended his complaint to ask for damages. Following discovery and other procedural preliminaries, the district court held a bench trial, concluded that Mann had not been deprived of any federally protected right, and entered a take-nothing judgment in favor of the defendants. Mann appealed, and this court ordered that an attorney be appointed to represent him.

II

[1] Mann's single meritorious argument is that the district court erred in concluding that the jail's policy of banning newspapers and magazines left his constitutional rights untouched. It is undisputed that the Midland County Jail had a policy that forbade inmates to receive or possess newspapers and magazines. The asserted justifications for this policy were that newspapers and magazines are fire hazards, and that they can be used to clog up the plumbing. It is also undisputed, however, that smoking by prisoners was banned; that the inmates were permitted to have softcover books; that writing paper and toilet paper were freely available; and that the inmates had sheets, blankets, pillows, and clothing that could be used to interfere with the plumbing.

[2] Mann contends that the jail's policy on newspapers and magazines violated his rights under the first and fourteenth amendments. Because it is unconstitutional to inflict deliberate punishment on pretrial detainees, it is necessary to distinguish such punishment from justifiable "regulatory restraints." Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535-37, 99 S.Ct. 1861, 1871-73, 60 L.Ed.2d 447 (1979). Absent an expressed punitive purpose, an intention to punish may nonetheless be imputed to jail officials if a disability imposed on an inmate is not "reasonably related to a legitimate governmental objective" or an "incident of a legitimate nonpunitive governmental objective." Id. at 538-39 & n. 20, 99 S.Ct. at 1874 & n. 20.

The defendants, who have not expressed an intention to punish Mann, assert that the purpose of the ban on newspapers and magazines is to prevent fires and clogged toilets. Because the jail has a no smoking rule for inmates and because the jailers permit the inmates to have other forms of paper and similar materials, the official rationale seems tenuous at best. Nevertheless, it is hard to deny that the rule might slightly reduce the possibility of fire and that it might remove some opportunities and temptations for the inmates to do mischief to the plumbing; furthermore, the jail's rule would rather obviously serve the convenience of the jailers by helping to keep trash from piling up in the inmates' living areas. Under the general test articulated in Bell v. Wolfish, which is designed to root out intentional punishment rather than self- serving inconsiderateness, we doubt that the jail's rule constitutes unconstitutional punishment.

We need not decide this question, however, because the ban on newspapers and magazines must be struck down under the first amendment [FN2] if it represents an "exaggerated response" by jail officials to the legitimate need to "preserve internal order and discipline and to maintain institutional security." Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. at 547-48, 99 S.Ct. at 1878-79. The patently underinclusive nature of the regulation strongly suggests that it is indeed an exaggerated response; certainly it contrasts with the carefully tailored restriction on hardbound books that was upheld in Bell v. Wolfish itself. Perhaps the jail officials who established this policy had some very important and legitimate purpose that could not be accomplished without denying the inmates access to newspapers and magazines. If so, the defendants' lawyers have not brought it to our attention, and we have not been able to imagine what it could have been.

FN2. The free speech clause of the first amendment operates against the states through the Supreme Court's construction of the fourteenth amendment's due process clause. See Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 666, 45 S.Ct. 625, 629, 69 L.Ed. 1138 (1925).

*83 The defendants seek to defend the regulation by noting that the jail provides the inmates in general-population cells (where Mann could have lived had he so chosen) with access to television, which the defendants contend is an adequate substitute for newspapers and magazines. They accordingly argue that the ban on certain printed materials is a legitimate "time, place, and manner" restriction. See, e.g., Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 115, 92 S.Ct. 2294, 2303, 33 L.Ed.2d 222 (1972). Whatever the intrinsic merits of television in comparison with newspapers and magazines, the contents of television are different from what one finds in the printed media. It is not up to the Midland County Sheriff or this court to decide that television can adequately serve the first amendment right to receive protected materials. [FN3] Rather, we must apply the principle that "a prison inmate retains those First Amendment rights that are not inconsistent with his status as a prisoner or with the legitimate penological objectives of the corrections system." Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 822, 94 S.Ct. 2800, 2804, 41 L.Ed.2d 495 (1974). Although jail officials may find it inconvenient to give inmates access to newspapers and magazines, the defendants have not suggested how such access is inconsistent with any legitimate jail function. Because it is undisputed that Mann sought to obtain newspapers and magazines while he was being held at the jail, we must conclude that Mann's constitutional rights were infringed by the jail's policy and reverse the judgment of the court below. [FN4]

FN3. On the first amendment right to receive information and ideas, see Kleindienst v. Mandel, 408 U.S. 753, 762-63, 92 S.Ct. 2576, 2581-82, 33 L.Ed.2d 683 (1972) (collecting cases).

FN4. In Kincaid v. Rusk, 670 F.2d 737 (7th Cir.1982), the court found a violation of the first amendment on facts that were similar to those in the present case.

[3] Mann also makes a colorable argument that his right of access to the courts was violated because the jail's "checkout" system for law books did not conform with the minimum standards prescribed by Bounds v. Smith, 430 U.S. 817, 97 S.Ct. 1491, 52 L.Ed.2d 72 (1977), and Morrow v. Harwell, 768 F.2d 619 (5th Cir.1985). Under Bounds, the government is obliged to provide prisoners wishing to make a constitutional claim in a civil rights complaint or habeas corpus petition "with adequate law libraries or adequate assistance from persons trained in the law." 430 U.S. at 828, 97 S.Ct. at 1498. In Morrow, we concluded that pretrial detainees, some of whom had been held for about the same length of time that Mann was held, had a right to more legal assistance than Mann was provided with. This strongly suggests that the Midland County Jail's policy on legal assistance for inmates was not what it should have been.

[4][5] Morrow, however, was a class action in which declaratory and injunctive relief was sought, while this is an individual suit brought by a person who is no longer being held at the Midland County Jail. Although Bounds held that prison authorities are required to provide inmates with certain assistance, it did not say that there is a constitutional right to such assistance. Rather, the Court spoke of a "constitutional right of access to the courts" and emphasized that "our main concern here is 'protecting the ability of an inmate to prepare a petition or complaint.' " 430 U.S. at 828 & n. 17, 97 S.Ct. at 1498 n. 17 (citation omitted) (emphasis added). The defendants point out that during the time Mann was in the county jail, he had access to an attorney, who had been appointed to represent him in connection with the criminal charges on which he was being held. The defendants argue that because Mann was represented by an attorney at the time in question, we should presume that he had available to him the minimal level of legal assistance required by Bounds. We agree that an inmate who has a lawyer and who wants to file a civil rights complaint has the burden of requesting assistance from that lawyer. This is not to say that the *84 lawyer is compelled to represent the inmate in the proposed civil rights action. It is only to acknowledge that attorneys can often rather easily give inmates the information that they need to proceed pro se, and that if they do so, unnecessary Bounds problems may be avoided. This reasoning, however, does not help the defendants in this case. Mann testified, without rebuttal, that he requested assistance from his court-appointed attorney, and that this request was refused: "[H]e told me himself he was restricted to those criminal charges, and he could not help me file lawsuits. And it was just as simple as that." We therefore cannot conclude that Mann's access to his court-appointed attorney was insufficient to satisfy the requirements of Bounds.

[6] There are other grounds, however, on which Mann's right-of-access argument must be rejected. Morrow concluded that the Bounds-created "right of access includes the ability to file a legally sufficient claim." 768 F.2d at 623 (citation omitted). As the court below pointed out to Mann:

> You were denied access to the law library. You were not denied access to the Courts, because obviously you are here. You have filed a lawsuit, you have had a trial.

It is true, of course, that the filing of a paper "that, without determination of whether it states a claim legally sufficient and within the court's jurisdiction, is subject to dismissal on grounds of convenience to court and litigants," would not by itself constitute meaningful access to the courts under Bounds. Bonner v. City of Prichard, 661 F.2d 1206, 1212 (11th Cir.1981) (en banc). But as the trial judge knew very well, and as we have confirmed by examining the record, Mann in fact filed a detailed civil complaint along with an affidavit in support of a request to proceed in forma pauperis. The IFP request was granted, and the court ordered that a copy of the complaint be served on each of the defendants. While Mann was still at the county jail, the defendants answered, the court ordered that discovery proceed, and Mann amended his complaint to state additional claims and to ask for additional relief. Mann himself proved in an irrefutable manner that he was able to file a legally sufficient complaint: by doing so. [FN5]

> FN5. Accord Hudson v. Robinson, 678 F.2d 462, 466 & n. 5 (3d Cir.1982) (holding that actual injury must be shown in order to make out a Bounds claim).

[7] Mann, however, contends that if the county jail had provided him with adequate legal assistance, he might also have been able to obtain a temporary restraining order against the unconstitutional condition to which he was being subjected. As we pointed out in Morrow, the principles stated in Bounds "suffer for lack of internal definition and prove far easier to state than to apply," perhaps because they have no clear textual footing in the Constitution. 768 F.2d at 623. Bounds is vague about exactly what kinds of claims by inmates trigger the "right of access" to the courts, how long a person must be detained before the right is triggered, and what level of legal assistance is required to protect the right. See Morrow, 768 F.2d at 622-23. This much, however, is clear: the Constitution does not require the government to provide inmates with attorneys to represent them in their civil actions, and Bounds cannot have meant to require legal assistance equivalent to the provision of a lawyer. Morrow held that the right of access under Bounds "includes the ability to file a legally sufficient claim." 768 F.2d at 623 (citation omitted). Extending the right this far is manageable in a case like the one before us because a court can examine the record and determine, as a threshold question, whether a legally sufficient claim was filed. To determine whether an individual's right of access to the courts was violated by a failure to provide him with the means of pursuing a temporary restraining order, or other emergency relief in equity, is a much more uncertain and problematic venture.

Perhaps the most obvious way to proceed would be to put ourselves in the shoes of a hypothetical trial judge faced with a hypothetical *85 motion for emergency relief and then try to guess how this hypothetical judge would have exercised his wide discretion in ruling on the hypothetical motion. We think that such an exercise would serve little purpose other than to dress up a judgment call by us in the formal clothes of legal reasoning. Better, we think, simply to examine the record and decide whether Stewart Mann had "meaningful access" to the U.S. District Court. We conclude that he did. Mann's IFP request, which was accompanied by a civil complaint that was technically more sophisticated than many complaints drawn up by licensed attorneys, was granted within nine days after it was filed. Mann's single meritorious claim was the first one listed on his complaint, and the defendants soon responded with an answer in which they admitted the facts that formed the basis for that claim. Thus, the exact nature of Mann's one valid claim, as well as his pro se status, was before the district judge in a clear form from the very beginning, and the judge handled the case in an appropriately expeditious manner. [FN6] We have no reason to assume that the district judge would have handled this case differently had he been given a paper that was styled as a motion for a temporary restraining order. Accordingly, we conclude that Mann had meaningful access to the courts, and we affirm the rejection of his Bounds claim.

> FN6. Only eight days after the defendants' answer was filed, Mann was transferred out of the jail to the state prison, and it seems quite unlikely that a hearing would have been scheduled before Mann's departure.

[8] The remainder of Mann's claims are meritless and easily disposed of. First, Mann complains that his cell, unlike the larger general-population cells, was too small to allow him to get adequate physical exercise. Mann himself, however, chose to stay in a small private cell because he did not want to sleep on a mattress on the floor. He contends that this does not affect his physical-exercise claim because "[r]equiring pretrial detaine[e]s to sleep on mattresses placed on the floor is unconstitutional," and he could not legitimately be forced to choose between two unconstitutional conditions. Mann has cited no case holding that the Constitution requires elevated beds for prisoners, and we know of no source for such a right. The district court correctly rejected Mann's physical-exercise claim.

[9] Mann contends that he was deprived of hot water for some period of time, but he neither alleged nor proved that any such deprivation was intentional or the result of knowing neglect by jail officials. At trial, in fact, he specifically denied that he was making any such allegation. The district court correctly assumed that there is no constitutional right to hot water and correctly held that punitive intent could not be inferred from the record.

[10] Mann asserts that his constitutional rights were violated when a guard expressed a desire to murder him. The record, although skimpy on this issue, suggests that an unarmed guard told Mann that he wished he could take him outside the jail and shoot him, but that the guard made no actual threat to do so. Whatever the law might say about an actual threat of murder, this guard's intemperate remark falls under the maxim de minimis non curat lex.

[11] The district court found that the warden of the state prison questioned Mann about his lawsuit at the request of the Midland County Sheriff's Department; that the inquiry was minimal and non-threatening; and that Mann was not subjected to any kind of punishment or restriction at the prison as a result of the request by the Sheriff's Department. The record suggests that the Midland County request was triggered by Mann's own allegation that crime information computers in the Midland County jail building were being illegally used by other inmates. The fact that Mann put this allegation into a civil complaint could not insulate him from being *86 asked about it, and the district court correctly concluded that Mann suffered no injury as a result of the defendant's request to the state prison warden.

[12] Mann also complains that inmates working at clerical tasks had access to the files on other inmates. Whether or not this occurred, the district court found that Mann had failed to show at trial that any inmate ever examined his file or used any information in it against him; the court held that Mann's rights could not have been violated by inmates looking at the files of other inmates. The district judge's finding is supported by the record, and his legal conclusion was correct.

[13] Finally, Mann raises two issues that were not properly pursued below. First, he complains that the defendants filed answers to his amended complaints that were identical to the answer they filed to his original complaint. The defendants' answers admitted certain of Mann's allegations and generally denied the others. Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(b) permits this practice, and Mann did not ask the trial judge to impose sanctions under Fed.R.Civ.P. 11. In any case, there is no cause of action for failure to comply with Rule 11, and there is certainly no need for defendants to think up new ways of stating a general denial in response to each amended complaint. Second, Mann now alleges for the first time that he was somehow pressured by the defendants to plead guilty to the criminal charges on which he was being held at the jail. This appears to be an attack on the validity of his criminal conviction, and we decline to address it. See Williams v. Dallas County Commissioners, 689 F.2d 1212 (5th Cir.1982).

V

The judgment of the district court is affirmed in all respects except as to the first amendment claim. On remand, the court will declare unconstitutional the rule forbidding inmates to receive or possess newspapers and magazines. The district court will also make findings as to damages, giving due consideration to the rule that nominal damages should be awarded if actual damages are not established. See, e.g., Carey v. Piphus, 435 U.S. 247, 98 S.Ct. 1042, 55 L.Ed.2d 252 (1978); Memphis Community School Dist. v. Stachura, 477 U.S. 299, 106 S.Ct. 2537, 91 L.Ed.2d 249 (1986); Familias Unidas v. Briscoe, 619 F.2d 391, 402 (5th Cir.1980). Injunctive relief, however, should not be given. See Morrow v. Harwell, 768 F.2d 619, 627-28 (5th Cir.1985).

Effective and Applicability Provisions

1946 Amendments. Effective date of amendment to this rule, see rule 86(b).

Rule 7.1. Disclosure Statement

(a) Who Must File: Nongovernmental Corporate Party. A nongovernmental corporate party to an action or proceeding in a district court must file two copies of a statement that identifies any parent corporation and any publicly held corporation that owns 10% or more of its stock or states that there is no such corporation.

(b) Time for Filing; Supplemental Filing. A party must:

(1) file the Rule 7.1(a) statement with its first appearance, pleading, petition, motion, response, or other request addressed to the court, and

(2) promptly file a supplemental statement upon any change in the information that the statement requires.

(Added Apr. 29, 2002, eff. Dec. 1, 2002.)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE NOTES

2002 Adoption

Rule 7.1 is drawn from Rule 26.1 of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, with changes to adapt to the circumstances of district courts that dictate different provisions for the time of filing, number of copies, and the like. The information required by Rule 7.1(a) reflects the "financial interest" standard of Canon 3C(1)(c) of the Code of Conduct for United States Judges. This information will support properly informed disqualification decisions in situations that call for automatic disqualification under Canon 3C(1)(c). It does not cover all of the circumstances that may call for disqualification under the financial interest standard, and does not deal at all with other circumstances that may call for disqualification.

Although the disclosures required by Rule 7.1(a) may seem limited, they are calculated to reach a majority of the circumstances that are likely to call for disqualification on the basis of financial information that a judge may not know or recollect. Framing a rule that calls for more detailed disclosure will be difficult. Unnecessary disclosure requirements place a burden on the parties and on courts. Unnecessary disclosure of volumes of information may create a risk that a judge will overlook the one bit of information that might require disqualification, and also may create a risk that unnecessary disqualifications will be made rather than attempt to unravel a potentially difficult question. It has not been feasible to dictate more detailed disclosure requirements in Rule 7.1(a).

Rule 7.1 does not prohibit local rules that require disclosures in addition to those required by Rule 7.1. Developing experience with local disclosure practices and advances in electronic technology may provide a foundation for adopting more detailed disclosure requirements by future amendments of Rule 7.1.

Changes Made After Publication and Comment. The provisions that would require disclosure of additional information that may be required by the Judicial Conference have been deleted.

Rule 8. General Rules of Pleading

(a) Claims for Relief. A pleading which sets forth a claim for relief, whether an original claim, counterclaim, cross-claim, or third-party claim, shall contain (1) a short and plain statement of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends, unless the court already has jurisdiction and the claim needs no new grounds of jurisdiction to support it, (2) a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief, and (3) a demand for judgment for the relief the pleader seeks. Relief in the alternative or of several different types may be demanded.

(b) Defenses; Form of Denials. A party shall state in short and plain terms the party's defenses to each claim asserted and shall admit or deny the averments upon which the adverse party relies. If a party is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of an averment, the party shall so state and this has the effect of a denial. Denials shall fairly meet the substance of the averments denied. When a pleader intends in good faith to deny only a part or a qualification of an averment, the pleader shall specify so much of it as is true and material and shall deny only the remainder. Unless the pleader intends in good faith to controvert all the averments of the preceding pleading, the pleader may make denials as specific denials of designated averments or paragraphs or may generally deny all the averments except such designated averments or paragraphs as the pleader expressly admits; but, when the pleader does so intend to controvert all its averments, including averments of the grounds upon which the court's jurisdiction depends, the pleader may do so by general denial subject to the obligations set forth in Rule 11.

(c) Affirmative Defenses. In pleading to a preceding pleading, a party shall set forth affirmatively accord and satisfaction, arbitration and award, assumption of risk, contributory negligence, discharge in bankruptcy, duress, estoppel, failure of consideration, fraud, illegality, injury by fellow servant, laches, license, payment, release, res judicata, statute of frauds, statute of limitations, waiver, and any other matter constituting an avoidance or affirmative defense. When a party has mistakenly designated a defense as a counterclaim or a counterclaim as a defense, the court on terms, if justice so requires, shall treat the pleading as if there had been a proper designation.

(d) Effect of Failure to Deny. Averments in a pleading to which a responsive pleading is required, other than those as to the amount of damage, are admitted when not denied in the responsive pleading. Averments in a pleading to which no responsive pleading is required or permitted shall be taken as denied or avoided.

(e) Pleading to be Concise and Direct; Consistency.

(1) Each averment of a pleading shall be simple, concise, and direct. No technical forms of pleading or motions are required.

(2) A party may set forth two or more statements of a claim or defense alternately or hypothetically, either in one count or defense or in separate counts or defenses. When two or more statements are made in the alternative and one of them if made independently would be sufficient, the pleading is not made insufficient by the insufficiency of one or more of the alternative statements. A party may also state as many separate claims or defenses as the party has regardless of consistency and whether based on legal, equitable, or maritime grounds. All statements shall be made subject to the obligations set forth in Rule 11.

(f) Construction of Pleadings. All pleadings shall be so construed as to do substantial justice.

(As amended Feb. 28, 1966, eff. July 1, 1966; Mar. 2, 1987, eff. Aug. 1, 1987.)

Note to Subdivision (a). See [former] Equity Rules 25 (Bill of Complaint—Contents), and 30 (Answer—Contents—Counterclaim). Compare 2 Ind.Stat.Ann. (Burns, 1933) §§ 2–1004, 2–1015; 2 Ohio Gen.Code Ann. (Page, 1926) §§ 11305, 11314; Utah Rev.Stat.Ann. (1933) §§ 104–7–2, 104–9–1.

See Rule 19(c) for the requirement of a statement in a claim for relief of the names of persons who ought to be parties and the reason for their omission.

See Rule 23(b) for particular requirements as to the complaint in a secondary action by shareholders.

Note to Subdivision (b). 1. This rule supersedes the methods of pleading prescribed in U.S.C., Title 19, § 508 (Persons making seizures pleading general issue and proving special matter); U.S.C. Title 35, [former] §§ 40d (Proving under general issue, upon notice, that a statement in application for an extended patent is not true), 69 [now 282] (Pleading and proof in actions for infringement) and similar statutes.

2. This rule is, in part, [former] Equity Rule 30 (Answer—Contents—Counterclaim), with the matter on denials largely from the Connecticut practice. See Conn. Practice Book (1934) §§ 107, 108, and 122; Conn.Gen.Stat. (1930) §§ 5508 to 5514. Compare the English practice, English Rules Under the Judicature Act (The Annual Practice, 1937) O. 19, r.r. 17–20.

Note to Subdivision (c). This follows substantially English Rules Under the Judicature Act (The Annual Practice, 1937) O. 19, r. 15 and N.Y.C.P.A. (1937) § 242, with "surprise" omitted in this rule.

Note to Subdivision (d). The first sentence is similar to former Equity Rule 30 (Answer—Contents—Counterclaim). For the second sentence see former Equity Rule 31 (Reply—When Required—When Cause at Issue). This is similar to English Rules Under the Judicature Act (The Annual Practice, 1937) O. 19, r.r. 13, 18; and to the practice of the States.

Note to Subdivision (e). This rule is an elaboration upon [former] Equity Rule 30 (Answer—Contents—Counterclaim), plus a statement of the actual practice under some codes. Compare also [former] Equity Rule 18 (Pleadings—Technical Forms Abrogated). See Clark, Code Pleading (1928), pp. 171–4, 432–5; Hankin, Alternative and Hypothetical Pleading (1924), 33 Yale L.J. 365.

Note to Subdivision (f). A provision of like import is of frequent occurrence in the codes. Smith-Hurd Ill.Stats. ch. 110, § 157(3); 2 Minn.Stat. (Mason, 1927) § 9266; N.Y.C.P.A. (1937) § 275; 2 N.D.Comp.Laws Ann. (1913) § 7458.

1966 Amendment

The change here is consistent with the broad purposes of unification.

1987 Amendment

The amendments are technical. No substantive change is intended.

Rule 9. Pleading Special Matters

(a) Capacity. It is not necessary to aver the capacity of a party to sue or be sued or the authority of a party to sue or be sued in a representative capacity or the legal existence of an organized association of persons that is made a party, except to the extent required to show the jurisdiction of the court. When a party desires to raise an issue as to the legal existence of any party or the capacity of any party to sue or be sued or the authority of a party to sue or be sued in a representative capacity, the party desiring to raise the issue shall do so by specific negative averment, which shall include such supporting particulars as are peculiarly within the pleader's knowledge.

(b) Fraud, Mistake, Condition of the Mind. In all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity. Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally.

(c) Conditions Precedent. In pleading the performance or occurrence of conditions precedent, it is sufficient to aver generally that all conditions precedent have been performed or have occurred. A denial of performance or occurrence shall be made specifically and with particularity.

(d) Official Document or Act. In pleading an official document or official act it is sufficient to aver occurrence and each defense other than denials shall be stated in a separate count or defense whenever a separation facilitates the clear presentation of the matters set forth.

(c) Adoption by Reference; Exhibits. Statements in a pleading may be adopted by reference in a different part of the same pleading or in another pleading or in any motion. A copy of any written instrument which is an exhibit to a pleading is a part thereof for all purposes.

1937 Adoption

The first sentence is derived in part from the opening statement of former Equity Rule 25 (Bill of Complaint—Contents). The remainder of the rule is an expansion in conformity with usual state provisions. For numbered paragraphs and separate statements, see Conn.Gen.Stat., 1930, § 5513; Smith-Hurd Ill.Stats. ch. 110, § 157(2); N.Y.R.C.P., (1937) Rule 90. For incorporation by reference, see N.Y.R.C.P., (1937) Rule 90. For written instruments as exhibits, see Smith-Hurd Ill.Stats. ch. 110, § 160.

Rule 11. Signing of Pleadings, Motions, and Other Papers; Representations to Court; Sanctions

(a) Signature. Every pleading, written motion, and other paper shall be signed by at least one attorney of record in the attorney's individual name, or, if the party is not represented by an attorney, shall be signed by the party. Each paper shall state the signer's address and telephone number, if any. Except when otherwise specifically provided by rule or statute, pleadings need not be verified or accompanied by affidavit. An unsigned paper shall be stricken unless omission of the signature is corrected promptly after being called to the attention of the attorney or party.

(b) Representations to Court. By presenting to the court (whether by signing, filing, submitting, or later advocating) a pleading, written motion, or other paper, an attorney or unrepresented party is certifying that to the best of the person's knowledge, information, and belief, formed after an inquiry reasonable under the circumstances,—

(1) it is not being presented for any improper purpose, such as to harass or to cause unnecessary delay or needless increase in the cost of litigation;

(2) the claims, defenses, and other legal contentions therein are warranted by existing law or by a nonfrivolous argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law or the establishment of new law;

(3) the allegations and other factual contentions have evidentiary support or, if specifically so identified, are likely to have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery; and

(4) the denials of factual contentions are warranted on the evidence or, if specifically so identified, are reasonably based on a lack of information or belief.

(c) Sanctions. If, after notice and a reasonable opportunity to respond, the court determines that subdivision (b) has been violated, the court may, subject to the conditions stated below, impose an appropriate sanction upon the attorneys, law firms, or parties that have violated subdivision (b) or are responsible for the violation.

(1) How Initiated.

(A) By Motion. A motion for sanctions under this rule shall be made separately from other motions or requests and shall describe the specific conduct alleged to violate subdivision (b). It shall be served as provided in Rule 5, but shall not be filed with or presented to the court unless, within 21 days after service of the motion (or such other period as the court may prescribe), the challenged paper, claim, defense, contention, allegation, or denial is not withdrawn or appropriately corrected. If warranted, the court may award to the party prevailing on the motion the reasonable expenses and attorney's fees incurred in presenting or opposing the motion. Absent exceptional circumstances, a law firm shall be held jointly responsible for violations committed by its partners, associates, and employees.

(B) On Court's Initiative. On its own initiative, the court may enter an order describing the specific conduct that appears to violate subdivision (b) and directing an attorney, law firm, or party to show cause why it has not violated subdivision (b) with respect thereto.

(2) Nature of Sanction; Limitations. A sanction imposed for violation of this rule shall be limited to what is sufficient to deter repetition of such conduct or comparable conduct by others similarly situated. Subject to the limitations in subparagraphs (A) and (B), the sanction may consist of, or include, directives of a nonmonetary nature, an order to pay a penalty into court, or, if imposed on motion and warranted for effective deterrence, an order directing payment to the movant of some or all of the reasonable attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred as a direct result of the violation.

(A) Monetary sanctions may not be awarded against a represented party for a violation of subdivision (b)(2).

(B) Monetary sanctions may not be awarded on the court's initiative unless the court issues its order to show cause before a voluntary dismissal or settlement of the claims made by or against the party which is, or whose attorneys are, to be sanctioned.

(3) Order. When imposing sanctions, the court shall describe the conduct determined to constitute a violation of this rule and explain the basis for the sanction imposed.

(d) Inapplicability to Discovery. Subdivisions (a) through (c) of this rule do not apply to disclosures and discovery requests, responses, objections, and motions that are subject to the provisions of Rules 26 through 37.

(As amended Apr. 28, 1983, eff. Aug. 1, 1983; Mar. 2, 1987, eff. Aug. 1, 1987; Apr. 22, 1993, eff. Dec. 1, 1993.)

1937 Adoption

This is substantially the content of [former] Equity Rules 24 (Signature of Counsel) and 21 (Scandal and Impertinence) consolidated and unified. Compare former Equity Rule 36 (Officers Before Whom Pleadings Verified). Compare to similar purposes, English Rules Under the Judicature Act (The Annual Practice, 1937) O. 19, r. 4, and Great Australian Gold Mining Co. v. Martin, L.R. 5 Ch.Div. 1, 10 (1877). Subscription of pleadings is required in many codes. 2 Minn.Stat. (Mason, 1927) § 9265; N.Y.R.C.P. (1937) Rule 91; 2 N.D.Comp.Laws Ann. (1913) § 7455.

This rule expressly continues any statute which requires a pleading to be verified or accompanied by an affidavit, such as: U.S.C., Title 28:

§ 381 [former] (Preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders)

§ 762 [now 1402] (Suit against the United States)

U.S.C., Title 28, § 829 [now 1927] (Costs; attorney liable for, when) is unaffected by this rule.

For complaints which must be verified under these rules, see Rules 23(b) (Secondary Action by Shareholders) and 65 (Injunctions).

For abolition of former rule in equity that the averments of an answer under oath must be overcome by the testimony of two witnesses or of one witness sustained by corroborating circumstances, see 12 P.S.Pa. § 1222; for the rule in equity itself, see Greenfield v. Blumenthal, C.C.A.3, 1934, 69 F.2d 294.

1983 Amendment

Since its original promulgation, Rule 11 has provided for the striking of pleadings and the imposition of disciplinary sanctions to check abuses in the signing of pleadings. Its provisions have always applied to motions and other papers by virtue of incorporation by reference in Rule 7(b)(2). The amendment and the addition of Rule 7(b)(3) expressly confirms this applicability.

Experience shows that in practice Rule 11 has not been effective in deterring abuses. See 6 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 1334 (1971). There has been considerable confusion as to (1) the circumstances that should trigger striking a pleading or motion or taking disciplinary action, (2) the standard of conduct expected of attorneys who sign pleadings and motions, and (3) the range of available and appropriate sanctions. See Rodes, Ripple & Mooney, Sanctions Imposable for Violations of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 64–65, Federal Judicial Center (1981). The new language is intended to reduce the reluctance of courts to impose sanctions, see Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 7.05, at 1547, by emphasizing the responsibilities of the attorney and reenforcing those obligations by the imposition of sanctions.

The amended rule attempts to deal with the problem by building upon and expanding the equitable doctrine permitting the court to award expenses, including attorney's fees, to a litigant whose opponent acts in bad faith in instituting or conducting litigation. See, e.g., Roadway Express, Inc. v. Piper, 447 U.S. 752 (1980); Hall v. Cole, 412 U.S. 1, 5 (1973). Greater attention by the district courts to pleading and motion abuses and the imposition of sanctions when appropriate, should discourage dilatory or abusive tactics and help to streamline the litigation process by lessening frivolous claims or defenses.

The expanded nature of the lawyer's certification in the fifth sentence of amended Rule 11 recognizes that the litigation process may be abused for purposes other than delay. See, e.g., Browning Debenture Holders' Committee v. DASA Corp., 560 F.2d 1078 (2d Cir.1977).

The words "good ground to support" the pleading in the original rule were interpreted to have both factual and legal elements. See, e.g., Heart Disease Research Foundation v. General Motors Corp., 15 Fed.R.Serv.2d 1517, 1519 (S.D.N.Y.1972). They have been replaced by a standard of conduct that is more focused.

The new language stresses the need for some prefiling inquiry into both the facts and the law to satisfy the affirmative duty imposed by the rule. The standard is one of reasonableness under the circumstances. See Kinee v. Abraham Lincoln Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 365 F.Supp. 975 (E.D.Pa.1973). This standard is more stringent than the original good-faith formula and thus it is expected that a greater range of circumstances will trigger its violation. See Nemeroff v. Abelson, 620 F.2d 339 (2d Cir.1980).

The rule is not intended to chill an attorney's enthusiasm or creativity in pursuing factual or legal theories. The court is expected to avoid using the wisdom of hindsight and should test the signer's conduct by inquiring what was reasonable to believe at the time the pleading, motion, or other paper was submitted. Thus, what constitutes a reasonable inquiry may depend on such factors as how much time for investigation was available to the signer; whether he had to rely on a client for information as to the facts underlying the pleading, motion, or other paper; whether the pleading, motion, or other paper was based on a plausible view of the law; or whether he depended on forwarding counsel or another member of the bar.

The rule does not require a party or an attorney to disclose privileged communications or work product in order to show that the signing of the pleading, motion, or other paper is substantially justified. The provisions of Rule 26(c), including appropriate orders after in camera inspection by the court, remain available to protect a party claiming privilege or work product protection.

Amended Rule 11 continues to apply to anyone who signs a pleading, motion, or other paper. Although the standard is the same for unrepresented parties, who are obliged themselves to sign the pleadings, the court has sufficient discretion to take account of the special circumstances that often arise in pro se situations. See Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519 (1972).

The provision in the original rule for striking pleadings and motions as sham and false has been deleted. The passage has rarely been utilized, and decisions thereunder have tended to confuse the issue of attorney honesty with the merits of the action. See generally Risinger, Honesty in Pleading and its Enforcement: Some "Striking" Problems with Fed.R.Civ.P. 11, 61 Minn.L.Rev. 1 (1976). Motions under this provision generally present issues better dealt with under Rules 8, 12, or 56. See Murchison v. Kirby, 27 F.R.D. 14 (S.D.N.Y.1961); 5 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 1334 (1969).

The former reference to the inclusion of scandalous or indecent matter, which is itself strong indication that an improper purpose underlies the pleading, motion, or other paper, also has been deleted as unnecessary. Such matter may be stricken under Rule 12(f) as well as dealt with under the more general language of amended Rule 11.

The text of the amended rule seeks to dispel apprehensions that efforts to obtain enforcement will be fruitless by insuring that the rule will be applied when properly invoked. The word "sanctions" in the caption, for example, stresses a deterrent orientation in dealing with improper pleadings, motions or other papers. This corresponds to the approach in imposing sanctions for discovery abuses. See National Hockey League v. Metropolitan Hockey Club, 427 U.S. 639 (1976) (per curiam). And the words "shall impose" in the last sentence focus the court's attention on the need to impose sanctions for pleading and motion abuses. The court, however, retains the necessary flexibility to deal appropriately with violations of the rule. It has discretion to tailor sanctions to the particular facts of the case, with which it should be well acquainted.

The references in the former text to wilfulness as a prerequisite to disciplinary action has been deleted. However, in considering the nature and severity of the sanctions to be imposed, the court should take account of the state of the attorney's or party's actual or presumed knowledge when the pleading or other paper was signed. Thus, for example, when a party is not represented by counsel, the absence of legal advice is an appropriate factor to be considered.

Courts currently appear to believe they may impose sanctions on their own motion. See North American Trading Corp. v. Zale Corp., 73 F.R.D. 293 (S.D.N.Y.1979). Authority to do so has been made explicit in order to overcome the traditional reluctance of courts to intervene unless requested by one of the parties. The detection and punishment of a violation of the signing requirement, encouraged by the amended rule, is part of the court's responsibility for securing the system's effective operation.

If the duty imposed by the rule is violated, the court should have the discretion to impose sanctions on either the attorney, the party the signing attorney represents, or both, or on an unrepresented party who signed the pleading, and the new rule so provides. Although Rule 11 has been silent on the point, courts have claimed the power to impose sanctions on an attorney personally, either by imposing costs or employing the contempt technique. See 5 Wright & Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure: Civil § 1334 (1969); 2A Moore, Federal Practice ¶ 11.02, at 2104 n. 8. This power has been used infrequently. The amended rule should eliminate any doubt as to the propriety of assessing sanctions against the attorney.

Even though it is the attorney whose signature violates the rule, it may be appropriate under the circumstances of the case to impose a sanction on the client. See Browning Debenture Holders' Committee v. DASA Corp., supra. This modification brings Rule 11 in line with practice under Rule 37, which allows sanctions for abuses during discovery to be imposed upon the party, the attorney, or both.

A party seeking sanctions should give notice to the court and the offending party promptly upon discovering a basis for doing so. The time when sanctions are to be imposed rests in the discretion of the trial judge. However, it is anticipated that in the case of pleadings the sanctions issue under Rule 11 normally will be determined at the end of the litigation, and in the case of motions at the time when the motion is decided or shortly thereafter. The procedure obviously must comport with due process requirements. The particular format to be followed should depend on the circumstances of the situation and the severity of the sanction under consideration. In many situations the judge's participation in the proceedings provides him with full knowledge of the relevant facts and little further inquiry will be necessary.

To assure that the efficiencies achieved through more effective operation of the pleading regimen will not be offset by the cost of satellite litigation over the imposition of sanctions, the court must to the extent possible limit the scope of sanction proceedings to the record. Thus, discovery should be conducted only by leave of the court, and then only in extraordinary circumstances.

Although the encompassing reference to "other papers" in new Rule 11 literally includes discovery papers, the certification requirement in that context is governed by proposed new Rule 26(g). Discovery motions, however, fall within the ambit of Rule 11.

1987 Amendment

The amendments are technical. No substantive change is intended.

1993 Amendments

Purpose of revision. This revision is intended to remedy problems that have arisen in the interpretation and application of the 1983 revision of the rule. For empirical examination of experience under the 1983 rule, see, e.g., New York State Bar Committee on Federal Courts, Sanctions and Attorneys' Fees (1987); T. Willging, The Rule 11 Sanctioning Process (1989); American Judicature Society, Report of the Third Circuit Task Force on Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 11 (S. Burbank ed., 1989); E. Wiggins, T. Willging, and D. Stienstra, Report on Rule 11 (Federal Judicial Center 1991). For book-length analyses of the case law, see G. Joseph, Sanctions: The Federal Law of Litigation Abuse (1989); J. Solovy, The Federal Law of Sanctions (1991); G. Vairo, Rule 11 Sanctions: Case Law Perspectives and Preventive Measures (1991).

The rule retains the principle that attorneys and pro se litigants have an obligation to the court to refrain from conduct that frustrates the aims of Rule 1. The revision broadens the scope of this obligation, but places greater constraints on the imposition of sanctions and should reduce the number of motions for sanctions presented to the court. New subdivision (d) removes from the ambit of this rule all discovery requests, responses, objections, and motions subject to the provisions of Rule 26 through 37.

Subdivision (a). Retained in this subdivision are the provisions requiring signatures on pleadings, written motions, and other papers. Unsigned papers are to be received by the Clerk, but then are to be stricken if the omission of the signature is not corrected promptly after being called to the attention of the attorney or pro se litigant. Correction can be made by signing the paper on file or by submitting a duplicate that contains the signature. A court may require by local rule that papers contain additional identifying information regarding the parties or attorneys, such as telephone numbers to facilitate facsimile transmissions, though, as for omission of a signature, the paper should not be rejected for failure to provide such information.

The sentence in the former rule relating to the effect of answers under oath is no longer needed and has been eliminated. The provision in the former rule that signing a paper constitutes a certificate that it has been read by the signer also has been eliminated as unnecessary. The obligations imposed under subdivision (b) obviously require that a pleading, written motion, or other paper be read before it is filed or submitted to the court.

Subdivisions (b) and (c). These subdivisions restate the provisions requiring attorneys and pro se litigants to conduct a reasonable inquiry into the law and facts before signing pleadings, written motions, and other documents, and prescribing sanctions for violation of these obligations. The revision in part expands the responsibilities of litigants to the court, while providing greater constraints and flexibility in dealing with infractions of the rule. The rule continues to require litigants to "stop-and-think" before initially making legal or factual contentions. It also, however, emphasizes the duty of candor by subjecting litigants to potential sanctions for insisting upon a position after it is no longer tenable and by generally providing protection against sanctions if they withdraw or correct contentions after a potential violation is called to their attention.

The rule applies only to assertions contained in papers filed with or submitted to the court. It does not cover matters arising for the first time during oral presentations to the court, when counsel may make statements that would not have been made if there had been more time for study and reflection. However, a litigant's obligations with respect to the contents of these papers are not measured solely as of the time they are filed with or submitted to the court, but include reaffirming to the court and advocating positions contained in those pleadings and motions after learning that they cease to have any merit. For example, an attorney who during a pretrial conference insists on a claim or defense should be viewed as "presenting to the court" that contention and would be subject to the obligations of subdivision (b) measured as of that time. Similarly, if after a notice of removal is filed, a party urges in federal court the allegations of a pleading filed in state court (whether as claims, defenses, or in disputes regarding removal or remand), it would be viewed as "presenting"—and hence certifying to the district court under Rule 11—those allegations.

The certification with respect to allegations and other factual contentions is revised in recognition that sometimes a litigant may have good reason to believe that a fact is true or false but may need discovery, formal or informal, from opposing parties or third persons to gather and confirm the evidentiary basis for the allegation. Tolerance of factual contentions in initial pleadings by plaintiffs or defendants when specifically identified as made on information and belief does not relieve litigants from the obligation to conduct an appropriate investigation into the facts that is reasonable under the circumstances; it is not a license to join parties, make claims, or present defenses without any factual basis or justification. Moreover, if evidentiary support is not obtained after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery, the party has a duty under the rule not to persist with that contention. Subdivision (b) does not require a formal amendment to pleadings for which evidentiary support is not obtained, but rather calls upon a litigant not thereafter to advocate such claims or defenses.

The certification is that there is (or likely will be) "evidentiary support" for the allegation, not that the party will prevail with respect to its contention regarding the fact. That summary judgment is rendered against a party does not necessarily mean, for purposes of this certification, that it had no evidentiary support for its position. On the other hand, if a party has evidence with respect to a contention that would suffice to defeat a motion for summary judgment based thereon, it would have sufficient "evidentiary support" for purposes of Rule 11.

Denials of factual contentions involve somewhat different considerations. Often, of course, a denial is premised upon the existence of evidence contradicting the alleged fact. At other times a denial is permissible because, after an appropriate investigation, a party has no information concerning the matter or, indeed, has a reasonable basis for doubting the credibility of the only evidence relevant to the matter. A party should not deny an allegation it knows to be true; but it is not required, simply because it lacks contradictory evidence, to admit an allegation that it believes is not true.

The changes in subdivisions (b)(3) and (b)(4) will serve to equalize the burden of the rule upon plaintiffs and defendants, who under Rule 8(b) are in effect allowed to deny allegations by stating that from their initial investigation they lack sufficient information to form a belief as to the truth of the allegation. If, after further investigation or discovery, a denial is no longer warranted, the defendant should not continue to insist on that denial. While sometimes helpful, formal amendment of the pleadings to withdraw an allegation or denial is not required by subdivision (b).

Arguments for extensions, modifications, or reversals of existing law or for creation of new law do not violate subdivision (b)(2) provided they are "nonfrivolous." This establishes an objective standard, intended to eliminate any "empty-head pure-heart" justification for patently frivolous arguments. However, the extent to which a litigant has researched the issues and found some support for its theories even in minority opinions, in law review articles, or through consultation with other attorneys should certainly be taken into account in determining whether paragraph (2) has been violated. Although arguments for a change of law are not required to be specifically so identified, a contention that is so identified should be viewed with greater tolerance under the rule.

The court has available a variety of possible sanctions to impose for violations, such as striking the offending paper; issuing an admonition, reprimand, or censure; requiring participation in seminars or other educational programs; ordering a fine payable to the court; referring the matter to disciplinary authorities (or, in the case of government attorneys, to the Attorney General, Inspector General, or agency head), etc. See Manual for Complex Litigation, Second, § 42.3. The rule does not attempt to enumerate the factors a court should consider in deciding whether to impose a sanction or what sanctions would be appropriate in the circumstances; but, for emphasis, it does specifically note that a sanction may be nonmonetary as well as monetary. Whether the improper conduct was willful, or negligent; whether it was part of a pattern of activity, or an isolated event; whether it infected the entire pleading, or only one particular count or defense; whether the person has engaged in similar conduct in other litigation; whether it was intended to injure; what effect it had on the litigation process in time or expense; whether the responsible person is trained in the law; what amount, given the financial resources of the responsible person, is needed to deter that person from repetition in the same case; what amount is needed to deter similar activity by other litigants: all of these may in a particular case be proper considerations. The court has significant discretion in determining what sanctions, if any, should be imposed for a violation, subject to the principle that the sanctions should not be more severe than reasonably necessary to deter repetition of the conduct by the offending person or comparable conduct by similarly situated persons.

Since the purpose of Rule 11 sanctions is to deter rather than to compensate, the rule provides that, if a monetary sanction is imposed, it should ordinarily be paid into court as a penalty. However, under unusual circumstances, particularly for (b)(1) violations, deterrence may be ineffective unless the sanction not only requires the person violating the rule to make a monetary payment, but also directs that some or all of this payment be made to those injured by the violation. Accordingly, the rule authorizes the court, if requested in a motion and if so warranted, to award attorney's fees to another party. Any such award to another party, however, should not exceed the expenses and attorneys' fees for the services directly and unavoidably caused by the violation of the certification requirement. If, for example, a wholly unsupportable count were included in a multi-count complaint or counterclaim for the purpose of needlessly increasing the cost of litigation to an impecunious adversary, any award of expenses should be limited to those directly caused by inclusion of the improper count, and not those resulting from the filing of the complaint or answer itself. The award should not provide compensation for services that could have been avoided by an earlier disclosure of evidence or an earlier challenge to the groundless claims or defenses. Moreover, partial reimbursement of fees may constitute a sufficient deterrent with respect to violations by persons having modest financial resources. In cases brought under statutes providing for fees to be awarded to prevailing parties, the court should not employ cost-shifting under this rule in a manner that would be inconsistent with the standards that govern the statutory award of fees, such as stated in Christiansburg Garment Co. v. EEOC, 434 U.S. 412 (1978).

The sanction should be imposed on the persons—whether attorneys, law firms, or parties—who have violated the rule or who may be determined to be responsible for the violation. The person signing, filing, submitting, or advocating a document has a nondelegable responsibility to the court, and in most situations is the person to be sanctioned for a violation. Absent exceptional circumstances, a law firm is to be held also responsible when, as a result of a motion under subdivision (c)(1)(A), one of its partners, associates, or employees is determined to have violated the rule. Since such a motion may be filed only if the offending paper is not withdrawn or corrected within 21 days after service of the motion, it is appropriate that the law firm ordinarily be viewed as jointly responsible under established principles of agency. This provision is designed to remove the restrictions of the former rule. Cf. Pavelic & LeFlore v. Marvel Entertainment Group, 493 U.S. 120 (1989) (1983 version of Rule 11 does not permit sanctions against law firm of attorney signing groundless complaint).

The revision permits the court to consider whether other attorneys in the firm, co-counsel, other law firms, or the party itself should be held accountable for their part in causing a violation. When appropriate, the court can make an additional inquiry in order to determine whether the sanction should be imposed on such persons, firms, or parties either in addition to or, in unusual circumstances, instead of the person actually making the presentation to the court. For example, such an inquiry may be appropriate in cases involving governmental agencies or other institutional parties that frequently impose substantial restrictions on the discretion of individual attorneys employed by it.

Sanctions that involve monetary awards (such as a fine or an award of attorney's fees) may not be imposed on a represented party for causing a violation of subdivision (b)(2), involving frivolous contentions of law. Monetary responsibility for such violations is more properly placed solely on the party's attorneys. With this limitation, the rule should not be subject to attack under the Rules Enabling Act. See Willy v. Coastal Corp., — U.S. — (1992); Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Communications Enter. Inc., — U.S. — (1991). This restriction does not limit the court's power to impose sanctions or remedial orders that may have collateral financial consequences upon a party, such as dismissal of a claim, preclusion of a defense, or preparation of amended pleadings.

Explicit provision is made for litigants to be provided notice of the alleged violation and an opportunity to respond before sanctions are imposed. Whether the matter should be decided solely on the basis of written submissions or should be scheduled for oral argument (or, indeed, for evidentiary presentation) will depend on the circumstances. If the court imposes a sanction, it must, unless waived, indicate its reasons in a written order or on the record; the court should not ordinarily have to explain its denial of a motion for sanctions. Whether a violation has occurred and what sanctions, if any, to impose for a violation are matters committed to the discretion of the trial court; accordingly, as under current law, the standard for appellate review of these decisions will be for abuse of discretion. See Cooter & Gell v. Hartmarx Corp., 496 U.S. 384 (1990) (noting, however, that an abuse would be established if the court based its ruling on an erroneous view of the law or on a clearly erroneous assessment of the evidence).

tion as to when a motion for violation of Rule 11 should be served and when, if filed, it should be decided. Ordinarily the motion should be served promptly after the inappropriate paper is filed, and, if delayed too long, may be viewed as untimely. In other circumstances, it should not be served until the other party has had a reasonable opportunity for discovery. Given the "safe harbor" provisions discussed below, a party cannot delay serving its Rule 11 motion until conclusion of the case (or judicial rejection of the offending contention).

Rule 11 motions should not be made or threatened for minor, inconsequential violations of the standards prescribed by subdivision (b). They should not be employed as a discovery device or to test the legal sufficiency or efficacy of allegations in the pleadings; other motions are available for those purposes. Nor should Rule 11 motions be prepared to emphasize the merits of a party's position, to exact an unjust settlement, to intimidate an adversary into withdrawing contentions that are fairly debatable, to increase the costs of litigation, to create a conflict of interest between attorney and client, or to seek disclosure of matters otherwise protected by the attorney-client privilege or the work-product doctrine. As under the prior rule, the court may defer its ruling (or its decision as to the identity of the persons to be sanctioned) until final resolution of the case in order to avoid immediate conflicts of interest and to reduce the disruption created if a disclosure of attorney-client communications is needed to determine whether a violation occurred or to identify the person responsible for the violation.

The rule provides that requests for sanctions must be made as a separate motion, i.e., not simply included as an additional prayer for relief contained in another motion. The motion for sanctions is not, however, to be filed until at least 21 days (or such other period as the court may set) after being served. If, during this period, the alleged violation is corrected, as by withdrawing (whether formally or informally) some allegation or contention, the motion should not be filed with the court. These provisions are intended to provide a type of "safe harbor" against motions under Rule 11 in that a party will not be subject to sanctions on the basis of another party's motion unless, after receiving the motion, it refuses to withdraw that position or to acknowledge candidly that it does not currently have evidence to support a specified allegation. Under the former rule, parties were sometimes reluctant to abandon a questionable contention lest that be viewed as evidence of a violation of Rule 11; under the revision, the timely withdrawal of a contention will protect a party against a motion for sanctions.

To stress the seriousness of a motion for sanctions and to define precisely the conduct claimed to violate the rule, the revision provides that the "safe harbor" period begins to run only upon service of the motion. In most cases, however, counsel should be expected to give informal notice to the other party, whether in person or by a telephone call or letter, of a potential violation before proceeding to prepare and serve a Rule 11 motion.

As under former Rule 11, the filing of a motion for sanctions is itself subject to the requirements of the rule and can lead to sanctions. However, service of a cross motion under Rule 11 should rarely be needed since under the revision the court may award to the person who prevails on a motion under Rule 11—whether the movant or the target of the motion—reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred in presenting or opposing the motion.

The power of the court to act on its own initiative is retained, but with the condition that this be done through a show cause order. This procedure provides the person with notice and an opportunity to respond. The revision provides that a monetary sanction imposed after a court-initiated show cause order be limited to a penalty payable to the court and that it be imposed only if the show cause order is issued before any voluntary dismissal or an agreement of the parties to settle the claims made by or against the litigant. Parties settling a case should not be subsequently faced with an unexpected order from the court leading to monetary sanctions that might have affected their willingness to settle or voluntarily dismiss a case. Since show cause orders will ordinarily be issued only in situations that are akin to a contempt of court, the rule does not provide a "safe harbor" to a litigant for withdrawing a claim, defense, etc., after a show cause order has been issued on the court's own initiative. Such corrective action, however, should be taken into account in deciding what—if any—sanction to impose if, after consideration of the litigant's response, the court concludes that a violation has occurred.

Subdivision (d). Rules 26(g) and 37 establish certification standards and sanctions that apply to discovery disclosures, requests, responses, objections, and motions. It is appropriate that Rules 26 through 37, which are specially designed for the discovery process, govern such documents and conduct rather than the more general provisions of Rule 11. Subdivision (d) has been added to accomplish this result.

Rule 11 is not the exclusive source for control of improper presentations of claims, defenses, or contentions. It does not supplant statutes permitting awards of attorney's fees to prevailing parties or alter the principles governing such awards. It does not inhibit the court in punishing for contempt, in exercising its inherent powers, or in imposing sanctions, awarding expenses, or directing remedial action authorized under other rules or under 28 U.S.C. § 1927. See Chambers v. NASCO, — U.S. — (1991). Chambers cautions, however, against reliance upon inherent powers if appropriate sanctions can be imposed under provisions such as Rule 11, and the procedures specified in Rule 11—notice, opportunity to respond, and findings—should ordinarily be employed when imposing a sanction under the court's inherent powers. Finally, it should be noted that Rule 11 does not preclude a party from initiating an independent action for malicious prosecution or abuse of process.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., Defendants.	CASE NO: 26-22191 MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF EX PARTE APPLICATION TO EXTEND PAGE LIMIT Date: November 6, 2003 Time: 8:30 a.m. Dept: B

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs, Charissa W. and Nicole D., identified in the concurrently filed ex parte application hereby request permission pursuant to California Rules of Court, Rule 313(d) to file a Memorandum of Points and Authorities in support of their Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Quash Service of Summons of up to 23 pages in length. Written notice of this application was made to defendants' counsel on October 20, 2003.

II. REASONS NECESSITATING PAGE LIMIT

"A party may apply to the court ex parte but with written notice of the application to the other parties, at least 24 hours before the memorandum is due, for permission to file a longer memorandum. The application shall state the reasons why the argument cannot be made within the state limit." California Rules of Court, Rule 313(d).

Plaintiffs require up to 23 pages to adequately address all of the necessary elements and legal authorities related to their Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Quash Service of Summons. The Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Quash involves, among other things, complex constitutional law issues involving jurisdictional issues and a "religious" entity. Specifically, defendants' contend certain corporate entities under their control are not subject to the jurisdiction of the state. An extension to the page limit is needed to adequately explain why the Watchtower defendants, which moved to quash service of summons, are subject to this State's jurisdiction.

Additionally, if Plaintiffs are not granted the extension to adequately explain why certain defendants are subject to jurisdiction in California, Plaintiffs risk losing the ability to hold culpable defendants liable for their injuries and defendants' wrongdoing.

III. CONCLUSION

For each of the forgoing reasons, Plaintiffs respectfully request they be permitted to file a Memorandum of Points and Authorities in support of their Opposition to Defendants' Motions to Quash Service of Summons up to 23 pages in length.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs, Charissa W. and Nicole D., identified in the concurrently filed ex parte application hereby request permission pursuant to California Rules of Court, Rule 313(d) to file a Memorandum of Points and Authorities in support of their Opposition to Defendants' Demurrers to Plaintiffs' Complaint of up to 33 pages in length. Defendants' counsel was mad aware this application in writing on October 20, 2003.

II. REASONS NECESSITATING PAGE LIMIT

"A party may apply to the court ex parte but with written notice of the application to the other parties, at least 24 hours before the memorandum is due, for permission to file a longer memorandum. The application shall state the reasons why the argument cannot be made within the state limit." California Rules of Court, Rule 313(d).

Plaintiffs require up to 33 pages to adequately address all of the necessary elements and legal authorities related to their Opposition to Defendants' Demurrers to Plaintiffs' Complaint. The Opposition to Defendants' Demurrers involve, among other things, complex constitutional law issues involving the First Amendment and its effect on the entanglement between courts and religion. Such issues dealing with church and state necessarily require an extensive discussion of the applicable legal authorities and case law.

Further, request is predicated on responding to plaintiff's lengthy demurrer. Plaintiffs contend defendants misstated multiple case holdings to this Court in its Demurrer, requiring an extensive and lengthy discussion of landmark cases.

III. CONCLUSION

For each of the forgoing reasons, Plaintiffs respectfully request that they be permitted to file a Memorandum of Points and Authorities in support of their Opposition to Defendants' Demurrers up to 33 pages in length.

DEPT: B

CALENDARED:

TO: ALL PARTIES AND THEIR ATTORNEYS OF RECORD HEREIN:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on October 23, 2003 at 8:30 a.m., or as soon thereafter as counsel may be heard, in Dept. B of the above-entitled Court, Defendants, WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, KINGDOM SUPPORT SERVICES, INC., CHRISTIAN CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, RELIGIOUS ORDER OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, NAPA CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, and OAK KNOLL CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES (collectively hereinafter "Church Defendants"), will move the Court for an Order granting or sustaining their demurrers to each of the causes of action alleged in plaintiffs' amended complaint under California Code of Civil Procedure ("CCP") §§ 430.10(e) and 430.30(a), on the grounds that plaintiffs' pleading does not state facts sufficient to constitute the causes of action alleged.

Plaintiffs' first cause of action as pled does not state a claim for respondeat superior liability for alleged sexual assaults under California law.

Plaintiffs' second, fourth, fifth, and seventh causes of action are in substance and effect improperly alleged clergy malpractice claims that violate the First Amendment and thus fail to state a claim.

Plaintiffs' third cause of action also violates the First Amendment and thus fails to state a claim.

Plaintiffs' sixth and tenth causes of action fail to state a claim because the alleged violation of CANRA does not create a civil cause of action.

Plaintiffs' eighth cause of action fails to state a claim because this is not an independent and cognizable cause of action and plaintiffs do not plead facts to support the claimed ratification of co-defendant Silva's alleged sexual misconduct with plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs' ninth cause of action does not plead an independent or cognizable cause of action.

Plaintiffs' eleventh and twelfth causes of action fail to state claims because there is no private right of action for the alleged state criminal code violations.

These demurrers are based on this notice, the supporting memorandum of points and authorities, all papers and records on file in this action, and such other oral and documentary information and evidence as may be properly considered by the Court.

CERTIFICATE OF CONFERENCE

Defense counsel for the Church Defendants hereby certifies that he met and conferred by telephone with plaintiffs' attorney William Brelsford concerning these demurrers before filing these demurrers with the court.

BRIEF STATEMENT OF FACTS

Plaintiffs allege twelve causes of action against the Church Defendants. Each of these causes of action is based on and related to: (1) the underlying alleged sexual abuse of the Plaintiffs by Edward Villegas (hereinafter "Villegas"), occurring from approximately 1972 to 1985 (Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 27, 28, 30); (2) the Church Defendants' alleged failure to report that abuse and/or to prevent, protect, or warn the Plaintiffs about Villegas's propensity toward child abuse (Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 23, 33, 34); and (3) the Church Defendants' internal policies, procedures, and actions regarding childhood sexual abuse.

As set forth more fully below, the Church Defendants demurrers on all twelve causes of action should be granted for the following reasons: 1) as a matter of law, California does not recognize the tort of clergy malpractice; 2) the Church Defendants cannot be held vicariously or directly liable for Villegas's alleged acts of abuse; 3) Plaintiffs have failed to state a claim under the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (CANRA), Penal Code §§ 11164-74; and 4) Plaintiffs' remaining claims are not recognized causes of action in California.

DEMURRER STANDARD

For the purposes of a demurrer, "the rule is that we accept as true all the material allegations of the complaint." Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal.3d 1, 7. The Court thus treats the demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions, or conclusions of fact or law. Demurrers do not test the truth of a plaintiff's allegations or the accuracy with which they describe a defendant's alleged conduct. E.g., Baltins v. James (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 1193, 1196-97.

OPENING SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The heart of Plaintiffs' complaint is in essence a prohibited claim of clergy malpractice – i.e., that the Church Defendants tortiously failed to provide adequate advice and protection when counseling Plaintiffs and their families. See Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 31, 33. After examining why clergy malpractice claims are constitutionally impermissible, it will be shown that Plaintiffs' allegations for common law negligence, gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud are little more than clergy malpractice in disguise. Nomenclature aside, the gravamen of each claim is the allegation that the Church Defendants gave Plaintiffs bad advice during spiritual counseling. As such, Plaintiffs' claims are in substance and effect clergy malpractice, regardless of the labels attached to the claims by Plaintiffs.

Plaintiffs have also asserted several causes of action against the Church Defendants based on agency principles. However, Plaintiffs' vicarious liability claims fail because Villegas was not acting within the course and scope of his duties when the alleged abuse took place. Also, the First Amendment bars Plaintiffs' claims of direct liability.

Additionally, one theme repeated in the amended complaint is the Church Defendants' failure to report Plaintiffs' alleged abuse to the authorities. However, the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (CANRA), Penal Code §§ 11164-74, did not apply to clergy members prior to January 1, 1997, and no California court has ever permitted a civil cause of action against a religious organization for violation of this statute. Finally, Plaintiffs' remaining claims are not recognized causes of action in California.

This Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrers and hold (1) that claims for common law negligence, gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud cannot arise out of advice given during spiritual counseling because, in substance and effect, they are merely claims for clergy malpractice with different names; (2) that the Church Defendants are not vicariously or directly liable for the alleged criminal acts independently committed by Villegas; (3) the reporting requirements imposed by CANRA are not a basis for a civil cause of action; and (4) Plaintiffs' remaining claims are not recognized causes of action.

ARGUMENT

I. Claims for Clergy Malpractice Violate the First Amendment Because They Entangle Courts in Ecclesiastical Affairs and Intrude Upon the Constitutionally-Protected Autonomy of Churches.

The United States Supreme Court has long held that the First Amendment prohibits government, including courts, from becoming entangled in religious affairs or intruding upon the institutional autonomy of churches. Both entanglement and church autonomy problems are at the heart of why clergy malpractice claims are unconstitutional. As shown in Section II below, such problems are equally inherent in several of Plaintiffs' claims.

A. The First Amendment Bars Claims for Clergy Malpractice Because Such Claims Unavoidably Entangle Courts in the Interpretation of Religious Doctrine, Practices, and Beliefs.

A bedrock principle of First Amendment law is that the state cannot entangle itself in religious affairs. See Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 612-13. Among religious matters in which government absolutely cannot become involved is the interpretation of religious doctrine, practices, and beliefs. Since Watson v. Jones (1871) 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 679, the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly held that "'civil courts exercise no jurisdiction'" over "'a matter which concerns theological controversy.'" Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696, 713-14 (quoting Watson v. Jones). Thus, civil courts can never "engage in the forbidden process of interpreting and weighing church doctrine." Presbyterian Church v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Mem'l Presbyterian Church (1969) 393 U.S. 440, 451. The First Amendment bars courts from undertaking "an analysis or examination of ecclesiastical polity or doctrine in settling [civil] disputes." Jones v. Wolf (1979) 443 U.S. 595, 605.

Given the absolute bar on civil courts entangling themselves in the interpretation or examination of religious doctrines, beliefs, or church polity, the unconstitutionality of clergy malpractice claims is evident. In Schmidt v. Bishop (S.D.N.Y. 1991) 779 F. Supp. 321, the court analyzed a claim for clergy malpractice against a Presbyterian pastor for engaging in sexual relations during a counseling relationship. The court rejected the claim because it would necessarily entail the examination of religious doctrine, thus fostering excessive entanglement with religion:

> It would be impossible for a court or jury to adjudicate a typical case of clergy malpractice, without first ascertaining whether the cleric, in this case a Presbyterian pastor, performed within the level of expertise expected of a similar professional (the hypothetical "reasonably prudent Presbyterian pastor"), following his calling, or practicing his profession within the community.... Any effort by this Court to instruct the trial jury as to the duty of care which a clergyman should exercise, would of necessity require the Court or jury to define and express the standard of care to be followed by other reasonable Presbyterian clergy of the community. This in turn would require the Court and the jury to consider the fundamental perspective and approach to counseling inherent in the beliefs and practices of that denomination. This is as unconstitutional as it is impossible. It fosters excessive entanglement with religion.

Id. at 327-28 (citations omitted).

Numerous courts have reached the same result on the same grounds. See, e.g., Dausch v. Rykse (7th Cir. 1994) 52 F.3d 1425, 1432 (noting that courts have unanimously rejected clergy malpractice claims "based on the difficulty that would be encountered in evaluating such a claim without entangling the civil courts in extensive investigation and evaluation of religious tenets") (citation omitted); Amato v. Greenquist (Ill. Ct. App. 1997) 679 N.E.2d 446, 450 ("To permit claims for clergy malpractice would require courts to establish a standard of reasonable care for religious practitioners practicing their respective faiths, which necessarily involves the interpretation of [religious] doctrine.").

B. In Addition, Clergy Malpractice Claims Violate the First Amendment Because They Infringe Upon the Constitutionally-Protected Autonomy of Churches.

For well over a century, the Supreme Court's "church autonomy doctrine" has protected the right of churches to govern their ecclesiastical affairs free from government interference. The Supreme Court's church autonomy doctrine is rooted in the decision in Watson v. Jones, supra, where the Court first outlined the broad principles of judicial abstention in disputes over fundamentally ecclesiastical matters. The Court stated:

> The right to organize voluntary religious associations to assist in the expression and dissemination of any religious doctrine, and to create tribunals for the decision of controverted questions of faith within the association, and for the ecclesiastical government of all the individual members, congregations, and officers within the general association, is unquestioned. All who unite themselves to such a body do so with an implied consent to this government, and are bound to submit to it. But it would be a vain consent and would lead to the total subversion of such religious bodies, if any one aggrieved by one of their decisions could appeal to the secular courts and have them reversed. It is of the essence of these religious unions, and of their right to establish tribunals for the decision of questions arising among themselves, that those decisions should be binding in all cases of ecclesiastical cognizance, subject only to such appeals as the organism itself provides for.

Id., 80 U.S. at 728-29.

In Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, supra, the Court held that the rule of judicial noninterference "applies with equal force to church disputes over church polity and church administration." Id. 425 U.S. at 710. Again drawing from Watson, the Court reiterated that under the First Amendment, civil courts cannot adjudicate "'a matter which concerns ... church discipline, ecclesiastical government, or the conformity of the members of the church to the standard of morals required of them.'" Id. at 714.

Clergy malpractice claims directly inject civil courts into ecclesiastical affairs and thus are an unconstitutional infringement upon the right of church autonomy. Adjudication of such claims requires civil courts to interpret church doctrine, displacing the role of authoritative church interpreters. Also, in cases where deficient ecclesiastical counseling is alleged, clergy malpractice claims interfere with the right of a church to determine its own standards for ecclesiastical counseling, replacing the church's norms with either the court's interpretation of those norms or an outright secular rule.

In sum, although churches do not have blanket immunity from civil liability, the First Amendment's church autonomy doctrine bars claims like clergy malpractice that, by their nature or as a practical matter, inject the state into important ecclesiastical concerns.

II. Under the Facts of This Case, Plaintiffs' Tort Claims Are in Substance and Effect Claims for Clergy Malpractice; Plaintiffs Cannot Avoid the First Amendment Bar Against Clergy Malpractice Claims by Creative Pleading.

Sections I.A. and I.B. demonstrated that clergy malpractice claims violate the First Amendment because (1) they unavoidably entangle courts in the interpretation of religious doctrine and ecclesiastical canons, and (2) they require courts to infringe upon the constitutionally-protected autonomy of churches. Although Plaintiffs strain to distance their various tort claims from clergy malpractice, it is clear that such claims suffer from the exact same constitutional infirmities. Artful pleading is no salvo.

A. Plaintiffs' Common Law Negligence Claim Is Barred as Clergy Malpractice.

It is elementary that a tort, whether intentional or negligent, involves the violation of a legal duty owed by the alleged wrongdoer to the person injured. Nally v. Grace Cmty. Church of the Valley (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, 292. To support a finding of negligence, a plaintiff must show the defendant had a duty of care, that the duty was breached, and that the breach was the proximate cause of the resulting injury. United States Liab. Ins. Co. v. Haidinger-Hayes, Inc. (1970) 1 Cal.3d 586, 594. However, "one is ordinarily not liable for the actions of another and is under no duty to protect another from harm, in the absence of a special relationship of custody or control." Nally, 47 Cal.3d at 293 (emphasis added). Furthermore, absent a special relationship, one has "no duty to warn those who may be endangered by such conduct." Peterson v. San Francisco Cmty. College Dist. (1984) 36 Cal.3d 799, 806.

The California Supreme Court in Nally firmly rejected the extension of a duty of care to personal or religious counseling relationships as a form of clergy malpractice. Nally, 47 Cal.3d at 294. The Court reasoned "that access to the clergy for counseling should be free from state imposed counseling standards, and that 'the secular state is not equipped to ascertain the competence of counseling when performed by those affiliated with religious organizations.'" Id. at 298 (citation omitted). Thus, Nally is widely recognized for the proposition that a negligence cause of action cannot be brought against a clergy member or church for alleged improper counseling.

In Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, the Court of Appeal recently reiterated that a clergy member cannot be held liable for "breach of a duty arising out of a special relationship" with a parishioner. Id. at 270. The Court of Appeal stated:

> Even if a reasonable standard could be devised, which is questionable, it could not be uniformly applied without restricting the free exercise rights of religious organizations which could not comply without compromising the doctrines of their faith. The application of such a standard would also result in the establishment of judicially acceptable religions, because it would inevitably differentiate ecclesiastical counseling practices that are judicially acceptable from those that are not.

Id. Thus, the court in Richelle L. concluded that the plaintiffs' causes of action for negligence could not be sustained without running afoul of the clergy malpractice doctrine.

In this case, Plaintiffs' principal fault with the Church Defendants is that they rendered inadequate or improper spiritual counseling before and/or after they were informed of the alleged child abuse. As the amended complaint alleges, "[Church Defendants] did not act to help Plaintiffs or their families deal with the trauma of abuse and actively prevented them from obtaining help from trained professionals and other available sources." Amended Complaint, ¶ 33. Notwithstanding the fact that no "special relationship" existed between Plaintiffs and the Church Defendants, they are alleged to have breached various duties to the Plaintiffs. As outlined in the amended complaint, these various duties include a duty to "protect," "warn," "train," "adopt adequate policies," "properly investigate matters," and "provide child abuse victims and their families with any assistance in coping with the trauma." Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 34, 40.

How can a secular court evaluate the alleged inadequacy of internal church policies and procedures and whether clergy members properly counseled parishioners without restricting the free exercise rights of the religious organization? Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 270. As the California Supreme Court noted in Nally, it is unconstitutional to impose a duty of care on pastoral counselors. Nally, 47 Cal.3d at 299. Thus, Plaintiffs' negligence claim here for the "bad advice" and the improper policies of the Church Defendants are "simply an elliptical way to state a clergy malpractice claim." Dausch v. Rykse, supra, 52 F.3d at 1429. The Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' second cause of action for negligence.

B. Plaintiffs' Gross Negligence Claim Fails Constitutional Scrutiny.

Plaintiffs' claim for gross negligence necessarily fails for the same reasons as their claim for common law negligence. It is a fundamental tenet of tort law that "an indispensable factor to liability founded upon negligence is the existence of a duty of care owed by the alleged wrongdoer to the person injured." Routh v. Quinn (1942) 20 Cal.2d 488, 491. Thus, as a species of negligence, Plaintiffs' claim for gross negligence cannot proceed unless the Court first determines that the Church Defendants owed Plaintiffs a duty of care. As demonstrated above, the imposition and adjudication of such a duty is fraught with constitutional problems.

The Nally decision is instructive in this regard. There, the California Supreme Court unequivocally declared that it was unwilling even to begin to recognize a duty on the part of lay clergy in circumstances very similar to those here: "We have previously refused to impose a duty when to do so would involve complex policy decisions, and we are unpersuaded by plaintiffs that we should depart from this policy in the present case." Nally, 47 Cal.3d at 299. If the viability of Plaintiffs' claim here for gross negligence were upheld, this Court would be required to ignore the constitutional morass explained above and recognize the precise duty of care that has already been rejected by the California Supreme Court. The Court here should decline to recognize any such duty and instead grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' fourth cause of action for gross negligence.

C. Plaintiffs' Breach of Fiduciary Duty Claim Is Constitutionally Indistinguishable from a Clergy Malpractice Claim Because It Requires the Examination of Religious Doctrine and Infringes on the Autonomy of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Plaintiffs' cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty requires reference to and reliance upon church doctrine. Thus, the claim for breach of fiduciary duty is indistinguishable from a claim for clergy malpractice; the two claims are unconstitutional for the same reasons.

Earlier this year, the Court of Appeal in Richelle L. allowed a claim for breach of fiduciary duty against a Catholic priest who was accused of sexual exploitation, but specifically limited its holding because of the constitutional sensitivities of these types of claims. The court held:

> Accordingly, we conclude that a pastor may be subject to tort liability for sexually inappropriate and injurious conduct that breaches a fiduciary duty arising out of a confidential relation with a parishioner, provided the alleged injurious conduct was not dictated by a sincerely held religious belief or carried out in accordance with established beliefs and practices of the religion to which the pastor belongs, and there is no other reason the issues cannot be framed for the trier of fact in secular rather than sectarian terms.

Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 279 (emphasis in original). First, it is noteworthy that the court allowed the breach of fiduciary duty claim against a pastor who was accused of sexual misconduct, but not against the religious organization itself. Id. Second, the court expressly prohibited a fiduciary duty cause of action against a clergyman when the "alleged injurious conduct" was "dictated by a sincerely held religious belief." Id.[2]

The reason for the limitation imposed by the Richelle L. court is evident when considering other fiduciary duty claims that have been brought against religious organizations. For example, in Franco v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Utah 2001) 21 P.3d 198, the Supreme Court of Utah did not allow a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty to be brought against a church for a claim that arose from counseling duties. Id. at 205. The court considered that the claim for "giving bad advice" was "necessarily directed at the LDS Church Defendants' performance of their ecclesiastical counseling relationship." Id. Although the plaintiff's claim in Franco was framed as breach of fiduciary duty, the "real issue was clergy malpractice." Id.; see also H.R.B. v. J.L.G. (Mo. Ct. App. 1995) 913 SW.2d 92, 99; Langford v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn (N.Y. 1998) 677 N.Y.S.2d 436, 439; Amato v. Greenquist, 679 N.E.2d at 446; Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. at 321; Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d at 1425; and Schieffer v. Catholic Archdiocese of Omaha (Neb. 1993) 508 N.W.2d 907, 912.

Plaintiffs and their parents here were not the patients of these clergymen but rather members of their flocks to whom they ministered. When counseling Plaintiffs, the Elders were not acting as secular counselors. Instead, they were lay clergymen whose counsel was rooted in Scripture, and Church doctrine and policy. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 31, 33, 34(f). Therefore, any determination that the Church Defendants breached a fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiffs would necessarily lead to examination of the Church Defendants' spiritual counsel based on religious beliefs, doctrines, and ecclesiastical canons. To paraphrase H.R.B., "[r]eligion was not merely incidental to [Plaintiffs'] relationship with [the Elders]; it was the foundation for it." 913 S.W.2d at 99 (emphasis added).

Even assuming the entanglement problem could be avoided by the imposition of a purely secular fiduciary duty standard for spiritual counseling, Plaintiffs' breach of fiduciary duty claim would still be unconstitutional as a deep incursion into the protected autonomy of the Church Defendants. Indeed, imposition of a state-defined fiduciary duty might well be an even worse infringement of the First Amendment entanglement problem because, by dictating the parameters of proper clergy counseling, such a duty would force upon churches a secular orthodoxy. It is beyond debate that the state lacks any authority whatsoever to "prescribe what shall be orthodox in ... religion." West Virginia State Bd. of Educ. v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 642; cf. Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church (5th Cir. 1998) 134 F.3d 331, 336 ("[T]he Free Exercise Clause protects religious relationships, including the counseling relationship between a minister and his or her parishioner ...."), cert. denied (1998) 525 U.S. 868.

The potential impact on the autonomy of churches would be severe if the state began imposing and enforcing on clergymen secular fiduciary duties. How would such a standard work as a practical matter given the extremely diverse religious traditions in our society, each with its own unique conceptions of the role of clergy in an ecclesiastical polity? If a state can second-guess religious policy, procedure, or action by requiring a church to meet secular standards of "care," the state will effectively control the religious organization and its operations by threat of tort litigation and liability. Such judicial review of church decision-making would the Roman Catholic Church. 106 Cal.App.4th at 280.

> cause the State to intrude upon matters of church administration and government which have so many times before been proclaimed to be matters of a singular ecclesiastical concern. Control of strictly ecclesiastical matters could easily pass from the church to the State. The church would then be without the power to decide for itself, free from state interference, matters of church administration and government.

McClure v. Salvation Army (5th Cir. 1972) 460 F.2d 553, 560; see also Schmidt, 779 F. Supp. at 328 (noting that courts would be on a "slippery slope" if they attempted to impose fiduciary duties on clerical counseling; "Where could we stop?").

Because the alleged injurious conduct giving rise to the fiduciary duty claim is the "bad advice" purportedly given by the Church Defendants, it amounts to clergy malpractice. This cause of action is prohibited by Richelle L. because the "alleged injurious conduct" – the Elders' spiritual counseling – was "dictated by a sincerely held religious belief." Id., 106 Cal.App.4th at 279. Thus, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' sixth cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty.

D. Plaintiffs' Claim for Fraud is Likewise Unconstitutional.

The First Amendment bars Plaintiffs' fraud claim for many of the same reasons. The elements of fraud are: 1) misrepresentation; 2) knowledge of falsity; 3) intent to defraud; 4) justifiable reliance; and 5) resulting damages. Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal.4th 631, 638.

Even assuming, arguendo, the allegations of Plaintiffs' pleading for fraud are adequate, this claim "suffers from deficiencies similar to those of [their] fiduciary duty claim." Schmidt, 779 F. Supp. at 326 (rejecting fraud claim as redundant of malpractice claim). Once again, the gravamen of the claim is clergy malpractice. As with the negligence and breach of fiduciary duty claims, any in-depth inquiry into the nature of the Church Defendants' counseling relationship would require a forbidden examination of the Church Defendants' doctrine and policies.

Plaintiffs allege that the Church Defendants were in a "fiduciary relationship" with them "by undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling and training of Plaintiffs." Amended Complaint, ¶ 64. The Plaintiffs allege that they received defective counseling from the Church Defendants because it was given with the intent to "conceal" and "misrepresent" certain allegations made against Villegas and that they were induced to rely on the allegedly false representations. Id., ¶ 66. To determine the merits of that claim, a court and jury would have to inquire into the intent of the Church Defendants in giving such advice. Did they intend to deceive or were they attempting to give appropriate spiritual advice based on their understanding of Scripture and Church doctrine? Such an inquiry will clearly enmesh the court in an unconstitutional interpretation of religious doctrine, beliefs, and policies. Nally, 47 Cal.3d at 299.

Church autonomy concerns arise as well because Plaintiffs' fraud claim is a direct assault on the freedom of the Church Defendants to impart spiritual counsel to church members without fear that civil courts will later second-guess their spiritual advice. An Elder in a congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses has a First Amendment right to counsel and advise the members of his flock based on his understanding of the right course in light of the Scriptures, and Church doctrines and policies. Civil courts have no business chilling frank and open discussions during ecclesiastical counseling sessions by the threat of post-hoc inquests into the intentions and motivations behind a clergyman's spiritual advice. Plaintiffs' fraud claim is plainly unconstitutional. Thus, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' seventh cause of action for fraud, fraudulent concealment and conspiracy.

III. Plaintiffs' Agency Arguments Fail to State a Claim as a Matter of Law.

A. The Church Defendants May Not Be Held Vicariously Liable for Villegas's Actions Because They Were Not Committed Within the Course and Scope of His Duties.

The doctrine of respondeat superior provides that "[a]n employer may be held responsible for tortious conduct by an employee only if the tort is committed within the course and scope of employment." Rita M. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1987) 187 Cal.App.3d 1453, 1461. However, it is well settled in California that employees who commit sexual assaults, apart from police officers in some situations, act outside of the scope of their employment as a matter of law. Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal.3d 202, 218 n. 11. Thus, in "an action against a religious institution based on allegations of childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by one of its clergy[,] ... the abuse is committed outside the scope of the cleric's employment [and] the doctrine of respondeat superior is not available." Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609; see also Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 283 n.15.

In this case, Plaintiffs have alleged a claim against the Church Defendants under the theory of respondeat superior for the alleged sexual batteries committed by Villegas when he was serving as an Elder in the Napa Congregation. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 24, 29, 36. As the Court of Appeal has noted, a religious institution cannot be held vicariously liable under this theory for the independent self-serving pursuits of a minister. Mark K., 67 Cal.App.4th at 609. Thus, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on the Plaintiffs' first cause of action for respondeat superior.

B. The Church Defendants May Not Be Held Directly Liable for Villegas's Actions Under the Theories of Negligent Appointment, Retention, or Supervision.

1. The First Amendment Bars Plaintiffs' Claims for Negligent Appointment and Retention.

Plaintiffs claim that the Church Defendants negligently appointed and retained Villegas as an Elder in the Napa Congregation. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 24, 29, 43. However, questions of hiring, ordaining, and retaining clergy or ministers necessarily require interpretation of religious doctrine, policy and administration and are barred by the First Amendment.

It is well settled that when a court is required to interpret internal church policies and practices, the First Amendment is violated because such judicial inquiry would constitute excessive government entanglement with religion. Serbian, 426 U.S. at 696; s*ee also Gonzalez v. Roman Catholic Archbishop* (1929) 280 U.S. 1 (civil courts may not inquire into clergy hiring decisions of church). Furthermore, judicial inquiry into hiring, ordaining, and retaining clergy or ministers would result in an endorsement of religion, by approving one model for church hiring, ordination, and retention of clergy. "Freedom to select the clergy ... must now be said to have federal constitutional protection as a part of the free exercise of religion against state interference." Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church (1952) 344 U.S. 94, 116.

Although no California court has directly addressed the constitutionality of negligent appointment and retention claims made against religious organizations, the federal courts have found such claims to be constitutionally dubious. As one federal district court noted: > constitute interference with the practice of their religion.

> It would also cause excessive entanglement in church operations by fostering inappropriate government involvement. The application of even general tort law principles to church procedures on the choice of priests would require an inquiry into present practices with an intent to pass on their reasonableness. Such court examination and oversight of internal church policies would constitute an encroachment on the church's religious functions.

Ayon v. Gourley (D. Colo. 1998) 47 F. Supp. 2d 1246, 1250; see also Doe v. Hartz (N.D. Iowa 1997) 970 F. Supp. 1375, 1431; Isely v. Capuchin Province (E.D. Mich. 1995) 880 F. Supp. 1138, 1150.

In one related California case, Schmoll v. Chapman Univ. (1999) 70 Cal.App.4th 1434, the Court of Appeal examined the constitutionality of proposed restrictions on the employment decisions of a church-affiliated university. In a "case of first impression," the court stated:

> It is irrelevant whether the action involves hiring, firing or discipline or simply changes the terms and conditions of the employment. The rule is about as absolute as a rule of law can be: The First Amendment guarantees to a religious institution the right to decide matters affecting its ministers' employment, free from the scrutiny and second-guessing of the civil courts.

Id. at 1436. Thus, at least one California decision recognizes the seriousness and the First Amendment implications of a secular tribunal's review of a religious organization's "hiring, firing or discipline" of its clergy or ministers.

Plaintiffs assert a claim against the Church Defendants for the negligent appointment and retention of Villegas as an Elder in the Napa Congregation. Amended Complaint, ¶ 43. As the foregoing cases make clear, any inquiry into the decision of who should be permitted to become or remain an Elder in the Jehovah's Witnesses' religion necessarily would involve both a prohibited excessive entanglement with religion and a burden on the Church Defendants' free exercise rights. Thus, on the basis of the First Amendment, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' third cause of action for negligent appointment and retention.

2. The First Amendment Also Bars Plaintiffs' Claim for Negligent Supervision.

Plaintiffs' argument that the Church Defendants had a duty to supervise Villegas and failed to do so is barred by the First Amendment for the same reasons articulated for the negligent hiring and retention claims.

Again, no California court has addressed the constitutionality of a negligent supervision claim when applied against a religious organization. However, several federal courts have found such claims prohibited by the First Amendment:

> [A]ny inquiry into the policies and practices of the Church Defendants in hiring or supervising their clergy raises the same kind of First Amendment problems of entanglement discussed above, which might involve the Court in making sensitive judgments about the propriety of the Church Defendants' supervision in light of their religious beliefs. Insofar as concerns retention or supervision, the pastor of a Presbyterian Church is not analogous to a common law employee. ... The traditional denominations each have their own intricate principles of governance, as to which the state has no rights of visitation. ...
> It would therefore also be inappropriate and unconstitutional for this Court to determine after the fact that the ecclesiastical authorities negligently supervised or retained the defendant Bishop. Any award of damages would have a chilling effect leading indirectly to state control over the future conduct of affairs of a religious denomination, a result violative of the text and history of the establishment clause.

Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. at 332; Ehrens v. Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod (S.D.N.Y. June 18, 2003) No. 02 CIV. 2771(CLB), 2003 WL 21448323, at *4 ("Because it would be inappropriate and unconstitutional for this Court to determine after the fact that the ecclesiastical authorities negligently supervised or retained Reverend Chapman, this case must be dismissed."); Ayon, 47 F. Supp. 2d at 1250-51 (inappropriate for court to examine whether church procedures for supervision were "reasonable and adequate").

Here, Plaintiffs assert a claim that the Church Defendants failed to properly supervise Villegas, an Elder in the Napa Congregation, some twenty to thirty years ago. However, adjudicating the reasonableness of a church's supervision of a cleric would require a civil court to examine and weigh the church's internal policies and practices concerning "disciplinary actions, reprimand write-ups and grievance procedures." Ayon, 47 F. Supp. 2d at 1250. To establish a duty, the court would have to determine whether these church policies were reasonable and adequate. Such an examination would excessively entangle the court in the church's internal affairs, thereby inhibiting the church's religious freedom and resulting in the state endorsement of one model of church supervision. Thus, on the basis of the First Amendment, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' third cause of action for negligent supervision.

C. Plaintiffs Have Failed to Adequately Plead Their Theory for Ratification.

The elements for ratification have been long established: "'Ratification is the voluntary election by a person to adopt in some manner as his own an act which was purportedly done on his behalf by another person, the effect of which, as to some or all persons, is to treat the act as if originally authorized by him.'" Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 1478, 1490-91 (citation omitted) (emphasis added); see also Emery v. Visa Int'l Serv. Ass'n (2002) 95 Cal.App.4th 952, 961 (agent must act on behalf of principal). Regarding the issue of ratification, one reference work states, "[m]ere acquiescence in the commission of a tort after the act does not make the person thus acquiescing a party to the wrong or liable therefor as a joint tort-feasor. In order to be liable he must not only have assented to the wrong, but the act must have been done for his benefit or have been of a nature to benefit him." 86 C.J.S. Torts § 38 (1997).

The four corners of Plaintiffs' amended complaint state that the Church Defendants ratified the actions of Villegas that were outside the course and scope of his agency. Amended Complaint, ¶ 69. But the amended complaint fails to make any allegation that the alleged abuse committed by Villegas was done "on behalf of" the Church Defendants or with any intent to "benefit" the Church Defendants. Because the necessary elements for the alleged tort of ratification have not been adequately pled, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' eighth cause of action for ratification.

IV. Plaintiffs Cannot State a Cause of Action Based on the Church Defendants' Alleged Failure to Report Suspected Child Abuse.

A. No Cause of Action Exists for Failure to Report Suspected Child Abuse.

Plaintiffs allege that the Church Defendants failed to report suspected child abuse pursuant to the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, Penal Code §§ 11164-74. This allegation fails for two reasons: 1) the Church Defendants, as clergy members, were under no duty to report the alleged abuse at the time it allegedly took place; and 2) no California court has ever allowed a civil cause of action against a church for its failure to report alleged child abuse.

In 1963, under former Penal Code section 11161.5, the mandatory reporting obligations were limited to only physicians and surgeons. Stecks v. Young (1995) 38 Cal.App.4th 365, 370-71. In 1996, the Legislature amended the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act (CANRA) to add "clergy members" to the list of mandated reporters of allegations of child abuse. Stats.1996, ch. 1081, § 3.5. This provision became effective, as a matter of law, on January 1, 1997.

In this case, Plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges that Plaintiff Charissa W. was abused between approximately 1972 and 1985 and that Plaintiff Nicole D. was abused once in approximately 1978. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 28, 30. The Church Defendants were allegedly informed of the abuse in 1978. Id., ¶ 31. Thus, even assuming, arguendo, those allegations are true, between the Church Defendants, as clergy members, had no duty to report under CANRA between 1972 and 1985 or in 1978; this duty was statutorily imposed upon clergy members some nineteen years later, in 1997, long after both Plaintiffs had become adults.

Furthermore, even if, arguendo, a statutory duty to report was somehow imposed on the Church Defendants, no California court has ever held that CANRA contains a private right to sue for damages resulting from alleged violations of the statute. As the Court of Appeal recently noted:

> Adoption of a regulatory statute does not automatically create a private right to sue for damages resulting from violations of the statute. Such a private right of action exists only if the language of the statute or its legislative history clearly indicates the Legislature intended to create such a right to sue for damages. If the Legislature intends to create a private cause of action, we generally assume it will do so "directly [,] ... in clear, understandable, unmistakable terms...."

Vikco Ins. Serv., Inc. v. Ohio Indem. Co. (1999) 70 Cal.App.4th 55, 62-63 (citations omitted) (emphasis in original). Because CANRA and its predecessors have been repeatedly amended, "if the Legislature had intended to create such a private action, it would have done so by clear and direct language." Schaefer v. Williams (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 1243, 1248; CCP § 1858 (When interpreting statutes, office of judge is "to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted.").

Because the Church Defendants were not required to report by CANRA in 1978 and because no private cause of action exists under CANRA, the Church Defendants' demurrer should be granted on the sixth cause of action for "Failure to Report Suspected Child Abuse."

B. Plaintiffs' "Negligent Usurpation of Investigatory Function" Claim is Not a Recognized Cause of Action Under California Law.

Plaintiffs' tenth cause of action is for "Negligent Usurpation of Investigatory Function." This is not a recognized cause of action in California (or any other State). Additionally, this cause of action presumes that CANRA had been violated. Because this claim is merely a restatement of Plaintiffs' cause of action for failure to report and because CANRA was not violated, as discussed above, the Church Defendants' demurrer on the tenth cause of action should be granted.

V. Plaintiffs' Remaining Causes of Action Fail to State Claims for Civil Liability.

A. Plaintiffs' "Alter Ego and Single Business Enterprise" Claim is Not a Recognized Cause of Action Under California Law.

Plaintiffs' amended complaint contains an allegation of "alter ego and single business enterprise," which is a contract law theory that has never been recognized as an independent cause of action in California courts. "Under the 'alter ego' doctrine, the separate corporate entity may be disregarded and personal liability imposed upon its shareholders, where a corporation is found to be the alter ego of the shareholders ...." 18 C.J.S. Corporations § 12 (2003). Because the theory of "alter ego" is not a separate or cognizable cause of action, but rather a theory concerning relationships between corporate entities, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' ninth cause of action for alter ego.

B. Plaintiffs' "Violation of Penal Code" Claims are Not Recognized Causes of Action Under California Law.

Plaintiffs have asserted two causes of action one under Penal Code section 182, Criminal "Conspiracy" "Definition; punishment; venue; evidence necessary to support conviction," and another under Penal Code section 32, "Accessories defined." However, no California court has found that violation of either one of these Penal Code statutes may serve as an independent basis for civil liability. As noted earlier, "If the Legislature intends to create a private cause of action, we generally assume it will do so 'directly[,] ... in clear, understandable, unmistakable terms....'" Vikco, 70 Cal.App.4th at 62-63 (citation omitted).

Furthermore, if the alleged violation of the Penal Code's definition for conspiracy is really a poorly pled claim for civil conspiracy, "[a]s is 'well established' under California law[,] 'civil conspiracy is not an independent tort.' ... Rather, it is a "'legal doctrine.'" Idema v. Dreamworks, Inc. (C.D. Cal. 2001) 162 F. Supp. 2d 1129, 1196-97 (citations omitted). Thus, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer on Plaintiffs' eleventh and twelfth causes of action for alleged violations of the Penal Code.

CONCLUSION

For each of the independent reasons set forth above, this Court should grant Church Defendants' demurrers on all twelve causes of action set forth in Plaintiffs' amended complaint.

SUBSEQUENT HISTORY: [*1] As Corrected April 28, 1997. Released for Publication June 2, 1997.

PRIOR HISTORY: Appeal from the Circuit Court of Cook County. The Honorable Kenneth Gillis, Judge Presiding.

DISPOSITION: Affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded for further proceedings.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Plaintiff husband sought review of a decision of the Circuit Court of Cook County, which granted defendant clergy's motion to dismiss in an action involving intentional infliction of emotional distress, breach of fiduciary duty, clergy malpractice, and common law fraud.

OVERVIEW: Defendant, who was plaintiff's marriage counselor, had an affair with plaintiff's wife. The court affirmed the dismissal of plaintiff's fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, and clergy malpractice claims. Fraud allegations were not germane to a count alleging professional negligence because fraud was a distinct cause of action in Illinois. Clergy were exempt from the standards for social workers, psychotherapists, and marriage counselors. Plaintiff could not recover for clergy malpractice. The court held that there was no action in Illinois for breach of fiduciary duty premised upon the counseling relationship between a cleric and a church member. The court held that defendant's bosses were not responsible for his behavior under respondeat superior because his actions were not in furtherance of his employer's business. The court reversed the lower court's dismissal of plaintiff's intentional infliction of emotional distress claim because plaintiff alleged facts that established that defendant's conduct was extreme and outrageous, that defendant intended his conduct to inflict severe emotional distress, and that defendant's conduct did cause severe emotional distress.

OUTCOME: The court affirmed the decision dismissing plaintiff's breach of fiduciary duty, clergy malpractice, and fraud causes of action. Allegations of fraud were not germane to a count alleging professional negligence. Illinois did not recognize clergy malpractice or breach of fiduciary duty claims. The court reversed the decision dismissing plaintiff's intentional infliction of emotional distress claim because his allegations supported his claim.

CORE TERMS: counselling, church, malpractice, cleric, clergy, marriage, counsellor, religious, psychotherapy, duty, counsellee, confidence, counselled, training, secular, licensed, intentional infliction of emotional distress, breach of fiduciary duty, sexual relationship, first amendment, respondeat superior, marital, session, social worker, practitioner, parishioner, breached, transference, furtherance, actionable

Torts > Malpractice Liability > Misconduct Generally

HN1 To permit claims for clergy malpractice would require courts to establish a standard of reasonable care for religious practitioners practicing their respective faiths, which necessarily involves the interpretation of doctrine. More Like This Headnote

Constitutional Law > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Religion > Free Exercise of Religion

HN2 When doctrinal controversy is not involved in a dispute between a claimant and a church, the first amendment does not require judicial deference to religious authority. More Like This Headnote

HN3 Illinois courts may entertain lawsuits alleging tortious conduct by churches and their employees, so long as the resolution does not require interpretation of either religious doctrine or religious duties imposed on an individual by a particular church. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Malpractice Liability > Misconduct Generally

HN4 In the context of spiritual counseling, the free exercise clause is relevant only if the defendant can show that the conduct that allegedly caused plaintiff's distress was in fact part of the belief and practices of the religious group. Clerics cannot, using the shield of the first amendment, masquerade in the form of marriage counsellors and then prey on a counselee. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Malpractice Liability

HN8 Under Illinois law, a fiduciary relationship is recognized to exist when a special confidence is reposed in one who, by reason of such confidence, must act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the person reposing such confidence. Such a relationship may exist as a matter of law, or it may be the result of a more informal relationship--moral, social, domestic or even personal in its origin. More Like This Headnote

HN9 Illinois law, in conjunction with the First Amendment, prohibits the recognition of an action for breach of fiduciary duty premised upon the counseling relationship between a cleric and a church member with whom the cleric had been sexually involved. More Like This Headnote

HN10 Under Illinois law, a contention that a cleric has breached his duty as a fiduciary is not actionable. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

HN11 In order to plead an intentional infliction of emotional distress claim, the plaintiff must allege facts establishing that the defendant's conduct was extreme and outrageous and that the defendant either intended his conduct to inflict severe emotional distress or knew that there was a high probability that the conduct would cause such distress. The plaintiff also must allege that the conduct, in fact, caused severe emotional distress. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

HN12 A complaint for intentional infliction of emotional distress may stand only where the conduct complained of is so outrageous as to go beyond all bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civil community. The court may assess the outrageousness of a defendant's actions based, in part, upon a defendant's improper use of a position of power which gives him the ability to adversely affect the plaintiff's interests. Torts > Vicarious Liability > Respondeat Superior

HN13 Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer may be liable for the torts of his servant when such acts are committed in the course of employment and in furtherance of the employer's business; however, the employer is not liable if the employee commits the acts solely for his own benefit. OPINIONBY: Leavitt

OPINION: [*923]

[448] Justice Leavitt delivered the opinion of the Court:

Until late 1990, the plaintiff, Duane Amato, had thought himself a happily married man. According to a complaint he filed, he and his wife, Linda, had been married for eighteen years and had two children. In 1987, the Amatos joined Peace Lutheran Church of Lake Zurich (Peace), a fledgling parish headed by the defendant, Pastor Vernon C. Greenquist. The Amatos became active in the church, and in October 1990, Linda began "faith counseling" with Pastor Greenquist. During November 1990, the plaintiff and Linda began experiencing marital problems which were accompanied by a "religious transformation" within her. Unbeknownst to Duane, during the course of faith counseling, Linda had begun an affair with Pastor Greenquist, who was also married. On December 22, the plaintiff [2] sought and began a course of counselling with Greenquist. Greenquist obliged Duane's request for counselling without informing him of the continuing affair with Linda.

Duane discovered the relationship between Greenquist and Linda on February 15, 1991. He notified church authorities, including the defendant, Bishop Sherman Hicks, who was Greenquist's immediate superior within the church hierarchy. Bishop Hicks suspended Greenquist, and Greenquist resigned his position with Peace. Bishop Hicks also suggested that Duane seek professional counselling. Soon after, [*924] Linda filed for a divorce from the plaintiff. Greenquist divorced his wife. Greenquist and Linda are now married.

The plaintiff's initial multi-count complaint against Greenquist alleged intentional infliction of emotional distress, breach of a fiduciary [449] duty, clergy malpractice and common law fraud. He also sued Bishop Hicks, alleging breach of a fiduciary duty and clergy malpractice. Finally, alleging respondeat superior, he sued Peace and the institutional hierarchy of the Lutheran church, which consists of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America (ELCA) and the Metropolitan Chicago Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church [3] of America (Met Synod) (collectively the "church defendants").

Pursuant to motions filed by all of the defendants under section 2-615 of the Code of Civil Procedure (735 ILCS 5/2-615 (West 1994)), the trial judge dismissed most of the counts for varying reasons stemming from the plaintiff's failure to state causes of action, but most particularly because (1) Illinois does not recognize the tort of clergy malpractice; and (2) the relationship between cleric and parishioner is not a fiduciary one. The trial judge granted the plaintiff leave to amend, and he filed a second amended complaint consisting of 14 counts restating many of the same allegations, except that he denominated the clergy malpractice claims against Greenquist and Bishop Hicks as "psychotherapy malpractice (gross negligence)."

The church defendants and Bishop Hicks renewed their section 2-615 motions to dismiss, and the trial judge granted them in their entirety, dismissing 10 of the 14 counts of the complaint. Pastor Greenquist also renewed his section 2-615 motion to dismiss, and in a separate order the trial judge dismissed, with prejudice, all of the counts against him with the exception of that alleging [4] common law fraud. The judge entered findings pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 304(a) (134 Ill. 2d R. 304(a)), and the plaintiff seeks to overturn the dismissal, contending that he has alleged facts sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss as to each of the counts dismissed.

Because the counts at issue were dismissed pursuant to section 2-615, we review the allegations of the complaint de novo accepting as true all well-pleaded allegations and drawing all reasonable inferences in a light most favorable to the plaintiff. T & S Signs, Inc. v. Village of Wadsworth, 261 Ill. App. 3d 1080, 1083, 634 N.E.2d 306, 199 Ill. Dec. 467 (1994). We will uphold the dismissal only if "it clearly appears that no set of facts can be proved" which will entitle the plaintiff to recover. People ex rel. Daley v. Datacom Systems Corp., 146 Ill. 2d 1, 11, 585 N.E.2d 51, 165 Ill. Dec. 655 (1991). Additional allegations pertinent to this appeal are as follows.

ELCA is "a nationwide organization of churches of the Lutheran [*925] faith." Met Synod is "the local administrative 'branch' of the ELCA and directly oversees the operation and function of ELCA churches in the Chicago area, including PEACE." Bishop [5] Hicks is the Met Synod's principal cleric. He oversees the operations of local ELCA churches in Chicago.

Greenquist received his training as a minister and counsellor through ELCA. In 1990, he had approximately 11 years experience in preaching and counselling. His professional counselling experience included marriage counselling, faith counselling and general family counselling. Greenquist "held himself out as a skilled professional in matters of counselling." He, along with Peace and Met Synod, "encouraged [congregants] to seek counselling from the church and its clergy before seeking secular professionals in order 'to promote unity, closeness and interdependence within members of the congregation' (in accordance with stated church doctrine)." Furthermore, Greenquist "was acting within the scope and parameters of his employment duties on behalf of [the church defendants] and in furtherance of stated church doctrine when he counselled" the plaintiff.

When the plaintiff first approached Greenquist regarding marriage counselling, he had no knowledge of the ongoing relationship between Linda and Greenquist. Greenquist neither referred the plaintiff to an independent counsellor nor [6] indicated that he would be unable to render "objective professional assistance." Rather, he "welcomed the opportunity to counsel [the plaintiff] in order to further his own personal goals  to foster and promote his own sexual gratification, and to further undermine the marital relationship of" the Amatos. Furthermore, Greenquist revealed to Linda confidences he [450] learned from the plaintiff during the counselling sessions in order to foster his relationship with Linda.

On March 5, 1991, the plaintiff advised Bishop Hicks of the circumstances. The plaintiff made an appointment for "counselling" with the Bishop. Linda accompanied him to this session. The plaintiff alleged that this session constituted "professional counselling." However, he also alleges that the Bishop counselled him "in furtherance of church doctrine." The Bishop acted merely to protect the interests of the church. He "took no steps to remedy the situation" and "made no effort to save the marriage." Rather, he "counselled that [the plaintiff] should get further 'professional' counselling but that Linda did not need professional counselling because she had close spiritual friends she could pray with."

In recent [7] years, an increasing number of cases have been brought by laity against clergy alleging abuse of the cleric-parishioner [*926] relationship. The plaintiffs in these cases generally have denominated their claims "clergy malpractice." Our courts have refused to entertain such claims because the first amendment's free exercise clause prohibits courts from considering claims requiring the interpretation of religious doctrine. Baumgartner v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, 141 Ill. App. 3d 898, 904-906, 490 N.E.2d 1319, 96 Ill. Dec. 114 (1986). HN1 To permit claims for clergy malpractice would require courts to establish a standard of reasonable care for religious practitioners practicing their respective faiths, which necessarily involves the interpretation of doctrine. Baumgartner, 141 Ill. App. 3d at 906.

Nonetheless, HN2 when doctrinal controversy is not involved in a dispute between a claimant and a church, the first amendment does not require judicial deference to religious authority. Bivin v. Wright, 275 Ill. App. 3d 899, 903, 656 N.E.2d 1121, 212 Ill. Dec. 287 (1995). For instance, "in disputes over church property, Illinois courts have applied a 'neutral principles of law' approach, [8] objectively examining pertinent church characteristics, constitutions and bylaws, deeds, State statutes, and other evidence to resolve the matter the same as it would a secular dispute , using purely secular analyses without relying on religious precepts." Bivin, 275 Ill. App. 3d at 903.

Applying these principles, the court in Bivin reinstated a claim of negligent supervision against a church brought by a husband and wife who had sued their reverend, the reverend's superior and the church, alleging that during the course of marital counselling, the reverend entered into a sexual relationship with the wife which exacerbated the marital problems. The court noted that "the church defendant does not claim that the alleged sexual misconduct of its minister was part of its religious beliefs or practices or was in any way sanctioned by the church." Bivin, 275 Ill. App. 3d at 902. Thus, the court held that it could "not conclude from plaintiffs' complaint that their cause of action will infringe upon, or place a burden upon, the church's freedom to exercise its religion." Bivin, 275 Ill. App. 3d at 903.

The decision in Bivin clarifies that HN3 Illinois courts may entertain [9] lawsuits alleging tortious conduct by churches and their employees, so long as the resolution does not require interpretation of either religious doctrine or religious duties imposed on an individual by a particular church. We believe the approach announced in Bivin reflects a reasoned approach to determining the justiciability of disputes of this nature. It is also the approach which other jurisdictions have adopted in assessing the particular type of claims raised by the plaintiff in this case.

[*927] In F.G. v. MacDonell, 291 N.J. Super. 262, 677 A.2d 258, 264 (N.J. Super. A.D. 1996), the court permitted a claim of negligent pastoral care and counselling against a cleric-counsellor who had "used his position to sexually exploit the counsellee." In so holding, the court recognized the constitutional limitations on the judiciary in such disputes, but nonetheless stressed that whether such a claim is cognizable requires a determination that the court will not need to evaluate "dogma or ritual, or other matters of ecclesiastical concern." [451] MacDonell, 677 A.2d at 263. Likewise, the Colorado Supreme Court has recognized that HN4 in the context of spiritual counselling, the free exercise [10] clause is relevant only if the defendant can show that the conduct that allegedly caused plaintiff's distress was in fact part of the belief and practices of the religious group." DeStefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275, 283-84 (Colo. 1988). See also Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church, 898 F. Supp. 1169, 1174 (N.D.Tex. 1995). Accordingly, one court has observed that clerics cannot, using the shield of the first amendment, "masquerade[] in the form of marriage counsellors" and then "prey" on a counsellee. Sanders, 898 F. Supp. at 1175.

The plaintiff contends that he has properly pled claims of "psychotherapy malpractice" against both Pastor Greenquist and Bishop Hicks. The defendants n1 contend that these counts merely restate the allegations of the clergy malpractice claim previously dismissed by the trial judge -- claims the plaintiff concedes are not cognizable in an Illinois court. Although we acknowledge that the second amended complaint is not, in substance, radically different from the one previously dismissed, we will not determine the justiciability of these counts based upon the nomenclature used by the plaintiff in entitling the counts. That is, if the plaintiff's [11] allegations, as a whole, can be fairly construed as claims of negligence directed at conduct other than the defendants' performance of their clerical duties, his claims must be reinstated. See 735 ILCS 5/2-612 (West 1994) HN5 ("No pleading is bad in substance which contains such information as reasonably informs the opposite party of the nature of the claim.") On the other hand, if the factual allegations of the claims lead only to the conclusion that they allege malpractice by the defendants in their practice as members of the clergy, that would require us to adjudicate them pursuant to a reasonable cleric standard, hence rendering them non-justiciable as in Baumgartner.

n1 Pastor Greenquist has not filed an appellate brief in this matter. We review the claims as to him under the standards announced in First Capitol Mortgage Corp. v. Talandis Construction Corp., 63 Ill. 2d 128, 345 N.E.2d 493 (1976).

- - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

[*928] The plaintiff's complaint clearly alleges that the plaintiff sought marital counselling from Pastor Greenquist [12] and that Greenquist held himself out as a professional counsellor. Yet, the complaint also states that Greenquist "encouraged [congregants] to seek counselling from the church and its clergy before seeking secular professionals in order 'to promote unity, closeness and interdependence within members of the congregation' (in accordance with stated church doctrine)." Furthermore, Greenquist "was acting  in furtherance of stated church doctrine when he counselled" the plaintiff. The plaintiff then lodges six specific charges against Pastor Greenquist, all premised on the allegation that the Pastor "failed to exercise ordinary care" and "wilfully defrauded and deceived" the plaintiff. According to the complaint the Pastor (1) co-conspired with the plaintiff's wife to undermine the marriage; (2) did not divulge his conflict of interest; (3) failed to refer the plaintiff to a neutral counsellor; (4) rendered bad advice to further his own goals and sexual gratification; (5) divulged confidences to Linda; and (6) disregarded "all indicia of the transference and countertransference phenomena which normally occurs in the course of psychotherapy."

We note, initially, that each of these [13] allegations are based, in part, on an underlying allegation of fraud. The trial judge has permitted the plaintiff to replead a separate fraud count, the allegations of which essentially duplicate the ones above. HN6 Fraud is a distinct cause of action in Illinois. To that extent, we do not believe the allegations of fraud are germane to a count alleging professional negligence, be it that of a psychotherapist or a cleric. Cf. Williams v. Chicago Osteopathic Health Systems, 274 Ill. App. 3d 1039, 1048, 654 N.E.2d 613, 211 Ill. Dec. 151 (1995) (recognizing differing elements and standard of proof between medical malpractice and fraud.) Therefore, we address the count for malpractice solely to the extent it alleges that the Pastor breached a duty of care owed to the plaintiff. Furthermore, the allegation regarding the Pastor's conspiracy with Linda also has nothing to do [452] with the Pastor's counselling relationship with the plaintiff, and, hence, we find that it fails to state a claim for professional negligence.

As to the remaining allegations, were this case to involve directly the sexual relationship between cleric and counsellee, we might be inclined to consider the reasoning of the [14] court in MacDonell, 677 A.2d at 263, which, as noted, permitted a claim of clergy malpractice, stressing the "bright line between counselling culminating in a sexual relationship with a counsellee [*929] and other types of harm allegedly resulting from a failed counselling relationship." As in Bivin, the MacDonell court considered that when sexual misconduct is involved, the fear of treading on doctrinal matters is minimal, and to establish a standard of care involved "no impenetrable barrier." MacDonell, 677 A.2d at 264.

However, unlike in Bivin and MacDonell, the sexual liaison here, while impacting upon the plaintiff, involved his wife, who is not a plaintiff. Furthermore, to the extent the plaintiff alleges mishandling of the transference phenomenon, the Pastor did so with regard to Linda. Indeed, the plaintiff concedes in his brief that the Pastor's sexual liaison with Linda is not the focal point of his claim of negligent counselling.

In essence, the plaintiff's complaint alleges that Pastor Greenquist, while counselling him in accordance with duties established by church doctrine, breached his duty as a professional marriage counsellor. We believe there is [15] an inherent contradiction in this core allegation which exposes the problem with claims of malpractice against members of the clergy, even when couched in terms of professional or psychotherapy malpractice.

Nonetheless, the plaintiff urges, relying on the allegations of his complaint in conjunction with the decision in Horak v. Biris, 130 Ill. App. 3d 140, 474 N.E.2d 13, 85 Ill. Dec. 599 (1985), that Pastor Greenquist was required "to exercise the same professional care expected of other professionals in the field of psychotherapy." In Horak, a licensed social worker counselled the plaintiff on marital matters while he was engaged in a sexual relationship with the plaintiff's wife. The court recognized an action for social worker malpractice. However, central to the decision in that case was that the defendant held himself out as a social worker licensed by the State of Illinois. As such, he was required to exercise the degree of skill possessed by members of that profession.

The plaintiff's complaint does not allege that Greenquist is either a licensed social worker, licensed psychotherapist or a licensed marriage counsellor or that he held himself out as one. Indeed, during [16] the time when the plaintiff's claims accrued, HN7 the statutes in force authorizing the licensing of and the establishment of standards for practitioners of these professions specifically exempted religious practitioners from their ambit, so long as they do not hold themselves out as qualified under the acts. E.g. 225 ILCS 55/15(d) (West 1994) (Marriage and Family Therapy Licensing Act); 225 ILCS 20/4(2) (West 1994) (Clinical Social Work and Social Work Practice Act). Furthermore, to the extent Illinois has, subsequent to the alleged actions [*930] involved in this case, statutorily recognized an action for sexual exploitation within the confines of a psychotherapeutic relationship, it has limited recovery under that act to the victims of the exploitation and, in addition, excluded "counselling of a religious nature" from the definition of "psychotherapy." 740 ILCS 140/1(e) (West 1992) (Sexual Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act).

Finally, although the plaintiff does allege that Greenquist mishandled psychotherapeutic principles, such as the transference phenomenon, he does not allege that Pastor Greenquist had either formal training in and knowledge of these principles or any counselling training [17] outside of his training by the defendant ELCA. Indeed, the plaintiff's allegations presuppose that a Pastor is under the same ethical obligations the State imposes upon therapists it licenses. We cannot impose such obligations on a church within the constricts of the first amendment. That is the holding of Baumgartner, in which the court refused to impose the standards of the licensed medical professional upon a Christian Science practitioner. Accordingly, we will not uphold the plaintiff's complaint based upon the Horak decision.

[453] The plaintiff also urges that our supreme court's decision in Corgan v. Muehling, 143 Ill. 2d 296, 574 N.E.2d 602, 158 Ill. Dec. 489 (1991), permits his claims. The plaintiff contends that, as in Corgan, because he alleged that Greenquist held himself out as a "professional counsellor," Greenquist may be held accountable for his negligent counselling, generally. Corgan involved the allegations of a plaintiff involved in a sexual relationship with the defendant psychologist. Even accepting Corgan for the broad proposition advanced by the plaintiff, we note again that the allegations of the complaint indicate that Pastor Greenquist's [18] training as a counsellor was solely under the aegis of ELCA and was, thus, religious in nature.

The complaint does allege that the Pastor held himself out as a "skilled professional" in matters of counselling, but it also admits that the Pastor counselled in accordance with stated church doctrine and encouraged members to seek counselling within the church "before seeking secular professionals." The plaintiff alleged that Pastor Greenquist provided marriage counselling to him in accordance with church doctrine. That is not the same as a situation in which a plaintiff alleges that "a particular church  also offers purely secular counselling as a service to members of its congregation or to a broader segment of the population in need of such services." Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d 1425, 1433 (7th Cir. 1994). We believe that given the particular facts alleged by the plaintiff, a trial court would be required to investigate the nature of counselling, as well as the training [*931] of counsellors, within this particular church. That is not permitted in Illinois (Baumgartner v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, 141 Ill. App. 3d 898, 490 N.E.2d 1319, 96 Ill. Dec. 114 (1986)), or in any other jurisdiction. See Dausch, [19] 52 F.3d at 1432 n.2.

This area requires, as the MacDonell court recognized, that a bright line be drawn between those claims actionable and those which impinge on first amendment guarantees. In the factual context of this case, we believe that "line" requires us to uphold the trial judge's ruling. At core, the plaintiff has alleged that Pastor Greenquist is a very bad counsellor who tried during counselling sessions to hide an illicit affair with the plaintiff's wife. Yet, according to the complaint, he was performing the counselling itself in the context of duties imposed upon him as a cleric by church doctrine. And, as the plaintiff concedes, this case is about the counselling. We believe that to permit the plaintiff's claims would effectively erase the bright line espoused by the MacDonell court, a line we agree must be drawn. Accordingly, the trial judge did not err in dismissing the count for psychotherapy malpractice against Pastor Greenquist.

As to the plaintiff's allegations of malpractice against Bishop Hicks, we hold that the plaintiff has not properly alleged a counselling relationship, let alone an actionable duty. In response to the plaintiff's request that Bishop [20] Hicks render counselling services to him as a result of Pastor Greenquist's activities, the Bishop responded that the plaintiff should seek professional counselling. The plaintiff fails to allege any facts that support a conclusion that this was a "counselling" session. Rather, his complaint centers on the Bishop's refusal to counsel him. First, we believe that the allegations clearly indicate that the plaintiff approached the Bishop within the context of his duties as the head of the church. As such, the claim is clearly non-justiciable. Furthermore, we fail to perceive how the Bishop's response is actionable, even if he was acting in order to effect damage control, as the plaintiff alleges. We also conclude that the disciplinary action that Bishop Hicks subsequently did or did not take with regard to Pastor Greenquist is, as regards this case, outside any relationship he had with the plaintiff. The trial judge properly dismissed the psychotherapy malpractice claim against Bishop Hicks.

The plaintiff also alleges that both Pastor Greenquist and Bishop Hicks breached a fiduciary duty owed to the plaintiff. In the count against the Pastor, the plaintiff assigns, as breaches of the [21] duty, the same allegations, save the mishandling of the transference phenomenon, as he did in his count for malpractice. That is, that the Pastor "wilfully defrauded" him by undermining the marital relationship; divulging confidences to Linda; not revealing his conflict of [454] interest; and rendering advice against the plaintiff's best interest.

HN8 [*932] Under Illinois law, a fiduciary relationship is recognized to exist when "a special confidence [is] reposed in one who, by reason of such confidence, must act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the person reposing such confidence." Estate of Osborn, 128 Ill. App. 3d 453, 455, 470 N.E.2d 1114, 83 Ill. Dec. 694 (1984). Such a relationship may exist as a matter of law, "or it may be the result of a more informal relationship--moral, social, domestic or even personal in its origin." Estate of Osborn, 128 Ill. App. 3d at 455.

Applying this definition in Dausch v. Rykse, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that HN9 Illinois law, in conjunction with the first amendment, prohibited the recognition of an action for breach of fiduciary duty premised upon the counselling relationship between a cleric [22] and a church member with whom the cleric had been sexually involved. Dausch, 52 F.2d at 1438.

The Dausch court reasoned that in order to determine such a duty would require the court > "to define a reasonable duty standard and to evaluate [the cleric's] conduct against that standard, an inquiry identical to that which Illinois has declined to undertake in the context of a clergy malpractice claim and one that is of doubtful validity under the Free Exercise Clause. It is clear that Illinois would not entertain a claim for breach of fiduciary obligation under the circumstances alleged here." Dausch, 52 F.3d at 1438.

However, other jurisdictions which have faced this question have had "no difficulty" in concluding that a cleric's sexual activity with a counsellee or the spouse of a counsellee may be used by the counsellee as the basis to state a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty. DeStefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275, 289 (Colo. 1988). See also MacDonell, 677 A.2d at 264-65; Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church, 898 F. Supp. 1169 (N.D.Tex. 1995).

Although we agree with the courts in these jurisdictions that the relationship between a cleric [23] and parishioner reflects many aspects of a fiduciary one, we hold that HN10 under Illinois law, a contention that a cleric has breached his duty as a fiduciary is not actionable. We believe that when a parishioner lodges such a claim, religion is not "merely incidental" to a plaintiff's relationship with a defendant, "it [is] the foundation for it." H.R.B. v. J.L.G., 913 S.W.2d 92, 99 (Mo. App. 1995). The fiduciary relationship is inescapably premised upon the cleric's status as an expert in theological and spiritual matters. The plaintiff's complaint confirms this.

In lodging his claim for breach of fiduciary duty, the plaintiff alleged that in divulging confidences to the Pastor, he relied on the Pastor's "representations concerning his professionalism, training, [*933] skill, and experience, as well as [his] commitment to God and religion." We consider it imprudent for a court to attempt to dissect the secular from the sectarian in this equation. While we would consider unlikely the Pastor's ability to establish that his behavior in this case was religiously motivated (cf. H.R.B., 913 S.W.2d at 98-99), the plaintiff's relief lies in other well-recognized causes of action, such [24] as the count alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress, which we reinstate, as well as the fraud count which the trial judge permitted the plaintiff to replead and which repeatedly finds its way into every allegation of both malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty raised by the plaintiff. Thus, we affirm the dismissal of the counts for breach of fiduciary duty as against both Pastor Greenquist and Bishop Hicks. Furthermore, in light of our holding in this regard, we affirm the dismissal of counts seven, nine, twelve and thirteen of the plaintiff's complaint in that they are all claims of respondeat superior against the church defendants arising out of the alleged breaches of fiduciary duty by Pastor Greenquist and Bishop Hicks.

The trial judge also dismissed the plaintiff's count alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress against Pastor Greenquist. HN11 In order to plead such a claim, the plaintiff must allege facts establishing that the defendant's conduct was "extreme and [455] outrageous and that the defendant either intended his conduct to inflict severe emotional distress or knew that there was a high probability that the conduct would cause such distress." The plaintiff [25] also must allege that the conduct, in fact, caused severe emotional distress. McGrath v. Fahey, 126 Ill. 2d 78, 86, 533 N.E.2d 806, 127 Ill. Dec. 724 (1988).

HN12 A complaint for intentional infliction of emotional distress may stand "only where the conduct complained of [is] so outrageous 'as to go beyond all bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civil community.'" Pavilon v. Kaferly, 204 Ill. App. 3d 235, 245, 561 N.E.2d 1245, 149 Ill. Dec. 549 (1990). We may assess the outrageousness of a defendant's actions based, in part, upon a "defendant's improper use of a position of power which gives him the ability to adversely affect the plaintiff's interests." Kolegas v. Heftel Broadcasting Corp., 154 Ill. 2d 1, 22, 607 N.E.2d 201, 180 Ill. Dec. 307 (1992).

The plaintiff alleged that he sought counselling "concerning his failing marriage." Pastor Greenquist acted in an extreme and outrageous manner by counselling the plaintiff while the Pastor was involved with Linda Amato and by counselling in a manner designed to "covertly undermine" the couple's marriage. The plaintiff discovered the relationship between Greenquist and Linda when [26] he found correspondences the two had been exchanging, including [*934] Christmas and Valentine's Day cards, as well as "enclosed love letters." Greenquist told the plaintiff that his relationship with Linda was "God's will." The plaintiff concludes that as a result of the Pastor's actions, he has suffered "depression, despair, insomnia, anxiety, nervousness and emotional trauma."

We believe these allegations satisfy the plaintiff's pleading burden. The defendant allegedly used his position to learn confidential information, which he divulged to Linda in an effort to destroy the plaintiff's marriage. The plaintiff has alleged that the Pastor's actions were intentional and that he has suffered various and severe emotional distresses as a result. Cf. Kolegas, 154 Ill. 2d at 21-25. Therefore, we vacate the portion of the trial judge's order dismissing count II of the plaintiff's complaint.

The remaining counts are against the church defendants and sound in respondeat superior based upon the intentional infliction of emotional distress by Greenquist, as well as emotional distress occasioned by Bishop Hicks. HN13 Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer may be liable for the torts [27] of his servant when such acts are committed in the course of employment and in furtherance of the employer's business; however, the employer is not liable if the employee commits the acts solely for his own benefit. Giraldi v. Lamson, 205 Ill. App. 3d 1025, 1030, 563 N.E.2d 956, 150 Ill. Dec. 829 (1990).

As to the church defendants' liability for Pastor Greenquist's actions (counts VIII, X and XIV), we hold that the complaint fails to allege that the Pastor's actions in deceiving and otherwise counselling the plaintiff were for anything other than his own benefit. For instance, paragraph 25 of the common allegations states, "PASTOR did not reject DUANE'S requests for counselling or refer said request to an independent third party , but rather welcomed the opportunity to counsel DUANE in order to further his own personal goals." Furthermore, paragraph 26 of the common allegations states that "PASTOR  counselled DUANE against DUANE'S best interests in order to further PASTOR'S own material goals, to foster and promote his own sexual gratification, and to further undermine the relationship of his parishioners." Because these core factual allegations underlie all of the plaintiff's [28] respondeat superior counts involving Pastor Greenquist, the plaintiff cannot establish liability on this basis.

Count XI is entitled "respondeat superior-negligent infliction of emotional distress," and is based upon the actions of Bishop Hicks. In stating this claim, the plaintiff specifically incorporates the allegations against the Bishop in count V, which was a claim for psychotherapy malpractice. We agree with the church defendants that the [*935] essence of this claim is one for respondeat [456] superior based upon psychotherapy malpractice, a claim which we have already rejected with regard to Bishop Hicks. Therefore, that claim may not stand against the church defendants.

For all of the forgoing reasons, we affirm the judgment of the circuit court in dismissing all of the counts in the plaintiff's second amended complaint, with the exception of count II for intentional infliction of emotional distress against Pastor Greenquist, which we reinstate.

Affirmed in part, vacated in part and remanded for further proceedings.

KARL EHRENS, Plaintiff, - against - THE LUTHERAN CHURCH-MISSOURI SYNOD, THE LUTHERAN CHURCH-MISSOURI SYNOD ATLANTIC DISTRICT and RONALD F. FINK, Individually and as PRESIDENT OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH-MISSOURI SYNOD ATLANTIC DISTRICT, Defendants.

02 Civ. 2771 (CLB)

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10405

June 18, 2003, Decided

DISPOSITION: [*1] Defendants motion for summary judgment granted.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Plaintiff church member sought damages for sexual abuse he suffered while a minor at the hands of a pastor on retired status, now deceased. Defendants included the national religious organization of which the church was a part and the district where the pastor had previously served before retiring. Defendants moved for summary judgment pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56.

OVERVIEW: The member's church, where the pastor served on retired status, was part of a different district than the district being sued. Neither the national organization nor the district had the power to remove a pastor once called by a congregation. The pastor was convicted on criminal charges relating to the misconduct with the member. The member's legal theory was that defendants employed or supervised or retained the pastor in a position of trust with the knowledge that he had a history of sexually assaulting minors. The court held that the First Amendment prevented it from determining whether ecclesiastical authorities negligently supervised or retained a clergyman. Furthermore the member's evidence failed to satisfy the essential elements necessary to prevail in an action for negligence. He had not provided any admissible evidence that either the national organization or the district had requisite notice of the pastor's alleged proclivities to commit sexual assault.

OUTCOME: Defendants' motion for summary judgment was granted.

CORE TERMS: church, pastor, clergy, congregation, denomination, roster, supervision, retention, misconduct, religious, founded, priest, duty of care, ecclesiastical, sexual, inappropriate behavior, serious problem, sexual assault, governance, supervised, retired, assault, commit, hiring, summary judgment, genuine issue, material fact, matter of law, entanglement, negligently

HN2 Fed. R. Civ. Torts > Business & Employment Torts > Negligent Hiring & Supervision

HN3 Courts are prevented by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution from determining, after the fact, that ecclesiastical authorities negligently supervised or retained a clergyman. It is constitutionally dubious for a court or jury to set a standard of reasonable care for religious bodies which maintain rosters of clergy eligibility for employment by congregations. New York courts have ruled that any attempt to define the duty of care owed by a member of the clergy to a parishioner fosters excessive entanglement with religion. The same is true with regard to the duty of care in determining the continued eligibility of a priest to serve as a pastor. More Like This Headnote

Constitutional Law > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Religion > Establishment of Religion

HN4 Any inquiry into the policies and practices of church defendants in hiring or supervising their clergy raises the same kind of First Amendment problems of entanglement which might involve the court in making sensitive judgments about the propriety of the church defendants' supervision in light of their religious beliefs. Insofar as concerns retention or supervision, the pastor of some churches are not analogous to common law employees. The traditional denominations each have their own intricate principles of governance, as to which the state has no rights of visitation. Church governance is founded in scripture, modified by reformers over almost two millennia. As the United States Supreme Court stated long before the Lemon formulation was developed: It is not to be supposed that the judges of the civil courts can be as competent in the ecclesiastical law and religious faith of all these bodies as the ablest men in each are in reference to their own. It would therefore be an appeal from the more learned tribunal in the law which should decide the case, to one which is less so. More Like This Headnote

HN6 The mainstream denominations differ greatly in their rules and policies for "calling" and removing clergy. For a court to intervene to set standards of care for the performance of this work, which is founded in scripture and in history, implicating apostolic succession in some denominations, is as unconstitutional as it is impossible. The following facts are not in dispute except as noted. Plaintiff Karl Ehrens ("Ehrens") [*2] is a citizen of Wollaston, Massachusetts. Defendant The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod is a national religious organization with its principal place of business in St. Louis, Missouri. Defendant The Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod Atlantic District is a religious organization conducting business within the State of New York and having its principal office in Bronxville, New York. The Individual Defendant, Reverend Ronald F. Fink ("Rev. Fink"), was President of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod Atlantic District until 1989 and is a resident of the State of North Carolina. n2 n2 Defendant Fink has never been served with the summons and complaint in this action. The time to serve him has passed. Plaintiff has waived his opportunity to depose Rev. Fink. He was required by a prior direction of this Court to depose him by March 14, 2003 and did not do so.

The complaint pleads two claims against Defendant The Lutheran Church Missouri Synod framed as claims for negligence imposing responsibility for the wrongful conduct [*3] of Reverend Frederick Chapman, not sued, and now deceased, (count I), and negligent infliction of emotional distress (count II). These same two claims are alleged separately against Defendant The Lutheran Church Missouri Synod - Atlantic District. Plaintiff characterizes his claims as for "negligent hiring, supervision or retention" of a clergyman. See Plaintiff's Opposition brief filed May 14, 2003 at 10.

Because Reverend Fink was not served with process the action is dismissed against him at the outset and the counts pleaded against him are not considered.

Factual Background

HN1 Our analysis must be based on the facts well pleaded as amplified by the affidavits and exhibits, without regard to the legal theories or labels attached by the pleader. The facts, denied by Defendants, but assumed to be true for purposes of the motion, are found in the Plaintiff's complaint and brief in opposition (Doc. 24).

Some knowledge of the history and organization of the Lutheran Church in America is necessary to resolve the motion. Defendants take their name from the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther (1483-1546) a Roman Catholic priest whose act in posting his 95 theses on the church door [*4] in Wittenberg, in what is now Germany, on October 31, 1517, causes that day to be considered as the "Birthday of the Protestant Reformation". The 95 theses are also known as the Lutheran Confessions. The Lutheran Church itself was founded June 25, 1530. Its origin and growth parallel that of the Presbyterian Church, said to have been founded in Scotland by John Knox (1514-1572) and the Reformation of the Anglican Church under the leadership of Archbishop Thomas Cranmer (1489-1556) in England, and other subsequent European Protestant denominations.

Lutherans today are the third largest grouping of Christians, worldwide. Defendant Lutheran Church - Missouri Synod ("the Synod") was organized in 1847 and is but one of a number of similar bodies which constitute a unity, for purposes of self-government of their constituent member Lutheran churches in the United States and Canada. Defendant The Lutheran Church - Missouri Synod - Atlantic District, is an administrative facility within the Synod responsible for approximately 100 congregations in Metropolitan New York, Long Island and Eastern New York State. Massachusetts is within the New England District of the Synod.

Under the [*5] governance of the Synod, a congregation cannot become a member of the Synod until its Constitution and bylaws are approved by a District of the Synod. The Wollaston Church discussed infra was not a member of the Atlantic District although it did belong to the Missouri Synod.

A congregation may "call" (retain or employ) only ordained and commissioned workers who are members of the Synod. This requirement applies to a Pastor, as well as certain other church offices not material to this action. The right to call a Pastor remains exclusively with the Congregation, but one so called must be endorsed by and a member of the Synod. Such a person eligible to serve as a Pastor is said to be "rostered", in that his name appears on a list or roster of eligible priests maintained by the Synod. A Pastor once called may be removed from office only for cause by a two-thirds vote of the members of the congregation assembled. Neither the Synod nor the District has the power to remove a Pastor once called.

Reverend Frederick Chapman, now deceased, was Pastor of a Lutheran church in Laurelton, New York. Chapman served in the Atlantic District as a Pastor until 1981. At that time he requested and [*6] was granted emeritus (retired) status and moved to New England. His roster membership was subsequently transferred to the New England District, and Rev. Fink had no further contact with him of any kind. Reverend Chapman resigned from the national clergy roster in 1997. Frederick Chapman was retired on pension as of 1978 or 1979. Although retired he continued to remain on the roster and to serve at the Wollaston Church, until 1997.

Plaintiff Karl Ehrens was a member of Wollaston Lutheran Church, in the New England District. Plaintiff alleges that beginning in the Spring of 1994 until July 1995, while he was under age, Chapman took advantage of his pastoral role within the church (as Pastor Emeritus at Wollaston) and began to develop an inappropriate sexual relationship with Ehrens. Ehrens alleges that while he was alone with Ehrens, Chapman committed a series of sexual assaults upon him. Chapman was convicted in 1997 in Massachusetts on criminal charges relating to that misconduct.

Defendant Synod provides evidence that it was not until 1997 that the Atlantic District learned of allegations of sexual misconduct lodged against Frederick Chapman in Massachusetts. "No allegations [*7] of sexual misconduct are on record in the Atlantic District office." Exhibit B. There is no evidence to the contrary. Since, organizationally, the District is part of the Synod, its knowledge would be imputed to the Synod.

Discussion

HN2 F.R.Civ.P. 56 provides that summary judgment shall be rendered if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." In evaluating the record to determine whether there is a genuine issue as to any material fact, "the evidence of the non-movant is to be believed and all justifiable inferences are to be drawn in his favor." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, 477 U.S. 242, 255, 106 S. Ct. 2505, 2513, 91 L. Ed. 2d 202 (1986).

Plaintiff's legal theory is that Defendants employed or supervised or retained Chapman as a Pastor in a position of trust with the knowledge that he had a history of sexually assaulting minors. Plaintiff alleges that in 1977, while serving as Pastor in New York, Chapman was forced to leave that post because of inappropriate [*8] behavior towards female members including minors. Reverend Ronald Fink was the President of the Atlantic District in 1977 and is claimed to have had personal knowledge concerning that misconduct. In August 1980, in connection with Chapman's transfer to the New England District, Rev. Fink failed to inform the New England District of Chapman's prior misconduct, and Defendants allowed him to remain rostered, knowing that during his ministry in the New England District, Chapman would have unsupervised access to children, including Plaintiff. This failure is alleged to be the cause of Plaintiff's injuries which are the subject of the suit.

This Court agrees that Plaintiff's allegation that Chapman was "working for the Atlantic District" at the time of the alleged assaults is not supported by the evidence, and indeed is contradicted by his claims previously filed by Mr. Ehrens in his two prior lawsuits in Massachusetts.

Defendants point out, and this Court agrees that the HN3 Court is prevented by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution from determining, after the fact, that the ecclesiastical authorities of the Lutheran Church negligently supervised or retained a clergyman, [*9] as Plaintiff contends. It is constitutionally dubious for a court or jury to set a standard of reasonable care for religious bodies which maintain rosters of clergy eligibility for employment by congregations. New York courts have ruled that "any attempt to define the duty of care owed by a member of the clergy to a parishioner fosters excessive entanglement with religion." Langford v. Roman Catholic Diocese, 271 A.D.2d 494, 705 N.Y.S.2d 661, 662 (2d Dep't 2000). The same is true with regard to the duty of care in determining the continued eligibility of a priest to serve as a Pastor. As this Court has previously held in Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. 321 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) in which Plaintiff's claims against the Church Defendants were dismissed as a matter of law:

> HN4 "Any inquiry into the policies and practices of the Church Defendants in hiring or supervising their clergy raises the same kind of First Amendment problems of entanglement ... which might involve the Court in making sensitive judgments about the propriety of the Church Defendants' supervision in light of their religious beliefs. Insofar as concerns retention or supervision, the pastor [*10] of a Presbyterian Church is not analogous to a common law employee. He may not demit his charge nor be removed by the session, without the consent of the presbytery, functioning essentially as an ecclesiastical court. The traditional denominations each have their own intricate principles of governance, as to which the state has no rights of visitation. Church governance is founded in scripture, modified by reformers over almost two millenia.
> As the Supreme Court stated long before the Lemon formulation was developed: It is not to be supposed that the judges of the civil courts can be as competent in the ecclesiastical law and religious faith of all these bodies as the ablest men in each are in reference to their own. It would therefore be an appeal from the more learned tribunal in the law which should decide the case, to one which is less so. Watson v. Jones, 80 U.S. 679, 13 Wall. 679, 729, 20 L. Ed. 666 (1871). See also St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church of North America v. Kedroff, 302 N.Y. 2, 13, 96 N.E.2d 56 (1950) rev'd on other grounds, 344 U.S. 94, 73 S. Ct. 143, 97 L. Ed. 120 (1952).

HN5 The so-called "third [*11] prong" of the much maligned case of Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 29 L. Ed. 2d 745, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (1971) which forbade the state to "foster excessive government entanglement with religion" remains valid. We know from history that the First Amendment was passed in light of concern by Congress and the states that their new national government might at some future time follow the practices of European states in which the ruler for the time being presumed to dictate the religious affiliations of his subjects and interfere with the free exercise of their own conscience. We may not forget that "the men and women who left Scrooby for Leyden and eventually came to Plymouth in order to worship God where they wished and in their own way must have thought they had terminated the interference of public authorities with free and unhandicapped exercise of religion." n3

- - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - [*12]

Any effort of this Court to instruct the trial jury as to the duty of care by which a denomination keeps its "roster" of those priests (and others) authorized to accept canonical employment by a parish church would of necessity require the court and jury to consider the fundamental perspective and approach to ordination and supervision of clergy and constituent churches inherent in the beliefs and practices of the particular denomination. The selection and deployment of clergy is about as central to the life and purpose of a group of affiliated churches as anything we can imagine. HN6 The mainstream denominations differ greatly in their rules and policies for "calling" and removing clergy. For a court to intervene to set standards of care for the performance of this work, which is founded in scripture and in history, implicating apostolic succession in some denominations, is as unconstitutional as it is impossible. When such intervention is directed to retention, the problem becomes worse and such claims become a pleading substitute for the doctrine of respondent superior, inapplicable in New York to crimes committed by clergy, and not alleged by Plaintiff in this case. Bassile v. Covenant House, 152 Misc.2d 88, 575 NYS 2d 233 (1991); [*13] Joshua S. v. Casey, 206 A.D.2d 839, 615 NYS 2d 200 (1994 App. Div. 4th Dept.); Paul J.H. v. Lum, 291 A.D.2d 894, 736 NYS 2d 561 (2002 App. Div. 4th Dept.)

Any award of damages would have a chilling effect, leading indirectly to state control over the future conduct of affairs of a religious denomination, a result violative of the text and history of the establishment clause. Because it would be inappropriate and unconstitutional for this Court to determine after the fact that the ecclesiastical authorities negligently supervised or retained Reverend Chapman, this case must be dismissed.

Defendants also contend alternatively that there is no proof of prior notice to them that Chapman would commit a sexual assault against a young man sixteen years after he left the Atlantic District and moved to Massachusetts, simply by reason of a prior history of misconduct of an unspecified sexual nature years earlier with women.

HN7 Under New York law, to establish a prima facie case of negligence, the following must be shown: (i) a duty owed to the plaintiff; (ii) a breach of that duty; (iii) "a reasonably close casual connection between the contact and the resulting [*14] injury", and (iv) "actual loss, harm or damage." See Dooner v. Keefe, Bruyette & Woods, Inc., 157 F. Supp. 2d 265 (S.D.N.Y. 2001). Plaintiff's evidence fails to satisfy the essential elements necessary to prevail in an action for negligence.

Plaintiff argues that Defendants knew of "Chapman's pedophilic activities ... [as] confirmed by Chapman's subsequent conviction." See Id. at P 7. The conviction of Chapman occurred after the alleged assault in 1994. See Id. at P 18. It is illogical that Chapman's post- 1994 conviction could be used to create a foreseeable duty of care on the part of the Atlantic District and the Synod dating back to 1980, when Chapman's membership in the Atlantic District ended. n4 n4 The pre-sentence report used in connection with Chapman's Massachusetts conviction contains reference to an unidentified prior conviction of a sexual nature in New York. The report is not admissible evidence that such a conviction exists or that these Defendants knew of it at the time Chapman was called by the Wollaston Church.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

- - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - [*15]

Plaintiff has not pointed to admissible evidence that either the Synod or the Atlantic District had requisite notice of Chapman's alleged proclivities to commit sexual assault. See Def. Memo at p. 14.

HN8 To state a claim under New York law for negligent hiring, supervision, and retention, the plaintiff must show that "the employer knew or should have known of the employee's propensity for the conduct which caused the injury." Wilson v. the Diocese of New York of the Episcopal Church, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2051 *10 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 23, 1998); Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, 229 A.D.2d 159, 654 N.Y.S.2d 791, 793 (2d Dep't), cert. denied, 522 U.S. 967, 118 S. Ct. 413, 139 L. Ed. 2d 316 (1997). There must be evidence to establish that the employer knew or should have known of any alleged propensity on Chapman's part to commit sexual assault both prior to hiring him and throughout the period of his employment. See Kenneth R., 654 N.Y.S.2d at 795 ("There is no common-law duty to institute specific procedures for hiring employees unless the employer knows of facts that would lead a reasonably prudent person to [*16] investigate the prospective employee.").

Plaintiff directs this Court to a June 2, 1994 letter (Pl. Mem. in Opp. Ex. 8) concerning the evaluation of Chapman by a psychologist Dr. David B. Doolittle. The letter makes a reference to "a previous incident of [Chapman] touching a child ... on the leg in about 1976." See Id. Absent from the letter is whether the Defendants had knowledge of the incident. Plaintiff also refers to two letters in 1977 and 1978, one from Reverend Fink and one from Frederick Chapman. These letters refer to a serious problem concerning Chapman. They do not indicate that the problem was related to child molestation. Reverend Fink addressed this letter in his affidavit:

> I have reviewed a September 12, 1977 letter I wrote to the President of the Iowa District West concerning Mr. Chapman. In that letter, I noted I was not enclosing a "Confidential Information Blank" (which is a form that has basic curriculum vitae and background information about clergy members) because of what I described as a "serious problem" that had "not yet been resolved". The "serious problem" I was referring to did not involve any inappropriate behavior on the part of Mr. Chapman [*17] towards any members of any congregation, and it certainly did not involve any immoral or illegal acts on the part of Mr. Chapman.
> ****
> Moreover, Fink's affidavit dated December 6, 2002 states:
>
> "Prior to the lawsuit commenced by the plaintiff in Massachusetts, I knew of no allegations, complaints, charges or claims concerning Mr. Chapman's conduct, let alone any claim or allegation that he engaged in any purported 'inappropriate behavior toward female members of the Church, including minors' as alleged in the complaint filed in this action."

Reverend Fink Aff. 56.1 Ex. K P6.

Defendants show that "on or about July 27, 1977, Mr. Chapman submitted a letter informing Mr. Fink of his decision to resign from the pastorate of the Laurelton [New York] parish. The reason given for his resignation was due to a change in the ethnic [racial] makeup of the parishioners." See Doc. 11, Exhibit E, P3.

Because there is no evidence of notice which would support the existence of a duty to disclose, there is no negligence. Because, as noted earlier, these Defendants lack the power to remove a Pastor from a Congregation, there is no claim for negligent retention.

For the foregoing [*18] reasons, the motion is granted. The Clerk shall file a final judgment.

SO ORDERED.

SUPREME COURT OF UTAH

2001 UT 25; 21 P.3d 198; 416 Utah Adv. Rep. 32; 2001 Utah LEXIS 43

March 9, 2001, Filed

SUBSEQUENT HISTORY: [*1] Released for Publication April 5, 2001.

PRIOR HISTORY: Third District, Salt Lake. The Honorable J. Dennis Frederick.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Plaintiffs appealed an order from the Third District Court, Salt Lake County (Utah) dismissing their tort claims against defendants church and individual clerics, holding their tort claims required an impermissible imposition of a secular duty of care on pastoral counselors in the performance of their ecclesiastical counseling duties which was prohibited by the First Amendment.

OVERVIEW: Plaintiffs, a 14 year old sexually abused girl and her parents, claimed defendants mishandled their ecclesiastical counseling relationship by advising her to forgive, forget, and seek atonement or by advising her to seek outside help from an unlicensed therapist. Despite plaintiffs' allegations of gross negligence, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and breach of fiduciary duty, the court found the real issue was clergy malpractice. Malpractice required the court to determine whether defendants breached a duty to act with that degree of skill and knowledge normally possessed by members of the profession. Such a duty would need the court to express a standard of care to be followed by other reasonable clerics in the performance of their ecclesiastical counseling duties, which would embroil the courts in establishing the training, skill, and standards applicable for members of the clergy. This was as impossible as it was unconstitutional, and would foster an excessive government entanglement with religion in violation of the Establishment Clause. The complaint did not plead fraud with sufficient particularity to withstand summary judgment.

OUTCOME: The judgment dismissing plaintiffs' tort claims against defendant church was affirmed. The trial court correctly determined plaintiff's claims for gross negligence, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and breach of fiduciary duty were barred by the First Amendment.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Defenses, Objections & Demurrers > Motions to Dismiss

HN1 An appeal from a motion to dismiss under Utah R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) reviews only the facts alleged in the complaint. In so doing, the court accepts the factual allegations in the complaint as true and considers all reasonable inferences to be drawn from those facts in a light most favorable to the plaintiff. Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Defenses, Objections & Demurrers > Motions to Dismiss

Civil Procedure > Appeals > Standards of Review > De Novo Review

HN2 Under rule Utah R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), a motion to dismiss is proper only where it clearly appears that the plaintiff would not be entitled to relief under the facts alleged or under any state of facts they could prove to support their claim. Accordingly, the reviewing court will affirm the trial court's dismissal only if it is apparent that as a matter of law, the plaintiff could not recover under the facts alleged. Because the reviewing court considers only the legal sufficiency of the complaint, it grants the trial court's ruling no deference; it reviews it for correctness. More Like This Headnote

Constitutional Law > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Religion > Free Exercise of Religion

HN3 The First Amendment, applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment, provides that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibit the free exercise thereof. These two clauses are known, respectively, as the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause. More Like This Headnote

Constitutional Law > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Religion > Establishment of Religion

HN4 The Establishment Clause does not merely prohibit the establishment of a state church or a state religion, but commands that there should be no law respecting an establishment of religion. U.S. Const. amend. I. Accordingly, laws that do not establish a religion but that are a step that could lead to such establishment may violate the First Amendment. Moreover, the United States Supreme Court has broadly interpreted the command to make no law respecting an establishment of religion as prohibiting all forms of governmental action, including both statutory law and court action through civil lawsuits. More Like This Headnote

HN5 Lemon v. Kurtzman adopted a three-part test to determine whether governmental activity constitutes a law respecting an establishment of religion. Specifically, for governmental action not to be a law respecting an establishment of religion, the action (1) must have a secular legislative purpose, (2) must neither advance nor inhibit religion, and (3) must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. HN6 In addressing the tort liability of clergy under the Establishment Clause, courts have focused on the "third prong" of the Lemon test, excessive government entanglement. More Like This Headnote

HN7 The excessive entanglement test is, by necessity, one of degree. Indeed, separation of church and state cannot mean the absence of all governmental contact with religion, since the complexities of modern life inevitably produce some contact. In light of this reality, the entanglement doctrine does not bar tort claims against clergy for misconduct not within the purview of the First Amendment, because the claims are unrelated to the religious efforts of a cleric. HN8 Civil tort claims against clerics that require the courts to review and interpret church law, policies, or practices in the determination of the claims are barred by the First Amendment under the entanglement doctrine. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Malpractice Liability > Misconduct Generally
HN9 Courts throughout the United States have uniformly rejected claims for clergy malpractice under the First Amendment. A determination of such claims would necessarily entangle the courts in the examination of religious doctrine, practice, or church polity--an inquiry that is prohibited by the Establishment Clause. More Like This Headnote

Constitutional Law > Fundamental Freedoms > Freedom of Religion > Establishment of Religion
Torts > Malpractice Liability > Misconduct Generally
HN10 Regardless of whether a claim against a cleric is one for malpractice, the claim will not survive constitutional scrutiny if an adjudication of the claim would foster an excessive governmental entanglement with religion in violation of the Establishment Clause. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress
HN11 Due to the highly subjective and volatile nature of emotional distress and the variability of its causation, the courts have historically been wary of dangers in opening the door to recovery therefor. This is partly because such claims may easily be fabricated: or as sometimes stated, are easy to assert and hard to defend against. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress
HN12 To state a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant intentionally engaged in some conduct toward the plaintiff, (a) with the purpose of inflicting emotional distress, or, (b) where any reasonable person would have known that such would result; and his actions are of such a nature as to be considered outrageous and intolerable in that they offend against the generally accepted standards of decency and morality. More Like This Headnote

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Interpretation
HN13 The sufficiency of a plaintiff's pleadings must be determined by the facts pleaded rather than the conclusions stated. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress
HN14 To be considered outrageous for a claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress, the conduct must evoke outrage or revulsion; it must be more than unreasonable, unkind, or unfair. Furthermore, an act is not necessarily outrageous merely because it is tortious, injurious, or malicious, or because it would give rise to punitive damages, or because it is illegal. Civil Procedure > Appeals > Reviewability > Preservation for Review

HN15 It is a "fundamental rule" that constitutional questions should not be reached if the merits of the case can be determined on other than constitutional grounds. More Like This Headnote

Civil Procedure > Summary Judgment > Summary Judgment Standard

HN16 A grant of summary judgment is appropriate only if there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law. Utah R. Civ. P. 56(c). On appeal from a summary judgment, the appellate court accepts the facts and inferences in the light most favorable to the losing party. Because the appellate court resolves only legal issues in reviewing a summary judgment, it gives no deference to the trial court's view of the law; it reviews the trial court for correctness. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Business & Employment Torts > Deceit & Fraud

HN17 To establish fraud under Utah law, a party must prove by clear and convincing evidence each of the following elements: (1) That a representation was made; (2) concerning a presently existing material fact; (3) which was false; (4) which the representor either (a) knew to be false, or (b) made recklessly, knowing that he had insufficient knowledge upon which to base such representation; (5) for the purpose of inducing the other party to act upon it; (6) that the other party, acting reasonably and in ignorance of its falsity; (7) did in fact rely upon it; (8) and was thereby induced to act; (9) to his injury and damage. More Like This Headnote

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Pleadings > Heightened Pleading Requirements

HN18 To state a claim for fraud, a plaintiff must plead not only that the defendant made a material representation that was false, but also that the defendant either knew the representation to be false or made the representation recklessly, knowing that he or she had insufficient knowledge upon which to base such a representation. Moreover, a claim for fraud must state the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake with particularity. Utah R. Civ. P. 9(b). Mere conclusory allegations in a pleading, unsupported by a recitation of relevant surrounding facts, are insufficient to preclude summary judgment. More Like This Headnote [*P1] Plaintiffs Lynette Earl Franco ("Franco") and her parents Ralph and Janice Earl appeal the district court's dismissal of their tort claims against defendants The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (the "LDS Church"), Dennis Casaday, an LDS Church ward n1 bishop, n2 and David Christensen, an LDS Church stake n3 president n4 (collectively, "the LDS Church Defendants"). Franco sued the LDS Church Defendants for injuries she allegedly suffered as a result of advice she received during ecclesiastical counseling. We affirm.

BACKGROUND

[*P2] Because this is HN1 an appeal from a motion to dismiss under rule 12(b)(6) of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure, n5 "we review only the facts alleged in the complaint." Educators Mut. Ins. Ass'n v. Allied Property & Cas. Ins. Co., 890 P.2d 1029, 1029 (Utah 1995). "In so doing, we 'accept the factual allegations in the complaint as true and consider all reasonable inferences to be drawn from those facts in a light most favorable to the plaintiff.'" 890 P.2d at 1029-30 (quoting Prows v. State, 822 P.2d 764, 766 (Utah 1991)); see also Lowe v. Sorenson Research Co., 779 P.2d 668, 669 (Utah 1989).

n5 In its memorandum decision, the trial court stated that it had considered evidence outside of the parties' memoranda and therefore, although entitled a motion to dismiss, the LDS Church Defendants' motion was more appropriately treated as a motion for summary judgment under rule 56(c) of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure. However, the only outside evidence presented by the parties related solely to Franco's claim for fraud. Therefore, we treat the LDS Church Defendants' motion to dismiss Franco's fraud claim as one for summary judgment as provided for in rule 56 of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure. See part IIIC infra. However, with regard to Franco's remaining claims, we treat the LDS Church Defendants' motion as a motion to dismiss under rule 12(b)(6) of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure.

process of the ecclesiastical counseling, Franco determined that she needed additional help and therefore asked Casaday and Christensen to refer her to a licensed mental health professional. In accordance with this request, Casaday and Christensen referred Franco and her parents to Dr. Paul Browning ("Browning"), allegedly stating [4] that Browning was "well qualified to help them." Browning was employed by the Bountiful Mental Health Center, where he worked under Craig Berthold ("Berthold"), a licensed clinical social worker. On his business card, Browning held himself out as practicing "Individual, Marital, and Family Counseling," under the heading of "General Psychiatry." However, Browning was not a licensed mental health professional in the state of Utah. Upon receiving the referral from Casaday and Christensen, Browning counseled with Franco and her parents at the Bountiful Mental Health Center, advising Franco to forgive Strong and forget the incidents of sexual abuse rather than to inform the police. Finding Browning's advice unsatisfactory, Franco and her parents sought advice from another secular counselor, who then reported the incidents of sexual abuse to the police. After the incidents of sexual abuse were reported to the police, Franco alleged that she was "ostracized and denigrated" by the members of her local LDS Church ward, with the acquiescence of Casaday and Christensen, and therefore withdrew from the LDS Church.

[*P4] Based on the above-described allegations, Franco asserted six claims [5] against the LDS Church Defendants, n6 all in tort: (1) clerical malpractice; (2) gross negligence; (3) negligent infliction of emotional distress; (4) breach of fiduciary duty; (5) intentional infliction of emotional distress; and (6) fraud. On April 18, 1997, Franco voluntarily dismissed her case, and she refiled it on April 4, 1998, asserting the same claims.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n6 In addition to asserting claims against the LDS Church Defendants, Franco also asserted claims against Dennis Strong and Marian Strong, Jason Strong's parents (collectively, the "Strongs") and Browning, Berthold, and the Bountiful Mental Health Center (collectively, the "Mental Health Defendants"). However, the Strongs and the Mental Health Defendants each filed separate motions to dismiss Franco's claims against them under rule 12(b)(6) of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure, which the trial court granted. In this appeal, Franco does not argue that the trial court erred in dismissing her claims against the Strongs or the Mental Health Defendants.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

[*P5] [6] The LDS Church Defendants did not file an answer to Franco's complaint but moved to dismiss under rule 12(b)(6) of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure. In their motion, the LDS Church Defendants argued that as a matter of law, Franco could not recover under any of her theories. Specifically, the LDS Church Defendants contended that a determination of Franco's claims would necessarily implicate an excessive governmental entanglement with religion because resolution of the claims would require the courts to impose a secular duty of care on pastoral counselors and therefore the claims were barred by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. The LDS Church Defendants further contended that even if Franco's claims were not barred by the First Amendment, her fraud and emotional distress claims failed as a matter of Utah law.

[*P6] In response, Franco argued that her tort claims did not require an inquiry into the LDS Church's religious doctrines, practices, or beliefs and therefore the First Amendment was inapplicable. Moreover, Franco argued that she had sufficiently stated claims for fraud and emotional distress under Utah law.

[*P7] On October 13, 1998, the trial [7] court issued a memorandum decision n7 dismissing Franco's tort claims against the LDS Church Defendants. The trial court held that each of Franco's tort claims was based on allegations that the LDS Church Defendants (1) counseled with Franco in an ecclesiastical setting and (2) recommended Browning as someone whom Franco might consult for further counseling and that, by doing so, the LDS Church Defendants departed from accepted [202] practices in the services rendered. In light of these allegations, the trial court concluded that Franco's claims were essentially asking the court to impose a secular duty of care on pastoral counselors in the performance of their ecclesiastical counseling duties, which the trial court concluded was prohibited by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. In addition, the trial court held that there were no allegations that the LDS Church Defendants "had any indication their conduct might cause bodily harm or that they engaged in conduct of such a nature as to be considered outrageous and intolerable" and therefore any claims for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress failed as a matter of law.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - - - n7 The trial court's memorandum decision was contained in a minute entry.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - [8]

[*P8] On December 23, 1998, Franco appealed to this court. Franco argues that the trial court erred in holding that her claims for gross negligence, negligent infliction of emotional distress, breach of fiduciary duty, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and fraud are barred by the First Amendment. Specifically, Franco argues that her tort claims do not require an inquiry into the LDS Church's practices or religious beliefs and therefore the First Amendment does not offer the LDS Church Defendants any protection from her claims. Franco does not argue on appeal, however, that the trial court erred in its determination that her claim for clerical malpractice was barred by the First Amendment.

[*P9] In response, the LDS Church Defendants argue that the essence of Franco's claims, like her clerical malpractice claim, was that the clergymen failed to properly perform their ecclesiastical counseling duties and that based on these allegations, the trial court correctly dismissed the claims under the First Amendment. Moreover, the LDS Church Defendants argue that Franco's claims for fraud, gross negligence, and negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress [9] fail as a matter of Utah law.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

[*P10] HN2 Under rule 12(b)(6) of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure, a motion to dismiss is proper "only where it clearly appears that the plaintiff or plaintiffs would not be entitled to relief under the facts alleged or under any state of facts they could prove to support their claim." Prows v. State, 822 P.2d 764, 766 (Utah 1991) (citing Colman v. Utah State Land Bd., 795 P.2d 622, 624 (Utah 1990)). Accordingly, we will affirm the trial court's dismissal "'only if it is apparent that as a matter of law, the plaintiff could not recover under the facts alleged.'" Educators Mut. Ins. Ass'n v. Allied Property & Cas. Ins. Co., 890 P.2d 1029, 1030 (Utah 1995) (quoting Lowe v. Sorenson Research Co., 779 P.2d 668, 669 (Utah 1989)). ANALYSIS

I. OVERVIEW OF FIRST AMENDMENT PRINCIPLES

[*P11] HN3 The First Amendment to the United States Constitution, applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment, [10] see Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S.

296, 303, 84 L. Ed. 1213, 60 S. Ct. 900 (1940), provides in pertinent part: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibit the free exercise thereof . . . ." These two clauses are known, respectively, as the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause. In this case, the LDS Church Defendants rely primarily on the Establishment Clause in making their constitutional argument that Franco's claims are barred by the First Amendment. n8

n8 Justice Durrant states in his concurring opinion that although he agrees with our analysis of the issues presented in this case under the Establishment Clause, he believes that the issues could also be analyzed under the Free Exercise Clause. However, as noted above, the LDS Church Defendants rely primarily on the Establishment Clause in making their constitutional argument. Specifically, the LDS Church Defendants argue, inter alia, that the First Amendment bars Franco's claims because an adjudication of the claims would foster an excessive governmental entanglement with religion. As we will discuss in greater detail infra, the analytical framework set forth by the United States Supreme Court in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 29 L. Ed. 2d 745, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (1971), places the entanglement assessment under the Establishment Clause. Therefore, because the LDS Church Defendants relied primarily on the Establishment Clause in making their constitutional argument, and because the Establishment Clause is dispositive of the issues before us, we do not address the Free Exercise Clause in this case.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - - [11]

[*P12] [203] In Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 29 L. Ed. 2d 745, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (1971), the United States Supreme Court explained that HN4 the Establishment Clause does not merely prohibit the establishment of a state church or a state religion, but commands "that there should be 'no law respecting an establishment of religion.'" Id. at 612 (quoting U.S. Const. amend. I). Accordingly, laws that do not establish a religion but that are "a step that could lead to such establishment" may violate the First Amendment. Id. Moreover, the United States Supreme Court has broadly interpreted the command to "make no law respecting an establishment of religion" as prohibiting all forms of governmental action, including both statutory law and court action through civil lawsuits. See Kreshik v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 363 U.S. 190, 191, 4 L. Ed. 2d 1140, 80 S. Ct. 1037 (1960) (per curiam).

[*P13] Lemon and subsequent cases have relied on HN5 a three-part test to determine whether governmental activity constitutes a "law respecting an establishment of religion." Specifically, for governmental action not to be a law respecting an establishment [12] of religion, the action (1) must have a "secular legislative purpose," (2) must "neither advance[] nor inhibit[] religion," and (3) must not foster "'an excessive government entanglement with religion.'" Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612-13 (quoting Walz v. Tax Comm'n, 397 U.S. 664, 668, 25 L. Ed. 2d 697, 90 S. Ct. 1409 (1970)). HN6 In addressing the tort liability of clergy under the Establishment Clause, courts have focused on the "third prong" of the Lemon test, "excessive government entanglement." See Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d 1425, 1432 (7th Cir. 1994) (Ripple, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Coffey, J., concurring) (applying entanglement doctrine to tort claim against clergyman); Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. 321, 328 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (same); Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley, 47 Cal. 3d 278, 763 P.2d 948, 960, 253 Cal. Rptr. 97 (Cal. 1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1007, 104 L. Ed. 2d 159, 109 S. Ct. 1644 (1989) (same); Konkle v. Henson, 672 N.E.2d 450, 454 (Ind. Ct. App. 1996) (same); H.R.B. v. J.L.G., 913 S.W.2d 92, 98-99 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995) [13] (same); Turner v. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, 18 S.W.3d 877, 897 (Tex. App. 2000) (same); L.L.N. v. Clauder, 209 Wis. 2d 674, 563 N.W.2d 434, 440 (Wis. 1997) (same).

[*P14] HN7 The excessive entanglement test is, by necessity, one of degree. Indeed, separation of church and state cannot mean the absence of all governmental contact with religion, "since the complexities of modern life inevitably produce some contact." 16A Am. Jur. 2d Constitutional Law § 422, at 405 (1998). In light of this reality, the entanglement doctrine does not bar tort claims against clergy for misconduct not within the purview of the First Amendment, because the claims are unrelated to the religious efforts of a cleric. See, e.g., Heath v. First Baptist Church, 341 So. 2d 265 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App.), cert. denied, 348 So. 2d 946 (Fla. 1977) (holding that church may be held liable for slip and fall on the premises under negligence claim); Fintak v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 51 Ill. App. 3d 191, 366 N.E.2d 480, 9 Ill. Dec. 223 (Ill. App. Ct. 1977) (same); Bass v. Aetna Ins. Co., 370 So. 2d 511 (La. 1979) [14] (holding church liable for negligence of pastor who created an unreasonable risk of injury by not clearing aisles to make way for running "in the Spirit," a form of religious expression in that church).

[*P15] However, it is well settled that HN8 civil tort claims against clerics that require the courts to review and interpret church law, policies, or practices in the determination of the claims are barred by the First Amendment under the entanglement doctrine. See Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 709-10, 49 L. Ed. 2d 151, 96 S. Ct. 2372 (1976); Dausch, 52 F.3d at 1432; L.L.N., 563 N.W.2d at 440. For, as the Supreme Court stated in Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral, 344 U.S. 94, 97 L. Ed. 120, 73 S. Ct. 143 (1952), churches must have "power to decide for themselves, free [204] from state interference, matters of church government as well as those of faith and doctrine." Id. at 116.

II. CLAIMS FOR CLERGY MALPRACTICE

[*P16] In light of the First Amendment principles discussed above, the question of whether courts can adjudicate a claim for clergy malpractice has become a [15] frequently litigated issue in recent years. See, e.g., Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley, 47 Cal. 3d 278, 763 P.2d 948, 960, 253 Cal. Rptr. 97 (Cal. 1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1007, 104 L. Ed. 2d 159, 109 S. Ct. 1644 (1989); Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275, 285 (Colo. 1988); Hester v. Barnett, 723 S.W.2d 544, 550 (Mo. Ct. App. 1987); Byrd v. Faber, 57 Ohio St. 3d 56, 565 N.E.2d 584, 586 (Ohio 1991). Moreover, "the issue has generated a growing body of scholarly commentary." Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. 321, 327 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (citing Samuel E. Ericsson, Clergyman Malpractice: Ramifications of a New Theory, 16 Val. U. L. Rev. 163 (1981); Michael J. Florillo, Comment, Clergy Malpractice: Should Pennsylvania Recognize a Cause of Action for Improper Counseling by a Clergyman?, 192 Dick. L. Rev. 223 (1987); G. Grace McCaffrey, Note, Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley: Clergy Malpractice--A Threat to Both Liberty and Life, 11 Pace L. Rev. 137 (1990)).

[*P17] However, despite the apparent controversy, HN9 [16] courts throughout the United States have uniformly rejected claims for clergy malpractice under the First Amendment. See Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d 1425, 1432 (7th Cir. 1994) (Ripple, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Coffey, J., concurring) ("Indeed, a cause of action for clergy malpractice has been rejected uniformly by the states that have considered it."). These courts have generally held that a determination of such claims would necessarily entangle the courts in the examination of religious doctrine, practice, or church polity--an inquiry that we have already explained is prohibited by the Establishment Clause. See, e.g., Destefano, 763 P.2d at 285; Amato v. Greenquist, 287 Ill. App. 3d 921, 679 N.E.2d 446, 453, 223 Ill. Dec. 261 (Ill. App. Ct. 1997); Baumgartner v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, 141 Ill. App. 3d 898, 490 N.E.2d 1319, 1324, 96 Ill. Dec. 114 (Ill. App. Ct.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 915, 93 L. Ed. 2d 290, 107 S. Ct. 317 (1986); Schieffer v. Catholic Archdiocese, 244 Neb. 715, 508 N.W.2d 907, 912 (Neb. 1993).

[*P18] For example, [17] in Nally, like the case at hand, parishioners sued a clergyman for allegedly mishandling the pastoral counseling relationship. Specifically, the plaintiffs alleged that the clergyman was negligent in failing to warn them of the mental state of their son, whom the clergyman had counseled, but who ultimately committed suicide. Nally, 763 P.2d at 952. In resolving the case, the California Supreme Court considered and rejected the clergy malpractice theory of liability, stating:

Because of the differing theological views espoused by the myriad of religions in our state and practiced by church members, it would certainly be impractical, and quite possibly unconstitutional, to impose a duty of care on pastoral counselors. Such a duty would necessarily be intertwined with the religious philosophy of the particular denomination or ecclesiastical teachings of the religious entity.

763 P.2d at 960 (emphasis added).

[*P19] Similarly, in White v. Blackburn, 787 P.2d 1315 (Utah Ct. App. 1990), under strikingly similar facts to the case at hand, the Utah Court of Appeals also considered and rejected the clergy malpractice theory of liability. [18] See 787 P.2d at 1318-19. In White, parents asserted a claim for malpractice against a clergyman, not for negligently referring a parishioner to outside counseling--the factual allegations in the case at hand, but for negligently failing to refer their son "to trained professionals." Id. at 1318. In dismissing the clergy malpractice claim, the court of appeals stated:

Appellant wishes to impose a duty upon [clergy] to make further inquiry into the alleged family conflicts, and then, if beyond [their] expertise, refer [parishioners] to others who are qualified to treat such problems. Under the present circumstances, charging lay clergy with this duty of care goes too far because it approaches [205] the same level of care imposed upon trained professionals in medicine and psychology.

"Even assuming that workable standards of care could be established in the present case, . . . such a duty would necessarily be intertwined with the religious philosophy of the particular denomination or ecclesiastical teachings of the religious entity."

787 P.2d at 1318-19 (quoting Nally, 763 P.2d at 960). We find the [19] reasoning of the Nally and White courts to be sound.

III. FRANCO'S CLAIMS

A. Negligence-Based Claims

[*P20] Franco's complaint pleads claims against the LDS Church Defendants for gross negligence, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and breach of fiduciary duty ("negligence-based claims"). Franco argues that these claims are different from a clergy malpractice claim in substance and effect and therefore the First Amendment is inapplicable. The LDS Church Defendants argue, however, that despite Franco's "creative pleading," her claims are merely a roundabout way of alleging clergy malpractice and therefore the claims are barred by the First Amendment.

[*P21] As an initial matter, we must emphasize that HN10 regardless of whether a claim against a cleric is one for malpractice, the claim will not survive constitutional scrutiny if an adjudication of the claim would foster an excessive governmental entanglement with religion in violation of the Establishment Clause. However, that said, we agree with the LDS Church Defendants that Franco's negligence-based claims are merely an elliptical way of alleging clergy malpractice.

[*P22] An examination of Franco's [20] complaint reveals that each of her negligence-based claims alleges that while counseling with Franco in the context of an ecclesiastical counseling relationship, the LDS Church Defendants breached a duty owed to Franco by advising her to "forgive, forget, and seek Atonement" or by advising her to seek outside help from Browning, an unlicensed therapist. Accordingly, like her clergy malpractice claim, which she abandoned on appeal, the essence of each of Franco's negligence-based claims is that the LDS Church Defendants generally mishandled the pastoral counseling relationship by giving bad advice--claims necessarily directed at the LDS Church Defendants' performance of their ecclesiastical counseling duties. Therefore, despite Franco's characterization of her negligence-based claims as gross negligence, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and breach of fiduciary duty, we must deal with the real issue here--clergy malpractice. See Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d 1425, 1438 (7th Cir. 1994) (Ripple, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part, joined by Coffey, J., concurring) (stating that district court correctly determined that plaintiff's claim for breach of fiduciary [21] duty was "simply an elliptical way of alleging clergy malpractice"); Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. 321, 327 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) ("As with her negligence claim, [plaintiff's] fiduciary duty claim is merely another way of alleging that the [clergyman] grossly abused his pastoral role, that is, that he engaged in malpractice."); Amato v. Greenquist, 287 Ill. App. 3d 921, 679 N.E.2d 446, 451, 223 Ill. Dec. 261 (Ill. App. Ct. 1997) (stating that "we will not determine the justiciability of [plaintiff's] counts based upon the nomenclature used by the plaintiff in entitling the counts" in determining whether a negligence claim against a cleric is essentially a malpractice claim).

[*P23] Because Franco's negligence-based claims allege that the LDS Church Defendants generally mishandled their ecclesiastical counseling duties, a determination of the claims, like the clergy malpractice claims asserted in Nally and White, could not be made without first ascertaining whether the LDS Church Defendants performed within the level of expertise expected of a similar professional, i.e., a reasonably prudent bishop, priest, rabbi, minister, or other [22] cleric in this state. Indeed, malpractice is a theory of tort that would involve the courts in a determination of whether the cleric in a particular case--here an LDS Church bishop--breached the duty to act with that degree of "skill and knowledge normally possessed by members [206] of that profession." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 299A (1965). Defining such a duty would necessarily require a court to express the standard of care to be followed by other reasonable clerics in the performance of their ecclesiastical counseling duties, which, by its very nature, would embroil the courts in establishing the training, skill, and standards applicable for members of the clergy in this state in a diversity of religions professing widely varying beliefs. This is as impossible as it is unconstitutional; to do so would foster an excessive government entanglement with religion in violation of the Establishment Clause. See, e.g., Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d at 1432 (Ripple, Circuit J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (stating that an evaluation of a clergy malpractice claim would require courts to evaluate and investigate religious tenets and doctrines); Hester v. Barnett, 723 S.W.2d 544, 553 (Mo. Ct. App. 1987) [23] (stating that clergy malpractice would force courts to judge "competence, training, methods and content of the pastoral function"); F.G. v. MacDonell, 150 N.J. 550, 696 A.2d 697, 706 (N.J. 1997) (O'Hern, J., dissenting) (stating that creating a tort of clergy malpractice would "establish an official religion of the state"); Bladen v. First Presbyterian Church of Sallisaw, 857 P.2d 789, 797 (Okla. 1993) ("Once a court enters the realm of trying to define the nature of advice a minister should give a parishioner serious First Amendment issues are implicated.").

[*P24] Accordingly, we conclude that the trial court correctly determined that Franco's claims against the LDS Church Defendants for gross negligence, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and breach of fiduciary duty are barred by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

B. Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

[*P25] In addition to her negligence-based claims, Franco also asserted a claim against the LDS Church Defendants for intentional infliction of emotional distress. In Samms v. Eccles, 11

Utah 2d 289, 358 P.2d 344 (1961), this [24] court stated:

HN11 Due to the highly subjective and volatile nature of emotional distress and the variability of its causations, the courts have historically been wary of dangers in opening the door to recovery therefor. This is partly because such claims may easily be fabricated: or as sometimes stated, are easy to assert and hard to defend against.

Samms, 11 Utah 2d at 291, 358 P.2d at 345. Accordingly, HN12 to state a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, a plaintiff must allege that the defendant "intentionally engaged in some conduct toward the plaintiff, (a) with the purpose of inflicting emotional distress, or, (b) where any reasonable person would have known that such would result; and his actions are of such a nature as to be considered outrageous and intolerable in that they offend against the generally accepted standards of decency and morality."

Jackson v. Brown, 904 P.2d 685, 687-88 (Utah 1995) (emphasis added) (quoting Samms, 11 Utah 2d at 293, 358 P.2d at 347).

[*P26] HN13 The sufficiency of Franco's pleadings "must be determined by the facts pleaded rather than the conclusions stated." Ellefsen v. Roberts, 526 P.2d 912, 915 (Utah 1974). [25] In light of this standard, Franco's claim under this cause of action pleads the following operative facts: that during ecclesiastical counseling, Franco asked the LDS Church Defendants to refer her to a licensed mental health professional; that in accordance with her request, the LDS Church Defendants referred Franco to Browning at the Bountiful Mental Health Center, allegedly stating that he was "well qualified to help"; and that despite this representation, Browning was not qualified to render the appropriate treatment. Franco alleges [207] that the LDS Church Defendants referred her to Browning for the "purpose" of protecting Strong and the LDS Church and that these actions were made "in a reckless and intentional manner that was extreme and outrageous" and caused her severe emotional distress.

[*P28] Moreover, Franco's complaint alleges no action by the LDS Church Defendants that can be "considered outrageous and intolerable in that [it] offends against the generally accepted standards of decency and morality." Samms, 11 Utah 2d at 293, 358 P.2d at 347. HN14 To be considered outrageous, "the conduct must evoke outrage or revulsion; it must be more than unreasonable, unkind, or unfair." 86 C.J.S., supra P 27, § 70, at 722. Furthermore, "an act is not necessarily outrageous merely because it is tortious, injurious, or malicious, or because it would give rise to punitive damages, or because it is illegal." Id. at 722-23; see also Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46 cmt. d (1965).

[*P29] [27] In this case, at worst, the LDS Church Defendants' actions consisted of referring Franco to an unlicensed counselor. However, the complaint contains no allegations that the LDS Church Defendants knew Browning was unlicensed when they made the referral or that the LDS Church Defendants had any other indication their conduct in referring Franco to Browning might cause emotional distress. Absent such evidence or allegations, the LDS

Church Defendants' actions cannot be considered outrageous and intolerable as a matter of law. To hold otherwise would leave every bishop, priest, rabbi, or minister of every church who seeks to help a parishioner having apparent psychiatric problems to receive outside secular counseling open to liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

[*P30] Based on the above, we hold that the trial court did not err in dismissing Franco's claim against the LDS Church Defendants for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Because we have determined that this claim fails as a matter of law, we do not reach the constitutional issue. See Hoyle v. Monson, 606 P.2d 240, 242 (Utah 1980) (stating that HN15 it is a "fundamental rule" that [28] constitutional questions should not be reached if the merits of the case can be determined on other than constitutional grounds).

C. Fraud

[*P31] Finally, we address Franco's claim against the LDS Church Defendants for fraud. As an initial matter, as noted in footnote 5 supra, matters outside the pleadings have been presented with regard to Franco's fraud claim that were not excluded by the trial court, and therefore, we treat the LDS Church Defendants' motion to dismiss this claim as one for summary judgment as provided for in rule 56 of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure. See Utah R. Civ. P. 12(b); Lind v. Lynch, 665 P.2d 1276, 1278 (Utah 1983).

[*P32] *HN16*A grant of summary judgment is appropriate only if "there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and . . . the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Utah R. Civ. P. 56(c). On appeal from a summary judgment, "we accept the facts and inferences in the light most favorable to the losing party." Winegar v. Froerer Corp., 813 P.2d 104, 107 (Utah 1991). Because we resolve only legal issues in reviewing a summary judgment, "we give no deference to the trial [29] court's view of the law; we review it for correctness." Ron Case Roofing & Asphalt Paving, Inc. v. Blomquist, 773 P.2d 1382, 1385 (Utah 1989).

"(1) That a representation was made; (2) concerning a presently existing material fact; (3) which was false; (4) which the representor either (a) knew to be false, or (b) made recklessly, knowing that he had insufficient knowledge upon which to base such representation; (5) for the purpose of inducing the other party to act upon it; (6) [208] that the other party, acting reasonably and in ignorance of its falsity; (7) did in fact rely upon it; (8) and was thereby induced to act; (9) to his injury and damage."

Mikkelson v. Quail Valley Realty, 641 P.2d 124, 126 (Utah 1982) (emphasis added) (quoting Pace v. Parrish, 122 Utah 141, 144-45, 247 P.2d 273, 274-75 (1952)).

[*P34] In this case, in support of her fraud claim, Franco argues that the LDS Church Defendants "falsely" represented to her that Browning "had a Ph.D. in counseling or psychology or [30] was a licensed psychiatrist." (Emphasis added.) However, in a letter from the Bountiful Mental Health Center to Franco, which Franco presented to the trial court as an exhibit, Craig Berthold, the director of the Bountiful Mental Health Center, stated: "Dr. Browning does have a doctorate degree in Counseling (Ph.D.), from the educational psychology department at the University of California at Los Angeles." Accordingly, Franco's own exhibit establishes that the LDS Church Defendants did not make a representation concerning a presently existing material fact "which was false," Pace, 122 Utah at 145, 247 P.2d at 275, and therefore, the LDS Church Defendants are entitled to a judgment as a matter of law on this count.

[*P35] Moreover, even if we were to ignore the evidence that Browning had a Ph.D. in counseling or psychology, focusing solely on Franco's argument in this appeal that the LDS Church Defendants' false representation was that Browning was licensed, as Franco argues we should, her claim still fails as a matter of law because the complaint does not plead fraud with sufficient particularity to withstand summary judgment.

[*P36] HN18 To state a claim [31] for fraud, a plaintiff must plead not only that the defendant made a material representation that was false, but also that the defendant either knew the representation to be false or made the representation recklessly, knowing that he or she had insufficient knowledge upon which to base such a representation. See Mikkelson, 641 P.2d at 126; see also 37 Am. Jur. 2d Fraud and Deceit § 41, at 66 (1968) (stating that one of the "necessary elements" upon which to base an action in fraud is that a false representation was made "and known to be false by the party making it"). Moreover, because this is a claim for fraud, "the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake [must] be stated with particularity." Utah R. Civ. P. 9(b). "We have stressed, and continue to hold, that mere conclusory allegations in a pleading, unsupported by a recitation of relevant surrounding facts, are insufficient to preclude . . . summary judgment." Chapman v. Primary Children's Hosp., 784 P.2d 1181, 1186 (Utah 1989) (citing Norton v. Blackham, 669 P.2d 857, 859 (Utah 1983); Ellefsen v. Roberts, 526 P.2d 912, 915 (Utah 1974)). [32]

[*P37] In this case, as we stated with regard to Franco's claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the complaint is devoid of allegations that the LDS Church Defendants represented to Franco that Browning was licensed, knowing that he was unlicensed, or knowing that they had insufficient knowledge upon which to base such a representation. Moreover, as part of her general allegations, Franco stated that the Bountiful Mental Health Center "held . . . Browning out to [be] licensed or qualified to render the appropriate treatment" and that Browning held himself out on his business card as practicing "Individual, Marital, and Family Counseling," under the heading of "General Psychiatry." Therefore, even though we must consider all reasonable inferences to be drawn from the facts in a light most favorable to the plaintiff, the only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the facts alleged in this case, is that the LDS Church Defendants believed that Browning was licensed to provide the appropriate treatment when they made the referral.

[*P38] Accordingly, because Franco has failed to establish the necessary elements of fraud, the LDS Church Defendants [33] are entitled to a judgment as a matter of law on this count, and consequently, we do not address the constitutional issue.

CONCLUSION

[*P39] We hold that the trial court correctly determined that Franco's claims against the LDS Church Defendants for gross negligence, [209] negligent infliction of emotional distress, and breach of fiduciary duty are barred by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. We further hold that Franco's claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress and fraud fail as a matter of law. Accordingly, we affirm the trial court's dismissal of Franco's tort claims against the LDS Church Defendants.

CONCURBY: DURRANT

CONCUR:

DURRANT, Justice, concurring:

[*P41] I concur. The court's analysis is consistent with Lemon and its progeny. To permit a plaintiff to enlist the judicial system to press a claim for clergy malpractice would clearly result in the kind of governmental intrusion into religious practices that is prohibited by the entanglement prong of current Establishment Clause analysis. Further, in focusing exclusively [34] on the Establishment Clause in its analysis, our opinion adopts the analytical approach commonly used by courts in assessing clergy malpractice claims. I write separately merely to note that I believe the plaintiff's claims are barred not only by the Establishment Clause, but by the Free Exercise Clause as well. n1

n1 The LDS Church's brief on appeal presents arguments under the excessive entanglement prong of the Establishment Clause and under what it describes as the "'church autonomy doctrine' . . . grounded in both religion clauses of the First Amendment."

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

[*P42] In my view, judicial analyses of religious issues under the First Amendment have too often come to focus exclusively on the Establishment Clause. I think this unfortunate because a significant part of the genius of the two religion clauses is in their mutually reinforcing dynamic. One of the central means of promoting the free exercise of religious beliefs protected by the Free Exercise Clause is to guard against the establishment of a state [35] church, as proscribed by the Establishment Clause. One of the central means of guarding against the establishment of a particular religion is to protect the free exercise rights of adherents of all religions. While the clauses are complementary in this sense, in another sense they are in dynamic tension. To allow a particular state benefit to a religious group may implicate the Establishment Clause, yet to deny it to that group may impinge upon free exercise rights. Yet, notwithstanding their at once complementary and contradictory nature, I believe that the ultimate end of both religion causes is the same--the protection of religious liberty.

[*P43] However, as courts have expanded the reach of the Establishment Clause to include the prohibitions of state benefits to, or accommodations of, religion that in no realistic sense could lead to the establishment of a state church, they have tended to diminish the protections of the Free Exercise Clause. Or, they have made the Establishment Clause do the work of the Free Exercise Clause. For instance, the entanglement prong of the Lemon Establishment Clause analysis may actually be a better analytical fit with the Free Exercise [36] Clause. The case before us illustrates this point. Under traditional Establishment Clause analysis, allowing clergy malpractice claims would clearly result in an excessive governmental entanglement with religion. The courts would be put in the position of overseeing, assessing, and passing judgment on a core activity of churches--the provision of ecclesiastical counseling. Clearly, this would be an unconstitutional governmental intrusion into religion. But on what basis is it unconstitutional? Is permitting this type of entanglement a step that is likely to lead to the establishment of religion? Does its constitutional infirmity lie in the fact that it benefits religion? I think that few religious denominations would view governmental intrusion into their core ecclesiastical functions as somehow benefitting them. The danger of such an intrusion is not so much that it could lead to the establishment of religion as that it directly impinges on the free exercise of religion. Yet, under the Lemon analytical framework, which places the entanglement assessment under the Establishment Clause, we are led to the Establishment Clause analysis upon which the court's opinion relies.

[*P44] [37] It might be asked what difference it makes whether a governmental intrusion into religion is analyzed under the Establishment [210] Clause or the Free Exercise Clause. In either case, the intrusion is proscribed. I think it matters because to the extent we blur the analytical distinction between the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses, to the extent we make the Establishment Clause do the work of both clauses, we sap some of the life from the Free Exercise Clause. Further, we lose the benefits that come from examining the clauses in tandem. I think we would be better served if, in the development of our religion clauses' jurisprudence, courts more often examined the full picture and conducted their analysis with reference to both clauses, taking into account both their mutually reinforcing aspects as well as the distinct rights they protect.

[*P45] Accordingly, while I concur in the court's opinion, I would also affirm on the ground that the claims determined by the court to be barred by the Establishment Clause are also barred by the Free Exercise Clause. Recognizing a cause of action that is in essence one for clergy malpractice would amount to a secular judicial restraint upon [38] one of the core functions of many religious denominations. Indeed, given the fact that actions for malpractice in other contexts have developed within fields of employment reserved for professionals whose practices are heavily regulated, a common law action for clergy malpractice would necessarily borrow its criteria from those contexts. The consequence would be tantamount to regulatory oversight by the judiciary of ecclesiastical counseling. Neither the Free Exercise Clause nor the Establishment Clause permits such a result.

H.R.B. and B.B., Plaintiffs/Appellants, v. J.L.G., and ARCHBISHOP JUSTIN RIGALI of the Archdiocese of the City of St. Louis, Missouri, and CHURCH OF THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION SCHOOL AND PARISH, by and through Father John Gavin, Defendants/Respondents.

No. 68010

COURT OF APPEALS OF MISSOURI, EASTERN DISTRICT, DIVISION THREE

913 S.W.2d 92; 1995 Mo. App. LEXIS 2079

December 19, 1995, Filed

PRIOR HISTORY: [1] Appeal from the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis. Hon. James R. Dowd, Judge.

DISPOSITION: AFFIRMED IN PART AND REVERSED AND REMANDED IN PART.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Plaintiff husband and wife appealed the judgment from the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis (Missouri), which dismissed their petition against defendant priest, archbishop, and church. The petition was based on injuries allegedly suffered by plaintiff husband years earlier when he was sexually abused by defendant priest while attending a church school.

OVERVIEW: Based on the statute of limitations, the trial court dismissed a petition by plaintiff husband and wife against defendants, priest, archbishop, and church. On appeal, the court affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded. Plaintiff husband alleged that defendant priest sexually abused him when he was 13. Plaintiffs alleged that their claim did not accrue at the time of the abuse where the damage was not capable of ascertainment until October 1992, due to plaintiff husband's "psychological coping mechanisms." Because the term could encompass involuntary repression of memory, the petition could withstand a motion to dismiss. However, the court had to affirm the dismissal if it could be sustained on another ground. The alleged acts of defendant priest clearly were not part of his duties as a priest or as a teacher. Thus, dismissal of the respondeat superior claim was proper. Religion was not merely incidental to plaintiff's relationship with defendants. Because U.S. Const. amend. I did not allow secular courts to judge sectarian matters, breach of fiduciary duty counts were not actionable. The loss of consortium action was properly dismissed for failure to state a claim.

OUTCOME: A decision dismissing claims by plaintiff husband and wife for damages arising from alleged child sexual abuse by defendant priest was affirmed in part and reversed and remanded in part. The court held that the statute of limitations did not bar suit, but no cause of action existed against defendant priest for breach of fiduciary duty or against defendant archbishop and church for respondeat superior.

Torts > Procedure > Statutes of Limitations

HN1 An action for sexual abuse may be brought as a battery action, in which case the plaintiff has two years to file the action, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 516.140; or the action may be brought pursuant to Mo. Rev. Stat. § 516.120(4), which requires that tort actions not specifically enumerated by statute (but recognized at law) be brought within five years. If the alleged abuse occurred when the plaintiff was a minor, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 516.170 tolls the applicable statute of limitations until the plaintiff turns 21. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Procedure > Statutes of Limitations

HN2 With respect to Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 516.120(4) and 516.140, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 516.100 provides that the cause of action shall not be deemed to accrue when the wrong is done or the technical breach of contract or duty occurs, but when the damage resulting therefrom is sustained and capable of ascertainment. Also, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 537.046.2 provides for independent civil actions for damages suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse, if the action is brought within five years of the plaintiff's eighteenth birthday, or within three years of the date the plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered that the injury or illness was caused by child sexual abuse, whichever is later. However, Mo. Rev. Stat. § 537.046 does not revive actions that have expired prior to its effective date of August 28, 1990, and, if a plaintiff's suit was already barred by an existing statute of limitations on that date, the defendant has obtained a vested right to be free from suit. HN3 In determining when a statute of limitations begins running, damage is ascertainable when the fact of damage can be discovered or made known, not when a plaintiff actually discovers injury or wrongful conduct. When damage is ascertainable is an objective determination. If the statute of limitations is raised as an affirmative defense, the trial court may not dismiss unless it is clearly established, on the petition's face and without exception, that the action is barred. In reviewing the dismissal of a petition, reviewing courts must allow the pleading its broadest intendment, treating all facts alleged as true and construing the petition's allegations favorably to the plaintiff. JUDGES: GARY GAERTNER, Judge.

OPINION: [*94]

Appellants, H.R.B. ("plaintiff") and B.B. ("wife"), appeal from the judgment of the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis dismissing their petition against respondents, J.L.G. ("defendant"), Archbishop Justin Rigali of the Archdiocese of St. Louis, Missouri ("the archbishop"), and Church of the Immaculate Conception School and Parish ("the church"). We affirm in part and reverse and remand in part.

On September 30, 1994, plaintiff and wife filed a ten-count petition alleging the following: In 1963, plaintiff was a thirteen-year-old student at a school run by the church, which was under the direct supervision and control of the archbishop. Through 1963 and 1964, plaintiff suffered various instances of sexual abuse by defendant J.L.G., a Roman Catholic priest employed by the church. As a direct result of defendant's conduct, plaintiff suffered, inter alia, severe emotional distress, lost earnings and earning capacity, sexual addiction and dysfunction, depression, anxiety, [2] panic attacks, "and other psychological and emotional sequelae."

The petition further alleged:

> 15. Plaintiff and defendant . . . had a confidential and/or fiduciary relationship. The power imbalance between defendant . . . and plaintiff increased the plaintiff's vulnerability to defendant . . . and had the effect of silencing plaintiff.
>
> 16. The nature of the relationship and the sexual exploitation perpetrated upon plaintiff caused him to develop certain psychological coping mechanisms. Plaintiff was unable to ascertain his injuries and their connection to the sexual abuse perpetrated upon him until approximately October 1992.
>
> 17. In approximately October 1992, plaintiff . . . was hospitalized as being suicidal. At this time, he discovered that his psychological illnesses and emotional difficulties were the result of sexual abuse suffered at the hands of [defendant]. Prior to this time, he had never been diagnosed nor had any indication that the events involving sexual abuse had caused injury and ascertainable damage.
> 18. Therefore, plaintiff brings this action in a timely fashion pursuant to R.S.Mo. [§§ 537.046] and 516.100, [3] in that he did not discover and could not reasonably ascertain the damages he suffered as a result of the sexual abuse until October of 1992.

The first three counts of plaintiff's and wife's petition were brought by plaintiff against defendant: breach of fiduciary duty (Count I), intentional infliction of emotional distress (Count II), and childhood sexual abuse (Count III). The next five counts were brought by plaintiff against the archbishop n1 and the church: respondeat superior (Count IV), negligence (Count V), negligent infliction of emotional distress (Count VI), intentional infliction of emotional distress (Count VII), and breach of fiduciary duty (Count VIII). The final two counts were loss of consortium claims against all the respondents, brought by plaintiff (Count IX) and wife (Count X).

n1 The petition named the archdiocese and the archbishop as separate parties, but the two are treated as one and the same in the trial court's judgment and by the parties on appeal.

On October 12, 1994, [4] the archbishop and the church moved to dismiss the claims against them in Counts IV through X of the petition. On November 3, 1994, defendant moved to dismiss the claims against him in Counts I, II, III, IX, and X. The motions were taken under submission on January 13, 1995.

On February 22, 1995, the trial court granted both motions to dismiss. The court [*95] determined plaintiff's damages were sustained and capable of ascertainment at the time of the alleged sexual abuse, and his cause of action therefore accrued at that time. The court noted that "plaintiff attempts to avoid the five year statute of limitations [RSMo § 516.120 (4)] n2 by arguing that his psychological coping mechanisms repressed any memory of the abuse until 1992." However, the court found, in reliance on Doe v. Roman Catholic Diocese, 862 S.W.2d 338 (Mo.banc 1993) and Vandenheuvel v. Sowell, 886 S.W.2d 100 (Mo.App.W.D. 1994), that "repressed memory does not serve to extend the statute of limitations for Plaintiffs' claims to the time plaintiff's memory revived." The court further found RSMo § 537.046 did not extend the time for filing the petition, as the original statutes of limitations -- RSMo [5] §§ 516.120 and 516.100 -- had already expired and the respondents had therefore acquired a vested right to be free from suit.

n2 All statutory references are to RSMo 1994 unless otherwise indicated.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

The trial court dismissed all the counts against defendant: Counts I, II, and III were dismissed "based on the statute of limitations[;]" Count IX (plaintiff's claim of loss of consortium) was dismissed for failure to state a claim; and Count X (wife's claim of loss of consortium) was dismissed because wife was not married to plaintiff at the time his cause of action accrued. The court also dismissed Counts IV through X against the archbishop and the church. This appeal followed.

Several statutes of limitations are involved in this case. HN1 An action for sexual abuse may be brought as a battery action, in which case the plaintiff has two years to file the action, RSMo § 516.140; or the action may be brought pursuant to RSMo § 516.120(4), which requires that tort actions not specifically enumerated by statute (but [6] recognized at law) be brought within five years. See Doe v. Roman Catholic Diocese, 862 S.W.2d at 339. If the alleged abuse occurred when the plaintiff was a minor, RSMo § 516.170 tolls the applicable statute of limitations until the plaintiff turns twenty-one. See J.D. v. M.F., 758 S.W.2d 177, 178 (Mo.App.E.D. 1988). HN2 With respect to RSMo §§ 516.120(4) and 516.140, RSMo § 516.100 provides that > the cause of action shall not be deemed to accrue when the wrong is done or the technical breach of contract or duty occurs, but when the damage resulting therefrom is sustained and capable of ascertainment, ...

(emphasis added.) Also, RSMo § 537.046.2 provides for independent civil actions for damages suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse, if the action is brought within five years of the plaintiff's eighteenth birthday, or "within three years of the date the plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered that the injury or illness was caused by child sexual abuse," whichever is later. However, RSMo § 537.046 does not revive actions that have expired prior to its effective date of August 28, 1990, and, if a plaintiff's suit was already [7] barred by an existing statute of limitations on that date, the defendant has obtained a vested right to be free from suit. Doe v. Roman Catholic Diocese, 862 S.W.2d at 342.

In this case, the petition alleges defendant's acts occurred in 1963 and 1964, when plaintiff was still a minor. If plaintiff's cause of action did accrue at the time these acts occurred, time would start running upon plaintiff's twenty-first birthday in 1971 and would have expired in 1976. In their petition, plaintiff and wife allege their cause of action did not accrue at the time defendant allegedly sexually abused plaintiff, and claim the damage to plaintiff caused by defendant's alleged conduct was not capable of ascertainment until October of 1992, due to "certain psychological coping mechanisms" of plaintiff. According to plaintiff and wife, as their cause of action did not accrue until 1992, none of their claims were time-barred.

HN3 In determining when a statute of limitations begins running, "damage is ascertainable when the fact of damage 'can be discovered or made known,' not when a plaintiff actually discovers injury or wrongful conduct. . . . When damage is ascertainable is an objective determination." [8] Sheehan v. Sheehan, 901 S.W.2d 57, 58-59 (Mo.banc [*96] 1995) (citations omitted). If the statute of limitations is raised as an affirmative defense, the trial court may not dismiss unless it is clearly established, on the petition's face and without exception, that the action is barred. Id. at 59. In reviewing the dismissal of a petition, reviewing courts must allow the pleading its broadest intendment, treating all facts alleged as true and construing the petition's allegations favorably to the plaintiff. Id.

Sheehan was handed down by the Missouri Supreme Court subsequent to the dismissal of plaintiff's and wife's claims. In that case, the trial court dismissed as barred by the statute of limitations a personal injury action by a daughter against her father for childhood sexual abuse. Daughter's petition alleged father committed numerous batteries and assaults when she was a minor, and was therefore subject to the two-year limit set out in RSMo § 516.140. Daughter's petition further alleged she "involuntarily repressed conscious memory" of the alleged abuse by father "throughout her childhood and young adulthood until August 1990 or thereafter." In granting [9] father's motion to dismiss the petition, the trial court found that daughter's cause of action accrued when she was a minor and that she failed to bring her action within the two-year period allowed to her after her twenty-first birthday.

The Missouri Supreme Court reversed, ruling daughter's petition did not "clearly indicate on its face and without exception" that suit was barred before the effective dates of RSMo §§ 537.046.2 and 516.371. n3 Id. The Court stated:

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n3 RSMo § 516.371 provides an action for familial sexual abuse, and went into effect August 28, 1989.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - -

> [Daughter] alleges that [father]'s conduct caused "consequential injuries and damages." The petition does not state the date [daughter] "sustained and suffered" these injuries and damages; it is ambiguous as to when she objectively could have discovered or made known the fact of damage. The only date alleged is that she "involuntarily repressed conscious memory" of the abuse "until August 1990 or thereafter." Construing the allegations [10] of the petition broadly and favorably to [daughter], her damage may not have been ascertainable "until August 1990 or thereafter."

Id. The Court distinguished Vandenheuvel v. Sowell, 886 S.W.2d 100, 104 (Mo.App.W.D. 1994) -- in which the Western District held that involuntary repression of memories of sexual abuse did not toll the applicable statute of limitations -- on the ground Vandenheuvel was decided by summary judgment, "where matters outside the pleadings indicated when damages became ascertainable." Sheehan, 901 S.W.2d at 59. "In this case -- decided on a bare motion to dismiss -- there is no such record evidence." Id.

Here, plaintiff's and wife's petition claimed plaintiff was abused in 1963 and 1964, but was unable to ascertain the injuries he allegedly sustained due to "psychological coping mechanisms." The respondents argue this petition, unlike the petition in Sheehan, does not allege repression of memory, and its terms ("increased the plaintiff's vulnerability," "had the effect of silencing plaintiff," "coping") imply plaintiff was aware of the harm or legal wrong done to him at the time of the alleged abuse. However, HN4 we are required to [11] allow the pleading its broadest intendment and to construe the petition's allegations favorably to the plaintiff. See id. The petition's term "psychological coping mechanisms" may encompass, and the trial court clearly regarded it as including, involuntary repression of memory. In other words, the petition is ambiguous enough as to when plaintiff could have objectively discovered or made known the fact of injury from defendant's alleged conduct, to withstand a motion to dismiss on limitations grounds. We must take all the allegations in the petition as true, suspending any skepticism as to the merits of plaintiff's allegations. Plaintiff's damages may not have been ascertainable until October, 1992. If such was the case, the September 30, 1994, petition was timely filed with respect to RSMo §§ 516.120(4) and 537.046.

Pursuant to Sheehan, we find the petition does not clearly indicate on its face and without exception that Counts I through VIII, and Count X (wife's loss of consortium claim), are barred by the statute of limitations.

However, HN5 we will affirm the dismissal of a petition if it can be sustained on any ground presented to and considered by the trial [12] court, regardless of whether the court relied on that ground. Property Exchange & Sales, Inc. v. King, 822 S.W.2d 572, 573 (Mo.App.E.D. 1992). The archbishop and the church argue Count IV, plaintiff's claim of respondeat superior, failed to state a cause of action and was properly dismissed. According to the archbishop and the church, the petition on its face shows defendant was not acting within the course and scope of his employment when he allegedly engaged in sexual contact with plaintiff.

HN6 Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is liable to third parties for torts committed by an employee, if the tort was committed while employee was engaged in activities within the course and scope of his or her employment. P.S. v. Psychiatric Coverage, Ltd., 887 S.W.2d 622, 624 (Mo.App.E.D. 1994). An act is committed within "the scope and course of employment" if it is done by virtue of the employment and in furtherance of the business or interest of the employer, regardless of the time or motive of the conduct. Id. "If the act is fairly and naturally incident to the employer's business, although mistakenly or ill advisedly done, and did not arise wholly from some [13] external, independent or personal motive, it is done while engaged in the employer's business." Id. In Psychiatric Coverage, we held the employer was not vicariously liable under respondeat superior for the sexual misconduct of an employee therapist, as this misconduct did not occur as part of any therapy program nor was it intended to further the employer's business, but rather "resulted from purely private and personal desires." Id. at 625. Further, other jurisdictions have refused to find religious organizations vicariously liable on respondeat superior grounds for the sexual misconduct of individual clerics. See Tichenor v. Roman Catholic Church of New Orleans, 32 F.3d 953, 959-960 (5th Cir. 1994); Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275, 287 (Colo. 1988) (sexual misconduct of defendant priest "is contrary to the principles of Catholicism and is not incidental to the tasks assigned a priest by the diocese"); Byrd v. Faber, 57 Ohio St. 3d 56, 565 N.E.2d 584, 588 (Ohio 1991) (relied on by Psychiatric Coverage, 887 S.W.2d at 625 n.4).

The above reasoning applies here. The acts of defendant alleged in plaintiff's and wife's petition clearly were not part of [14] defendant's duties as a priest or as a teacher, nor were they intended to further any religious or educational interests of the Catholic Church. Accordingly, we affirm the dismissal of Count IV. The respondents also offer alternative justifications for affirming the trial court's dismissal of plaintiff's claims of breach of fiduciary duty against defendant (Count I) and the archbishop and the church (Count VIII). Count I of plaintiff's and wife's petition alleged defendant "gained the trust and confidence of plaintiff" by holding himself out as a "teacher, counselor and qualified parish priest" and alleged his actions "constitute a breach of his fiduciary duties and of his trusted, confidential relationship with the plaintiff." Count VIII alleged plaintiff "reposed trust and confidence" in the archbishop and the church "as safe, competent spiritual advisors and counselors" who "owed plaintiff a duty of trust and loyalty and the duty to work solely for the benefit of their parishioners and supplicants including plaintiff." Count VIII further alleged the archbishop and the church "breached their fiduciary duties towards their parishioners, including plaintiff, and abused their position [15] of trust and confidence in failing to protect plaintiff and others similarly situated from defendant . . . after [they] knew or should have known of his dangerous propensities . . . ."

The respondents contend Missouri does not recognize the claims set out in Counts I and VIII of plaintiff's petition, citing Doe v. Roman Catholic Diocese as authority. In that case (wherein the plaintiff's claims of [*98] breach of fiduciary duty and clergy malpractice were found barred by the statutes of limitations) the Missouri Supreme Court noted:

> Although battery is clearly actionable, Missouri courts have not addressed the propriety of the causes of action for clergy malpractice or the tort of breach of fiduciary duty, at least in the context of childhood sexual assaults.

862 S.W.2d at 339 n.2. The respondents also contend Counts I and VIII are not justiciable controversies, on the ground the First Amendment prohibits secular courts from defining and analyzing the scope of fiduciary duties owed by clergy and churches to their parishioners.

HN7 Clergy and religious organizations are not absolutely immune from civil liability. See Hester v. Barnett, 723 S.W.2d 544, [16] 552 (Mo.App.W.D. 1987). Tort actions against religious groups or persons are not offensive to the First Amendment if based on purely secular activities, unrelated to their religious functions; if the alleged wrongdoing was clearly outside the tenets of the religion, notwithstanding its religious pretext, then it is actionable. See 723 S.W.2d at 558-564.

Missouri courts have not addressed whether clergy and religious organizations can be held civilly liable in actions for breach of fiduciary duty with respect to sexual misconduct of clergy. Our review of the law in other jurisdictions compels us to conclude such actions should not be recognized, as they will inevitably entangle civil courts in religious matters.

Causes of action for breach of fiduciary duty with respect to sexual misconduct of clergy were recognized in Jones by Jones v. Trane, 153 Misc. 2d 822, 591 N.Y.S.2d 927, 931 (Sup. 1992), Moses v. Diocese of Colorado, 863 P.2d 310, 322 (Colo. 1993), Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275, 284 (Colo. 1988), and Erickson v. Christenson, 99 Ore. App. 104, 781 P.2d 383, 386 (Or.App. 1989). These cases reasoned that if the tortious behavior of the cleric was not [17] religiously motivated, could be evaluated by means of "neutral principles" applicable to clergy and lay persons alike, and did not require inquiry into the tenets and beliefs of the particular cleric's faith, the First Amendment was not a defense to such actions. See Moses, 863 P.2d at 321. In other words, > inasmuch as it is conduct, and not creed, that underlies plaintiffs' actions, and that the potential for civil consequences exists equally as to religious and non-religious persons, and as to clergy and lay persons of all religions alike, the Free > Exercise aspect of the First Amendment does not come into play to preclude plaintiffs' [breach of fiduciary duty action] . . . .

Jones, 591 N.Y.S.2d at 931 (citation omitted).

Conversely, similar causes of action for breach of fiduciary duty were rejected in Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. 321, 325-326 (S.D.N.Y. 1991), Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d 1425, 1438 (7th Cir. 1994), and Schieffer v. Catholic Archdiocese of Omaha, 244 Neb. 715, 508 N.W.2d 907, 912 (Neb. 1993). In those cases, the courts held that analyzing and defining the scope of fiduciary duty owed persons by their clergy (assuming pastoral [18] relationships were "fiduciary") would require courts to define and express the standard of care followed by reasonable clergy of the particular faith involved, which in turn > would require the Court and the jury to consider the fundamental perspective and approach to counseling inherent in the beliefs and practices of that denomination. This is as unconstitutional as it is impossible. It fosters excessive entanglement with religion.

Schmidt, 779 F. Supp. at 328. Further, while it may be argued that "it requires no excessive entanglement with religion to decide that reasonably prudent clergy of any sect do not molest children[,]" allowing actions for breach of fiduciary duty in such situations places courts "on the slippery slope and is an unnecessary venture, since existing laws . . . provide adequate protection for society's interests." Id.

HN8 We align ourselves with the jurisdictions that have refused to recognize breach-of-fiduciary-duty actions against clergy for sexual misconduct. It is true the alleged behavior of defendant was not religiously motivated; in fact, it contravened the tenets and principles of the Catholic Church. However, other causes of [19] action are available for these acts [*99] (i.e., intentional infliction of emotional distress, childhood sexual abuse), which do not require the trial court to determine whether defendant breached "his trusted, confidential relationship with the plaintiff" or whether the archbishop and the church breached "their fiduciary duties towards their parishioners, including plaintiff, and abused their position of trust and confidence[,]" as alleged in plaintiff's petition.

Religion was not merely incidental to plaintiff's relationship with defendant, the archbishop, and the church; it was the foundation for it. Counts I and VIII will inevitably require inquiry into the religious aspects of this relationship, that is, the duty owed by Catholic priests, parishes, and dioceses to their parishioners. The First Amendment does not allow secular courts to judge sectarian matters. Counts I and VIII are not actionable and their dismissal is affirmed. n4 n4 Plaintiff did not bring a clergy malpractice claim in the immediate case; however, we note courts in other jurisdictions have uniformly refused to recognize clergy malpractice as a cause of action for sexual misconduct of a cleric. We further note that, while the archbishop and the church challenged Counts V, VI, and VII -- plaintiff's claims of negligence in the hiring and supervision of defendant, of negligent infliction of emotional distress, and of intentional interference with emotional distress, respectively -- on limitations grounds only and offered no alternative grounds for their dismissal at trial or on appeal, these allegations in these counts raise First Amendment concerns which may need to be addressed upon remand. Finally, Count IX, plaintiff's action for loss of consortium, was properly dismissed by the trial court for failure to state a claim. HN9 When a married person is injured, two independent, separate and distinct causes of action arise: one accrues to the injured person for the injuries, and the other accrues to the injured person's spouse for damages suffered as a result of his or her loss of the injured person's services, society and companionship. Smith v. Paslode Corp., 799 F. Supp. 960, 964 (E.D.Mo. 1992). The latter action is derivative only; a spouse cannot recover for loss of consortium if the other spouse has no valid claim for personal injuries. Teschner v. Physicians Radiology, 761 S.W.2d 665, 667 (Mo.App.E.D. 1988).

Here, the petition does not allege any direct personal injury sustained by wife; she had no valid claim of her own. Plaintiff seeks to derive his loss of consortium claim from his own injuries, not those of wife, thereby duplicating the damages he seeks in his primary claim. Plaintiff failed to state a cause of action on this claim. We affirm the trial court's dismissal of Count IX. n5 n5 With respect to Count X, wife's claim of loss of consortium, we note if it is determined on remand that plaintiff's cause of action accrued prior to their marriage, wife will not be able to recover on this claim. HN10 Claims for loss of consortium based on spousal injuries sustained prior to marriage are precluded, unless neither spouse is aware of the tortious conduct or injury at the time of their marriage. DISPOSITION: Defendant's motion granted. Plaintiff's complaint dismissed.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Plaintiff parishioner maintained a cause of action against defendant priest for damages she allegedly sustained when their pastoral relationship developed into a sexual relationship.

OVERVIEW: The parishioner was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis. She then turned to her priest because as a Catholic, she did not feel as though she had anywhere else to turn for help. She began to visit the priest three and four times a week and he encouraged her dependence upon him by emphasizing the mystical and esoteric nature of his power to cure her. The parishioner asserted that she lacked the power to resist the priest's subsequent physical advances because she was addicted to him and the religious power he possessed to halt the spread of her disease. The court dismissed the parishioner's complaint, holding that in order to rule in her favor, the jury would have had to be able to determine that a fiduciary duty existed between her and the priest and premise this finding on neutral facts. The court found that it would have been impossible to show the existence of a fiduciary duty without resorting to religious facts.

OUTCOME: The court dismissed the parishioner's cause of action against the priest for damages allegedly sustained when their pastoral relationship developed into a sexual relationship because the jury would have had to be able to determine that a fiduciary duty existed between her and the priest and premise this finding on neutral facts.

Herbert Kramer, J.

Can plaintiff parishioner maintain a cause of action against [*898] her priest for damages she allegedly sustained when their pastoral relationship developed into a sexual relationship? Although this is a question of first impression in New York, n1 it has been vigorously litigated across the country. Some of the courts considering this question were willing to sustain a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty, n2 while others declined on First Amendment grounds. n3 Defendants seek summary judgment contending that it is impossible to try this case without trespassing onto constitutionally forbidden territory. Thus, it is this court's task to determine whether the issues can be framed [2] for the jury in secular rather than sectarian terms.

Plaintiff's complaint sets forth 12 causes of action, but if her cause is to survive, it will do so only on the strength of her claim of breach of fiduciary duty. n4 Plaintiff's narrative begins with her being diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in January of 1989. In February of 1989, "with nowhere and no one to turn [3] to [she] looked to God for direction ... [and] as a Catholic, [her] only thought was to seek the assistance of a priest." Monsignor Sivillo began to visit plaintiff three and four times a week and encouraged her dependance upon him by emphasizing the mystical and esoteric nature of his power to cure her. n5 [*899] Plaintiff asserts that she lacked the power to resist the defendant's physical advances because she "was addicted to him and the [religious] power he possessed to halt the spread of the multiple sclerosis ... [she believed that if she angered [438] him, she] would lose her lifeline to God and continued health." n6

n4 Plaintiff has asserted claims sounding in negligence, professional negligence, negligent hiring, supervision and retention, breach of fiduciary duty, negligent infliction of emotional distress, intentional infliction of emotional distress and battery. With the exception of the claim of clergy malpractice, a cause of action not recognized in New York (see, Schmidt v Bishop, 779 F Supp 321, 324 [SD NY 1991], supra; Joshua S. v Casey, 206 AD2d 839 [4th Dept 1994]), the remaining causes of action either depend for their vitality on the claim of breach of fiduciary duty, or with respect to the alleged intentional torts, are time barred and lack factual support. [4]

n5 Beginning in February of 1989, the defendant would visit her three and four times a week and "while sitting next to [her] on the couch would hold [her] cramped and contorted fingers and tell [her] how he spoke to God and how as God's emissary he would see to it that the disease would go into remission." Indeed, at one point during 1989, her physician informed her that the disease was indeed in remission and she "thanked God a million times for sending [her] this gentle savior."
n6 Indeed, the spiritual and supernatural aspects of the relationship dominated plaintiff's narrative. Thus, defendant allegedly told plaintiff that he believed that "water was imbued with a mystical power to cleanse and heal ... [and that] by standing under the water's spray, the two of [them] would be paying homage to the glory and goodness of God who, in return, would absolve [them] of sin." Plaintiff, allegedly at the defendant's behest, kept a towel in her night table which the defendant would use to wipe his semen from her body. "The towel symbolized his everlasting presence. The semen represented an impenetrable line of defense that would ward off fear, loneliness and disease. As long as [she] had the towel, [she] had the means to remain healthy and loved. Any onslaught by negative or destructive forces would be doomed to fail in the presence of the towel a/k/a the defendant."

Civil controversies involving religious parties or institutions may be adjudicated without offending the First Amendment n7 as long as neutral laws of general applicability are utilized in their resolution. (Presbyterian Church v Hull Church, 393 US 440, 449 [1969].) Neutral principles are "wholly secular legal rules whose application to religious parties or disputes does not entail theological or doctrinal evaluations." (Elmora Hebrew Ctr. v Fishman, 125 NJ 404, 414-415, 593 A2d 725, 730 [1991].)

n7 HN1 The First Amendment prohibits any "law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." (US Const 1st Amend.) It "embraces two concepts,--freedom to believe and freedom to act. The first is absolute but, in the nature of things, the second cannot be. Conduct remains subject to regulation for the protection of society." (Cantwell v Connecticut, 310 US 296, 303-304 [1940].) Certainly, intentional, criminally offensive conduct is not insulated from prosecution. (See, e.g., Joshua S. v Casey, 206 AD2d 839 [4th Dept 1994]; Kenneth R. v Roman Catholic Diocese, 229 AD2d 159 [2d Dept 1997].)

- - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - [6]

The secular rule to be applied in this case is the law of fiduciaries. This area of the law recognizes that there is an imbalance inherent in certain relationships n8 which places one party at a disadvantage in its dealings with the other party. Courts have therefore imposed additional obligations upon the [*900] advantaged party to compensate for the disparity. n9 Because the parameters of a fiduciary relationship have been vaguely defined n10 and the range of relationships that can potentially be characterized as fiduciary is extensive, we are grateful for the guidance offered by one commentator who has distilled HN2 four elements that we believe are essential to the establishment of a fiduciary relationship: (1) The vulnerability of one party to the other which (2) results in the empowerment of the stronger party by the weaker which (3) empowerment has been solicited or accepted by the stronger party and (4) prevents the weaker party from effectively protecting itself. n11

n8 "Historically, fiduciary relationships include: trustee to beneficiary; guardian to ward; agent to principal; attorney to client; executor to legatees or beneficiaries; partner to partner; corporate directors or officers to the corporation; majority shareholders to other shareholders; and bailor to bailee." (Villiers, Clergy Malpractice Revisited: Liability for Sexual Misconduct in the Counseling Relationship, 74 Denv U L Rev 1, 40 [1996].) [7] n9 The fiduciary bears the burden of showing the fairness of the disputed transaction. The fiduciary is obligated to make full disclosure. The fiduciary may not be able to raise the defense of Statute of Frauds, or consent. The entrusting party may not bear the entire burden of discovery of the fraud. Moreover, the transaction must, regardless of consent, be deemed reasonable and be undertaken in good faith when judged by objective standards. (Villiers, op. cit., at 39, n 255.)

n10 In Penato v George (52 AD2d 939, 942 [2d Dept 1976]) the Court opined that "a fiduciary relationship is one founded upon trust or confidence reposed by one person in the integrity and fidelity of another ... the relationship exists in all cases in which influence has been acquired and abused, in which confidence has been reposed and betrayed. The rule embraces both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist whenever one man trusts in, and relies upon, another ... Such a relationship might be found to exist, in appropriate circumstances, between close friends ... or even where confidence is based upon prior business dealings".

n11 These elements were derived through a careful review of the existing case law and an astute application of the philosophical and pragmatic aspects of this area of the law. (Scallen, Promises Broken vs. Promises Betrayed: Metaphor, Analogy, and the New Fiduciary Principle, 1993 U Ill L Rev 897, 922 [1993].)

- - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - [8]

[439] Finally, we must recognize that in making a "neutral principles" analysis, it is not sufficient to be able to identify relevant secular rules. It is also necessary to insure that there exist neutral facts to which to apply those rules. Neutral facts consist of "evidence from which the court may discern the objective intention of the parties" such as "the language of ... deeds, the terms of [a] local church charter ... State statutes governing the holding of church property [and the like]" (First Presbyt. Church v United Presbyt. Church, 62 NY2d 110, 121, 122 [1984]), without resorting to matters of doctrine or dogma. n12

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n12 (See, Avitzur v Avitzur, 58 NY2d 108 [1983].) In Avitzur, a four-to-three decision, the majority upheld the terms of a Ketubah, a Jewish religious marriage contract, finding neutral facts that evidenced the agreement between the parties, to wit, "[D]efendant promised that he would, at plaintiff's request, appear before the [rabbinical tribunal] for the purpose of allowing that tribunal to advise and counsel the parties concerning their marriage" which promise constituted nothing more than a "civil contract to submit a dispute to a nonjudicial forum". (Supra, at 113, 114.) However, the caution of the dissent, which did not find the contract susceptible to so neutral an interpretation was well taken. (See also, Park Slope Jewish Ctr. v Congregation B'Nai Jacob, 90 NY2d 517 [1997]; Park Slope Jewish Ctr. v Stern, 128 Misc 2d 909 [Sup Ct, Kings County 1985], mod 128 AD2d 847 [2d Dept 1987].)

- - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - [9]

[*901]

Here, in order for plaintiff's cause of action to meet constitutional muster, the jury would have to be able to determine that a fiduciary relationship existed and premise this finding on neutral facts. n13 The insurmountable difficulty facing plaintiff, this court holds, lies in the fact that it is impossible to show the existence of a fiduciary relationship without resort to religious facts. In order to consider the validity of plaintiff's claims of dependency and vulnerability, the jury would have to weigh and evaluate, inter alia, the legitimacy of plaintiff's beliefs, the tenets of the faith insofar as they reflect upon a priest's ability to act as God's emissary and the nature of the healing powers of the church. To instruct a jury on such matters is to venture into forbidden ecclesiastical terrain. On the other hand, if we try to salvage plaintiff's claim by stripping her narrative of all religious nuance, what is left n14 makes out a cause of action in seduction--a tort no longer recognized in New York--but not in breach of a fiduciary duty. n15 [*902] [440] Accordingly, the defendants' motion is granted. The plaintiff's complaint is dismissed. [10]

n13 "HN3↑The existence of a fiduciary relationship is a question of fact for the jury." (Moses v Diocese of Colo., 863 P2d 310, 322 [Colo 1993], supra; see also, Matter of Antoinette, 238 AD2d 762 [3d Dept 1997].)

n14 Plaintiff's account of the relationship when considered without reference to her religious beliefs describes the development of an intimate personal relationship based upon the fact that she was seriously ill, lonely and isolated and needed a sympathetic ear. She found a willing and sympathetic friend and companion in defendant who, according to her narrative, was able to use this situation to his advantage and transform the relationship into a sexual one.

This neutered account does not supply the facts necessary to support the existence of a fiduciary relationship because the most important element defining the fiduciary relationship, and distinguishing it from a merely confidential relationship--the inability of the weaker partner to resist the manipulation of the stronger partner--is missing from the neutered account. This element is present only in the religious account of their relationship in statements such as those pertaining to her belief that she would lose her lifeline to continued health if she resisted defendant's advances. (Villiers, op. cit., at 41, nn 263, 264.) [11] n15 "In 1935, New York adopted what has become known as a heart balm statute [Civil Rights Law §§ 80-a--84] which abolished all causes of action ... 'based upon alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry' " (Gaden v Gaden, 29 NY2d 80, 84 [1971]). The tort of seduction along with other causes of action for alienation of affection invited " 'grave abuses ... and in many cases ... resulted in the perpetration of frauds' ". (Supra, at 85 [1971].) The same abuses could attach to a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty, under our facts, unless care is taken to insure that the duty is imposed only upon clear and unequivocal proof of the existence of a fiduciary relationship.

SUPREME COURT OF NEBRASKA

244 Neb. 715; 508 N.W.2d 907; 1993 Neb. LEXIS 283

December 17, 1993, Filed

PRIOR HISTORY: [*1]

Appeal from the District Court for Douglas County: Donald J. Hamilton, Judge.

DISPOSITION: AFFIRMED.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Plaintiff wife filed an amended complaint against defendants, priest and church, alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty. The District Court for Douglas County (Nebraska) sustained the demurrers filed by the priest and church. The wife appealed.

OVERVIEW: After the wife began counseling with the priest at her church, a sexual relationship began and lasted seven years. The wife filed an action against the priest and the church that employed him, and the husband filed an action for loss of consortium. The trial court sustained the general demurrers of the priest and church. The wife filed an amended petition for intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and the husband's loss of consortium claim, which had been assigned to her. The trial court sustained the demurrers of the priest and church. On appeal, the court held that: (1) the wife's consent to the priest's sexual advances barred the intentional infliction of emotional distress claim; (2) no jurisdiction recognized a claim for clergy malpractice; (3) the theory of breach of fiduciary duty with regard to sexual misconduct of a clergy member was rejected; (4) the loss of consortium claim was barred by Neb. Rev. Stat. § 25-21,188 (Reissue 1989) and res judicata; (5) the church was not negligent because there was no cause of action against the priest; and (6) the trial court did not err by failing to allow the wife to amend her pleadings.

OUTCOME: The court affirmed the judgment from the district court, which sustained the demurrers brought by the priest and church and dismissed the wife's claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty.

Civil Procedure > Pleading & Practice > Defenses, Objections & Demurrers > Failure to State a Cause of Action

HN1 In considering a demurrer, a court must assume that the pleaded facts, as distinguished from legal conclusions, are true as alleged and must give the pleading the benefit of any reasonable inference from the facts alleged, but cannot assume the existence of a fact not alleged, make factual findings to aid the pleading, or consider evidence which might be adduced at trial. HN2 A petition is sufficient if, under the facts alleged, the law entitles a plaintiff to recover. Torts > Intentional Torts > Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

HN3 With regard to intentional infliction of emotional distress, there are delineated three elements that must be met for this cause of action: (1) that there has been intentional or reckless conduct; (2) that the conduct was so outrageous in character and so extreme in degree as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency and is to be regarded as atrocious and utterly intolerable in a civilized community; and (3) that the conduct caused emotional distress so severe that no reasonable person should be expected to endure it. More Like This Headnote

Torts > Intentional Torts > Defenses > Consent

HN4 In tort law, consent ordinarily bars recovery for intentional interferences with person or property. It is a fundamental principle of common law that to one who is willing, no wrong is done. When the defendant by his conduct intentionally interferes with a legally protected interest of person or property, either consent to the invasion resulting from such conduct, or consent to the conduct that brought about the invasion, avoids liability. One, of course, consents to an invasion such as a sex contact if he or she wants or desires the invasion. Consent avoids recovery simply because it destroys the wrongfulness of the conduct as between the consenting parties, however harmful it might be to the interest of others, and even though it is perhaps both immoral and criminal. Civil Procedure > Preclusion & Effect of Judgments > Res Judicata

HN9 The doctrine of res judicata is based on the principle that a final judgment on the merits by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive upon the parties in any later litigation involving the same cause of action. OPINION: [*716] [909]
BOSLAUGH, J.

This is a suit for damages brought by the plaintiff, Rosemary Schieffer, against the defendants, Catholic Archdiocese of Omaha (Archdiocese), a corporation, and Timothy Lange. The original petition, filed March 27, 1990, was filed in the name of Jane Doe. Separate actions against the defendants were also filed by the plaintiff's husband and daughter. All of these actions were consolidated. General [4] demurrers to the petitions of the plaintiff and her husband were sustained and the petitions dismissed on September 28, 1990. Apparently, there were no appeals from the order of dismissal.

Motions to strike and to make the plaintiff's original petition more definite and certain were filed by the defendants, and the demurrers to that petition were withdrawn. The motions were sustained in part, and on December 10, 1990, the plaintiff filed an amended petition. The amended petition alleged intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty in separate causes of action. The amended petition also contained a fourth [910] cause of action involving the plaintiff's husband's alleged loss-of-consortium claim that had been assigned to her. Demurrers to the amended petition were sustained on February 8, 1991, and the amended petition dismissed. This appeal followed.

The plaintiff's 11 assignments of error combine to assert that the trial court erred (1) by sustaining the defendants' demurrers and dismissing the amended petition, (2) by failing to allow the plaintiff an opportunity to amend her amended petition, and [*717] (3) by failing to specify the grounds for sustaining [5] the defendants' demurrers.

HN1 In considering a demurrer, a court must assume that the pleaded facts, as distinguished from legal conclusions, are true as alleged and must give the pleading the benefit of any reasonable inference from the facts alleged, but cannot assume the existence of a fact not alleged, make factual findings to aid the pleading, or consider evidence which might be adduced at trial. Hamilton v. City of Omaha, 243 Neb. 253, 498 N.W.2d 555 (1993).

HN2 A petition is sufficient if, under the facts alleged, the law entitles a plaintiff to recover. That is to say, facts are sufficient to constitute a cause of action when they are a narrative of the events, acts, and things done or omitted which show a legal liability of the defendant to the plaintiff. Gerken v. Hawkins Constr. Co., 243 Neb. 157, 498 N.W.2d 97 (1993).

Viewed most favorably to the plaintiff, the amended petition alleges the following:

In 1979, the plaintiff began counseling with the defendant Lange concerning family matters. Lange was the plaintiff's parish priest and "spiritual leader." During this time period, the plaintiff [6] was vulnerable because of prior emotional problems. While she was in this vulnerable state and during the course of pastoral counseling, Lange made sexual advances toward the plaintiff that continued for a period of 3 years. In 1982, Lange and the plaintiff began a sexual relationship that continued until approximately June 1989.

The amended petition further alleges that at all times applicable to this action, Lange was an employee of the defendant Archdiocese and at all times was acting within the scope and course of his employment. Further, Lange and the Archdiocese were charged with the obligation to administer pastoral and spiritual advice and care to the plaintiff and her family, and as such, held a position of trust and responsibility to the plaintiff and her family.

The first assignment of error is that the trial court erred by sustaining the demurrers of the defendants and dismissing the plaintiff's amended petition. The plaintiff argues that she stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action as to all of her [*718] claims. We discuss the various causes of action in turn, beginning first with the allegations against the defendant Lange. The plaintiff's claims against Lange, [7] as alleged in the amended petition, are based on intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty.

The plaintiff's first cause of action alleges that the conduct of Lange was outrageous and extreme and caused her severe emotional distress. As a proximate result of that conduct, the plaintiff suffered severe and permanent emotional injury and incurred current and future medical expenses. The plaintiff also claims that she has lost faith in the Catholic Church and in God.

HN3 With regard to intentional infliction of emotional distress, this court has delineated three elements that must be met for this cause of action:

> "(1) that there has been intentional or reckless conduct; (2) that the conduct was so outrageous in character and so extreme in degree as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency and is to be regarded as atrocious and utterly intolerable in a civilized community; and (3) that the conduct caused emotional distress so severe that no reasonable person should be expected to endure it."

Nichols v. Busse, 243 Neb. 811, 817, 503 N.W.2d 173, (1993), quoting Gall v. Great Western Sugar Co., 219 Neb. 354, 363 N.W.2d 373 (1985). [8]

There are several reasons why the plaintiff's alleged claim for intentional infliction [911] of emotional distress was subject to demurrer. What is involved in this case is conduct between consenting adults. There is no allegation that the defendant used force or fraud to accomplish his sexual relations with the plaintiff during the period from 1982 to 1989. The amended petition does allege that the plaintiff was "vulnerable" because of prior emotional problems." This allegation falls far short of alleging that the plaintiff was incapable of consenting to what took place.

HN4 In tort law, consent ordinarily bars recovery for intentional interferences with person or property. According to W. Page Keeton et al., Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 18 at 112 (5th ed. 1984), it is a fundamental principle of common law that "to one who is willing, no wrong is done." That text further [*719] states:

> When the defendant by his conduct intentionally interferes with a legally protected interest of person or property, either consent to the invasion resulting from such conduct, or consent to the conduct that brought about the invasion, avoids liability. One, of course, consents to an invasion such as [9] a sex contact if he or she wants or desires the invasion. Consent avoids recovery simply because it destroys the wrongfulness of the conduct as between the consenting parties, however harmful it might be to the interest of others, and even though it is perhaps both immoral and criminal.

Id. at 113.

HN5 A sexual relationship between two consenting adults is not outrageous conduct such as to give rise to a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. This seems especially true given the fact that the plaintiff and Lange engaged in an approximate 7-year sexual relationship. See, also, Restatement (Second) of Torts § 892 A (1982).

The plaintiff cites two cases which held that a parishioner stated a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress against a member of the clergy for sexual misconduct with a parishioner: Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275 (Colo. 1988), and Erickson v. Christenson, 99 Ore. App. 104, 781 P.2d 383 (1989).

We believe the Destefano and Erickson cases may be distinguished factually, at least in part. In the Destefano case, the court emphasized that the [10] defendant had held himself out to be trained and capable of conducting marital counseling. The court further stated that on remand, it was for the trial court to determine in the first instance as to whether the conduct of the defendant priest at issue was "outrageous."

The Erickson case involved conduct against a 13-year-old girl. The case at bar involves an adult plaintiff, and there is no allegation that the defendant Lange held himself out as a professionally trained counselor.

In the second cause of action, the plaintiff alleged that Lange was negligent by failing to properly counsel her concerning her marital and family relationships when he knew or should have [*720] known she was having domestic difficulties and that, further, Lange was negligent by failing to remove himself as parish priest when he knew or should have known that a continuing relationship with her would cause her emotional harm. Finally, the plaintiff alleges that Lange was negligent by violating his oath of celibacy. In substance, the plaintiff alleged a claim for clergy malpractice, a purported breach of professional standards by a priest.

So far as we have been able to determine, HN6 no jurisdiction to date has [11] recognized a claim for clergy malpractice. See, Nally v. Grace Com. Church of the Valley, 47 Cal. 3d 278, 763 P.2d 948, 253 Cal. Rptr. 97 (1988), cert. denied 490 U.S. 1007, 109 S. Ct. 1644, 104 L. Ed. 2d 159 (1989); Destefano v. Grabrian, supra; Byrd v. Faber, 57 Ohio St. 3d 56, 565 N.E.2d 584 (1991); Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. 321 (S.D.N.Y. 1991).

The allegations of negligence against Lange with regard to failing to remove himself as parish priest and violating his vows of celibacy were not discussed in the plaintiff's brief and will not be further considered.

The third cause of action alleges that Lange had a fiduciary obligation to the plaintiff to refrain from doing anything that might harm her relationship with her husband and [912] children, in light of Lange's continuing duty to exercise reasonable care. The plaintiff alleges that Lange breached this duty and that this breach caused her damage.

Several cases have allowed recovery on the theory of breach [12] of fiduciary duty with regard to sexual misconduct of a member of the clergy with a parishioner. See, Destefano v. Grabrian, supra; Erickson v. Christenson, supra.

However, HN7 this cause of action was rejected by the court in Schmidt v. Bishop, supra. The Schmidt court recognized that with regard to a breach-of-fiduciary cause of action against a member of the clergy, there are many constitutional difficulties with regard to defining a standard of care. The Schmidt court reasoned:

> In analyzing and defining the scope of a fiduciary duty owed persons by their clergy, the Court would be confronted by the same constitutional difficulties encountered in articulating the generalized standard of [*721] care for a > clergyman required by the law of negligence. . . . As with her negligence claim, [the plaintiff's] fiduciary duty claim is merely another way of alleging that the defendant grossly abused his pastoral role, that is, that he engaged in malpractice.

(Emphasis omitted.) Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F. Supp. at 326. We agree with the reasoning of the [13] court in the Schmidt case.

The fourth cause of action alleges a loss-of-consortium claim assigned to the plaintiff by her husband, Sylvester Schieffer. The amended petition alleges that as a result of the defendants' intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty, the husband has lost the care and comfort of his wife and has been deprived of her comfort and companionship and incurred pain, suffering, and mental anguish, past and future. With regard to this cause of action, the demurrers filed by the defendants alleged that the plaintiff failed to state facts sufficient to state a cause of action. The demurrers also alleged an additional ground for dismissal, because this cause of action alleged the same facts and issues as the separate previous action that had been filed by the husband. Since the husband's petition in the previous action was dismissed by the trial court, the present loss-of-consortium cause of action should be dismissed as res judicata.

It appears that the trial court properly dismissed this cause of action based on both reasons alleged in the defendants' demurrers. It is clear that the husband's loss-of-consortium claim, [14] assigned to the plaintiff, was essentially a claim for criminal conversation and alienation of affection. Causes of action based on criminal conversation or alienation of affection are barred by Neb. Rev. Stat. § 25-21,188 (Reissue 1989). See Speer v. Dealy, 242 Neb. 542, 495 N.W.2d 911 (1993). HN8 The statute provides: "No cause of action for (1) alienation of affections or (2) criminal conversation shall be allowed to commence after January 9, 1986." Accordingly, since there could be no recovery on a claim for the "loss of consortium" in this case under § 25-21,188, the trial court properly dismissed the fourth cause of action.

The trial court also properly dismissed the loss-of-consortium cause of action on the basis of res judicata. [*722] The loss-of-consortium claim was originally alleged in a separate action filed by the plaintiff's husband. After the defendants demurred to the husband's petition, the district court dismissed the petition on October 2, 1990. It does not appear from the record that the husband amended his petition or appealed that order of dismissal. However, the husband subsequently assigned the loss-of-consortium claim to [15] the plaintiff, who included it as the fourth cause of action in the amended petition. The defendants' demurrers alleged that this cause of action was barred as res judicata, since the same claim had been previously litigated and dismissed by the trial court in a separate action.

> HN9 "The doctrine of res judicata is based on the principle that a final judgment on the merits by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive upon the parties in any later litigation involving the same cause of action. . . .
> "Res judicata is founded on a policy favoring termination of an action by preclusion [913] or prevention of subsequent litigation on the same cause."

In re Estate of Watkins, 243 Neb. 583, 586, 501 N.W.2d 292, 294-95 (1993), quoting NC +

Hybrids v. Growers Seed Assn., 228 Neb. 306, 422 N.W.2d 542 (1988). The loss-of-consortium claim was adjudicated in the prior action. Since the husband elected not to amend or appeal the trial court's dismissal of his suit, the plaintiff is now precluded from litigating the same issue again.

In the amended petition, the plaintiff alleges that the defendant Archdiocese [16] was directly negligent by hiring Lange and placing him in the position of parish priest. The amended petition also alleges that the Archdiocese was negligent in failing to investigate Lange's background by inquiring into his relations with other women while acting as parish priest in other parishes, when the Archdiocese knew or should have known that Lange had been actively involved in relationships with women in the past, in violation of his celibacy vows. Finally, the plaintiff argues that the Archdiocese was negligent in failing to supervise Lange in connection with his pastoral duties when they knew or should have known of his past sexual affairs and by failing to remove Lange as a parish priest when they had this [*723] knowledge.

If there is no tort liability to the plaintiff against Lange individually, it follows that the Archdiocese cannot be held liable for his conduct. Strock v. Pressnell, 38 Ohio St. 3d 207, 527 N.E.2d 1235 (1988), supports this proposition.

In Strock, a husband and wife began marriage counseling with a Lutheran minister. The minister and the wife began a consensual sexual relationship, which eventually led to [17] the divorce of the husband and the wife. The husband brought an action against both the minister and the church which employed him. The suit against the minister alleged clergy malpractice, breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, misrepresentation, nondisclosure, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The suit against the church alleged liability based on agency principles and claims of negligent supervision and negligent training of the minister.

At trial, the husband's claims against both the minister and the church were dismissed. The Ohio Supreme Court affirmed the dismissals of the husband's claims With regard to the cause of action against the church, the court held that the church could not be liable to the husband either on agency principles or for negligent supervision or training of the minister. The court stated:

> It is axiomatic that HN10 for the doctrine of respondeat superior to apply, an employee must be liable for a tort committed in the scope of his employment. Likewise, an underlying requirement in actions for negligent supervision and negligent training is that the employee is individually liable for a tort or guilty of a claimed wrong against a third person, who [18] then seeks recovery against the employer. Because no action can be maintained against [the minister] in the instant case, it is obvious that any imputed actions against the church are also untenable.

(Emphasis omitted.) Strock v. Presnell, 38 Ohio St. 3d at 217, 527 N.E.2d at 1244.

The plaintiff also assigns as error the failure of the district court to allow amendment of her amended petition upon the court's sustaining of the defendants' demurrers.

Since we have determined that the plaintiff failed to state [*724] facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant Lange, it is unnecessary to consider the plaintiff's contention with regard to the Archdiocese. If the plaintiff has not established a cause of action against Lange, then the plaintiff can have no cause of action against the Archdiocese for anything that the plaintiff claimed Lange did.

The plaintiff does not tell us what additional facts could be alleged in a further attempt to state a cause of action.

HN11 Neb. Rev. Stat. § 25-854 (Reissue 1989) provides that if a demurrer is sustained, "the adverse party may amend, if the defect can be remedied by way of amendment [19] . . . ." This statute, however, does not provide an absolute right of amendment, nor is it without limitation. See, LaPan v. Myers, 241 Neb. 790, 491 N.W.2d 46 (1992); Knoell v. Huff, 224 Neb. 90, 395 N.W.2d 749 [914] (1986). This court has also previously held that HN12 "it is an abuse of discretion by the trial court ""to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend where there is a reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment, particularly in the case of an original complaint.' . . ."" LaPan v. Myers, 241 Neb. at 793, 491 N.W.2d at 49-50, quoting Newman Grove Creamery Co. v. Deaver, 208 Neb. 178, 302 N.W.2d 697 (1981).

The record does not support a reasonable possibility that the plaintiff could allege additional facts so that the petition would state a cause of action. The plaintiff had already amended the petition once. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in dismissing the amended petition in this case without allowing the plaintiff an opportunity to further amend her pleading.

The [20] final assignment of error is the failure of the district court to specify the grounds upon which it sustained the defendants' demurrers. The plaintiff argues that although the defendants stated more than one ground for the demurrers, the trial court's order was silent regarding which of the multiple theories were sustained. This court has previously held that HN13 when a demurrer is interposed stating several grounds, the court should, when sustaining the demurrer, specify the grounds upon which the demurrer is sustained; otherwise, this court is not informed regarding wherein the complaint was deficient See, Fulk v. McLellan, 243 Neb. 143, 498 N.W.2d 90 [*725] (1993); St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Touche Ross & Co., 234 Neb. 789, 452 N.W.2d 746 (1990).

The defendants' demurrers in this case alleged that the amended petition "does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." The demurrers also alleged an additional ground for dismissal with regard to the husband's loss-of-consortium claim. The demurrers asserted that this cause of action pled the same facts and issues that existed [21] in the previous action dismissed by the district court and therefore should be dismissed based on res judicata grounds. Thus, with the exception of the loss-of-consortium claim, the only grounds asserted for the demurrer was failure to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Therefore, the grounds on which the trial court based its demurrer as to the first three counts of the amended petition were readily apparent.

> HN14 Failure to specify the grounds for sustaining a demurrer does not affect the legal position of the parties in the case. "This court will not presume, when a trial court fails to state a reason for the dismissal of an action, that the dismissal was based on an invalid ground."

LaPan v. Myers, 241 Neb. at 793, 491 N.W.2d at 49, quoting Bert Cattle Co. v. Warren, 238 Neb. 638, 471 N.W.2d 764 (1991).

For reasons stated previously, it was clear that the husband's loss-of-consortium claim was properly dismissed on both grounds asserted in the demurrers. Accordingly, the district court's failure to specify the ground upon which the demurrers were sustained with regard [22] to this cause of action did not prejudice the plaintiff. The final assignment of error is without merit.

The judgment of the district court sustaining the demurrers to the amended petition and dismissing the amended petition is affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

DISSENTBY: LANPHIER

DISSENT:
LANPHIER, J., dissenting.

I respectfully dissent. The majority decision concludes that a person cannot claim he is wronged by actions of another to [*726] which he consented. This is correct logic and law by itself. However, the proposition overlooks the question of how such consent was achieved.

Should consent bar a claim where such consent may have been achieved by the actions of a fiduciary which constitute overreaching by such fiduciary? That is a question which cannot be answered as a matter of law. The answer is best left to a jury after consideration of all of the facts. The only ground listed in the demurrers which is applicable to our consideration of this matter is failure to state a cause of action. The petition states a cause of action in three respects.

[915] INTENTIONAL INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS

Plaintiff's amended petition states that plaintiff began counseling with Lange and that during the course of [23] counseling, "Lange made numerous sexual advances on Plaintiff which lasted for approximately a three-year period." During this time, plaintiff alleged, she was "vulnerable because of prior emotional problems." Plaintiff also alleged that in 1982, Lange succeeded in "seducing" the plaintiff. The majority determined that these allegations are insufficient to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. This decision is based on a determination that "what is involved in this case is conduct between consenting adults."

The petition alleges, however, that plaintiff was not a fully consenting adult." Plaintiff alleges she was vulnerable and that she was seduced by a pastoral counselor whom she trusted. In considering a demurrer, a court must assume that the pleaded facts, as distinguished from legal conclusions, are true as alleged and must give the pleading the benefit of any reasonable inference from the facts alleged, but cannot assume the existence of a fact not alleged, make factual findings to aid the pleading, or consider evidence which might be adduced at trial. Gallion v. Woytassek, ante p. 15, 244 Neb. 15, 504 N.W.2d 76 (1993); Hamilton v. City of Omaha, 243 Neb. 253, 498 N.W.2d 555 (1993). [24] Assuming, as we must, that plaintiff's allegations are true, that she was vulnerable and that she was so seduced, it cannot fairly be said as a matter of law that she was a [*727] "consenting adult" so as to bar a claim against one who would ordinarily be classified as a fiduciary.

Plaintiff cited two cases, Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275 (Colo. 1988), and Erickson v. Christenson, 99 Ore. App. 104, 781 P.2d 383 (1989), in which claims against members of the clergy for intentional infliction of emotional distress were upheld. The majority, however, concludes that these cases are factually distinct.

The defendant in Destefano was alleged to have held himself out as being trained and capable of conducting marital counseling, which is not alleged in this case. Alleging that the defendant held himself out as a trained professional marital counselor may be necessary to establish one type of a fiduciary relationship to establish a breach of a fiduciary's duties. There is no need to establish such a relationship to establish a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The outrageousness of [25] Lange's conduct should not depend upon whether or not he held himself out as one type of professional. It may be one of many factors which should be considered when determining the degree of culpability.

Likewise, the fact that the plaintiff in Erickson was only 13 years old when the conduct at issue began is just one factor to consider when determining whether the conduct in question is outrageous. Certainly, the fact that the plaintiff here is an adult does not mean that Lange's conduct could not be outrageous.

To state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the plaintiff must allege facts that would show (1) there has been intentional or reckless conduct, (2) the conduct was so outrageous in character and so extreme in degree as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency and is to be regarded as atrocious and utterly intolerable in a civilized community, and (3) the conduct caused emotional distress so severe that no reasonable person should be expected to endure it. Nichols v. Busse, 243 Neb. 811, 503 N.W.2d 173 (1993); Gall v. Great Western Sugar Co., 219 Neb. 354, 363 N.W.2d 373 (1985). [26]

The petition alleges facts which, If viewed as true, establish that Lange's conduct was intentional. The petition further alleges that "the conduct of the Defendants, and each of them, was outrageous and extreme In nature and intended to cause [*728] and did cause severe emotional distress upon Plaintiff." In her petition, plaintiff alleges that "by virtue of the conduct hereinbefore set forth, that the conduct of the Defendants . . . was outrageous and extreme in nature . . . ." The petition set forth the following conduct:

> Starting in 1979, Plaintiff began counseling with Lange, concerning family matters having full confidence that he was her [916] parish priest and spiritual leader. During this time, Plaintiff was vulnerable because of prior emotional problems. Commencing in about 1979, while the plaintiff was vulnerable, and during the course of pastoral counseling, Lange made numerous sexual advances on Plaintiff which lasted for approximately a three-year period. In 1982, Lange succeeded in seducing the Plaintiff, and a sexual relationship developed between Lange and Plaintiff that lasted until approximately June of 1989.
> . . . At all times herein, Defendants, and each of them, were [27] charged with the obligation to administer pastoral and spiritual advice and care to the Plaintiff and her family, and as such, held a position of trust and responsibility to Plaintiff and her family.

Plaintiff alleges she "incurred severe and permanent emotional injury and was damaged as follows: A. Plaintiff incurred medical expenses of $ 2,500.00 and will incur medical expenses in the future. B. Plaintiff has lost her faith in the Catholic Church and God and incurred emotional pain, suffering and mental anguish, past and future."

The petition alleges sufficient facts to state a cause of action against defendant Lange for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The issue of consent would be an affirmative defense.

NEGLIGENCE

Plaintiff's petition also states a cause of action against the Archdiocese for negligence.

Nebraska has recognized that an employer is subject to liability for harm to third persons resulting from the employer's negligent selection of an improper employee. Greening v. School Dist. of Millard, 223 Neb. 729, 393 N.W.2d 51 (1986). To state a cause of action for negligence, one must plead facts [*729] from which it can [28] be inferred that the defendant owed a duty to protect the plaintiff from injury, that the defendant failed to discharge that duty, and that damage proximately resulted from such failure. Christianson v. Educational Serv. Unit No. 16, 243 Neb. 553, 501 N.W.2d 281 (1993).

In Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275, 288 (Colo. 1988), the following allegations were held to state a viable claim for negligent supervision:

> "Defendant Diocese of Colorado Springs knew or should have known that Defendant Grabrian was engaging in conduct which was outrageous, negligent, and a breach of his fiduciary duty, and Defendant Diocese owed a duty of supervision of said Defendant Grabrian to the public and breached said duty, causing the injuries and damages set forth above."

With respect to this cause of action, plaintiff alleged the following:

A. Defendant Archdiocese was negligent as follows:

> (1) Hiring Defendant Lange in the position of parish priest in Plaintiff's parish.
>
> (2) Failing to properly investigate Defendant Lange's background by inquiring into his relations with other women while he was acting as a parish priest [29] in other parishes when they [sic] knew, or should have known, that he had been actively Involved with relationships with women in violation of his vows of celibacy on more than one occasion.
>
> (3) Failing to train Lange to avoid sexual contact with parishioners.
>
> (4) Failing to supervise Lange in connection with his pastoral duties with respect to his relations with female parishioners when they [sic] knew, or should have known, that he had sexual affairs in the past.
> (5) Failing to remove Lange from a position of pastoral responsibility when the Defendant knew, or should have known, of Lange's sexual involvement with the Plaintiff.

From these allegations it can reasonably be inferred that the Archdiocese owed a duty to plaintiff, that it failed to discharge that duty, and that plaintiff's severe emotional distress [*730] proximately resulted from that failure. Plaintiff's petition therefore states a cause of action for negligence against the Archdiocese. The demurrer, therefore, should have been overruled in this respect also.

[917] BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

The majority also rejected the third cause of action claimed by plaintiff, breach of fiduciary duty. In Destefano v. Grabrian, supra, [30] the Supreme Court of Colorado held a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty was stated where a woman alleged a member of the clergy had sexual intercourse with her while he was providing her with marriage counseling. The fiduciary duty, the court said, was created by his undertaking to counsel the woman. It was not created by the fact that he was a clergy member. The court stated:

> If the alleged conduct of Grabrian [the clergy member] was dictated by his sincerely held religious beliefs or was consistent with the practice of his religion, we would have to resolve a difficult first amendment issue. This, however, is not the case. It has not been asserted that Grabrian's conduct falls within the practices or beliefs of the Catholic church.

763 P.2d at 284. Likewise, here there has been no assertion that Lange's conduct falls within the practices or beliefs of the Catholic Church. Thus, there is no difficult First Amendment issue to confront.

Lange's duty to plaintiff, given the nature of the counseling relationship, was to help her with family matters. See Destefano v. Grabrian, supra. Seduction of plaintiff, [31] if proved, would be an obvious breach of that duty. A person standing in a fiduciary relationship with another is subject to liability for harm resulting from a breach of the duty imposed by the relationship. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 874 (1979). Lange could, if the allegations contained in the petition are proven, be subject to liability for any harm he caused.

For the reasons cited, I would reverse the judgment of the district court.

SHANAHAN, J., joins in this dissent.

§ 12. "ALTER EGO" DOCTRINE; INSTRUMENTALITY OR AGENCY GENERALLY

The corporate entity may be disregarded where the corporation is found to be the alter ego of its stockholders.

West's Key Number Digest, Corporations ⚖1.4(4)

Under the "alter ego" doctrine, the separate corporate entity may be disregarded and personal liability imposed upon the shareholders, [FN56] where a corporation is found to be the alter ego of its shareholders, [FN57] that is, where the community of interest between the corporation and the shareholders is so great that they should be considered as one and the same. [FN58] The doctrine is merely a means of piercing the corporate veil [FN59] and imposing individual liability where none would otherwise exist. [FN60] In deciding whether to apply the alter ego theory, the corporate entity must be upheld unless specific, unusual circumstances call for piercing of the corporate veil. [FN61] Similarly, where a corporation operates as a mere instrumentality or agent of its owner [FN62] or a mere shell dominated and controlled by its owners [FN63] the corporate form may be disregarded. Some courts hold that even if a plaintiff shows that a dominator of the corporation had complete control over the corporation so that the corporation had no separate mind, will, or existence of its own, the corporate veil may not be pierced in the absence of a showing that this control was used to commit a wrong, fraud, or breach of a legal duty, or a dishonest and unjust act in contravention of the plaintiff's legal rights and that the control and breach of duty proximately caused the injury complained of. [FN63.5]
The alter ego doctrine is based in equity [FN64] and is remedial in nature. [FN65] It is designed to prevent persons or entities from escaping responsibility for their acts or liabilities by hiding behind the corporate shield, [FN66] and it is not a matter of punishment for the sloppy handling of intracorporate affairs which brings about an alter ego finding. [FN67]
The doctrine will not be applied so as to prejudice the rights of an innocent third party who has dealt with the corporation as such, [FN68] and it is not applied to eliminate consequences of corporate operations, but to avoid inequitable results. [FN69] A finding of bad faith is not a prerequisite to application of the alter ego doctrine. [FN70]
The alter ego doctrine applies when the facts are such that adherence to the corporate fiction of separate entity would, under the circumstances, sanction fraud, [FN71] but fraud is not essential, [FN72] since the courts will also disregard the corporate fiction when its retention would produce injustice [FN73] or inequitable consequences. [FN74]
Individual liaiblity under the doctrine of alter ego arises from fraud or injustice perpetrated not on the corporation but on third person's dealing with the corporation. [FN75]

Factors considered.

The test for determining whether a corporation is simply the alter ego of its owners is a practical one, [FN76] based largely on the particular factual circumstances of the individual case. [FN77]
There must exist specific unusual circumstances for the alter ego doctrine to apply. [FN78] Factors which will be considered in determining whether a corporation's existence will be disregarded as being the mere alter ego of its controlling owner include whether the corporation is undercapitalized, [FN79] whether there is commingling of funds of the corporation and the individual, [FN80] whether the dominant shareholder siphoned corporate funds, [FN81] whether individual obligations are paid by the corporation, [FN82] whether separate books are kept, [FN83] whether corporate assets are treated as the individual's own, [FN84] and whether the corporation was insolvent at the time of the transaction. [FN85]

Failure to hold regular shareholder and director meetings may also be a factor in the determination. [FN85.5]
The corporation's failure to conduct its business on a corporate footing, thereby disregarding the corporate entity to such an extent that the corporation ceases to be distinguishable from its shareholders, is another factor. [FN85.10]
In addition, other factors are considered, such as whether the corporation failed to pay dividends, [FN86] whether other officers and directors were nonfunctioning, [FN87] whether the corporation is used to promote fraud or illegality, [FN88] whether corporate formalities are followed, [FN89] and whether the corporation is merely a sham [FN90] or facade, [FN91] for individual dealings.
Such factors, however, are not conclusive [FN92] and disregarding of the corporate fiction is not justified on the basis of any one of the factors for establishing the alter ego basis, [FN93] or on the basis of the failure of any one of the corporate formalities. [FN94]
Whether the federal court is to equitably exercise the alter ego doctrine as to a particular entity must be determined in accordance with the law of the forum state. [FN94.5]

CUMULATIVE SUPPLEMENT:

Cases:

Piercing the corporate veil between a signatory and a nonsignatory party may bind the nonsignatory party to an arbitration agreement of its alter ego. American Fuel Corp. v. Utah Energy Development Co., Inc., 122 F.3d 130 (2d Cir. 1997).
Piercing the corporate veil may be based on the doctrine of equitable ownership, under which an individual who exercises sufficient control over the corporation may be deemed the "equitable owner," even if the individual is not a shareholder of the corporation. Freeman v. Complex Computing Co., Inc., 119 F.3d 1044 (2d Cir. 1997).
Issue of reverse piercing of corporate veil concerning seizure of assets of alter ego is undecided in Louisiana. Century Hotels v. U.S., 952 F.2d 107 (5th Cir. 1992).
Wilshire Credit Corp. v. Karlin, 988 F. Supp. 570 (D. Md. 1997).
In Second Circuit, district court can, in the exercise of its discretion and in the appropriate circumstances, apply disentitlement doctrine in civil forfeiture proceeding to claim of corporation alleged to be the alter ego of a fugitive; fundamental consideration in determining whether to exercise discretion and apply the doctrine in such situation is extent of control over the corporation exercised by the fugitive or the extent of independent dominion and control the corporation has over its assets. U.S. v. Funds Held in Name or for Ben. of Wetterer, 899 F. Supp. 1013 (E.D. N.Y. 1995).
Kissun v. Humana, Inc., 267 Ga. 419, 479 S.E.2d 751 (1997).
Smith v. Hawks, 182 Ga. App. 379, 355 S.E.2d 669 (1987).
Haywood v. Louisiana Sugar Cane Products, 692 So. 2d 524 (La. Ct. App. 3d Cir. 1997).
Pine Tree Associates v. Doctors' Associates, Inc., 654 So. 2d 735 (La. Ct. App. 1st Cir. 1995).
Although alter ego doctrine is typically employed to pierce corporate veil of controlled entity to reach assets of controlling party, doctrine can also be applied in reverse to reach assets of controlled entity; it is particularly appropriate to apply alter ego doctrine in reverse when controlling party uses controlled entity to hide assets or secretly to conduct business to avoid preexisting liability of controlling party. Olen v. Phelps, 200 Wis. 2d 155, 546 N.W.2d 176 (Ct. App. 1996).

§ 38. --RATIFICATION

Generally, the liability of one who has not actively participated in the commission of a tort may be established where the wrongful act is ratified by him.

West's Key Number Digest, Torts ⇐21

Generally, the liability of one who has not actively participated may be established where the wrongful act is ratified by him, [FN11] as where, with knowledge of a tort done for his benefit, he approves and avails himself of its fruits. [FN12]
Mere acquiescence in the commission of a tort after the act does not make the person thus acquiescing a party to the wrong or liable therefor as a joint tort-feasor. [FN13] In order to be liable he must not only have assented to the wrong, but the act must have been done for his benefit [FN14] or have been of a nature to benefit him. [FN15]
However, it has been held that mere approval of another's tort does not charge the one approving with liability even though the tort was for the latter's benefit. [FN16] The mere fact that a party innocently receives a benefit is not conclusive on the question of his liability. [FN17] The ratification must be founded on full knowledge of the facts constituting the wrong which has been committed or with a purpose on the part of the principal to take the consequences on himself without inquiry. [FN18]
Ratification will not be established from mere knowledge, approval, or satisfaction, [FN19] although where an act is simply in excess of authority, mere approval of the wrong may be sufficient. [FN20]

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF EX PARTE APPLICATION TO EXTEND PAGE LIMIT

HEARING OF UNDERLYING MOTION
DATE: October 23, 2003
TIME: 8:30 a.m.
DEPT: B

I. INTRODUCTION

The "Church Defendants" identified in the concurrently filed ex parte application hereby specially appear to request permission pursuant to California Rules of Court, Rule 313(d) to file a Memorandum of Points and Authorities in support of their Demurrers to Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint of up to 23 pages in length. Written notice of this application was made to Plaintiffs' counsel on September 11, 2003 via facsimile. (Declaration of Robert J. Schnack, Exhibit A.)

II. REASONS NECESSITATING PAGE LIMIT EXTENSION

"A party may apply to the court ex parte but with written notice of the application to the other parties, at least 24 hours before the memorandum is due, for permission to file a longer memorandum. The application shall state the reasons why the argument cannot be made within the stated limit." California Rules of Court, Rule 313(d).

Defendants require up to 23 pages to adequately address all of the necessary elements and legal authorities related to their Demurrers to Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. The Demurrers to Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint involve, among other things, complex constitutional law issues involving the First Amendment and its effect on the entanglement between courts and religion. Such issues dealing with church and state necessarily require an extensive discussion of the applicable legal authorities and case law.

Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint is in essence a claim for clergy malpractice – i.e., that the Church Defendants failed to provide adequate advice and protection when counseling Plaintiffs and their families. Based on these claims, it is clear that the Church Defendants' Demurrers must discuss the extensive legal authorities that make clergy malpractice claims constitutionally impermissible. The issues of impermissible state entanglement with religion and of church autonomy are at the heart of why such clergy malpractice claims are impermissible.

Nomenclature aside, Plaintiffs' allegations for common law negligence, gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud are little more than clergy malpractice claims in disguise. These claims, therefore, also require a discussion of legal matters pertaining to the entanglement between church and state, including First Amendment issues.

Moreover, Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint contains 12 separately alleged causes of action with several pages of alleged factual history. In addition to the complex constitutional and First Amendment issues identified above, Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint also involves legal issues ranging from the application of California corporations law to the application of claims alleged for civil liability based on the California Penal Code.

The Church Defendants are demurring to all 12 separately alleged causes of action contained in Plaintiffs' Amended Complaint. Based on the allegations pled in the Amended Complaint, the Church Defendants contend that Plaintiffs' claims have no legal merit and should be dismissed. As such, the Church Defendants' Demurrers will conserve judicial resources as well as those of the parties. The Church Defendants, however, require up to 23 pages to adequately address all of Plaintiffs' causes of action.

III. CONCLUSION

For each of the forgoing reasons, the Church Defendants respectfully request that they be permitted to file a Memorandum of Points and Authorities in support of their Demurrers of up to 23 pages in length.

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants.	Case No.: 26-22191 MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS DATE: October 23, 2003 TIME: 8:30 a.m. DEPT.: B TRIAL DATE: Not yet set

I. INTRODUCTION

Defendants WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, INC. (hereinafter "Watch Tower"), KINGDOM SUPPORT SERVICES, INC. (hereinafter "KSS"), and RELIGIOUS ORDER OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES (hereinafter "ROJW") each hereby move this Court for an Order quashing service of summons upon them and dismissing Plaintiff's Complaint on the grounds that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over each of them. (These moving defendants will hereinafter be collectively referred to a the "Moving Church Defendants".)

II. RELEVANT UNDERLYING FACTS

Plaintiff's Complaint. Plaintiffs allege twelve causes of action against the Church

Defendants. Each of these causes of action is based on and related to: (1) the underlying alleged sexual abuse of the Plaintiffs by Edward Villegas (hereinafter "Villegas"), allegedly occurring from 1972 to about 1984-85 (Plaintiff Charissa W., see Complaint ¶ 28) and in 1978 (Plaintiff Nicole D., see Complaint ¶30); (2) the defendants' alleged failure to report that abuse, and/or to prevent, protect, or warn the Plaintiffs about Villegas' alleged propensity toward child abuse; and, (3) the defendants' internal policies, procedures, and actions regarding childhood sexual abuse. Certain defendants (identified as the Church Defendants in the demurrers) will file demurrers against each of Plaintiffs' causes of action. However, the three Moving Church Defendants also move herein to quash service of summons on each of them, on the basis that the California courts, including this Court, lack personal jurisdiction over them.

Facts Supporting the Moving Church Defendants' motion to quash service. The attached Affidavits of Richard E. Abrahamson (Secretary and Treasurer of Watch Tower), Alexander W. Reinmueller (Secretary and Treasurer of KSS), and Patrick J. LaFranca (President of ROJW) set forth the following facts to support this motion:

Watch Tower: Watch Tower is a Pennsylvania non-stock, not-for-profit corporation with its place of business in Brooklyn, New York. (Abrahamson Afft. at ¶3.) Watch Tower does not have an office, mailing address, or telephone number in California, nor does Watch Tower have any employees, officers, or directors who reside in California. (Abrahamson Afft. at ¶5.) Watch Tower has not and does not direct any commercial activity to California. (Abrahamson Afft. at ¶5.) Watch Tower has never maintained a place of business in California, has never paid taxes in California, has never maintained a bank account in California, and has never held any meeting, conference, or symposium in California. (Abrahamson Afft. at ¶6.) Watch Tower does not give advice to or control any of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States (thus including California). (Abrahamson Afft. at ¶7.) Watch Tower does not act in a supervisory capacity to any of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States (thus including California). (Abrahamson Afft. at ¶7.)

KSS: KSS is a New York not-for-profit charitable corporation with its place of business in Brooklyn, New York. (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶3.) KSS does not have an office, mailing address, or telephone number in California, nor does KSS have any employees, officers, or directors who reside in California. (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶5.) KSS has not and does not direct any commercial activity to California. (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶5.) KSS has never maintained a place of business in California, has never paid taxes in California, has never maintained a bank account in California, and has never held any meeting, conference, or symposium in California. (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶6.) KSS has never owned or controlled any real property or personal property in California. (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶7.) KSS does not give advice to or control any of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States (thus including California). (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶8.) KSS does not act in a supervisory capacity to any of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States (thus including California). (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶8.) KSS does not direct any continuous or systematic activities toward California. (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶8.) Rather, KSS's primary duties involving cargo transportation and building design are conducted in the State of New York. (Reinmueller Afft. at ¶8.)

ROJW: ROJW is a New York not-for-profit charitable corporation with its place of business in Brooklyn, New York. (LaFranca Afft. at ¶3.) ROJW does not have an office, mailing address, or telephone number in California, nor does ROJW have any employees, officers, or directors who reside in California. (LaFranca Afft. at ¶5.) ROJW does not direct any commercial activity to California. (LaFranca Afft. at ¶5.) ROJW has never maintained a place of business in California, has never paid taxes in California, has never maintained a bank account in California, and has never held any meeting, conference, or symposium in California. (LaFranca Afft. at ¶6.) ROJW has never owned or controlled any real property or personal property in California. (LaFranca Afft. at ¶7.) ROJW does not give advice to or control any of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States (thus including California). (LaFranca Afft. at ¶8.) ROJW does not act in a supervisory capacity to any of the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States (thus including California). (LaFranca Afft. at ¶8.) ROJW primarily performs its duties within the State of New York. (LaFranca Afft. at ¶4.)

As discussed below, the facts established by the referenced Affidavits of Mssrs. Abrahamson, Reinmueller, and LaFranca demonstrate that this Court lacks personal jurisdiction over each of the Moving Church Defendants.

III. LEGAL STANDARD ON MOTION TO QUASH

California Code of Civil Procedure ("CCP") § 418.10(a) provides as follows:

> "(a) [a] defendant on or before the last day of his or her time to plead or within any further time that the court may for good cause allow, may serve and file a notice of motion for one or more of the following purposes:
> (1) To quash service of summons on the ground of lack of jurisdiction of the court over him or her."

When a defendant moves the trial court to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction, the plaintiff has the initial burden of proving that sufficient contacts exist between the defendant and California to justify the exercise of personal jurisdiction. Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal.4th 434, 449. If a plaintiff meets that initial burden, the burden shifts to the defendant to demonstrate that the assumption of jurisdiction would be unreasonable. Id.

On a motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction, California courts require that, although the defendant is the moving party and must present some admissible evidence to place the issue before the court, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish by a preponderance of the evidence a basis for jurisdiction and valid service of process. School Dist. of Okaloosa County v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal.App.4th 1126.

Moreover, a plaintiff cannot merely rely upon allegations in his unverified complaint to establish defendants' minimum contacts with California as a basis for specific jurisdiction over defendants. Goehring v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal.App.4th 894, 909; Mansour v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal.App.4th 1750, 1759.

IV. LEGAL ARGUMENT

California courts may exercise jurisdiction on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States. CCP § 410.10. However, "the forum state may not exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident unless the relationship of that person or entity to the state is such as to make the exercise of such jurisdiction reasonable." Boaz v. Boyle & Co. (1995) 40 Cal.App.4th 700, 716.

Personal jurisdiction is of two types: general and specific. Malone v. Equitas Reinsurance Ltd. (2000) 84 Cal.App.4th 1430, 1436. General jurisdiction exists when the activities of a nonresident in California are substantial, continuous and systematic, or extensive and wide-ranging. Boaz v. Boyle & Co., supra, 40 Cal.App.4th at 717. In such circumstances, it is not necessary that the cause of action be related to the defendant's in-state activities. Id. In contrast, under specific jurisdiction, the lawsuit must arise out of, or be related to, the defendant's contacts with the state. Id. at 716-17.

In determining whether a defendant corporation has continuous and systematic business contacts in the forum state sufficient to establish general jurisdiction, courts generally look to whether the nonresident corporation (1) maintains an office in the forum state, (2) has employees in the forum state, (3) uses bank accounts in the forum state, or (4) markets or sells products in the forum state. Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall (1984) 466 U.S. 408, 414-16. The standard for establishing general jurisdiction is fairly high and requires that the defendant's contacts to California be of the sort that approximates physical presence. Bancroft & Masters, Inc. v. Augusta Nat. Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 223 F.3d 1082.

On the other hand, specific jurisdiction results when the defendant's contacts with the forum state, though not enough to subject the defendant to general jurisdiction of the forum, are sufficient to subject the defendant to suit in the forum on a cause of action related to or arising out of those contacts. Virtualmagic Asia, Inc. v. Fil-Cartoons, Inc. (2002) 99 Cal.App.4th 228, 238. Specific jurisdiction exists if: (1) the defendant has purposefully availed itself of forum benefits with respect to the matter in controversy; (2) the controversy is related to or arises out of the defendant's contacts with the forum; and (3) the assertion of jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice. Id.

It is well established that jurisdiction over a wholly owned subsidiary does not give a court jurisdiction over the parent corporation. Northern Natural Gas Co. of Omaha, Neb. V. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal.App.3d 983, 991.

Here, the affidavits submitted conclusively establish that each of the Moving Church Defendants lack the "substantial, continuous and systematic, or extensive and wide-ranging" contacts with California necessary for this Court to assert general jurisdiction over them. See Boaz v. Boyle & Co., supra, 40 Cal.App.4th at 717.

Similarly, the affidavits submitted conclusively establish that this Court cannot exercise specific jurisdiction over any of the Moving Church Defendants, because (1) none of the Moving Church Defendants has purposefully availed itself of forum benefits with respect to the matter in controversy; (2) the claims alleged in Plaintiff's complaint are not related to and do not arise out of any of the Moving Church Defendant's contacts with California; and (3) the assertion of jurisdiction over the Moving Church Defendants in this case would not comport with fair play and substantial justice, given the complete absence of any nexus or connection between Plaintiff's claims in this action and the Moving Church Defendants. See Virtualmagic Asia, Inc. v. Fil-Cartoons, Inc., supra.

The Moving Church Defendants should not be haled into a California court to defend this action. As demonstrated above, this Court cannot constitutionally exercise either general or specific jurisdiction over any of the Moving Church Defendants, and an Order should be entered granting their motion and dismissing them each from this action.

PRIOR HISTORY:

CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF TEXAS.

DISPOSITION: 638 S. W. 2d 870, reversed.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: Petitioner foreign corporation sought review of a decision of the Supreme Court of Texas, which ruled that the corporation's contacts with the state were sufficient to allow a state court to assert jurisdiction over the corporation in respondent representatives' cause of action against the corporation for the wrongful deaths of their decedents, which did not arise out of, and was unrelated to, the corporation's activities within the state.

OVERVIEW: The foreign corporation entered into contract negotiations in Texas with decedents' employer to provide helicopter services. They signed a contract in Peru that provided for decedents' employer to make payments to the corporation's United States bank account. The corporation did not maintain a place of business in Texas, but purchased helicopter parts there and sent employees there for training. The decedents' representatives filed a wrongful death action against the corporation following the decedents' deaths in a helicopter crash in Peru. Reversing the lower court, the Court held that the corporation's contacts with the state were not sufficient to subject it to the state court's in personam jurisdiction. Because the representatives' causes of action for wrongful death arose out of the crash in Peru, and were not related to the corporation's contacts with the state, and the corporation's business contacts with the state were not continuous and systematic enough to satisfy the requirements of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, the Court concluded that the state court lacked personal jurisdiction over the corporation.

OUTCOME: The Court reversed the state court's judgment that found the corporation subject to the in personam jurisdiction of the state courts.

CORE TERMS: cause of action, helicopter, training, personam jurisdiction, general jurisdiction, nonresident, pilot, personnel, underlying cause of action, continuous, trip, transportation, consortium, decedents, crash, assertion of jurisdiction, personal jurisdiction, systematic, Fourteenth Amendment, regular, joint venture, checks drawn, wrongful-death, doing business, manufacturer, negotiation, formally, pipeline, sending, notions of fair play

SYLLABUS: Petitioner, a Colombian corporation, entered into a contract to provide helicopter transportation for a Peruvian consortium, the alter ego of a joint venture that had its headquarters in Houston, Tex., during the consortium's construction of a pipeline in Peru for a Peruvian state-owned oil company. Petitioner has no place of business in Texas and never has been licensed to do business there. Its only contacts with the State consisted of sending its chief executive officer to Houston to negotiate the contract with the consortium, accepting into its New York bank account checks drawn by the consortium on a Texas bank, purchasing helicopters, equipment, and training services from a Texas manufacturer, and sending personnel to that manufacturer's facilities for training. After a helicopter owned by petitioner crashed in Peru, resulting in the death of respondents' decedents -- United States citizens who were employed by the consortium -- respondents instituted wrongful-death actions in a Texas state court against the consortium, the Texas manufacturer, and petitioner. Denying petitioner's motion to dismiss the actions for lack of in personam jurisdiction over it, the trial court entered judgment against petitioner on a jury verdict in favor of respondents. The Texas Court of Civil Appeals reversed, holding that in personam jurisdiction over petitioner was lacking, but in turn was reversed by the Texas Supreme Court.

Held: Petitioner's contacts with Texas were insufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and hence to allow the Texas court to assert in personam jurisdiction over petitioner. The one trip to Houston by petitioner's chief executive officer for the purpose of negotiating the transportation services contract cannot be regarded as a contact of a "continuous and systematic" nature, and thus cannot support an assertion of general jurisdiction. Similarly, petitioner's acceptance of checks drawn on a Texas bank is of negligible significance for purposes of determining whether petitioner had sufficient contacts in Texas. Nor were petitioner's purchases of helicopters and equipment from the Texas manufacturer and the related training trips a sufficient basis for the Texas court's assertion of jurisdiction. Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516. Mere purchases, even if occurring at regular intervals, are not enough to warrant a State's assertion of in personam jurisdiction over a nonresident corporation in a cause of action not related to the purchases. And the fact that petitioner sent personnel to Texas for training in connection with the purchases did not enhance the nature of petitioner's contacts with Texas. Pp. 413-419.

COUNSEL: Thomas J. Whalen argued the cause for petitioner. With him on the briefs were Austin P. Magner, Cynthia J. Larsen, James E. Ingram, and Barry A. Chasnoff.

George E. Pletcher argued the cause and filed a brief for respondents. *

* Robert L. Stern, Stephen M. Shapiro, William H. Crabtree, and Edward P. Good filed a brief for the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers Association as amicus curiae urging reversal.

Solicitor General Lee, Assistant Attorney General McGrath, Deputy Solicitor General Geller, Kathryn A. Oberly, Michael F. Hertz, and Howard S. Scher filed a brief for the United States as amicus curiae.

JUDGES: BLACKMUN, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BURGER, C. J., and WHITE, MARSHALL, POWELL, REHNQUIST, STEVENS, and O'CONNOR, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed a dissenting opinion, post, p. 419.

We granted certiorari in this case, 460 U.S. 1021 (1983), to decide whether the Supreme Court of Texas correctly ruled that the contacts of a foreign corporation with the State of Texas were sufficient to allow a Texas state court to assert jurisdiction over the corporation in a cause of action not [1870] arising out of or related to the corporation's activities within the State.

Petitioner Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S. A. (Helicol), is a Colombian corporation with its principal place of business in the city of Bogota in that country. It is engaged in the business of providing helicopter transportation for oil and construction companies in South America. On [*410] January 26, 1976, a helicopter owned by Helicol crashed in Peru. Four United States citizens were among those who lost their lives in the accident. Respondents are the survivors and representatives of the four decedents.

At the time of the crash, respondents' decedents were employed by Consorcio, a Peruvian consortium, and were working on a pipeline in Peru. Consorcio is the alter ego of a joint venture named Williams-Sedco-Horn (WSH). n1 The venture had its headquarters in Houston, Tex. Consorcio had been formed to enable the venturers to enter into a contract with Petro Peru, the Peruvian state-owned oil company. Consorcio was to construct a pipeline for Petro Peru running from the interior of Peru westward to the Pacific Ocean. Peruvian law forbade construction of the pipeline by any non-Peruvian entity.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n1 The participants in the joint venture were Williams International Sudamericana, Ltd., a Delaware corporation; Sedco Construction Corporation, a Texas corporation; and Horn International, Inc., a Texas corporation.

- - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Consorcio/WSH n2 needed helicopters to move personnel, materials, and equipment into and out of the construction area. In 1974, upon request of Consorcio/WSH, the chief executive officer of Helicol, Francisco Restrepo, flew to the United States and conferred in Houston with representatives of the three joint venturers. At that meeting, there was a discussion of prices, availability, working conditions, fuel, supplies, and housing. Restrepo represented that Helicol could have the first helicopter on the job in 15 days. The [409] Consorcio/WSH representatives decided to accept the contract proposed by Restrepo. Helicol began performing before the agreement was formally signed in Peru on November 11, 1974. n3 The contract was written in Spanish on [*411] official government stationery and provided that the residence of all the parties would be Lima, Peru. It further stated that controversies arising out of the contract would be submitted to the jurisdiction of Peruvian courts. In addition, it provided that Consorcio/WSH would make payments to Helicol's account with the Bank of America in New York City. App. 12a.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n2 Throughout the record in this case the entity is referred to both as Consorcio and as WSH. We refer to it hereinafter as Consorcio/WSH.

n3 Respondents acknowledge that the contract was executed in Peru and not in the United States. Tr. of Oral Arg. 22-23. See App. 79a; Brief for Respondents 3.

Aside from the negotiation session in Houston between Restrepo and the representatives of Consorcio/WSH, Helicol had other contacts with Texas. During the years 1970-1977, it purchased helicopters (approximately 80% of its fleet), spare parts, and accessories for more than $ 4 million from Bell Helicopter Company in Fort Worth. In that period, Helicol sent prospective pilots to Fort Worth for training and to ferry the aircraft to South America. It also sent management and maintenance personnel to visit Bell Helicopter in Fort Worth during the same period in order to receive "plant familiarization" and for technical consultation. Helicol received into its New York City and Panama City, Fla., bank accounts over $ 5 million in payments from Consorcio/WSH drawn upon First City National Bank of Houston.

Beyond the foregoing, there have been no other business contacts between Helicol and the State of Texas. Helicol never has been authorized to do business in Texas and never has had an agent for the [1871] service of process within the State. It never has performed helicopter operations in Texas or sold any product that reached Texas, never solicited business in Texas, never signed any contract in Texas, never had any employee based there, and never recruited an employee in Texas. In addition, Helicol never has owned real or personal property in Texas and never has maintained an office or establishment there. Helicol has maintained no records in Texas and has no shareholders in that State. n4 None of the [*412] respondents or their decedents were domiciled in Texas, Tr. of Oral Arg. 17, 18, n5 but all of the decedents were hired in Houston by Consorcio/WSH to work on the Petro Peru pipeline project.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n4 The Colombian national airline, Aerovias Nacionales de Colombia, owns approximately 94% of Helicol's capital stock. The remainder is held by Aerovias Corporacion de Viajes and four South American individuals. See Brief for Petitioner 2, n. 2.

n5 Respondents' lack of residential or other contacts with Texas of itself does not defeat otherwise proper jurisdiction. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 780 (1984); Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 788 (1984). We mention respondents' lack of contacts merely to show that nothing in the nature of the relationship between respondents and Helicol could possibly enhance Helicol's contacts with Texas. The harm suffered by respondents did not occur in Texas. Nor is it alleged that any negligence on the part of Helicol took place in Texas.

Respondents instituted wrongful-death actions in the District Court of Harris County, Tex., against Consorcio/WSH, Bell Helicopter Company, and Helicol. Helicol filed special appearances [410] and moved to dismiss the actions for lack of in personam jurisdiction over it. The motion was denied. After a consolidated jury trial, judgment was entered against Helicol on a jury verdict of $ 1,141,200 in favor of respondents. n6 App. 174a.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n6 Defendants Consorcio/WSH and Bell Helicopter Company were granted directed verdicts with respect to respondents' claims against them. Bell Helicopter was granted a directed verdict on Helicol's cross-claim against it. App. 167a. Consorcio/WSH, as cross-plaintiff in a claim against Helicol, obtained a judgment in the amount of $ 70,000. Id., at 174a.

The Texas Court of Civil Appeals, Houston, First District, reversed the judgment of the District Court, holding that in personam jurisdiction over Helicol was lacking. 616 S. W. 2d 247 (1981). The Supreme Court of Texas, with three justices dissenting, initially affirmed the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals. App. to Pet. for Cert. 46a-62a. Seven months later, however, on motion for rehearing, the court withdrew its prior opinions and, again with three justices dissenting, reversed the judgment of the intermediate court. 638 S. W. 2d 870 (1982). In ruling that the Texas courts had [*413] in personam jurisdiction, the Texas Supreme Court first held that the State's long-arm statute reaches as far as the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment permits. Id., at 872. n7 Thus, the only question remaining [1872] for the court to decide was whether it was consistent with the Due Process Clause for Texas courts to assert in personam jurisdiction over Helicol. Ibid.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n7 The State's long-arm statute is Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann., Art. 2031b (Vernon 1964 and Supp. 1982-1983). HN1 It reads in relevant part:

"Sec. 3. Any foreign corporation . . . that engages in business in this State, irrespective of any Statute or law respecting designation or maintenance of resident agents, and does not maintain a place of regular business in this State or a designated agent upon whom service may be made upon causes of action arising out of such business done in this State, the act or acts of engaging in such business within this State shall be deemed equivalent to an appointment by such foreign corporation . . . of the Secretary of State of Texas as agent upon whom service of process may be made in any action, suit or proceedings arising out of such business done in this State, wherein such corporation . . . is a party or is to be made a party.

"Sec. 4. For the purpose of this Act, and without including other acts that may constitute doing business, any foreign corporation . . . shall be deemed doing business in this State by entering into contract by mail or otherwise with a resident of Texas to be performed in whole or in part by either party in this State, or the committing of any tort in whole or in part in this State. The act of recruiting Texas residents, directly or through an intermediary located in Texas, for employment inside or outside of Texas shall be deemed doing business in this State."

The last sentence of § 4 was added by 1979 Tex. Gen. Laws, ch. 245, § 1, and became effective August 27, 1979.

The Supreme Court of Texas in its principal opinion relied upon rulings in U-Anchor Advertising, Inc. v. Burt, 553 S. W. 2d 760 (Tex. 1977); Hoppenfeld v. Crook, 498 S. W. 2d 52 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973); and O'Brien v. Lanpar Co., 399 S. W. 2d 340 (Tex. 1966). It is not within our province, of course, to determine whether the Texas Supreme Court correctly interpreted the State's long-arm statute. We therefore accept that court's holding that the limits of the Texas statute are coextensive with those of the Due Process Clause.

Due process requirements are satisfied when in personam jurisdiction is asserted over a nonresident corporate [411] defendant that has "certain minimum contacts with [the forum] such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'" International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945), quoting Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463 (1940).

HN4 Even when the cause of action does not arise out of or relate to the foreign corporation's activities in the forum State, n9 due process is not offended by a State's subjecting the corporation to its in personam jurisdiction when there are sufficient contacts between the State and the foreign corporation. Perkins v. Benguet Consolidated Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437 (1952); see Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 779-780 (1984). In Perkins, the Court addressed a situation in which state courts had asserted general jurisdiction over a defendant foreign corporation. During the Japanese [*415] occupation of the Philippine Islands, the president and general manager of a Philippine mining corporation maintained an office in Ohio from which he conducted activities on behalf of the company. He kept company files and held directors' meetings in the office, carried on correspondence relating to the business, distributed salary checks drawn on two active Ohio bank accounts, engaged an Ohio bank to act as transfer agent, and supervised policies dealing with the rehabilitation of the corporation's properties in the Philippines. In short, the foreign corporation, through its president, "[had] been carrying on in Ohio a continuous and systematic, but limited, part of its general business," and the exercise of general jurisdiction over the Philippine corporation by an Ohio court was "reasonable and just." 342 U.S., at 438, 445.

All parties to the present case concede that respondents' claims against Helicol did not "arise out of," and are not related to, Helicol's activities within Texas. n10 We thus [412] must [*416] explore the nature [1873] of Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas to determine whether they constitute the kind of continuous and systematic general business contacts the Court found to exist in Perkins. We hold that they do not.

n10 See Brief for Respondents 14; Tr. of Oral Arg. 26-27, 30-31. Because the parties have not argued any relationship between the cause of action and Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas, we, contrary to the dissent's implication, post, at 419-420, assert no "view" with respect to that issue.

The dissent suggests that we have erred in drawing no distinction between controversies that "relate to" a defendant's contacts with a forum and those that "arise out of" such contacts. Post, at 420. This criticism is somewhat puzzling, for the dissent goes on to urge that, for purposes of determining the constitutional validity of an assertion of specific jurisdiction, there really should be no distinction between the two. Post, at 427-428.

We do not address the validity or consequences of such a distinction because the issue has not been presented in this case. Respondents have made no argument that their cause of action either arose out of or is related to Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas. Absent any briefing on the issue, we decline to reach the questions (1) whether the terms "arising out of" and "related to" describe different connections between a cause of action and a defendant's contacts with a forum, and (2) what sort of tie between a cause of action and a defendant's contacts with a forum is necessary to a determination that either connection exists. Nor do we reach the question whether, if the two types of relationship differ, a forum's exercise of personal jurisdiction in a situation where the cause of action "relates to," but does not "arise out of," the defendant's contacts with the forum should be analyzed as an assertion of specific jurisdiction.

[*HR1C] [1C]
It is undisputed that Helicol does not have a place of business in Texas and never has been licensed to do business in the State. Basically, Helicol's contacts with Texas consisted of sending its chief executive officer to Houston for a contract-negotiation session; accepting into its New York bank account checks drawn on a Houston bank; purchasing helicopters, equipment, and training services from Bell Helicopter for substantial sums; and sending personnel to Bell's facilities in Fort Worth for training.

The one trip to Houston by Helicol's chief executive officer for the purpose of negotiating the transportation-services contract with Consorcio/WSH cannot be described or regarded as a contact of a "continuous and systematic" nature, as Perkins described it, see also International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S., at 320, and thus cannot support an assertion of in personam jurisdiction over Helicol by a Texas court. Similarly, Helicol's acceptance from Consorcio/WSH of checks drawn on a Texas bank is of negligible significance for purposes of determining whether Helicol had sufficient contacts in Texas. There is no indication that Helicol ever requested that the checks be drawn on a Texas bank or that there was any negotiation between Helicol and Consorcio/WSH with respect to the location or identity of the bank on which checks would be drawn. Common sense and everyday experience suggest that, absent unusual circumstances, n11 the bank on which a check is drawn is generally of little [*417] consequence to the payee and is a matter left to the discretion of the drawer. HN5 Such unilateral activity of another party or a third person is not an appropriate consideration when determining whether a defendant has sufficient contacts with a forum State to justify an assertion of jurisdiction. See Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 93 (1978) (arbitrary to subject one parent to suit in [413] any State where other parent chooses to spend time while having custody of child pursuant to separation agreement); Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253 (1958) ("The unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum State"); see also Lilly, Jurisdiction Over Domestic and Alien Defendants, 69 Va. The Texas Supreme Court focused on the purchases and the related training trips in [1874] finding contacts sufficient to support an assertion of jurisdiction. We do not agree with that assessment, for the Court's opinion in Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516 (1923) (Brandeis, J., for a unanimous tribunal), makes clear that purchases and related trips, standing alone, are not a sufficient basis for a State's assertion of jurisdiction.

The defendant in Rosenberg was a small retailer in Tulsa, Okla., who dealt in men's clothing and furnishings. It never had applied for a license to do business in New York, nor had it at any time authorized suit to be brought against it there. It never had an established place of business in New York and never regularly carried on business in that State. Its only connection with New York was that it purchased from New York wholesalers a large portion of the merchandise sold in its Tulsa store. The purchases sometimes were made by correspondence and sometimes through visits to New York by an officer of the defendant. The Court concluded: "Visits on such business, even if occurring at regular intervals, would not warrant the inference that the corporation was present within the jurisdiction of [New York]." Id., at 518.

[*HR7B] [7B]
This Court in International Shoe acknowledged and did not repudiate its holding in Rosenberg. See 326 U.S., at 318. In accordance with Rosenberg, we hold that mere purchases, even if occurring at regular intervals, are not enough to warrant a State's assertion of in personam jurisdiction over a nonresident corporation in a cause of action not related to those purchase transactions. n12 Nor can we conclude that the fact that Helicol sent personnel into Texas for training in connection with the purchase of helicopters and equipment in that State in any way enhanced the nature of Helicol's contacts with Texas. The training was a part of the package of goods and services purchased by Helicol from Bell Helicopter. The brief presence of Helicol employees in Texas for the purpose of attending the training sessions is no more a significant [414] contact than were the trips to New York made by the buyer for the retail store in Rosenberg. See also Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 93 (basing California jurisdiction on 3-day and 1-day stopovers in that State "would make a mockery of" due process limitations on assertion of personal jurisdiction).

Arguably, therefore, Rosenberg also stands for the proposition that mere purchases are not a sufficient basis for either general or specific jurisdiction. Because the case before us is one in which there has been an assertion of general jurisdiction over a foreign defendant, we need not decide the continuing validity of Rosenberg with respect to an assertion of specific jurisdiction, i. e., where the cause of action arises out of or relates to the purchases by the defendant in the forum State.

DISSENTBY: BRENNAN

DISSENT: [1875] JUSTICE BRENNAN, dissenting.

Decisions applying the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to determine whether a State may constitutionally assert in personam jurisdiction over a particular defendant for a particular cause of action most often turn on a weighing of facts. See, e. g., Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 92 (1978); id., at 101-102 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting). To a large extent, today's decision follows the usual pattern. Based on essentially undisputed facts, the Court concludes that petitioner Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas were insufficient to allow the Texas state courts constitutionally to assert "general jurisdiction" over all claims filed against this foreign corporation. Although my independent weighing of the facts leads me to a different conclusion, see infra, at 423-424, the Court's holding on this issue is neither implausible nor unexpected.

What is troubling about the Court's opinion, however, are the implications that might be drawn from the way in which the Court approaches the constitutional issue it addresses. First, the Court limits its discussion to an assertion of general jurisdiction of the Texas courts because, in its view, the [*420] underlying cause of action does "not [arise] out of or [relate] to the corporation's activities within the State." Ante, at 409. Then, the Court relies on a 1923 decision in Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, without considering whether that case retains any validity after our more recent pronouncements concerning the permissible reach of a State's jurisdiction. By posing and deciding the question presented in this manner, I fear that [415] the Court is saying more than it realizes about constitutional limitations on the potential reach of in personam jurisdiction. In particular, by relying on a precedent whose premises have long been discarded, and by refusing to consider any distinction between controversies that "relate to" a defendant's contacts with the forum and causes of action that "arise out of" such contacts, the Court may be placing severe limitations on the type and amount of contacts that will satisfy the constitutional minimum.

In contrast, I believe that the undisputed contacts in this case between petitioner Helicol and the State of Texas are sufficiently important, and sufficiently related to the underlying cause of action, to make it fair and reasonable for the State to assert personal jurisdiction over Helicol for the wrongful-death actions filed by the respondents. Given that Helicol has purposefully availed itself of the benefits and obligations of the forum, and given the direct relationship between the underlying cause of action and Helicol's contacts with the forum, maintenance of this suit in the Texas courts "does not offend [the] 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice,'" International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945) (quoting Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463 (1940)), that are the touchstone of jurisdictional analysis under the Due Process Clause. I therefore dissent.

I

The Court expressly limits its decision in this case to "an assertion of general jurisdiction over a foreign defendant." [*421] Ante, at 418, n. 12. See ante, at 415, and n. 10. Having framed the question in this way, the Court is obliged to address our prior holdings in Perkins v. Benguet Consolidated Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437 (1952), and Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., supra. In Perkins, the Court considered a State's assertion of general jurisdiction over a foreign corporation that "[had] been carrying on . . . a continuous and systematic, but limited, part of its general business" in the forum. 342 U.S., at 438. Under the circumstances of that case, we held that such contacts were constitutionally sufficient "to make it reasonable and just to subject the corporation [1876] to the jurisdiction" of that State. Id., at 445 (citing International Shoe, supra, at 317-320). Nothing in Perkins suggests, however, that such "continuous and systematic" contacts are a necessary minimum before a State may constitutionally assert general jurisdiction over a foreign corporation.

The Court therefore looks for guidance to our 1923 decision in Rosenberg, supra, which until today was of dubious validity given the subsequent expansion of personal jurisdiction that began with International Shoe, supra, in 1945. In Rosenberg, the Court held that a company's purchases within a State, even when combined with related trips to the State by company officials, would not allow the courts of that State to assert general jurisdiction over all [416] claims against the nonresident corporate defendant making those purchases. n1 [*422] Reasoning by analogy, the Court in this case concludes that Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas are no more significant than the purchases made by the defendant in Rosenberg. The Court makes no attempt, however, to ascertain whether the narrow view of in personam jurisdiction adopted by the Court in Rosenberg comports with "the fundamental transformation of our national economy" that has occurred since 1923. McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 355 U.S. 220, 222-223 (1957). See also World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 292-293 (1980); id., at 308-309 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting); [1877] Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 250-251 (1958); id., at 260 (Black, J., dissenting). This failure, in my view, is fatal to the Court's analysis.

n1 The Court leaves open the question whether the decision in Rosenberg was intended to address any constitutional limits on an assertion of "specific jurisdiction." Ante, at 418, n. 12 (citing International Shoe, 326 U.S., at 318). If anything is clear from Justice Brandeis' opinion for the Court in Rosenberg, however, it is that the Court was concerned only with general jurisdiction over the corporate defendant. See 260 U.S., at 517 ("The sole question for decision is whether . . . defendant was doing business within the State of New York in such manner and to such extent as to warrant the inference that it was present there"); id., at 518 (the corporation's contacts with the forum "would not warrant the inference that the corporation was present within the jurisdiction of the State"); ante, at 417. The Court's resuscitation of Rosenberg, therefore, should have no bearing upon any forum's assertion of jurisdiction over claims that arise out of or relate to a defendant's contacts with the State.

The vast expansion of our national economy during the past several decades has provided the primary rationale for expanding the permissible reach of a State's jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause. By broadening the type and amount of business opportunities available to participants in interstate and foreign commerce, our economy has increased the frequency with which foreign corporations actively pursue commercial transactions throughout the various States. In turn, it has become both necessary and, in my view, desirable to allow the States more leeway in bringing the activities of these nonresident corporations within the scope of their respective jurisdictions.

This is neither a unique nor a novel idea. As the Court first noted in 1957:

"[Many] commercial transactions touch two or more States and may involve parties separated by the full continent. With this increasing nationalization of commerce has come a great increase in the amount of business conducted by mail across state lines. At the [*423] same time modern transportation and communication have made it much less burdensome for a party sued to defend himself in a State where he engages in economic activity." McGee, supra, at 222-223.

See also World-Wide Volkswagen, supra, at 293 (reaffirming that "[the] historical developments noted in McGee . . . have only accelerated in the generation since that case was decided [417] "); Hanson v. Denckla, supra, at 250-251.

Moreover, this "trend . . . toward expanding the permissible scope of state jurisdiction over foreign corporations and other nonresidents," McGee, supra, at 222, is entirely consistent with the "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice," International Shoe, 326 U.S., at 316, that control our inquiry under the Due Process Clause. As active participants in interstate and foreign commerce take advantage of the economic benefits and opportunities offered by the various States, it is only fair and reasonable to subject them to the obligations that may be imposed by those jurisdictions. And chief among the obligations that a nonresident corporation should expect to fulfill is amenability to suit in any forum that is significantly affected by the corporation's commercial activities.

As a foreign corporation that has actively and purposefully engaged in numerous and frequent commercial transactions in the State of Texas, Helicol clearly falls within the category of nonresident defendants that may be subject to that forum's general jurisdiction. Helicol not only purchased helicopters and other equipment in the State for many years, but also sent pilots and management personnel into Texas to be trained in the use of this equipment and to consult with the seller on technical matters. n2 Moreover, negotiations for the [*424] contract under which Helicol provided transportation services to the joint venture that employed the respondents' decedents also took place in the State of Texas. Taken together, these contacts demonstrate that Helicol obtained numerous benefits from its transaction of business in Texas. In turn, it is eminently fair and reasonable to expect Helicol to face the obligations that attach to its participation in such commercial transactions. Accordingly, on the basis of continuous commercial contacts with the forum, I would conclude that the Due Process Clause allows the State of Texas to assert general jurisdiction over petitioner Helicol.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n2 Although the Court takes note of these contacts, it concludes that they did not "[enhance] the nature of Helicol's contacts with Texas [because the] training was a part of the package of goods and services purchased by Helicol." Ante, at 418. Presumably, the Court's statement simply recognizes that participation in today's interdependent markets often necessitates the use of complicated purchase contracts that provide for numerous contacts between representatives of the buyer and seller, as well as training for related personnel. Ironically, however, while relying on these modern-day realities to denigrate the significance of Helicol's contacts with the forum, the Court refuses to acknowledge that these same realities require a concomitant expansion in a forum's jurisdictional reach. See supra, at 421-423. As a result, when deciding that the balance in this case must be struck against jurisdiction, the Court loses sight of the ultimate inquiry: whether it is fair and reasonable to subject a nonresident corporate defendant to the jurisdiction of a State when that defendant has purposefully availed itself of the benefits and obligations of that particular forum. Cf. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253 (1958).

II

The Court also fails to distinguish the legal principles that controlled our prior decisions in Perkins and Rosenberg. In particular, the contacts between petitioner Helicol and [418] the State of Texas, unlike the contacts between the defendant and the forum in each of those cases, are significantly related to the cause of action alleged in the original suit filed by the respondents. Accordingly, in my view, it is both fair and reasonable for the Texas courts to assert specific jurisdiction over Helicol in this case.

By asserting that the present case does not implicate the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts, see ante, at 415, and nn. 10 and 12, the Court necessarily removes its decision [*425] from the reality of the actual facts presented for our consideration. n3 Moreover, the Court refuses to consider [1878] any distinction between contacts that are "related to" the underlying cause of action and contacts that "give rise" to the underlying cause of action. In my view, however, there is a substantial difference between these two standards for asserting specific jurisdiction. Thus, although I agree that the respondents' cause of action did not formally "arise out of" specific activities initiated by Helicol in the State of Texas, I believe that the wrongful-death claim filed by the respondents is significantly related to the undisputed contacts between Helicol and the forum. On that basis, I would conclude that the Due Process Clause allows the Texas courts to assert specific jurisdiction over this particular action.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n3 Nor do I agree with the Court that the respondents have conceded that their claims are not related to Helicol's activities within the State of Texas. Although parts of their written and oral arguments before the Court proceed on the assumption that no such relationship exists, other portions suggest just the opposite:

"If it is the concern of the Solicitor General [appearing for the United States as amicus curiae] that a holding for Respondents here will cause foreign companies to refrain from purchasing in the United States for fear of exposure to general jurisdiction on unrelated causes of action, such concern is not well founded.

"Respondents' cause is not dependent on a ruling that mere purchases in a state, together with incidental training for operating and maintaining the merchandise purchased can constitute the ties, contacts and relations necessary to justify jurisdiction over an unrelated cause of action. However, regular purchases and training coupled with other contacts, ties and relations may form the basis for jurisdiction." Brief for Respondents 13-14.

Thus, while the respondents' position before this Court is admittedly less than clear, I believe it is preferable to address the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts because Helicol's contacts with Texas are in fact related to the underlying cause of action.

- - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

The wrongful-death actions filed by the respondents were premised on a fatal helicopter crash that occurred in Peru. Helicol was joined as a defendant in the lawsuits because it provided transportation services, including the particular helicopter and pilot involved in the crash, to the joint venture [*426] that employed the decedents. Specifically, the respondent Hall claimed in her original complaint that "Helicol is . . . legally responsible for its own negligence through its pilot employee." App. 6a. Viewed in light of these allegations, the contacts between Helicol and the State of Texas are directly and significantly related to the underlying claim filed by the respondents. The negotiations that took place in Texas led to the contract in which Helicol agreed to provide the precise transportation services that were being used at the time of the crash. Moreover, the helicopter involved in the crash was purchased by Helicol in Texas, and the pilot whose negligence was alleged to have caused the crash was actually trained in Texas. [419] See Tr. Of Oral Arg. 5, 22. This is simply not a case, therefore, in which a state court has asserted jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant on the basis of wholly unrelated contacts with the forum. Rather, the contacts between Helicol and the forum are directly related to the negligence that was alleged in the respondent Hall's original complaint. n4 Because Helicol should have expected to be amenable to suit in the Texas courts for claims directly related to these contacts, it is fair and reasonable to allow the assertion of jurisdiction in this case.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - - Footnotes - - - - - - - - - - - - - - -

n4 The jury specifically found that "the pilot failed to keep the helicopter under proper control," that "the helicopter was flown into a treetop fog condition, whereby the vision of the pilot was impaired," that "such flying was negligence," and that "such negligence . . . was a proximate cause of the crash." See App. 167a-168a. On the basis of these findings, Helicol was ordered to pay over $ 1 million in damages to the respondents.

- - - - - - - - - - - - - - End Footnotes- - - - - - - - - - - - - -

Despite this substantial relationship between the contacts and the cause of action, the Court declines to consider whether the courts of Texas may assert specific jurisdiction over this suit. Apparently, this simply reflects a narrow interpretation of the question presented for review. See ante, at 415-416, n. 10. It is nonetheless possible that the Court's opinion may be read to imply that the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts is inapplicable because the cause of action [*427] did not formally "arise out of" the contacts between Helicol and the forum. In my view, however, such a rule would place unjustifiable limits on the [1879] bases under which Texas may assert its jurisdictional power. n5

Limiting the specific jurisdiction of a forum to cases in which the cause of action formally arose out of the defendant's contacts with the State would subject constitutional standards under the Due Process Clause to the vagaries of the substantive law or pleading requirements of each State. For example, the complaint filed against Helicol in this case alleged negligence based on pilot error. Even though the pilot was trained in Texas, the Court assumes that the Texas courts may not assert jurisdiction over the suit because the cause of action "did not 'arise out of,' and [is] not related to," that training. See ante, at 415. If, however, the applicable substantive law required that negligent training of the pilot was a necessary element of a cause of action for pilot error, or if the respondents had simply added an allegation of negligence in the training provided for the Helicol pilot, then presumably the Court would concede that the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts was applicable.

Our interpretation of the Due Process Clause has never been so dependent upon the applicable substantive law or the State's formal pleading requirements. At least since International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (1945), the principal focus when determining whether a forum may constitutionally assert jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant has been on fairness and reasonableness to the defendant. To this extent, a court's specific jurisdiction [420] should be applicable whenever the cause of action arises out of or relates to the contacts between the defendant and the forum. It is eminently [*428] fair and reasonable, in my view, to subject a defendant to suit in a forum with which it has significant contacts directly related to the underlying cause of action. Because Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas meet this standard, I would affirm the judgment of the Supreme Court of Texas.

PRIOR HISTORY: [1] Appeal from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. D.C. No. CV-97-04412-TEH. Thelton E. Henderson, District Judge, Presiding.

DISPOSITION: REVERSED AND REMANDED.

CASE SUMMARY

PROCEDURAL POSTURE: California plaintiff in trademark dispute over internet domain name appealed from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California's dismissal of the action for lack of personal jurisdiction. The suit sought a declaratory judgment of non-dilution and non-infringement, and requested the court order the cancellation of Georgia defendant's federally registered trademarks. Defendant asserted the appeal was moot.

OVERVIEW: In trademark dispute over internet domain name, action was dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction over Georgia defendant. Plaintiff sought declaratory judgment of non-dilution and non-infringement, and cancellation of defendant's trademarks. Plaintiff appealed. Defendant argued appeal was moot because it offered to waive its infringement, dilution, and unfair competition claims if plaintiff stayed out of the golf business. The promise was qualified; thus appeal was not moot. Defendant had license agreements with two television networks and some California vendors; this was doing business with California but not in California. There was no general jurisdiction. Plaintiff contented defendant deliberately triggered the dispute resolution procedures and intended to interfere with plaintiff's use of its domain name, by sending a letter to a nonresident domain registration company challenging plaintiff's use of the name. Wrongful conduct individually targeting a known forum resident was express aiming. Plaintiff demonstrated purposeful availment. The effects of the letter were primarily felt in California. Defendant did not show specific jurisdiction was unreasonable.

OUTCOME: The judgment was reversed. District court could exercise specific jurisdiction because the complaint alleged defendant engaged in wrongful conduct that individually targeted the plaintiff in California. Defendant deliberately triggered dispute resolution procedures and intended to interfere with plaintiff's use of its domain name, by sending a letter to the domain registration company challenging plaintiff's use of the name.

HN6 A defendant whose contacts with a state are "substantial" or "continuous and systematic" can be haled into court in that state in any action, even if the action is unrelated to those contacts. This is known as general jurisdiction. The standard for establishing general jurisdiction is fairly high, and requires that the defendant's contacts be of the sort that approximate physical presence. Factors to be taken into consideration are whether the defendant makes sales, solicits or engages in business in the state, serves the state's markets, designates an agent for service of process, holds a license, or is incorporated there. Civil Procedure > Jurisdiction > Personal Jurisdiction & In Rem Actions > Personal Jurisdiction

HN9 Even though there is no general jurisdiction over a defendant in California, California courts may still exercise personal jurisdiction if the case arises out of certain forum-related acts. This "specific" jurisdiction exists if: (1) the defendant has performed some act or consummated some transaction within the forum or otherwise purposefully availed himself of the privileges of conducting activities in the forum; (2) the claim arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable. Civil Procedure > Jurisdiction > Personal Jurisdiction & In Rem Actions > Personal Jurisdiction

HN10 A foreign act that is both aimed at and has effect in the forum state satisfies the purposeful availment prong of the specific jurisdiction analysis. To meet the effects test, the defendant must have: (1) committed an intentional act; which was (2) expressly aimed at the forum state; and (3) caused harm, the brunt of which is suffered and which the defendant knows is likely to be suffered in the forum state. This does stand for the broad proposition that a foreign act with foreseeable effects in the forum state always gives rise to specific jurisdiction. There must be something more. "Something more" is described as "express aiming" at the forum state. The requirement is satisfied when the defendant is alleged to have engaged in wrongful conduct targeted at a plaintiff whom the defendant knows to be a resident of the forum state. HN11 "Express aiming," for purposes of specific jurisdiction, encompasses wrongful conduct individually targeting a known forum resident. More Like This Headnote

HN12 The second requirement for specific jurisdiction is that the contacts constituting purposeful availment must be the ones that give rise to the current suit. We measure this requirement in terms of "but for" causation. More Like This Headnote

Civil Procedure > Jurisdiction > Personal Jurisdiction & In Rem Actions > Personal Jurisdiction

HN13 The final requirement for specific jurisdiction is reasonableness. For jurisdiction to be reasonable, it must comport with fair play and substantial justice. The defendant has the burden of demonstrating unreasonableness and requires the defendant to put on a "compelling case." The reasonableness determination requires the consideration of several specific factors: (1) the extent of the defendant's purposeful interjection into the forum state; (2) the burden on the defendant in defending in the forum; (3) the extent of the conflict with the sovereignty of the defendant's state; (4) the forum state's interest in adjudicating the dispute; (5) the most efficient judicial resolution of the controversy; (6) the importance of the forum to the plaintiff's interest in convenient and effective relief; and (7) the existence of an alternative forum. SCHROEDER, Circuit Judge:

This is a trademark dispute. The principal issue is whether the district court in California has personal jurisdiction over the defendant, a Georgia corporation. We hold that the district court can exercise specific jurisdiction over this suit because the complaint alleges the defendant engaged in wrongful conduct that individually targeted the plaintiff in California.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff-appellant Bancroft & Masters, Inc. ("B&M") is a small California corporation that sells computer and networking products and support services. B&M does almost all of its business in the San Francisco area. [2] It brought this action against defendant-appellee Augusta National Inc. ("ANI"), which operates the Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Georgia and sponsors the annual PGA Tour event known as the Masters Tournament.

ANI holds several federally registered trademarks for the mark "Masters" and operates a website at the domain name "masters.org." B&M registered the domain name "masters.com" with Network Solutions, Inc. ("NSI") in 1995. Until recently, NSI was the sole registrar of domain [*1085] names in the United States, under an exclusive contract with the U.S. government. B&M alleges that sometime in late 1997, ANI sent a letter to NSI's Virginia headquarters challenging B&M's use of the domain name masters.com. ANI also sent a letter to B&M in California demanding that B&M cease and desist its use of masters.com and transfer it immediately to ANI.

ANI's letter to NSI triggered NSI's then-applicable dispute resolution policy. Under this policy, B&M had three options: (1) voluntarily transfer the masters.com domain name to ANI; (2) allow the domain name to be placed "on hold," meaning that it could not be used by either party; or (3) obtain a declaratory judgment establishing its right [3] to use the masters.com domain name. See Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 194 F.3d 980, 982 (9th Cir. 1999) (explaining NSI's procedures). Rather than give up its website, B&M chose the third option. B&M filed suit in the Northern District of California seeking a judgment declaring non-dilution and non-infringement. B&M's complaint also requested in a separate count that the court order the cancellation of ANI's federally registered trademarks.

The district court granted ANI's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, reasoning that the continuous and systematic contacts in California necessary for general jurisdiction were lacking and that B&M had not satisfied the criteria for specific jurisdiction. See Bancroft & Masters, Inc. v. Augusta Nat'l Inc., 45 F. Supp. 2d 777 (1998). B&M appeals this dismissal. We now hold that the district court had specific jurisdiction and reverse and remand. ANI's contention that its settlement offer moots this appeal is without merit.

DISCUSSION

ANI's threshold argument is that this appeal has been rendered moot because ANI has offered to waive all trademark infringement, dilution, and [4] unfair competition claims against B&M, so long as B&M stays out of the golf business. B&M's request for a declaratory judgment that it is entitled to use the domain name is not moot, however, because ANI has not made the requisite showing that it is absolutely clear that it will never seek to prevent B&M from using its domain name in the future. See FTC v. Affordable Media, LLC, 179 F.3d 1228, 1238 (9th Cir. 1999) (HN1 A declaratory judgment action is not moot unless it is absolutely clear that the defendant will never renew its allegedly wrongful behavior.). ANI's promise was an incomplete and qualified one.

Furthermore, even if ANI's promise had been unqualified, it would not have mooted B&M's separate request for cancellation of ANI's "Masters" trademarks. The trademark cancellation count is separate from the declaratory judgment count in the complaint and does not appear to be obviously meritless. Cf. Arizonans For Official English v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 71, 137 L. Ed. 2d 170, 117 S. Ct. 1055 (1997) (HN2 obviously meritless and belatedly asserted damages claim cannot save appeal from mootness). HN3 The Lanham Act authorizes district courts to order trademark [5] cancellation in any action involving a registered mark. See 15 U.S.C. § 1119.

ANI further suggested at oral argument that the case may be moot because NSI's dispute resolution procedures have recently changed. This argument was neither developed on appeal nor adequately supported in the record. As a result, we are unable to evaluate that suggestion on the record before us.

ANI also contends that there is insufficient evidence in the record to establish jurisdiction. HN4 Where, as here, however, the district court does not hold an evidentiary hearing but rather decides the jurisdictional issue on the basis of the pleadings and supporting declarations, we will presume that the facts set forth therein can be proven. See Omeluk v. Langsten Slip & Batbyggeri A/S, 52 F.3d 267, 268 (9th Cir. 1995). ANI's challenge to the evidentiary [*1086] basis for the district court's ruling is therefore irrelevant.

General Jurisdiction

HN5

California permits the exercise of personal jurisdiction to the full extent permitted by due process. See Cal. Civ. Code § 410.10. Whether a California court has personal jurisdiction over ANI thus depends on whether B&M has [6] alleged "minimum contacts" between ANI and the state of California for purposes of general or specific jurisdiction. See International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 90 L. Ed. 95, 66 S. Ct. 154 (1945).

HN6 A defendant whose contacts with a state are "substantial" or "continuous and systematic" can be haled into court in that state in any action, even if the action is unrelated to those contacts. See Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 415, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404, 104 S. Ct. 1868 (1984). This is known as general jurisdiction. The standard for establishing general jurisdiction is "fairly high," Brand v. Menlove Dodge, 796 F.2d 1070, 1073 (9th Cir. 1986), and requires that the defendant's contacts be of the sort that approximate physical presence. See Gates Lear Jet Corp. v. Jensen, 743 F.2d 1325, 1331 (9th Cir. 1984). Factors to be taken into consideration are whether the defendant makes sales, solicits or engages in business in the state, serves the state's markets, designates an agent for service of process, holds a license, or is incorporated there. See Hirsch v. Blue Cross, Blue Shield of Kansas City, 800 F.2d 1474, 1478 (9th Cir. 1986). [7]

The district court correctly found general jurisdiction lacking in this case, because ANI's contacts do not qualify as either substantial or continuous and systematic. ANI is not registered or licensed to do business in California. It pays no taxes in California, maintains no bank accounts in California, and targets no print, television, or radio advertising toward California. ANI's masters.org website is "passive," i.e., consumers cannot use it to make purchases. Furthermore, ANI's occasional, unsolicited sales of tournament tickets and merchandise to California residents are insufficient to create general jurisdiction. See Brand, 796 F.2d at 1073 (HN7 occasional sales to California residents insufficient to create general jurisdiction).

ANI continues to have license agreements with two television networks and a handful of California vendors. These agreements constitute doing business with California, but do not constitute doing business in California. See Helicopteros, 466 U.S. at 418 (no general jurisdiction in Texas over helicopter transportation company that purchased 80 percent of its helicopters, spare parts, and accessories from Texas sources [8] over a four year period). This is because HN8 engaging in commerce with residents of the forum state is not in and of itself the kind of activity that approximates physical presence within the state's borders. See Id. Compare Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437, 447, 96 L. Ed. 485, 72 S. Ct. 413 (1951) (upholding Ohio's exercise of general jurisdiction over corporation where corporation's president worked out of an office in Ohio from which he drew and distributed payroll checks, performed corporation's filing and correspondence, and held regular directors' meetings, and where the corporation held two Ohio bank accounts). ANI's limited contacts with California are insufficient to establish general jurisdiction.

Specific Jurisdiction

HN9

Even though there is no general jurisdiction over ANI in California, California courts may still exercise personal jurisdiction if the case arises out of certain forum-related acts. This "specific" jurisdiction exists if (1) the defendant has performed some act or consummated some transaction within the forum or otherwise purposefully availed himself of the privileges of conducting activities in the forum, (2) the claim [9] arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities, and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable. See Cybersell, Inc. v. Cybersell, Inc., 130 F.3d 414, 416 (9th Cir. 1997). [*1087]

The claims in this case center on ANI's letter to NSI in Virginia, which forced B&M to bring suit or lose control of its website. B&M argues that this letter, addressed to Virginia but intended to affect B&M in California, constitutes "purposeful availment" under the "effects test" first announced by the Supreme Court in Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804, 104 S. Ct. 1482 (1984). ANI describes the letter as purely defensive, aimed only at protecting its intellectual property rights from incursion by B&M. B&M's complaint, however, contends that ANI deliberately triggered NSI's dispute resolution procedures not only to defend its own trademarks but also to interfere wrongfully with B&M's use of its domain name and to misappropriate that name, "masters.com," for ANI's own use. Because the prima facie jurisdictional analysis requires us to accept the plaintiff's allegations as true, we must adopt B&M's version of events for purposes of this appeal. [10]

In Calder, the Supreme Court held that HN10 a foreign act that is both aimed at and has effect in the forum state satisfies the purposeful availment prong of the specific jurisdiction analysis. To meet the effects test, the defendant must have (1) committed an intentional act, which was (2) expressly aimed at the forum state, and (3) caused harm, the brunt of which is suffered and which the defendant knows is likely to be suffered in the forum state. See Panavision Int'l, L.P. v. Toeppen, 141 F.3d 1316, 1321 (9th Cir. 1998). Subsequent cases have struggled somewhat with Calder's import, recognizing that the case cannot stand for the broad proposition that a foreign act with foreseeable effects in the forum state always gives rise to specific jurisdiction. We have said that there must be "something more," but have not spelled out what that something more must be. See Panavision, 141 F.3d at 1322.

We now conclude that "something more" is what the Supreme Court described as "express aiming" at the forum state. See Calder, 465 U.S. at 789. Express aiming is a concept that in the jurisdictional context hardly defines itself. From the [11] available cases, we deduce that the requirement is satisfied when the defendant is alleged to have engaged in wrongful conduct targeted at a plaintiff whom the defendant knows to be a resident of the forum state. For example, in Calder itself, the defendants were a reporter and an editor of a nationally-circulated tabloid newspaper whom plaintiff, a well-known California resident, accused of libel. The defendants argued that the alleged wrong had no intended nexus with California and that they should be treated like "a welder employed in Florida who works on a boiler which subsequently explodes in California." Id. The Supreme Court rejected this proposed analogy, pointing out that "petitioners are not charged with mere untargeted negligence. Rather, their intentional, and allegedly tortious, actions were expressly aimed at California." Id.

Subsequent cases from this circuit bear out the conclusion that HN11"express aiming" encompasses wrongful conduct individually targeting a known forum resident. In Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Neaves, 912 F.2d 1062 (9th Cir. 1990), we held that an Alabama resident could be haled into a California court on the basis [12] of a letter she sent to an insurance company representing that she was entitled to an insurance payment that actually belonged to a California resident. We stated that under Calder, it was irrelevant where the letter was sent. The critical factor was that in sending the letter, the defendant "was purposefully defrauding [plaintiff] in California." 912 F.2d at 1065. Similarly, in Brainerd v. Governors of the University of Alberta, 873 F.2d 1257 (9th Cir. 1989), we held that an Arizona court could exercise specific jurisdiction over Canadian residents who, in response to telephone calls directed to them in Canada, made statements that allegedly defamed a person they knew resided in Arizona. Id. at 1259-60. Even though the Canadian defendants had not initiated the telephone [*1088] calls, the statements they made about the plaintiff during the conversations were not "untargeted negligence" but rather were "performed for the very purpose of having their consequences felt in the forum state." Id. See also Gordy v. Daily News, L.P., 95 F.3d 829, 833 (9th Cir. 1996) (holding that specific jurisdiction existed in light of evidence [13] of "targeting" of the plaintiff, who was a forum resident); Lake v. Lake, 817 F.2d 1416, 1422-23 (9th Cir. 1987) (holding that specific jurisdiction existed where defendant performed foreign acts for the purpose of having their consequences felt in the forum state); Haisten v. Grass Valley Med. Reimbursement Fund, Ltd., 784 F.2d 1392, 1398 (9th Cir. 1986) (finding purposeful availment where forum effect of a foreign act "was not only foreseeable, it was contemplated and bargained for").

The presence of individualized targeting is what separates these cases from others in which we have found the effects test unsatisfied. In Cybersell, for example, there was no showing that the defendants even knew of the existence of the plaintiffs, let alone targeted them individually. See 130 F.3d at 420. See also Gordy, 95 F.3d at 833 (distinguishing certain cases holding that no personal jurisdiction existed under Calder on the ground that in those cases targeting was lacking).

Applying these concepts to the instant case, we conclude that B&M has demonstrated purposeful availment by ANI under the Calder effects test. [14] ANI acted intentionally when it sent its letter to NSI. The letter was expressly aimed at California because it individually targeted B&M, a California corporation doing business almost exclusively in California. Finally, the effects of the letter were primarily felt, as ANI knew they would be, in California.

This case resembles Panavision, in which an Illinois resident registered as his domain name a California corporation's trademark. Though this activity was conducted outside of California, it was clear that the defendant's deliberate choice of the plaintiff's trademark, and his subsequent attempts to extort compensation for his conveyance of the domain name, targeted that individual plaintiff. See Panavision, 141 F.3d at 1321. Here, too, ANI was well aware that B&M currently held the masters.com website and that it was B&M that would be affected if the NSI dispute resolution procedures were triggered. This is sufficient to satisfy Calder and thereby demonstrate the purposeful availment necessary for an exercise of specific jurisdiction.

HN12The second requirement for specific jurisdiction is that the contacts constituting purposeful availment must be the [15] ones that give rise to the current suit. We measure this requirement in terms of "but for" causation. See Ziegler v. Indian River County, 64 F.3d 470, 474 (9th Cir. 1995). This requirement is met here. But for the letter to NSI, which under the NSI dispute resolution procedures forced B&M to choose between bringing this suit and losing the use of its website, it is clear that B&M would have no need for a judicial declaration of its right to use masters.com.

HN13 The final requirement for specific jurisdiction, and the one that the district court apparently found to be lacking, is reasonableness. For jurisdiction to be reasonable, it must comport with fair play and substantial justice. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528, 105 S. Ct. 2174 (1985). Burger King explicitly places upon the defendant the burden of demonstrating unreasonableness and requires the defendant to put on a "compelling case." Id. at 476-77. The reasonableness determination requires the consideration of several specific factors: (1) the extent of the defendant's purposeful interjection into the forum state, (2) the burden on the [16] defendant in defending in the forum, (3) the extent of the conflict with the sovereignty of the defendant's state, (4) the forum state's interest in adjudicating the dispute, (5) the most efficient judicial resolution of the controversy, (6) the importance of the forum to the plaintiff's interest in convenient and effective relief, and (7) the existence of an alternative forum. Id. [*1089]

In the district court, ANI attempted no factual showing with regard to the Burger King factors. Instead, ANI stated without elaboration that jurisdiction would be unreasonable. ANI supported this assertion with citations to various district court cases and two pre-Burger King cases from this circuit holding that a cease-and-desist letter sent by a trademark holder to a putative infringer is not, by itself, a sufficient basis for personal jurisdiction in the putative infringer's home state. See Kransco Mf'g, Inc. v. Markwitz, 656 F.2d 1376 (9th Cir. 1981); Cascade Corp. v. Hiab-Foco AB, 619 F.2d 36 (9th Cir. 1980); Douglas Furniture Co. v. Wood Dimensions, Inc., 963 F. Supp. 899 (C. D. Cal. 1997). This is inadequate to discharge Burger King [17] 's requirement that the defendant demonstrate a "compelling case," focused on the seven specific factors listed above, in order to establish unreasonableness. ANI did not focus on the Burger King factors and apply them to the particular circumstances of this case.

Moreover, the cases on which ANI relies are inapposite because they concern only cease-and-desist letters. This case does not arise solely out of ANI's cease-and-desist letter to B&M, which placed B&M on notice of ANI's competing claim. This case arises principally out of ANI's letter to NSI, and that letter did more than warn or threaten B&M. Under NSI procedures, the letter would have operated automatically to prevent B&M from using its website had B&M not filed suit. ANI has not demonstrated any hardship or any other specific factor suggesting that jurisdiction in California would be unreasonable. We therefore conclude that the reasonableness requirement is met.

CONCLUSION

The district court's order dismissing the case for lack of personal jurisdiction is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings. We decline B&M's request for 28 U.S.C. § 1927 sanctions against ANI for its [18] attempt to have this appeal dismissed as moot. ANI's mootness argument was neither unreasonable nor vexatious, and does not appear to have been raised in bad faith.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

CONCUR:

SNEED, Circuit Judge, with whom TROTT, Circuit Judge, joins, Concurring:

The "effects test" has normally been restricted to tortious conduct in which the "aimer" in state Y was seeking to injure wrongfully the target in state X. I concur in the opinion only on the assumption that Augusta National, through its letter to NSI, engaged in tortious conduct, i.e., that they intended to effect a conversion of the <masters.com> domain name.

I am skeptical of Bancroft & Masters's selection of <masters.com> as its domain name. I suspect that Augusta National's initial reaction was similar. Therefore, I do not find it implausible that Augusta National, through its letter to NSI, merely intended to protect its trademark from dilution and infringement. At this point, however, there is insufficient information with which to make such a judgment. Jurisdiction in California would be ripe for challenge if following the development of trial it should appear that Augusta National acted [19] reasonably and in good faith to protect its trademark against an infringer.

III.

FACTS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

17. In the past, certain Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers, agents, volunteers and other leaders and representatives of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, including Edward Villegas, have used their positions of authority within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization to sexually abuse minors, including Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS were notified of the abuse of these minors by their elder, Edward Villegas, and others, but failed to take reasonable steps to ensure the safety of Plaintiffs and other minor children entrusted to their care and to prevent future acts of molestation. This suit seeks compensation for Plaintiffs who were victims of this sexual abuse.

18. All paragraphs of this Complaint are based on information and belief, except for those allegations, which pertain to the Plaintiffs and their counsel. Plaintiffs' information and belief are based upon, inter alia, the investigation conducted to date by Plaintiffs and their counsel. Each allegation in this Complaint either has, or is likely to have, evidentiary support upon further investigation and discovery.

19. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization has a hierarchical structure in which the GOVERNING BODY, which is a small group of men who operate out of various entities within the hierarchical structure, sits at the top of a chain of command that extends over each individual and Defendant entity in the organization including its worldwide operations. These individuals and entities act as agents, servants and alter egos of each other. Authority for actions by the organization or its members derive from the GOVERNING BODY.

20. All of the Defendants are the agents and servants of each other and are vicariously liable for each other's acts. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS are so organized and controlled and their affairs are so conducted that they are alter egos of each other and operate as a single business enterprise.

21. Through its hierarchical structure, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assume responsibility for the development, protection and discipline of its membership, especially the children of members. All male members, whether Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers and/or Publishers, are appointed and empowered by the GOVERNING BODY to carry out this responsibility.

22. To further their goals, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS authorize male members to develop relationships of trust with women, children and families and to assume a role of counselor and advocate for any problems that might arise, including claims of child abuse. It is the responsibility of the Elders and those higher up in the chain of command, including the GOVERNING BODY, to decide if abuse has occurred and how it should be handled.

23. Despite knowledge of a problem with sexual abuse of minors by leaders in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS acted with willful indifference and/or reckless and/or intentional disregard for the interest and safety of the children entrusted to their care. Rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS engaged in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have likewise engaged in the routine practice of maintaining secret archival files regarding sexual abuse by Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers and other leaders in the organization. The existence of these files and the contents thereof were not disclosed to or made available to law enforcement authorities or others in order for law enforcement to investigate the crimes of these leaders in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS furthered this conspiracy of concealment by, among other things, failing to properly report complaints of sexual misconduct to law enforcement authorities, failing to remove molesting leaders or prevent their access to children. Molesting leaders were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing in the organization and were allowed continued frequent and unsupervised access to children in the organization. At all material times, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS prohibited the victim and/or accuser from warning others or speaking about the matter to anyone under penalty of discipline. Victim/accusers were not permitted to report suspected abuse to outside authorities or to other Publishers within the organization, despite secular laws and duties regarding the reporting of sexual Abuse. Violation of this policy would lead to severe sanctions. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS also failed to provide Plaintiffs and their families with any notice or warning regarding the past misconduct of, and abuse by, Edward Villegas. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS represented to Plaintiffs, members and the public that Edward Villegas and other leaders were fit to lead, when in fact they were predator pedophiles. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or had reason to know that Edward Villegas and other leader molesters would continue to sexually molest children, using their leadership positions to gain access and control over their victims.

24. Beginning in at least 1970, if not earlier, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS appointed Edward Villegas to the leadership position of Elder with authority over women and children in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization.

25. In approximately 1970, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. and her mother, Betty Hopkins, came under the instruction and care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization through their agent, Edward Villegas, and his wife, Marsha Villegas. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS used the daycare center run out of the Villegas home to attract new converts. Plaintiff CHARISSA W. was approximately 1 year old at the time. Betty Hopkins became one of those new converts and entrusted her daughter, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care.

26. In approximately 1971, Plaintiff Nicole D. and her family came under the care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization and entrusted Nicole D. to the leadership of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas. Through his position of leadership with the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, Edward Villegas developed a relationship of trust and confidence with Plaintiff Nicole D. and her family, working with them at WATCHTOWER DEFENDANT events and inviting them into his home.

27. Beginning by at least 1972, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, used his position as an Elder to gain access to children under the care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS organization and to sexually abuse them.

28. In about 1972, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas began sexually molesting Plaintiff, CHARISSA W. by, among other things, fondling her genitals, digitally penetrating her vagina and forcing her to have oral sex. She was approximately three (3) or four (4) years old at the time. For the next twelve (12) to thirteen (13) years, the WATCHTOWER

DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas continued to use his leadership position as an Elder to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, CHARISSA W., who was under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care. Plaintiff's position as a minor in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, as well Edward Villegas' position as a spiritual leader and authority figure in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization allowed him to maintain control and influence over Plaintiff and others. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS enabled Edward Villegas to abuse Plaintiff and others by placing him in positions of authority, and then actively concealing his sexual abuse. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, each of them, used their positions in the organization to aid and abet Edward Villegas and other leaders in the sexual abuse and exploitation of minors in the organization and in furtherance of the conspiracy to conceal the sexual molestation occurring within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization.

29. During this time period, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, was also using his position of authority as an Elder to sexually abuse other children under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care.

30. In approximately 1978, Edward Villegas used his position as an Elder and leader in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, NICOLE D., a child under the care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. Plaintiff, NICOLE D. was approximately seven (7) years old when the abuse occurred. Using his delegated authority as a leader in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, Edward Villegas forced Plaintiff, NICOLE D. to have oral sex with him.

31. When Plaintiff, NICOLE D. told her parents about the abuse, her father immediately reported it to the Elders of Defendant, NAPA KINGDOM HALL pursuant to instructions by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS. In response, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS privately reproved their agent for his conduct, but took no other steps to hold him accountable or to otherwise notify members and the families of the children whom they had placed of under the authority of their agent, Edward Villegas. Therefore, Edward Villegas was able to continue to use his position of authority.

32. For over two decades, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that their appointed agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority in the organization to gain access to and sexually molest and physically abuse adolescents under the care of the organization. Nevertheless, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS continued to appoint Edward Villegas to leadership positions in their local congregations, entrusting him with the welfare of numerous adolescents in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' local congregations. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent then used his position of authority in the organization to sexually molest Plaintiffs and others. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to notify anyone that their agent, Edward Villegas was molesting or had sexually molested adolescents under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care. They further failed to take any steps to protect these young victims from his abuse. Instead, they knowingly concealed this information from Plaintiffs and others. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS also aided, abetted and ratified the abuse.

33. When the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS received reports of their agent's acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to their care, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed the responsibility for dealing with the problem. They told families of victims that they should leave the matter to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS to handle. However, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS did not report the abuse to law enforcement authorities nor did they warn any other members of the organization that they had appointed a dangerous pedophile to positions of leadership with authority over children. They did not act to help Plaintiffs or their families deal with the trauma of abuse and actively prevented them from obtaining help from trained professionals and other available sources. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to take appropriate steps to hold their agent, Edward Villegas, accountable for his conduct or to assist him in addressing his propensities.

34. Edward Villegas used the authority of his position in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiffs and others. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS directly and vicariously caused foreseeable harm to Plaintiffs by, among other things:

a. aiding, abetting and ratifying the abuse of children by their appointed agents;

b. blaming, humiliating, sanctioning and/or disciplining victims/accusers of sexual abuse instead of the perpetrator;

c. negligently failing to report such sexual abuse, including the abuse by Edward Villegas to law enforcement and governmental child welfare agencies and requiring that members not make such reports;

d. negligently failing to warn Plaintiffs, their families, and others of the risk of abuse by Edward Villegas after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his positions of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care;

e. negligently failing to train its Elders, Overseers, Ministerial Servants and other appointed leaders to identify, investigate, prevent and respond to or report child abuse;

f. negligently failing to adopt adequate policies and procedures for the protection of children and other members and/or to implement and comply with such procedures that did exist;

g. failing to properly investigate matters brought to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' attention involving child sexual abuse and/or suspicions of child sexual abuse;

h. negligently failing to provide child abuse victims and their families with any assistance in coping with the trauma of abuse and preventing Plaintiffs and their families from reporting the abuse to outside authorities and obtaining outside help to deal with the trauma of abuse;

j. concealing from Plaintiffs and their families that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS had information that their agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority to abuse young children entrusted to their care by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS;

k. negligently failing to undertake a sexual offender evaluation, provide sexual offender treatment and/or obtain psychiatric evaluation and treatment of Edward Villegas after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his position of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse;

l. negligently retaining and failing to properly supervise Edward Villegas as a leader in the organization or to monitor his activities after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his position of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
SEXUAL BATTERY AND RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR

35. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 34 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

36. Plaintiffs allege that for a number of years, beginning in 1972, as an agent and alter ego of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, Edward Villegas used his position of authority to gain access to Plaintiffs and to engage in un-permitted, harmful, and offensive sexual contact upon the bodies of Plaintiffs and each of them, as described herein, without each Plaintiff's consent, committing sexual abuse upon the persons of Plaintiffs in the State of California in violation of Code of Civil Procedure 340.1.

37. Plaintiffs further allege each of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS was in the chain of command and acted pursuant to the authority granted to them as agents and alter ego of the GOVERNING BODY and each other, utilized such leadership and authority to carry out and/or aid, abet and ratify the sexual abuse of Plaintiffs. In such capacity, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS are liable for the sexual abuse of Plaintiffs under the legal theory of respondeat superior.

38. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE

39. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 38 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

40. Plaintiffs allege that, at all times herein mentioned, WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect Plaintiffs from sexual predators within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS further knew or should have known that Plaintiffs were at risk of foreseeable harm by their agent, Edward Villegas, but failed to act to protect them from said harm. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS breached their duty to Plaintiffs, thereby causing great harm to Plaintiffs.

41. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENT APPOINTMENT, RETENTION AND SUPERVISION

42. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 41 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

43. Plaintiffs allege that at all times herein mentioned, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of their agents, Edward Villegas', propensities to use his position as a leader in the local congregation to engage in and/or aid and abet acts of sexual abuse. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to adequately investigate, evaluate, and otherwise research the background of their agent, Edward Villegas, prior to their hiring appointing him to leadership positions and entrusting children to his care.

44. Plaintiffs further allege that after Edward Villegas was retained by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS acting on behalf of and under the supervision of the WATCHTOWER

DEFENDANTS, WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to adequately investigate, evaluate and otherwise monitor the conduct of their agent, Edward Villegas, during his interactions with children entrusted by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS to his care, thereby also failing to adequately supervise and discipline the conduct Edward Villegas.

45. Plaintiff's further allege that WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to provide adequate warning to Plaintiffs and their families of their agent's dangerous propensities and unfitness to lead.

46. Plaintiffs further allege the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently investigated, appointed, retained and supervised Edward Villegas in the organization at a time when they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his appointed position to engage in acts of sexual abuse against Plaintiffs and other young children under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care.

47. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

FOURTH CAUSE OF ACTION
GROSS NEGLIGENCE/WILFUL MISCONDUCT

48. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 47 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

49. Plaintiffs allege the behavior of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS as described hereinabove demonstrates a conscious indifference to the safety and welfare of Plaintiffs, in that WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of the dangerous propensities of their agents, Edward Villegas, yet failed to act to protect the health, safety and welfare of children in the custody and care of WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, thereby allowing Plaintiffs to be sexually abused, which could have been prevented but for WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' wilful misconduct and gross negligence in failing to implement safeguards to protect Plaintiffs, in violation of WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' duty to protect the children entrusted to Edward Villegas' care and custody.

50. Plaintiffs further allege that WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' actions, constituting wilful misconduct and gross negligence described hereinabove, caused significant mental, emotional, and physical injuries as a result of the acts of sexual abuse described hereinabove.

51. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

FIFTH CAUSE OF ACTION
BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

52. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 51 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

53. Plaintiffs allege that by holding Edward Villegas out as a qualified Elder and leader in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, and by undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling of Plaintiffs, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS placed themselves in a position of trust and confidence with Plaintiffs, and that such relationship imposed on the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS a duty to act in Plaintiffs' best interests and to protect Plaintiffs' best interests.

54. Plaintiffs further allege that because of this special relationship, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, Plaintiffs and their families placed their trust and confidence in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS that they would not allow harm to Plaintiffs or fail to warn Plaintiffs of potential harm. Further, Plaintiffs and their families placed their trust and confidence in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS that they would protect Plaintiffs from harm.

55. The above conduct, either independently or in conjunction with each other, constitutes a breach of the fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiffs by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS.

56. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

SIXTH CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENCE PER SE and COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE:
FAILURE TO REPORT SUSPECTED CHILD ABUSE

57. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 56 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

58. Plaintiffs allege that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS had a duty, under the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, California Penal Code § 11164, et. seq., (and predecessor provisions) and the common-laws, to report the abuse or suspected abuse of children.

59. Plaintiffs further allege that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to report to law enforcement the abusive and illegal acts of their agent, Edward Villegas, both prior to and after the abuse inflicted on Plaintiffs. By failing to report the actions of Edward Villegas, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS violated California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, which is intended to safeguard and enhance the welfare of abused children. Plaintiffs were members of the class of persons that the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act was designed to protect and each was injured as a result of The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' violation of the statute. Such violation constitutes negligence per se.

60. Plaintiffs further allege that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' failure to report constitutes common-law negligence. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS asserted their authority over both Plaintiffs and their abuser and agent, Edward Villegas, creating a special relationship of trust and confidence and power over Plaintiffs. In the context of this special relationship and the unequal relationship among the parties, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to handle all reports of child abuse and in doing so caused Plaintiffs and their families from reporting the abuse to, or seeking help from, sources and authorities outside the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS acted with conscious disregard for the safety and welfare of Plaintiffs and violated that duty to Plaintiffs' detriment.

61. As a legal result of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' failure to report the illegal conduct of their agent, Edward Villegas, law enforcement, Plaintiff was deprived of the benefits provided by the State of California and other trained professionals that would have decreased further harm to the Plaintiffs and prevented further abuse. Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

SEVENTH CAUSE OF ACTION
FRAUD, FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT AND CONSPIRACY

62. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 61 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

63. Plaintiffs allege that after receiving reports that their agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority in the organization to abuse adolescents, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, willfully and intentionally kept information from Plaintiffs, other victims similarly situated and the community-at-large. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS intentionally misrepresented to Plaintiffs and their families that Edward Villegas was a leader in good standing with authority to instruct Plaintiff and other children in spiritual, ethical and moral matters and that these agents were to be obeyed. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS further intentionally misrepresented that they would act in the best interests of Plaintiffs and other children entrusted to their care. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to disclose that they knew of Edward Villegas' propensity to use his leadership positions to sexually abuse Plaintiffs and others and that they were doing nothing to protect the children under their care. Plaintiffs did not know of the falsity of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' representations, were entitled to rely upon them and did in fact rely upon them causing each of them serious injury and harm.

64. Plaintiffs further allege that by holding out Edward Villegas as an Elder and leader, qualified to provide religious instruction and counsel, and by undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling and training of plaintiff, and by accepting, through their agents Edward Villegas and other Elders, the control and responsibility of the Plaintiffs as a minor, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS and each of them entered into a fiduciary relationship with the minor plaintiff.

65. Plaintiffs further allege that as fiduciaries to Plaintiffs, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, and each of them, had a duty to obtained and disclose information relating to sexual misconduct by their agent Edward Villegas. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to disclose and later conspired to conceal such information from Plaintiffs.

66. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, in concert with each other and with the intent to conceal and defraud, conspired whereby they would misrepresent, conceal or fail to disclose information relating to the sexual misconduct of their agent, Edward Villegas. By concealing such information, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS and each of them committed at least one act in furtherance of the conspiracy.

67. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

EIGHTH CAUSE OF ACTION
RATIFICATION

68. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 67 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

69. Plaintiffs allege that upon learning that their agent, Edward Villegas had sexually abused children, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to take appropriate steps to hold Edward Villegas accountable for their actions and continued to appoint or maintain Edward Villegas to leadership positions in the organization throughout the period of abuse. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS thereby ratified their agent, Edward Villegas's conduct in using his appointed position of authority to sexually abuse Plaintiffs and other children.

70. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

NINTH CAUSE OF ACTION
ALTER EGO AND SINGLE BUSINESS ENTERPRISE

71. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 70 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

72. Plaintiffs allege that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS are organized and controlled and their affairs are so conducted that they are in fact mere instrumentalities and alter egos of each other and liable for each other's acts. Alternatively, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS were all engaged, at all times herein mentioned, in a single business enterprise and are liable for each other's acts.

73. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

TENTH CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENT USURPATION OF INVESTIGATORY FUNCTION

74. Plaintiffs incorporates herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 73 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

75. Plaintiffs alleges that California Penal Code Section 11164 et. seq., (and predecessor provisions) requires officials to perform specific responsibilities to carry out the policy of the statute described in the Act (and its predecessors). The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed these duties and responsibilities, but negligently failed to perform them.

76. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

ELEVENTH CAUSE OF ACTION
VIOLATION OF CALIFORNIA PENAL CODE SECTION 182

77. Plaintiffs incorporate herein this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 76 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

78. Plaintiffs allege the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' acts described herein violate California Penal Code Section 182 in that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS conspired with one or more other person to commit acts injurious to the public health, to public morals, or to pervert or obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws.

79. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

TWELFTH CAUSE OF ACTION
VIOLATION OF CALIFORNIA PENAL CODE SECTION 32

80. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 79 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

81. Plaintiffs allege that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' acts described herein violate California Penal Code Section 32 in that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS harbored, concealed and/or aided their agent, Edward Villegas, after their agent, Edward Villegas, had committed a felony, with the intent that their agent, Edward Villegas, might avoid or escape arrest, trial, conviction and/or punishment, and the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS having knowledge that their agent, Edward Villegas had committed a felony.

82. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF CHARISSA W.'s EX PARTE APPLICATION FOR IN CAMERA REVIEW OF CERTIFICATES OF MERIT, CERTIFICATE OF CORROBORATIVE FACTS, AND FOR ISSUANCE OF FINDINGS AND ORDERS THEREON

I.

INTRODUCTION

This application is filed on behalf of Plaintiff CHARISSA W., who is an adult survivor of childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by Edward Villegas. Mr. Villegas, who is now deceased, was at all times mentioned in the Complaint filed concurrently herewith on behalf of CHARISSA W. and incorporated by reference herein, an agent of Defendants ROES 1 through 100 and DOES 110 through 120.

Plaintiff CHARISSA W., by way of this Application, and in compliance with Code of Civil Procedure § 3401., seeks an order from this Court to file her Amended Complaint inserting the true identities of those entities responsible for her sexual abuse.

II.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

1. Defendants' Identities

ROE DEFENDANTS 1 through 9 are corporate entities and/or other business organizations responsible to Plaintiff for the sexual abuse Plaintiff suffered.

2. Defendants' Organizational Structure

In the past, certain Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers, agents, volunteers and other leaders and representatives of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, including Edward Villegas, have used their positions of authority within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization to sexually abuse minors. The ROE DEFENDANTS were notified of the abuse of these minors by their elder, Edward Villegas, and others, but failed to take reasonable steps to ensure the safety of Plaintiff and other minor children entrusted to their care and to prevent future acts of molestation. This suit seeks compensation for victims of this sexual abuse.

The ROE DEFENDANTS' organization has a hierarchical structure in which the GOVERNING BODY, which is a small group of men who operate out of various entities within the hierarchical structure, sits at the top of a chain of command that extends over each individual and Defendant entity in the organization including its worldwide operations. These individuals and entities act as agents, servants and alter egos of each other. Authority for actions by the organization or its members derive from the GOVERNING BODY.

All of the Defendants are the agents and servants of each other and are vicariously liable for each other's acts. The ROE DEFENDANTS are so organized and controlled and their affairs are so conducted that they are alter egos of each other and operate as a single business enterprise.

Through its hierarchical structure, the ROE DEFENDANTS assume responsibility for the development, protection and discipline of its membership, especially the children of members. All male members, whether Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers and/or Publishers, are appointed and empowered by the GOVERNING BODY to carry out this responsibility.

To further their goals, the ROE DEFENDANTS authorize male members to develop relationships of trust with women, children and families and to assume a role of counselor and advocate for any problems that might arise, including claims of child abuse. It is the responsibility of the Elders and those higher up in the chain of command, including the GOVERNING BODY, to decide if abuse has occurred and how it should be handled.

Despite knowledge of a problem with sexual abuse of minors by leaders in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, the ROE DEFENDANTS acted with willful indifference and/or reckless and/or intentional disregard for the interest and safety of the children entrusted to their care. Rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the ROE DEFENDANTS engaged in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children. The ROE DEFENDANTS have likewise engaged in the routine practice of maintaining secret archival files regarding sexual abuse by Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers and other leaders in the organization. The existence of these files and the contents thereof were not disclosed to or made available to law enforcement authorities or others in order for law enforcement to investigate the crimes of these leaders in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization. The ROE DEFENDANTS furthered this conspiracy of concealment by, among other things, failing to properly report complaints of sexual misconduct to law enforcement authorities, failing to remove molesting leaders or prevent their access to children. Molesting leaders were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing in the organization and were allowed continued frequent and unsupervised access to children in the organization. At all material times, the ROE DEFENDANTS prohibited the victim and/or accuser from warning others or speaking about the matter to anyone under penalty of discipline. Victim/accusers were not permitted to report suspected abuse to outside authorities or to other Publishers within the organization, despite secular laws and duties regarding the reporting of sexual Abuse. Violation of this policy would lead to severe sanctions. The ROE DEFENDANTS also failed to provide Plaintiffs and their families with any notice or warning regarding the past misconduct of, and abuse by, Edward Villegas. The ROE DEFENDANTS represented to Plaintiffs, members and the public that Edward Villegas and other leaders were fit to lead, when in fact they were predator pedophiles. The ROE DEFENDANTS knew or had reason to know that Edward Villegas and other leader molesters would continue to sexually molest children, using their leadership positions to gain access and control over their victims.

Beginning in at least 1970, if not earlier, the ROE DEFENDANTS appointed Edward Villegas to the leadership position of Elder with authority over women and children in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization.

3. Abuse of Charrisa W.

In approximately 1970, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. and her mother, Betty Hopkins, came under the instruction and care of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization through their agent, Edward Villegas, and his wife, Marsha Villegas. The ROE DEFENDANTS used the daycare center run out of the Villegas home to attract new converts. Plaintiff CHARISSA W. was approximately 1 year old at the time. Betty Hopkins became one of those new converts and entrusted her daughter, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. to the ROE DEFENDANTS' care.

Beginning by at least 1972, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, used his position as an Elder to gain access to children under the care of the ROE DEFENDANTS organization and to sexually abuse them.

In about 1972, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas began sexually molesting Plaintiff, CHARISSA W. by, among other things, fondling her genitals, digitally penetrating her vagina and forcing her to have oral sex. She was approximately three (3) or four (4) years old at the time. For the next twelve (12) to thirteen (13) years, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas continued to use his leadership position as an Elder to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, CHARISSA W., who was under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care. Plaintiff's position as a minor in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, as well Edward Villegas' position as a spiritual leader and authority figure in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization allowed him to maintain control and influence over Plaintiff and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS enabled Edward Villegas to abuse Plaintiff and others by placing him in positions of authority, and then actively concealing his sexual abuse. The ROE DEFENDANTS, each of them, used their positions in the organization to aid and abet Edward Villegas and other leaders in the sexual abuse and exploitation of minors in the organization and in furtherance of the conspiracy to conceal the sexual molestation occurring within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization.

For over two decades, the ROE DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that their appointed agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority in the organization to gain access to and sexually molest and physically abuse adolescents under the care of the organization. Nevertheless, the ROE DEFENDANTS continued to appoint Edward Villegas to leadership positions in their local congregations, entrusting him with the welfare of numerous adolescents in the ROE DEFENDANTS' local congregations. The ROE DEFENDANTS' agent then used his position of authority in the organization to sexually molest Plaintiff and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to notify anyone that their agent, Edward Villegas was molesting or had sexually molested adolescents under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care. They further failed to take any steps to protect these young victims from his abuse. Instead, they knowingly concealed this information from Plaintiff and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS also aided, abetted and ratified the abuse.

When the ROE DEFENDANTS received reports of their agent's acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to their care, the ROE DEFENDANTS assumed the responsibility for dealing with the problem. They told families of victims that they should leave the matter to the ROE DEFENDANTS to handle. However, the ROE DEFENDANTS did not report the abuse to law enforcement authorities nor did they warn any other members of the organization that they had appointed a dangerous pedophile to positions of leadership with authority over children. They did not act to help Plaintiff or their families deal with the trauma of abuse and actively prevented them from obtaining help from trained professionals and other available sources. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to take appropriate steps to hold their agent, Edward Villegas, accountable for his conduct or to assist him in addressing his propensities.

The sexual abuse suffered by Plaintiff is further corroborated by the sealed Certificate of Merit submitted by a licensed mental health practitioner, filed herewith.

III.

STATUTORY AUTHORITY

Code of Civil Procedure § 340.1 governs the procedures to be followed in bringing actions by an adult over 26 years of age against a religious institution for childhood sexual abuse. An amendment to CCP § 340.1 in 2002 created a one (1) year window to the statute of limitations to allow claims, which may have otherwise expired under the old statute, to be filed by these individuals until December 31, 2003. CCP § 340.1 ©).

Plaintiff makes three requests in this Ex Parte Application in accordance with CCP § 340.1, namely that:

1. Plaintiff requests an in camera review of certificates of merits filed by her attorney and a licensed mental health professional, and the issuance based on upon that review of a finding and order that there is reasonable and meritorious cause for the filing of this action, and that the certificates of merit be sealed and remain confidential;

2. Plaintiff requests an in camera review of her attorney's Certificate of Corroborative Fact, and issuance of an order based upon that certificate for permission to amend her Complaint to substitute the true names of the defendants for the fictitious designations of Defendants ROES 1 through 9; and

3. Plaintiff requests an order allowing her to appear through use of her first name and last initial.

IV.

POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

A. CCP § 340.1 REQUIRES CERTIFICATES OF MERIT AND IN CAMERA REVIEW.

CCP § 340.1 requires, for each case brought by a plaintiff 26 years of age or older at the time the action is filed, seeking damages for childhood sexual abuse against a religious or other institution, that Certificates of Merit be executed by the attorney for the Plaintiff, and by a licensed mental health practitioner who is not a treating practitioner. CCP § 340.1 (h).

The Certificate of Merit of the attorney shall state that (1) the attorney has reviewed the facts of the case, (2) consulted with one mental health practitioner who is licensed to practice and practices in this State, and (3) who the attorney reasonably believes is knowledgeable of the relevant facts and issues, and (4) the attorney has concluded on the basis of that review and consultation that there is reasonable and meritorious cause for the filing of the action. CCP § 340.1 (h)(1).

The Certificate of Merit by the mental health practitioner shall declare that (1) the practitioner is licensed to practice and practices in this State as a mental health practitioner, (2) is not a party to the action, (3) is not treating and has not treated the Plaintiff, and (4) that the practitioner has interviewed the Plaintiff, and is knowledgeable in the relevant facts and issues, and (5) has concluded, on the basis of this knowledge, that is his or her professional opinion, there is a reasonable basis to believe that the Plaintiff has been subjected to childhood sexual abuse. CCP § 340.1 (h)(2).

Certificates of Merit have been executed and submitted with this Ex Parte Application by both the attorney for Plaintiff, and by a licensed mental health practitioner. All Certificates of Merit are submitted in sealed envelopes.

CCP § 340.1(j) mandates that the Court conduct an in camera review of the Certificates of Merit, and based solely on the Certificates of Merit, issue a finding that there is reasonable and meritorious cause for filing of the action against the defendants. At that time, the duty to serve the defendants with process shall attach.

In accordance with CCP § 340.1, Plaintiff requests an Order of this Court that the Certificates of Merit and the work product related information contained therein, be kept under seal and confidential.

B. PLAINTIFF'S SHOWING BY CERTIFICATE OF CORROBORATIVE FACT IS SUFFICIENT TO ALLOW AMENDMENT OF THE COMPLAINT.

CCP § 340.1(k) requires defendants be designated by fictitious identities until a showing of corroborative fact as to the charging allegations against each defendant has been made. At any time after the action is filed, Plaintiff may apply to the Court for permission to amend the Complaint to substitute the true name of defendant or defendants for the fictitious designation, provided that a Certificate of Corroborative Fact executed by the attorney for the Plaintiff is submitted. CCP § 340.1(l) The Court shall then review the application and Certificate of Corroborative Fact in camera, and based solely on the Certificate and any reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, "shall, if one or more facts corroborative of one or more of the charging allegations against the defendant has been shown, order the Complaint may be amended to substitute the names of the defendant or defendants. CCP § 340.1(m) [emphasis added].

In this matter, Plaintiff's charging allegations are corroborated by the fact that while Defendants' agent, Edward Villegas, was sexually abusing Plaintiff, as described above, he was abusing other children in Defendants' organization, which was brought to Defendants' attention. Defendants did nothing to reprimand Edward Villegas, thereby allowing him to continue sexually abusing Plaintiff and others, nor did Defendants warn congregation members of Villegas' conduct to protect those over whom Edward Villegas has authority. Further, Edward Villegas was criminally convicted for his numerous acts of sexual abuse in Napa County, Case Number CR17623.

CCP § 340.1 (n) requires that the Court "shall keep under seal and confidential from the public and all parties to the litigation other than the Plaintiff, any and all certificates of corroborative fact filed pursuant to subdivision (l)." Plaintiff requests an order to seal and keep confidential the Certificate of Corroborative Fact executed by her attorney, in addition to the order permitting amendment of the Complaint.

C. PLAINTIFF MAY APPEAR USING HER FIRST NAME AND LAST INITIAL.

Plaintiff requests being identified only by use of her first name and last initial. Plaintiff's request is based upon the sensitive, embarrassing and psychologically damaging involvement with childhood sexual abuse, which Plaintiff does not wish to have disclosed to the public, her neighbors, or her business associates.

Normally, parties are required to pursue actions in their own name, absent other considerations. However, Article 1, § 1 of the California Constitution, ensures the right to privacy. Further, CCP § 128(a)(5) provides the Court with power to "control in furtherance of justice, the conduct of its ministerial officers, and of all other persons in any manner connected with a judicial proceeding before it, in every matter pertaining thereto." The Court is further empowered to "amend and control its process and orders so as to make them conform to law and justice." CCP § 128(a)(8). This broad grant of powers provides statutory authority to allow Plaintiff to proceed using her first name and last initial, to avoid the embarrassment and possible further psychological and emotional damage associated with public disclosure of the childhood sexual abuse. CCP § 128(s) does note that victims of sexual assault are entitled to special consideration in issues involving contempt. Such special consideration should also be given when Plaintiff are innocent victims of childhood sexual abuse seeking redress for wrongs committed by Defendants.

IV.

CONCLUSION

For all the reasons set forth herein, it is respectfully requested this Court grant all of Plaintiffs' request enumerated herein, and issue an Order consistent with the Rulings.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF NICOLE D.'s EX PARTE APPLICATION FOR IN CAMERA REVIEW OF CERTIFICATES OF MERIT, CERTIFICATE OF CORROBORATIVE FACTS, AND FOR ISSUANCE OF FINDINGS AND ORDERS THEREON

I.

INTRODUCTION

This application is filed on behalf of Plaintiff NICOLE D., who is an adult survivor of childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by Edward Villegas. Mr. Villegas, who is now deceased, was at all times mentioned in the Complaint filed concurrently herewith on behalf of NICOLE D. and incorporated by reference herein, an agent of Defendants ROES 1 through 100 and DOES 110 through 120.

Plaintiff NICOLE D., by way of this Application, and in compliance with Code of Civil Procedure § 3401., seeks an order from this Court to file her Amended Complaint inserting the true identities of those entities responsible for her sexual abuse.

II.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

1. Defendants' Identities

ROE DEFENDANTS 1 through 9 are corporate entities and/or other business organizations responsible to Plaintiff for the sexual abuse Plaintiff suffered.

2. Defendants' Organizational Structure

In the past, certain Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers, agents, volunteers and other leaders and representatives of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, including Edward Villegas, have used their positions of authority within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization to sexually abuse minors. The ROE DEFENDANTS were notified of the abuse of these minors by their elder, Edward Villegas, and others, but failed to take reasonable steps to ensure the safety of Plaintiff and other minor children entrusted to their care and to prevent future acts of molestation. This suit seeks compensation for victims of this sexual abuse.

The ROE DEFENDANTS' organization has a hierarchical structure in which the GOVERNING BODY, which is a small group of men who operate out of various entities within the hierarchical structure, sits at the top of a chain of command that extends over each individual and Defendant entity in the organization including its worldwide operations. These individuals and entities act as agents, servants and alter egos of each other. Authority for actions by the organization or its members derive from the GOVERNING BODY.

All of the Defendants are the agents and servants of each other and are vicariously liable for each other's acts. The ROE DEFENDANTS are so organized and controlled and their affairs are so conducted that they are alter egos of each other and operate as a single business enterprise.

Through its hierarchical structure, the ROE DEFENDANTS assume responsibility for the development, protection and discipline of its membership, especially the children of members. All male members, whether Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers and/or Publishers, are appointed and empowered by the GOVERNING BODY to carry out this responsibility.

To further their goals, the ROE DEFENDANTS authorize male members to develop relationships of trust with women, children and families and to assume a role of counselor and advocate for any problems that might arise, including claims of child abuse. It is the responsibility of the Elders and those higher up in the chain of command, including the GOVERNING BODY, to decide if abuse has occurred and how it should be handled.

Despite knowledge of a problem with sexual abuse of minors by leaders in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, the ROE DEFENDANTS acted with willful indifference and/or reckless and/or intentional disregard for the interest and safety of the children entrusted to their care. Rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the ROE DEFENDANTS engaged in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children. The ROE DEFENDANTS have likewise engaged in the routine practice of maintaining secret archival files regarding sexual abuse by Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers and other leaders in the organization. The existence of these files and the contents thereof were not disclosed to or made available to law enforcement authorities or others in order for law enforcement to investigate the crimes of these leaders in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization. The ROE DEFENDANTS furthered this conspiracy of concealment by, among other things, failing to properly report complaints of sexual misconduct to law enforcement authorities, failing to remove molesting leaders or prevent their access to children. Molesting leaders were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing in the organization and were allowed continued frequent and unsupervised access to children in the organization. At all material times, the ROE DEFENDANTS prohibited the victim and/or accuser from warning others or speaking about the matter to anyone under penalty of discipline. Victim/accusers were not permitted to report suspected abuse to outside authorities or to other Publishers within the organization, despite secular laws and duties regarding the reporting of sexual Abuse. Violation of this policy would lead to severe sanctions. The ROE DEFENDANTS also failed to provide Plaintiffs and their families with any notice or warning regarding the past misconduct of, and abuse by, Edward Villegas. The ROE DEFENDANTS represented to Plaintiffs, members and the public that Edward Villegas and other leaders were fit to lead, when in fact they were predator pedophiles. The ROE DEFENDANTS knew or had reason to know that Edward Villegas and other leader molesters would continue to sexually molest children, using their leadership positions to gain access and control over their victims.

Beginning in at least 1970, if not earlier, the ROE DEFENDANTS appointed Edward Villegas to the leadership position of Elder with authority over women and children in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization.

3. Abuse of Nicole D.

Beginning by at least 1972, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, used his position as an Elder to gain access to children under the care of the ROE DEFENDANTS organization and to sexually abuse them.

During this time period, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, was also using his position of authority as an Elder to sexually abuse other children under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care.

In approximately 1978, Edward Villegas used his position as an Elder and leader in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, NICOLE D., a child under the care of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization. Plaintiff, NICOLE D. was approximately seven (7) years old when the abuse occurred. Using his delegated authority as a leader in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, Edward Villegas forced Plaintiff, NICOLE D. to have oral sex with him.

When Plaintiff, NICOLE D. told her parents about the abuse, her father immediately reported it to the Elders of Defendant, ROE 9 pursuant to instructions by the ROE DEFENDANTS. In response, the ROE DEFENDANTS privately reproved their agent for his conduct, but took no other steps to hold him accountable or to otherwise notify members and the families of the children whom they had placed of under the authority of their agent, Edward Villegas. Therefore, Edward Villegas was able to continue to use his position of authority.

For over two decades, the ROE DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that their appointed agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority in the organization to gain access to and sexually molest and physically abuse adolescents under the care of the organization. Nevertheless, the ROE DEFENDANTS continued to appoint Edward Villegas to leadership positions in their local congregations, entrusting him with the welfare of numerous adolescents in the ROE DEFENDANTS' local congregations. The ROE DEFENDANTS' agent then used his position of authority in the organization to sexually molest Plaintiff and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to notify anyone that their agent, Edward Villegas was molesting or had sexually molested adolescents under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care. They further failed to take any steps to protect these young victims from his abuse. Instead, they knowingly concealed this information from Plaintiff and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS also aided, abetted and ratified the abuse.

When the ROE DEFENDANTS received reports of their agent's acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to their care, the ROE DEFENDANTS assumed the responsibility for dealing with the problem. They told families of victims that they should leave the matter to the ROE DEFENDANTS to handle. However, the ROE DEFENDANTS did not report the abuse to law enforcement authorities nor did they warn any other members of the organization that they had appointed a dangerous pedophile to positions of leadership with authority over children. They did not act to help Plaintiff or their families deal with the trauma of abuse and actively prevented them from obtaining help from trained professionals and other available sources. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to take appropriate steps to hold their agent, Edward Villegas, accountable for his conduct or to assist him in addressing his propensities.

The sexual abuse suffered by Plaintiff is further corroborated by the sealed Certificate of Merit submitted by a licensed mental health practitioner, filed herewith.

III.

STATUTORY AUTHORITY

Code of Civil Procedure § 340.1 governs the procedures to be followed in bringing actions by an adult over 26 years of age against a religious institution for childhood sexual abuse. An amendment to CCP § 340.1 in 2002 created a one (1) year window to the statute of limitations to allow claims, which may have otherwise expired under the old statute, to be filed by these individuals until December 31, 2003. CCP § 340.1 ©).

Plaintiff makes three requests in this Ex Parte Application in accordance with CCP § 340.1, namely that:

> 1. Plaintiff requests an in camera review of certificates of merits filed by her attorney and a licensed mental health professional, and the issuance based on upon that review of a finding and order that there is reasonable and meritorious cause for the filing of this action, and that the certificates of merit be sealed and remain confidential;
>
> 2. Plaintiff requests an in camera review of her attorney's Certificate of Corroborative Fact, and issuance of an order based upon that certificate for permission to amend her Complaint to substitute the true names of the defendants for the fictitious designations of Defendants ROES 1 through 9; and
> 3. Plaintiff requests an order allowing her to appear through use of her first name and last initial.

IV.

POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

A. CCP § 340.1 REQUIRES CERTIFICATES OF MERIT AND IN CAMERA REVIEW.

CCP § 340.1 requires, for each case brought by a plaintiff 26 years of age or older at the time the action is filed, seeking damages for childhood sexual abuse against a religious or other institution, that Certificates of Merit be executed by the attorney for the Plaintiff, and by a licensed mental health practitioner who is not a treating practitioner. CCP § 340.1 (h).

The Certificate of Merit of the attorney shall state that (1) the attorney has reviewed the facts of the case, (2) consulted with one mental health practitioner who is licensed to practice and practices in this State, and (3) who the attorney reasonably believes is knowledgeable of the relevant facts and issues, and (4) the attorney has concluded on the basis of that review and consultation that there is reasonable and meritorious cause for the filing of the action. CCP § 340.1 (h)(1).

The Certificate of Merit by the mental health practitioner shall declare that (1) the practitioner is licensed to practice and practices in this State as a mental health practitioner, (2) is not a party to the action, (3) is not treating and has not treated the Plaintiff, and (4) that the practitioner has interviewed the Plaintiff, and is knowledgeable in the relevant facts and issues, and (5) has concluded, on the basis of this knowledge, that is his or her professional opinion, there is a reasonable basis to believe that the Plaintiff has been subjected to childhood sexual abuse. CCP § 340.1 (h)(2).

Certificates of Merit have been executed and submitted with this Ex Parte Application by both the attorney for Plaintiff, and by a licensed mental health practitioner. All Certificates of Merit are submitted in sealed envelopes.

CCP § 340.1(j) mandates that the Court conduct an in camera review of the Certificates of Merit, and based solely on the Certificates of Merit, issue a finding that there is reasonable and meritorious cause for filing of the action against the defendants. At that time, the duty to serve the defendants with process shall attach.

In accordance with CCP § 340.1, Plaintiff requests an Order of this Court that the Certificates of Merit and the work product related information contained therein, be kept under seal and confidential.

B. PLAINTIFF'S SHOWING BY CERTIFICATE OF CORROBORATIVE FACT IS SUFFICIENT TO ALLOW AMENDMENT OF THE COMPLAINT.

CCP § 340.1(k) requires defendants be designated by fictitious identities until a showing of corroborative fact as to the charging allegations against each defendant has been made. At any time after the action is filed, Plaintiff may apply to the Court for permission to amend the Complaint to substitute the true name of defendant or defendants for the fictitious designation, provided that a Certificate of Corroborative Fact executed by the attorney for the Plaintiff is submitted. CCP § 340.1(l) The Court shall then review the application and Certificate of Corroborative Fact in camera, and based solely on the Certificate and any reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, "shall, if one or more facts corroborative of one or more of the charging allegations against the defendant has been shown, order the Complaint may be amended to substitute the names of the defendant or defendants. CCP § 340.1(m) [emphasis added].

In this matter, Plaintiff's charging allegations are corroborated by the fact that while Defendants' agent, Edward Villegas, was sexually abusing Plaintiff, as described above, he was abusing other children in Defendants' organization, which was brought to Defendants' attention. Defendants did nothing to reprimand Edward Villegas, thereby allowing him to continue sexually abusing Plaintiff and others, nor did Defendants warn congregation members of Villegas' conduct to protect those over whom Edward Villegas has authority. Further, Edward Villegas was criminally convicted for his numerous acts of sexual abuse in Napa County, Case Number CR17623.

CCP § 340.1 (n) requires that the Court "shall keep under seal and confidential from the public and all parties to the litigation other than the Plaintiff, any and all certificates of corroborative fact filed pursuant to subdivision (l)." Plaintiff requests an order to seal and keep confidential the Certificate of Corroborative Fact executed by her attorney, in addition to the order permitting amendment of the Complaint.

C. PLAINTIFF MAY APPEAR USING HER FIRST NAME AND LAST INITIAL.

Plaintiff requests being identified only by use of her first name and last initial. Plaintiff's request is based upon the sensitive, embarrassing and psychologically damaging involvement with childhood sexual abuse, which Plaintiff does not wish to have disclosed to the public, her neighbors, or her business associates.

Normally, parties are required to pursue actions in their own name, absent other considerations. However, Article 1, § 1 of the California Constitution, ensures the right to privacy. Further, CCP § 128(a)(5) provides the Court with power to "control in furtherance of justice, the conduct of its ministerial officers, and of all other persons in any manner connected with a judicial proceeding before it, in every matter pertaining thereto." The Court is further empowered to "amend and control its process and orders so as to make them conform to law and justice." CCP § 128(a)(8). This broad grant of powers provides statutory authority to allow Plaintiff to proceed using her first name and last initial, to avoid the embarrassment and possible further psychological and emotional damage associated with public disclosure of the childhood sexual abuse. CCP § 128(s) does note that victims of sexual assault are entitled to special consideration in issues involving contempt. Such special consideration should also be given when Plaintiff are innocent victims of childhood sexual abuse seeking redress for wrongs committed by Defendants.

IV.

CONCLUSION

For all the reasons set forth herein, it is respectfully requested this Court grant all of Plaintiffs' request enumerated herein, and issue an Order consistent with the Rulings.

15. Each Plaintiff has been damaged in an amount exceeding the minimum jurisdictional requirements of this Court.

III.

FACTS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

17. In the past, certain Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers, agents, volunteers and other leaders and representatives of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, including Edward Villegas (now deceased), have used their positions of authority within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization to sexually abuse minors, including Plaintiffs. The ROE DEFENDANTS were notified of the abuse of these minors by their elder, Edward Villegas, and others, but failed to take reasonable steps to ensure the safety of Plaintiffs and other minor children entrusted to their care and to prevent future acts of molestation. This suit seeks compensation for Plaintiffs who were victims of this sexual abuse.

18. All paragraphs of this Complaint are based on information and belief, except for those allegations, which pertain to the Plaintiffs and their counsel. Plaintiffs' information and belief are based upon, inter alia, the investigation conducted to date by Plaintiffs and their counsel. Each allegation in this Complaint either has, or is likely to have, evidentiary support upon further investigation and discovery.

19. The ROE DEFENDANTS' organization has a hierarchical structure in which the GOVERNING BODY, which is a small group of men who operate out of various entities within the hierarchical structure, sits at the top of a chain of command that extends over each individual and Defendant entity in the organization including its worldwide operations. These individuals and entities act as agents, servants and alter egos of each other. Authority for actions by the organization or its members derive from the GOVERNING BODY.

20. All of the Defendants are the agents and servants of each other and are vicariously liable for each other's acts. The ROE DEFENDANTS are so organized and controlled and their affairs are so conducted that they are alter egos of each other and operate as a single business enterprise.

21. Through its hierarchical structure, the ROE DEFENDANTS assume responsibility for the development, protection and discipline of its membership, especially the children of members. All male members, whether Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers and/or Publishers, are appointed and empowered by the GOVERNING BODY to carry out this responsibility.

22. To further their goals, the ROE DEFENDANTS authorize male members to develop relationships of trust with women, children and families and to assume a role of counselor and advocate for any problems that might arise, including claims of child abuse. It is the responsibility of the Elders and those higher up in the chain of command, including the GOVERNING BODY, to decide if abuse has occurred and how it should be handled.

23. Despite knowledge of a problem with sexual abuse of minors by leaders in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, the ROE DEFENDANTS acted with willful indifference and/or reckless and/or intentional disregard for the interest and safety of the children entrusted to their care. Rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the ROE DEFENDANTS engaged in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children. The ROE DEFENDANTS have likewise engaged in the routine practice of maintaining secret archival files regarding sexual abuse by Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, Male Publishers and other leaders in the organization. The existence of these files and the contents thereof were not disclosed to or made available to law enforcement authorities or others in order for law enforcement to investigate the crimes of these leaders in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization. The ROE DEFENDANTS furthered this conspiracy of concealment by, among other things, failing to properly report complaints of sexual misconduct to law enforcement authorities, failing to remove molesting leaders or prevent their access to children. Molesting leaders were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing in the organization and were allowed continued frequent and unsupervised access to children in the organization. At all material times, the ROE DEFENDANTS prohibited the victim and/or accuser from warning others or speaking about the matter to anyone under penalty of discipline. Victim/accusers were not permitted to report suspected abuse to outside authorities or to other Publishers within the organization, despite secular laws and duties regarding the reporting of sexual Abuse. Violation of this policy would lead to severe sanctions. The ROE DEFENDANTS also failed to provide Plaintiffs and their families with any notice or warning regarding the past misconduct of, and abuse by, Edward Villegas. The ROE DEFENDANTS represented to Plaintiffs, members and the public that Edward Villegas and other leaders were fit to lead, when in fact they were predator pedophiles. The ROE DEFENDANTS knew or had reason to know that Edward Villegas and other leader molesters would continue to sexually molest children, using their leadership positions to gain access and control over their victims.

24. Beginning in at least 1970, if not earlier, the ROE DEFENDANTS appointed Edward Villegas to the leadership position of Elder with authority over women and children in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization.

25. In approximately 1970, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. and her mother, Betty Hopkins, came under the instruction and care of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization through their agent, Edward Villegas, and his wife, Marsha Villegas. The ROE DEFENDANTS used the daycare center run out of the Villegas home to attract new converts. Plaintiff CHARISSA W. was approximately

1 year old at the time. Betty Hopkins became one of those new converts and entrusted her daughter, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. to the ROE DEFENDANTS' care.

26. In approximately 1971, Plaintiff Nicole D. and her family came under the care of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization and entrusted Nicole D. to the leadership of the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas. Through his position of leadership with the ROE DEFENDANTS, Edward Villegas developed a relationship of trust and confidence with Plaintiff Nicole D. and her family, working with them at ROE DEFENDANT events and inviting them into his home.

27. Beginning by at least 1972, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, used his position as an Elder to gain access to children under the care of the ROE DEFENDANTS organization and to sexually abuse them.

28. In about 1972, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas began sexually molesting Plaintiff, CHARISSA W. by, among other things, fondling her genitals, digitally penetrating her vagina and forcing her to have oral sex. She was approximately three (3) or four (4) years old at the time. For the next twelve (12) to thirteen (13) years, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas continued to use his leadership position as an Elder to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, CHARISSA W., who was under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care. Plaintiff's position as a minor in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, as well Edward Villegas' position as a spiritual leader and authority figure in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization allowed him to maintain control and influence over Plaintiff and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS enabled Edward Villegas to abuse Plaintiff and others by placing him in positions of authority, and then actively concealing his sexual abuse. The ROE DEFENDANTS, each of them, used their positions in the organization to aid and abet Edward Villegas and other leaders in the sexual abuse and exploitation of minors in the organization and in furtherance of the conspiracy to conceal the sexual molestation occurring within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization.

29. During this time period, the ROE DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, was also using his position of authority as an Elder to sexually abuse other children under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care.

30. In approximately 1978, Edward Villegas used his position as an Elder and leader in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, NICOLE D., a child under the care of the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization. Plaintiff, NICOLE D. was approximately seven (7) years old when the abuse occurred. Using his delegated authority as a leader in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, Edward Villegas forced Plaintiff, NICOLE D. to have oral sex with him.

31. When Plaintiff, NICOLE D. told her parents about the abuse, her father immediately reported it to the Elders of Defendant, ROE 9, pursuant to instructions by the ROE DEFENDANTS. In response, the ROE DEFENDANTS privately reproved their agent for his conduct, but took no other steps to hold him accountable or to otherwise notify members and the families of the children whom they had placed of under the authority of their agent, Edward Villegas. Therefore, Edward Villegas was able to continue to use his position of authority.

32. For over two decades, the ROE DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that their appointed agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority in the organization to gain access to and sexually molest and physically abuse adolescents under the care of the organization. Nevertheless, the ROE DEFENDANTS continued to appoint Edward Villegas to leadership positions in their local congregations, entrusting him with the welfare of numerous adolescents in the ROE DEFENDANTS' local congregations. The ROE DEFENDANTS' agent then used his position of authority in the organization to sexually molest Plaintiffs and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to notify anyone that their agent, Edward Villegas was molesting or had sexually molested adolescents under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care. They further failed to take any steps to protect these young victims from his abuse. Instead, they knowingly concealed this information from Plaintiffs and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS also aided, abetted and ratified the abuse.

33. When the ROE DEFENDANTS received reports of their agent's acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to their care, the ROE DEFENDANTS assumed the responsibility for dealing with the problem. They told families of victims that they should leave the matter to the ROE DEFENDANTS to handle. However, the ROE DEFENDANTS did not report the abuse to law enforcement authorities nor did they warn any other members of the organization that they had appointed a dangerous pedophile to positions of leadership with authority over children. They did not act to help Plaintiffs or their families deal with the trauma of abuse and actively prevented them from obtaining help from trained professionals and other available sources. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to take appropriate steps to hold their agent, Edward Villegas, accountable for his conduct or to assist him in addressing his propensities.

34. Edward Villegas used the authority of his position in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiffs and others. The ROE DEFENDANTS directly and vicariously caused foreseeable harm to Plaintiffs by, among other things:

a. aiding, abetting and ratifying the abuse of children by their appointed agents;

b. blaming, humiliating, sanctioning and/or disciplining victims/accusers of sexual abuse instead of the perpetrator;

c. negligently failing to report such sexual abuse, including the abuse by Edward Villegas to law enforcement and governmental child welfare agencies and requiring that members not make such reports;

d. negligently failing to warn Plaintiffs, their families, and others of the risk of abuse by Edward Villegas after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his positions of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to the ROE DEFENDANTS' care;

e. negligently failing to train its Elders, Overseers, Ministerial Servants and other appointed leaders to identify, investigate, prevent and respond to or report child abuse;

f. negligently failing to adopt adequate policies and procedures for the protection of children and other members and/or to implement and comply with such procedures that did exist;

g. failing to properly investigate matters brought to the ROE DEFENDANTS' attention involving child sexual abuse and/or suspicions of child sexual abuse;

h. negligently failing to provide child abuse victims and their families with any assistance in coping with the trauma of abuse and preventing Plaintiffs and their families from reporting the abuse to outside authorities and obtaining outside help to deal with the trauma of abuse;

j. concealing from Plaintiffs and their families that the ROE DEFENDANTS had information that their agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority to abuse young children entrusted to their care by the ROE DEFENDANTS;

k. negligently failing to undertake a sexual offender evaluation, provide sexual offender treatment and/or obtain psychiatric evaluation and treatment of Edward Villegas after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his position of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse;

l. negligently retaining and failing to properly supervise Edward Villegas as a leader in the organization or to monitor his activities after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his position of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
SEXUAL BATTERY AND RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR

35. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 34 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

36. Plaintiffs allege that for a number of years, beginning in 1972, as an agent and alter ego of the ROE DEFENDANTS, Edward Villegas used his position of authority to gain access to Plaintiffs and to engage in un-permitted, harmful, and offensive sexual contact upon the bodies of Plaintiffs and each of them, as described herein, without each Plaintiff's consent, committing sexual abuse upon the persons of Plaintiffs in the State of California in violation of Code of Civil Procedure 340.1.

37. Plaintiffs further allege each of the ROE DEFENDANTS was in the chain of command and acted pursuant to the authority granted to them as agents and alter ego of the GOVERNING BODY and each other, utilized such leadership and authority to carry out and/or aid, abet and ratify the sexual abuse of Plaintiffs. In such capacity, the ROE DEFENDANTS are liable for the sexual abuse of Plaintiffs under the legal theory of respondeat superior.

38. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE

39. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 38 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

40. Plaintiffs allege that, at all times herein mentioned, ROE DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect Plaintiffs from sexual predators within the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization. The ROE DEFENDANTS further knew or should have known that Plaintiffs were at risk of foreseeable harm by their agent, Edward Villegas, but failed to act to protect them from said harm. The ROE DEFENDANTS breached their duty to Plaintiffs, thereby causing great harm to Plaintiffs.

41. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENT APPOINTMENT, RETENTION AND SUPERVISION

42. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 41 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

43. Plaintiffs further allege that at all times herein mentioned, the ROE DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of their agents, Edward Villegas', propensities to use his position as a leader in the local congregation to engage in and/or aid and abet acts of sexual abuse. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to adequately investigate, evaluate, and otherwise research the background of their agent, Edward Villegas, prior to their hiring appointing him to leadership positions and entrusting children to his care.

44. Plaintiffs further allege that after Edward Villegas was retained by ROE DEFENDANTS acting on behalf of and under the supervision of the ROE DEFENDANTS, ROE DEFENDANTS failed to adequately investigate, evaluate and otherwise monitor the conduct of their agent, Edward Villegas, during his interactions with children entrusted by ROE DEFENDANTS to his care, thereby also failing to adequately supervise and discipline the conduct Edward Villegas.

45. Plaintiff's further allege that ROE DEFENDANTS failed to provide adequate warning to Plaintiffs and their families of their agent's dangerous propensities and unfitness to lead.

46. Plaintiffs further allege the ROE DEFENDANTS negligently investigated, appointed, retained and supervised Edward Villegas in the organization at a time when they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his appointed position to engage in acts of sexual abuse against Plaintiffs and other young children under the ROE DEFENDANTS' care.

47. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

FOURTH CAUSE OF ACTION
GROSS NEGLIGENCE/WILFUL MISCONDUCT

48. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 47 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

49. Plaintiffs allege the behavior of the ROE DEFENDANTS as described hereinabove demonstrates a conscious indifference to the safety and welfare of Plaintiffs, in that ROE DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of the dangerous propensities of their agents, Edward Villegas, yet failed to act to protect the health, safety and welfare of children in the custody and care of ROE DEFENDANTS, thereby allowing Plaintiffs to be sexually abused, which could have been prevented but for ROE DEFENDANTS' wilful misconduct and gross negligence in failing to implement safeguards to protect Plaintiffs, in violation of ROE DEFENDANTS' duty to protect the children entrusted to Edward Villegas' care and custody.

50. Plaintiffs further allege that ROE DEFENDANTS' actions, constituting wilful misconduct and gross negligence described hereinabove, caused significant mental, emotional, and physical injuries as a result of the acts of sexual abuse described hereinabove.

51. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

FIFTH CAUSE OF ACTION
BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

52. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 51 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

53. Plaintiffs allege that by holding Edward Villegas out as a qualified Elder and leader in the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization, and by undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling of Plaintiffs, the ROE DEFENDANTS, created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiffs. The ROE DEFENDANTS placed themselves in a position of trust and confidence with Plaintiffs, and that such relationship imposed on the ROE DEFENDANTS a duty to act in Plaintiffs' best interests and to protect Plaintiffs' best interests.

54. Plaintiffs further allege that because of this special relationship, the ROE

DEFENDANTS, Plaintiffs and their families placed their trust and confidence in the ROE DEFENDANTS that they would not allow harm to Plaintiffs or fail to warn Plaintiffs of potential harm. Further, Plaintiffs and their families placed their trust and confidence in the ROE DEFENDANTS that they would protect Plaintiffs from harm.

55. The above conduct, either independently or in conjunction with each other, constitutes a breach of the fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiffs by ROE DEFENDANTS.

56. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

SIXTH CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENCE PER SE and COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE:
FAILURE TO REPORT SUSPECTED CHILD ABUSE

57. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 56 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

58. Plaintiffs allege that the ROE DEFENDANTS had a duty, under the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, California Penal Code § 11164, et. seq., (and predecessor provisions) and the common-laws, to report the abuse or suspected abuse of children.

59. Plaintiffs further allege that the ROE DEFENDANTS failed to report to law enforcement the abusive and illegal acts of their agent, Edward Villegas, both prior to and after the abuse inflicted on Plaintiffs. By failing to report the actions of Edward Villegas, the ROE DEFENDANTS violated California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, which is intended to safeguard and enhance the welfare of abused children. Plaintiffs were members of the class of persons that the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act was designed to protect and each was injured as a result of The ROE DEFENDANTS' violation of the statute. Such violation constitutes negligence per se.

60. Plaintiffs further allege that the ROE DEFENDANTS' failure to report constitutes common-law negligence. The ROE DEFENDANTS asserted their authority over both Plaintiffs and their abuser and agent, Edward Villegas, creating a special relationship of trust and confidence and power over Plaintiffs. In the context of this special relationship and the unequal relationship among the parties, the ROE DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to handle all reports of child abuse and in doing so caused Plaintiffs and their families from reporting the abuse to, or seeking help from, sources and authorities outside the ROE DEFENDANTS' organization. The ROE DEFENDANTS acted with conscious disregard for the safety and welfare of Plaintiffs and violated that duty to Plaintiffs' detriment.

61. As a legal result of the ROE DEFENDANTS' failure to report the illegal conduct of their agent, Edward Villegas, law enforcement, Plaintiff was deprived of the benefits provided by the State of California and other trained professionals that would have decreased further harm to the Plaintiffs and prevented further abuse. Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

SEVENTH CAUSE OF ACTION

62. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 61 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

63. Plaintiffs allege that after receiving reports that their agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority in the organization to abuse adolescents, the ROE DEFENDANTS, willfully and intentionally kept information from Plaintiffs, other victims similarly situated and the community-at-large. The ROE DEFENDANTS intentionally misrepresented to Plaintiffs and their families that Edward Villegas was a leader in good standing with authority to instruct Plaintiff and other children in spiritual, ethical and moral matters and that these agents were to be obeyed. The ROE DEFENDANTS further intentionally misrepresented that they would act in the best interests of Plaintiffs and other children entrusted to their care. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to disclose that they knew of Edward Villegas' propensity to use his leadership positions to sexually abuse Plaintiffs and others and that they were doing nothing to protect the children under their care. Plaintiffs did not know of the falsity of the ROE DEFENDANTS' representations, were entitled to rely upon them and did in fact rely upon them causing each of them serious injury and harm.

64. Plaintiffs further allege that by holding out Edward Villegas as an Elder and leader, qualified to provide religious instruction and counsel, and by undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling and training of plaintiff, and by accepting, through their agents Edward Villegas and other Elders, the control and responsibility of the Plaintiffs as a minor, the ROE DEFENDANTS and each of them entered into a fiduciary relationship with the minor plaintiff.

65. Plaintiffs further allege that as fiduciaries to Plaintiffs, the ROE DEFENDANTS, and each of them, had a duty to obtained and disclose information relating to sexual misconduct by their agent Edward Villegas. The ROE DEFENDANTS failed to disclose and later conspired to conceal such information from Plaintiffs.

66. The ROE DEFENDANTS, in concert with each other and with the intent to conceal and defraud, conspired whereby they would misrepresent, conceal or fail to disclose information relating to the sexual misconduct of their agent, Edward Villegas. By concealing such information, the ROE DEFENDANTS and each of them committed at least one act in furtherance of the conspiracy.

67. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

EIGHTH CAUSE OF ACTION
RATIFICATION

68. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 67 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

69. Plaintiffs allege that upon learning that their agent, Edward Villegas had sexually abused children, the ROE DEFENDANTS failed to take appropriate steps to hold Edward Villegas accountable for their actions and continued to appoint or maintain Edward Villegas to leadership positions in the organization throughout the period of abuse. The ROE DEFENDANTS thereby ratified their agent, Edward Villegas's conduct in using his appointed position of authority to sexually abuse Plaintiffs and other children.

70. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

NINTH CAUSE OF ACTION
ALTER EGO AND SINGLE BUSINESS ENTERPRISE

71. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 70 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

72. Plaintiffs allege that the ROE DEFENDANTS are organized and controlled and their affairs are so conducted that they are in fact mere instrumentalities and alter egos of each other and liable for each other's acts. Alternatively, the ROE DEFENDANTS were all engaged, at all times herein mentioned, in a single business enterprise and are liable for each other's acts.

73. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

TENTH CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENT USURPATION OF INVESTIGATORY FUNCTION

74. Plaintiffs incorporates herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 73 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

75. Plaintiffs alleges that California Penal Code Section 11164 et. seq., (and predecessor provisions) requires officials to perform specific responsibilities to carry out the policy of the statute described in the Act (and its predecessors). The ROE DEFENDANTS assumed these duties and responsibilities, but negligently failed to perform them.

76. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

ELEVENTH CAUSE OF ACTION
VIOLATION OF CALIFORNIA PENAL CODE SECTION 182

77. Plaintiffs incorporate herein this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 76 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

78. Plaintiffs allege the ROE DEFENDANTS' acts described herein violate California Penal Code Section 182 in that the ROE DEFENDANTS conspired with one or more other person to commit acts injurious to the public health, to public morals, or to pervert or obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws.

79. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

TWELFTH CAUSE OF ACTION
VIOLATION OF CALIFORNIA PENAL CODE SECTION 32

80. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 79 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

81. Plaintiffs allege that the ROE DEFENDANTS' acts described herein violate California Penal Code Section 32 in that the ROE DEFENDANTS harbored, concealed and/or aided their agent, Edward Villegas, after their agent, Edward Villegas, had committed a felony, with the intent that their agent, Edward Villegas, might avoid or escape arrest, trial, conviction and/or punishment, and the ROE DEFENDANTS having knowledge that their agent, Edward Villegas had committed a felony.

82. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

NONDISCLOSURE AND CONFIDENTIALITY

WHEREAS, in order to resolve discovery disputes, plaintiffs have requested that Watch Tower PA produce certain documents and/or information that involve or contain confidential financial information, proprietary materials, and/or related information ("Protected Information") belonging to Watch Tower PA and/or the Church Defendants with respect to Watch Tower PA's pending motions in each of the coordinated cases to quash service of summons and complaint based on lack of personal jurisdiction in California; and

WHEREAS, Watch Tower PA has agreed to provide such Protected Information for inspection and review by plaintiffs' counsel of record with respect to and for the sole and exclusive purpose of plaintiffs' response(s) to said motions in these coordinated cases and for no other purposes;

NOW, THEREFORE, IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED AND AGREED:

1. Watch Tower PA will produce the Protected Information in its possession and control to plaintiffs' attorneys pursuant to this Stipulated Protective Order.

2. All Protected Information shall be designated and marked "CONFIDENTIAL." Plaintiffs and their counsel of record each hereby agree that upon production of such Protected Information, they will instruct and ensure that all copies of such Protected Information shall be marked as "CONFIDENTIAL."

3. The Protected Information, including any and all documents and information contained therein, shall be maintained in confidence by plaintiffs' attorneys, shall be used for the sole and exclusive purpose of plaintiffs' response(s) to Watch Tower PA's pending motions in these coordinated cases to quash service of summons and complaint based on lack of personal jurisdiction in California, including any appeal therefrom, but for no other purposes, and shall not be disclosed to any person or entity for any other purpose unrelated to said motions without the prior written consent of Watch Tower PA or until further order of this Court. The Protected Information shall not be disclosed to plaintiffs or to any persons or entities other than:

(a) Plaintiffs' counsel of record in these coordinated cases and, to the extent reasonably necessary, said counsel's regularly employed staff;

(b) Any person whose sworn testimony is taken or to be taken in these coordinated cases with respect to the personal jurisdiction issue involving Watch Tower PA, except that such person may only be shown Protected Information during his or her testimony and in preparation therefore, and then only to the extent reasonably necessary for providing such testimony; and

(c) The Court, jury, court or deposition reporters and any persons employed by the Court or reporters whose duties require access to any information filed in connection with this action.

4. Should Protected Information be submitted to the Court, such submission shall be made under seal to preserve the confidential nature of the Protected Information and any documents and information contained therein, whether at trial, by or with a motion, other pleading or any submission, or on appeal, unless otherwise agreed to in advance and in writing by counsel for Watch Tower PA.

5. Nothing in this Protective Order shall be construed (a) to restrict the right of plaintiffs or Watch Tower PA to offer or use the Protected Information as evidence with respect to Watch Tower PA's motions in these coordinated cases to quash service of summons and complaint based on lack of personal jurisdiction in California, including any appeal therefrom, or (b) as a voluntary or involuntary waiver of any objection that might be raised at trial or otherwise to the admissibility of any such evidentiary material.

6. At the conclusion of these coordinated cases, plaintiffs' counsel of record and any other person or entity provided with Protected Information pursuant to paragraph 3 above each agree to return or destroy, within thirty (30) calendar days, all Protected Information received by plaintiffs' counsel of record pursuant to this Protective Order, provided, however, that plaintiffs' counsel of record may be entitled to retain memoranda, pleadings, or any work-product or privileged documentation derived from such Protected Information to the extent reasonably necessary to preserve a file. Said file shall not be disclosed to any person or entity other than those identified in paragraph 3 above.

7. Any person, other than the Court or its officers, to whom Protected Information is disclosed or supplied pursuant to paragraph 3 shall be informed, prior to disclosure, of the nature and scope of this Protective Order, and of his or her obligation to keep the Protected Information in confidence, and shall sign a statement and certification agreeing to comply with the terms of this Protective Order.

8. Plaintiffs and the Church Defendants shall attempt to agree upon procedures to protect at any hearing or trial the confidentiality of Protected Information and shall, prior to such hearing or trial, submit such proposed procedures, including any disputes relating thereto, to the Court for its approval or modification.

9. This Order shall continue to be binding after the conclusion of these coordinated cases except that a party may seek the written permission of Watch Tower PA or further order of the Court with respect to dissolution or modification of this Protective Order. The Court shall retain jurisdiction to enforce or modify this Protective Order.

IT IS SO STIPULATED.

Re: Charissa W., et al. v. Watchtower, et al.*, Case No.: 26-22191
Napa County Superior Court Case No. 26-22191

Dear Sora:

This will confirm our telephonic discussion on July 11, 2005, at which time it was agreed to postpone the Case Management Conference scheduled for July 12, 2005 at 9:30 a.m. until August 22, 2005.

Mr. Schnack and I have discussed a proposed hearing date for Watchtower Pennsylvania's Motion to Quash for an alleged lack of personal jurisdiction and have tentatively agreed upon August 22, 2005 as a hearing date. If that date is available for Judge Snowden's calendar, we would greatly appreciate scheduling the hearing for that morning. We also recommend postponing the July 12, 2005 Case Management Conference to August 22, 2005.

Mr. Schnack and I have agreed that Plaintiffs' Supplemental Opposition to Watchtower Pennsylvania's Motion to Quash will be filed on or before July 26, 2005 and Watchtower Pennsylvania's Supplemental Reply will be filed on or before August 12, 2005.

We appreciate the Court's cooperation in setting these dates and postponing the July 12, 2005 Case Management Conference. If these proposals do not meet with the Court's approval, please contact our office at your earliest convenience and we will schedule a telephone conference with Mr. Schnack and the Court in order to address any remaining concerns.

Very truly yours, support of plaintiffs' reply brief regarding plaintiff's motion to compel discovery at ¶¶3, 4, 5, and 6.

The Church Defendants hereby object to the admission of those persons' testimony in these motion proceedings on the independent and alternative grounds that (1) depositions and court testimony given in Texas lawsuits in which co-defendants James Henderson and Alvin Heard and defendant North Congregation of Red Bluff, California were not parties should not be admitted or considered by this Court in this California proceeding; (2) plaintiffs have taken out of context the limited excerpts of testimony of the Texas elders in the Texas lawsuits, in that the testimony given in the Texas lawsuits shows that the primary purpose of a Judicial Committee is to spiritually assist the erring member; and (3) the previously submitted declarations or affidavits of co-defendants Henderson and Heard, North Congregation of Red Bluff, California elders Cummins and Shelburn, and Jehovah's Witnesses elder Gary Breaux of the Service Department set forth admissible evidence particularized to the specific issues raised in these California Track I cases concerning co-defendants Henderson and Heard, including that the purpose of a Judicial Committee is to spiritually assist the erring member. See also the 1992 Watchtower article and pages from the 2005 "Organized To Do Jehovah's Will" book, both of which are attached hereto as Exhibit A and further substantiate that the purpose of Judicial Committees is to spiritually assist the erring one, while disfellowshipping or other disciplinary measures short of disfellowshipping are indisputably not the primary purpose of a Judicial Committee.

Based on the foregoing objections, the Church Defendants move that the deposition and court testimony cited by plaintiffs be stricken from the record and not considered by the Court in these motion proceedings.

ELDERS, JUDGE WITH RIGHTEOUSNESS

"When having a hearing between your brothers, you must judge with righteousness."—DEUTERONOMY 1:16.

AS SUPREME Judge, Jehovah has delegated judicial authority to his Son. (John 5:27) In turn, as Head of the Christian congregation, Christ uses the faithful and discreet slave class and its Governing Body to appoint elders, who at times have to act as judges. (Matthew 24:45-47; 1 Corinthians 5:12, 13; Titus 1:5, 9) As surrogate judges, these are under an obligation to follow closely the example of the heavenly Judges, Jehovah and Christ Jesus.

Christ—The Exemplary Judge

[2] Of Christ as Judge, it was written prophetically: "Upon him the spirit of Jehovah must settle down, the spirit of wisdom and of understanding, the spirit of counsel and of mightiness, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of Jehovah; and there will be enjoyment by him in the fear of Jehovah. And he will not judge by any mere appearance to his eyes, nor reprove simply according to the thing heard by his ears. And with righteousness he must judge the lowly ones, and with uprightness he must give reproof in behalf of the meek ones of the earth." —Isaiah 11:2-4.

[3] Note in that prophecy the qualities that enable Christ to "judge the inhabited earth in righteousness." (Acts 17:31) He judges in accordance with Jehovah's spirit, divine wisdom, understanding, counsel, and knowledge. Notice, too, that he judges in the fear of Jehovah. Thus, "the judgment seat of the Christ" is, representatively, "the judgment seat of God." (2 Corinthians 5:10; Romans 14:10) He is careful to judge matters the way God judges them. (John 8:16) He does not judge simply by appearances or by mere hearsay. He judges with uprightness in behalf of the meek and the lowly ones. What a wonderful Judge! And what a wonderful example for imperfect humans who are called upon to act in a judicial capacity today!

Earthly Judges

[4] The Scriptures indicate that the relatively small number of anointed Christians, beginning with the 12 apostles, will be associate judges with Christ Jesus during the Millennium. (Luke 22:28-30; 1 Corinthians 6:2; Revelation 20:4) A remnant of anointed members of spiritual Israel on earth were themselves judged and restored in 1918-19. (Malachi 3:2-4) Concerning this restoration of spiritual Israel, it was prophesied: "I will bring back again judges for you as at the first, and counselors for you as at the start." (Isaiah 1:26) Thus, just as he had done "at the start" of fleshly Israel, Jehovah has given the restored remnant righteous judges and counselors.

5 To begin with, the 'wise men' who were "put in as judges" were all anointed older men, or elders. (1 Corinthians 6:4, 5) Faithful, respected anointed overseers are depicted in the book of Revelation as being held in Jesus' right hand, that is, under his control and direction. (Revelation 1:16, 20; 2:1) Since 1935 the anointed have received the loyal support of an ever-increasing "great crowd," whose hope is to survive "the great tribulation" and live forever on a paradise earth. (Revelation 7:9, 10, 14-17) As "the marriage of the Lamb" approaches, more and more of these are being appointed by the anointed Governing Body to serve as elders and judges in the upwards of 66,000 congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the earth.* (Revelation 19:7-9) By means of special schools, they are being trained to handle responsibility in the "new earth" society. (2 Peter 3:13) The Kingdom Ministry School, conducted at the end of 1991 in many countries, placed emphasis on the proper handling of judicial cases. Elders who serve as judges are duty bound to imitate Jehovah and Christ Jesus, whose judgments are true and righteous.—John 5:30; 8:16; Revelation 19:1, 2.

* For the position of elders from among the other sheep with regard to Christ's right hand, see the book Revelation—Its Grand Climax At Hand!, published by the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., page 136, footnote.

Judges Who 'Conduct Themselves With Fear'

6 If Christ himself judges in the fear of Jehovah and with the help of His spirit, how much more should imperfect elders do so! When assigned to serve on a judicial committee, they need to 'conduct themselves with fear,' calling "upon the Father who judges impartially" to help them judge in righteousness. (1 Peter 1:17) They should remember that they are dealing with people's lives, their "souls," as those who "will render an account." (Hebrews 13:17) In view of this, surely they will also be accountable before Jehovah for any avoidable judicial mistakes they may make. In his commentary on Hebrews 13:17, J. H. A. Ebrard wrote: "It is the duty of the shepherd to watch over the souls committed to his care, and . . . he must render an account of them all, of those also who have been lost through his fault. This is a solemn word. Let every minister of the word consider, that he has voluntarily undertaken this awfully [formidably] responsible office."—Compare John 17:12; James 3:1.

7 Elders acting in a judicial capacity should remember that the real Judges of each case are Jehovah and Christ Jesus. Recall what the judges in Israel were told: "It is not for man that you judge but it is for Jehovah; and he is with you in the matter of judgment. And now let the dread of Jehovah come to be upon you. . . . This is how you should do that you may not incur guilt." (2 Chronicles 19:6-10) With reverential fear, the elders judging a case should do their utmost to be sure that Jehovah is really 'with them in the matter of judgment.' Their decision should accurately reflect the way Jehovah and Christ consider the matter. What they symbolically 'bind' (find guilty) or 'loose' (find innocent) on earth should be what has already been bound or loosed in heaven—as revealed by what is written in the inspired Word of God. If they pray to Jehovah in Jesus' name, Jesus will be "in their midst" to help them. (Matthew 18:18-20, footnote; The Watchtower, February 15, 1988, page 9) The atmosphere at a judicial hearing should show that Christ is truly in their midst.

Full-Time Shepherds

[8] Elders do not judge full-time. They are full-time shepherds. They are healers, not punishers. (James 5:13-16) The basic idea behind the Greek word for overseer (e·pi'sko·pos) is that of protective care. The Theological Dictionary of the New Testament states:

8. What is the elders' main responsibility toward the flock, as exemplified by Jehovah and Jesus Christ? (Isaiah 40:10, 11; John 10:11, 27-29)

Where advance shepherding is done, many judicial cases may be avoided

"Supplementing shepherd [at 1 Peter 2:25], the term [e·pi'sko·pos] suggests the pastoral work of watching over or guarding." Yes, their primary responsibility is watching over the sheep and guarding them, keeping them inside the flock.

[9] Speaking to the elders of the Ephesus congregation, the apostle Paul put the emphasis where it belongs: "Pay attention to yourselves and to all the flock, among which the holy spirit has appointed you overseers, to shepherd the congregation of God, which he purchased with the blood of his own Son." (Acts 20:28) Paul highlights shepherding, not punishing. Some elders might do well to ponder over the following question: 'Could we save the considerable amount of time needed to investigate and handle judicial cases if we devoted more time and effort to shepherding?'

[10] True, Paul warned against "oppressive wolves." But did he not reproach these for 'not treating the flock with tenderness'? (Acts 20:29) And while he implied that the faithful overseers should expel these "wolves," do his words not show that the elders should treat the other members of the flock "with tenderness"? When a sheep becomes spiritually weak and falls by the wayside, what does he or she need—beating or healing, punishing or shepherding? (James 5:14, 15) Therefore, elders should regularly schedule time for the shepherding work. This may bring the happy result of less time spent in time-consuming judicial cases involving Christians who have been overtaken by sin. Certainly, the elders' first concern should be to provide a source of relief and refreshment, thus promoting peace, tranquillity, and security among Jehovah's people.—Isaiah 32:1, 2.

Serving as Beneficent Shepherds and Judges

[11] More intensive shepherding before a Christian takes a false step might well reduce the number of judicial cases among Jehovah's people. (Compare Galatians 6:1.) Nevertheless, because of human sin and imperfection, Christian overseers may from time to time have to deal with cases of wrongdoing. What principles should guide them? These have not changed since the time of Moses or that of the early Christians. Moses' words addressed to the judges in Israel are still valid: "When having a hearing between your brothers, you must judge with righteousness . . . You must not be partial in judgment." (Deuteronomy 1: 16, 17) Impartiality is a characteristic of "the wisdom from above," the wisdom that is so vital for elders serving on judicial committees. (James 3:17; Proverbs 24:23) Such wisdom will help them to discern the difference between weakness and wickedness.

[12] Elders "must judge with righteousness," in accordance with Jehovah's standards of right and wrong. (Psalm 19:9) Yet, while endeavoring to be righteous men, they should also try to be good men, in the sense of the distinction Paul makes at Romans 5: 7, 8. Commenting on these verses in its article on "Righteousness," the work Insight on the Scriptures states: "The use of the Greek term shows that the person noteworthy for, or distinguished by, goodness is one who is benevolent (disposed to do good or bring benefit to others) and beneficent (actively expressing such goodness). He is not merely concerned with doing what justice requires but goes beyond this, being motivated by wholesome consideration for others and the desire to benefit and help them." (Volume 2, page 809) Elders who are not only righteous but also good will treat wrongdoers with kind consideration. (Romans 2:4) They should want to show mercy and compassion. They should do what they can to help the wrongdoer to see the need to repent, even though he may at first seem not to respond to their efforts.

Proper Attitude at Hearings

[13] When a situation requires a judicial hearing, overseers should not forget that they are still shepherds, dealing with Jehovah's sheep, under "the fine shepherd." (John 10:11) The counsel Paul gave for regular help given to sheep who are in difficulty applies with equal force at judicial hearings. He wrote: "Brothers, even though a man takes some false step before he is aware of it, you who have spiritual qualifications try to readjust such a man in a spirit of mildness, as you each keep an eye on yourself, for fear you also may be tempted. Go on carrying the burdens of one another, and thus fulfill the law of the Christ."—Galatians 6:1, 2.*

[14] Rather than considering themselves to be superior judges meeting to administer punishment, elders serving on a judicial committee should view the hearing as

11. Why do elders who serve on judicial committees need impartiality and "the wisdom from above"?
12. In what sense do judges need to be not only righteous men but good men?

13. (a) When an elder acts as a judge, what does he not cease to be? (b) What counsel by Paul applies also at judicial hearings?
14. How should overseers view judicial hearings, and what should be their attitude toward a wrongdoer?

Even during a judicial hearing, elders should try to readjust a wrongdoer in a spirit of mildness another aspect of their shepherding work. One of Jehovah's sheep is in trouble. What can they do to save him or her? Is it too late to help this sheep that has strayed from the flock? We would hope not. Elders should keep a positive view toward showing mercy where this would be proper. It is not that they should lower Jehovah's standards if a serious sin has been committed. But their being conscious of any mitigating circumstances will help them to extend mercy where possible. (Psalm 103:8-10; 130:3) Sad to say, some wrongdoers are so stubborn in their attitude that the elders are obliged to show firmness, though never harshness.—1 Corinthians 5:13.

The Purpose of Judicial Hearings

[15] When a serious problem arises between individuals, wise elders will first determine whether those involved have tried to settle the matter privately, in the spirit of Matthew 5:23, 24 or Matthew 18:15. If this has failed, perhaps counsel by one or two elders will suffice. Judicial action is necessary only if a gross sin has been committed that could lead to disfellowshipping. (Matthew 18:17; 1 Corinthians 5:11) There must be a sound Scriptural basis for forming a judicial committee. (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1989, page 18.) When one is formed, the best qualified elders should be selected for the particular case.

[16] What do elders try to achieve by means of judicial hearings? First, it is impossible to judge with righteousness unless the truth is known. As in Israel, serious matters must be 'searched thoroughly.' (Deuteronomy 13:14; 17:4) So one aim of a hearing is to find out the facts of the case. But this can and should be done with love. (1 Corinthians 13:4, 6, 7) Once the facts are known, the elders will do whatever is necessary to protect the congregation and maintain within it Jehovah's high standards and the free flow of his spirit. (1 Corinthians 5:7, 8) However, one of the purposes of a hearing is to save, if at all possible, an endangered sinner.—Compare Luke 15:8-10.

[17] An accused person should never be treated otherwise than as a sheep of God. He or she should be treated with tenderness. If a sin (or sins) has been committed, the purpose of the righteous judges will be to help the sinner to readjust, to understand the error of his way, to repent, and thus to be snatched from "the snare of the Devil." It will require "art of teaching," "instructing with mildness." (2 Timothy 2:24-26; 4:2) What if the sinner then recognizes that he has sinned, is truly stabbed to the heart, and asks Jehovah for forgiveness? (Compare Acts 2:37.) If the committee is convinced that he sincerely wants help, generally there would be no need to disfellowship him.—See The Watchtower, January 1, 1983, page 31, paragraph 1.

[18] On the other hand, when members of a judicial committee are confronted with a clear case of remorseless apostasy, willful rebellion against Jehovah's laws, or sheer wickedness, their duty is to protect the other members of the congregation by disfellowshipping the unrepentant offender. The judicial committee is not obliged to meet repeatedly with the wrongdoer or put words in his mouth, trying to force him to repent, if it is obvious he lacks godly sorrow.* In recent years disfellowshippings worldwide have been approximately 1 percent of publishers. That means that out of about a hundred sheep that remain in the fold, one is lost—at least temporarily. Considering the time and effort it takes to bring a person into the fold, is it not heartrending to know that tens of thousands are 'handed back to Satan' every year?—1 Corinthians 5:5.

[19] Elders starting out on a judicial case should remember that most cases of sin in the congregation involve weakness, not wickedness. They should never forget Jesus' illustration of the lost sheep, which he concluded with the words: "I tell you that thus there will be more joy in heaven over one sinner that repents than over ninety-nine righteous ones who have no need of repentance." (Luke 15:7) Truly, "Jehovah . . . does not desire any to be destroyed but desires all to attain to repentance." (2 Peter 3:9) With Jehovah's help, may judicial committees throughout the world do their utmost to cause joy in heaven by helping wrongdoers see the need to repent and start their feet back on the narrow road that leads to everlasting life.—Matthew 7:13, 14.

providing appropriate counsel concerning such disorderly conduct. Elders will use reasonableness and discernment in determining whether a particular situation is sufficiently serious and disturbing to require a warning talk. This talk will not name the disorderly one. However, those who are aware of the situation described in the talk will take heed and limit their social contacts with such individuals.

The loving concern and firm stand of faithful members of the congregation could indeed move the disorderly one to shame and repentance. When it is clearly evident that the individual has abandoned his disorderly course, it would no longer be necessary to treat him as a marked individual.

HANDLING CASES OF SERIOUS WRONGDOING

After taking the steps outlined at Matthew 18:15, 16, some individual brothers or sisters may report to the elders cases of unresolved serious wrongdoing. (Matt. 18:17) On the other hand, individuals may also approach the elders either to confess their own sin or to report what they know regarding the wrongdoing of others. (Lev. 5:1; Jas. 5:16) Regardless of the manner in which the elders first hear reports of serious wrongdoing on the part of a baptized member of the congregation, an initial investigation will be made by two elders. If it is established that there is substance to the report and that evidence is available showing that a serious sin actually has been committed, the body of elders will assign a judicial committee of at least three elders to handle the matter. Regarding serious wrongdoing by one who is unbaptized, see pages 157-8.

While exercising watchful care of the flock, seeking to protect it from any elements that would be spiritually damaging, the elders will also endeavor to use God's Word skillfully to reprove any who have erred and will try to restore them. (Jude 21-23) This is in harmony with instructions given to Timothy by the apostle Paul, who wrote: "I solemnly charge you before God and Christ Jesus, who is destined to judge the living and the dead, . . . reprove, reprimand, exhort, with all long-suffering and art of teaching." (2 Tim. 4:1, 2) Doing so may take much time and effort, but this is part of the hard work of the elders. The congregation appreciates their endeavors and gives them double honor.—1 Tim. 5:17.

In every situation where guilt is established, the primary endeavor of the overseers is to restore the wrongdoer if he is genuinely repentant as indicated, for example, by his producing "works that befit repentance." (Acts 26:20) If he is repentant and they are able to help him, their administering reproof either in private or before onlookers with knowledge of the case serves to discipline him and instill a wholesome fear in any such onlookers. (2 Sam. 12: 13; 1 Tim. 5:20) In all cases of judicial reproof, restrictions are imposed. Thus the wrongdoer may be helped to 'make straight paths for his feet' thereafter. (Heb. 12:13) In due course these restrictions are removed as the individual's spiritual recovery becomes manifest.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REPROOF

If a judicial committee determines that an individual is repentant but that the matter is likely to become known in the congregation or in the community or if for other reasons the elders believe that the congregation needs to be advised, a simple announcement will be made during the Service Meeting. It should read: "[Name of person] has been re-

Case No.: 26-22191

RULING ON SUBMITTED MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Plaintiffs' Motion To Compel Production Of Documents came on for hearing on August 31, 2005. The court, having read and considered the papers and heard oral argument, took the matter under submission and now rules as follows:

Plaintiff's motion to compel production of documents is GRANTED in part and continued in part to allow for the production of an attorney-client privilege log.

Although defendants raised a number of objections when responding to plaintiffs' request for production of documents, they address only two of those objections in opposing plaintiffs' motion to compel: the penitential communication privilege and the attorney-client privilege, which the court will discuss in more detail below. As to the other objections not discussed by defendants, the court finds the objections are not well taken. The requested discovery requests are not overbroad, are relevant, and are not barred by Serbian East Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696.

1. Penitential Privilege

Evidence Code section 1032 provides:

> As used in this article, "penitential communication" means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret.

Defendants object to the production of a number of documents requested by plaintiffs on the ground that they are protected by the penitential communication privilege contained in Evidence Code section 1032. This court finds that the privilege does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee. The evidence presented by both sides establishes that communications with the Judicial Committee do not fall within the scope of the privilege. First, it is clear that the Judicial Committee's purpose is to investigate sins for which disfellowship is a potential penalty. This is established not only by the deposition excerpts provided by plaintiffs, but by the Watchtower publication provided by defendants in connection with the objections to plaintiffs' evidence ("Judicial action is necessary only if a gross sin has been committed that could lead to disfellowshipping" p. 18.) Second, the privilege does not apply because the Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. In fact, the evidence establishes that the Judicial Committee was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters.

Because the penitential communication privilege does not apply, within 20 days defendants shall produce all documents for which it previously asserted this privilege.

2. Attorney-client privilege

Defendants have not produced a privilege log for those few documents they apparently claim are protected by the attorney client privilege. Neither the plaintiffs nor the court can adequately address the objection without a privilege log. Defendants shall serve a privilege log on plaintiffs within 10 days. Plaintiffs may thereafter file and a supplemental brief addressing the log within 10 days. The court will then issue a written ruling on the matter.

I. STATEMENT OF FACTS

Plaintiffs in the two Track I cases of Tim W. and Wimberley[1] have noticed the deposition of J.R. Brown, Director of the Office of Public Information (hereafter "OPI") for defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (hereafter "Watchtower NY"). This deposition was noticed based on a May 9, 2002 letter signed by J.R. Brown as Director of [1] A number of cases were earlier ordered coordinated under Judicial Council rules, and the Napa County Superior Court is the court designated to oversee the coordinated cases. Thus, although the notice of deposition at issue is for the Track I cases only, this motion is filed on the caption for the Charissa W. case, which has been designated as the so-called "lead" case.

Watchtower NY's OPI, in response to a facsimile letter received from Betsan Powys of BBC (British Broadcasting Corporation) Panorama.

The May 9, 2002 letter signed by Mr. Brown that was sent to Betsan Powys of BBC Panorama addressed in general terms the way in which Jehovah's Witnesses handle child abuse matters. It was written for the purpose of responding to a television program the BBC was planning to air regarding that issue. While J.R. Brown signed the May 9, 2002 letter as the Director of the OPI for Watchtower NY,[2] his declaration filed herewith reveals that he does not have any unique, special, or superior personal knowledge regarding the topics and categories of information in the letter about which plaintiffs want to inquire. In addition, his declaration reveals that he does not have any personal knowledge regarding any of these coordinated cases.

At the same time that plaintiffs served the notice of deposition for J.R. Brown, plaintiffs also served a notice of deposition for the person most knowledgeable, or "PMK," regarding certain topics or categories of information addressed in the May 9, 2002 letter signed by J.R. Brown. With regard to that PMK deposition notice, Watchtower NY has designated Gary Breaux as the person most knowledgeable. Gary Breaux has knowledge of each of the topics or categories identified in the notice of PMK deposition regarding the May 9, 2002 letter and can competently and knowingly testify regarding each such topic. See declaration of Robert J. Schnack filed herewith.

Defense counsel for Watchtower NY has met and conferred with one of plaintiffs' attorneys prior to filing this motion for protective order, as required by California's Code of Civil Procedure. Defense counsel advised plaintiffs' counsel that J.R. Brown has no personal knowledge regarding these coordinated cases and that he has no unique or superior personal knowledge regarding the contents of the May 9, 2002 letter. In that same conversation, defense counsel advised plaintiffs' counsel that Gary Breaux has been designated by Watchtower NY as the person most knowledgeable regarding the topics identified about the May 9, 2002 letter in

[2] The May 9, 2002 letter was written on letterhead of Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ("Watch Tower PA") because the letter was sent to the BBC in England. All letters from the OPI sent to locations outside of the United States are placed on Watch Tower PA letterhead.

the PMK deposition notice and that Watch Tower PA would produce Mr. Breaux for deposition on a mutually agreeable date in October or November 2005. Despite this information, plaintiffs have declined to withdraw the deposition notice for J.R. Brown's deposition.

It is important to note that defendant Watchtower NY is not attempting here to quash deposition testimony regarding the topics identified in the PMK deposition notice concerning the May 9, 2002 letter. Rather, defendant is seeking a protective order only regarding the deposition notice for J.R. Brown. While J.R. Brown signed the letter in his capacity as the Director of the OPI, he does not have any unique or superior personal knowledge of the subject matter contained therein. In addition, he does not have personal knowledge of any of these coordinated cases.

As noted, Watchtower NY is prepared to and will produce Gary Breaux for examination by deposition because he has been designated by Watchtower NY as the person most knowledgeable regarding the topics identified by plaintiffs in the May 9, 2002 letter. However, Watchtower NY seeks to protect having to produce J.R. Brown for a deposition regarding a matter of which he does not have unique or superior personal knowledge and regarding lawsuits of which he has no knowledge. To allow such a deposition to proceed would cause unwarranted annoyance, oppression, and undue burden or expense. See CCP §2023.010.

II. POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

Overview of discovery rules. California Code of Civil Procedure section 2017.010 sets forth the general discovery provisions in California. In general, "any party may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action, if the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." CCP §2017.010. "The court shall limit the scope of discovery if it determines that the burden, expense, or intrusiveness of the discovery clearly outweighs the likelihood that the information sought will lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." CCP §2017.020.

A court shall restrict the use and frequency of a discovery method if it determines that the "discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative, or is obtainable from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive." CCP §2019.030(a)(1). "Misuses of the discovery process include, but are not limited to ... employing a discovery method in a manner or to an extent that causes unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense." CCP §2023.010(c).

California Code of Civil Procedure section 2025.010, et seq., governs the taking of oral depositions. Generally speaking, parties and non-parties can be deposed in California. However, "[b]efore, during or after a deposition, any party, any deponent, or any other affected natural person or organization may promptly move for a protective order ...." CCP §2025.420(a). "The court, for good cause shown, may make any order that justice requires to protect any party, deponent, or other natural person or organization from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense ...." CCP §2025.420(b). In this case, defendants are seeking a protective order regarding the noticed deposition of J.R. Brown, Director of the OPI for Watchtower NY.

Discussion. It has previously been held in the Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. case that before a high level executive can be deposed, less intrusive discovery methods must be employed. "We conclude it amounts to an abuse of discretion to withhold a protective order when a plaintiff seeks to depose a corporate president, or corporate officer at the apex of the corporate hierarchy, absent a reasonable indication of the officer's personal knowledge of the case and absent exhaustion of less intrusive discovery methods." Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal.App.4th 1282, 1287, 13 Cal.Rptr.2d 363, 365. "At the outset it would seem sensible to prevent a plaintiff from leap-frogging to the apex of the corporate hierarchy in the first instance, without the intermediate steps of seeking discovery from lower level employees more involved in everyday corporate operations. The head of a large national corporation will generally not have knowledge of a specific incident or case handled several levels down the corporate pyramid." Id.

Here, a letter was drafted in response to an inquiry from the British Broadcasting Corporation, or BBC, regarding a scheduled BBC television segment. J.R. Brown signed the letter as the Director of the OPI. That May 9, 2002 letter did not relate to these coordinated cases -- indeed, none of these coordinated cases had even then been filed. Plaintiffs now want to depose J.R. Brown regarding certain subject matter contained in the letter despite having been advised that, although Mr. Brown signed the letter, he does not have any unique or superior personal knowledge about the topics in the letter or any personal knowledge concerning these coordinated cases.

At the same time plaintiffs served the J.R. Brown deposition notice, they also served a PMK deposition notice for the person most knowledgeable regarding certain topics or categories of information, including topics concerning the letter signed by J.R. Brown. The validity of the PMK deposition notice is not being challenged here, and Watchtower NY has already agreed to produce Gary Breaux for deposition as the designated PMK. Gary Breaux is the person most knowledgeable about the topics regarding the May 9, 2002 letter described in plaintiffs' PMK deposition notice, and he will testify in the PMK deposition.

"'[A]pex' depositions such as the one in this case, when conducted before less intrusive discovery methods are exhausted, raise a tremendous potential for discovery abuse and harassment." Liberty Mutual, 10 Cal.App.4th at 1287 (emphasis added). Because the issue was a case of first impression and because the California Discovery Act of 1986 had brought California into close alignment with the federal rules governing discovery, the Liberty Mutual court first analyzed federal cases that dealt with noticed depositions of high-level executives. After review and analysis of several cases, the Liberty Mutual court concluded:

> "Consistent with these federal decisions, we hold that when a plaintiff seeks to depose a corporate president or other official at the highest level of corporate management, and that official moves for a protective order to prohibit the deposition, the trial court should first determine whether the plaintiff has shown good cause that the official has unique or superior personal knowledge of discoverable information. If not, as will presumably often be the case in the instance of a large national or international corporation, the trial court should issue the protective order and first require the plaintiff to obtain the necessary discovery through less intrusive methods. These would include interrogatories directed to the high-level official to explore the state of his or her knowledge or involvement in plaintiff's case; the deposition of lower level employees with appropriate knowledge and involvement in the subject matter of the litigation; and the organizational deposition of the > corporation itself, which will require the corporation to produce for deposition the most qualified officer or employee to testify on its behalf as to the specified matters to be raised at the deposition. (§ 2025, subd. (d)(6).) Should these avenues be exhausted, and the plaintiff make a colorable showing of good cause that the high-level official possesses necessary information to the case, the trial court may then lift the protective order and allow the deposition to proceed."

Id. at 1289 (emphasis added).

The Liberty Mutual case involved taking the deposition of the president of an insurance company. The president of the company had been copied on two letters he claimed not to have seen. Other than that, there was no showing the president had any involvement in the lawsuit against the company. As discussed in the above excerpt, the Liberty Mutual court permitted entry of a protective order.

In this case, J.R. Brown is a high-ranking official in the Office of Public Information. He is the Director of the Office of Public Information and oversees staff members in that office. As the person in charge of the OPI, he signed a letter regarding general issues involving sex abuse that are not distinctly related to these pending coordinated cases. He signed the letter in his capacity as the Director of the OPI, but he has no unique or superior personal knowledge regarding the matters addressed therein. In addition, he does not have personal knowledge regarding these coordinated actions filed against the Church Defendants.

Watchtower NY has already designated the person most knowledgeable about the topics identified in the notice of PMK deposition regarding the May 9, 2002 letter, and defense counsel has already advised plaintiffs' counsel that Gary Breaux will be produced on an agreed date for that PMK deposition.

Thus, under the reasoning and holding of Liberty Mutual and the underlying federal cases, this motion for protective order should be granted. Then, if plaintiffs do not obtain the information they apparently are seeking in Mr. Breaux's deposition, plaintiffs can still serve special interrogatories regarding the extent of J.R. Brown's knowledge. (In addition, J.R. Brown has filed a declaration in conjunction with this motion stating he does not have such unique or superior personal knowledge.) Therefore, if, after the deposition of designated PMK

Gary Breaux is completed, and if, after special interrogatories inquiring about the knowledge of J.R. Brown are completed, plaintiffs can still present a colorable basis for taking Mr. Brown's deposition, the court could thereafter consider lifting the protective order.

The federal cases relied on by the Liberty Mutual court include several cases in which plaintiffs tried first to take the depositions of high ranking officials of large companies who did not have either unique or superior personal knowledge of relevant facts or any knowledge of the of the case(s) at issue. For example, "[i]n Salter v. Upjohn Co. (5th Cir. 1979) 593 F.2d 649, the plaintiff's decedent was fatally injured from ingestion of a prescription drug manufactured by Upjohn. Plaintiff attempted to depose Upjohn's president, but the trial court granted a protective order. The Fifth Circuit affirmed, on the basis of Upjohn's 'reasonable assertion[] that [the president] ... did not have any direct knowledge of the facts.' (Id. at p. 651.)" Liberty Mutual at 1288.

The Liberty Mutual court also relied on Baine v. General Motors Corp, where the plaintiff tried to depose the vice-president of General Motors in relation to a fatal injury sustained by plaintiff's decedent. The court stated:

> "[I]n Baine v. General Motors Corp. (M.D.Ala. 1991) 141 F.R.D. 332, the plaintiff attempted to depose a vice-president of General Motors. Plaintiff's decedent was fatally injured by a faulty seat restraint system, and the vice-president had written a memorandum describing his observations of the system's performance in prototype. The federal district court issued a protective order against the deposition, finding that the deposition would be unduly burdensome to a high-level official in the absence of any showing plaintiff could not obtain the necessary information from other, less intrusive avenues of discovery. The trial court required plaintiff to first depose lower level engineering analysts and others with knowledge of the restraint system, and to serve interrogatories on the vice- president to explore whether he had superior knowledge of the system."

Liberty Mutual at 1289.

Again, given J.R. Brown's lack of unique or superior personal knowledge regarding the topics in the May 9, 2002 letter and his lack of personal knowledge regarding these coordinated cases, Watchtower NY respectfully requests that a protective order be issued regarding the notice of deposition for J.R. Brown, at least until after Gary Breaux's PMK deposition is taken and some other less obtrusive discovery methods are employed.

Finally, Code of Civil Procedure section 2017.010 provides that discovery is permissible if it is relevant to the subject matter of the litigation, is admissible into evidence, or is reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. See CCP §2017.010. However, J.R. Brown does not have any personal knowledge regarding the facts underlying these California coordinated cases. Therefore, his deposition testimony in that regard would not be even remotely, much less reasonably, calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

If plaintiff were allowed to proceed with Mr. Brown's deposition, it would promote abuse of the discovery process and harassment of the Church Defendants, particularly given that a PMK has been identified and will be made available for deposition with regard to the identified topics on which plaintiff is seeking to obtain discovery.

III. CONCLUSION

For each of the foregoing reasons, Watchtower NY seeks a protective order from this court, ordering that J.R. Brown not be required to sit for deposition. Watchtower NY will produce Gary Breaux for a PMK deposition and, thereafter, plaintiffs can serve written interrogatories to establish the extent of J.R. Brown's personal knowledge on the PMK topics concerning the May 9, 2002 letter. However, to start with the deposition of J.R. Brown, who has provided a sworn declaration stating that he does not have any unique, special, or superior knowledge of the identified topics in the May 9, 2002 letter and also has no knowledge of these coordinated lawsuits, is burdensome, unreasonable, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence in these coordinated cases.

COURT EXECUTIVE OFFICER

I, Robert J. Schnack, declare as follows:

1. I am an attorney licensed to practice law in California and Oregon, a shareholder in the law firm of Bullivant Houser Bailey PC, and one of the Church Defendants' attorneys of record in these coordinated actions. I am legally competent in all respects and make the following statements from personal knowledge, or on information and belief where so stated.

2. On September 15, 2005 I received plaintiffs' notice of deposition for the deposition of J.R. Brown. I am advised that Mr. Brown is the Director of the Office of Public Information for Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY").

Plaintiffs' counsel have since issued a first amended deposition notice for a later date for the noticed deposition of J.R. Brown. A true and correct copy of the first amended deposition notice for J.R. Brown is attached hereto as Exhibit A.

3. On September 15, 2005, I also received a notice of deposition for the person most knowledgeable, or "PMK," regarding certain topics or categories of subjects contained in a May 9, 2002 letter addressed to Betsan Powys of BBC Panorama. The letter reveals that J.R. Brown signed the letter in his capacity as Director of the Office of Public Information ("OPI"). Plaintiffs' counsel have since issued a first amended PMK deposition notice for a later date for this noticed deposition. A true and correct copy of that first amended PMK deposition notice, with the May 9, 2002 letter attached as Exhibit 1 to the PMK deposition notice, is attached hereto as Exhibit B.

4. On September 20, 2005, I spoke by telephone with one of plaintiffs' attorneys, Hartley Hampton, regarding the above-referenced deposition notices. I advised him that while J.R. Brown had signed the May 9, 2002 letter as the Director of the OPI, I had been advised that Mr. Brown does not have any unique or superior personal knowledge regarding the contents of the letter. In addition, I told plaintiffs' attorney that I had been advised that Mr. Brown does not have any personal knowledge regarding the California coordinated cases. I also told plaintiffs' attorney that Watchtower NY had designated Gary Breaux as the person most knowledgeable about the topics identified in the original PMK deposition notice regarding the May 9, 2002 letter and that Gary Breaux would sit for the PMK deposition on a mutually agreeable date in October or November 2005. Given that Mr. Brown has no unique or superior personal knowledge regarding the May 9, 2002 letter and signed only as the Director of the OPI, I asked that plaintiffs withdraw the deposition notice regarding J.R. Brown. Plaintiffs have declined to withdraw the notice for J.R. Brown's deposition. Therefore, Watchtower NY had no option but to file the instant motion for protective order.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct, except where stated on information and belief, in which case I am informed and believe the information to be true and correct.

Executed this 29th day of September, 2005 at Gold River, California.

Betsan Powys

Dear Ms. Powys:

This is in response to your fax of April 30, 2002, in which you advise us that BBC-TV is preparing a program on the way Jehovah's Witnesses handle child abuse matters. You have kindly offered us the opportunity to be interviewed on-camera; however, we must respectfully decline.

We are not opposed to giving interviews in general; however, it is likely that among those whose views will be expressed on your broadcast will be some persons who are Jehovah's Witnesses. In our view, it would be neither proper nor Scriptural for us to place ourselves in what might turn out to be an adversarial position with our Christian brothers and sisters in a public setting. (1 Corinthians 6:1-8; Ephesians 4:2) We trust that you will understand our position in this regard.

Although unable to participate in an interview, we are certainly willing to comment on the questions that you raised in your fax. We note that these center almost exclusively on the nature of the records that we keep on alleged child abusers. You tell us that it is vital that we answer your questions on our record-keeping procedures because of the "very serious nature of the allegations made to the programme," although you do not specify what the allegations are. First of all, however, please allow us to comment on the way that child abuse accusations are handled by Jehovah's Witnesses. We realize that you did not ask us to touch on this aspect; nevertheless, it is essential that we comment on it to provide an appropriate, frank answer.

In the United States, when any one of Jehovah's Witnesses is accused of an act of child abuse, the local elders are expected to investigate. The procedure is as follows. Two elders meet separately with the accused and the accuser to see what each says on the matter. If the accused denies the charge, the two elders may arrange for him to have the opportunity to confront the accuser in their presence. If during that meeting the accused still denies the charges and there are no others who can substantiate them, the elders cannot take action within the congregation at that time. Why not? As a Bible-based organization, we must adhere to what the Scriptures say, namely, "No single witness should rise up against a man respecting any error or any sin . . . at the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deuteronomy 19:15) Jesus reaffirmed this principle as recorded at Matthew 18:15-17.

When the branch office receives an allegation of child abuse, a check of the records might reveal that similar, uncorroborated allegations were lodged against the same person in the past, perhaps when he was living in another part of the country. When a second credible allegation by a different person is lodged against the same individual, the elders are authorized by the Scriptures to handle the case.

However, even if the elders cannot take congregational action, they are expected to report the allegation to the branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses in their country, if local privacy laws permit. Again, privacy laws permitting, a record is made at the branch office that the individual has been accused of child abuse. Each branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses keeps its own records, if that is allowed by local jurisdiction. In the United States we do not have records of child abusers who live in other lands. If privacy laws do not allow such records to be kept, the elders do whatever is permitted within the law to see to it that children are protected. The aim is to balance the right to privacy of the individual with the overriding need to protect the safety of children.—1 Timothy 5:19.

In addition to making a report to the branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses, the elders may be required by law to report even uncorroborated or unsubstantiated allegations to the authorities. If so, we expect the elders to comply. Additionally, the victim may wish to report the matter to the authorities, and it is his or her absolute right to do so. In the United States, reporting requirements vary from state to state. It can be quite a challenge to keep abreast of the reporting requirements, but our Legal Department makes every effort to do so.

If, when confronted, the accused confesses that he is guilty of child abuse, the elders take appropriate action. If he is not repentant, he will not be permitted to remain a member of the congregation. Even if he is repentant--is cut to the heart, and is thus resolutely determined to avoid such conduct in the future--what was stated in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower applies. The article said: "For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer [full-time missionary of Jehovah's Witnesses] or serve in any other special, full-time service." (1 Timothy 3:2, 7-10) We take such action because we are concerned with maintaining Bible standards and protecting our children. Everyone in our organization is expected to meet the same requirements, namely, to be clean physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually.—1 Corinthians 7:1; Ephesians 4:17-19; 1 Thessalonians 2:4.

In a few instances, individuals guilty of an act of child abuse have been appointed to positions within the congregation if their conduct has been otherwise exemplary for decades. All of the circumstances would need to be considered carefully. Suppose, for example, that a long time ago a 16-year-old boy had sexual relations with a consenting 15-year-old girl. Depending upon the U.S. jurisdictions where he lived when this happened, elders are required to report this as an incident of child abuse. Let us say that twenty years have passed. The child abuse reporting law may have changed; he may even have married the girl! Both have been living exemplary lives and they are respected. In such a rare case, the man could possibly be appointed to a responsible position within the congregation.

Our procedures have been refined over time. Our policy over the past several years has been that at least twenty years must have passed before an individual who committed an act of child abuse could even be considered for appointment to a responsible position in the congregation, if ever. The Bible teaches that individuals can repent of their sins and "turn to God by doing works that befit repentance," and we accept what the Bible says. (Acts 26:20) Still, the safety of our children is of the utmost importance, so we realize that the local elders must be very careful when recommending individuals who may have been guilty of an act of child abuse in the distant past.

You have been told that here in the United States we have compiled a list of 23,720 names of child abusers. That is false. First of all, the total number of names in our records is considerably lower than that. In addition, it is not meaningful to focus on the number of names we have in our records. This is because our figures include the names of many persons who have only been accused of child abuse whereas the charges have not been substantiated. We keep these records to document our compliance with what the law requires in many U.S. jurisdictions. Also included on our list are allegations made on the basis of so-called "repressed memories," the validity of which many authorities challenge. Then there are the names of persons who have been accused of abusing children before becoming Jehovah's Witnesses as well as individuals who have never been baptized Witnesses but whose names we are obliged to keep because of their association with the Witnesses. (An example of this would be a non-Witness father or step-father who is accused by his Witness children or step-children of abusing them.) To be safe, we also list the names of persons who may or may not be considered as child abusers, depending upon the jurisdiction where they live (for example, that 16-year-old boy who had sexual relations with the consenting 15-year-old girl). The name of an individual who was guilty of voyeurism or involved with child pornography, as further examples, would also be included on the list. And, to be sure, the list also includes names of persons who are actually guilty of child abuse. We do not apologize for keeping such records here in the United States. Apart from being legally needed, they have been very helpful to us in our efforts to protect the flock from harm. (Isaiah 32:2) Christian parents can rightly feel secure in the knowledge that such efforts are made to screen out possible child abusers from appointment to responsible positions within the congregation.

Ms. Powys, please do not conclude that we believe that our system is perfect. No human organization is perfect. But we do believe that we have a strong, Bible-based policy on child abuse. Anyone in a responsible position who is guilty of child abuse would be removed from his responsibilities without hesitation. We certainly would not knowingly transfer him to serve elsewhere.

Child abuse is abhorrent to us. Even one abused child is one too many. At least since 1981, our journals, The Watchtower and Awake!, have featured articles to educate both Witnesses and the public regarding the importance and need to protect children from child abuse. Among others, there was the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked!" published in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower; "Help For the Victims of Incest" in the October 1, 1983, Watchtower; "Your Child Is in Danger!", "How Can We Protect Our Children?", and "Prevention in the Home," all in the October 8, 1993, Awake!, as well as "Child Molesting—Every Mother's Nightmare" in the January 22, 1985, Awake! Over the years, as we have noted areas where our policies could be strengthened, we have followed through. We are continuing to refine them.

We trust that you will find the information in this letter to be helpful. As you will note, we have responded to the broad issues you raise rather than providing specific answers to your detailed list of questions. We note that you sent a similar list of questions to our offices in London. We understand they are answering your questions in accordance with their procedures and adherence to British law. With every good wish, I am,

Very truly yours,

J. R. Brown

COURT EXECUTIVE OFFICER

I, J.R. Brown, declare as follows:

1. I am the Director of the Office of Public Information for Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. I am legally competent in all respects and make the following statements from personal knowledge, or on information and belief where so stated.

2. On information and belief, in or about April or May 2002, the Office of Public Information was made aware of a facsimile inquiry from Betsan Powys of the British Broadcasting Corporation ("BBC") regarding a television segment the BBC planned to air that would address Jehovah's Witnesses and how they handle child abuse matters. The letter did not inquire about the coordinated California lawsuits. A responsive letter, which did not contain information regarding the coordinated California lawsuits, was prepared to Betsan Powys of BBC Panorama sometime prior to May 9, 2002. As the Director of the Office of Public Information, I was asked to sign the letter, which I did. However, I have no unique or superior personal knowledge regarding the subject matter of how Jehovah's Witnesses generally handle child abuse matters addressed in the letter that I signed, nor did I perform any personal research in regard to Betsan Powys and the BBC's inquiry. My only function was to sign the letter, as the Director of the Office of Public Information.

3. I am now aware that there are coordinated lawsuits pending in California and that plaintiffs have issued a notice requesting my deposition. I have no personal knowledge regarding the coordinated California lawsuits or of the facts alleged in the complaint. I was not involved in the handling, supervision, or management of the coordinated California lawsuits, and have had no involvement whatsoever.

4. If called to testify in deposition, I would not be able to testify regarding any unique or superior personal knowledge related to the contents of the May 9, 2002 letter describing how Jehovah's Witnesses generally handle child abuse matters. Neither would I be able to testify regarding the coordinated California lawsuits, of which I have no personal knowledge.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of New York and California that the foregoing is true and correct, except where it states upon information and belief, where I am informed and believe the information is true and correct.

SUPERIOR COURT FOR THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W., et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, et al.

Defendants.

Case No.: 26-22191
JCCP No. 4374

RULING ON SUBMITTED MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS

Defendant Watch Tower Bible And Tract Society Of Pennsylvania's Motion To Quash Service of Summons came on for hearing on August 31, 2005. The court, having read and considered the papers and heard oral argument, took the matter under submission and now rules as follows:

Watch Tower Bible And Tract Society Of Pennsylvania (Watch Tower PA) moves to quash service of the summons and complaint upon it, asserting that California does not have personal jurisdiction over it. Personal jurisdiction over a defendant may be either general or specific. (Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal.4th 434, 445) A nonresident defendant will be subject to general jurisdiction where the defendant's contacts with the forum are substantial, continuous and systematic, so as to approximate a "physical presence" within the state. (Id. At 445-46.) Where general jurisdiction has been established, a plaintiff's cause of action need not be directly related to the defendant's contacts in the state, but may encompass any allegedly unlawful conduct within the state. (Ibid.) "Such a defendant's contacts with the forum are so wide-ranging that they take the place of physical presence in the forum as a basis for jurisdiction." (Id. at p. 446.) If, on the other hand, the nonresident defendant does not have substantial and systematic contacts with the forum state, the defendant may nevertheless be subject to specific jurisdiction if: (1) the defendant has purposefully availed itself of the forum's benefits with respect to the matter in controversy; (2) the controversy is related to or arises out of defendant's contacts with the forum; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction would not violate notions of fair play and substantial justice. (Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal.4th 262, 269; Vons, supra, 14 Cal.4th at pp. 446, 447.)

Plaintiffs do not put forth a vigorous argument for finding that Watch Tower PA should be subject to specific jurisdiction. Indeed, this court finds no basis for imposing jurisdiction in this manner. There is simply no evidence to support a finding that moving defendant purposefully availed itself of California's benefits with respect to the matters in controversy, nor that the subject matter of this action is related to or arises out of Watch Tower PA's contacts with California. Accordingly, if Watch Tower PA is to be held to answer in this action, it will be pursuant to this court's exercise of general jurisdiction over the defendant.

Watch Tower PA asserts that it does not have the substantial, continuous and systematic contacts with California that are required to assert general jurisdiction over it. In support of its motion, it has presented evidence showing that it has been incorporated in Pennsylvania since 1884, with its principal offices in New York. It has no office, mailing address, or telephone number in California, none of its employees, officers or directors reside in California, it has no office here, has not held meetings here, does not pay taxes here, and has never maintained a bank account here. Watch Tower PA further asserts that its activities relating to donations, its loans to California congregations, its fund for the procurement of insurance coverage for California congregations, and its ownership of real property in California do not approximate a physical presence in California, and do not, therefore, form a basis for exercising general personal jurisdiction over it. Plaintiffs assert that these activities are sufficiently substantial, continuous and systematic to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction. As explained more fully below, this court's review of the evidence and the applicable legal authority satisfies it that defendant's contacts with the state are sufficient to justify the assertion of general personal jurisdiction over it.

The materially undisputed evidence establishes that Watch Tower PA engages in the following activities within the State of California:[1]

Kingdom Hall Fund – This fund provides loans to congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in California for the construction and remodeling of Kingdom Halls. Since the mid-1980's the Fund has made a substantial number of loans, many of which remain outstanding. The Fund loans are secured through promissory notes or mortgages secured by California property. The Fund charges interest on each loan.[2]

Kingdom Hall Assistance Arrangement (KHAA) – KHAA is an insurance and risk management program administered by Watch Tower PA. KHAA collects funds from California congregations and purchases insurance policies to protect its congregations. Congregations are billed for their "contributions" to KHAA, and are instructed to submit claims to Watch Tower PA for loss coverage. Although Watch Tower PA characterizes "donations" to the program as voluntary, and asserts that coverage is not guaranteed in return, the documentation provided shows that all California congregations are covered by the program, and all are issued invoices and directed to make payments on those invoices.

Acquisition and sale of real property – Watch Tower PA solicits donations of all types, and receives significant donations from Jehovah's Witnesses in California. The average annual amount donated for the years 1972 to 1988 was significant. Among those donations are gifts of [1] On June 13, 2005 the parties entered into a Stipulated Protective Order and Nondisclosure Agreement, which provides that information designated as "Confidential" shall be protected from disclosure, and shall be filed with the court under seal. So as to preserve the confidentiality of this information, the court's discussion of this evidence is intentionally vague. The parties are advised that the court's decision does rest, in part, upon the specific information submitted as "confidential." Subsequent footnotes will indicate the nature of the information relied on but not specifically addressed.

[2] The court has omitted reference to the specific number of loans made and the number that remain outstanding, as well as the specific interest rate charged. These factors have contributed to the court's decision.

real property. Title to some of these properties has remained in Watch Tower PA's name, other properties have been sold, with the proceeds deposited in Watch Tower PA's general fund.[3]

Taken individually, each of these activities are sufficient to assert personal jurisdiction over Watch Tower PA. For example, its 30 year history of acquisition and sale of real property in California is a significant factor to support a finding of continuous, substantial and systematic contacts with California. As contrasted with Thompson v. Anderson (2003) 113 Cal.App.3d 258 upon which defendant relies, the facts here are not limited to ownership of a single interest in a vacation time share, which the court in Thompson found to be an inadequate basis for establishing general jurisdiction ("Ownership of property in California 'alone would not support the State's jurisdiction.'" Id. at p. 271.) Rather, the evidence shows that defendant has acquired, sold and retained interest in numerous properties over the past 3 decades.

Similarly, the loans Watch Tower PA makes to its congregations through the Kingdom Hall Fund, from which it derives significant benefit, and the risk management program it administers to its congregations in California support a finding that defendant's activities are sufficiently wide ranging to take the place of a physical presence in the state. Again, the cases relied upon by defendant are readily distinguishable from the facts present here. In Thos. P. Gonzalez Corp. v. Consejo Nacional De Produccion De Costa Rica (9th Cir. 1980) 614 F.2d 1247, the court declined to exercise personal jurisdiction over a foreign corporation for claims arising out of contracts for the sale and purchase of grain, where California was neither the source nor the destination of the grain. There, the primary contacts with California involved the execution of the sale and purchase agreements with a California resident for grain transactions occurring entirely outside of California, and use of mail and telephone for arranging the agreements. By contrast, here, Watch Tower PA has made numerous loans to California congregations for the purchase and repair of Kingdom Halls in California, which loans have been secured by mortgages and deeds of trust on the property in California. Watch Tower PA has also collected substantial amounts in California for what can only be characterized as insurance premiums, regardless of how they are labeled by defendant.

[3] The court has omitted reference to the specific types of donations solicited and to the specific amount of donations collected annually. These factors have contributed to the court's decision.

The cases of Bancroft & Masters, Inc. v. Augusta Nat'l, Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 223 F.3d 1082 and Gates Learjet Corp. v. Jensen (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 1325 relied on by defendant are also distinguishable from the present case because, as the court noted in both cases, the contacts at issue could only be characterized as doing business "with" the forum state, rather that "in" it. Thus, in Gates, a foreign company's negotiation for an international distributorship that took place in part in Arizona and the purchase of spare parts from plaintiff in Arizona did not constitute doing business in Arizona and did not, therefore, equate with a physical presence in that state. And in Bancroft, the fact that the non-resident defendant held licensing agreements with two California television networks was not sufficient to establish general jurisdiction. In contrast, the defendant's activities in California directly involve California property and California residents, and can only be characterized as engaging in substantial business within California.

Whether considered individually or in the aggregate, Watch Tower PA's contacts with California are substantial, continuous and systematic, and are "so wide-ranging that they take the place of physical presence in the forum state as a basis for jurisdiction." (Vons, supra 14 Cal.4th at pp. 445-446.) For this reason, Watch Tower PA's motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction must be DENIED. Watch Tower PA shall file an answer within 30 days.

PLAINTIFFS' OPPOSITION TO CHURCH DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER REGARDING THE DEPOSITION NOTICE FOR J.R. BROWN

Date: October 21, 2005
Time: 8:30 a.m.
Dept. C

Trial Date: None

RECEIVED
OCT 11 2005
Napa Superior Court

Defendants urge this Court to quash the deposition notice of J.R. Brown for two reasons: (1) they contend that he has no "unique, special or superior personal knowledge" concerning a May 9, 2002 letter that he signed (see Exhibit 1 attached to the Declaration of William Brelsford) and (2) they argue that his would be an "apex" deposition so that Plaintiffs must first exhaust less obtrusive discovery methods before deposing him.

The letter in question pertains to matters that are obviously germane to Plaintiffs' lawsuit. It describes actual records of known child molesters kept by the Jehovah's Witness organization and the use of those records "to protect the flock from harm," and to "screen out possible child abusers from appointment to responsible positions within the congregation." (See Exhibit 1 at ¶ 11.) This evidence is so important that Plaintiffs should be permitted broad latitude in discovering the details.

Defendants rely upon Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, (1992) 10 Cal.App.4th 1282, 1287, the first California case to deal with so-called "apex depositions." The case involved a worker's compensation claimant who wanted to depose the chief executive officer of the compensation carrier. The CEO's only connection to the subject matter of the lawsuit was that he was copied, by title only, on irate letters from plaintiff's counsel. Id. at 1286. It was established by the declaration of his assistant that those letters were re-routed and he never saw them. Id.

Defendants' reliance on Liberty Mutual is misguided for three reasons.

First, the Court in Liberty Mutual limited its holding to attempts "to depose a corporate president or other official at the highest level of corporate management" Id. at 1289. JR Brown does not qualify. His declaration says that he is "Director of the Office of Public Information," but contains nothing to suggest that he sits at or near the apex of the Jehovah's Witnesses organizational chart. See Donald v. Truck Insurance Exchange, 2004 WL 605303 (Cal. App. 2 Dist.), not officially published.

Second, even assuming the validity of Liberty Mutual's restrictions on deposing "a corporate president or other official at the highest level of corporate management (Id. at 1289), it was not shown that Brosky and Boylan fit that description." Presumably, Brown is accustomed to being the "voice" of the Jehovah's Witnesses and it would not be an annoying, embarrassing, oppressive or burdensome for him to give testimony in this case. (See CCP 2025.420(b).) On the other hand, it would be burdensome and expensive for the parties to make two trips to California if the person Defendants produce in lieu of Brown does not truly know more than Brown does.

Further, the Court, in Liberty Mutual, added a qualification to its holding that applies to this Motion:

> Lower level officials, with some probable connection to a plaintiff's case, are not permitted to avoid deposition by filing conclusory affidavits of ignorance.

Id. at 1290.

Brown's declaration is that type of affidavit: he simply states that he lacks personal knowledge.

Third, there is good cause to permit Brown's deposition. BBC-TV, a major international broadcasting company, was preparing to broadcast an expose' on child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses organization, a matter that would presumably be quite sensitive to the Watchtower Defendants. Brown signed the organization's response and conveyed its answers to certain questions. (See Exhibit 1 at ¶ 3.)

The fact that Brown signed a letter of such significance, in his capacity as director of the Office of Public Information, is an operative fact that, standing alone, justifies his deposition. The suggestion that such an important letter was prepared by others and simply handed to him for signature is, on its face, disingenuous under the obvious circumstances of the letter.

This is not an instance of a plaintiff who seeks to depose a chief executive officer or company president about something that occurred "several levels down the corporate pyramid." Brown actually signed the letter in question.

Defendants have notified Plaintiffs' counsel that they will produce Gary Breaux as the person most knowledgeable about, among other things, the letter that Mr. Brown signed. However, Mr. Breaux's name appears nowhere in the letter. Nor do the declarations of Mr. Brown and Defendants' counsel shed any light on why his knowledge is superior to that of the individual who actually signed the letter.

CONCLUSION

Based on all of the reasons set forth hereinabove, Plaintiffs respectfully request that Defendants' Motion for Protection should be denied for the following reasons:

1. Defendants have made no showing that Brown occupies the type of position at the apex of the Defendants' organization that would entitle him to a protective order;
2. Brown's declaration is the type of "conclusory affidavit" of a "lower level official" that the Court in Liberty Mutual expressly excluded from its holding; and
3. Brown does have sufficient personal involvement in the subject matter of the lawsuits in question to justify his deposition.

Dear Ms. Powys:

This is in response to your fax of April 30, 2002, in which you advise us that BBC-TV is preparing a program on the way Jehovah's Witnesses handle child abuse matters. You have kindly offered us the opportunity to be interviewed on-camera; however, we must respectfully decline.

We are not opposed to giving interviews in general; however, it is likely that among those whose views will be expressed on your broadcast will be some persons who are Jehovah's Witnesses. In our view, it would be neither proper nor Scriptural for us to place ourselves in what might turn out to be an adversarial position with our Christian brothers and sisters in a public setting. (1 Corinthians 6:1-8; Ephesians 4:2) We trust that you will understand our position in this regard.

Although unable to participate in an interview, we are certainly willing to comment on the questions that you raised in your fax. We note that these center almost exclusively on the nature of the records that we keep on alleged child abusers. You tell us that it is vital that we answer your questions on our record-keeping procedures because of the "very serious nature of the allegations made to the programme," although you do not specify what the allegations are. First of all, however, please allow us to comment on the way that child abuse accusations are handled by Jehovah's Witnesses. We realize that you did not ask us to touch on this aspect; nevertheless, it is essential that we comment on it to provide an appropriate, frank answer.

In the United States, when any one of Jehovah's Witnesses is accused of an act of child abuse, the local elders are expected to investigate. The procedure is as follows. Two elders meet separately with the accused and the accuser to see what each says on the matter. If the accused denies the charge, the two elders may arrange for him to have the opportunity to confront the accuser in their presence. If during that meeting the accused still denies the charges and there are no others who can substantiate them, the elders cannot take action within the congregation at that time. Why not? As a Bible-based organization, we must adhere to what the Scriptures say, namely, "No single witness should rise up against a man respecting any error or any sin . . . at the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deuteronomy 19:15) Jesus reaffirmed this principle as recorded at Matthew 18:15-17.

When the branch office receives an allegation of child abuse, a check of the records might reveal that similar, uncorroborated allegations were lodged against the same person in the past, perhaps when he was living in another part of the country. When a second credible allegation by a different person is lodged against the same individual, the elders are authorized by the Scriptures to handle the case.

However, even if the elders cannot take congregational action, they are expected to report the allegation to the branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses in their country, if local privacy laws permit. Again, privacy laws permitting, a record is made at the branch office that the individual has been accused of child abuse. Each branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses keeps its own records, if that is allowed by local jurisdiction. In the United States we do not have records of child abusers who live in other lands. If privacy laws do not allow such records to be kept, the elders do whatever is permitted within the law to see to it that children are protected. The aim is to balance the right to privacy of the individual with the overriding need to protect the safety of children.—1 Timothy 5:19.

In addition to making a report to the branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses, the elders may be required by law to report even uncorroborated or unsubstantiated allegations to the authorities. If so, we expect the elders to comply. Additionally, the victim may wish to report the matter to the authorities, and it is his or her absolute right to do so. In the United States, reporting requirements vary from state to state. It can be quite a challenge to keep abreast of the reporting requirements, but our Legal Department makes every effort to do so.

If, when confronted, the accused confesses that he is guilty of child abuse, the elders take appropriate action. If he is not repentant, he will not be permitted to remain a member of the congregation. Even if he is repentant--is cut to the heart, and is thus resolutely determined to avoid such conduct in the future—what was stated in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower applies. The article said: "For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer [full-time missionary of Jehovah's Witnesses] or serve in any other special, full-time service." (1 Timothy 3:2, 7-10) We take such action because we are concerned with maintaining Bible standards and protecting our children. Everyone in our organization is expected to meet the same requirements, namely, to be clean physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually.—1 Corinthians 7:1; Ephesians 4:17-19; 1 Thessalonians 2:4.

In a few instances, individuals guilty of an act of child abuse have been appointed to positions within the congregation if their conduct has been otherwise exemplary for decades. All of the circumstances would need to be considered carefully. Suppose, for example, that a long time ago a 16-year-old boy had sexual relations with a consenting 15-year-old girl. Depending upon the U.S. jurisdictions where he lived when this happened, elders are required to report this as an incident of child abuse. Let us say that twenty years have passed. The child abuse reporting law may have changed; he may even have married the girl! Both have been living exemplary lives and they are respected. In such a rare case, the man could possibly be appointed to a responsible position within the congregation.

Our procedures have been refined over time. Our policy over the past several years has been that at least twenty years must have passed before an individual who committed an act of child abuse could even be considered for appointment to a responsible position in the congregation, if ever. The Bible teaches that individuals can repent of their sins and "turn to God by doing works that befit repentance," and we accept what the Bible says. (Acts 26:20) Still, the safety of our children is of the utmost importance, so we realize that the local elders must be very careful when recommending individuals who may have been guilty of an act of child abuse in the distant past.

You have been told that here in the United States we have compiled a list of 23,720 names of child abusers. That is false. First of all, the total number of names in our records is considerably lower than that. In addition, it is not meaningful to focus on the number of names we have in our records. This is because our figures include the names of many persons who have only been accused of child abuse whereas the charges have not been substantiated. We keep these records to document our compliance with what the law requires in many U.S. jurisdictions. Also included on our list are allegations made on the basis of so-called "repressed memories," the validity of which many authorities challenge. Then there are the names of persons who have been accused of abusing children before becoming Jehovah's Witnesses as well as individuals who have never been baptized Witnesses but whose names we are obliged to keep because of their association with the Witnesses. (An example of this would be a non-Witness father or step-father who is accused by his Witness children or step-children of abusing them.) To be safe, we also list the names of persons who may or may not be considered as child abusers, depending upon the jurisdiction where they live (for example, that 16-year-old boy who had sexual relations with the consenting 15-year-old girl). The name of an individual who was guilty of voyeurism or involved with child pornography, as further examples, would also be included on the list. And, to be sure, the list also includes names of persons who are actually guilty of child abuse. We do not apologize for keeping such records here in the United States. Apart from being legally needed, they have been very helpful to us in our efforts to protect the flock from harm. (Isaiah 32:2) Christian parents can rightly feel secure in the knowledge that such efforts are made to screen out possible child abusers from appointment to responsible positions within the congregation.

Ms. Powys, please do not conclude that we believe that our system is perfect. No human organization is perfect. But we do believe that we have a strong, Bible-based policy on child abuse. Anyone in a responsible position who is guilty of child abuse would be removed from his responsibilities without hesitation. We certainly would not knowingly transfer him to serve elsewhere.

Child abuse is abhorrent to us. Even one abused child is one too many. At least since 1981, our journals, The Watchtower and Awake!, have featured articles to educate both Witnesses and the public regarding the importance and need to protect children from child abuse. Among others, there was the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked!" published in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower; "Help For the Victims of Incest" in the October 1, 1983, Watchtower; "Your Child Is in Danger!", "How Can We Protect Our Children?", and "Prevention in the Home," all in the October 8, 1993, Awake!, as well as "Child Molesting—Every Mother's Nightmare" in the January 22, 1985, Awake! Over the years, as we have noted areas where our policies could be strengthened, we have followed through. We are continuing to refine them.

We trust that you will find the information in this letter to be helpful. As you will note, we have responded to the broad issues you raise rather than providing specific answers to your detailed list of questions. We note that you sent a similar list of questions to our offices in London. We understand they are answering your questions in accordance with their procedures and adherence to British law. With every good wish, I am,

Very truly yours,

J. R. Brown

REPLY TO OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANTS' MOTION FOR PROTECTIVE ORDER REGARDING THE NOTICE OF DEPOSITION RE J.R. BROWN

DATE: October 21, 2005
TIME: 8:30 a.m.
DEPT: C

TRIAL DATE: Not yet set

I. INTRODUCTION

While this motion and the deposition notice upon which it is based are filed in this Charissa W. and Nicole D. case, it is important to understand that plaintiffs' counsel seeks to take the deposition of J.R. Brown and the "person most knowledgeable" about certain identified topics in the letter signed by J.R. Brown for purposes of all of the coordinated cases filed against defendant, including the two so-called "Track I" cases of Wimberley and Tim W.

Plaintiffs oppose defendant's motion for a protective order regarding the deposition of J.R. Brown but provide the court with no legitimate reason for their opposition. First, plaintiffs completely ignore the fact that defendant Watchtower NY is not attempting here to quash all deposition testimony regarding the topics identified in the PMK deposition notice concerning the May 9, 2002 letter at issue. Rather, defendant is seeking a protective order only regarding the deposition notice for J.R. Brown. While J.R. Brown signed the letter in his capacity as the Director of the Office of Public Information (OPI), his sworn declaration reveals that he does not have any unique or superior personal knowledge of the subject matter contained therein. In addition, he does not have personal knowledge of any of these coordinated cases.

Moreover, plaintiffs have completely ignored defendant's request that the deposition of J.R. Brown be deferred until the PMK deposition is taken. As already briefed by defendant, if after taking the PMK deposition plaintiffs believe they have not obtained the information they desire, they can determine from written interrogatories whether J.R. Brown has sufficient knowledge about the letter and if so, the court could then consider allowing the deposition of Mr. Brown to take place.

Plaintiffs incorrectly state that they should be allowed to take the deposition of J.R. Brown because plaintiffs' counsel would be required to make extra trips to California (even though one of plaintiffs' three offices of attorneys are located in Sacramento, California). This deposition, as is clear from the deposition notice, was scheduled for Brooklyn, New York. There are other depositions that will later be taken in Brooklyn, New York as well, because defendant Watchtower NY maintains its offices there, so if the court should later determine, after the PMK deposition and after the interrogatories regarding J.R. Brown's personal knowledge somehow dictated that his deposition were necessary, Mr. Brown's deposition could be set in conjunction with those later Watchtower NY depositions, thereby not causing any extra travel expense or prejudice to plaintiffs or defendants. Plaintiffs' argument is this regard is thus a sham argument and, indeed, disingenuous.

In addition, plaintiffs provide absolutely no factual support, such as sworn declarations or affidavits, in support of their opposition to defendant's motion for a protective order. In other words, no factual evidence is submitted to support plaintiffs' opposition papers or to demonstrate why plaintiffs contend J.R. Brown has superior knowledge regarding the identified topics of the letter, and which knowledge J.R. Brown has sworn in his declaration not to have. Plaintiffs also have not submitted any factual evidence to show why the PMK deposition is not sufficient for their needs or purposes, at least at this first stage of depositions.

Also, the only case law relied upon by plaintiffs is an officially unpublished opinion, which plaintiffs' learned and experienced counsel clearly understand they cannot even cite, much less rely on, under to Rule 977 of the California Rules of Court. Finally, the fact remains that J.R. Brown is the Director of the Office of Public Information and, therefore, this is an "apex" deposition that should initially be prohibited under the circumstances presented here.

II. LEGAL AUTHORITY

California case law is clear -- "'apex' depositions such as the one in this case, when conducted before less intrusive discovery methods are exhausted, raise a tremendous potential for discovery abuse and harassment." Liberty Mutual, 10 Cal.App.4th at 1287 (emphasis added). Plaintiffs argue that J.R. Brown, essentially, is not a high enough ranking official to be accorded "apex" status. In doing so, they are seeking "broad latitude" because they state in conclusory fashion that this evidence is "important." Such conclusory statements are not reason enough to ignore the relevant legal authority on the issue. "[W]hen a plaintiff seeks to depose a corporate president or other official at the highest level of corporate management, and that official moves for a protective order to prohibit the deposition, the trial court should first determine whether the plaintiff has shown good cause that the official has unique or superior personal knowledge of discoverable information. Liberty Mutual at 1289 (emphasis added). Here, J.R. Brown is the Director of the OPI. He is the highest official within OPI and would certainly fall within the category of "other official at the highest level" of OPI.

Plaintiffs' counsel also boldly flouts the California rules and ethics governing court procedures by citing in their opposition brief the unpublished case of Donald v. Truck Insurance Exchange. To make matters worse, plaintiffs' counsel even admit in their opposition brief that the case is not officially published(!). In other words, plaintiffs have purposely cited and are relying on an unpublished opinion which, as experienced attorneys, plaintiffs' counsel know is absolutely inappropriate and contrary to the California Rules of Court ("CRC"), Rule 977(a). CRC Rule 977(a) states, "Except as provided in (b), an opinion of a California Court of Appeal or superior court appellate division that is not certified for publication or ordered published must not be cited or relied on by a court or a party in any other action." CRC Rule 977(a) (emphasis added). This case cited and relied on by plaintiffs' counsel does not fall within any of the exceptions listed in subsection (b). Thus, plaintiffs cannot rely on, and the Court cannot consider the Donald case. As result of this breach of applicable court rules and ethics by plaintiffs' counsel, the Church Defendants request that the Court publicly admonish plaintiffs' counsel and strike plaintiffs' brief in its entirety as a sanction.

Plaintiffs further argue in their brief that it would not be annoying, embarrassing, oppressive or burdensome for J.R. Brown to give testimony because, they allege in a conclusory statement, he is "accustomed to being the 'voice' of Jehovah's Witnesses." This is again a sham argument that lacks the support of any legal authority – indeed, a similar argument could be made to justify the deposition of any high level corporate officer, notwithstanding the holding of Liberty Mutual already discussed. In any event, requiring J.R. Brown to sit for a deposition concerning cases about which he has no personal knowledge and about a letter for which another person has been identified with superior knowledge is, almost by definition, annoying, embarrassing, oppressive and burdensome. And while plaintiffs make the argument that it would be expensive for them to make a special trip to California (even though it is a New York deposition and other depositions will be conducted there in these Track I cases), plaintiffs ignore the burden and expense on this defendant for having Director Brown and defendant's attorney sit through an unnecessary and unwarranted deposition. Thus, given the lack of any evidence submitted by plaintiffs and the declaration of J.R. Brown that has not been countered in any way, there simply is no other basis put forth by plaintiffs except to embarrass, harass, and create additional burdens for defendant.

Plaintiffs also argue that J.R. Brown signed the letter answering certain of BBC's questions. In fact, the letter itself states no specific questions were answered. The letter provided to the BBC was general in nature. Plaintiffs argue that the mere fact that J.R. Brown signed the letter justifies his deposition. Defendant disagrees, and the Liberty Mutual court would most certainly also disagree. J.R. Brown signed the letter in his capacity as Director of OPI. He has already stated under oath that he does not have any superior or unique personal knowledge concerning the topics on which plaintiffs will inquire. Again, defendant has identified Gary Breaux as the person most knowledgeable or PMK about the topics identified by plaintiffs concerning that letter, and plaintiffs can obtain the information they apparently are seeking by less intrusive methods than deposing the Director of the OPI.

> "[I]n the instance of a large national or international corporation, the trial court should issue the protective order and first require the plaintiff to obtain the necessary discovery through less intrusive methods. These would include interrogatories directed to the high-level official to explore the state of his or her knowledge or involvement in plaintiff's case; the deposition of lower level employees with appropriate knowledge and involvement in the subject matter of the litigation; and the organizational deposition of the corporation itself, which will require the corporation to produce for deposition the most qualified officer or employee to testify on its behalf as to the specified matters to be raised at the deposition. (§ 2025, subd. (d)(6).) Should these avenues be exhausted, and the plaintiff make a colorable showing of good cause that the high-level official possesses necessary information to the case, the trial court may then lift the protective order and allow the deposition to proceed."

Liberty Mutual at 1289 (emphasis added).

The Court should issue the protective order defendant is seeking here. Plaintiffs can and will take the deposition of PMK Gary Breaux (now set for November 15, 2005). If, after Mr. Breaux's deposition, plaintiffs do not believe they have been able to obtain the information they apparently think they should have, they can propound interrogatories to determine what, if any, knowledge J.R. Brown might have regarding the identified topics concerning the letter. At that time, if plaintiffs can make a colorable showing to the Court regarding information possessed by J.R. Brown, the Court could then lift the protective order, allowing Mr. Brown's deposition.

III. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs have given no valid reason for opposing defendant's motion for a protective order. The Court should grant defendant's motion and issue a protective order regarding the deposition notice of J.R. Brown. If, at a later time plaintiffs can make a colorable showing regarding the propriety of taking J.R. Brown's deposition, the court could lift the order.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants.	Case No.: 26-22191 (lead case) JCCP No. 4374 EX PARTE APPLICATION FOR ORDER SHORTENING TIME TO HEAR MOTION TO STAY EXECUTION OF ORDER TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS Date of Hearing: October 19, 2005 Time: 1:30 pm Dept: TBA
AND COORDINATED CASES

Defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Red Bluff, California, Inc. (collectively "Church Defendants") hereby specially appear in the two so-called "Track I" coordinated cases of Tim W. v. Watchtower New York, et al, and Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez, et al v. Watchtower New York, et al., to apply pursuant to California Rules of Court, Rule 313(d) to the Court ex parte for an Order Shortening Time to hear the Church Defendants' Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents in the two "Track I" cases and to stay the production of documents until the motion can be heard. Counsel for the Church Defendants has advised plaintiffs' counsel in writing that this ex parte request will be made to this Court. Counsel for the Church Defendants requests permission to have the Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents heard on a shortened time.

Good cause exists to grant this ex parte application since there is insufficient time to have this motion heard on regular time prior to the October 19, 2005 production date. Good cause likewise exists for the requested relief.

Pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure 128(a)(3), the Court can control the proceeding before it, which would include hearing the Church Defendants' Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents on a shortened basis. Additionally, the Church Defendants will be unfairly and unduly prejudiced if the Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents is not heard on a shortened basis, in that they will be forced to waive their right to take a writ if the documents are produced prior to the time a writ would be filed and ruled upon. If the stay is not granted, a writ would be moot since the documents the Watchtower Defendants consider to be privileged would already have been produced. In addition, the Church Defendants would be unduly prejudiced if they were forced to produce the document prior to this Court having the opportunity to rule on the Church Defendants' motion.

This application will be based upon the contents of this application, the declaration of Robert J. Schnack, and the Motion to Stay Execution of Court Orders filed in the above-entitled action. This ex parte application is set to be heard on October 19, 2005 at 1:30 p.m. in the Napa County Superior Court. Watchtower has served written notice on all parties of this hearing.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF CHURCH DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STAY EXECUTION OF ORDER TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS PENDING WRIT

DATE: 10-21-05
TIME: 8:30 AM
DEPT.: C
TRIAL DATES: Not yet set

INTRODUCTION

Defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY") and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Red Bluff, California ("North Congregation") bring this motion in the two Track I coordinated cases to stay the production of documents ordered in the court's September 28, 2005 ruling on Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents in order to preserve Watchtower NY and North Congregation's appellate rights. Under California law, defendants have 60 days in which to file a writ on the issue. If Watchtower NY and North Congregation were forced to produce the documents within 20 days as ordered, their appellate rights would be rendered moot, because once the documents are produced, the clergy - penitent privilege is irrelevant, given that plaintiffs will have the documents that defendants contend are privileged.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

These two "Track I" coordinated cases arise from the alleged sexual abuse of plaintiffs. In the prosecution of their cases, plaintiffs have requested several documents that Watchtower NY and North Congregation contend fall within the clergy - penitent privilege, as previously briefed to this Court, and defendants have continually asserted that privilege. In the course and scope of discovery of these cases, plaintiffs served Watchtower NY and North Congregation with written discovery, including requests for production of documents. Defendants objected to certain of the documents requested on the basis, among others, of the clergy - penitent privilege. After the parties engaged in meet and confer efforts, plaintiffs filed a motion to compel discovery, including for the production of the documents Watchtower NY and North Congregation continue to contend fall within the clergy - penitent privilege. The court took the matter under submission and, on September 29, 2005, issued a written ruling holding that the documents do not fall within that privilege. The court then ordered that the documents previously withheld on the basis of penitent privilege be produced to plaintiffs within 20 days.

Defendants continue to contend that the documents requested and ordered produced are privileged documents under the clergy - penitent privilege. Therefore, defendants will timely file a writ with the Court of Appeal on the issue. This is one of those rare occasions where a discovery order should be reviewed because lack of review at this stage of the proceedings would result in both prejudice and irreversible error to Watchtower NY and North Congregation if the matter were to be appealed only after a judgment is entered. Therefore, in an effort to preserve their rights and in an effort not to be unduly prejudiced, Watchtower NY and North Congregation are now seeking an order from this Court staying the production of the documents until after Watchtower NY and North Congregation have filed a writ and had it heard. Again, once the documents at issue are produced, there would be no way to undo the harm of having privileged documents produced to the opposing parties, which would render the writ useless, even if Watchtower NY and North Congregation should prevail on the writ.

Counsel for defendants has met and conferred with plaintiffs' counsel on this issue, as is evidenced by the Declaration of Robert J. Schnack filed herewith. Plaintiffs have refused to agree to stay the ordered production of the documents. Therefore, defendants seek the Court's intervention and protection to stay the production of the documents until Watch Tower's writ rights can be addressed.

POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

California's Evidence Code establishes the clergy-penitent privilege. Evidence Code section 1032 states:

> "As used in this article, 'penitential communication' means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret." Evid. Code § 1032. "Whenever a privilege is claimed on the ground that the matter sought to be disclosed is a communication made in confidence in the course of the ... clergy-penitent ... relationship, the communication is presumed to have been made in confidence and the opponent of the claim of privilege has the burden of proof to establish that the communication was not confidential." Evid. Code §917(a) (emphasis added).

Watchtower NY and North Congregation have maintained since they were served with written discovery from plaintiffs, including a request for production of documents, that certain documents are privileged pursuant to Evidence Code sections 1030, et seq., including under section 1032. Despite the Court's September 29, 2005 ruling, Watchtower NY and North Congregation respectfully continue to contend that certain of the documents requested, and now ordered to be produced, fall within the clergy - penitent privilege and are protected from disclosure. Given the contention that the documents are privileged, defendants are in the process of preparing to timely file and pursue a writ on this issue.

Pursuant to the applicable authority, Watchtower NY and North Congregation have 60 days from entry of the order in which to file a writ. "A writ of review may be granted by any court when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy." CCP §1068. Writ proceedings are not the favored method for reviewing discovery orders because typically the delay caused by such review results in greater harm than in the enforcement of an improper discovery order. Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal.3d 1, 5, 123 Cal.Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739; Catanese v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal.App.4th 1159, 1163, 54 Cal.Rptr.2d 280; see also West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal.2d 407, 415, 15 Cal.Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295. However, writ review is appropriate on a motion to produce documents when the documents are subject to a claim of privilege.

> "Writ review of discovery rulings is generally limited to 'situations where (1) the issues presented are of first impression and of general importance to the trial courts and to the profession [citation], (2) the order denying discovery prevents a party from having a fair opportunity to litigate his or her case [citation], or (3) the ruling compelling discovery would violate a privilege [citations].' (Johnson v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal.App.4th 1050, 1061, 95 Cal.Rptr.2d 864.) Writ review is appropriate here because the trial court's order compelling the production of 172 documents violates a privilege allegedly held by OXY. 'Interlocutory review by writ is the only adequate remedy where a court orders production of documents which may be subject to a privilege, 'since once privileged matter has been disclosed there is no way to undo the harm which consists in the very disclosure.' [Citations.] "

OXY Resources California LLC v. Superior Court (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 874, 886-87, 9 Cal.Rptr.3d 621,632-33 (emphasis added).

Here, if defendants are forced to produce the documents requested prior to having the opportunity to exercise their right to pursue a writ, they will suffer undue and unfair harm and prejudice . If defendants prevail on the writ, but have previously had to produce the documents within the court-ordered 20 days, defendants will have effectively been forced to waive the privilege.

Watchtower NY and North Congregation have 60 days in which to file a writ for review of the court's order compelling production of the documents. "As a general rule, a writ petition should be filed within the 60-day period that is applicable to appeals. (Reynolds v. Superior Court (1883) 64 Cal. 372, 373, 28 P. 121; Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal.App.3d 496, 499, 165 Cal.Rptr. 748.) 'An appellate court may consider a petition for an extraordinary writ at any time [citation], but has discretion to deny a petition filed after the 60-day period applicable to appeals, and should do so absent "extraordinary circumstances" justifying the delay.' (Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court, supra, 107 Cal.App.3d at p. 499, 165 Cal.Rptr. 748, italics in original.)" Volkswagen of America, Inc. v. Superior Court (2001) 94 Cal.App.4th 695, 701, 114 Cal.Rptr.2d 541, 545. If defendants are forced to produce the documents prior to the 60-day time frame in which they have to file a writ, defendants will effectively be barred from any appellate review of this issue in these Track I cases. Therefore, defendants seek a stay on the production of documents ordered by the court in its September 29, 2005 ruling, at least until the time in which to file a writ has lapsed.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, defendants seek a stay on the production of documents ordered by the court in its September 29, 2005 ruling. Defendants respectfully request that production of the documents they contend are protected by the clergy - penitent privilege be stayed until the 60-day time in which to file a writ lapses or, if a writ is filed, until the writ can be heard and ruled on. Defendants submit that there would be no prejudice to plaintiffs, particularly compared to the undue prejudice that defendants would suffer if they were forced to disclose documents that might ultimately be held by the Court of Appeal to be privileged.

AND COORDINATED CASES

I, Robert J. Schnack, declare as follows:

1. I am an attorney licensed to practice law in California and Oregon, a shareholder in the law firm of Bullivant Houser Bailey PC, and one of the Church Defendants' attorneys of record in these coordinated actions. I am legally competent in all respects and make the following statements from personal knowledge, or on information and belief where so stated.

2. In the course and scope of discovery in the Track I coordinated cases, a request for production of documents was served on my clients by plaintiff's counsel, including requests for documents that defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY") and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses of Red Bluff, California consider to be privileged pursuant to the penitent clergy-privilege and Evidence Code §§1030, et seq..

2. Watchtower NY and the North Congregation served written responses to plaintiffs' requests for production of documents, including objections that certain of the documents are privileged under the clergy-penitent privilege and Evidence Code §§1030.

3. On July 29, 2005, plaintiffs filed a motion to compel production of those documents, which was opposed by Watchtower and the North Congregation.

4. On August 31, 2005, the court heard oral argument on the motion to compel and took the matter under submission. A written ruling was filed on September 28, 2005, granting plaintiffs' motion and ordering that the documents be produced in 20 days.

5. After first receiving a copy of the court's written ruling on October 3, 2005, I contacted plaintiffs' counsel William Brelsford in an attempt to obtain plaintiffs' agreement to stay the production of the documents until Watchtower NY and North Congregation could determine whether to file a writ seeking appellate review of that ruling. No such agreement was forthcoming, and Watchtower NY and North Congregation have been forced to file this motion.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct, except where stated on information and belief, in which case I am informed and believe the information to be true and correct.

AND COORDINATED CASES

I, Mario F. Moreno, declare as follows:

1. I am an attorney and associate general counsel for the Legal Department of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower Legal Department") and in that capacity, from time to time I act and have acted as legal counsel for Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY") and various congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, including defendant North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Red Bluff, California ("North Congregation"). I am legally competent in all respects and make the following statements based on my own personal knowledge.

2. In the coordinated case of Tim W. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al, the privilege logs attached hereto as Exhibits A and B were earlier served on plaintiff's counsel. With respect to the letters "from Watchtower NY Legal Department to North Congregation elders" identified in the privilege logs as being dated July 11, 1995, November 3, 1995, November 20, 1995, and June 6, 1996, I authored and signed each of those letters in my capacity as an attorney and legal counselor for the North Congregation and Watchtower NY and as associate general counsel for Watchtower Legal Department. Those letters each concerned pre-litigation claims asserted by a California attorney against the North Congregation and others. Both the attorney – client privilege and the attorney work product privilege protect those letters from discovery.

3. The undated handwritten notes prepared by elders in the North Congregation and referenced in the privilege logs concern legal direction provided by me and other attorneys in the Watchtower Legal Department to North Congregation elders during the same time frame as the letters referenced above. The attorney – client privilege and the attorney work product privilege both also protect those notes from discovery.

4. Based on the foregoing, among other reasons, the documents identified in the privilege logs are not subject to discovery in the Tim W. case or any other coordinated cases.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States and of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct upon my knowledge, information and belief.

Executed on October 14, 2005, at Patterson, New York.

Case No.: 26-22191 (lead case)

JCCP No. 4374

DECLARATION OF ROBERT J. SCHNACK IN SUPPORT OF EX PARTE APPLICATION TO HAVE MOTION TO STAY PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS WITHIN 20 DAYS HEARD ON SHORTENED BASIS

Date of Hearing: October 19, 2005
Time: 1:30 pm
Dept: TBA

I, Robert J. Schnack, declare as follows:

1. I am an attorney licensed to practice law in California and Oregon, a shareholder in the law firm of Bullivant Houser Bailey PC, and one of the Church Defendants' attorneys of record in this action. I am legally competent in all respects and make the following statements from personal knowledge.

2. Attached hereto as Exhibit A is a copy of a proposed Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents in the two so-called "Track I" coordinated cases of Tim W. v.

Watchtower New York, et al, and Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez, et al v. Watchtower New York, et al, which I intend to serve and file herein. (The "Track I" cases and certain other cases were earlier ordered coordinated under Judicial Council rules and assigned to this Court as the court overseeing coordination. The Napa County Superior Court case of Charissa W. captioned above was designated as the "lead" case. Thus, all motions in these coordinated cases are presently being heard by the Napa County Superior Court.)

3. The delay in hearing this matter after the normal time required for service of the above-described papers would cause a substantial hardship to the parties named above for the following reasons: These coordinated cases each involve alleged sex abuse of minors, and plaintiffs are seeking money damages from various local congregations and national church entities. In previous discovery motions filed against defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Red Bluff, California, Inc. (collectively "Church Defendants") in the two Track I cases, plaintiffs sought to compel discovery of documents that, among other things, the Church Defendants considered, and still consider, privileged under the clergy -penitent privilege and California Evidence Code sections 1030, et seq. The Court filed an Order on September 29, 2005 in which it ruled that the documents were not privileged and ordered that they be produced within 20 days of the order. That Order was first received by me on October 3, 2005 during a deposition at the offices of plaintiffs' counsel. However, the Church Defendants, in continuing to contend the documents are privileged under the clergy-penitent privilege, intend to file a writ to have the matter reviewed at the appellate court level. If, in the process of filing the writ and having it ruled upon, the Church Defendants were forced to produce the documents requested, their writ would in effect, be moot and meaningless. Therefore, these Church Defendants are seeking a stay of the execution of the order to produce the documents within the 20 days ordered by the Court until the Court can hear and rule upon the Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents.

4. Prior to filing this ex parte application, I engaged in the "meet and confer" process with plaintiffs' counsel, advising of the Church Defendants' intention to file a writ and seeking an agreement between the parties to stay production of the documents. Plaintiffs' counsel would not agree to any such stay.

5. On October 15, 2005, I notified plaintiffs' counsel Brelsford via email that the Church Defendants would file with the Court this ex parte application for an order shortening time to continue motion hearing date. I followed that up with faxed written notification to plaintiffs' counsel on the same day, October 15, 2005. Attached hereto as Exhibit B are true copies of my October 15, 2005 notifications.

6. No party will be prejudiced by granting this ex parte application.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed this 18th day of October ___, 2005 at Gold River, California.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants.	Case No.: 26-22191 (lead case) JCCP No. 4374 MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF CHURCH DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO STAY EXECUTION OF ORDER TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS PENDING WRIT DATE: TIME: DEPT.: C TRIAL DATES: Not yet set

INTRODUCTION

Defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY") and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Red Bluff, California ("North Congregation") bring this motion in the two Track I coordinated cases to stay the production of documents ordered in the court's September 28, 2005 ruling on Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents in order to preserve Watchtower NY and North Congregation's appellate rights. Under California law, defendants have 60 days in which to file a writ on the issue. If Watchtower NY and North Congregation were forced to produce the documents within 20 days

as ordered, their appellate rights would be rendered moot, because once the documents are produced, the clergy - penitent privilege is irrelevant, given that plaintiffs will have the documents that defendants contend are privileged.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

These two "Track I" coordinated cases arise from the alleged sexual abuse of plaintiffs. In the prosecution of their cases, plaintiffs have requested several documents that Watchtower NY and North Congregation contend fall within the clergy - penitent privilege, as previously briefed to this Court, and defendants have continually asserted that privilege. In the course and scope of discovery of these cases, plaintiffs served Watchtower NY and North Congregation with written discovery, including requests for production of documents. Defendants objected to certain of the documents requested on the basis, among others, of the clergy - penitent privilege. After the parties engaged in meet and confer efforts, plaintiffs filed a motion to compel discovery, including for the production of the documents Watchtower NY and North Congregation continue to contend fall within the clergy - penitent privilege. The court took the matter under submission and, on September 29, 2005, issued a written ruling holding that the documents do not fall within that privilege. The court then ordered that the documents previously withheld on the basis of penitent privilege be produced to plaintiffs within 20 days.

Defendants continue to contend that the documents requested and ordered produced are privileged documents under the clergy - penitent privilege. Therefore, defendants will timely file a writ with the Court of Appeal on the issue. This is one of those rare occasions where a discovery order should be reviewed because lack of review at this stage of the proceedings would result in both prejudice and irreversible error to Watchtower NY and North Congregation if the matter were to be appealed only after a judgment is entered. Therefore, in an effort to preserve their rights and in an effort not to be unduly prejudiced, Watchtower NY and North Congregation are now seeking an order from this Court staying the production of the documents until after Watchtower NY and North Congregation have filed a writ and had it heard. Again, once the documents at issue are produced, there would be no way to undo the harm of having privileged documents produced to the opposing parties, which would render the writ useless, even if Watchtower NY and North Congregation should prevail on the writ.

Counsel for defendants has met and conferred with plaintiffs' counsel on this issue, as is evidenced by the Declaration of Robert J. Schnack filed herewith. Plaintiffs have refused to agree to stay the ordered production of the documents. Therefore, defendants seek the Court's intervention and protection to stay the production of the documents until Watch Tower's writ rights can be addressed.

POINTS AND AUTHORITIES

California's Evidence Code establishes the clergy-penitent privilege. Evidence Code section 1032 states:

> "As used in this article, 'penitential communication' means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret." Evid. Code § 1032. "Whenever a privilege is claimed on the ground that the matter sought to be disclosed is a communication made in confidence in the course of the ... clergy-penitent ... relationship, the communication is presumed to have been made in confidence and the opponent of the claim of privilege has the burden of proof to establish that the communication was not confidential." Evid. Code §917(a) (emphasis added).

Watchtower NY and North Congregation have maintained since they were served with written discovery from plaintiffs, including a request for production of documents, that certain documents are privileged pursuant to Evidence Code sections 1030, et seq., including under section 1032. Despite the Court's September 29, 2005 ruling, Watchtower NY and North Congregation respectfully continue to contend that certain of the documents requested, and now ordered to be produced, fall within the clergy - penitent privilege and are protected from disclosure. Given the contention that the documents are privileged, defendants are in the process of preparing to timely file and pursue a writ on this issue.

Pursuant to the applicable authority, Watchtower NY and North Congregation have 60 days from entry of the order in which to file a writ. "A writ of review may be granted by any court when an inferior tribunal, board, or officer, exercising judicial functions, has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal, board, or officer, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy." CCP §1068. Writ proceedings are not the favored method for reviewing discovery orders because typically the delay caused by such review results in greater harm than in the enforcement of an improper discovery order. Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal.3d 1, 5, 123 Cal.Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739; Catanese v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal.App.4th 1159, 1163, 54 Cal.Rptr.2d 280; see also West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal.2d 407, 415, 15 Cal.Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295. However, writ review is appropriate on a motion to produce documents when the documents are subject to a claim of privilege.

> "Writ review of discovery rulings is generally limited to 'situations where (1) the issues presented are of first impression and of general importance to the trial courts and to the profession [citation], (2) the order denying discovery prevents a party from having a fair opportunity to litigate his or her case [citation], or (3) the ruling compelling discovery would violate a privilege [citations].' (Johnson v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal.App.4th 1050, 1061, 95 Cal.Rptr.2d 864.) Writ review is appropriate here because the trial court's order compelling the production of 172 documents violates a privilege allegedly held by OXY. 'Interlocutory review by writ is the only adequate remedy where a court orders production of documents which may be subject to a privilege, 'since once privileged matter has been disclosed there is no way to undo the harm which consists in the very disclosure.' [Citations.] "

OXY Resources California LLC v. Superior Court (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 874, 886-87, 9 Cal.Rptr.3d 621,632-33 (emphasis added).

Here, if defendants are forced to produce the documents requested prior to having the opportunity to exercise their right to pursue a writ, they will suffer undue and unfair harm and prejudice . If defendants prevail on the writ, but have previously had to produce the documents within the court-ordered 20 days, defendants will have effectively been forced to waive the privilege.

Watchtower NY and North Congregation have 60 days in which to file a writ for review of the court's order compelling production of the documents. "As a general rule, a writ petition should be filed within the 60-day period that is applicable to appeals. (Reynolds v. Superior Court (1883) 64 Cal. 372, 373, 28 P. 121; Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal.App.3d 496, 499, 165 Cal.Rptr. 748.) 'An appellate court may consider a petition for an extraordinary writ at any time [citation], but has discretion to deny a petition filed after the 60-day period applicable to appeals, and should do so absent "extraordinary circumstances" justifying the delay.' (Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court, supra, 107 Cal.App.3d at p. 499, 165 Cal.Rptr. 748, italics in original.)" Volkswagen of America, Inc. v. Superior Court (2001) 94 Cal.App.4th 695, 701, 114 Cal.Rptr.2d 541, 545. If defendants are forced to produce the documents prior to the 60-day time frame in which they have to file a writ, defendants will effectively be barred from any appellate review of this issue in these Track I cases. Therefore, defendants seek a stay on the production of documents ordered by the court in its September 29, 2005 ruling, at least until the time in which to file a writ has lapsed.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, defendants seek a stay on the production of documents ordered by the court in its September 29, 2005 ruling. Defendants respectfully request that production of the documents they contend are protected by the clergy - penitent privilege be stayed until the 60-day time in which to file a writ lapses or, if a writ is filed, until the writ can be heard and ruled on. Defendants submit that there would be no prejudice to plaintiffs, particularly compared to the undue prejudice that defendants would suffer if they were forced to disclose documents that might ultimately be held by the Court of Appeal to be privileged.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D. Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants.	Case No.: 26-22191 Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding no. 4374 DECLARATION OF ROBERT J. SCHNACK IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO STAY EXECUTION OF ORDER TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS PENDING WRIT DATE: TIME: DEPT: C TRIAL DATE: Not yet set

I, Robert J. Schnack, declare as follows:

1. I am an attorney licensed to practice law in California and Oregon, a shareholder in the law firm of Bullivant Houser Bailey PC, and one of the Church Defendants' attorneys of record in these coordinated actions. I am legally competent in all respects and make the following statements from personal knowledge, or on information and belief where so stated.

2. In the course and scope of discovery in the Track I coordinated cases, a request for production of documents was served on my clients by plaintiff's counsel, including requests for documents that defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY") and North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses of Red Bluff, California consider to be privileged pursuant to the penitent clergy-privilege and Evidence Code §§1030, et seq..

2. Watchtower NY and the North Congregation served written responses to plaintiffs' requests for production of documents, including objections that certain of the documents are privileged under the clergy-penitent privilege and Evidence Code §§1030.

3. On July 29, 2005, plaintiffs filed a motion to compel production of those documents, which was opposed by Watchtower and the North Congregation.

4. On August 31, 2005, the court heard oral argument on the motion to compel and took the matter under submission. A written ruling was filed on September 28, 2005, granting plaintiffs' motion and ordering that the documents be produced in 20 days.

5. After first receiving a copy of the court's written ruling on October 3, 2005, I contacted plaintiffs' counsel William Brelsford in an attempt to obtain plaintiffs' agreement to stay the production of the documents until Watchtower NY and North Congregation could determine whether to file a writ seeking appellate review of that ruling. No such agreement was forthcoming, and Watchtower NY and North Congregation have been forced to file this motion.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct, except where stated on information and belief, in which case I am informed and believe the information to be true and correct.

Executed this 18th day of October, 2005 at Gold River, California.

Rudy and Bill: Watch Tower PA has decided not to seek a writ on the adverse personal jurisdiction ruling, but will reserve the issue for appeal through an affirmative defense in its answer. Watchtower NY and the North Congregation have decided to pursue a writ on the clergy - penitent or minister - communicant privilege issue. Therefore, we will appear at ex parte on Wednesday, 10/19/2005 at 1:30 pm for a motion to stay execution of the court's order on the documents ordered produced that are subject to that privilege. The department has not been assigned but will be either Dept. B or Dept. C. When I check in one half hour ahead of time, the clerk will direct us to whichever department will be handling the matter. Hearing:
This matter comes before the Court on the Church Defendant's Motion for Protective Order and Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents Pending Writ.

The Court hears arguments of Counsel.

As to the Motion for Protective Order, the Court adopts the tentative ruling, makes it the order of the Court, and directs that it be included in the minutes as follows:

RULING: The defendants' motion for protective order is DENIED. Defendants have not established that the deposition notice for J.R. Brown is an impermissible "apex" deposition, as described in Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal.App.4th 1282. J.R. Brown has not been shown to be a management figure at the very top of defendants' organization, with no knowledge of the issues in this lawsuit. Rather, he is the head of a division (Director of the Office of Public Information) who signed a detailed letter concerning issues directly relevant to this action. Plaintiffs shall be permitted to depose Mr. Brown as requested.

The Court grants the Motion to Stay Execution of Order to Produce Documents Pending Writ and orders proceedings shall be stayed until a writ is filed with, and ruled upon by Court of Appeal.

Mr. Schnack shall prepare and submit an Order After Hearing.

Re: Charissa W., et al. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society, et al.
Napa County Superior Court Case No. 26-22191

and Coordinated Cases under JCCP No. 4374

Dear Judge Guadagni:

A case management conference is currently set for March 30, 2006 at 9:30 a.m. in these coordinated actions. However, the parties would like to advance the CMC to occur sometime on or before Friday, February 10th, if it would be convenient for the court to do so. There are some issues that the parties would like to discuss with the court, and it would be preferable, in my view, to schedule perhaps 15 minutes to discuss those issues with the court in chambers.

Thank you in advance for your consideration of this request.

Very truly yours,

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants. AND COORDINATED ACTIONS.	CASE NO: 26-22191 MOTION TO SET A TRIAL DATE Date: JUNE 23, 2006 Time: 9:00 AM Dept: A Judge: Raymond A. Guadagni Trial Date: None Set

I. BACKGROUND

On August 31, 2004, the Honorable Thomas E. Warriner, Judge of the Yolo County Superior Court, heard these Plaintiffs' Petition for Coordination of the above entitled coordinated actions. On September 3, 2004, Judge Warriner granted Plaintiffs' motion and designated Napa as the site for the coordination proceedings. Attached as Exhibit A is the Order Granting Petition for Coordination.

The Court's finding was based upon Plaintiffs' petition which was made pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure Section 404.1. That Section states:

> "Coordination of civil actions sharing a common question of fact or law is appropriate if one judge hearing all of the actions for all purposes in a selected site or sites will promote the ends of justice. . . ."

The Section states that the Judge is to take into account the following seven factors:

- The common question of fact or law is predominating and significant to the litigation;
- The convenience of parties, witnesses and counsel;
- The relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel;
- The efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower;
- The calendar of the courts;
- The disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders or judgments;
- The likelihood of settlement of the actions without further litigation should coordination be denied.

The Chairman of the Judicial Council designated the Presiding Judge of the Napa Superior Court to assign this matter to a Judge to sit as Coordination Trial Judge "to hear and determine the coordinated actions listed . . . , at the site or sites he or she finds appropriate." Attached as Exhibit B is a copy of the Order assigning these matters to the Napa Presiding Judge.

Initially, the Honorable Scott Snowden was assigned to these matters, and, upon Judge Snowden's retirement, the Honorable Raymond A. Guadagni assumed his responsibilities. As the designated Coordination Judge, this Court "may exercise all the powers over each coordinated action that are available to a Judge of the Court in which that action is pending." California Rule of Court 1540(b). By the instant motion, Plaintiffs seek to have these matters assigned trial dates and settlement conference dates.

II. TRIAL DATES

Plaintiffs request that these matters be set for trial. These matters have been pending for a considerable period of time and significant discovery has been conducted. The assignment of trial dates will aid in bringing these matters to a conclusion.

A. Settlement Negotiations

On May 8, 2006, the parties engaged in informal settlement discussions in New York City but the discussions were unsuccessful. Discussions were confined to the Ward and West/Pence matters.

B. Place and Date of Trial

The decision by Yolo County Superior Court Judge Thomas P. Warriner that the Napa County Superior Court should be designated as the site for the coordination proceedings was a decision which Judge Warriner felt to be appropriate. Plaintiffs still contend that Napa County is the appropriate Superior Court for these coordinated actions. Napa is accessible to the attorneys and litigants in these actions. In addition, the size of the court makes it more conducive to the calendaring of these matters and assignment of judges and courtrooms. If this Court is inclined to transfer the trial of these actions to another county, Plaintiffs would request that assignment be to a county which has sufficient judicial resources to accommodate an efficient and timely trial which will last anywhere from ten to fifteen days each. As stated above, Plaintiffs feel that Napa is the logical and appropriate choice. Other possible selections might include Sacramento, Sonoma or Bay Area Counties such as Marin or Alameda. At the time of the hearing on this matter, Plaintiffs will have obtained information regarding the judicial workloads and trial availability of the various counties suggested.

C. Trials to be Assigned and Potential Trial Dates

At the present time, Plaintiffs are not seeking an order that these various matters be set for a single trial nor are they seeking the impaneling of separate juries which would hear more than one matter, but only determine a single matter. The gravamen of Defendants' opposition to Plaintiffs' motion to coordinate was the argument that there are separate facts which are applicable to each of these cases of sexual abuse and separate facts applicable to the damages sustained by the various Plaintiffs. Without conceding Defendants' argument, Plaintiffs presently seek to have the trials set separately.

At the present time, the case which is most appropriate for assignment of a trial date is West/Pence. Each of the three Plaintiffs had their depositions completed by defense counsel. A key witness's deposition has also been completed. The perpetrator, Timothy Silva, cannot be located and may be dead. Arrangements are under way to schedule a few remaining depositions which Plaintiffs expect will be completed in July or August. Therefore, Plaintiffs request this case be set for trial in late 2006 or early 2007.

The remaining two cases are similarly ready for trial assignment, but it is requested these cases be scheduled after trial of West/Pence. It is suggested that Ward be considered for a trial date in April 2007 and Wimberley in June 2007.

III. CONCLUSION

Based upon the powers vested in the Coordination Trial Judge by the California Code of Civil Procedure and California Rules of Court, it is requested that a trial date be assigned for the matter of West/Pence.

Respectfully submitted,

CHURCH DEFENDANTS' RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO SET TRIAL DATES

Date of Hearing: June 23, 2006
Time: 9:00 am
Dept: The Hon. Raymond Guadagni

The Church Defendants respectfully submit this response to plaintiffs' motion to set trial dates.

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs' motion to set trial dates is flawed in a few respects. First, contrary to the apparent position taken in plaintiffs' motion, the Court should not abandon the current "track approach" or "track system" that plaintiffs' counsel so strenuously had advocated be adopted in these coordinated cases. Indeed, as the chronology set forth in the next section (and the concurrently filed declaration of defense counsel) details, at plaintiff's urging Judge Snowden formally adopted a "track approach" to managing these cases. With plaintiffs' counsel's express consent, two of the coordinated cases were ultimately designated as "Track I" cases. Those two "Track I" coordinated cases -- the Tehama County cases of Tim W. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, et al., and Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez, et al v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, et al. -- were the only cases that were to move forward with full discovery and depositions.

Discovery and depositions in the Track I cases have moved forward, and the Church Defendants do not object to trial dates being set in Tehama County for the two Track I cases, provided such trial dates allow for (i) the completion of depositions and discovery both sides will request, (ii) any IME's required by the defense, (iii) adequate time for summary judgment and summary adjudication motions to be filed and heard by the Court, (iv) adequate time for expert discovery, etc.

Second, the Court should not abandon the track approach and thereby allow all of the remaining coordinated cases to proceed with full discovery and depositions. The so-called "non-Track I" cases were originally filed in a number of different counties. Thus, different congregations and different local elders, as well as different local percipient or fact witnesses, will be involved in depositions in each non-Track I case. (Each non-Track I case also involves different congregations, local elders, and local percipient witnesses than the two Track I cases.) Each case has its own particular facts that will govern discovery and depositions, including the alleged facts and circumstances relating to each plaintiff's alleged abuse and the facts that each plaintiff will claim supports the liability claimed against the local congregation defendant in each case and against Watchtower New York. There simply are not any facts that predominate in the coordinated cases to suggest that discovery can somehow be streamlined by allowing full discovery in all cases to proceed now.

Significantly, allowing full discovery and depositions to proceed in all of the non-Track I cases alongside the Track I cases would only serve to greatly slow the process of these coordinated cases overall, thereby resulting in extensive delays in getting even the Track I cases ready for trial. Thus, the Court would be acting prematurely in setting any trial dates in the non-Track I cases, much less allowing those cases to proceed with full discovery and depositions.

Third, the Church Defendants object to having any of the coordinated cases tried in a venue other than the county in which each case was originally filed. Thus, for example, the two Track I cases should be tried in Tehama County; the Ken L. case should be tried in Placer County; the Charissa W., et al case and the Tabitha H. case should each be tried in Napa County; the Daniel West, et al case should be tried in Yolo County, etc.

II. DISCUSSION

Chronology regarding the Court's adoption of the "track approach" and the selection of "Track I" cases. Initially, the Church Defendants believe it is imperative that this Court (The Honorable Raymond Guadagni) have a full understanding of the history of these cases. (Due to Judge Snowden's retirement from the bench last August, this Court did not become involved in these cases until late August 2005.) Therefore, we provide as concise an overview as possible of events leading up to the adoption by Judge Snowden of the "track approach," supported by the declaration of defense counsel Robert J. Schnack.

These cases were ordered coordinated after plaintiffs filed a petition for coordination, and the Napa County Superior Court was designated as the court to oversee the cases. Judge Snowden thus became the Judge initially charged with oversight of these cases. At that time, there were 11 cases.

One of plaintiffs' Texas attorneys, Gregory Love, first advocated to Judge Snowden in an October 18, 2004 hearing that a "track approach" should be adopted to manage these coordinated cases. (That hearing was held to address case management issues, including the extent of coordination and related issues. At the hearing, Judge Snowden ordered all discovery stayed.) At a subsequent hearing on December 9, 2004, Judge Snowden informed counsel that a "track approach" or "track system" would be adopted by the Court, and Judge Snowden further ordered that all discovery and other proceedings in the coordinated cases be further stayed until a January 7, 2005 hearing. Judge Snowden advised all counsel that at the January 7th hearing, he expected the parties would each select two cases to be so-called "Track I" cases because there were then 10 remaining coordinated cases.

At the January 7, 2005 hearing, plaintiffs' counsel selected the Napa County case of Charissa W. and the Tehama County case of Tim W. as their Track I cases. On behalf of the Church Defendants, defense counsel selected the Sonoma County cases of Jocelyn A. and Dennis S. as Track I cases. Plaintiffs' counsel then immediately advised Judge Snowden that they expected to dismiss those two Sonoma County cases once they received signed authorizations from all of the named plaintiffs in those cases. The court then directed counsel for the Church Defendants to designate a further Track I selection, and the Sonoma County case of Danielle A. was designated as a Track I case, in the event that one of the other Sonoma County cases was going to be dismissed by plaintiffs. After further discussions with the Court that day, Judge Snowden set a further hearing for the morning of January 28, 2005, by which time plaintiffs' counsel were to either have those three Sonoma County cases dismissed or have directed the plaintiffs in those cases to personally appear at the January 28th hearing to discuss with the Court whether they would indeed pursue their cases. Judge Snowden also advised all counsel that that if the three Sonoma County cases were dismissed, he would consider whether it made sense to have only two Track I cases instead of four, i.e., having plaintiffs and the Church Defendants each select only one Track I case. (The new hearing date was later changed to February 4, 2006.)

Also at the January 7th hearing, Judge Snowden lifted the stay with respect to the further discovery requested by plaintiffs from defendant Watch Tower Pennsylvania with regard to the personal jurisdiction issue. (Recall that Watch Tower Pennsylvania had filed motions to quash service in each of the cases, challenging whether Watch Tower Pennsylvania was subject to personal jurisdiction in California.) The Court gave plaintiffs' counsel leave to then file a motion to compel discovery from Watch Tower Pennsylvania based on certain objections raised by Watch Tower Pennsylvania in its written discovery responses and at the August 2004 deposition of Watch Tower Pennsylvania's "PMK" on personal jurisdiction issues. The Court also discussed with counsel the procedures that would best facilitate resolution of the Church Defendants' pending demurrers and motions to strike certain allegations from each of the complaints in the various coordinated cases.

At the next hearing on February 4th, plaintiffs' counsel advised the Court that they would file dismissals early the following week as to six of the seven plaintiffs in two of cases that had been filed in Sonoma County. Thus the Jocelyn A. case was later dismissed in its entirety, and the Dennis S. case was dismissed as to all named plaintiffs expect plaintiff Fred F. With respect to plaintiff Fred F., as well as with respect to the only named plaintiff in the Danielle A. case, which also is a Sonoma County case, plaintiffs' counsel advised the court that they would file motions to withdraw as counsel for Fred F. and Danielle A. (Those motions were later filed by plaintiffs' counsel, and the Court granted the motion.)

Then, still at the February 4th hearing, and because only seven coordinated cases would remain, Judge Snowden ordered, with the consent of plaintiffs' counsel and the Church Defendants' counsel, that there should be only two "Track I" cases, one selected by plaintiffs and one selected by the Church Defendants. Plaintiffs selected the Tim W. case from Tehama County, and the Church Defendants selected the Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez, et al case, also from Tehama County. At the same hearing, Judge Snowden set a schedule for certain discovery, for hearing the Church Defendants' demurrers and pleading motions and for plaintiffs' discovery motions concerning Watch Tower Pennsylvania, etc. A hearing date was set for August 22, 2005. However, because of Judge Snowden's retirement from the bench in August, Judge Gaudagni began his oversight of these coordinated cases at that August 22nd hearing.

Plaintiffs apparently will contend that because "only six" coordinated cases remain, the "track approach" has no value in managing these cases. The Court should not be misled by plaintiffs' argument because, as noted, there were just seven coordinated cases remaining when the track approach was implemented and the two Track I cases were selected by the parties. (The cases now number six, because plaintiffs' counsel recently dismissed with prejudice the Javier C. case because plaintiff Javier C. died in February 2005.) The fact that six, rather than seven, cases remain does not warrant or justify abandonment of the track approach earlier proposed by plaintiffs' counsel and adopted by the Court.

Overview of discovery and depositions in the Track I cases and setting of trial dates. In the two Track I cases selected by the parties (Tim W. and Wimberley), there has been extensive written discovery exchanged, and the Court has already ruled on a discovery motion related to the written discovery. Numerous depositions have also been taken, as follows. Depositions of the three Track I plaintiffs were taken in Sacramento (Tim W. and Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez) and in Westlake Village in Ventura County (Joshua Wimberley). Depositions of the two individual defendants, James Henderson and Alvin Heard (who are both in pro per defendants), were taken in Redding and in eastern Oregon, respectively. The ex-wife of defendant Alvin Heard (Hazel Heard Faulkner) was deposed in Chico. The mother and stepfather of the Wimberley plaintiffs (Carol Badger and James Badger) were deposed in Westlake Village. Depositions of two of the Wimberley plaintiffs' alleged "notice" witnesses (Dellean Heard and JoAnn Heard Loffler) were taken in Daytona Beach, Florida. And two representatives of defendant Watchtower New York were deposed in Brooklyn, New York. Thus, substantial progress had been made to date in discovery and depositions and, as this Court is aware, both sides made good faith efforts over the last six months to get the cases ready for recent resolution discussions that proved unsuccessful.

Going forward, both sides have indicated they will send out additional written discovery and notice additional depositions. Plaintiffs' counsel will request depositions of elders who were in the defendant Red Bluff congregation during the relevant time periods and of various "persons most knowledgeable" in defendant Watchtower New York and the defendant congregation, as well as other persons. The Church Defendants will take further depositions of family members of the Track I plaintiffs, other alleged "notice" witnesses to be identified by plaintiffs, and perhaps other persons. The Church Defendants anticipate a possible IME of one or more of the Track I plaintiffs. There will be expert discovery and expert depositions. The Church Defendants also anticipate filing motions for summary adjudication in both Track I cases, as well as possible motions for summary judgment in the Wimberley case.

Given the discovery and depositions outlined above and the current Code of Civil Procedure rules creating the long lead time for summary judgment and summary adjudication motions, the Church Defendants propose that the Court set a trial date for the two Track I cases in the April - May 2007 time frame.

The venue for trials should be in the county in which each case originated. The Track I cases both arose out of alleged abuse that occurred in Tehama County, and plaintiffs filed the two lawsuits there. The convenience of witnesses, particularly the many non-party witnesses, heavily favors conducting the trials in Tehama County.

The plaintiffs lived in the Red Bluff area with their families when the alleged abuse occurred. The Red Bluff congregation is a party defendant in each Track I case, and current and former elders from that congregation will undoubtedly be called as witnesses at the trials of these two cases. Defendant in pro per James Henderson lives in Red Bluff and will undoubtedly be called to testify at trial in the Tim W. case. Defendant Henderson appears to be of limited financial means, so a trial outside of Tehama County would very likely cause undue financial and other hardship for him. Therapists seen by plaintiff Tim W. and plaintiff Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez still live and practice in the Red Bluff/Redding areas. Hazel Heard Faulkner lives and works in the Chico area. Thus, the convenience of the witnesses, including many non-party witnesses, weighs heavily in favor of having the trials of the Track I cases held in Tehama County.

Plaintiffs have not submitted any evidence to this Court that an impartial trial cannot be held in Tehama County (or in any county in which any of the coordinated cases were originally filed). Indeed, plaintiffs do not make any arguments to this Court that the ends of justice require a trial in some location other than the county in which each case originated, that the convenience of witnesses would be promoted by holding trials in some venue other than the county of origin, or that Tehama County is not the proper court in which these Track I cases should be tried. Plaintiffs' counsel do not appear to appreciate that the logistics of a trial held outside the county of origin will cause undue financial and other hardship for all local non-party witnesses. The Track I cases should be tried in Tehama County, and the other cases should later be tried in the counties in which they each were filed.

The Daniel West, et al case should not be the first case tried. Plaintiffs disingenuously suggest that the Yolo County case of Daniel West, et al (hereafter West/Pence") is "the most appropriate" of the coordinated cases for assignment of a trial date. Although the three plaintiffs and an alleged "notice" witness have been deposed, no other depositions have been taken. (The parties agreed late last year to proceed with the plaintiffs' depositions in the West/Pence case to try and facilitate resolution discussions. The deposition of the alleged "notice" witness was taken in Portland, Oregon only because counsel were already scheduled to be in Oregon for the Alvin Heard deposition, and the alleged "notice" witness now resides in the Portland area.)

Significantly, however, no other depositions have been taken, unlike in the two Track I cases discussed above. In addition, plaintiffs have not even requested documents from the Church Defendants relating to the alleged abuser, Timothy Silva, nor have plaintiffs yet pursued other discovery like they already have in the Track I cases. Although Timothy Silva has allegedly disappeared, the Church Defendants have reason to believe he may be located, and Mr. Silva will certainly be deposed if located. Also, Mr. Silva's family members with whom he lived for a time in Woodland have not yet been deposed, and numerous other local percipient or fact witnesses have not been deposed, including a number of elders plaintiffs now wish to depose.

For all of these reasons, the West/Pence case is not "as far along" as the Track I cases, and the Track I cases selected by the parties should be the first cases scheduled for trials. Plaintiffs' suggestion that West/Pence be the first case set for trial should be denied.

III. CONCLUSION

For each of the independent reasons discussed above, the Court should (i) continue with the track approach (that plaintiffs' counsel urged be adopted) to managing these cases, (ii) allow the two Track I cases earlier selected by the parties to proceed with further discovery and depositions so that they are ready for trials by the April – May 2007 time frame, (iii) order that the trials of the Track I cases be held in Tehama County, their county of origin, (iv) not allow the non-Track I cases to proceed with full discovery and depositions, because that will only slow the progress of the Track I cases toward trial, and (v) order that trials of the non-Track I cases also be conducted in their counties of origin.

JCCP No. 4374

DECLARATION OF ROBERT J. SCHNACK IN SUPPORT OF CHURCH DEFENDANTS' RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO SET TRIAL DATES

Date of Hearing: June 23, 2006
Time: 9:00 am
Dept: The Hon. Raymond Guadagnie

I, ROBERT J. SCHNACK, do declare as follows:

1. I am a shareholder of the law firm of Bullivant Houser Bailey, PC, 1415 L Street, Suite 1000, Sacramento, California 95814. I am licensed to practice law in California and Oregon. I am one of the attorneys of record for the Church Defendants in these coordinated actions. I make the following statements upon personal knowledge.

2. These cases were ordered coordinated after plaintiffs filed a petition for coordination, and the Napa County Superior Court was designated as the court to oversee the coordinated cases. Judge Snowden thus became the Judge initially charged with oversight of these cases.

3. One of plaintiffs' Texas attorneys, Gregory Love, first advocated to Judge Snowden in an October 18, 2004 hearing that a "track approach" should be adopted to manage these coordinated cases. (That hearing was held to address case management issues, including the extent of coordination. At the hearing, Judge Snowden ordered all discovery stayed.) At a subsequent hearing on December 9, 2004, Judge Snowden informed counsel that a track approach or track system would be adopted, and Judge Snowden further ordered that all discovery and other proceedings in the coordinated cases be stayed until a January 7, 2005 hearing. Judge Snowden advised counsel that at the January 7th hearing, he expected the parties would each select two cases to be so-called "Track I" cases, because there were then 10 remaining coordinated cases.

4. At the January 7, 2005 hearing, plaintiffs' counsel selected the Napa County case of Charissa W. and the Tehama County case of Tim W. as their Track I cases. On behalf of the Church Defendants, I selected the Sonoma County cases of Jocelyn A. and Dennis S. as Track I cases. Plaintiffs' counsel then immediately advised Judge Snowden that they expected to dismiss those two Sonoma County cases once they received signed authorizations from all of the named plaintiffs. The court then directed me, counsel for the Church Defendants, to designate a further Track I selection, and the Sonoma County case of Danielle A. was designated as a Track I case, in the event that one of the other Sonoma County cases was going to be dismissed by plaintiffs. After further discussions with the Court that day, Judge Snowden set a further hearing for the morning of January 28, 2005, by which time plaintiffs' counsel were to either have those three Sonoma County cases dismissed or have directed the plaintiffs in those cases to personally appear at the January 28th hearing to discuss with the Court whether they would indeed pursue their cases. Judge Snowden also advised all counsel that that if the three Sonoma County cases were dismissed, he would consider whether it made sense to have only two Track I cases instead of four, i.e., having plaintiffs and the Church Defendants each select only one Track I case. (The new hearing date was later changed to February 4, 2006.)

5. At the January 7th hearing, Judge Snowden also lifted the stay with respect to the further discovery requested by plaintiffs from Watch Tower Pennsylvania with regard to the personal jurisdiction issue. (Recall that Watch Tower Pennsylvania had filed motions to quash service in each of the cases, challenging whether Watch Tower Pennsylvania was subject to personal jurisdiction in California.) The Court gave plaintiffs' counsel leave to then file a motion to compel discovery from Watch Tower Pennsylvania based on certain objections raised by Watch Tower Pennsylvania in its written discovery responses and at the August 2004 deposition of Watch Tower Pennsylvania's "PMK" on personal jurisdiction issues. The Court also discussed with counsel the procedures that would best facilitate resolution of the Church Defendants' pending demurrers and motions to strike certain allegations from each of the complaints in the various coordinated cases.

6. At the next hearing on February 4th, plaintiffs' counsel advised the Court that they would file dismissals early the following week as to six of the seven plaintiffs in two of cases that had been filed in Sonoma County. Thus the Jocelyn A. case was later dismissed in its entirety, and the Dennis S. case was dismissed as to all named plaintiffs expect plaintiff Fred F. With respect to plaintiff Fred F., as well as with respect to the only named plaintiff in the Danielle A. case, which also is a Sonoma County case, plaintiffs' counsel advised the court that they would file motions to withdraw as counsel for Fred F. and Danielle A. (Those motions were later filed by plaintiffs' counsel and granted by the Court.)

7. Then, still at the February 4th hearing, and because only seven coordinated cases would remain, Judge Snowden ordered, with the parties' consent, that there should be only two "Track I" cases, one selected by plaintiffs and one selected by the Church Defendants. Plaintiffs selected the Tim W. case from Tehama County, and the Church Defendants selected the Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez, et al case, also from Tehama County. At the same hearing, Judge Snowden set a schedule for certain discovery, for hearing the Church Defendants' demurrers and pleading motions and for plaintiffs' discovery motions concerning Watch Tower Pennsylvania, etc. A hearing date was set for August 22, 2005. However, because of Judge Snowden's retirement from the bench in August, Judge Gaudagni began his oversight of these coordinated cases at that August 22nd hearing.

8. Plaintiffs apparently will contend that because "only six" coordinated cases remain, the "track approach" has no value in managing these cases. However, as noted above , there were just seven coordinated cases remaining when the track approach was implemented by Judge Snowden and the two Track I cases were selected by the parties. (The cases now number six, because plaintiffs' counsel recently dismissed the Javier C. case because plaintiff Javier C. died in February 2005.) The fact that six, rather than seven, cases remain does not warrant or justify abandonment of the track approach earlier proposed by plaintiffs' counsel and adopted by the Court.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my knowledge, information, and belief.

Executed on June 7, 2006, in Sacramento, California.

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants. AND COORDINATED ACTIONS.	CASE NO: 26-22191 Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. 4374 REPLY TO DEFENDANTS RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFFS MOTION TO SET TRIAL DATES Date: June 23, 2006 Time: 9:00 a.m. Dept.: A Trial Date: None

Plaintiffs take this opportunity to briefly reply to Defendants Response to Plaintiffs Motion to Set Trial Dates.

I

REQUEST TO SET TRIAL DATES

As set forth in Plaintiffs' Motion, as the designated Coordination Judge, this Court has the power to set trial dates and also has the power to make any other appropriate orders concerning these matters as the Court sees fit. California Rule of Court 1540 (b). Defendants' Response consists of eight (8) pages arguing that an earlier agreed upon "Track" approach should be followed. Defendants, without citing any legal authority, then request that this Court order that the Track 1 cases proceed with discovery and then be sent back to Tehama County for trial. The Defendants further request that the non-Track 1 cases not be allowed to proceed with discovery and request that non-Track 1 cases also be sent to their original counties. Defendants cite no legal authority which would support their request. This Court should proceed as requested by Plaintiffs in their Motion to Set Trial Dates and should set the matters for trial before this Court.

RECEIVED
JUN 16 2006
NAPA SUPERIOR COURT

II

PRIOR ORDERS

Defendants Response references prior "orders" by Judge Snowden at a February 4, 2005 hearing (See Declaration of Robert L. Schnack at paragraph 7.) However, Plaintiffs' counsel are unable to find any formal orders which were made by any Judges regarding case management of these cases. After conferring with the Napa Superior Court Clerks, Plaintiffs' are aware that there is a Minute Order discussing the Court's execution of an Order after the February 4, 2005 Case Management Conference. It is believed that this is referencing a Joint Status Report which was faxed between counsel for Plaintiffs' and counsel for Defendants'. However, Plaintiffs' are unable to locate any final draft of this document and are unaware that any such document was ever filed. Plaintiffs' files do not contain any orders which have been made by any prior Courts concerning the case management of this matter.

Even assuming there had been prior discussions or agreements concerning discovery and trials of the various cases, there is nothing to prevent this Court from changing any earlier agreed upon methods of bringing these matters to trial. As set forth in Plaintiffs' Motion, the West/Pence case is most appropriate for assignment of a trial date. The Ward and Wimberley cases would be most appropriately set after the West/Pence matter.

III

VENUE OF TRIALS

This Court has the power to set these matters for trial in whichever County is deemed appropriate by this Court. Attached is the Declaration of Cynthia Austin-Walters regarding the various counties trial setting schedules. It is hoped that this information can be supplemented prior to the hearing on this matter. As can be seen, short of hiring a Judge and renting a courtroom facility, it is unlikely that a date certain can be obtained for the trial of these matters if they are assigned back to their original counties. This is precisely why this Court has been appointed as the Coordination Court for this series of cases from numerous counties. The most efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower can best be met if these matters are assigned to trial in Napa County before this Court.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants. AND COORDINATED ACTIONS.	CASE NO: 26-22191 Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. 4374 DECLARATION OF CYNTHIA AUSTIN-WALTERS IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS REPLY Date: June 23, 2006 Time: 9:00 a.m. Dept.: A Trial Date: None

I, Cynthia Austin-Walters, hereby declare:

I am employed by the law firm of Nolen & Associates. I was instructed to contact the County Clerk's of the below listed counties and request information as to a) trial dates, b) courtroom availability, c) possibility of a 12-15 day trial in that specific county.

1. On June 9, 2006 I contacted the following court clerks requesting this information. I received the following responses:

2. Tehama County Clerk - Renee (530) 527-3484 - Matter first goes to a Case Management Conference. She suggested that all the attorneys coordinate and obtain available dates so that we have several dates to submit for trial. Trial has to be scheduled within 90 days of the setting date. She cannot guarantee a courtroom. Did suggest perhaps hiring a Judge (Tehama had a six-week trial in which a Judge from JAMS was hired and the trial was held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in their Juvenile Justice Center).

3. Placer County Clerk - (530) 889-6530 - The Watchtower cases she has have all been dismissed. Submit request for trial dates on any Monday after the lst week in July. Do not schedule trial for September 4 or October 9 weeks as those Mondays are holidays. Likelihood of being sent out is uncertain.

4. Sacramento County Clerk - (916) 874-5446 - Setting trials in September, likelihood of going out unknown until trial date gets closer. Did not seem to feel that a 12-15 day trial was a problem.

5. Sonoma County Clerk - (707) 565-1100 - Could not get through to clerk.

6. Yolo County Clerk - (530) 406-6704 - Could not get through to clerk.

7. Napa County Clerk - (707) 299-1130 - Left message for Margie Fair - no return call as of today's date.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

(collectively "Church Defendants") are defendants in two actions now pending in Tehama County Superior Court and entitled Tim W. v. Watchtower New York, et al., Case No. 52594, and Wimberley-Gutierrez v. Watchtower New York, et al., Case No. 52598, which are collectively referred to herein as "Track I Cases." The Track I Cases were earlier coordinated with other cases in Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. 4374, including the so-called lead case pending in respondent Napa County Superior Court entitled Charissa W. v. Watchtower New York, et al., Case No.

26-22191. (Exh. K, pp. 407-08.) Plaintiffs in the Track I Cases are named herein as the real parties in interest.

CHRONOLOGY OF PERTINENT EVENTS

3. These Track I Cases arise from the alleged sexual abuse by co-defendant James Henderson in Tim W. that occurred more than 10 years ago and co-defendant Alvin Heard in Wimberley that occurred more than 24 years ago.

4. On July 24, 2003, Plaintiffs filed separate civil complaints against the Church Defendants asserting claims arising from allegations that the Church Defendants failed to report and/or disclose their knowledge of child abuse allegedly committed by James Henderson and Alvin Heard. (Exh. A, p. 5.)

5. On January 13, 2005, Plaintiffs propounded document requests to the Church Defendants seeking, inter alia, documents and information related to confidential spiritual communications that penitents Henderson and Heard had separately with clergy within a Jehovah's Witness congregation. (Exh. A, p. 5.)

6. On April 5, 2005, the Church Defendants objected to certain of Plaintiffs' document requests on the grounds that the responsive documents are protected from disclosure by the penitent-clergy privilege and the attorney-client privilege. (Exh. A, p. 5.)

7. On July 29, 2005, Plaintiffs filed a motion to compel responses to their requests for production of documents, arguing that the documents sought are not protected by either the penitent-clergy or attorney-client privileges. (Exh. A, pp. 1-246.)

8. On August 19, 2005, the Church Defendants filed their opposition to the motion to compel, asserting the requested documents were protected from disclosure based on privilege and constitutional grounds. (Exh. B, pp. 247-300.)

9. The documents at issue in the underlying motion to compel relate to spiritual communications between pentinent James Henderson and ordained elders of the Jehovah's Witnesses, and spiritual communications between penitent Alvin heard and ordained elders of the Jehovah's Witnesses. (See, Exh. E, pp. 331-40.)

10 On September 29, 2005, the trial court granted, in part, Plaintiffs' motion to compel and ordered the Church Defendants to produce all documents for which they previously asserted the penitent-clergy privilege. The trial court also ordered the Church Defendants to produce a privilege log with respect to all documents for which they asserted the attorney-client privilege, reserving Plaintiffs' right to challenge the log. (Exh. F.)

11 On October 24, 2005, the trial court granted the Church Defendant's motion to stay execution of order to produce documents until such time that a writ can be filed and ruled upon by the Court of Appeal. (Exh. G.)

12. On November 22, 2005, the trial court entered its stipulated order extending the time for the filing of the instant writ to April 28, 2006. (Exh. H.) On May 1, 2006, the trial court entered a further stipulated order extending the time for the filing of the instant writ up to and including June 30, 2006. (Exh. I.)

BASIS FOR RELIEF

13. The issue presented in this writ petition is whether the trial court erred in granting the motion to compel. In granting the motion, the trial court abused its discretion because disclosure of the requested documents is prohibited by (1) the penitent-clergy privilege, (2) the First Amendment of the United States Constitution, and (3) the free exercise clause in both the federal and the California constitution.

ABSENCE OF OTHER REMEDIES

14. Interlocutory review is the only adequate remedy for the trial court's order compelling the Church Defendants to produce potentially privileged documents since "once privileged matter has been disclosed there is no way to undo the harm which consists in the very disclosure." (Korea Data Systems Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 Cal.App.4th 1513, 1516.)

PRAYER

Petitioners/Church Defendants pray that this Court:

1. Issue an alternative writ directing respondent superior court set aside and vacate its order of September 29, 2005, granting Plaintiffs' motion to compel, or show cause why it should not be ordered to do so, and upon return of the alternative writ, issue a peremptory writ of mandate and/or probation or such other extraordinary relief as is warranted, directing respondent superior court to set aside and vacate its order of September 29, 2005, granting

Plaintiffs' motion to compel, and to enter a new and different order denying the motion;

2. Award Petitioners/Church Defendants their costs pursuant to Rule 56.4 of the California Rules of Court; and

3. Grant such other relief as may be just and proper.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS & AUTHORITIES

I. WRIT OF MANDATE IS NECESSARY

A. The issue is whether confidential spiritual communications by a penitent to a "judicial committee" of ordained Jehovah's Witness elders are protected by the penitent-clergy privilege.

1. Overview of penitent-clergy privilege

A penitent has a privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a penitential communication. (Evid. Code § 1033.) Similarly, a member of the clergy has an independent privilege to refuse to disclose a penitential communication if he or she claims the privilege. (Evid. Code § 1034.) A penitent is defined simply as "a person who has made a penitential communication to a clergyman." (Evid. Code § 1031.) A "penitential communication" is defined as a communication made (1) in confidence, (2) in the presence of no third persons so far as the penitent is aware, (3) to a member of the clergy who, incident to the tenets of his or her religious denomination, is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications and (4) has a duty to keep such communications secret. (Evid. Code § 1032.)

There is no requirement that the communication "have as its purpose the confession of a 'flawed act' to 'receive religious consolation and guidance in return' in order to be privileged." (Doe 2 v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 1504, 1518.) Rather, the privilege applies to any communication that fits the statutory description. (See Cal. Law Revision Com. com., West's Ann. Cal.Evid. Code (2006) foll. §§1032.) (statute extends protection of privilege beyond just "confessions".)

2. Overview of clergy for the Jehovah's Witnesses

Congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are not led by a priest or pastor but instead by appointed lay clergy called elders. Congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are provided spiritual oversight on a local level by a small group of elders recognized as ordained ministers and ordained elders. (See Exh B, pp. 285-86, 292, 297.) Elders are not automatically appointed to serve in a congregation. Rather, they must first meet strict Scriptural qualifications as outlined in the Bible and must also be recommended and approved by current congregation elders, an elder serving as circuit overseer, and the Service Department at the U.S. Branch Office Jehovah's. (See Exh. B, pp. 285-86.) Once an individual is approved and appointed to serve as a congregation elder, a letter from the Branch Office is read to the congregation and the individual is officially vested with ministerial authority and is ordained as an elder. (See Breaux Affidavit ¶ 6.) All elders of the Red Bluff congregation are and were at all times relevant to these cases ordained ministers and spiritual leaders of those congregations. (See Exh. B, p. 287.)

The congregation elders are responsible for the spiritual development and spiritual teaching of the members of the congregation, as well as for pastoral care. (See Exh. B, pp. 273-74, 286, 292, 297.) Elders frequently provide spiritual counsel and advice to members of the congregation concerning highly confidential personal and spiritual matters. (See Exh. B, p. 287.) According to the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, congregation elders are expected to keep confessions and other spiritual communications confidential. (See Exh. B, pp. 274, 280-81, 287-88, 293-94, 298-99.)

From time to time, congregation elders, including those in Red Bluff, communicated with elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit overseers and district overseers, in order to receive spiritual guidance and advice as to how to apply the religious doctrine and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses to issues concerning the congregation and its members. (See Exh. B, p. 287.) All such spiritual communications between congregation elders and the Branch Office Service Department, circuit overseer or district overseer must be kept strictly confidential under the religious tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. (See Exh. B, p. 287.)

Congregation elders are also responsible for conducting "judicial investigations" where a member of the congregation is accused of a serious wrongdoing or sin. (See Exh. B, pp. 274-87.) The goal of a judicial investigation, which is conducted by two elders, is to ensure that the congregation remains spiritually and morally clean, and the elders endeavor to provide spiritual counseling and assistance to those who may have erred, with the hope of helping them to regain their spirituality and relationship with God. (See Exh. B, pp. 274, 287.) At times after a judicial investigation, a "judicial committee" consisting of three or more elders will be formed and will determine whether a person accused of sin should be ecclesiastically disciplined, based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible. (See Exh. B, pp. 275, 287.) The "judicial committee" consists of three or more elders because Jehovah's Witnesses believe that men are imperfect and, therefore, three elders can provide more full and complete spiritual counseling and guidance based on a broader range of experience and knowledge than can a single elder alone. (See Exh. B, p. 275.) Pursuant to the beliefs, tenets and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses, all spiritual communications taking place during a "judicial investigation" and during a "judicial committee" are extremely private and strictly confidential. (See Exh B., pp. 275, 288.)

Where a serious sin is involved, the "judicial committee", in line with teachings of the Bible, may recommend religious discipline, called reproof (which can be private or public) or disfellowshipping. (See Exh. B, pp. 274-75.) When a member is subject to public reproof or disfellowshipping, an announcement is made during a congregation meeting simply to the effect that "[name] has been reproved" or "[name] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses." (See Id.) If a member suffers disfellowshipping, the "judicial committee" forwards a document to the Service Department in New York with only the name of the disfellowshipped person, the date of disfellowshipping, and a brief description of the Scriptural reason for disfellowshipping. However, the information on the card does not reveal the contents of the penitent's communications to the "judicial committee." (See Id.)

The confidentiality of spiritual communications between members of the congregation and elders is a foundational element of the religious beliefs and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses. (See Exh. B, pp. 274, 281, 287-88, 292-94, 297-99.) Jehovah's Witnesses recognize the Bible's admonition to confess one's sins to God and believe that there is a great benefit from speaking to congregation elders regarding such confidential spiritual matters. (See Exh. B, pp. 287-88.) As such, Jehovah's Witnesses encourage those who need spiritual assistance to approach the congregation elders and convey to them whatever information may be necessary to provide such spiritual assistance. (See Exh. B, pp. 288, 292, 297.)

Because open and free communication between congregation members and elders is required to provide spiritual guidance under the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, emphasis is placed on privacy and strict confidentiality. (See Exh B, pp.75, 281, 288, 293-94, 298-99 .) The confidentiality requirements with respect to such church communications are explained in official church literature and publications. (See Exh B., pp. 288, 293-94, 298-99) Congregants expect that all spiritual communications with congregation elders will remain strictly confidential. (See Exh B., pp. 288, 293-94, 298-99.) Further, revealing confidential spiritual communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation. (See Exh. B, pp. 286, 293, 298.) Moreover, if an elder was compelled to disclose confidential information, his credibility and effectiveness as an elder, as well as the credibility and effectiveness of other elders in the congregation, would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregants would not trust and rely that personal problems and information they disclose would not be revealed and used against them in a court action. (See Exh. B, p. 288.) In fact, defendant James Henderson has specifically stated that he would not have sought church guidance had he believed that his communications with elders were not confidential. (See Exh. B, p. 276.)

Jehovah's Witnesses do not believe that the confidentiality of spiritual communications they may have with congregation elders is limited to confessions. (See Exh. B, p. 288.) Such confidentiality extends to all communication of a spiritual nature in a variety of life situations including those that take place in the course of "judicial investigations" and "judicial committee" meetings. (See Exh. B, pp. 275, 281, 288.) Additionally, based upon Scripture and church tradition, such confidentiality requirements also extend to congregation files, notes, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, confidential church communications. (See Exh. B, pp. 274, 294, 299.)

3. Issues presented for review

This petition presents three issues, which are fundamental, not only to the underlying case, but also potentially to numerous other cases pending throughout the state and based on similar claims. First, did the trial court err when it granted Plaintiffs' motion to compel based on its ruling that the investigatory purpose of the judicial committee negated the penitent-clergy privilege? Second, did the trial court err in ruling that the judicial committee was under no duty to keep communications confidential, and therefore, the privilege is inapplicable? Finally, does the trial court's order compelling disclosure of confidential church documents violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment to the federal constitution, the free exercise clauses of the federal or California constitutions, or both?

B. Writ of mandate is essential and necessary.

1. A writ of mandate is the only adequate remedy available.

A writ of mandate must be issued in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086.) Generally, writ review of discovery rulings is allowed when (1) the issues presented are of first impression and of general importance, (2) an order denying discovery denies a fair opportunity to a party to litigate its case, or (3) an order compelling discovery would violate a privilege. (OXY Resources California LLC v. Superior Court (2004) 115 Cal.App.4th 874, 886-87, quoting Johnson v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal.App.4th 1050, 1061.) "Interlocutory review by writ is the only adequate remedy where a court orders production of documents which may be subject to a privilege, 'since once privileged matter has been disclosed there is no way to undo the harm which consists in the very disclosure[1].'" (Korea Data Systems Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 51 Cal.App.4th 1513, 1516.)

The trial court's order compels the production of documents that the Church Defendants have asserted are protected from disclosure by the penitent-clergy privilege. Thus, a writ of mandate is appropriate and necessary, and interlocutory review is the only adequate remedy.

2. The issue will not go away.

Counsel for plaintiffs have filed a number of lawsuits in multiple venues against the various congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses and other religious entities that support their work. If the court compels the disclosure of confidential, privileged, and sensitive materials in these Track I Cases, the impact potentially will be felt not only in this proceeding but in other venues as well. As with other Jehovah's Witnesses congregations, the Church Defendants desire to keep confidential and privileged the materials regarding internal ecclesiastical affairs.

II. THE PENITENT-CLERGY PRIVILEGE BARS COMPELLED DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS RELATED TO SPIRITUAL COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN PENITENTS AND JUDICIAL COMMITTEE

Under California law, three requirements must be met for the penitent-clergy privilege to apply to a communication: (1) it must be intended to be in confidence; (2) it must be made to a member of the clergy who in the course of his/her religious discipline or practice is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications; and, (3) such clergy must have a duty under the tenets or discipline of his/her church to keep such communications secret. (Evid. Code § 1032; see People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1358, 1362-63.) Communications between penitent and clergy are presumed to have been made in confidence. (Evid. Code § 917.) Thus, Plaintiffs bear the burden of establishing that the subject communications were not intended to remain confidential.

In the instant case, it is undisputed that the judicial committee elders to whom Heard and Henderson confided qualify as "member[s] of clergy" as defined in section 1030 of the Evidence Code. Thus, the questions remaining are (1) whether penitents Heard and Henderson intended their communications to be made in confidence, and (2) whether the elders were required by the religious doctrine of Jehovah's Witness to keep said communications secret. For the reasons set forth below, the Church Defendants urge the Court to answer both questions affirmatively.

A. Penitents Heard and Henderson intended their spiritual communications to the judicial committee to be confidential

By definition, a penitential communication must be "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent was aware." (Evid. Code § 1032.) The privilege has been held not to apply in instances where the communication was not made with a reasonable expectation of privacy, the communication was made for a secular purpose, the receiver of the communication was acting in a secular capacity, or religious tenets did not require the clergy member to keep the subject communications secret. (People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1358, 1362-63 (defendant sought advice on how to avoid secular consequences of her criminal conduct rather than spiritual counseling); People v. Johnson (1969) 270 Cal.App.2d 204, 207-08 (communication was not made in confidence nor in the course of the required relationship and no evidence was presented that minister was authorized or accustomed to hear such communications or that he had a duty to keep such communications secret); United States v. Webb (9th Cir. 1980) 615 F.2d 828 (communication made in presence of officer in addition to prison chaplain was not confidential); United States v. Luther (9th Cir. 1973) 481 F.2d 429, 432 (privilege did not apply to data in church financial records sought by Internal Revenue Service and which did not contain any communications from congregants seeking spiritual guidance of counseling); People v. Thompson (1982) 133 Cal.App.3d 419, 425-27 (minister was acting in secular capacity when hired by company as ethics officer to improve sales and there was no expectation of confidentiality in the communication).)

None of those circumstances is present here. Rather, as demonstrated by declarations from clergy as well as their own, penitents Henderson and Heard each intended that their spiritual communications to the judicial committee elders remain confidential, which communications the elders were duty-bound to respect in accordance with the religious tenets and beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses. Henderson's and Heard's purpose in making their separate communications and in participating in the "judicial committee" proceedings in the first place was to seek spiritual guidance and counseling – again, in accordance with the religious beliefs and tenets of Jehovah's Witnesses. (See, Exh. B, pp. 276, 281.)

1. That the judicial committee is comprised of three or more elders should not vitiate the privilege.

A disclosure does not waive a privilege if the disclosure itself is privileged. (Evid. Code § 912(c).) It is undisputed that each of the elders who form a judicial committee qualifies as a "member of clergy" under section 1032 of the Evidence Code. Thus, there is no question that the privilege would apply had penitents Heard and

Henderson made their spiritual communications to each of these elders individually and on separate occasions. To hold that the privilege is voided simply because an otherwise protected penitential communication is made to multiple authorized clergy members in a single setting – particularly where, as here, it was done in accordance with the religious beliefs and tenets of one's religion – is to choose form over substance and thereby vitiate the purpose underlying the privilege.

As explained above, where a member of the congregation is accused of serious wrongdoing or sin, the tenets of Jehovah's Witnesses authorize two elders to conduct an investigation. The goal of the investigation and any subsequent judicial committee comprised of three or more elders is to ensure that the congregation remains spiritually and morally clean and to allow the elders to provide spiritual guidance and counseling to the accused member. Any spiritual communications made during the investigation or during the judicial committee proceedings are extremely private and kept in the strictest confidence by the participating elders. It is with these assurances and expectations of confidentiality and spiritual guidance that penitents such as Heard and Henderson willingly participate in an investigation and with a judicial committee.

No reported case interpreting California law has addressed whether the presence of more than one clergy member during a confidential, spiritual communication by a penitent destroys the penitent-clergy privilege. Likewise, no court has addressed whether a spiritual communication by a penitent to a "judicial committee" formed under the tenets and discipline of the Jehovah's Witnesses qualifies as a protected penitential communication under California law. Absent such authority, it is practical to look at decisions from other jurisdictions who have interpreted similar, or even stricter, penitential communication statutes. For instance, interpreting a similar yet narrower state statute,[2] the Washington Supreme Court held that a communication made in the presence of a third person destroys the privilege unless that third person is necessary for the communication or is another clergy member. (State v. Martin (1999) 975 P.2d 1020, 1028.) Likewise, the Third Circuit has held that the presence of third persons who are "essential to and in furtherance of the communication" does not void the penitent-clergy privilege under Rule 501 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. (In re Grand Jury (3d Cir. 1990) 918 F.2d 374, 384.)

Another Washington case, Jane Doe v. Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, supra (hereafter "Jane Doe"), is analogous to the facts and issues presented in these Track I Cases. At issue in Jane Doe was the disclosure of church documents relating to the Mormon Church's disciplinary action concerning a church member's alleged sexual abuse of his two daughters. Under church doctrine, when a church member is accused of a serious transgression, a "stake disciplinary council" must intervene and help the church member repent and re-establish a covenant with God. (Id. at 1149-50.) The accused member confesses his sin to the disciplinary council which is comprised entirely of ordained presidents, bishops, and other ordained church members. The disciplinary council then determines the appropriate discipline to be administered, which can vary from probation to disfellowshipping to excommunication. (Id. at 1150.) When the discipline results in disfellowshipping or excommunication, church procedures require that a summary of the disciplinary proceedings be prepared and sent to the church's headquarters in Utah. (Id. at 1150.) The court held that the summary of the disciplinary proceeding was protected from disclosure by the clergy-penitent privilege based on its findings that (1) the disciplinary councils are ecclesiastical in nature, and (2) each participant on the council is ordained as clergy. Furthermore, because the presence of all participants in the disciplinary council was necessary for the communication to occur, the presence of a third party during the communication did not vitiate the privilege. (Id. at 1152-53.)

[2] Under Washington law, the penitent-clergy privilege protects communications which are (1) made to a clergy member, (2) as a confession in the course of discipline enjoined by the church, and (3) confidential. (RCWA 5.60.060(3); Jane Doe v. Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Wash. 2004) 90 P.3d 1147, 1150.)

Similar to the Mormon Church in Jane Doe, the religious doctrine of Jehovah's Witnesses mandates that two elders investigate allegations of serious wrongdoing or sin and that, if formed, a judicial committee of three or more elders determine, whether an accused member is repentant and subject to ecclesiastical discipline. That judicial committees consist of three or more elders is based upon the beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses that men are imperfect and that three elders can provide more full and complete spiritual counseling and guidance based on their collective experience and knowledge than can a single elder alone. Therefore, under the Jehovah's Witness doctrine, the presence of multiple clergy members is essential to and in furtherance of the penitent's communication.

The decision in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417 (hereafter "Roman Catholic Archbishop"), upon which Plaintiffs rely, is distinguishable and unavailing. In that case, the court ruled that the penitent-clergy privilege was inapplicable to protect communications by a Catholic priest in the presence of a "vicar for clergy" and a bishop because the Catholic tenets or doctrine do not require that such persons be present during those communications. In contrast, the Jehovah's Witnesses religion mandates the presence of three or more elders when the communication regards allegations of serious wrongdoing or sin, which includes child sexual abuse. When analyzing the penitent-clergy privilege, such doctrinal differences among religions should be respected rather than ignored.[3]

Second, Roman Catholic Archbishop is equally inapplicable because it concerned testimony and evidence to be presented to a grand jury in a criminal proceeding. Disclosure was required in that instance, the court held, "because the government had a compelling interest in prosecuting child molesters." In contrast, these Track I Cases are civil actions and not criminal prosecutions of child molesters. Indeed, in its investigation of child abuse allegations against Henderson, the State (through the local police and the district attorney's office) respected the elders' religious duty to not reveal information that they had learned via confidential communications made during the course of the judicial committee's internal proceedings with regard to those allegations. If, in its criminal investigation of Henderson, the State did not believe it necessary to compel the same confidential communications at issue here, it is difficult to argue that the State now has some higher compelling interest in the instant civil actions for money damages.

[3] Other jurisdictions have recognized the need to respect doctrinal differences among religions when analyzing the privilege. (See, e.g., Jane Doe, supra, 90 P.3d at 1152, citing State v. MacKinnon (Mont. 1998) 957 P.2d 23, 28, and Scott v. Hammock (Utah 1994) 870 P.2d 947, 956.)

2. The trial court erred in finding that the judicial committee's purpose voided the privilege.

The trial court erred when it ruled that the privilege did not apply to the requested documents based on its finding that the "[j]udicial [c]ommittee's purpose is to investigate sins for which disfellowship is a potential penalty." (Exh. F, p. 342.) First, there is no requirement under California law that the communication be initiated by the penitent or that it "have as its purpose the confession of a 'flawed act' to 'receive religious consolation and guidance in return' in order to be privileged." (Doe 2 v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 1504, 1518.) Rather, the privilege applies to any communication that fits the statutory description. (Cal. Law Revision Com. Com., West's Ann. Cal. Evid. Code (2006) §1032. (Statute extends protection of privilege beyond just "confessions".) Second, even if, arguendo, investigation and discipline were one of the reasons for forming a judicial committee, the most important purpose of a judicial committee is to provide spiritual counseling and assistance to those who may have erred and to help them regain their spirituality and relationship with Jehovah God. (See, Exh. B, pp. 274, 287.). The investigatory function of the judicial committee does not detract from or lessen its role of providing spiritual counseling and guidance.

B. The tenets and discipline of the Jehovah's Witnesses require the judicial committee elders to keep the communications of penitents Heard and Henderson secret.

Congregational elders are required by the tenets of their faith to keep confessions and other spiritual communications confidential. (Exh. B, pp. 286-288, 293-94, 298-99.) Similarly, Jehovah's Witnesses doctrine requires that all intra-faith communications between congregational elders and elders serving in the Branch Office's Service Department, as well as with elders serving as circuit and district overseers, be kept in the strictest confidence. As well, communications taking place during a "judicial investigation" and during "judicial committee" meetings are considered to be extremely private and strictly confidential. The confidentiality requirements of such church communications are explained in church literature and publications. Revealing confidential spiritual communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation.

In support of its order compelling discovery, the trial court also held that the penitent-clergy privilege did not apply because the evidence established that the judicial committee "was under no duty to keep the communications private" and that it "was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters." (Exhibit F, p. 342.). The evidence relied upon by the trial court consists of two letters not relevant in time and which were sent by defendant Watchtower New York to all bodies of elders throughout the United States. Those "body of elders letters" were dated March 14, 1997 and July 20, 1998, respectively, and provided direction to the elders regarding the communication of certain information to the U.S. Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses relating to those accused of committing child abuse. (See Exh. A, pp. 209-15.) However, the alleged abuse committed by defendant Heard ended in 1981, more than 15 years before the first body of elders letter referenced above was issued. Similarly, defendant Henderson was disfellowshipped from the Red Bluff congregation in 1994, more than two years before the first body of elders letter referenced above was issued. Thus, the trial court's reliance on these two non-relevant documents is misplaced.

Even if, a*rguendo*, the two body of elders letters are found to be relevant in time, the elders' compliance with the instructions contained therein does not automatically result in a breach of their duty to keep penitential communications – whether made to an individual elder or a judicial committee – secret and confidential. The body of elders letters instruct elders to report the following information: (1) whether the member accused of child abuse has been disfellowshipped, reproved, counseled, or otherwise addressed; (2) if the accused member has moved to another congregation, the identity of the congregation to which he or she has moved; and (3) whether said congregation has been advised of the accused member's past child abuse conduct and, if so, the date of said advisement. Nothing in the two body of elder letters instructs or advises elders to reveal either the contents of confidential penitential communications or the explicit details of the accusations. Therefore, nothing in the two letters prevents the judicial committee elders from complying with the reporting instructions and maintaining the confidentiality of the communications made during the judicial investigation and/or judicial committee proceedings.

III. THE TRIAL COURT'S ORDER VIOLATES THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

The establishment clause in the First Amendment to the federal constitution provides that, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion …." Among other things, the U.S. Supreme Court has held that this clause prohibits the government's excessive entanglement with religion. (See Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 621-24.) Under the established clause, every religion is guaranteed the same rights and protections. These protections apply equally to state judiciary proceedings. The U.S. Supreme Court has decisively settled that the First Amendment's mandate that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof has been made wholly applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment … in a series of cases, the court has repeatedly reaffirmed the doctrine…." (Abington School District v. Schemp (1963) 374 U.S. 203, 216.) This extension of the First Amendment to the states applies to judicial as well as legislative action. (NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 463.) "The Fourteenth Amendment, as now applied to the states, protects the citizens against the state itself and all of its creatures." (West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 637.) "Judicial action is to be regarded as action of the state for the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment [and] is not immunized from the operation of the Fourteenth Amendment simply because it is taken pursuant to the state's common law policy." (Shelley v. Kramer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, 15, 20.)

By denying the right conferred in the rule of privilege on the basis of a distinction between an elder or a judicial committee of Jehovah's Witnesses and ministers of other religions, or on the bases of the differences between Jehovah's Witnesses' pastoral procedures and those of other religions, the trial court has essentially established "acceptable" religious practices in violation of the federal and state constitutional prohibitions of excessive governmental entanglement with religion. As explained above, the tenets and religious beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses doctrine establish the requirement that three or more elders receive and investigate penitent communications regarding allegations of serious transgression or sin. (Exh. B, pp. 274, 287.) This religious practice is rooted in religious doctrine of Jehovah's Witnesses and based upon the belief that men are imperfect and that the collective knowledge and experience of multiple elders will provide more full and complete spiritual counseling and guidance than that of a single elder alone. The multiple elders requirement is no less fundamental or sacred to the Jehovah's Witnesses faith and religious practice than the relationship between a penitent and a single clergy member found in other religions. As such, the trial court's refusal to apply the penitent-clergy privilege to the religious practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witnesses is an unconstitutional, and thus impermissible, entanglement with religion.

IV. THE TRIAL COURT'S ORDER VIOLATES THE FREE EXERCISE CLAUSE UNDER THE FEDERAL AND CALIFORNIA CONSTITUTIONS

Additionally, the trial court's refusal to apply the rule of privilege to the religious practices and doctrines of Jehovah's Witnesses for confessions clearly inhibits the free exercise of religion of the Church Defendants in violation of the free exercise clauses of the state and federal constitutions. In essence, the trial court refuses to fully extend confessional protection to Jehovah's Witnesses because they require that multiple elders be present rather than just one. Only a neutral law of general applicability may burden the right to free exercise of religion. (Employment Division Department of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872, 879-80.)

A law is not neutral towards religion if its "object ... is to infringe upon or restrict practices because of their religious motivation." (Church of the Lukumi Babaluiaaye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah (1993) 508 U.S. 520, 531.) A law is not generally applicable if it "in a selective manner impose[s] burdens only on conduct motivated by religious belief." (Id. at 543.) A "law substantially burdens a religious belief if it 'conditions receipt of an important benefit upon conduct proscribed by a religious faith, or where it denies such a benefit because of conduct mandated by religious belief, thereby putting substantial pressure on an adherent to modify his behavior and to violate his beliefs.'" (Catholic Charities of Sacramento, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 32 Cal.4th 527, 562 (quoting Thomas v. Rev. Bd., Ind. Empl. Sec. Div. (1981) 450 U.S. 707, 717-18).) "A law failing to satisfy these requirements must be justified by a compelling governmental interest and must be narrowly tailored to advance that interest." (Church of the Lukumi Babaluiaaye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah, supra.) California courts apply the strict scrutiny standard when deciding matters under the free exercise clause of the California Constitution. (Catholic Charities of Sacramento, Inc. v. Superior Court, supra.)

The trial court has burdened the purely religious conduct of the Church Defendants by ruling that Jehovah's Witnesses cannot enjoy the same benefit from open and free spiritual communications with their ministers as do members of other churches, simply because of their religious beliefs. Here, the government has no compelling interest for granting the penitent-clergy privilege to religions that require a penitent confess to one minister but denying the rule of privilege to religions that require that a penitent confess to more than one minister. Because there is no compelling state interest for the court's non-neutral judicial interpretation of the rule of privilege, the court's order cannot withstand strict scrutiny. Therefore, the court's order violates the constitutional right of free exercise of the Church Defendants and of Jehovah's Witnesses and must be rejected.

V. TRIAL COURT SHOULD HAVE CONDUCTED AN IN CAMERA INSPECTION

An in camera review by the trial court may be appropriate to resolve a dispute as to whether requested documents, which contain privileged information, are discoverable. (Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1599, 1619-20.) Before issuing its order to compel, the trial court did not review in camera the documents which the Church Defendants have asserted are privileged. Rather, it held that the penitent-clergy privilege was inapplicable based on its presumptive conclusions that the judicial committee's sole purpose was investigatory and that the judicial committee elders were not required to keep confidential the communications made during the judicial committee's investigation and/or proceeding. (Exh. F, 341-43; Exh. J. p. 365-71.) Given the importance of the penitent-clergy privilege and the irreparable harm which would result from compelled disclosure of potentially privileged documents, an in camera inspection of the documents in question is proper and the minimum safeguard which should be applied. Accordingly, should this Court decide not to reverse the trial court's order, then Church Defendants alternatively request that the matter be remanded and the trial court ordered to inspect the requested documents in camera before determining whether or not the privilege should apply.

VI. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, petitioners/Church Defendants respectfully request that the Court grant a writ of mandate as prayed and issue a decision determining the applicability of the penitent-clergy privilege to Henderson's and Heard's separate confidential communications made to a judicial committee formed in accordance with the tenets and doctrine of the Jehovah's Witnesses faith.

Napa Superior Court

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED as follows:

1. The Court finds that in the coordinated action of Danielle A. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al, Sonoma County Superior Court Case No. S CV 234140, the plaintiff is now in pro per, and the Church Defendants have been dismissed such that the only remaining defendant is individual defendant Shawn Appling. Therefore, the Danielle A. action is hereby severed from the other coordinated actions and ordered returned to the Sonoma County Superior Court for all further proceedings.

2. This Court will continue to utilize the so-called track approach to managing the remaining coordinated actions. However, this order is without prejudice if sufficient progress toward resolution of all cases is not demonstrated.

3. The two coordinated "Track I" actions -- Tim W. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al, Tehama County Superior Court Case No. 52594, and Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez, et al v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al, Tehama County Superior Court Case No. 52598 -- are ordered to be tried in Tehama County, one in April 2007 and one in May of 2007. This Court will contact the Presiding Judge of the Tehama County Superior Court in this regard and will report to the parties at the further CMC (set below for August 24, 2006). However, if trials in Tehama County are not possible, this Court will then consider other options for trials of the two Track I actions, including holding trials in other counties with sufficient judicial resources to try the two Track I cases in the general time frame noted. No trial dates or trial venues will be set or decided upon at this time in the coordinated non-Track I actions.

4. Counsel for plaintiffs and Church Defendants are ordered to confer and develop proposed discovery and dispositive motion deadlines for the Track I actions and proposed discovery deadlines for the non-Track I actions.

5. A further case management conference ("CMC") is set for August 24, 2006 at 8:30 AM in Department A of this Court. Appearance by telephone is permitted. On or before August 18, 2006, counsel for plaintiffs and Church Defendants shall jointly submit to this Court their proposed discovery and dispositive motion deadlines for the Track I actions and their proposed discovery plan and deadlines for the non-Track I actions.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants.	CASE NO: 26-22191 Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. 4374 PLAINTIFFS' PROPOSED DISCOVERY PLANS FOR TRACT I AND NON-TRACT I CASES

BY FAX

Defense counsel emailed Plaintiffs with a proposed discovery plan which was unacceptable. Plaintiffs responded with a counter-proposal to which there was no reaction by Defendants. In essence no meet and confer process occurred.

Plaintiffs, therefore, submit the following proposal which is designed to complete discovery and trial by July 2007. It is our desire on behalf of each of our clients to expedite litigation that has dragged on far too long. We are willing and able to work as hard as necessary to accomplish the proposed discovery plan. Accordingly, we urge the Court to adopt a plan that accomplishes this objective. The defense firm representing the Watchtower Defendants is a large multi-office law firm easily capable of accommodating the discovery plan proposed by Plaintiffs.

At the time and place indicated, Plaintiffs move the Court for an order compelling the Watchtower Defendants to produce the four Woodland Elders whose depositions were previously noticed.

Plaintiffs further move the Court for a Protective Order that the Watchtower Defendants not be allowed to direct that the deponents not answer Plaintiffs' questions based upon the penitential communication privilege.

This motion is made on the grounds that the penitential communication privilege does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee. In addition, the privilege does not apply because the Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. The motion is based upon this Notice and Motion, the attached Memorandum of Points and Authorities, the Declaration of Rudy Nolen, the Declaration of Greg Love, and the records and files in this action.

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs are moving to compel the Watchtower Defendants to produce for deposition the Elders of the Woodland Jehovah's Witnesses congregation. Those individuals are Paul Photenhauer, Gary Hayes, Eddie Johnson, Art Almanza. The depositions were scheduled for October 3, and October 4, 2006. (Copies of the Notices of Taking Deposition are attached as Exhibit 1.)

The Watchtower Defendants have informed Plaintiffs that they "will object at those depositions under the clergy-penitent privilege as to any inquiries concerning judicial investigations and judicial committees, including those involving the former co-defendant Timothy Silva". Mr. Silva was the sexual abuse perpetrator in the West-Pence cases. (A copy of the E-mail setting forth Defendants' position is attached as Exhibit 2.)

After further discussions with counsel for the Watchtower Defendants, it was agreed that Plaintiffs would be making this Motion to Compel those depositions in order to have this Court rule on Defendants' objection prior to the depositions. As will be seen below, the taking of those depositions without the Court's prior ruling on the objection will make the deposition testimony incomplete and will only force Plaintiffs to make a Motion to Compel at the conclusion of the depositions. This would be burdensome and costly.

LEGAL AUTHORITY

California Code of Civil Procedure § 2025.450(a) provides that a party may move for an order "compelling the deponent's attendance and testimony...".

In addition, California Code of Civil Procedure § 2025.420(a) provides that any party may move for a protective order and that the "court, for good cause shown, may make any order that justice requires to protect any party... from unwarranted annoyance, ... or undue burden and expense."

This Court, in its September 29, 2005 Ruling on Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents held that the penitential communication privilege "does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee." In addition,

"the privilege does not apply because the Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private." (A copy of the Ruling is attached as Exhibit 3.)

APPLICABILITY OF SEPTEMBER 29, 2005 RULING TO DEPOSITION TESTIMONY

The Defendants are taking the position that the September 29, 2005 ruling has no precedential effect in the non-Track I cases such as the West-Pence matter. In point of fact, the Watchtower Defendants have taken the position that they can continue to make the penitential communication privilege and direct that a witness not answer a question in the Track I cases also. On August 16, 2006 the depositions of Billy Jack Mullins, Sr., Ronald Pitts, and Leroy Martin Reid, Jr. were taken in the Track I case of Tim W. in Redding. At those depositions, counsel for the Watchtower Defendants directed that the deponents not answer questions which in any way dealt with the Judicial Committees. In Mr. Mullins' deposition this instruction even went to the extent of directing that the deponent not even answer the question on whether he served on a Judicial Committee based upon the clergy-penitent privilege. (See the Declaration of Greg Love filed in support of this motion and the attached excerpts of the deposition transcripts from the Redding depositions.).

As can be seen from the numerous directions to the deponents not to answer, the continual assertion of the penitent communication privilege is preventing Plaintiffs from obtaining proper and vital testimony. A review of the transcript excerpts readily shows that Plaintiffs are being prevented from obtaining necessary information regarding the sexual abuse of the various perpetrators. These facts go to the very heart of the controversy regarding the Watchtower Defendants' knowledge of the sexual abuse which was occurring.

It is obvious that the Watchtower Defendants intend to continually assert the penitential communication privilege as to deposition testimony in all cases. Plaintiffs believe that the position being taken by the Watchtower Defendants is in disregard to the Court's prior ruling and is contrary to the letter and spirit of the coordination of these actions. One of the criteria that was considered when these matters were coordinated was "the disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders, judgements...." (Code of Civil Procedure § 404.1). This Court has correctly ruled that the penitential communication privilege "does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee" with regard to the production of documents. Both the California Court of Appeal and the California Supreme Court have denied the Watchtower Defendants' writ of that ruling. Plaintiffs are requesting that this Court consistently rule that the same reasoning applies to deposition testimony.

CONCLUSION

Pursuant to this Court's September 29, 2005 ruling and the California Code of Civil Procedure, it is requested that this Court order the Watchtower Defendants to produce the Woodland Elders for deposition and allow Plaintiffs to seek testimony unlimited by the assertion of the penitential communication privilege.

Rudy -- This follows up on and confirms our phone call this afternoon. As we discussed, after first clearing the dates with me and my clients, plaintiffs in West/Pence noticed the depositions of four Woodland elders for October 3 and 4, 2006. I advised you today in our phone call that the Church Defendants will object at those depositions under the clergy - penitent privilege as to any inquiries concerning judicial investigations and judicial committees, including those involving the former co-defendant Timothy Silva. I understand from your comments that plaintiffs consider the trial court ruling in the Track I cases and the subsequent denials of the writs or petitions to the Court of Appeal and the California Supreme Court to have determined the issue. [FYI, my clients are still deciding whether to pursue a petition to the U.S. Supreme Court.] However, the defense view is that, among other reasons, the trial court ruling in the Track I cases has no precedential effect in the West/Pence case and also is not "law of the case" for the West/Pence case. Thus, I suggest we discuss further whether you still desire to take the elders' depositions as scheduled on October 3 and 4, given that scenario. Thanks.

Case No.: 26-22191

RULING ON SUBMITTED MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Plaintiffs' Motion To Compel Production Of Documents came on for hearing on August 31, 2005. The court, having read and considered the papers and heard oral argument, took the matter under submission and now rules as follows:

Plaintiff's motion to compel production of documents is GRANTED in part and continued in part to allow for the production of an attorney-client privilege log.

Although defendants raised a number of objections when responding to plaintiffs' request for production of documents, they address only two of those objections in opposing plaintiffs' motion to compel: the penitential communication privilege and the attorney-client privilege, which the court will discuss in more detail below. As to the other objections not discussed by defendants, the court finds the objections are not well taken. The requested discovery requests are not overbroad, are relevant, and are not barred by Serbian East Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696.

1. Penitential Privilege

Evidence Code section 1032 provides:

> As used in this article, "penitential communication" means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret.

Defendants object to the production of a number of documents requested by plaintiffs on the ground that they are protected by the penitential communication privilege contained in Evidence Code section 1032. This court finds that the privilege does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee. The evidence presented by both sides establishes that communications with the Judicial Committee do not fall within the scope of the privilege. First, it is clear that the Judicial Committee's purpose is to investigate sins for which disfellowship is a potential penalty. This is established not only by the deposition excerpts provided by plaintiffs, but by the Watchtower publication provided by defendants in connection with the objections to plaintiffs' evidence ("Judicial action is necessary only if a gross sin has been committed that could lead to disfellowshipping" p. 18.) Second, the privilege does not apply because the Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. In fact, the evidence establishes that the Judicial Committee was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters.

Because the penitential communication privilege does not apply, within 20 days defendants shall produce all documents for which it previously asserted this privilege.

2. Attorney-client privilege

Defendants have not produced a privilege log for those few documents they apparently claim are protected by the attorney client privilege. Neither the plaintiffs nor the court can adequately address the objection without a privilege log. Defendants shall serve a privilege log on plaintiffs within 10 days. Plaintiffs may thereafter file and a supplemental brief addressing the log within 10 days. The court will then issue a written ruling on the matter.

I, GREG LOVE, declare:

I am an attorney at law duly licensed to practice before all the courts of the State of Texas. I am co-counsel for Plaintiffs in these Coordinated Action and have been admitted in California pro hac vice.

On August 16, 2006 I traveled to Redding, California to conduct the depositions of three elders from the Red Bluff North Congregation of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Attached as Exhibit 4 are true and correct copies of excerpts from the deposition of Billy Jack Mullins, Sr.

Attached as Exhibit 5 are true and correct copies of excerpts from the deposition of LeRoy Martin Reid Jr.

Attached as Exhibit 6 are true and correct copies of excerpts from the deposition of Ronald Pitts.

MULLINS DEPOSITION

In Mr. Mullins' deposition, he was asked questions concerning James Henderson, the perpetrator in the Tim Ward case. On Page 33 at Line 1 he was instructed not to answer the question on whether he even served on that judicial committee based upon the clergy-penitent privilege. At Page 33 Line 17, I attempted to ask Mr. Mullins whether he would have followed instructions which had been provided to him by the legal department or the circuit overseer. At Page 34 Line 23 he was instructed not to answer that question on the basis of the clergy-penitent privilege "with respect to judicial committees." At Page 37 I asked whether Mr. Henderson "was a child sexual abuser while in the North Congregation...?" Again Mr. Mullins was instructed not to answer on the basis of the clergy-penitent privilege. On Page 39 I attempted to ask a number of different questions dealing with the judicial committee involving my client. Mr. Mullins was instructed not to answer. On Page 48 I attempted to ask questions on whether any elders had any information that Mr. Henderson had prior sexual abuse allegations against him in Yuba City. Again, this line of questioning was stopped by the attorney for the Watchtower defendants.

REID DEPOSITION

In Mr. Reid's deposition, at Page 121 Line 12, I asked him about his knowledge of whether children were sexually abused in the Red Bluff North Congregation. He was instructed not to answer that question. At Page 122 Line 25, I attempted to see if Mr. Reid had any such knowledge totally outside his position as an elder in the church such as through the newspaper. Again, he was instructed not to answer. At Page 123 I represented to Mr. Reid that my client, Tim Ward, would waive his privilege and I attempted to determine if Mr. Reid knew that James Henderson had molested Tim Ward. Again, Mr. Reid was instructed not to answer. When I attempted to find out when Mr. Reid knew about the beginning of the investigation of Mr. Henderson, he was instructed not to answer (Page 142 Line 1-7). At Page 147 Line 21 I attempted to determine if there had been two different committees which had been formed relating to Jim Henderson. Mr. Reid was instructed not to answer. At Page 174 I was able to get the information that Mr. Reid had gone to my client in connection with the judicial committee investigation. There was an objection made and an instruction that Mr. Reid not answer but he had already answered the question. When I informed him that I would waive any privilege on behalf of my client, Mr. Reid was still instructed not to answer. This is directly contrary to Evidence Code § 912 which provides that the privilege is waived if my client "has consented to disclosure made by anyone." The attorney for the Watchtower defendants was instructing his client not to answer, contrary to the California Evidence Code.

PITTS DEPOSITION

In Mr. Pitts' deposition, at Page 39 Line 9, I attempted to ask Mr. Pitts questions concerning an individual who had told us that he was a prior victim of James Henderson and that he contacted the Red Bluff Congregation to warn them that Mr. Henderson was a sexual abuser. Per instructions from Watchtower's counsel, Mr. Pitts refused to answer any questions concerning his knowledge of that individual. At Pages 42 through 44, a whole series of questions were asked regarding the information which the judicial committee had concerning the sexual abuse of Mr. Henderson. These questions went to the notice which the Red Bluff Congregation had concerning the sexual abuse of Mr. Henderson. The entire line of questioning was stopped by defense counsel. At Page 44 Line 4 through Page 45 Line 23, all questions concerning the actual nature of the abuse which had been learned by the judicial committee was prevented. Again, these lines of questioning go to the notice possessed by the Red Bluff Congregation concerning the sexual abuse of James Henderson.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct pursuant to the laws of California. Executed this 14 day of September, 2006

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. LOVE: Q Mr. Mullins, when an issue of child sexual abuse or serious wrongdoing in the form of pornei'a is brought to the attention of the elders, is it -- would the elders be required to follow the procedures outlined in the flock book?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Mullins, you served on the judicial committee that related to Jim Henderson, did you not?

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object on clergy penitent privilege issues and instruct him not to answer.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you refusing to answer that question?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Mullins, in fulfilling your responsibilities as an elder in the Red Bluff North congregation on the judicial committee of James Henderson, isn't it true that you followed the instructions outlined in this flock book?

MR. SCHNACK: Same objection and same instructions.

MR. LOVE: Q You refusing to answer that question?

A. Yes.

Q. In addition to that you would have followed the instructions provided to you in any supplementary letters or other instructions given by the legal department or the circuit overseer; correct?

MR. SCHNACK: Same objection and same instructions.

We can cut this short because I'm, as you know and as we discussed in advance, not going to let him answer any questions relating to the clergy penitent privilege issue with respect to judicial committees.

MR. LOVE: Q And you refuse to answer that question as well?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Wouldn't you agree, Mr. Mullins, that child sexual abuse is harmful to a child?

A. Yes.

Q. In fact, the Watchtower Society has published articles about that very thing; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. In both the "Awake" magazine and "The Watchtower" magazine; correct?

A. As I believe, yes.

Q. It can devastate a child, can't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you agree with me, Mr. Mullins, that you have as an elder the responsibility and duty to protect the children in the congregation?

A. Yes.

Q. I asked Mr. Lyons -- strike that.

I asked Mr. Reid about if an allegation of child sexual abuse came up what the elders would do in response. And he listed a number of things for me,

James Henderson had been a confessed child sexual abuser in Yuba City?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Mullins, you were an elder in the Red Bluff North congregation beginning in 1991; right?

A. Yes.

Q. Ultimately James Henderson molested a bunch of kids, some of whom were in the North congregation; correct?

A. Yes.

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object. It involves clergy penitent privilege and information he obtained through the judicial committee process. Instruct him not to answer.

MR. LOVE: Q You saw it on the news, didn't you?

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object as argumentative in tone. Instruct him not to answer.

MR. LOVE: Q Mr. Mullins, you're aware of the fact through whether it be newspaper or the television that James Henderson was convicted of child sexual abuse; correct?

A. Yes, after we dealt with him it was.

Q. And the two boys that he was convicted of molesting were both boys from the North congregation; correct?

A. Correct. But you was asking about Yuba City.

Q. I understand.

James Henderson was a child sexual abuser while in the North congregation; correct?

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object, clergy penitent privilege issues. Instruct him not to answer.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you refusing to answer that question?

A. I refuse to answer, yes.

Q. You learned even outside of a judicial committee context that James Henderson had sexually abused children while he was an elder in the North congregation, didn't you?

A. We learned about it, yes.

Q. Everyone in the congregation learned about it, didn't they?

A. Yes.

Q. If in fact there would have been a judicial committee involving James Henderson and child sexual abuse allegations in Yuba City in 19, say, 76, isn't that information that you would have wanted to have as a congregation elder over the North congregation in 1991?

A. Yes. But it wasn't policy back before that that -- for that information.

Q. I'm not asking you about the policy.

A. Well, I would have liked to have had it.

Q. You had the duty and responsibility to protect the children in the North congregation; right?

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object. It's been asked and answered.

MR. LOVE: Q Isn't that right??
MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to instruct him not to answer. That's been asked and answered.
MR. LOVE: Q You would have liked to have had that information to discharge your duties and responsibilities of protecting the children, wouldn't you?
MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object. Again, that's been asked and answered. Instruct him --
MR. LOVE: That question has not been asked and answered.
MR. SCHNACK: Yes, it was. It was just about two minutes ago. I'm going to instruct him not to answer. You're plowing old ground here.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you refusing to answer my question?
A. Yes.
Q. Mr. Mullins, I'm going to ask you a number of different questions about what was said in the course of the judicial committee involving Tim Ward and Nathan Dotta and what the elders discussed amongst themselves in that judicial committee.
MR. SCHNACK: And I will instruct him not to answer based on clergy penitent privilege. And again, we agree that any reasonable follow-up questions are involved in that.
MR. LOVE: Q And you would refuse to answer any of those questions based upon your counsel's instruction?

A. Yes, I would.
Q. And from whom would you have wanted that information?
A. From anyone.
Q. Which would include the Yuba City elders?
A. Yes.
Q. Would have included the Upper Lake elders if they knew?
A. If they knew, yes.
Q. You would have wanted that from the circuit overseer if he knew?
A. Yes.
Q. You would have wanted that from the branch office if they knew?

A. Yes.
Q. Because I'm sure it bothers you that children were molested in the Red Bluff North congregation under your watch?
MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object to the question. You're getting into judicial matters here with the congregation. It involves the clergy penitent privilege.
MR. LOVE: Instruction?
MR. SCHNACK: Correct.
Instruct you not to answer.
MR. LOVE: Q Mr. Reid, you know some children were sexually abused in the Red Bluff North congregation; right?
MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object, Greg, to this whole line of questioning based on the clergy penitent privilege. It gets into his knowledge of issues.

MR. LOVE: Mr. Reid --

11:56 MR. SCHNACK: The question's also being argumentative.

MR. LOVE: Q I assume you're not going to answer that last question; right?

A. Yes.

11:56 Q. Mr. Reid, isn't it true that even outside your role as an elder, because it was in the newspaper, because there was a public talk, and because he was removed as presiding overseer, you're familiar with the fact that James Henderson sexually 11:56 molested children in Red Bluff, are you not?

MR. SCHNACK: Same objection, same instruction.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you refusing to answer my question?

11:56 MR. SCHNACK: He can testify if he read something in the newspaper.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I read something in the newspaper.

MR. LOVE: Q You learned from at least the 11:56 newspaper that --

A. And television, we saw it on the television.

Q. -- that James Henderson, the former presiding overseer of the Red Bluff congregation, was a child molester; correct?

11:56 20 A. Yes.
21 Q. And that he molested some children in the Red
22 Bluff congregation; correct?
23 A. Well, it didn't specifically say that in the 24 newspaper.
11:56 25 Q. But you know that?

1 MR. SCHNACK: Same objection based on clergy
2 penitent privilege issues.
3 MR. LOVE: Q Refusing to answer my question?
4 A. Yes.
11:57 5 Q. I'll represent to you that my client was a 6 member of the Red Bluff North congregation and has
7 waived his privileges to the extent this is a 8 privileged matter. Isn't it true that you knew that 9 James Henderson molested Tim Ward?
11:57 10 MR. SCHNACK: Same objection. The clergy
11 penitent privilege isn't held by just Mr. Ward.
12 MR. LOVE: Q You're refusing to answer my 13 question; right?
14 A. Yes.
11:57 15 MR. SCHNACK: I have to instruct him not to 16 answer, Greg, you know that.
17 MR. LOVE: Are you instructing him?
18 MR. SCHNACK: I already have.
19 MR. LOVE: Q Are you refusing to answer my 11:57 20 question based upon instruction?
21 A. Yes.
22 Q. Thank you, Mr. Reid.
23 Mr. Reid, are you familiar with the fact that things taking place related to James Henderson, do you?

A. Nope, don't know anything about it.

Q. Mr. Reid, I'm going to ask you some questions now that I suspect you will receive instruction, but I want to ask them, and I don't want you to answer them and I want you to give Mr. Schnack the opportunity to object and instruct you; all right?

I want to know what were the first things that brought to the Red Bluff North congregation's attention in 1994 that triggered James Henderson's removal and judicial committee?

MR. SCHNACK: Can you restate that.

MR. LOVE: Q I want to know what allegations or who made the first statement that gave rise to the beginning of an investigation and judicial committee in connection with James Henderson in 1994?

MR. SCHNACK: You're getting into the clergy penitent privilege. I'm going to instruct him not to answer.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you going to refuse not to answer that question?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall being approached by the Dotta family regarding allegations of child sexual abuse that James Henderson had abused Nathan Dotta?

A. So that's my question? I can answer that? Yes.

Q. Do you recall what they told you?

correct?

A. Well, I wouldn't have done anything different than what I did, but I would have taken other steps prior to thereto.

Q. And if James Henderson was placed in a position where he could be appointed as a ministerial servant or elder, you would have done things to stop that, wouldn't you have?

A. Yes.

Q. Because those people are looked upon as positions of trust in the congregation; right?

A. You have mentioned that repeatedly.

Q. And it's true, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the circuit -- strike that.

Isn't it true that there were two different committees formed relating to Jim Henderson, one that resulted in a public reproof and one that ultimately resulted in a disfellowshipping?

MR. SCHNACK: Same objection, same instruction not to answer.

MR. LOVE: Q And you're going to refuse to answer that question; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. During the second judicial committee that was re-formed, either the re-formation of the first one or the creation of the second one, isn't it true that brother Paul Pierre, the circuit overseer, and brother Don Amy, the district overseer, became involved at that point?

MR. SCHNACK: Same objections. It concerns judicial committees, therefore the clergy penitent privilege applies. I'm going to instruct him not to answer.

MR. LOVE: Q And you're refusing to answer that question --

A. Yes.

Q. -- based on counsel's instruction?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know Paul Pierre?

A. Yes.

Q. Where's Paul Pierre now?

A. Have no idea.

Q. Because they rotate those circuit overseers --

A. Yes.

Q. -- every few years; right?

A. Yes. It's a long time ago.

Q. Can you remember the names of circuit overseers that preceded Paul Pierre?

A. I remember some.

Q. Just give me their names.

A. Preceded. I can think of some since then. You'll have to give me a minute.

Q. Why don't we come back to that.

A. Okay.

Q. Do you recall the North congregation writing a letter to the East Cottonwood congregation where

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object. It requires speculation. He said he's not familiar with Henderson's prior testimony. He doesn't know what Yuba City did or didn't do. It's an improper question.

THE WITNESS: Yeah, I couldn't answer that. Because I don't have the facts.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you one of the elders that went to talk to Tim Ward in connection with the judicial committee investigation?

A. Yes.

MR. SCHNACK: Same objection. I'm going to instruct him not to answer.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

MR. LOVE: Now, in that situation I would waive it on Tim's behalf, but are you asserting it nonetheless?

MR. SCHNACK: On behalf of the congregation, on behalf of Mr. Reid himself.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you familiar with a man named Clint Willingham?

A. Yes.

Q. He was an elder in the Red Bluff North congregation during that time?

A. No.

Q. Was he ever an elder in the Red Bluff North contact the Society's legal department immediately?

A. Yes.
Q. So at least as of 1989 wouldn't you agree that it was policy within the congregations that if there's an allegation of sexual abuse you contacted the Society's legal department immediately?
A. Yes.
Q. And that would be true if there was simply an allegation like we talked about regardless of where it came from; correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And the legal department is within the branch office; correct?

A. Yes.
Q. As far as you know?
A. What's that?
Q. As far as you know?
A. Yes.
Q. Have you ever heard the name Craig Hellberg?
A. Yes, I think I have.
Q. Have you heard the name Craig Hellberg in any context other than serving on a judicial committee?
A. No.
Q. Okay. So if I asked you questions about Craig Hellberg or how you came to understand his name, would it be fair for me to assume that would be information that you would refuse to answer?
A. Yes.
MR. LOVE: And that would be your instruction, right, Bob?

MR. SCHNACK: That's correct.

MR. LOVE: Q Craig Hellberg has indicated to me that he was a victim of James Henderson's while employed with the Sac Bee and that he contacted the Red Bluff congregation to talk to an elder and warn them that James Henderson was a sexual abuser. Do you recall receiving any kind of phone call like that?

A. No.

Q. If a phone call like that was made that would be -- you'd expect that to be taken seriously, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. I mean that is -- that's an allegation, even though it's not coming from a person within the organization, it's still significant and needs to be handled seriously; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And some of the things should happen that we've already talked about; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Prior to 1994 again, you don't recall anything relating to protecting the congregation from James Henderson having taken place; correct?

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object. It mischaracterizes the evidence. You're putting alleged facts in here that assumes that there was some notice to the congregation. I think that mischaracterizes the evidence as well.

MR. LOVE: Q You need me to repeat the question? Are you familiar with any effort that was made by the Red Bluff North body of elders to try to warn the congregation regarding James Henderson being a sexual abuser before 1994?

MR. SCHNACK: Same objections. Again, Greg, the objection is that you're suggesting they should have warned when they didn't have any knowledge of it.

MR. LOVE: I suspect --

MR. SCHNACK: But that's what the question suggests and it's improper.

MR. LOVE: I suspect his answer will be no because we didn't know. But my question to you is --

MR. SCHNACK: You're asking yes-and-no questions so you're not going to get that type of response and I think the question is objectionable but go ahead.

MR. LOVE: Q Are you familiar with any efforts made by the body of elders prior to 1994 to warn the congregation that James Henderson was a sexual molester?

MR. SCHNACK: Same objections. Go ahead and respond.

THE WITNESS: No, we didn't know, so there was no way we would be able to warn others about it.

MR. LOVE: Q And because of that nothing was done; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. I want to ask you a number of questions about the initiation of the judicial process at Red Bluff North congregation involving James Henderson as a sexual abuser. And I want to ask you a number of questions about the discussions within the committee, the confessions that were made by James Henderson, the information gained by the committee from victims of the sexual abuse, and ultimately what the judicial committee decided and what it reported to the branch office.

I assume if I asked you any of those questions you'd receive instruction and follow the instructions not to answer those questions?

MR. SCHNACK: That's correct. I would instruct him based on the clergy penitent privilege and would instruct him not to respond.

MR. LOVE: Q And you wouldn't respond; right?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. And I would ask you questions about contact the elders would have made to the legal department and any recommendations, suggestions, or instructions received from the legal department as well, and I suspect that you would refuse to answer those questions?

MR. SCHNACK: Again, the attorney-client privilege would apply to that series of questions as well as the clergy penitent privilege, and I will instruct him not to answer on both grounds.

MR. LOVE: Q And you would refuse to answer those questions; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Pitts, I would ask you questions regarding the involvement of the district overseer and the circuit overseer in that re-formation of the judicial committee in connection with James Henderson, and I assume you would refuse to answer those questions based on your counsel's instruction as well?

MR. SCHNACK: He can respond as to general policies and practices of the traveling overseers with respect to judicial committees, but with respect to James Henderson's judicial committees I will instruct him not to answer based on the clergy penitent privilege.

MR. LOVE: Q And because I do want to know specific participation these people had, being Don Amy and Mr. Pierre, you would refuse to answer those questions; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. I want to ask you questions with respect to efforts the body of elders at Red Bluff may have made to contact prior congregations to learn what they knew about James Henderson and allegations of sexual abuse and their judicial committee in Yuba City. Am I fair in expecting that you would refuse to answer those questions based on your counsel's advice?

MR. SCHNACK: That's already been asked, we've already objected, and I gave him an instruction not to answer on that.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR. LOVE: Q Did you know Mary Ward?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know Mary Ward came to the Red Bluff congregation with two small boys?

A. Yes.

Q. Actually, one of her boys Tim was a teenager; right?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. And she came with no husband, didn't she?

A. Yes.

Q. Her husband had left her; correct?

A. I don't know the full story on that, I'm sorry.

Q. Are you familiar with the fact that Tim started looking to James Henderson as a father figure?

A. Yes.

Q. James Henderson and Tim Ward were doing one-on-one book study, are you aware of that?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that James Henderson and Tim Ward would do their book studies and then James Henderson would engage him in masturbation?

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object. It involves the clergy penitent privilege to the extent he gained any information through the judicial committees.

MR. LOVE: Q Will you refuse to answer that question, or is there any way in which you received that information outside of your role as an elder in the judicial committee?

A. I'll refuse to answer that.

Q. So I'm assuming then everything you learned about the actual nature of the abuse you learned in the context of judicial committee proceedings?

MR. SCHNACK: Again, I'm going to instruct him not to answer based on the same privileges.

MR. LOVE: Q You refuse to answer that question, too?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any dealings with Tim Ward after the allegations came about?

A. Not that I can remember.

Q. Do you know if any of the elders at Red Bluff North had any interaction with Tim Ward after the allegations of abuse came up?

MR. SCHNACK: Again, anything you learned in the judicial committee process I'm going to instruct you not to answer based on clergy penitent privilege. Outside of that context you can respond.

THE WITNESS: I remember a couple of the elders, yes.

MR. LOVE: Q Which ones?

A. Bodie Lyons and Leroy Reid Junior.

Q. And who?

I, RUDY NOLEN, declare:

I am an attorney at law duly licensed to practice before all the Courts in the State of California. I am one of the Plaintiffs attorneys in these matters which are coordinated in the Superior Court for the County of Napa.

Attached as Exhibit 1 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities are true and correct copies of the four Notices of Taking Deposition which we served on the Watchtower Defendants.

Attached as Exhibit 2 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities is a true and correct copy of the E-mail which I received from the attorney for the Watchtower Defendants which set forth their position regarding the Woodland Elders' depositions.

Attached as Exhibit 3 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities is a true and correct copy of this Court's September 29, 2005 Ruling on Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents.

I, and Co-Counsel for Plaintiffs, had numerous discussions with the counsel for the Watchtower Defendants concerning the assertion of the penitential communication privilege objection at the upcoming Woodland Elders' depositions. We were unable to agree upon the assertion of that privilege. If Plaintiffs are forced to conduct these depositions, and Defendants are allowed to make the objections, it will be necessary for Plaintiffs to file a Motion to Compel Further Deposition Testimony. This will involve unnecessary expense and will be a burden to the Plaintiffs in their preparation of this matter for trial. For those reasons, Plaintiffs have proceeded with this Motion to Compel And/Or Motion for a Protective Order Regarding the Woodland Elders.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct executed this 14th day of September at Sacramento, California.

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs are moving to compel the Watchtower Defendants to produce documentation and deposition testimony consistent with the PMK Notice of Taking Deposition; said deposition is currently set for October 18-19, 2006. (A copy of the Notice of Taking Deposition is attached as Exhibit 1.) In the notice, Plaintiffs are seeking testimony in connection with thirteen areas of inquiry. The Watchtower Defendants have objected and refuse to allow testimony and produce documentation in connection with the upcoming PMK deposition. Plaintiffs are making this Motion to Compel in order to have the Court rule on Defendants' objection prior to the taking of the deposition.

LEGAL AUTHORITY

California Code of Civil Procedure § 2025.450(a) provides that a party may move for an order "compelling the deponent's attendance and testimony, and the production for inspection of any document or tangible thing described in the deposition notice."

In addition, California Code of Civil Procedure § 2025.480(a) provides that a "party seeking discovery may move the court for an order compelling" an answer to a question or the production of a document which is under a deponent's control and is not answered or produced at the deposition.

OBJECTION – CLERGY/PENITENT PRIVILEGE

Watchtower Defendants have objected to six of Plaintiffs' areas of inquiry based on the penitential communication privilege as contained in Evidence Code section 1032. The requests to which the Watchtower Defendants have objected include the following areas of inquiry:

7. The appointment or deletion as a servant, elder, ministerial servant or pioneer of:
    a. Alvin Heard
    b. James Heard (Alvin Heard's brother)
    c. Howard Heard (Alvin Heard's uncle)
    d. James Henderson

e. Tim Silva
f. Ed Villegas
g. A. V. Harriman

8. Any reports or allegations of sexual misconduct involving:
a. Alvin Heard
b. James Henderson
c. Tim Silva
d. Ed Villegas
e. A. V. Harriman

9. Any communication to or from any congregation concerning:
a. Alvin Heard
b. James Henderson
c. Tim Silva
d. Ed Villegas
e. A. V. Harriman

10. Any discipline administered by any congregation to:
a. Alvin Heard
b. James Henderson
c. Tim Silva
d. Ed Villegas
e. A. V. Harriman

12. Any reports to the Watchtower Society made by any congregation pursuant to the March 14, 1997 and/or July 20, 1998 Letters to All Bodies of Elders concerning:
a. Alvin Heard
b. James Henderson
c. Tim Silva
d. Ed Villegas
e. A. V. Harriman

13. Any documents pertaining to any requests for reinstatement, and the consideration of such requests, made by:
a. Alvin Heard
b. James Henderson
c. Tim Silva
d. Ed Villegas
e. A. V. Harriman

On September 29, 2005, this Court issued its Ruling on Submitted Motion to Compel Production of Documents after considering substantial briefing and oral argument from the parties. (A copy of the September 29, 2005 ruling is attached hereto as Exhibit 2). In its ruling, the Court found that the penitential communication privilege contained in Evidence Code section 1032 "does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee"; the Watchtower Defendants' assertion of a clergy privilege was overruled. This Court has already faced the issue now before it as to documents; Plaintiffs now seek a consistent ruling as to depositions.

Because the above requests are consistent with the type of information sought in the motion that gave rise to the Court's September 29th ruling, it is Plaintiffs' position that the ruling should be applied to all discovery; the Watchtower Defendants disagree. Plaintiffs request that the Court issue an order overruling the Watchtower Defendants' use of the penitential communication privilege as to items 7, 8, 9, 10, 12 and 13.

OBJECTION – NOT RELATED IN TIME (RELEVANCE)

Again, this is a matter about which the Court has already ruled. In its September 29, 2005, ruling, the Court considered the same objections by the Watchtower Defendants and determined that "the objections are not well taken" and that the discovery requests were not overbroad and are relevant. The requests for testimony and documentation are essentially the same as the requests before the Court giving rise to its September 29th ruling.

In California, the appropriate scope of what information is discoverable/relevant is whether the information might lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. California Code of Civil Procedure § 2017.010 provides for the scope of discovery in California. It states that "any party may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privilege, that is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action... if the matter either is itself admissable evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissable evidence." Plaintiffs' requests for testimony and documentation are clearly calculated to obtain information that is admissible or may lead to the discovery of admissible information.

Additionally, part of the materials reviewed by the Court in making its September 29th determination were letters from March 17, 1997 and July 20, 1998, which gave instructions for retrospective information gathering. (The letters are attached hereto as Exhibits 3 and 4.) Although these letters post-date Alvin Heard's molestation of Plaintiffs Josh Wimberley and Julie Gutierrez (1976 through 1981), and James Henderson's molestation of Plaintiff Ward (1993 through 1994) both letters and the instructions contained therein are very relevant as to the Watchtower Defendants' handling of sexual abuse matters and the gathering of information that reached back for decades.

In response to Plaintiffs' PMK Deposition Notice with duces tecum, the Watchtower Defendants have objected to two areas of inquiry and particular document requests that "post-date August 1981", claiming that said discovery is not calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. The specific requests are as follows:

12. Any reports to the Watchtower Society made by any congregation pursuant to the March 14, 1997 and/or July 20, 1998 Letters to All Bodies of Elders concerning:
    a. Alvin Heard
    b. James Henderson
    c. Tim Silva
    d. Ed Villegas
    e. A. V. Harriman

13. Any documents pertaining to any requests for reinstatement, and the consideration of such requests, made by:
    a. Alvin Heard
    b. James Henderson
    c. Tim Silva
    d. Ed Villegas
    e. A. V. Harriman

To arrive at the position that Plaintiffs' discovery is overbroad, the Watchtower Defendants assert that the relevant time periods for which testimony and documentation should be produced involve only those time periods in which the Track 1 Plaintiffs were being sexually abused by the Track 1 perpetrators. For example, Alvin Heard sexually abused several children over a 30+ year period of time. Between 1976 and 1981, Heard molested Plaintiffs Wimberley and Gutierrez. Heard was subject to a judicial committee and was reproved. Heard then went on to sexually molest other children in the Jehovah's Witnesses organization, and was again subject to a judicial committee and reproved. Heard moved to yet other Jehovah's Witnesses congregations in South Dakota and Oregon where he molested additional children, and was presumably subject to a judicial committee and disfellowshipped before being criminally convicted in Klamath Falls, Oregon. (See excerpts of Alvin Heard's deposition attached hereto as Exhibit 5). Excerpts from Heard's testimony clearly describe Heard's molestation of many children while affiliated with several different congregations. Heard's testimony also indicates that he had several interactions with Elders subsequent to 1981: judicial committee for sexual molestation in Oroville, CA for molesting children in Paradise; interaction with Elders in Oregon and South Dakota who knew about his sexual molestations from the past and dealt with new allegations and the impacts of the changes in Watchtower Society policies in 1997 which led to communications among Elders regarding Heard's past abuse. It is hard to imagine information that is more relevant.

The Watchtower Defendants have also objected to providing testimony or documentation related to James Henderson that post-dates his molestation of Tim Ward and the resulting judicial committee (December 1994). Again, it is Plaintiffs' position that testimony and documentation regarding the Watchtower Defendants' handling of sexual abuse matters are relevant. An excellent example of how information that post-dates the abuse can provide admissible evidence is found in the March 17, 1997 letter to all Bodies of Elders in the United States. (A copy of the letter is attached hereto as Exhibit 3.) The 1997 letter requires that all Bodies of Elders create thorough reports regarding prior abusers that held positions of authority within each congregation (this would include Heard and Henderson), the details of the abuse, who was notified and the outcome of the judicial committee. The letter also required each congregation to submit a copy of the materials to the Watchtower Defendants' headquarters and the congregations where the perpetrator is affiliated. The receipt of such a letter, the compliance and the materials created in response are extremely relevant.

Plaintiffs have requested testimony and documentation regarding all molestations, sexual abuse reports, judicial committees and requests for reinstatement for Alvin Heard. The documentation sought is clearly relevant to Alvin Heard's patterns of abuse, and the Watchtower Defendants' handling of abuse allegations specifically related to Alvin Heard.

The anticipated testimony and documentation may also lead to the discovery of information regarding people who had notice of Alvin Heard's propensity to sexually abuse children.

Plaintiffs request the Court issue an order overruling the Watchtower Defendants' objection that the testimony and documentation sought is overbroad as to time, irrelevant or is not calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court find that the above discovery matters are relevant and are not protected by the penitential communication privilege. Plaintiffs further request that the Court issue an order compelling the Watchtower Defendants to provide testimony and documents in connection with the above categories of inquiry and duces tecum requests

Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion to Compel PMK Deposition and Document Request Regarding General Discovery Matters

Exhibit 2

September 29, 2005 Ruling

ENDORSED

SEP 29 2005

Clerk of the Napa Superior Court
By: Jean E. Pell
Deputy

SUPERIOR COURT FOR THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA,

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W., et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, et al.

Defendants.

Case No.: 26-22191
JCCP No. 4374

RULING ON SUBMITTED MOTION TO COMPEL PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Plaintiffs' Motion To Compel Production Of Documents came on for hearing on August 31, 2005. The court, having read and considered the papers and heard oral argument, took the matter under submission and now rules as follows:

Plaintiff's motion to compel production of documents is GRANTED in part and continued in part to allow for the production of an attorney-client privilege log.

Although defendants raised a number of objections when responding to plaintiffs' request for production of documents, they address only two of those objections in opposing plaintiffs' motion to compel: the penitential communication privilege and the attorney-client privilege, which the court will discuss in more detail below. As to the other objections not discussed by defendants, the court finds the objections are not well taken. The requested discovery requests are not overbroad, are relevant, and are not barred by Serbian East Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696.

1. Penitential Privilege

Evidence Code section 1032 provides:

> As used in this article, "penitential communication" means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a member of the clergy who, in the course of the discipline or practice of the clergy member's church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear those communications and, under the discipline or tenets of his or her church, denomination, or organization, has a duty to keep those communications secret.

Defendants object to the production of a number of documents requested by plaintiffs on the ground that they are protected by the penitential communication privilege contained in Evidence Code section 1032. This court finds that the privilege does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee. The evidence presented by both sides establishes that communications with the Judicial Committee do not fall within the scope of the privilege. First, it is clear that the Judicial Committee's purpose is to investigate sins for which disfellowship is a potential penalty. This is established not only by the deposition excerpts provided by plaintiffs, but by the Watchtower publication provided by defendants in connection with the objections to plaintiffs' evidence ("Judicial action is necessary only if a gross sin has been committed that could lead to disfellowshipping" p. 18.) Second, the privilege does not apply because the Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. In fact, the evidence establishes that the Judicial Committee was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters.

Because the penitential communication privilege does not apply, within 20 days defendants shall produce all documents for which it previously asserted this privilege.

2. Attorney-client privilege

Defendants have not produced a privilege log for those few documents they apparently claim are protected by the attorney client privilege. Neither the plaintiffs nor the court can adequately address the objection without a privilege log. Defendants shall serve a privilege log on plaintiffs within 10 days. Plaintiffs may thereafter file and a supplemental brief addressing the log within 10 days. The court will then issue a written ruling on the matter.

CONFIDENTIAL

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Dear Brothers:

A matter of serious concern was addressed in the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked," published in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower. This concern involves the purity of Jehovah's organization in these last days. It is our responsibility to protect the flock of God from these threatening influences.—Isa. 32:1, 2.

We wish to take necessary steps that will help protect the congregation, especially our children, from the unwholesome practices that are constantly worsening in the world. We are grateful that the truth has limited the spread of child sexual abuse in Jehovah's organization.

WHO IS A 'KNOWN CHILD MOLESTER'?

What is child molestation? Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary defines "pedophilia" as "sexual perversion in which children are the preferred sexual object." (See "Questions From Readers" in The Watchtower of February 1, 1997, page 29.) Deuteronomy 23:17, 18 condemns such practices as "detestable." (See the footnotes to verses 17 and 18 in the Reference Bible. Also, it would be helpful to see the footnote on page 10 of the October 8, 1993, issue of Awake!) In harmony with these references, we are herein discussing sexual perversion in which children are the object of sexual abuse, including fondling by an adult. We are not discussing a situation wherein a consenting minor, who is approaching adulthood, has sexual relations with an adult who is a few years older than the minor. Rather, we are referring, for example, to situations in which it is established by a congregation judicial committee that an adult brother or sister has been guilty of sexually abusing a young child or has been sexually involved with a nonconsenting minor who is approaching adulthood.

Who is a known child molester? The January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" mentions on page 29 that a man "known to have been a child molester" would not qualify for privileges in the congregation. An individual "known" to be a former child molester has reference to the perception of that one in the community and in the Christian congregation. In the eyes of the congregation, a man known to have been a child molester is not "free from accusation" and "irreprehensible," nor does he have "a fine testimony from those on the outside." (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7) In view of his past, people in the community would not respect him, and the brothers might even stumble over his appointment.

PROTECTING OUR CHILDREN

What can we do to protect our children and preserve the cleanness of Jehovah's organization? The primary responsibility for protecting our children rests upon the parents. Fine suggestions for parents can be found in the January 22, 1985, Awake! article "Child Molesting—You Can Protect Your Child." Other articles that parents do well to consider are those in the October 8, 1993, Awake! entitled "How Can We Protect Our Children" and the December 1, 1996, Watchtower entitled "Parents, Find Pleasure in Your Children," specifically pages 13 and 14, paragraphs 18 and 19.

What can the elders do to help protect our children? The elders should be alert to the activity of any who are known to have molested children in the past. Individuals who have manifested a weakness in this regard should be sensitive to their need not to be alone with children. They should refrain from holding children or displaying other forms of affection for them. It would be appropriate for elders to give kindly cautions to any who are doing things that may be a temptation or a cause for concern to others in the congregation.—1 Cor. 10:12, 32.

What should elders do when a former child molester moves to another congregation? As outlined in the February 1991 Our Kingdom Ministry "Question Box" and the August 1, 1995, letter to all Bodies of Elders, our policy is always to send a letter of introduction when a publisher moves to another congregation. It is imperative that this be done when one who is known to have been a child molester moves. The secretary should write on behalf of the elders to the new congregation's body of elders and outline this publisher's background and what the elders in the old congregation have been doing to assist him. Any needed cautions should be provided to the new congregation's body of elders. This letter should not be read to or discussed with the congregation. This information should be kept in the congregation's confidential files where it can be reviewed by any elder. The elders should send a copy of this letter to the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society in one of the "Special Blue" envelopes.

PRIVILEGES OF SERVICE IN THE CONGREGATION

In the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower, the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" stated on page 29: "For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer or serve in any other special full-time service." We have had a number of inquiries asking how this applies in the congregation, and this is being given consideration.

It may be possible that some who were guilty of child molestation were or are now serving as elders, ministerial servants, or regular or special pioneers. Others may have been guilty of child molestation before they were baptized. The bodies of elders should not query individuals. However, the body of elders should discuss this matter and give the Society a report on anyone who is currently serving or who formerly served in a Society-appointed position in your congregation who is known to have been guilty of child molestation in the past.

In your report please answer the following questions: How long ago did he commit the sin? What was his age at the time? What was the age of his victim(s)? Was it a one-time occurrence or a practice? If it was a practice, to what extent? How is he viewed in the community and by the authorities? Has he lived down any notoriety in the community? Are members of the congregation aware of what took place? How do they and/or his victim(s) view him? Has he ever been disfellowshipped, reproved, counseled, or otherwise dealt with? If he has moved to another congregation, please identify the congregation to which he has moved. Was that congregation advised of his past conduct of child molestation, and, if so, when? [If you have not advised them, this should be done now, and you should send a copy of your letter to the Society in a "Special Blue" envelope.] This information should be sent to the Society along with any other observations that the body of elders has. Please send this to the Society in the "Special Blue" envelope so that the factors involved may be given due consideration; this information is not to be made available to those not involved.

Jehovah has been blessing the efforts of his people to get the vital Kingdom-preaching and disciple-making work done. Isaiah 52:11 states: "Keep yourselves clean, you who are carrying the utensils of Jehovah." We must be ever vigilant to demonstrate to Jehovah that we want to keep the organization he uses in these last days fit for this all-essential trust. May Jehovah bless your efforts to that end.

Your brothers,

Watchtower B. & T. Society
OF NEW YORK, INC.

P.S. to Body of Elders: A meeting of the body of elders should be arranged to read and discuss this letter together. This letter is confidential and should not be copied but should be kept in the congregation's confidential file. Elders should not discuss this information with others. It is provided so that you can appropriately apply the spirit of the Scriptural information in the January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked."

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Dear Brothers:

We are here providing, for your future reference, information that was presented at the 15-hour supplementary course for congregation elders on certain serious matters.

Child Molestation: The Society's letter to all bodies of elders dated March 14, 1997, page 2, paragraph 5, states: "[G]ive the Society a report on anyone who is currently serving or who formerly served in a Society-appointed position in your congregation who is known to have been guilty of child molestation in the past." Reports indicate that some elders think this direction does not apply if before his baptism the person sexually abused a child. However, even in such a situation, the elders should write the branch office. This is true even if what occurred was many years ago. If any body of elders has not yet reported such a matter, they should immediately do so. Furthermore, any correspondence put in the confidential congregation file about an individual accused of child molestation, proven or otherwise, should be marked "Do Not Destroy" and be kept indefinitely.

In the Kingdom Ministry School Supplementary Course for Congregation Elders there was a panel discussion in Unit 5b, "USE DISCERNMENT IN HANDLING SERIOUS MATTERS." This portion of the course addressed questions related to the problems associated with child abuse. Question 6 to the panel asked: "What factors should be considered in determining what congregation privileges, if any, a former child molester can enjoy?" The answer included the statement: "There are also legal considerations." Some have inquired about how and why legal considerations should affect our recommendations of those who have been guilty of child abuse in the past.

Those who are appointed to privileges of service, such as elders and ministerial servants, are put in a position of trust. One who is extended privileges in the congregation is judged by others as being worthy of trust. This includes being more liberal in leaving children in their care and oversight. The congregation would be left unprotected if we prematurely appointed someone who was a child abuser as a ministerial servant or an elder. In addition, court officials and lawyers will hold responsible any organization that knowingly appoints former child abusers to positions of trust, if one of these, thereafter, commits a further act of child abuse. This could result in costly lawsuits, involving dedicated funds that should be used to further the Kingdom work. So, legal considerations must also be weighed along with the degree of notoriety, the extent of the misconduct, how many years ago the sin occurred, and how the brother is now viewed by the congregation and people in the community including those he victimized.

Scriptural Freedom to Remarry: The 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 1, describes a situation where an adulterous mate unilaterally obtains a divorce over the objection of the innocent mate. In such a case, the guilty one is not free to remarry.

What if the innocent mate consents to the divorce by signing the divorce papers? Does this free the guilty mate to remarry? Yes, Jesus' counsel at Matthew 5:37 applies here: "Let your Yes mean Yes, your No, No." If the innocent mate, perhaps in an effort to protect herself financially or to obtain custody of children, agrees to a divorce obtained by her adulterous husband, the adulterous one is then free to remarry. Although the innocent one may claim forgiveness, by signing the divorce papers she indicates her rejection of the adulterous mate. Since she has rejected that one, she holds no further claim on him, and he is Scripturally free to remarry.

Another situation involving the Scriptural freedom to remarry is where an unscriptural divorce is obtained and then, some time later, one of the mates commits fornication. In such a case, does either one have a Scriptural basis to remarry?

If a man takes the initiative and divorces his mate without a Scriptural basis and his divorced wife later commits adultery, both are free to remarry. This is because, by his previous unscriptural action of divorcing his wife, the husband has given evidence of his wanting to reject her. What is stated in the 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 6, applies: "A person who commits adultery after having been divorced by his or her mate on unscriptural grounds would be Scripturally free to remarry, since he or she had already been rejected by the mate that obtained the divorce." However, the converse is not necessarily true. If the one who initiated the unscriptural divorce later commits adultery, that one is still obligated to confess to the mate, although they are legally divorced. The innocent mate must be given the opportunity to determine whether to forgive or not. However, in both cases, the one committing adultery would need to meet with a judicial committee.

While the principles outlined above should prove helpful in handling inquiries from publishers about the Scriptural freedom to remarry, the elders should always exercise extreme caution when providing an answer. They should never inform a publisher that there appears to be a basis for Scriptural freedom to divorce and remarry, unless conclusive evidence has been established (1) that adultery was committed, (2) that the innocent mate has rejected the guilty one, and (3) that a legal, final divorce has been obtained. Because of the numerous factors involved in such matters, in many cases it will be best to write the Society. When doing so, always provide as many details as possible, including the names of the individuals involved. The Society will then provide the needed assistance.

When a divorced brother or sister wishes to remarry, the elders should kindly request to see the divorce papers to make sure that that one is legally free to do so. They should also determine that it has been established that both parties involved are Scripturally free to remarry. (Matt. 19:9) This will help servants of Jehovah to preserve the cleanness of the congregation and avoid entering adulterous marriages. Always review the Society's letter to all bodies of elders dated May 15, 1988, regarding guidelines on wedding procedures before agreeing to solemnize any marriage.

Please be assured of our prayers on your behalf as you endeavor to fulfill your weighty responsibilities as shepherds of the flock. We send herewith a warm expression of our Christian love and best wishes.

Your brothers,

A. Yes.
Q. And you believe that occurred sometime in '98?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. All right. And there's a record of that, you believe, in the police records in Rapid City?
A. Yes, there is.
Q. Did you hold a valid driver's license for the state of Oregon at the time of your arrest?
A. Yes, I did.
Q. And did you hold a valid driver's license while you lived in South Dakota?
A. I did for awhile. Because when I was -- had attended an alcohol treatment program.
And I could have gotten it back, but I couldn't -- we couldn't afford insurance. So you have to have insurance to have your driver's license back there. So when I got to Oregon, I had it renewed, so --
Q. But you had a driver's license in South Dakota for some period of time?

A. Oh yes. I had to have that to drive back and forth on the freeway, deliver the papers and so forth.
Q. When you were privately reproved, did you appear personally in front of a judicial committee?
A. Yes.
Q. Composed of three elders?
A. I believe there was three. Yes.
Q. And what was the result of the private reprovement?
A. I was just reproved for alcohol. And I didn't -- wouldn't be holding anything in the congregation. But I wasn't even attending then, so --
Q. So it really had no effect on you personally as far as the church was concerned?
A. No.
Q. Is that correct?
A. That's correct.
Q. During your affiliation with the Altamont congregation in Klamath Falls, did you appear in front of any judicial committees?
A. It was not a judicial committee. I just come in, in front of some elders. And they were aware that I had been a child molester.

So they would have to watch me and make sure there was no -- I didn't use the rest room without being watched or any of that, so --
Q. And how did they know that you were a molester?
A. Because I told, when I was in South Dakota, I told those brothers there that I had been a child molester at one time. And they told me, you know, they'd pass it on to the congregation.
I guess evidently after 1995, I think it was 1997, Watchtower come out at that time saying that child molesters couldn't be used in positions of responsibility or anything like that, so --
Q. Do you remember the elders that you told in South Dakota that you were a child molester?
A. One was Roger Kelly. And the other one I believe was Steve Taylor. I don't remember the other one, the other one that was there, what his name was.

Q. Did you voluntarily provide this information to these two individuals?
A. Yes.
Q. Did you understand that you were under some obligation to do that at the time that you made this statement to them?
A. Yes. I was a baptized person, so I needed to do that.
Q. And when they learned that you had a history of child molestation, what special precautions did they take with you in terms of the other members of the congregation?
A. They told me that I wasn't allowed to hold any position in the congregation. And basically I wasn't attending meetings, so there wasn't a problem there.
Q. Well, you attended meetings from '92 to '95.
A. That's in Rapid City, South Dakota.
Q. Right.
A. And the question had never come up until that time until the information come out, I believe it was 1997 it came out.
I wasn't attending meetings at all during that time, from '97 to '98.

Q. Well, I'm trying to put some time frame here. When you had this conversation with the two elders, Kelly and Taylor, was this after you stopped attending services?
A. Yes, it was.
Q. So when you first arrived in Rapid City, and you attended services from '92 to '95, you didn't reveal this information to the congregation, is that right?
A. Right. It wasn't necessary to do that. They send a letter of record, your publisher's card, to the congregation that you're going to attend. And it's on that. So they would have been aware of it anyway.
Q. And you think that Watchtower had a new policy in '97 that required you to reveal this information to the elders?
A. Well, absolutely. You would have to.
Q. What happened in 1997 that changed?
A. In '97, I had that DUI. And they brought me in on that. And then they asked me if I had problems in that area and I told them yes, so --
Q. Okay. I'm asking about what church policy changed in 1997 that prompted you to tell these two elders in South Dakota that you were a child molester?

A. They just outright asked the question, Roger Kelly did so -- that's as much as I can recollect.
Q. So you didn't go to them, they came to you, that's right?
A. Yes. And they asked if I would come to a committee meeting and I said yes, so --
Q. And you attended a committee meeting that was made up of these two individuals?
A. And there was another brother there too.
Q. Do you remember his name?
A. No, I don't.
Q. And in this committee meeting you revealed or acknowledged your history of child molestation?
A. Well, Roger Kelly directed that question right to me. And I told him I had been.
Q. Did you understand that he already knew?
A. No. In fact, I don't know if he did or not. I know that when they send your publisher's card to another congregation, that information's usually on that.

And maybe enough time had passed in between that it wasn't there. I don't know.
Q. Did any of these elders that made up this committee meeting tell you they had received information from another congregation about your history of child molestation?
A. No.
Q. When you got to Altamont, did you disclose to them that you had a history of child molestation?
A. No. They called me in and said that they were going to have to let my niece and nephew know, because they had a child. So they did do that.
Q. So Cindy and Chester were members of the Jehovah Witnesses, correct?
A. They are.
Q. They attended church?
A. Yes.
Q. And you were called to a committee meeting of elders?
A. No. Just two elders talked to me.

Q. Do you remember those two elders?
A. One was Mark Durr. And you'd have to get the other one's name from him, because I don't recall.
Q. How do you spell Mark's last name?
A. I believe it's D-u-r-r or D-u-r.
Q. All right. Now, it's important for me to understand whether you volunteered this information or you only gave the information when they asked.
A. I gave the information when they asked.
Q. Okay. And after you told them or acknowledged that you were a child molester, did they then want to contact Cindy and Chester Miller and let them know?
A. Let me straighten something out. I was brought to the floor on that by Roger Kelly in South Dakota.
When I got here, he had sent the information he had. It would have been on my publisher's card. So that's how they knew here.
So then they called me and asked about it. And they said they were going to

A. No. Because the information was already there. And when they sent it to another congregation, if there was any restrictions on it, then I'd be notified of that.
Q. So only if there was some negative history on the card such as a private or public reproving or a disfellowshipping would the new congregation meet with you?
A. No. They would automatically know on that, what was on the card, so --
Q. While you attended services in Rapid City, South Dakota, did the other -- and I don't want you to guess about this, but were you ever at a meeting of the church where it was made known to the members of that congregation that you had a history of child molestation?
A. No.
Q. You know that these two elders knew about it, correct?
A. Yes. Because I told them.
Q. Right. But you don't know what they did with that information in terms of passing it on to the other members of the congregation, correct?

A. Correct.
Q. And then you said that you told this -- or Mark Durr and Altamont also knew, because apparently he had received information from South Dakota that you were a child molester, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you know whether Mark Durr and the other individual whose name you don't recall, both of whom were elders, ever pass that information on to the other members of the congregation in Altamont?
A. It wasn't really necessary for them to do that. They would keep an eye on the individual that's --
Q. That's not my question. I want to know if you were ever told or sitting in the congregation at a meeting where you heard an announcement made that, to the other members of the congregation, that you had a history of child molestation.
A. No.
Q. Let's go to Susanville now. I take it from the chronology we've gone through so far that you were in Susanville in 1991, approximately?

A. It would be -- actually I moved to Rapid City, South Dakota, just in '92, so --
Q. So you were in Susanville immediately before going to Rapid City, South Dakota, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. And so that would have been 1991 that you were in Susanville, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. All right. By the way, while you were in Rapid City, South Dakota, you were arrested, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. For pedophilia?
A. No.
Q. I have here a felony warrant of arrest, File No. 04-1762, dated May 4, 2004, that is an indictment for the crimes of criminal pedophilia against Alvin Heard.
A. That was -- I had left South Dakota and was in Klamath Falls. And I was even incarcerated then when that was brought to me. So I was in the Klamath County Jail when that was brought forward to me.

Q. So you were in fact arrested in South Dakota?
A. Just for drunk driving.
Q. What is this felony warrant of arrest that I have here for criminal pedophilia then?
A. That's because of what happened in 1998 with some boys that I molested. And I had moved to Klamath Falls.
So they sent out a fugitive warrant. And I was arrested and given a plea bargain. If I would take this 75 months, that would be dropped. And it was.
Q. I just want to make sure this is clear. It's your testimony then that you were never arrested in South Dakota for allegations of child molestation?
A. No.
Q. That's correct?
A. Not when I was in South Dakota.
Q. All right. Let's return to Susanville. While you were in Susanville living with your niece and nephew, did you hold any positions of authority in the Susanville congregation?

A. No.
Q. Did you attend the services regularly?
A. Yes.
Q. Up to this point in time, had you ever been arrested for child molestation?
A. No.
Q. But you had been molesting children up to this point, correct?
A. Yes.
Q. All right. And did you contact any of the elders in the Susanville congregation and tell them that you were a pedophile?
A. No.
Q. Why not?
A. It just wasn't necessary at the time.
Q. Why wasn't it necessary?
A. Well, the information that we had prior to the 1997 I think it was, information was -- it was taken care of within the congregation that you were in, so --
Q. Are you telling me then that that congregation, that is the elders in the Susanville congregation already knew?

A. Actually they wouldn't. I don't see how they would have known.
Q. Well, you had --
A. Other than one elder that had been on a committee that I was in front of in Paradise, California.
That's when I was still married. And he may have passed that information on, I don't know.
Q. All right. So one of the elders, I mean we're going backwards here and I'm doing this for a very specific reason, because we're dealing with time frames that go all the way back, we're going to go back into the '70's here.
There was an elder in Susanville at the time you were there that had previously been an elder in Paradise?
A. He was in Paradise. And he went to the Susanville congregation to give a Bible talk. And I believe he talked to the residing overseer there. I'm not for sure.
Q. Well, that's okay. Who was this elder that had come from Paradise?

A. Dennis Thompson.
Q. Dennis Compton?
A. Thompson.
Q. Thompson. And Dennis Thompson knew of your acts of child molestation?
A. That's correct. Because he handled the committee meeting that was on it.
Q. And this involved the Herman children?
A. No. This involved children in Paradise -- I mean in Oroville, California.
Q. Oroville?
A. Because I lived in Oroville at the time. And when that meeting went on, that I went before a committee, I was in Paradise at the time. I had moved from Oroville to Paradise.
Q. We're going to get there, but I want to deal here with Susanville. So Dennis Thompson comes to Susanville during this one year period that you're there and gives a presentation to that congregation?
A. Yes.
Q. And he knows you're there?
A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether he told any of the elders in Susanville about his experience with you in Paradise?
A. I don't know. I know he talked to the presiding over at the time who was Glen Strahan.
Q. Could I have his name again please?
A. Glen Strahan. I don't know if he's affiliated with the congregation still or not there.
Q. Glen Strahan, for the one year period that you were there, was the presiding overseer for the Susanville congregation?
A. Yes.
Q. While you were in Susanville, did anybody make any reference to this publisher's card that we talked about earlier?
A. No. Not that I know of.
Q. Under your understanding of the purpose of this card, this card would have come from the preceding congregation, correct?
A. Right.
Q. And before Susanville, where did you attend?
A. Paradise, California. I'm starting to remember some things now on that card. The thing that I remember, it goes to the field overseer.

When you get into a new congregation, they'll send for it. And then it's sent there.

Very seldom would it be sent along with you. It's sent there separately. That's to know your activity even if you're standing in the congregation at the time. So that's basically what I can remember.

Q. Now, when you move from let's say Paradise to Susanville and you begin attending services in Susanville, do you call Paradise and let them know that you've now affiliated with the Susanville congregation, is that the way you do it?

A. No. They were aware that I was going to be leaving. And I wasn't for sure where I was going to go at the time.

Q. Well, that's what I'm trying to find out. How would the people in Paradise know where you're going?

A. Because the field overseer writes or calls and has them send my publisher's card to their congregation.

Q. But you have to tell them where you are, correct?

A. Yeah.

Q. You'd have to tell Susanville that you've previously come from Paradise and then they would get the information from Paradise or you would have to tell Paradise to send it to Susanville, correct?

A. Well, he, the field overseer -- I talked to the field overseer. When you become a member of that congregation, they have to have a publisher's card first.

And they will call or write the field overseer of the other congregation. Then it sends it forth.

Q. So how long were you a member of the Paradise congregation?

A. I can't recall exactly on that.

(Short pause in the proceedings).

Q. I'm going to represent to you that according to your wife Hazel, that you lived in Paradise from roughly 1988 until you moved to Susanville. Does that sound about right?

A. No. Because in 1980 I was in Paradise.

Q. 1988.

A. Yeah. But I was -- in 19 -- yeah, it would have been '88. 1990 I was in Paradise, so --

Q. All right. So in 1988, you're living in Paradise and you're attending services at the Kingdom Hall there, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, are you working?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And where are you working while you lived in Paradise?

A. I worked for Louisiana Pacific in Oroville, California.

Q. Now, did you live in Paradise continuously until you moved to Susanville?

A. No. Because before Paradise, we had lived, Hazel and I had lived in Chico, California.

Q. Now, from Paradise you moved to Susanville, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And I just want to know if for the entire period of time that you lived in Paradise, okay --

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Let me rephrase the question. From 1988 when you moved to Paradise until you moved to Susanville in 1991, did you live continuously for that three year period in Paradise?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Now, while you were in Paradise, you confessed to the elders of that congregation that you had been molesting children, is that right?

A. That I had molested children in the Oroville congregation.

Q. Fine. In Oroville. But you confessed to the molestations, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you do that in front of a judicial committee of elders?

A. When I confessed?

Q. Yes.

A. No. Two elders were there. And then when I confessed it, they wrote up -- took all the information down. Then I went before a committee.

Q. Okay. So first you tell two elders outside of a committee?

A. Yes.
Q. Then they convene the committee, and you related your admissions to them again?
A. Yes.
Q. Who were the two elders that you told before the committee was convened?
A. Actually I can picture their faces in my mind, but I can't remember their names. I can remember who was on the committee.
Q. Who's on the committee?
A. The one that I can remember would be Dennis Thompson. And he was the same one, by the way, that was in Susanville to give that talk.
Q. Anyone else that you can remember, even a first name that was on the committee?
A. I can't remember their names. I don't recollect.
Q. And the two elders that you told before you made the confession, were either one or both of these individuals on the judicial committee?
A. One of them, I believe one of them was. He was the older brother that was there, so --

Q. And as a result of this admission of molesting children in Oroville, what action was taken?
A. I was privately reproved because -- I was privately reproved, so -- If you want further details, you'll have to ask.
Q. I'm going to, yes.
A. Okay.
Q. First of all, I want you to tell me what a private reproving is in the Jehovah Witness religion.
A. Privately reproved means that it's done within, right there. It doesn't have to be announced if you're privately reproved.
If it's public reproved, yes. In other words, if there's people that are around that are aware of the whole situation and those parents of those children that were involved were invited there.
If they would have came, then it would have been a public reprove. Since none of them showed up, then it was a private reprove.
Q. And your understanding is that this admission on your part did not have to be communicated to the parents of these children, is that right?

A. No. Not at all. I told -- I went and told the parents myself. And told them that I would wait there at their house if they wanted to call the sheriff or whatever.
Q. That doesn't answer my question though, Mr. Heard. And I want to try it again.
When you were privately reproved, if the parents were not there for this judicial committee meeting and it was just you and the three elders, is it your understanding that the elders would not have had to go to these parents and tell them?
A. They went to the parents. I mean, they talked to the parents. The thing on private reprove is that when the judicial committee was convened and I was there, since none of the parents showed up, they were invited to show up, to come there.
And they were told that they still could take action within six years afterwards.
Q. So it's your understanding then that the parents already had been informed and knew as well as the fact that you had told them?

A. Yes. Absolutely.
Q. All right. Now, this molestation involved four girls, is that right?
A. One boy and three girls.
Q. One boy and three girls?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you remember their names?
A. I don't recall.
Q. Do you remember the names, the last names?
A. Belmont was the name of the boy, the last name of the boy. Nathan was his first name, Nathan Belmont.
Q. What was the name of the boy?
A. Nathan Belmont.
Q. Nathan Belmont.
And were the three girls all in one family?
A. No, they weren't.
Q. What were their last names?
A. I don't recall.
Q. I'm going to give you some names and see if it refreshes your recollection. Was there a girl by the name of Maria?

A. No.
Q. Was one of the girls, did one of the girls have the last name of Herman?
A. That was in the Red Bluff congregation.
Q. I'm only talking about Oroville right now.
A. Okay.
Q. How about -- let me look here.
(Short pause in the proceedings).
Q. Did you ever molest a young girl by the name of Maria Sackoll, S-a-c-k-o-l-l?
A. Not that I recall. No.
Q. Did you ever molest Roxanne, Heather, and Natalie -- Roxanne, Heather, and Natalie Herman?
A. I just touched them inappropriately at one time.
Q. All three?
A. All three.
Q. Okay. Mona McIntosh?
A. She accused me. But, no, I never did molest Mona. That was my ex-wife's sister.
Q. Shawn McIntosh?
A. Yes.

I had. That's as near as I can recall.
Q. Well, I don't want you to guess. I mean if --
A. Well, she didn't want to deal with that.
Q. She dealt with it before, correct?
A. Right.
Q. And this was another instance of child abuse that had come to her attention?
A. Yes.
Q. And she left you?
A. Yes.
Q. And where did she --
A. Excuse me. She didn't leave me, because I didn't confess to that until after she left. She went to Sacramento then.
Q. Where did she move when she separated from you?
A. She moved to Chico, California.
Q. And do you know where she lived?
A. I can just remember -- recall an apartment there. I moved back. We went back together there so --
Q. So she got an apartment in Chico and moved from your residence in Paradise?

Q. Vickie Carroll?
A. Yes.
Q. But as you sit here today you cannot remember the names, and I've got them in here but I'm not going to take the time right now, the names of the children in Oroville other than Nathan Belmont?
A. The one kid's mother's name was Pat. But I can't remember what her last name is. It might have been Sackoll. Is that the one you --
Q. Yeah.
A. And then I never did know the name of her child. Just, she was two years old when I touched her inappropriately.
Q. As a result of -- Well, let me put the question differently. While you were living in Paradise, did you and your wife Hazel separate?
A. Yes, we did.
Q. Do you know why -- well, first of all, did she leave you?
A. Yes, she did.
Q. And do you know why she left you?
A. I guess because of the problems that

A. Yes.
Q. And how long did she live in Chico before you reunited?
A. Actually she -- I believe at one time she moved back to Red Bluff. And I went and got a -- well, that's when we lived --
I'm trying to get this all put together, where I can help you with that. In Paradise she had left me twice.
The first time she went to Sacramento. And then we got back together after that.
But when she was in Sacramento, I confessed to this other child molestation, or the ones that happened in Oroville.
Q. Do you remember what year you admitted to the molestations in Oroville?
A. It would have had to have been right after we moved to Paradise, California.
Q. Around 1988, correct?
A. Right. Because we moved from Paradise -- I mean, from Oroville. Let me get it straight now.
We moved from Oroville to Paradise. And then she -- that's where she left me was i Paradise the first time. Then we got back together. And then she left another time right around 1990.

Q. Why did you admit to the molestation of the four children in Oroville?

A. Because of conscience, Bible conscience, conscience. I was having a struggle to try to -- with this sort of behavior.

Q. So you just decided that you were going to tell the elders?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And it isn't because anybody was accusing you of anything, is that right?

A. No. No, they weren't.

Q. That includes the parents of these children?

A. Yes.

Q. And you said that you went to the parents and told them as well?

A. I did. The ones that I couldn't face, I called.

Q. Now, when you were privately reproved in Paradise, that didn't prevent you from attending services, correct?

A. No, no.

Q. And private reproval didn't mean that any of the other members of the congregation knew what had happened, correct?

A. Right. Yes.

Q. That's correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And to your knowledge, none of the other members of the congregation knew of this private reproving, correct?

A. No, they didn't.

Q. And you remained in that congregation, attending services there until you relocated to Susanville in 1991, correct?

A. Yes. Yes. But our addresses in Paradise had changed, so --

Q. And do you know as you sit here today whether the publisher's card that showed up in Susanville made note of the admission of child molestation in Paradise?

A. I have no idea. I don't think it did.

Q. Do you know whether that publisher's card noted your private reproving in Paradise?

A. It probably did. But I don't know. I can't recollect, so -- not that I can't recollect, I just don't know.

Q. Okay. And if you're privately reproved and it's put on the card, the card doesn't have to say what you were reproved for, correct?

A. I'm not aware, so I don't know.

Q. Well, that would be a publishing of the reproval. And the whole concept of the private reproval is to keep it within this meeting involving the elders and the person that's involved, isn't that right?

MR. SCHNACK: I'm going to object to the form of the question. I think you're mischaracterizing his testimony.

You can answer.

THE WITNESS: Rephrase the question.

MR. NOLEN: Sure.

Q. (BY MR. NOLEN:) The private reproving, as you've explained it, means that the information that's discussed in this session with the elders remains private?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. And it's not announced to the congregation, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And it's not given to the other elders, correct?

A. The other elders would have known what -- that there was a private reprove that took place.

Q. But beyond that, no one else knows the reasons, correct?

A. No.

Q. And therefore would the publishing card that we've been talking about contain the specific information about the private reproving?

A. It depends on how many -- this is my own thinking on it. It depends on how long ago that it took effect. If it was within the last few years or so forth. And I don't recall.

Q. Okay.

MR. NOLEN: Why don't we take a short break.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: I'm off the record.

(Short recess).

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're back on the record.

Q. (BY MR. NOLEN:) Mr. Heard, according to information provided by your former wife, you lived in Oroville beginning in about 1985?
A. Yes.
Q. And did you live in Oroville continuously from 1985 until you moved to Paradise in 1988?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And were you affiliated with the congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses while you were living in Oroville?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you remember the name of that congregation?
A. No, I don't.
Q. Do you remember the street location?
A. I can't remember that either.
Q. Did you attend services on a regular basis?
A. For awhile, yes.
Q. How long did you attend regularly at the congregation in Oroville?
A. Probably eight months to a year, nearly as I can remember.

65

Q. And I haven't asked this question, I probably should. When you would attend services, would you always go together; that is, you and your wife?
A. Most of the time, yes.
Q. She was a member of the Jehovah Witness faith?
A. Yes, she was.
Q. And with just rare exceptions, the two of you would attend the meetings and the services together, correct?
A. Most of the time we both did. My daughter also attended.
Q. That's Beth?
A. Beth.
Q. So better yet, explain it to us why you didn't attend services except for eight months to a year while you lived in Oroville.
A. Just sometimes you just get involved too much in work and other activities that knocks it out, so --
Q. Where were you working?
A. I was working for Louisiana Pacific.
Q. The same place you worked while you lived in Paradise, correct?

66

A. Yes.
Q. What did you do for Louisiana Pacific?
A. I pulled chain and did grading.
Q. Is that what you did while you lived in Paradise?
A. Yes.
Q. Did you hold any positions of leadership at the Kingdom Hall in Oroville?
A. No.
Q. When did you begin molesting the children in Oroville?
A. It was several months after -- well, as near as I can recollect, it was probably a month or so after I quit attending meetings. And I can't recall exactly when that was.
Q. And how did you come in contact with these children?
A. My daughter was a regular pioneer. And they would come to the house, so --
Q. So the molestations all occurred in your personal residence?
A. Yes.
Q. And this is while the children were there to see your daughter?

67

A. Well, they would leave them there because my daughter would be out -- go out in the field service with her mother or whatever.
Q. So you were in effect baby-sitting these children?
A. Just the one, Nathan. The other one, she was just there at one time I think with Beth.
Q. Well, there were four children, correct?
A. Three.
Q. All right. Nathan and two girls?
A. Right.
Q. And you don't remember their names?
A. The one I believe, since you brought up Pat Sackoll, it would have been her little daughter who was two years old. And I inappropriately touched her.
Q. She was only two years old?
A. Yes.
Q. Were you ever confronted by the parents of these children while you lived in Oroville?
A. No.
Q. They didn't know about it, correct?

I, RUDY NOLEN, declare:

I am an attorney at law duly licensed to practice before all the Courts in the State of California. I am one of the Plaintiffs attorneys in these matters which are coordinated in the Superior Court for the County of Napa.

Attached as Exhibit 1 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion to Compel is a true and correct copy of the Notice of taking Deposition which we have served on the Watchtower defendants.

Attached as Exhibit 2 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities is a true and correct copy of this Court's September 29, 2005 ruling regarding Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Production of Documents.

Attached as Exhibit 3 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities is a true and correct copy of the March 14, 1997 letter addressed "To All Bodies of Elders".

Attached as Exhibit 4 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities is a true and correct copy of the July 20, 1998 letter addressed "To All Bodies of Elders".

Attached as Exhibit 5 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities are true and correct copies from the deposition transcript of Alvin Heard.

Considerable discussions were had regarding whether Defendants would produce anyone in response to the Notice of Deposition which is the subject of this motion. The culmination of those discussions was that the Watchtower Defendants' attorney would assert privileges based upon the penitential communication privilege as to most matters sought in the Notice of Deposition. The final result of those discussions is set forth in the E-mail, a copy of which is attached Exhibit 6 to this Declaration, from one of the attorneys for Plaintiffs to the Watchtower Defendants' attorney. It was agreed that Plaintiffs would seek the Court's ruling concerning the production of a person to testify concerning these matters.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct, executed this 14 day of September at Sacramento, California.

Subject: meet and confer letter re: motions to compel

This will confirm that we have met and conferred today concerning our two PMK notices.

We have been unable to reach any agreement concerning the PMK notice inquiring about the legal department and the Child Abuse Telememos. Accordingly, we will file a motion to compel.

Concerning the other PMK notice, I understand that you will assert objections based on clergy-penitent privilege to items 7 through 10, 12 and 13 to any discovery pertaining to anyone other than Alvin Heard and James Henderson. I understand that you will assert additional objections to 12 and 13 that the requested discovery involves matters that post-date August, 1981 and, therefore, is not reasonable calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. I understand that you will object to anything regarding Alvin Heard that post-dates August, 1981 (his last alleged abuse of the Wimberley plaintiffs and the judicial committee action in August 1981 regarding Alvin Heard) and anything regarding James Henderson that post-dates the Tim W issues (abuse of Tim W. and the related judicial committee proceedings of Dec. 1994, etc.) We will file a motion to compel pertaining to those items.

We also agreed that plaintiffs' request for documents would include documents related to elders' or judicial committee investigations and proceedings regarding the alleged perpetrators from the Woodland, Colfax and Napa congregations and any reports, communications, etc. related thereto to the Service Department in New York.

Thank you for your cooperation. Please call with questions or comments.

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs are moving to compel the Watchtower Defendants to produce documentation and deposition testimony consistent with the PMK Notice of Taking Deposition which is currently set for October 18-19, 2006. (A copy of the Notice of Taking Deposition is attached as Exhibit 1.)

On November 15, 2005, Gary N. Breaux was deposed as the person most knowledgeable about, among other things, "any and all policies that the Jehovah's Witnesses organization had for handling accusations and proof of child sexual abuse from 1970 to the present." During the course of the deposition, Mr. Breaux identified certain functions that were handled by the legal department, rather than the service department in which he worked. He was unable to answer several questions about the role of the legal department in the formation and implementation of the policies in question.

LEGAL AUTHORITY

California Code of Civil Procedure § 2025.450(a) provides that a party may move for an order "compelling the deponent's attendance and testimony, and the production for inspection of any document or tangible thing described in the deposition notice."

In addition, California Code of Civil Procedure § 2020.480(a) provides that a "party seeking discovery may move the court for an order compelling" an answer to a question or the production of a document which is under a deponent's control and is not answered or produced at the deposition.

CATEGORIES OF TESTIMONY TO BE COMPELLED

The deposition notice in question designates matters fairly included within the scope of "any and all policies that the Jehovah's Witnesses organization had for handling accusations and proof of child sexual abuse from 1970 to the present." Specifically, it designates the following matters:

1. The organization, staffing and operation of the Legal Department from the date of the department's creation until the present.

2. The Legal Department's role in responding to and investigating allegations of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses organization from the date of the department's creation until the present.

Neither designation invades the attorney-client privilege or seeks to inquire about work product. The designations concern policies and their implementation and, but for his lack of personal knowledge, Mr. Breaux would have addressed them. (See excerpts of deposition of Gary N. Breaux attached hereto as Exhibit 2.)

TESTIMONY ABOUT PRODUCED DOCUMENTS TO BE COMPELLED

At the depositions, Defendants produced many documents pursuant to a duces tecum. However, several of the documents were created and utilized by the Legal Department and, again, Mr. Breaux did not have sufficient personal knowledge to testify about those documents. (The produced documents in question would be attached hereto as Exhibit 3 except that they may still be subject to a Stipulated Protective Order. For that reason, they will be provided to the Court at the time of the hearing.) Items 3 through 5 address three of those documents:

3. The development and use of "Child Abuse Telememos."

4. Records kept by or under the direction of the Legal Department concerning allegations of child sexual abuse.

5. Answers to the "Survey Questions" on p.2 or the 1993 "Child Abuse Telememo, page WTNY 00570 of the exhibits to the deposition of Gary N. Breaux and J. Richard Brown, Bates numbers SR 00000094.

Items 3 and 5 pertain to actual documents produced at the depositions. Exemplars of the "Child Abuse Telememos" were produced and Plaintiffs are entitled to examine defendant about the development and use of those documents. The "Survey" questions were found on one of the "Child Abuse Telememos" and Plaintiffs seek only to learn the results of that survey.

Item 4 seeks only to discover, generally, information about the type of records kept by the legal department, how long such records have been kept, the number of records, etc., in order to determine whether a request for specific documents would be appropriate.

GOOD CAUSE JUSTIFIES THE PRODUCTION OF THE DOCUMENTS AND ANSWERS TO THE QUESTIONS

These questions and documents go to the heart of the Plaintiffs' accusations of child sexual abuse and defendants' knowledge of that abuse. The knowledge of various individuals in the Jehovah's Witnesses organization is key to Plaintiffs' proof of their case in these matters.

The individual who was produced as the person most knowledgeable was unable to address various topics due to his lack of knowledge. Plaintiffs, through this motion, seek to have the Watchtower Defendants produce an individual with knowledge of the applicable topics and documents.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs respectfully request that this Court find that the above discovery matters are not protected by the attorney-client privilege or the work product doctrine, and issue an order compelling the Watchtower Defendants to produce a witness or witnesses that will provide testimony in connection with the above five categories of inquiry.

the congregation. Right? 11:23:38
A. That's right. 11:23:40
Q. But you've also told us that the 11:23:41 elders are not trained in the type of 11:23:43 investigative techniques that law enforcement 11:23:46 employs. True? 11:23:49
A. That's right. 11:23:50
Q. So my question is -- is not 11:23:51 directed at anybody other than the -- than the 11:23:54 expectation of what the elders should do. My 11:23:56 question is simply this: Why don't the elders, 11:23:59 as soon as they receive an allegation of child 11:24:03 sexual abuse, pick up the phone and call the 11:24:07 police and ask the police to come in and 11:24:10 investigate? 11:24:13
A. You're speaking of prior to '94? 11:24:13
Q. Yes, sir. 11:24:16
A. Well, it would depend -- many 11:24:17 states didn't require it. And the position of 11:24:20 the body of elders is to -- is to care for that 11:24:22 individual within the confines of the 11:24:24 congregation. But at times it did require 11:24:27 individuals to call the authorities. 11:24:30
Q. Okay. 11:24:31
A. And certainly the family and 11:24:32

Page 98

those -- those that are knowledgable of it to 11:24:37 inform the authorities for extra protection. 11:24:39
Q. But prior to 1994, it was not 11:24:40 the policies -- I don't know what the policy is 11:24:42 after '94 and I'm not suggesting what it is 11:24:45 after '94. But at least up through 1994, it 11:24:48 was not the policy of the Jehovah's Witnesses 11:24:52 to have the elders pick up the phone and call 11:24:55
the police and have them come over and 11:24:58 investigate allegations of child sexual abuse 11:25:00 across the board, was it? 11:25:03
A. Well, no, it was not a policy, 11:25:04 but it doesn't mean that the congregation 11:25:06 didn't do something to protect. Certainly they 11:25:08 didn't encourage people not to call the 11:25:12 authorities. 11:25:14
Q. Well, one of the things that you 11:25:17 are designated as the person most knowledgeable 11:25:32 about is number 8 on the deposition notice. 11:25:35
I'll read it. It says, the "Person most 11:25:42 knowledgeable regarding any and all policies 11:25:47 that the Jehovah's Witness organization had for 11:25:49 handling accusations and proof of child sexual 11:25:52 abuse from 1970 to the present." Correct? 11:25:55
A. Yes. 11:25:59

Page 99

Q. Now, you've told me that you 11:25:59 don't know anything about these forms produced 11:26:00 by the legal department, including this child 11:26:08 abuse telememo that's Bates numbered 566. You 11:26:10 know nothing about that. 11:26:17
A. That is correct. I -- I'm not 11:26:20 in the legal department and I was not involved 11:26:21 in the preparation of this form. 11:26:23
Q. Okay. But one thing that you do 11:26:25 know, Mr. Breaux, is that it has been the 11:26:30 policy since you first became associated with 11:26:34 the Jehovah's Witnesses that the first thing 11:26:36 that an elder is expected to do if he receives 11:26:41 an allegation or any information that suggests 11:26:46 that a child has been the victim of sexual 11:26:49 abuse, that elder is supposed to call the legal 11:26:53 department. True? 11:26:56
A. Yes. I think -- I think about 11:26:57 the middle of the 1980s that was the direction 11:26:58 given. 11:27:01
Q. Well, that's been the direction 11:27:01 given way before the 1980s, wasn't it? That 11:27:04 was the direction given as early as 1965, when 11:27:07 you joined the organization, wasn't it, or when 11:27:11
you came to Brooklyn? 11:27:14

Page 100

A. If there was some legal issue? 11:27:15
I don't even think we had a legal department 11:27:18 back in the sixties. 11:27:20
Q. Well, you have -- you have 11:27:21 actually produced some documents that -- 11:27:22 deposition of Gary Breaux. We're on the 11:30:37 record. 11:30:40

Q. Mr. Breaux, before we took a 11:30:41 break, you said that you -- you said something 11:30:43 about you didn't know when -- or you didn't 11:30:46 think you had a legal department before a 11:30:50 certain period of time and -- I don't remember 11:30:53 exactly what you said. And I bring that -- I'm 11:30:54

Page 225

A. If he's moving into a congregation and he's served previously and that search has already been done, then no, it's -- there won't be a second search. 03:35:02 03:35:04 03:35:06 03:35:09

Q. I'm sorry. I didn't understand that. Can you run that by me one more time? 03:35:19 03:35:21

A. He's an elder in one congregation and now he's -- he moves to a different congregation, then when he moves, a recommendation is made and at that time he will be reappointed. 03:35:24 03:35:25 03:35:28 03:35:30 03:35:34

Q. Well, what if he doesn't want to be reappointed? What if an elder in congregation A moves to congregation B and does not choose to seek appointment as an elder? First of all, the branch office is notified of that move. Correct? 03:35:36 03:35:38 03:35:42 03:35:44 03:35:47 03:35:51

A. If he is not going to be recommended in the next congregation, then we're not notified that he's moving. 03:35:53 03:35:55 03:35:57

Q. I want to make sure that we're on the same page. When you say "recommended," do you mean recommended as an elder, or recommended for membership in the congregation? 03:35:59 03:36:01 03:36:04 03:36:06

A. No. As an elder or an appointed 03:36:08

position. 03:36:11

Q. So there's no notification if an elder moves from congregation A to congregation B unless he seeks reappointment. 03:36:12 03:36:14 03:36:17

A. That's correct. To the branch office. 03:36:19 03:36:20

Q. Okay. In that case, the only information about that elder's past that would be reported through Jehovah's Witness channels, if you will, would be in the letter of introduction that accompanies him to the new -- or that goes to the new congregation. 03:36:21 03:36:25 03:36:30 03:36:34 03:36:37 03:36:39

A. That would be correct. 03:36:42

Q. And if the individual moving from congregation A to congregation B were not an elder or a ministerial servant or a pioneer, there would be nothing -- there would never be a report to the branch office under any circumstances, would there? 03:36:44 03:36:50 03:36:50 03:36:55 03:36:56 03:37:00

A. Unless there was some other judicial issues or questions to be raised. But normally not; there would not be a copy of the introduction letter sent to the branch when a person moves to another congregation. 03:37:03 03:37:05 03:37:07 03:37:11 03:37:14

Q. Normally there would only be the 03:37:15

introduction letter to the new congregation. 03:37:18

A. That's correct. 03:37:20

Q. Okay. Now, you say if there were judicial issues and some other things, there might be a report to the branch office? Under what circumstances would that happen? 03:37:20 03:37:21 03:37:23 03:37:25

A. If there was some complicated issue that the judicial committee was having problems with and they needed some further spiritual guidance. 03:37:29 03:37:31 03:37:33 03:37:36

Q. And that would depend on there being an ongoing judicial committee investigation at the time the individual moved. 03:37:38 03:37:40 03:37:43

A. Yes, that's -- that's right. 03:37:46

Q. Okay. Other than that, there wouldn't be a report? 03:37:49 03:37:50

A. There would not be. 03:37:52

Q. Okay. The -- this -- this notice asked that a person be designated who was most knowledgeable regarding any and all policies that the Jehovah's Witnesses -- Jehovah's Witness organization had for handling accusations and proof of child sexual abuse from 1970 to the present. Can you think of anything we haven't discussed that pertains to 03:37:52 03:38:01 03:38:08 03:38:11 03:38:16 03:38:20 03:38:21 03:38:23

those policies? 03:38:25

A. No, nothing comes to my mind. 03:38:30

Q. All right. Similarly, you were designated to testify about the policies the Jehovah's Witness organization had for warning congregations and their members when a known child molester joined the congregation from 1970 to the present. Can you think of anything that we haven't discussed that pertains to those policies? 03:38:33 03:38:37 03:38:44 03:38:47 03:38:50 03:38:52 03:38:55 03:38:57

A. Nothing comes to my mind. 03:39:01

Q. All right. My understanding is that you are not going to answer any questions about documents produced by the legal department in response to our document request, even if those documents pertain to policies that the Jehovah's Witness organization had for handling accusations and proof of child sexual abuse. Is that correct? 03:39:04 03:39:05 03:39:10 03:39:13 03:39:16 03:39:21 03:39:26 03:39:30

MR. SCHNACK: I think that misstates my objections. He doesn't have personal knowledge about the legal forms and the legal department procedures, is what the objection was. 03:39:31 03:39:32 03:39:32 03:39:32 03:39:35

Q. Well, regardless of what the 03:39:36

objection was, are you -- are you prepared to answer questions about the documents produced by the legal department and how they're used and their purpose? 03:39:38 03:39:42 03:39:46 03:39:48

MR. SCHNACK: He lacks personal knowledge in that regard. That was the objection. 03:39:50 03:39:51 03:39:53

MR. HAMPTON: Okay. 03:39:54

MR. SCHNACK: His own testimony supports that. 03:39:54 03:39:55

MR. HAMPTON: And I believe he was instructed not to answer as well. 03:39:55 03:39:56

Q. Is that correct? Were you instructed not to answer? 03:39:58 03:39:59

MR. SCHNACK: Well, let's -- let's go question by question if you want to pursue it, because if there are questions I'll allow him to answer -- just the way it's stated, I can't blanket say no. 03:40:01 03:40:01 03:40:04 03:40:06 03:40:13

Q. My understanding is that you're produced here today without -- that you have no personal knowledge about the role of the legal department in carrying out, implementing the policies that the Jehovah's Witness organization has concerning accusations and 03:40:13 03:40:15 03:40:19 03:40:22 03:40:27 03:40:29 proof of child sexual abuse. Is that true? 03:40:32

MR. SCHNACK: From 1994 and prior. 03:40:36 03:40:38

MR. HAMPTON: That's correct. Well, actually from 1990 -- 1970 to the present, is what the notice says. 03:40:38 03:40:38 03:40:42

MR. SCHNACK: But we did object to the notice based on dates. 03:40:43 03:40:44

MR. HAMPTON: Regardless. Any date. 03:40:46 03:40:48

MR. SCHNACK: It's not regardless. 03:40:48 03:40:48

Q. Any date. You have -- you do not have personal knowledge of how the legal department fits into this, these policies. Is that fair? 03:40:49 03:40:50 03:40:52 03:40:55

MR. SCHNACK: Within the time frame up through '94. That's what he's here to testify about. 03:40:56 03:40:57 03:41:00

MR. HAMPTON: Okay. 03:41:01

Q. Up through '94, you don't know how the legal department participates in these policies for handling accusations and proof of child sexual abuse, do you? 03:41:02 03:41:03 03:41:06 03:41:09

A. I do not know how those forms 03:41:11

were used by the legal department. 03:41:13

Q. You don't know how -- what the legal department does in participating in these policies, do you? 03:41:15 03:41:16 03:41:20

MR. SCHNACK: With respect to the same time frame, go ahead and answer. 03:41:23 03:41:23

A. No, I don't. 03:41:26

Q. So we have to talk to somebody from the legal department about that. 03:41:27 03:41:29

A. Yes, you would. 03:41:31

Q. We'd have to talk to somebody in the legal department about the forms that were produced by the legal department that we've already talked about, wouldn't we? 03:41:32 03:41:33 03:41:35 03:41:37

A. Yes, that's correct. 03:41:40

Q. Okay. Have you understood all my questions? 03:41:41 03:41:42

A. Yes, I have. 03:41:44

MR. HAMPTON: Well I appreciate your time. I enjoyed meeting you and talking to you. 03:41:47 03:41:48 03:41:51

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much. 03:41:53 03:41:53

MR. SCHNACK: Let's go off the record for just a second. I think we're going 03:41:55 03:41:56

BY MR. SCHNACK: 03:49:09

Q. Mr. Breaux, I just have a few questions. 03:49:10 03:49:12

When you were answering Mr. Hampton's questions there at the end about the legal department, your answers referred to the forms that were produced in connection with your deposition. Is that correct? 03:49:12 03:49:13 03:49:16 03:49:19 03:49:21

A. That's correct. 03:49:23

Q. And that you're not sure how those forms are specifically used in the legal department. Is that correct? 03:49:23 03:49:24 03:49:26

A. That's correct. 03:49:27

Q. Do you have a general understanding what the legal department does when elders from local congregations in the United States call in? 03:49:28 03:49:29 03:49:30 03:49:33

A. Yes, I do. 03:49:34

The elders have no duty to report child abuse under the _____ child abuse reporting law. Whether others who have knowledge make a report or pursue the matter legally is a personal decision. We explained the Society's policy of confidentiality and directed the elders to contact the Legal Department if they are subpoenaed. We had no legal objection to the elders handling this matter as they would any other case of serious wrongdoing. The elders should refer to the Awake! issues on child abuse (6-22-82, 1-22-85, 12-22-86, 10-1-83) in giving appropriate spiritual assistance to the family. Positive steps should be taken to prevent further abuse. The elders should monitor the situation carefully for the protection of other potential victims.

REPORTING ☐

The elders have a duty to report child abuse under the _____ child abuse reporting law. They should speak to the offender directly and find out if he is willing to turn himself in. If he is unwilling, there may be someone else who has knowledge of the abuse who will make a report. If no one who has knowledge of the abuse is willing to make a report, two elders should make an anonymous phone report from a neutral location, such as a phone booth. They should keep a written record of who made the call, to whom it was made, the date and time of the call, and other pertinent factors. This record should then be signed by the two elders and placed in congregation files as proof that a report of child abuse was made in compliance with the law. Elders have no duty to report child abuse under the _____ child abuse reporting law. Whether others who have knowledge make a report or pursue the matter legally is a personal decision. We explained the Society's policy of confidentiality and asked the elders to review the letter of July 1, 1989. Encourage parties not to involve the congregation if authorities investigate. Contact the Legal Department if they are subpoenaed. No legal objection to the elders handling this as any other case of serious wrongdoing. The elders should refer to the letter of March 23, 1992, and use the articles cited on child abuse in giving appropriate spiritual assistance to the family. (See also Awake! 10-8-93) Treat victim with extreme thoughtfulness and kindness. Is it necessary to make the sexual abuse victim, who is still a minor, confront the accused? I, RUDY NOLEN, declare:

I am an attorney at law duly licensed to practice before all the Courts in the State of California. I am one of the Plaintiffs attorneys in these matters which are coordinated in the Superior Court for the County of Napa. Attached as Exhibit 1 to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Motion to Compel is a true and correct copy of the Notice of taking Deposition which we have served on the Watchtower defendants.

Attached to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities as Exhibit 2 are excerpts from the deposition of Gary N. Breaux, the individual who was produced as the Person Most Knowledgeable by the Watchtower defendants concerning certain topics. As can be seen on Pages 99, 227-229, and 230-231, Mr. Breaux was unable to testify concerning documents produced by the legal department, the organization of the legal department, and the legal department's policy regarding accusations of child sexual abuse.

Attached to the Memorandum of Points and Authorities as Exhibit 3 are the true and correct copies of the Child Abuse Telememos. (These documents may still be subject to a Stipulated Protective Order and they will be provided to the Court at the time of the hearing on this matter.)

The Watchtower defendants' attorney indicated that the Watchtower Defendants were unwilling to produce anyone who can testify about the legal department and the Child Abuse Telememos. It was agreed that Plaintiffs would seek the Court's ruling concerning the production of a person to testify concerning these matters. The E-mail concerning our inability to reach any agreement is attached as Exhibit 4.

I declare under penalty of perjury that the foregoing is true and correct executed this 14 day of September at Sacramento, California.

Subject: meet and confer letter re: motions to compel

This will confirm that we have met and conferred today concerning our two PMK notices.

We have been unable to reach any agreement concerning the PMK notice inquiring about the legal department and the Child Abuse Telememos. Accordingly, we will file a motion to compel.

Concerning the other PMK notice, I understand that you will assert objections based on clergy-penitent privilege to items 7 through 10, 12 and 13 to any discovery pertaining to anyone other than Alvin Heard and James Henderson. I understand that you will assert additional objections to 12 and 13 that the requested discovery involves matters that post-date August, 1981 and, therefore, is not reasonable calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. I understand that you will object to anything regarding Alvin Heard that post-dates August, 1981 (his last alleged abuse of the Wimberley plaintiffs and the judicial committee action in August 1981 regarding Alvin Heard) and anything regarding James Henderson that post-dates the Tim W issues (abuse of Tim W. and the related judicial committee proceedings of Dec. 1994, etc.) We will file a motion to compel pertaining to those items.

We also agreed that plaintiffs' request for documents would include documents related to elders' or judicial committee investigations and proceedings regarding the alleged perpetrators from the Woodland, Colfax and Napa congregations and any reports, communications, etc. related thereto to the Service Department in New York.

Thank you for your cooperation. Please call with questions or comments.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants.	Case No.: 26-22191 (Lead Case) JCCP No. 4374 ORDER RE CASE MANAGEMENT CONFERENCE OF AUGUST 24, 2006
AND COORDINATED CASES

TO ALL PARTIES AND THEIR COUNSEL OF RECORD:

A further judicial case management conference ("CMC") in all remaining coordinated actions came regularly for hearing on August 24, 2006 at 9:30 AM before the Honorable Raymond A. Guadagni in Dept. A. Plaintiffs' counsel Rudy Nolen and the Church Defendants' counsel Robert Schnack each appeared in person. Renee Kennedy of the Tehama County Superior Court also participated by telephone in the portions of the CMC regarding setting of trial dates in the Track I cases. The Court discussed and considered the written submissions of the parties with respect to proposed discovery plans and heard and considered related arguments of counsel. Now, therefore, being fully advised, and pursuant to agreement of the above-referenced counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants,

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED as follows:

Track I Cases -- Tehama County cases of Tim W. and Wimberley Gutierrez, et al

1. Trial Dates: The two Track I cases are hereby set for trial as follows: Tim W. is set for April 3, 2007; and Wimberley Gutierrez, et al is set for trial May 15, 2007, with each case scheduled for a 10-day jury trial. The parties shall consider those trial dates to be firm. Each case will be tried at the courtroom at the Juvenile Justice Center located at 1790 Walnut Street in Red Bluff, CA. The Tehama County Superior Court will send a notice of assignment of the trial judge who will preside over the trials of the Track I cases within approximately 30 days from the date of this CMC.

2. Non-Expert Discovery and Motion for Summary Judgment deadlines: The deadline for completion of all non-expert discovery and for the filing of summary judgment and summary adjudication motions in the Track I cases shall be December 1, 2006. The court can extend those deadlines for good cause shown.

3. Expert Discovery: Expert disclosures will be made per Code of Civil Procedure sections 2034.210, et seq., with expert depositions to be taken in March 2007.

4. Coordination: The Napa County Superior Court will continue to hear and rule on all discovery and summary judgment or summary adjudication motions filed by the parties in the Track I coordinated cases.

Non-Track I cases -- Napa County cases of Charissa W., et al and Tabitha H.; Placer County case of Ken L.; and Yolo County case of Daniel West, et al

1. Initial written discovery (form and special interrogatories, requests for production of documents, requests for admissions) shall be propounded by September 15, 2006;

2. Objections and responses to written discovery shall be due by October 20, 2006;

3. Court hearings on any discovery motions concerning the above referenced written discovery shall be held by December 15, 2006;

4. Depositions of parties: Plaintiffs' depositions are to be scheduled for late November/early December 2006, and depositions of any plaintiff's family members are to be scheduled starting no more than about 45 days after the plaintiffs' depositions; local congregation elders and PMK's of the entity defendants are to be completed by February 28, 2007 (but can proceed during written discovery, subject to activity in the Track I cases taking precedence over non-Track I cases due to pending trial dates in the Track I cases);

5. Depositions of non-party percipient or fact witnesses shall be completed by June 29, 2007;

6. Deadline for filing summary judgment/summary adjudication motions shall be August 1, 2007;

I. INTRODUCTION

The Church Defendants respectfully submit this response to plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 1 regarding only the Daniel West, et al case and depositions of elders of the local congregation defendant in that case. The specific issue presented is the applicability of the clergy-penitent privilege to the particular facts of this non-Track I case.

Contrary to what plaintiffs urge in their discovery motion no. 1, the earlier ruling did not in any way address the non-Track I cases. In the prior discovery motion filed last year, plaintiffs sought to compel the disclosure of documents and information related to spiritual communications that the two co-defendants in the Track I cases, James Henderson and Alvin Heard, had separately with clergy within the defendant Red Bluff North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. (See Track I plaintiff Tim W's prior Motion to Compel at p.3, line 7 – p.4, line 28, and plaintiffs Wimberley's prior Motion to Compel, p.3. line 7–p.4, line 28.) Thus, plaintiffs suggestion that the Court has already ruled on the clergy-penitent issue in the non-Track I cases is simply incorrect.[1]

In addition, the Court's earlier ruling was based strictly on communications within judicial committees convened by the defendant Red Bluff congregation, as well as on an erroneous misperception that the "Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. In fact, the evidence establishes that the Judicial Committee was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters." See this Court's "Ruling on Submitted Motion to Compel Production of Documents" at p. 2 (issued September 29, 2005)(emphasis added). In addition to the quoted language being factually incorrect, as demonstrated by the congregation elders' declarations filed herewith, the communications at issue here include penitential and confidential communications outside of any judicial committee setting. Thus, the Court's prior ruling does not address or decide the issues here.

In addition, in an apparent effort to discredit the Church Defendants before this Court, plaintiffs (as well as their Texas counsel Gregory Love through his sworn declaration) disingenuously suggest that the Church Defendants ignored this Court's prior ruling in the Track I cases by objecting to certain questions in the August 16, 2006 depositions of three Red Bluff elders in the Track I case of Tim W. However, as plaintiffs' counsel were then and still are well aware, the Church Defendants were then seeking appellate review of the prior trial court ruling. (The California Supreme Court did not rule on the Church Defendants' petition for review until the week after the August 16th depositions and, indeed, the time to seek further appellate review in the U.S. Supreme Court still has not expired.) Moreover, defense counsel Schnack had earlier proposed to plaintiffs' counsel that the Red Bluff elders' August 16th depositions be postponed until appellate review of this Court's prior ruling in the Track I cases was completed, but plaintiffs' counsel declined to postpone the depositions. Thus, because of the pending appellate review, defense counsel was forced by plaintiffs' counsel to object at the August 16th depositions in order not to waive the clergy-penitent privilege issue that was on appeal in the Track I cases.

II. CLERGY-PENITENT PRIVILEGE

In this Daniel West, et al case, there are four penitential and privileged communications within the meaning of California Evidence Code sections 1030, 1032, and 1034 at issue, as follows: (1) Confidential communications in the mid-1980's from a teenage male in the congregation to an elder concerning co-defendant Timothy Silva's spiritual health (Silva then attended the South Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Woodland, California ("South Congregation"), but he was not then a ministerial servant in any congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses) and related confidential spiritual communications with Silva; (2) confidential communications in 1991 between the South Congregation elders, the circuit overseer, who also is an elder, and elders in the United States Service Department concerning Silva's spiritual qualifications for appointment as a congregation ministerial servant; (3) a 1996 confidential communication from South Congregation elders to elders in the United States Service Department concerning Silva's spiritual qualifications for Ministerial Training School; and (4) confidential communications in May 1997 between Daniel West and three South Congregation elders concerning Silva's spiritual health, related confidential spiritual communications in May 1997 between the South Congregation elders and Silva and the South Congregation elders and elders in the United States Service Department, and related confidential spiritual communications in June 1997 concerning Silva's spiritual qualifications as a ministerial servant.

The alleged abuse of all plaintiffs in this case had ended by that latter time frame. Therefore, any later communications, even if this Court, arguendo, should find them not to be confidential and privileged, are irrelevant and not reasonably calculated to lead to discovery of admissible evidence in this case, because they cannot be used as evidence of "notice" to the elders in this case.

A. Discussion

The information about which plaintiffs seek to compel discovery in this non-Track I case of Daniel West, et al is protected by the clergy–penitent privilege. Cal. Evid. Code §§ 1030, et seq. Evidence Code section 1033 provides:

> "Subject to section 912, a penitent, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to, and to prevent another from disclosing, a penitential communication if he claims the privilege."

Evidence Code section 1034 further provides:

> "Subject to section 912, a clergyman, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose a penitential communication if he claims the privilege."

Under California's statutory scheme, a "penitent" is defined simply as "a person who has made a penitential communication to a clergyman." Evid. Code § 1031. In turn, a "penitential communication" is also defined in the Code:

> " '[P]enitential communication' means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a clergyman who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications and, under the discipline or tenants of his church, denomination or organization, has a duty to keep such communication secret."

Evid. Code § 1032. Consequently, a "penitential communication" is not limited to just confessions in the stereotypical sense of the word. It is any communication that fits the statutory description. California case law supports that analysis. The court in People v. Edwards defined the elements of the rule of privilege as follows:

> "In order for a statement to be privileged, it must satisfy all of the conceptual requirements of a penitential communication: (1) it must be intended to be in confidence; (2) it must be made to a member of the clergy who in the course of his or her religious discipline or practice is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications; and (3) such member of the clergy has a duty under the discipline or tenants of the church, religious denomination or organization to keep such communications secret."

People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1358, 1362-63.

The only instances in which the rule of privilege has been found not to apply are those in which either the communication was not made with a reasonable expectation of privacy, or the communication was made for a secular purpose rather than with the intention of receiving spiritual guidance or counseling, or the receiver of the communication was acting in a secular rather than ministerial capacity, or the tenets of the church did not require ministers to keep the subject communications secret. People v. Edwards, supra (defendant sought advice on how to avoid secular consequences of her criminal conduct rather than spiritual counseling and consented to disclosure of communication to lay members of the church who could help her deal with secular problems); People v. Johnson (1969) 270 Cal.App.2d 204 (communication was not made in confidence nor in the course of the required relationship and no evidence was presented that minister was authorized or accustomed to hear such communications or that he had a duty to keep such communications secret); United States v. Webb (1980) 615 F.2d 828 (communication was not confidential since made in presence of officer in addition to prison chaplain); United States v. Luther (1973) 481 F.2d 429 (rule of privilege did not apply to data in church financial records sought by Internal Revenue Service and which did not contain any communications from congregants seeking spiritual guidance of counseling); People v. Thompson (1982) 133 Cal.App.3d 419 (minister was acting in secular capacity when hired by company as ethics officer to improve sales and there was no expectation of confidentiality in the communication).

In this Daniel West, et al case, there is no evidence that the communications at issue were made in a fashion other than that required for the rule of privilege to apply. Importantly, the only evidence before this Court on this motion (i.e., the congregation elders' declarations submitted by the Church Defendants) is that they were made with a reasonable expectation of privacy under the religious beliefs and tenets of Jehovah's Witnesses. Under these circumstances, Evidence Code section 917 provides that the confidential quality of the communications must be presumed. California Evidence Code section 917 provides:

> "Whenever a privilege is claimed on the ground that the matter sought to be disclosed is a communication made in confidence in the course of the lawyer-client, physician-patient, psychotherapist-patient, clergyman-penitent, or husband-wife relationship, the communication is presumed to have been in confidence and the opponent of the claim of privilege has the burden of proof to establish that the communication was not confidential."

Moreover, there has not been any waiver of the privilege here by the congregation member or the clergy involved (i.e., the local congregation elders), who are each independent holders of the privilege. Further, congregation elders may also be penitents under Evidence Code section 1031 when they engage in confidential spiritual communications with other elders (i.e., clergy). Therefore, any confidential spiritual communications between the local congregation elders and a circuit overseer or elders in the United States Service Department of the Jehovah's Witnesses for the purpose of obtaining spiritual counsel and guidance are also penitential communications under Evidence Code section 1032 and thus protected from disclosure by Evidence Code sections 1033 and 1034.

Consequently, the Woodland elders should not be compelled to testify concerning the information conveyed in the subject communications with the elders. If this court requires any such testimony, as well as production of any documents prepared in conjunction with or as a result of those communications, the objective and policy underlying the rule of privilege will be frustrated and undermined.

In Trammel v. United States (1980) 445 U.S. 40, 100 S.C. 906, the U.S. Supreme Court described the seriousness of the need to preserve confidence in the communications between persons and their spiritual counselors. In that case, the U.S. Supreme Court stated that the minister-communicant privilege is "rooted in the imperative need for confidence and trust. The priest-penitent privilege recognizes the human need to disclose to a spiritual counselor in total and absolute confidence, what are believed to be flawed acts or thoughts to recover priestly consolation and guidance in return." Id., 445 U.S. at 51. The declarations and affidavits submitted demonstrate that need to preserve confidence within the Jehovah's Witnesses' religion with respect to the communications sought to be discovered by plaintiffs here.

Moreover, any contention that the rule of privilege does not apply to the Woodland elders (or to judicial committees of the Woodland congregation) would be a violation of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and its California analog. The First Amendment states, in relevant part:

> "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The U.S. Supreme Court has interpreted the establishment clause to require strict government neutrality towards religion. Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Millivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696; School District v. Schempp (1963) 374 U.S. 203. Denying the right conferred in the rule of privilege on the basis of a distinction between an elder or a judicial committee of Jehovah's Witnesses and ministers of other religions, or on the bases of the differences between Jehovah's Witnesses' pastoral procedures and those of other religions, would violate the federal and state constitutional requirement of government neutrality toward religion. Granting this statutory right to one religion while denying it to another based on the ecclesiastical structure of the churches would show judicial preference of one form of worship over another. Such judicial preference would result in an unconstitutional establishment of religion by essentially expressing a preference for one religion over another.

Plaintiffs have previously relied on Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417, to support their position. However, as relevant here, in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles the Court of Appeal ruled only that with respect to the Catholic church, the clergy-penitent privilege was inapplicable to protect communications by a Catholic priest where a "Vicar for Clergy" and a bishop were also both present, because there was not a Catholic religious belief or tenet that required both the Vicar for Clergy and the bishop to be present during such penitential communications.

Thus, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles thus does not affect the issue here one way or the other, because the Jehovah's Witnesses religion mandates the presence of at least three elders for judicial committee proceedings under Jehovah's Witnesses' religious tenets and doctrine. Here, extraneous third parties are not allowed to be present during confidential spiritual communications, but Jehovah's Witnesses' religious belief and practice is to have at least three elders present during judicial committee meetings to provide greater spiritual guidance and counseling. In the Jehovah's Witnesses religion and faith, the three or more elders making up a judicial committee to whom a congregation member communicates confidential spiritual information related to his sin or alleged sin constitute the "clergy" under Evidence Code sections 1030, et seq., and those clergy have a legal as well spiritual duty to keep such confidential spiritual communications with congregation members confidential and private. Any contrary ruling by this court invalidating the clergy-penitent privilege based on the fact that more than one elder is present during a judicial committee meeting would be unconstitutional, and Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles does nothing to change or affect that.

Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles is also inapplicable because it dealt with testimony and evidence that was to be presented to a grand jury in a criminal proceeding, not in civil litigation like that here. There, the court held that "disclosure was required because the government has a compelling interest in prosecuting child molesters." However, these non-Track I coordinated cases plainly are not criminal prosecutions of child molesters. Thus, the facts and any claimed state interest in these non-Track I cases are distinguishable from Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles. There simply is not any sufficiently compelling state interest in these cases to invalidate the clergy–penitent privilege.

Likewise, any contention by plaintiffs here that the establishment clause does not apply to state judiciary proceedings would be flawed. The U.S. Supreme Court has decisively settled that the First Amendment's mandate that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof has been made wholly applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment ... in a series of cases, the court has repeatedly reaffirmed the doctrine ...." Abington School District v. Schemp (1963) 374 U.S. 203, 216. This extension of the First Amendment to the states applies to judicial as well as legislative action. NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 463. "The Fourteenth Amendment, as now applied to the states, protects the citizens against the state itself and all of its creatures." West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 637. "Judicial action is to be regarded as action of the state for the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment [and] is not immunized from the operation of the Fourteenth Amendment simply because it is taken pursuant to the state's common law policy." Shelley v. Kramer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, 15, 20.

Moreover, denying the right conferred in the rule of privilege would also violate the Jehovah's Witnesses' right to the free exercise of religion. Only a neutral law of general applicability may burden that right. Employment Division Department of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872. "A law failing to satisfy these requirements must be justified by a compelling governmental interest and must be narrowly tailored to advance that interest." Church of the Lukumi Babaluiaaye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah (1993) 508 U.S. 520, 531. A non-neutral judicial avocation of the rule of privilege would make it unconstitutional as applied. Consequently, although the judicial system's need for testimony may be a compelling governmental interest, it cannot be used to justify denying the right conferred in the rule of privilege to Jehovah's Witnesses, while granting that same privilege to other religions. Such non-neutral judicial application would violate the constitutional right of free exercise of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Accordingly, for each of the reasons discussed, this Court should deny plaintiff's motion No. 1. The specific communications at issue fall within the clergy-penitent privilege, and this Court should so rule.

III. DOCUMENTS AND INFORMATION THAT POST-DATE THE ALLEGED ABUSE AT ISSUE IN THIS CASE ARE NOT DISCOVERABLE

In the event that plaintiffs in this Daniel West, et al case also seek to compel discovery of confidential and privileged information and documents that post-date the alleged abuse of each of the three plaintiffs, the Church Defendants also address that separate issue here. In addition to the foregoing privilege analysis, any such discovery that post-dates the alleged time period of abuse of each plaintiff in Daniel West, et al is overly broad, irrelevant, and not reasonably calculated to lead to discovery of admissible evidence. It may also result in the invasion of privacy rights of other persons not parties this action. Such discovery should therefore be denied (unless such documents make reference to abuse of others by Silva that any of the Church Defendants were informed of prior to the abuse of any of the three plaintiffs in Daniel West, et al).

A key element, among others, of each plaintiff's causes of action against the Church Defendants is that each of the Church Defendants knew or had reason to know of the alleged propensity of Silva to sexually abuse children (or the element of so-called "notice"). That is because, as a matter of law, the Church Defendants cannot be liable under any theory of vicarious liability or respondeat superior for the alleged sex abuse of these three plaintiffs while they were minors.

California case law makes it crystal clear that sexual misconduct falls outside the course and scope of any person's agency or employment and cannot be imputed to the person's principal or employer. E.g., Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609 (in "an action against a religious institution based on allegations of childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by one of its clergy [,] ... the abuse is committed outside the scope of the cleric's employment [and] the doctrine of respondeat superior is not available"); Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hospital (1995) 12 Cal.4th 291 (hospital not liable under respondeat superior theory for hospital technician's sexual assault of patient); John R. v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1989) 48 Cal.3d 438 (school district not vicariously liable for molestation of child by teacher); Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal.App.3d 718 (church not liable under doctrine of respondeat superior for molestation of student by Sunday school teacher).

In addition, the mere fact that Silva may have been a ministerial servant within a local congregation at the time he allegedly abused the plaintiffs does not, by itself, create liability for any of the Church Defendants. Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal.4th 992, 1013 ("for purposes of respondeat superior, employees do not act within the scope of employment when they abuse job-created authority over others for purely personal reasons"); see also Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377, 394-95 (same holding).

Thus, in order for any plaintiff in this Daniel West, et al case to prevail, he or she must establish, among other required elements of their causes of action, the "notice" to each of the Church Defendants prior to the period of alleged abuse. E.g., Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc., supra, at 395-97 (emphasis added.)

Accordingly, any documents and information that in any way post-date the time period of alleged abuse for each plaintiff are, by definition, irrelevant, inadmissible, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. As noted above, such discovery may also invade the privacy rights of other persons who are not parties to these coordinated actions. Stated differently, it is irrelevant and of no consequence what any of the Church Defendants knew or should have known after each plaintiff's alleged abuse ended, because any such information or knowledge that post-dates the alleged abuse of any plaintiff will not support any plaintiff's claims (and will thus be inadmissible).

For all of the reasons stated, the Court should deny any request by plaintiffs in Daniel West, et al for discovery that post-dates the alleged abuse at issue in that case.

IV. ALTERNATIVELY, THE COURT SHOULD CONDUCT AN IN CAMERA REVIEW OF THE DOCUMENTS AND INFORMATION AT ISSUE HERE

As an alternative to all of the foregoing, this Court should conduct an in camera review of any documents and information that are at issue here regarding the clergy-penitent privilege. California law holds that an in camera review by the trial court may be appropriate to resolve a dispute as to whether requested documents containing privileged information are discoverable. Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1599, 1619-20 (in camera review is appropriate where parties disputed whether documents contain privileged matter); Wellpoint Health Networks, Inv. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th, 110, 120-21 (in camera inspection required to determine whether documents were protected by privilege).

JCCP No. 4374

DECLARATION OF J. GARY HAYES IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANTS' OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL DEPOSITION AND/OR MOTION FOR A PROTECTIVE ORDER REGARDING THE WOODLAND ELDERS

(DISCOVERY MOTION NO. 1)

Hearing Date: October 13, 2006
Time: 8:30 am
Dept.: A
Before: Hon. Raymond A. Guadagni

I, J. Gary Hayes, after being duly sworn, depose and say:

1. That I am over 21 years of age and reside in Esparto, California.

2. That I am a duly ordained minister and elder of the South Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Woodland, California.

3. That I am thoroughly familiar with the religious beliefs, teachings, and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

4. That duly ordained ministers of Jehovah's Witnesses responsible for teaching and pastoral care of congregation members are called "elders."

5. That it is a religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses based on God's Word, the Bible, that an elder, has a responsibility to provide spiritual counseling to those who seek it, and that any person who needs spiritual help or is aware of another in such need should approach the congregation elders and convey to them whatever information may be needed to provide spiritual assistance to the erring one.—Isaiah 32:2; James 5:14-16; Hebrews 13:17. In addition, for similar reasons, there are times when elders initiate discussions relating to the spiritual condition of congregation members.

6. That it is the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, that elders must maintain in strict confidence any church communications with congregants connected with the need for spiritual help or counseling, and congregants expect such communications to elders are and will remain confidential—regardless of who initiated the conversation.—Proverbs 15:22; 25:9, 10.

7. That revealing such confidential communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation.

7. That if I or any elder is compelled to disclose such confidential information, our credibility and effectiveness as elders would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregants will no longer be able to trust and rely that problems and confidential information they disclose to elders will not be revealed through discovery and used against them in a court action.

9. That the requirement of keeping communications to elders confidential is explained in the official publications of Jehovah's Witnesses as follows:

> In each congregation of Jehovah's witnesses there are mature ministers appointed to care for various assignments. (1 Tim. 3:2, 12) As they discharge their duties they often are told about confidential things, and it is essential that they respect this confidence. For instance, James 5:13-16 shows that a member of the congregation who has some spiritual problem, perhaps even having committed a sin, should go to the spiritually older men for help. Isaiah 32:2 prophetically pictured these men as places of comfort and protection. What a fine thing it is to be able to explain one's problem and get balanced spiritual help, and at the same time have full confidence that the matter will not become general knowledge in the congregation or community.
>
> Those mature ministers will not discuss even with their wives and close friends what they thus learn in confidence. They know that if they did so it would undermine respect for their positions; it would make individuals hesitant to come to them; yes, in time it might even make it impossible for them to fulfill their role as spiritual shepherds.

The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, p. 223.

10. That it is also the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, to keep congregation files, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, the above-described confidential communications, confidential.

11. That if I or any other elder is compelled to produce any papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with or as a result of the above-described confidential communications, our credibility and effectiveness will be adversely affected and compromised, and the confidentiality of the oral communications will be rendered worthless.

12. That I and another elder from the South Congregation, Woodland, California, met with Tim Silva, then a baptized member of the congregation, in about the early to mid 1980's so as to provide him spiritual counsel and assistance. There were no non-clergy or other third persons present during this confidential meeting with Mr. Silva. Further, the specifics of that meeting were not reported to any elders of the United States Service Department for Jehovah's Witnesses.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my information, belief, and knowledge. Executed this 29 day of September, 2006 at Woodland, California.

I, Arturo Almanza, after being duly sworn, depose and say:

7. That revealing such confidential communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation.

8. That if I or any elder is compelled to disclose such confidential information, our credibility and effectiveness as elders would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregants will no longer be able to trust and rely that problems and confidential information they disclose to elders will not be revealed through discovery and used against them in a court action.

9. That the requirement of keeping communications to elders confidential is explained in the official publications of Jehovah's Witnesses as follows:

> In each congregation of Jehovah's witnesses there are mature ministers appointed to care for various assignments. (1 Tim. 3:2, 12) As they discharge their duties they often are told about confidential things, and it is essential that they respect this confidence. For instance, James 5:13-16 shows that a member of the congregation who has some spiritual problem, perhaps even having committed a sin, should go to the spiritually older men for help. Isaiah 32:2 prophetically pictured these men as places of comfort and protection. What a fine thing it is to be able to explain one's problem and get balanced spiritual help, and at the same time have full confidence that the matter will not become general knowledge in the congregation or community.
>
> Those mature ministers will not discuss even with their wives and close friends what they thus learn in confidence. They know that if they did so it would undermine respect for their positions; it would make individuals hesitant to come to them; yes, in time it might even make it impossible for them to fulfill their role as spiritual shepherds.

The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, p. 223.

10. That it is also the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, to keep congregation files, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, the above-described confidential communications, confidential.

11. That if I or any other elder is compelled to produce any papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with or as a result of the above-described confidential communications, our credibility and effectiveness will be adversely affected and compromised, and the confidentiality of the oral communications will be rendered worthless.

12. That I and two other elders from the South Congregation, Woodland, California, met with Tim Silva, a then appointed ministerial servant in the congregation, on or about May 7, 1997, so as to provide him spiritual counsel and assistance. There were no non-clergy or other third persons present during this confidential meeting with Mr. Silva. Because Tim Silva was an appointed congregation ministerial servant at the time, on or about May 29, 1997, a written and confidential report was sent by the three elders who met with Tim Silva to the elders in the United States Service Department for Jehovah's Witnesses, as required by church practice and procedure, for their review of Tim Silva's spiritual qualifications as a ministerial servant and for any additional spiritual counsel and assistance for Tim Silva or the three elders who met with him.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my information, belief, and knowledge. Executed this 29 day of September, 2006 at Sacramento, California.

CHURCH DEFENDANTS' MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL PMK DEPOSITION AND DOCUMENT REQUEST REGARDING GENERAL DISCOVERY MATTERS

(DISCOVERY MOTION NO. 2)

Hearing Date: October 13, 2006
Time: 8:30 am
Dept.: A
Before: Hon. Raymond A. Guadagni

I. INTRODUCTION

The Church Defendants respectfully submit this response to plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 2 regarding what plaintiffs identify as "general" discovery matters concerning a notice of "PMK" deposition directed to defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY"). The specific issues presented are: (1) the clergy-penitent privilege as it applies in the various non-Track I cases, and (2) documents and information that post-date the alleged abuse at issue in each of the coordinated cases.

II. THE CLERGY-PENITENT PRIVILEGE

Contrary to what plaintiffs urge in their discovery motion no. 2, the Court's earlier ruling did not in any way address the non-Track I cases. In their prior discovery motion filed last year, the Track I plaintiffs sought to compel the disclosure of documents and information related to spiritual communications that co-defendants in the Track I cases, James Henderson and Alvin Heard, had separately with clergy within a particular Jehovah's Witnesses congregation, i.e., the Track I defendant Red Bluff congregation. (See Track I plaintiff Tim W.'s prior Motion to Compel at p.3, line 7 – p.4, line 28; see plaintiffs Wimberley's prior Motion to Compel, p.3. line 7–p.4, line 28.) Thus, plaintiffs suggestion that the Court has already ruled on the clergy-penitent issue in the non-Track I cases is simply incorrect.[1]

In addition, the Court's earlier ruling was based strictly on communications within judicial committees convened by the Track I defendant Red Bluff congregation, as well as on an erroneous misperception that the "Judicial Committee was under no duty to keep the communications private. In fact, the evidence establishes that the Judicial Committee was required to communicate information it obtained regarding potential cases of child molestation to the Watchtower Society Headquarters." See this Court's "Ruling on Submitted Motion to Compel Production of Documents" at p. 2 (issued September 29, 2005)(emphasis added). In addition to the quoted language being factually incorrect, as established by the various congregation elders' declarations filed herewith, the communications at issue here include penitential and confidential communications outside of any judicial committee setting. Thus, the Court's prior ruling does not address or decide the issues here.

[1] Plaintiffs' counsel earlier advised defense counsel that the "law of the case" doctrine applied here. However, under California law, the law of the case doctrine applies only to appellate court rulings on the merits in the same case and between the same parties, and no comparable effect is given to trial court rulings. E.g., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Appeals and Writs (The Rutter Group, 2006) §14:174, citing Lennane v. Franchise Tax Board (1996) 51 Cal.App.4th 1180, 1186. Similarly, an appellate court's summary denial of a writ petition is not considered law of the case, because such a denial is not a ruling on the merits. Kowis v. Howard (1992) 3 Cal.4th 888, 894. Accordingly, the law of the case doctrine indisputably does not apply here

A. Overview of clergy-penitent privilege

The documents and information plaintiffs seek to compel discovery of in the non-Track I cases are protected by the clergy–penitent privilege. Cal. Evid. Code §§ 1030, et seq. Evidence Code section 1033 provides:

> "Subject to section 912, a penitent, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to, and to prevent another from disclosing, a penitential communication if he claims the privilege."

Evidence Code section 1034 further provides:

> "Subject to section 912, a clergyman, whether or not a party, has a privilege to refuse to disclose a penitential communication if he claims the privilege."

Under California's statutory scheme, a "penitent" is defined simply as "a person who has made a penitential communication to a clergyman." Evid. Code § 1031. In turn, a "penitential communication" is also defined in the Code:

> " '[P]enitential communication' means a communication made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware, to a clergyman who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications and, under the discipline or tenants of his church, denomination or organization, has a duty to keep such communication secret."

Evid. Code § 1032. Consequently, a "penitential communication" is not limited to just confessions in the stereotypical sense of the word. It is any communication that fits the statutory description. California case law supports the foregoing analysis. The courts have defined the elements of the rule of privilege as follows:

> "In order for a statement to be privileged, it must satisfy all of the conceptual requirements of a penitential communication: (1) it must be intended to be in confidence; (2) it must be made to a member of the clergy who in the course of his or her religious discipline or practice is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications; and (3) such member of the clergy has a duty under the discipline or tenants of the church, religious denomination or organization to keep such communications secret."

People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal.App.3d 1358, 1362-63.

The only instances in which the rule of privilege has been found not to apply are those in which either the communication was not made with a reasonable expectation of privacy, or the communication was made for a secular purpose rather than with the intention of receiving spiritual guidance or counseling, or the receiver of the communication was acting in a secular rather than ministerial capacity, or the tenets of the church did not require ministers to keep the subject communications secret. People v. Edwards, supra (defendant sought advice on how to avoid secular consequences of her criminal conduct rather than spiritual counseling and consented to disclosure of communication to lay members of the church who could help her deal with secular problems); People v. Johnson (1969) 270 Cal.App.2d 204 (communication was not made in confidence nor in the course of the required relationship and no evidence was presented that minister was authorized or accustomed to hear such communications or that he had a duty to keep such communications secret); United States v. Webb (1980) 615 F.2d 828 (communication was not confidential since made in presence of officer in addition to prison chaplain); United States v. Luther (1973) 481 F.2d 429 (rule of privilege did not apply to data in church financial records sought by Internal Revenue Service and which did not contain any communications from congregants seeking spiritual guidance of counseling); People v. Thompson (1982) 133 Cal.App.3d 419 (minister was acting in secular capacity when hired by company as ethics officer to improve sales and there was no expectation of confidentiality in the communication).

In the non-Track I cases, there is no evidence that the communications at issue were made in a fashion other than that required for the rule of privilege to apply. The only evidence before this Court on this motion is that they were made with a reasonable expectation of privacy under the religious beliefs and tenets of the Jehovah's Witnesses religion. Under these circumstances, Evidence Code section 917 provides that the confidential quality of the communications must be presumed. Evidence Code section 917 provides:

> "Whenever a privilege is claimed on the ground that the matter sought to be disclosed is a communication made in confidence in the course of the lawyer-client, physician-patient, psychotherapist-patient, clergyman-penitent, or husband-wife relationship, the communication is presumed to have been in confidence and the opponent of the claim of privilege has the burden of proof to establish that the communication was not confidential."

Moreover, the clergy involved here, as holders of the privilege, have not disclosed the communications or otherwise waived the privilege. Further, congregation elders may also be penitents under Evidence Code section 1031 when they engage in confidential spiritual communications with other elders (i.e., clergy). Therefore, any confidential spiritual communications between congregation elders and a circuit overseer (who also is an elder) or elders in the United States Service Department of the Jehovah's Witnesses United States Branch Office for the purpose of obtaining spiritual counsel and guidance are also penitential communications under Evidence Code section 1032 and thus protected from disclosure by Evidence Code sections 1033 and 1034.

Consequently, Watchtower NY or any other Church Defendant should not be compelled to provide any testimony about or produce documents that contain the information conveyed in the subject privileged communications to the elders. If this court requires any such testimony or documents to be provided or produced, the objective and policy underlying the rule of privilege will be frustrated and undermined.

In Trammel v. United States (1980) 445 U.S. 40, 100 S.C. 906, the U.S. Supreme Court described the seriousness of the need to preserve confidence in the communications between persons and their spiritual counselors. In that case, the U.S. Supreme Court stated that the minister-communicant privilege is "rooted in the imperative need for confidence and trust. The priest-penitent privilege recognizes the human need to disclose to a spiritual counselor in total and absolute confidence, what are believed to be flawed acts or thoughts to recover priestly consolation and guidance in return." Id., 445 U.S. at 51. The declarations and affidavits submitted demonstrate that need to preserve confidence within the Jehovah's Witnesses' religion with respect to the communications sought to be discovered by plaintiffs here.

Claiming that the rule of privilege does not apply to the elders of the United States Service Department, the congregation defendants, or to judicial committees of local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses would be a violation of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution and its California analog. The First Amendment states, in relevant part:

> "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

The U.S. Supreme Court has interpreted the establishment clause to require strict government neutrality towards religion. Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Millivojevich (1976) 426 U.S. 696; School District v. Schempp (1963) 374 U.S. 203. Denying the right conferred in the rule of privilege on the basis of a distinction between an elder or a judicial committee of Jehovah's Witnesses and ministers of other religions, or on the bases of the differences between Jehovah's Witnesses' pastoral procedures and those of other religions, would violate the federal and state constitutional requirement of government neutrality toward religion. Granting this statutory right to one religion while denying it to another based on the ecclesiastical structure of the churches would show judicial preference of one form of worship over another. Such judicial preference would result in an unconstitutional establishment of religion by essentially expressing a preference for one religion over another.

Plaintiffs earlier relied on Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 417 to support their position. However, as relevant here, in Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles the Court of Appeal ruled only that with respect to the Catholic church, the clergy-penitent privilege was inapplicable to protect communications by a Catholic priest where a "Vicar for Clergy" and a bishop were also both present, because there was not a Catholic religious belief or tenet that required both the Vicar for Clergy and the bishop to be present during such penitential communications.

Thus, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles thus does not affect the issue here one way or the other, because the Jehovah's Witnesses religion mandates the presence of at least three elders for judicial committee proceedings under Jehovah's Witnesses' religious tenets and doctrine. Here, extraneous third parties are not allowed to be present during confidential spiritual communications, but Jehovah's Witnesses' religious belief and practice is to have at least three elders present during judicial committee meetings to provide greater spiritual guidance and counseling. In the Jehovah's Witnesses religion and faith, the three or more elders making up a judicial committee to whom a congregation member communicates confidential spiritual information related to his sin or alleged sin constitute the "clergy" under Evidence Code sections 1030, et seq., and those clergy have a legal as well spiritual duty to keep such confidential spiritual communications with congregation members confidential and private. Any contrary ruling by this court invalidating the clergy-penitent privilege based on the fact that more than one elder is present during a judicial committee meeting would be unconstitutional, and Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles does nothing to change or affect that.

Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles is also inapplicable because it dealt with testimony and evidence that was to be presented to a grand jury in a criminal proceeding, not in civil litigation like that here. There, the court held that "disclosure was required because the government has a compelling interest in prosecuting child molesters." However, these non-Track I coordinated cases plainly are not criminal prosecutions of child molesters. Thus, the facts and any claimed state interest in these non-Track I cases are distinguishable from Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles. There simply is not any sufficiently compelling state interest in these cases to invalidate the clergy–penitent privilege.

Likewise, any contention by plaintiff here that the establishment clause does not apply to state judiciary proceedings would be flawed. The U.S. Supreme Court has decisively settled that the First Amendment's mandate that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof has been made wholly applicable to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment ... in a series of cases, the court has repeatedly reaffirmed the doctrine...." Abington School District v. Schemp (1963) 374 U.S. 203, 216. This extension of the First Amendment to the states applies to judicial as well as legislative action. NAACP v. Alabama ex rel. Patterson (1958) 357 U.S. 449, 463. "The Fourteenth Amendment, as now applied to the states, protects the citizens against the state itself and all of its creatures." West Virginia Board of Education v. Barnette (1943) 319 U.S. 624, 637. "Judicial action is to be regarded as action of the state for the purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment [and] is not immunized from the operation of the Fourteenth Amendment simply because it is taken pursuant to the state's common law policy." Shelley v. Kramer (1948) 334 U.S. 1, 15, 20.

Moreover, denying the right conferred in the rule of privilege would also violate the Jehovah's Witnesses' right to the free exercise of religion. Only a neutral law of general applicability may burden that right. Employment Division Department of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith (1990) 494 U.S. 872. "A law failing to satisfy these requirements must be justified by a compelling governmental interest and must be narrowly tailored to advance that interest." Church of the Lukumi Babaluiaaye, Inc. v. City of Hialeah (1993) 508 U.S. 520, 531. A non-neutral judicial avocation of the rule of privilege would make it unconstitutional as applied. Consequently, although the judicial system's need for testimony may be a compelling governmental interest, it cannot be used to justify denying the right conferred in the rule of privilege to Jehovah's Witnesses, while granting that same privilege to other religions. Such non-neutral judicial application would violate the constitutional right of free exercise of Jehovah's Witnesses.

III. DOCUMENTS AND INFORMATION THAT POST-DATE THE ALLEGED ABUSE AT ISSUE IN EACH OF THE COORDINATED CASES ARE NOT DISCOVERABLE

Plaintiffs also seek to compel discovery of all information and documents about each of the persons who allegedly committed the abuse at issue in these coordinated cases, regardless of the time frame involved. Any such discovery that post-dates the alleged time period of abuse of each plaintiff in these coordinated cases thus is overly broad, irrelevant, and not reasonably calculated to lead to discovery of admissible evidence. Further, it may result in the invasion of privacy rights of other persons not parties to these coordinated actions. Such discovery should therefore be denied (unless such documents make reference to plaintiffs or to abuse of others by the alleged abusers that any of the Church Defendants were informed of prior to the abuse of any plaintiff).

A key element, among others, of each plaintiff's causes of action against the Church Defendants is that each of the Church Defendants knew or had reason to know of the alleged abuser's propensity to sexually abuse children (the element of so-called "notice"). The notice element is required because, as a matter of law, none of the Church Defendants can be liable on any vicarious liability or respondeat superior theories for the alleged sex abuse of plaintiffs while they were minors.

California case law makes it very clear that sexual misconduct falls outside the course and scope of any person's agency or employment and cannot be imputed to the person's principal or employer. E.g., Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609 (in "an action against a religious institution based on allegations of childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by one of its clergy[,] ... the abuse is committed outside the scope of the cleric's employment [and] the doctrine of respondeat superior is not available"); Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hospital (1995) 12 Cal.4th 291 (hospital not liable under respondeat superior theory for hospital technician's sexual assault of patient); John R. v. Oakland Unified School Dist. (1989) 48 Cal.3d 438 (school district not vicariously liable for molestation of child by teacher); Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal.App.3d 718 (church not liable under doctrine of respondeat superior for molestation of student by Sunday school teacher).

In addition, the mere fact that any of the alleged abusers in these coordinated cases may have been an elder or otherwise held what might be called a position of authority within a local congregation does not, by itself, create liability for any of the Church Defendants. Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal.4th 992, 1013 ("for purposes of respondeat superior, employees do not act within the scope of employment when they abuse job-created authority over others for purely personal reasons"); see also Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377, 394-95 (same holding).

Thus, in order for any plaintiff in these coordinated cases to prevail, he or she must establish, among other required elements of their causes of action, the "notice" to each of the Church Defendants prior to the period of alleged abuse in each case. E.g., Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc., supra, at 395-97.

Accordingly, any documents or information that in any way post-dates the time period of alleged abuse for each plaintiff is, by definition, irrelevant, inadmissible, and not reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. As noted above, such discovery may also invade the privacy rights of other persons who are not parties to these coordinated actions. Stated differently, it is irrelevant and of no consequence what any of the Church Defendants knew or should have known after each plaintiff's alleged abuse ended, because any such information or knowledge that post-dates the alleged abuse of any plaintiff will not support any plaintiff's claims (and will thus be inadmissible).

For all of the reasons stated, the Court should deny any discovery that post-dates the alleged abuse at issue in each of the coordinated actions.

IV. ALTERNATIVELY, THE COURT SHOULD CONDUCT AN IN CAMERA REVIEW OF THE DOCUMENTS AND INFORMATION AT ISSUE

As an alternative to all of the foregoing, this Court should conduct an in camera review of any documents and information that are at issue in these coordinated actions regarding the clergy-penitent privilege. California law holds that an in camera review by the trial court may be appropriate to resolve a dispute as to whether requested documents containing privileged information are discoverable. Lipton v. Superior Court (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1599, 1619-20 (in camera review is appropriate where parties dispute whether documents contain privileged matter); Wellpoint Health Networks, Inv. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal.App.4th, 110, 120-21 (in camera inspection required to determine whether documents were protected by privilege).

KEN L. Plaintiff v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants. AND COORDINATED ACTIONS.	CASE NO.: 52594 Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. Coordinated with Napa County Superior Court Case No. DECLARATION OF WILLIAM E. BLORE

I, William E. Blore, after being duly sworn, depose and say:

1. That I am over 21 years of age and reside in Chicago Park, California.

2. That I am a duly ordained minister and elder of the West Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Colfax, California.

3. That I am thoroughly familiar with the religious beliefs, teachings, and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

4. That duly ordained ministers of Jehovah's Witnesses responsible for teaching and pastoral care of congregation members are called "elders."

5. That it is a religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses based on God's Word, the Bible, that an elder has a responsibility to provides spiritual counseling to those who seek it, and that any person who needs spiritual help or is aware of another in such need should approach the congregation elders and convey to them whatever information may be needed to provide spiritual assistance to the erring one. (Isaiah 32:2; James 5:14-16; Hebrews 13:17.) In addition, for similar reasons, there are times when elders initiate discussions relating to the spiritual condition of congregation members.

6. That it is the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, that elders must maintain in strict confidence any church communications with congregants connected with the need for spiritual help or counseling, and congregants expect such communications to elders are and will remain confidential—regardless of who initiated the conversation.—Proverbs 15:22; 25:9, 10.

7. That revealing such confidential communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation.

8. That if I or any elder is compelled to disclose such confidential information, our credibility and effectiveness as elders would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregants will no longer be able to trust and rely that problems and confidential information they disclose to elders will not be revealed through discovery and used against them in a court action.

9. That the requirement of keeping communications to elders confidential is explained in the official publications of Jehovah's Witnesses as follows:

> In each congregation of Jehovah's witnesses there are mature ministers appointed to care for various assignments. (1 Tim. 3:2, 12) As they discharge their duties they often are told about confidential things, and it is essential that they respect this confidence. For instance, James 5:13-16 shows that a member of the congregation who has some spiritual problem, perhaps even having committed a sin, should go to the spiritually older men for help. Isaiah 32:2 prophetically pictured these men as places of comfort and protection. What a fine thing it is to be able to explain one's problem and get balanced spiritual help, and at the same time have full confidence that the matter will not become general knowledge in the congregation or community.
>
> Those mature ministers will not discuss even with their wives and close friends what they thus learn in confidence. They know that if they did so it would > undermine respect for their positions; it would make individuals hesitant to come to them; yes, in time it might even make it impossible for them to fulfill their role as spiritual shepherds.

The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, p. 223.

10. That it is also the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, to keep congregation files, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, the above-described confidential communications, confidential.

11. That if I or any other elder is compelled to produce any papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with or as a result of the above-described confidential communications, our credibility and effectiveness will be adversely affected and compromised, and the confidentiality of the oral communications will be rendered worthless.

12. That I and other elders from the Colfax Congregation, California, met with Albert Harriman several times in mid to late 1987 so as to provide him with spiritual counsel and assistance. There were no non-clergy or other third persons present during these confidential meetings with Mr. Harriman. Because Albert Harriman was an appointed congregation elder at the time, a written and confidential report was sent by the elders who met with him to the elders in the United States Service Department for Jehovah's Witnesses, as required by church practice and procedure, for their review of Mr. Harriman's spiritual qualifications as an elder and for any additional spiritual counsel and assistance for Mr. Harriman or the three elders who met with him. An additional confidential report was sent, as required by church practice and procedure, by the three elders who met with him when he was disfellowshipped in October 1987.

13. I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my information, belief, and knowledge.

Respectfully submitted,

William E. Blore

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D. Plaintiffs, vs. Plaintiff v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants. AND COORDINATED ACTIONS.	CASE NO.: 26-22191 Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. 4374 DECLARATION OF DAVID W. BECKER

I, David W. Becker, after being duly sworn, depose and say:

1. That I am over 21 years of age and reside in Napa, California.

2. That I am a duly ordained minister and elder of the River Park Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Napa, California.

3. That I am thoroughly familiar with the religious beliefs, teachings, and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

4. That duly ordained ministers of Jehovah's Witnesses responsible for teaching and pastoral care of congregation members are called "elders."

5. That it is a religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses based on God's Word, the Bible, that an elder has a responsibility to provides spiritual counseling to those who seek it, and that any person who needs spiritual help or is aware of another in such need should approach the congregation elders and convey to them whatever information may be needed to provide spiritual assistance to the erring one. (Isaiah 32:2; James 5:14-16; Hebrews 13:17.) In addition, for similar reasons, there are times when elders initiate discussions relating to the spiritual condition of congregation members.

6. That it is the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, that elders must maintain in strict confidence any church communications with congregants connected with the need for spiritual help or counseling, and congregants expect such communications to elders are and will remain confidential—regardless of who initiated the conversation.—Proverbs 15:22; 25:9, 10.

7. That revealing such confidential communications would call into question an elder's qualifications and could result in his removal as an elder in the congregation.

8. That if I or any elder is compelled to disclose such confidential information, our credibility and effectiveness as elders would be adversely affected and compromised, since congregants will no longer be able to trust and rely that problems and confidential information they disclose to elders will not be revealed through discovery and used against them in a court action.

9. That the requirement of keeping communications to elders confidential is explained in the official publications of Jehovah's Witnesses as follows:

> In each congregation of Jehovah's witnesses there are mature ministers appointed to care for various assignments. (1 Tim. 3:2, 12) As they discharge their duties they often are told about confidential things, and it is essential that they respect this confidence. For instance, James 5:13-16 shows that a member of the congregation who has some spiritual problem, perhaps even having committed a sin, should go to the spiritually older men for help. Isaiah 32:2 prophetically pictured these men as places of comfort and protection. What a fine thing it is to be able to explain one's problem and get balanced spiritual help, and at the same time have full confidence that the matter will not become general knowledge in the congregation or community.

> Those mature ministers will not discuss even with their wives and close friends what they thus learn in confidence. They know that if they did so it would undermine respect for their positions; it would make individuals hesitant to come to them; yes, in time it might even make it impossible for them to fulfill their role as spiritual shepherds.

The Watchtower, April 1, 1971, p. 223.

10. That it is also the religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, based upon Scripture and church tradition, to keep congregation files, papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with, or as a result of, the above-described confidential communications, confidential.

11. That if I or any other elder is compelled to produce any papers, reports, minutes or other documents prepared in conjunction with or as a result of the above-described confidential communications, our credibility and effectiveness will be adversely affected and compromised, and the confidentiality of the oral communications will be rendered worthless.

12. That I and two other elders from the River Park Congregation, Napa, California, met with Edward Villegas several times on or about January 1994 so as to provide him with spiritual counsel and assistance. There were no non-clergy or other third persons present during these confidential meetings with Mr. Villegas. Although a report relating to Mr. Villegas' disfellowshipping was sent by the three elders who met with him to the elders in the United States Service Department for Jehovah's Witnesses, as required by church practice and procedure, the specifics of the conversations that the three elders had with Mr. Villegas were not included in these two reports.

13. I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct to the best of my information, belief, and knowledge.

Respectfully submitted,

David W. Becker

CHURCH DEFENDANTS' MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL PMK DEPOSITION AND DOCUMENT REQUEST REGARDING THE WATCHTOWER LEGAL DEPARTMENT

(DISCOVERY MOTION NO. 3)

Hearing Date: October 13, 2006
Time: 8:30 am

Before: Hon. Raymond A. Guadagni

I. INTRODUCTION.

In plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 3, they boldly and transparently seek to compel testimony from a lawyer within the Watchtower Legal Department about thet Legal Department's organization, the Legal Department's internal documents and records, the creation of documents by the Legal Department under the attorney–client privilege and/or the attorney work product rule, the Legal Department's recordkeeping practices, and information obtained on a confidential attorney–client basis by the Legal Department. In doing so, plaintiffs fail to cite to this Court even one legal authority that would allow such unprecedented discovery of attorney–client privileged materials and information and attorney work product materials and information.

The declaration filed concurrently herewith of Mario F. Moreno, an attorney and associate general counsel in the Watchtower Legal Department, supports this opposition to plaintiffs' transparent and improper attempt to invade the attorney-client and work product privileges. Simply stated, plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 3 must be denied in its entirety. Otherwise, the attorney-client privilege will be rendered empty and meaningless. In addition, a ruling adverse to the Church Defendants here will have the wholly undesired effect of allowing the Church Defendants to depose lawyers from plaintiffs' three law firms about their recordkeeping practices relative to these cases, their documentation of information obtained from pre-litigation and other interviews of their clients and witnesses, etc. Plaintiffs' motion no. 3 must be denied.

II. DISCUSSION.

California law is clear and uncompromising that a client, whether or not a party, has the privilege to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a confidential communication between the client and his or her or its attorney. Cal. Evid. Code § 954. The essential purpose underlying the attorney-client privilege is "to safeguard the confidential relationship between clients and their attorneys so as to promote full and open discussion of the facts and tactics surrounding individual legal matters." 2,022 Ranch LLC v. Superior Court (2003) 113 Cal.App.4th 1377, 1387-88, citing Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal.3d 591, 599. The privilege applies to all confidential communications between the attorney and client unless the communication falls within a statutory exception or is not made in the course of the attorney-client relationship. The attorney–client privilege is absolute, and disclosure of privileged information may not be ordered regardless of relevance, necessity, or any particular circumstances in the case. 2,002 Ranch LLC, supra, 113 Cal.App.4th at 1388, citing Gordon v.

Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal.App.4th 1546, 1557.

The attorney-client privilege applies to an entity's confidential communications with in-house counsel, as well as such communications with outside counsel. Alpha Beta Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 157 Cal.App.3d 818, 826 (confidential communications between general counsel and high-ranking corporate officer for purpose of preparing defense to litigation were privileged). The information contained in the concurrently filed sworn declaration of Mario F. Moreno, an attorney and associate general counsel in the Watchtower Legal Department, establishes that the privilege thus applies to the Watchtower Legal Department and all of its work involving its clients, including, without limitation, the defendant congregations in these coordinated actions and those congregations' elders.

Moreover, the compelled testimony of an opposing party's counsel is presumptively improper and should be permitted only upon a showing that (1) no other means exist to obtain the information, (2) the information sought is relevant and not privileged, and (3) the information is crucial to the preparation of the case. Spectra-Physics, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal.App.3d 1487, 1496; see also Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cert. (N.D. Cal. 1998) 177 F.R.D. 472, 478-79, citing Shelton v. American Motors Corp. (8th Cir. 1986) 805 F.2d 1323, 1327-28. Attorney depositions should be extremely restricted and permitted only in very limited situations, because they are disruptive to the adversarial nature of the judicial system and can create a "chilling effect" on truthful communications from client to attorney. See Hickman v. Taylor (1947) 329 U.S. 495, 513; Spectra-Physics, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal.App.3d 1487, 1494-95; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1977) 72 Cal.App.3d 786, 790 (when allowed at all, depositions of opposing counsel "should be severely restricted, and permitted only upon of extremely good cause").

A leading California case regarding the propriety of attorney depositions is Spectra-Physics, Inc. v. Superior Court, supra. See Estate of Ruchti (1993) 12 Cal.App.4th 1593, 1600. In Spectra-Physics, the settling parties in a groundwater contamination case sought, and the trial court granted, permission to depose counsel for the non-settling defendants to determine whether they had acted in bad faith or unreasonably impeded the settlement process. Spectra-

Physics (1988) 198 Cal.App.3d at 1490. On appeal, the court pointed to California's strong policy against attorney depositions and noted that such discovery was disruptive and antithetical to the adversarial nature of the judicial process. It further questioned the usefulness of the procedure given that "the likelihood the attorney will assert claims of work product and attorney-client privilege is great ...." Id. at 1494. For those reasons, the Court of Appeal held that such discovery was improper unless (1) no other means exist to obtain the information, (2) the information sought is relevant and not privileged, and (3) the information is crucial to the preparation of the case. Id. at 1493-96, citing Shelton v. American Motors Corp., supra, 805 F.2d at 1327.

The Court of Appeal in Spectra-Physics then ruled that the three-part test had not been met. First, the requesting information could have been obtained by other means, such as asking plaintiffs about the non-settling defendants efforts to interfere, expert evaluations regarding the value of plaintiffs' case and the defendants' potential shares of liability. Regarding the second prong, the court did find that the requested information was relevant and that privilege alone would not prevent the depositions entirely. Finally, the court found that the conduct of the non-settling defendants' counsel was not "immediately crucial" to the case because it was the non-settling defendants' burden to demonstrate that the settlement was not in good faith. Id. at 1496-97. Accordingly, and based on the strong policy considerations against attorney depositions, the Court of Appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its order permitting the depositions of counsel. Id. at 1497-98.

In Estate of Ruchti, supra, co-executors of a will filed a petition to determine the nature and extent of the estate being withheld by the deceased's heirs. 12 Cal.App.4th at 1598-99. The parties stipulated to the use of a retired judge to conduct the litigation. Thereafter, the heirs sought to withdraw the stipulation and recuse the retired judge, alleging that opposing counsel had misrepresented his relationship with the judge. Id. After being served with a subpoena for his deposition, opposing counsel sought a protective order. The heirs argued that since the co-executors did not have personal knowledge of all of the facts alleged in their petition, only their attorney did. On that basis, the heirs asserted the deposition was proper. Id. at 1600. The Court of Appeal disagreed, noting that the heirs could not satisfy the three-prong test set forth in Spectra-Physics because other discovery tools were available to obtain the requested information. Id. at 1600-01.

Discovery requests directed to a party's in-house counsel or legal department, like those in the instant case directed to the Watchtower Legal Department by plaintiffs, are equally inappropriate where the Spectra-Physics burden cannot be met, such as when the requests will likely lead to the disclosure of privileged information. In a wrongful death action against a hospital, plaintiffs sought to discover information contained in the "occurrence reports" that had been prepared by hospital employees and maintained by the hospital's legal department, concerning the deceased's condition during his hospital stay. Scripps Health v. Superior Court (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 529.[1] The Court of Appeal held that the attorney-client privilege prohibited the requested disclosures because the dominant purpose of the reports was "transmittal to an attorney in the course of the professional attorney-client relationship under circumstances where [the hospital] expected confidentiality." Id. at 534-36. The reports had always been maintained by the legal department confidentially as an attorney-client communication between employees and in-house counsel and were designed to be an internal risk and claim assessment profile for the hospital. Id. As such, court held the reports to be privileged, whether or not litigation was actually threatened at the time the report was made. Id. at 535 (emphasis added). Further, the reports did not lose their protections under the privilege just because they primarily contained "observational" rather than "opinion" information. Id.

The same analysis applies here, because plaintiffs may argue that some of the information was obtained and recorded before any litigation was imminent or threatened (such as with respect to the "Telememos" or the "Survey Questions"). However, under Scripps Health v. Superior Court, supra, such an argument would fail. Thus, even though a blank form of the "Telememo" and other documents utilized by the Watchtower Legal Department have been produced here with a "confidential" stamp on them, see the declaration of Mario F. Moreno filed concurrently herewith, that fact does not support plaintiffs' motion, because the hospital in Scripps Health had similarly produced such a blank form with a "confidential" stamp. See footnote 1, supra. As discussed above, the Court of Appeal in Scripps Health held that the hospital had not waived any privileges thereby or otherwise opened the door to the discovery sought by the plaintiff from the hospital's in-house legal department. The same ruling applies to defeat plaintiffs' discovery motion here, because the information at issue was communicated to the Legal Department during the course of attorney-client relationships with congregation elders and about which the Legal Department and the elders expected confidentiality. See declaration of Mario F. Moreno.

[1] In Scripps Health, the hospital produced a blank report form that was marked "confidential" at the top of the page, contained questions about the occurrence, and asked for an evaluation of the significance level of the incident. Id. at 532

Similarly, the court in Alpha Beta Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 157 Cal.App.3d 818, held that discussions between corporate general counsel and the president of the corporate defendant were privileged, because they were made in confidence and for the purpose of mounting a defense to the current litigation. In Alpha Beta Co., the plaintiff sought to depose the defendant's general counsel, who was also the vice president of the company, regarding the corporate defendant's verified answer to the complaint. Id. at 823. The general counsel refused to answer many of the deposition questions on grounds that his discussions with the corporation's president and with outside counsel were confidential and made for the purpose of providing a legal opinion as to the merits of the lawsuit. Id. at 823-24. The Court of Appeal held that the deposition was improper to the extent plaintiff sought information based upon communications with a privileged source that would lead to the disclosure of privileged information. Id. at 826-27.

The holding of Alpha Beta Co. applies here, because plaintiffs seek to obtain information obtained by the Watchtower Legal Department attorneys from their clients (i.e., from elders in local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses). See the declaration of Mario F. Moreno. Requiring disclosure pursuant to plaintiffs' discovery motion of information obtained from such confidential and privileged communications would indisputably lead to the disclosure of privileged information. See the declaration of Mario F. Moreno. The holding of Alpha Beta Co. prohibits such disclosures. Again, plaintffs' discovery motion no. 3 must be denied.

III. CONCLUSION.

For each of the independent the reasons discussed, plaintiffs' motion no. 3 must be denied. Plaintiffs improperly seek to invade the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product rule, without citation to any legal authority that would support such a motion. That fact alone shows the weakness of plaintiffs' position. The bottom line is that plaintiffs' motion no. 3 must be denied, because plaintiffs' requests for privileged materials and information from the Watchtower Legal Department are patently improper, are not supported by legal authority and, indeed, fly in the face of both the legal authorities cited above by the Church Defendants and the strong California and federal public policy against attorney depositions in adversarial and other proceedings. Granting plaintiffs' motion would be antithetical and wholly disruptive to the adversarial nature of these coordinated cases and to the judicial system generally, and it also would generally create a chilling effect on truthful communications from client to attorney. In these particular cases, it also would have the undesired effect of opening the door to depositions of plaintiffs' attorneys in the three law firms representing them to address similar topics regarding recordkeeping, interviews of clients and witnesses, etc. Plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 3 must be denied.

JCCP No. 4374

DECLARATION OF MARIO F. MORENO, ESQ., IN SUPPORT OF OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL PMK DEPOSITION AND DOCUMENT REQUEST REGARDING THE WATCHTOWER LEGAL DEPARTMENT

(DISCOVERY MOTION NO. 3)

Hearing Date: October 13, 2006
Time: 8:30 am
Dept.: A
Before: Hon. Raymond A. Guadagni

I, Mario F. Moreno, declare as follows:

1. I am an attorney and associate general counsel for the Legal Department of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower Legal Department"). In that capacity, from time to time I act and have acted as attorney and legal counsel for Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY") and various congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, including without limitation the congregation defendant in the Track I cases, North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Red Bluff, California, and the congregation defendants in the non-Track I cases. I am legally competent in all respects and make the following statements based on my own personal knowledge.

2. Watchtower NY is a not-for-profit religious corporation. The Watchtower Legal Department is and functions as in-house legal counsel for Watchtower NY, similarly to in-house legal departments for private companies and corporations. The Watchtower Legal Department has a number of attorneys who serve as associate general counsel or associate legal counsel in the Legal Department. The Watchtower Legal Department's clients include various corporations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States, the Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses, the United States Branch Committee, other departments at the United States branch offices in New York, congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States, including congregations in California, and the elders of those congregations. The Watchtower Legal Department thus has an attorney-client relationship with the United States Service Department and congregations and their elders. The Watchtower Legal Department considers its lawyers' communications from, to, and with the United States Service Department and congregations and their elders to be confidential and privileged under the attorney-client privilege and any other applicable privileges. As a congregation elder and as associate general counsel for the Watchtower Legal Department, it is my understanding and belief that United States Service Department and congregation elders who have communicated with the Watchtower Legal Department attorneys for legal advice consider those communications to be privileged and confidential, and the attorneys in the Legal Department in fact frequently remind the elders that their communications with the Legal Department are privileged and confidential under the attorney-client privilege.

3. There are four blank forms (dated 1989, 1992, 1993, and 1993, respectively) contained in Exhibit 3 to plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 3 concerning the Watchtower Legal Department. Watchtower NY earlier produced each of those forms in discovery, and each was stamped "CONFIDENTIAL" prior to being produced. The Watchtower Legal Department and its attorneys used one of these forms when taking calls from congregation elders who sought legal advice from the Legal Department on child abuse matters from about July 1989 until about 1995. Each of these forms, when used, was completed by attorneys and legal assistants working under the attorneys' legal supervision within the Legal Department after attorneys and their legal assistants obtained information through confidential and privileged communications with congregation elders as clients of the Legal Department. The completed forms are used by attorneys in the Legal Department to assist in providing legal advice to the elders as clients of the Legal Department and document the legal advice given to the congregation elders. Thus, any such completed forms retained in the Legal Department contain confidential and privileged information obtained through confidential and privileged communications between a Legal Department attorney and a client of the Legal Department. As such, disclosure in this litigation or otherwise of any such completed forms or of the information contained in any such completed forms would necessarily result in the disclosure of confidential and privileged communications between a Legal Department attorney and a client of the Legal Department. In addition, disclosure of any summary that might have been prepared by the Legal Department of any of the confidential and privileged information contained in the completed forms would likewise result in the disclosure of confidential and privileged communications between a Legal Department attorney and a client of the Legal Department or potentially of attorney work product information.

4. This Court should not allow plaintiffs to here invade the attorney-client privilege or the work product rule by granting any part of plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 3. To do otherwise would violate and render meaningless the strong public policy considerations underlying the confidential and privileged nature of attorney-client communications, thereby chilling open and frank communications involving legal advice between attorneys in corporate legal departments and their clients, regardless of whether such in-house legal departments are within non-profit religious corporations or within private for-profit companies and corporations.

I, Robert J. Schnack, declare as follows:

1. I am an attorney licensed to practice law in California, a shareholder in the law firm of Bullivant Houser Bailey PC, and one of the Church Defendants' attorneys of record in this action. I make the following statements from personal knowledge.

SEP 29 2006

2. On behalf of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., I prepared and served objections to a notice of 'PMK' deposition that had been served by plaintiffs' counsel. (The designated PMK for that deposition was Gary Breaux, who was deposed on November 15, 2005, as referenced in plaintiffs' supporting memorandum for motion no. 3 at p.2.) The objections asserted included, among others, the attorney - client privilege and the work product privilege, as follows:

"[PLAINTIFFS'] REQUEST NO. 4:

"A blank or redacted copy of any form(s) used in connection with allegations or proof of child sexual abuse.

"[DEFENDANTS'] RESPONSE TO REQUEST NO. 4:

"Objection. ... This request ... calls for communications and documents protected by ... the attorney-client and work product privileges.

"Subject to and without waiving those objections, ... Defendant Watchtower NY responds as follows: ... and also see attached documents for relevant years.

- Redacted Child Abuse Telememo dated 1989.
- Redacted Child Abuse Telememo dated 1992.
- Redacted Child Abuse Telememo dated 1993.
- Redacted CM Profile dated 1993."

3. The four documents referenced above are the documents included in Exhibit 3 to plaintiffs' discovery motion no. 3 concerning the Watchtower Legal Department. (Those documents are also addressed in the concurrently filed declaration of Mario F. Moreno, Esq., who is an attorney and associate general counsel with the Watchtower Legal Department.) The Church Defendants thus asserted the attorney-client privilege and the work product privilege in connection with the referenced documents upon their initial production in blank form with a "CONFIDENTIAL" stamp on them. Further, their production in blank form with a "CONFIDENTIAL" stamp on each does not waive, or estop the Church Defendants from asserting, any applicable privileges. E.g., Scripps Health v. Superior Court (2003) 109 Cal.App.4th 529.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct. Executed this 27th day of September, 2006, at Sacramento, California.

REPLY BRIEF TO DEFENDANTS' OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' MOTION TO COMPEL PMK DEPOSITION AND DOCUMENT REQUEST REGARDING THE LEGAL DEPARTMENT.

(DISCOVERY MOTION 3)

Date: October 13, 2006
Time: 8:30 a.m.
Dept: A
Judge: Hon. Raymond A. Guadagni

BACKGROUND

The Watchtower Defendants' Opposition to Plaintiffs' motion does an excellent job of going through the extensive California Case Law dealing with attorney-client privileges and communications. However, that is not what Plaintiffs' motion is about. Plaintiffs have never said that they need a lawyer from the Watchtower Legal Department. It may well be that a lawyer is the applicable person but Defendants have not represented that to this Court. Previous deposition testimony has disclosed that there are numerous people in the Legal Department who are not lawyers.

Plaintiffs are seeking, through this deposition, to determine how documents which have already been produced to Plaintiffs are created and used in the Watchtower organization. Assuming arguendo that these documents obtained attorney-client privileged information, that privilege would have been waived when the Watchtower Defendants produced the documents.

The production of a person who can testify concerning how the Watchtower Defendants handled allegations of sexual abuse is, and can lead to, the discovery of relevant information. Since any information which is privileged is not discoverable (CCP § 2017.010) the Watchtower Defendants can make the appropriate objection at the time of the deposition. However, Plaintiffs are entitled to inquire concerning the documents which are relevant to the sexual abusers and to the notice which the Watchtower Defendants had of the sexual abuse.

CONCLUSION

Based upon the motion, and this reply, it is requested that this Court order that the documents be produced and the testimony be compelled.

DEFENDANTS' OPPOSITION IS UNPERSUASIVE

Defendants' primary argument is that this Court's earlier ruling was an "erroneous mis-perception" that the communications with the Judicial Committee do not fall within the scope of the penitential communication privilege. This exact issue was extensively briefed for the August 31, 2005 hearing. Pursuant to Evidence Code § 352, this Court is requested to take Judicial Notice of Plaintiff's Motion to Compel and Defendants' Opposition to that motion. That motion and opposition are hereby incorporated by reference into this motion.

A brief review of the Watchtower Defendants' Opposition to Plaintiffs' 2005 motion indicates that the exact same arguments and virtually the same authorities, were being argued by the Church Defendants. This Court rejected those arguments in its ruling of September 29, 2005. The California Court of Appeal and the California Supreme Court have also rejected the Church Defendants' Writs of Mandate. This Court should again reject the position of the Church Defendants and make a new order that the penitential communication privilege does not apply and that the Church Defendants may not continue to direct their agents to refuse to testify based upon the non-applicable privilege.

It is precisely this type of abuse of the discovery process which the coordination of these actions sought to prevent. If the Watchtower Defendants continue to assert the clergy privilege each time Plaintiffs attempt to depose a new set of Elders, then the coordination of these actions is meaningless.

The real issue here is when the various Elders had notice of the sexual abuse of the minor Plaintiffs. Defendants seek to prevent the discovery of this notice, and its supporting documentation, by the continual assertion of the privilege and the direction that neither the documents be produced nor that the Church Elders be questioned concerning the notice. The Church Defendants' attempts to prevent the discovery of notice is further shown by the Church Defendants' arguments that documents and testimony that post-date "the sexual abuse" are not discoverable. It may well be that some of these matters are not relevant, at the time of trial, and will be excluded by the trial court. However, these documents and testimony are "reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissable evidence." California Code of Civil Procedure § 2017.010. It may well be that the documents reference matters that predate the abuse of the minor Plaintiffs. It is also possible that the deposition testimony will report on events that happened prior to the sexual abuse of the Plaintiffs. Defendants attempt to preclude this evidence is contrary to California Law.

In order to avoid the clear import of this Court's earlier ruling, Church Defendants now attempt to cloak various communications as "related confidential spiritual communications" between Elders and the sexual abusers. At Page 3 Lines 3-7, the Church Defendants have the audacity to suggest that a communication between one of the Plaintiffs and the Church Elders concerning the abusers' actions, somehow related to the "spiritual health" of the sexual abuser. Nothing could be further from the truth.

CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, it is requested that this Court order the Watchtower Defendants produce the Woodland Elders for deposition. It is further requested that the Watchtower Defendants be ordered not to refuse to answer questions based upon the penitential communication privilege.

INTRODUCTION

Defendants' Opposition is merely a rehashing of the clergy-penitent privilege argument that they had previously unsuccessfully made in opposition to Plaintiffs' August 2005 Motion to Compel Production of Documents. This argument was rejected by this Court and by the California Court of Appeal and California Supreme Court when they denied Defendants Writs of Mandate.

Plaintiffs incorporate by reference their Reply to Defendants' Opposition to Discovery Motion # 1 which is to be heard on the same date and time as this hearing. The arguments dealing with the clergy-penitent privilege and the discoverability of documents that post-date the alleged disputes are the same in both motions.

CONCLUSION

Based upon Plaintiffs' motion and their Reply to the Opposition to Discovery Motion # 1, it is requested that this Court order that the Watchtower Defendants produce a Person(s) Most Knowledgeable consistent with the PMK Notice of Taking Deposition which Plaintiffs have previously served. It is further requested that the Watchtower Defendants produce the requested documents.

Case No.: 26-22191
JCCP No. 4374

RULING ON SUBMITTED DISCOVERY MOTIONS

Plaintiffs' Motions To Compel Discovery came on for hearing on October 13, 2006. The court, having read and considered the papers in support of and in opposition to the motion and having heard oral argument, took the motions under submission and now rules as follows:

Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel Depositions and/or for Protective Order re: the Woodland Elders (Motion #1)

The Watchtower defendants have informed the plaintiffs that, at the depositions of four Church Elders, they will invoke the clergy-penitent privilege and object to "any inquiries concerning judicial investigations and judicial committees." Plaintiffs seek an order compelling the deponents to attend their depositions and to respond to such inquiries.

This court has previously ruled in the Track I cases that the penitential communication privilege does not apply to communications between the alleged abusers and the Judicial Committee. (See Court's ruling of September 29, 2005.) Although that ruling is not res judicata in non-track I cases, defendants provide no convincing reason why the court should rule differently in this case. For the reasons expressed in the earlier ruling, the court concludes that the witnesses may not assert the penitential communication privilege. To the extent the motion also encompasses the production of documents, defendants shall produce responsive documents, regardless of when they are dated. As plaintiffs note, it is possible that documents dated after the alleged abuse will contain relevant information. For these reasons, plaintiffs' motion #1 is GRANTED.

Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel PMK Deposition and Documents – General (Motion #2)

Plaintiffs have noticed the deposition of the Church defendants' Person(s) Most Knowledgeable (PMK) on a number of specified topics. Defendants have objected to six areas of inquiry, again invoking the clergy-penitent privilege. For the reasons discussed above and in the court's earlier ruling, the court finds that the clergy-penitent privilege does not apply to these areas of inquiry. Defendants also object to the scope of the document requests, claiming that documents that post-date the alleged abuse are not relevant or likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. As above, the court finds that the documents are discoverable. For these reasons, plaintiffs' motion #2 is GRANTED.

Plaintiffs' Motion to Compel PMK Deposition and Documents – Legal (Motion #3)

Plaintiffs previously issued a PMK deposition notice concerning "any and all policies that the Jehovah's Witnesses organization had for handling accusations and proof of child sexual abuse from 1970 to the present." During that PMK deposition of Mr. Breaux, he identified functions that were handled by the Legal Department rather than by the Service Department, where he worked. As to these, he lacked the information necessary to provide responses.

Plaintiffs subsequently noticed a PMK deposition to inquire into (1) the organization, staffing and operation of the Legal Department; (2) the Legal Department's role in responding to and investigating child sexual abuse allegations within the organization; (3) the development and use of "Child Abuse Telememos" which were forms developed to obtain and record information concerning reports of abuse (blank forms were produced in discovery); (4) records kept by or under the direction of the Legal Department concerning allegations of abuse; and (5) answers given to "survey questions" contained on one of the Telememos.

Defendants have objected that these areas of inquiry are protected by the attorney-client and/or work product privileges. As to the first two categories, plaintiffs contend that they concern only policies and implementation, and do not invade any privileges. As to categories 3 and 5, they assert only that the requested information is related to the blank documents they already received in discovery, and that the information goes to the heart of their case. Finally, as to category 4, they claim again, that no privileges would be invaded, because they seek general information about the types of records kept by the legal department.

The court agrees that items 1, 2 and 4, which seek general structural, policy and organizational information concerning the Legal Department, implicate neither the attorney-client nor the work product privileges. Items 3 and 5, on the other hand, seek protected information. As set forth in the declaration of the Church's associate general counsel, the Telememo forms are completed by attorneys or legal assistants based upon information provided them by congregation elders, and are used to assist in giving legal advice to the elders, as clients of the Legal Department. Similarly, any compilation of information, as from the "survey questions" constitutes attorney work product and is not discoverable.

For these reasons, the court will GRANT the motion as to items 1, 2 and 4 and will DENY the motion as to items 3 and 5.

BACKGROUND

On October 6, 2006, Plaintiffs' attorneys in the coordinated actions filed an action in San Diego Superior court. Attached as Exhibit A is a true and correct copy of that Complaint.

Plaintiffs' attorneys in the San Diego action are requesting that this Court coordinate an add on case with the previously coordinated matters. A copy of this request is being mailed to the Chair of the Judicial Council and Defendant's attorney in the coordinated actions is also being notified of this request.

REQUEST TO INCLUDE PENDING ACTION

Pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure Section 404.4 plaintiffs are moving that this court hear a Petition for Coordination of an Add On Case pursuant to California Rule of Court 1544.

California Code of Civil Procedure Section 404.4 provides that:

> The presiding judge of any court in which there is pending an action sharing a common question of fact or law with actions coordinated pursuant to section 404, on... the motion of any party supported by an affidavit stating facts showing that the action meets the standard specified in Section 404.1... may request the judge assigned to hear the coordinated actions for an order coordinating the action.

California Rules of Court 1544 provides that:

> A request to coordinate an add-on case must comply with the requirements of Rules 1520 through 1523, except that the requests must be submitted to the coordination trial judge under Section 404.4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with proof of mailing of one copy to the Chair of the Judicial Council and proof of service is required by rule 1510.

The affidavit of Rudy Nolen shows that this action meets the standards set forth in California Code of Civil Procedure Section 404.1.

California Code of Civil Procedure Section 404.1 provides that:

> Coordination of civil actions sharing a common question of fact or law is appropriate if one judge hearing all of the actions for all purposes in a selected site or sites will promote the ends of justice taking into account whether the common question of fact or law is predominating and significant to the litigation; the convenience of parties, witnesses, and counsel; the relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel; the efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower; the calendar of the courts; the disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders, or judgments; and, the likelihood of settlement of the actions without further litigation should coordination be denied.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, pursuant to the California Code of Civil Procedure and California Rules of Court, Plaintiffs ask that this Court hear a Petition for Coordination of an Add-On case.

Respectfully submitted,

II.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

11. Each Plaintiff has been damaged in an amount exceeding the minimum jurisdictional requirements of this Court.

12. Venue is proper in San Diego County, California because each minor plaintiff was the victim of tortuous conduct within that county.

III.

FACTS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

13. All paragraphs of this Complaint are based on information and belief, except for those allegation, which pertain to the Plaintiffs and their counsel. Plaintiffs' information and belief are based upon, inter alia, the investigation conducted to date by Plaintiffs and their counsel. Each allegation in this Complaint either has, or is likely to have, evidentiary support upon further investigation and discovery.

14. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS comprise a hierarchical organization made up of different corporations and other entities. The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York is the parent organization of all entities of Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States. The "Governing Body" establishes policies and dictates practices for Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the world, and operates through various corporate entities including the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania.

15. Local congregations are led by Elders, Ministerial Servants and Pioneers who are appointed by the Governing Body and/or the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York Local Congregation. Elders, Ministerial Servants and Pioneers are agents of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York and the Governing Body and are required to obey and follow the rules handed down by the Governing Body and the Watchtower Society.

16. Through their rules and policies, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect children in their organization, including Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

17. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to instruct their elders as to what to do when they received allegations of child sexual abuse. They promulgated policies and rules directing the elders to call the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Legal Department" for direction about whether to report allegations of sexual abuse to police and law enforcement. The policies were designed to prevent cooperation with, if not frustrate, secular investigations. Elders were sometimes instructed to make anonymous calls from telephone booths so that law enforcement authorities would be unable to contact them for more information.

18. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated policies and rules requiring local congregations, through their elders, to investigate allegations of child sexual abuse. They enacted evidentiary and procedural rules governing the formation and operation of "judicial committees," comprised of elders, which gathered and considered evidence, questioned witnesses and rendered judgments about whether child sexual abuse had or had not occurred. Often these judgments were based on the "two witness rule," which allowed allegations of child sexual abuse to be disregarded unless the perpetrator confessed or there were two eye witnesses to the crime. Additionally, the elders were instructed not to reveal to law enforcement authorities the results of their investigations.

19. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed the duty to punish organization members who were guilty of child sexual abuse. Since the allegations were often concealed from secular authorities, the perpetrators often received no punishment except for that meted out by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS. Sometimes the offenders were "disfellowshipped," or expelled from the organization. Other times their punishment was secret; they were "privately reproved" or placed on "restrictions" so that other congregation members would not know that a dangerous child abuser was in their midst.

20. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' policies, which were ostensibly promulgated to protect children in the organization, emphasized secrecy above all other concerns. Victims of child sexual abuse, and their families, were routinely told not to inform secular authorities. Victims were often discouraged, if not prevented, from obtaining appropriate medical and psychological care or from confiding in their siblings or close friends. Instead, they were instructed to rely on elders for counsel.

21. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS instructed the local congregations and elders to make written reports to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Service Department" about allegations of child sexual abuse leveled against elders, ministerial servants and pioneers, as well as written reports of judicial committee actions concerning child sexual abuse allegations made against any Jehovah's Witness. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have for years maintained files and, more recently, a computerized database containing such information. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to compile this information to protect congregation members and they therefore assumed a duty to utilize this information with reasonable care. However, despite having confidential information that would allow parents, law enforcement authorities and even elders to identify sexual predators and actually take steps to protect children, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently concealed this information from the persons who needed it most urgently.

22. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have, at all material times, had the ability to know when a "known pedophile," a term they sometimes use, moves from one congregation to another. However, they have negligently failed to utilize the information they have compiled to monitor the movement of sexual predators through their organization and issue appropriate warnings. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated rules and policies that require the former congregation to write a "letter of instruction" when a member moved to another congregation. However, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to take any steps to ensure that such a letter was actually sent or that the letter contained accurate information and adequate warnings. If a sexual predator moved from a congregation where he was known to be a pedophile, but then moved a second time, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' rules did not even require the first congregation's letter to be passed along to the third congregation.

23. These are but a few examples of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assuming a duty to protect children in the organization but failing to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

24. Frederick McLean was appointed Ministerial Servant by the Governing Body and/or the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York. A Ministerial Servant is an agent of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, the Governing Body and the other Watchtower Defendants.

25. A Ministerial Servant is held out by the Watchtower Defendants to be a person of good character and responsibility and a person one can trust to supervise minor children. Parents within the Watchtower organization are encouraged to view Ministerial servants as role models for their children. Children within the organization are taught to look up to and respect Ministerial Servants.

26. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew, or should have known, that Frederick McLean was a pedophile. Nevertheless, he was appointed Ministerial servant and allowed to occupy a leadership position in the Jehovah's Witnesses organization.

27. Beginning in approximately 1991, McLean used the position of trust that his status as a Ministerial Servant represented and conferred, to obtain access to Plaintiffs so that he could sexually abuse them. He abused SH and NH from approximately 1993 to 1999. He abused GG from approximately 1992 to 1999, and abused AB from approximately 1991 to 1999. The abuse occurred primarily in San Diego County, California.

IV.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE

28. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 27 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

29. Plaintiffs allege that at all times herein mentioned, WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect Plaintiffs from sexual predators within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that Plaintiffs were at risk of foreseeable harm by their agent, Frederick McLean, but failed to act to protect them from such harm. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS breached their duty to Plaintiffs, thereby causing great harm to Plaintiffs.

30. Despite the fact that the Watchtower Defendants knew or should have known of McLean's history of pedophilia, they negligently failed to warn Plaintiffs or their families of McLean's history of sexually abusing children.

31. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew, or should have known, of McLean's history of pedophilia, they negligently permitted him to be alone with children, including Plaintiffs, in the congregations.

32. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described herein above, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from obtaining the full enjoyment of life.

V.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENT APPOINTMENT, RETENTION AND SUPERVISION

33. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 32 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

34. Plaintiffs allege that at all times herein mentioned, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of McLean's propensity to use his position as a leader in the local congregations to engage in acts of sexual abuse of young, vulnerable and defenseless victims such as Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to adequately investigate, evaluate, and otherwise research McLean's background prior to appointing him to a leadership position and allowing him unsupervised access to young victims such as Plaintiffs.

35. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew, or should have known, of McLean's history of pedophilia, they negligently appointed him to the office of Ministerial Servant when they knew or should have known that he would be allowed unsupervised access to minor children in the course and scope of his duties.

36. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to monitor and/or supervise McLean despite their actual or constructive knowledge that he posed a potential and foreseeable danger to children.

37. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described herein above, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from obtaining the full enjoyment of life.

VI.

THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION
GROSS NEGLIGENCE/WILFUL MISCONDUCT

38. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 37 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

39. Plaintiffs allege, at all times mentioned herein, that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS demonstrated a conscious indifference to the safety and welfare of Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of the dangerous propensities of their agent, Frederick McLean, yet failed to act to protect the health, safety and welfare of children in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization thereby allowing Plaintiffs to be sexually abused. But for the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' willful misconduct and gross negligence in failing to implement safeguards to protect Plaintiffs, the sexual abuse would have been prevented.

40. Plaintiffs further allege that WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' actions, constituting willful misconduct and gross negligence described herein above, caused significant mental, emotional, and physical injuries as a result of the acts of sexual abuse described herein above.

41. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described herein above, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will be continue to be prevented from obtaining the full enjoyment of life.

VII.

FOURTH CAUSE OF ACTION
BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

42. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 41 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

43. Plaintiffs allege, at all times mentioned herein, that by assuming the responsibility to protect and care for Plaintiffs, who were young and vulnerable, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS occupied positions of trust and confidence with Plaintiffs and such relationship imposed on them a duty to act to protect Plaintiffs' best interests.

44. Plaintiffs further allege that because of this special relationship, Plaintiffs placed their trust and confidence in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS to protect them from harm and to warn Plaintiffs of the potential harm. The conduct described above constituted a breach of the fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiffs by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS.

45. As a legal result of Defendants' misconduct as described herein above, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from obtaining the full enjoyment of life.

VIII.
PRAYER

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs demand judgment against the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS individually, jointly and severally as follows:

1. For general damages according to proof;
2. For past and future medical expenses according to proof;
3. For past and future loss of earnings according to proof;
4. For prejudgment interest;
5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and
6. For such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

///

I, RUDY NOLEN, declare as follows:

I am an attorney at law duly licensed to practice before all of the courts of the State of California and am one of the attorneys for Plaintiffs in the above-entitled action.

Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. 4374 consists of a series of cases which have been filed by my office and co-counsel against the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc., and various local Jehovah's Witnesses Congregations. Two of these cases have been designated as Tract I. Four other cases have been designated as Non-Tract I. The Tract I cases have been set for trial. The first is set to commence on April 3, 2007. Discovery is progressing in those cases although there is considerable discovery which still needs to be conducted.

The Non-Tract I cases are in the initial stages of discovery. The depositions of the Plaintiffs in one case have been taken although the depositions of the Plaintiffs in three other of the cases have not been scheduled. The deposition of one witness has been taken in those cases. Initial sets of discovery have been exchanged between the parties. The depositions of the Elders (the individuals who oversee the local Jehovah's Witnesses Organization) have yet to be taken in any of the Non-Tract I cases. Due to the discovery which has been conducted in the Non-Tract I cases, the discovery in the instant action can be expected to proceed quickly. Therefore, the discovery in this matter will be such that coordination is consistent with the relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel.

Based on information, research and belief, the included actions involve the following questions of fact and law: Various perpetrators, all of whom were Jehovah's Witnesses who held leadership positions and who exercised authority over members of the congregation, each engaged in nefarious acts under different circumstances. Crucial to every case, the molestations by these individuals became known to other church leaders at the local Kingdom Halls and eventually the information was disseminated further into the church's organizational structure. Common to each case was a decision by church officials to keep these crimes from law enforcement officials. Common to each case was a decision to manage internally the criminal behavior of their fellow member by counseling the perpetrator within the church's structure. Common to each case was a concomitant decision not to tell other members of the congregation that one of their leaders was a sexual predator who had committed heinous and criminal acts on children of their fellow church members. Common to each case, the perpetrator/church leader continued to molest members' children after the perpetrator's criminal acts were known. Each lawsuit asserts identical legal theories consisting of common law negligence; negligent appointment, retention, and supervision; gross negligence – wilful misconduct; breach of fiduciary duty. Some of the cases assert fraud – intentional misrepresentation; fraud – concealment; conspiracy; and intentional infliction of emotional distress. These questions predominate and are significant in each action. The pleadings have been tested on numerous occasions and the coordination judge has ruled on the various theories of liability and causes of action.

The actions are complex: Each plaintiff is claiming emotional and psychological injuries caused by the trauma of the molestations. The injuries and damages, although complex and personal as to each individual, are no more involved than other tort actions claiming personal injuries. The complexity of these cases is related more to the number of injured individuals, their inter-family relationships in the context of their Jehovah's Witnesses beliefs and the control and influence the organization exercised over its members. This cult milieu demanded obedience to the church leadership, and a corresponding fear of ostrization if the leaders' directives were not followed. These facts allowed the events of these lawsuits to persist for years resulting in further injuries to a number of innocent children. Because the allegations involve a religious entity, unique issues of a constitutional nature are extant which are unlike those usually found in most tort claims.

The trial of these common issues before one judge at one site will (1) advance the efficient use of judicial resources, (2) prevent duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders and judgments, and (3) increase the likelihood of settlement: Consuming the time of a number of judges and their staffs with telephone calls, lengthy and complex briefs, time consuming law and motion hearings could all be avoided by a single judge presiding over the case. His or her familiarity with the case would certainly expedite these procedures and the amount of time devoted to each matter. Naturally, multiple jury trials would clearly consume an enormous amount of time and expense, particularly when the same legal theories will be tried in each case. It is likely, given the unique constitutional issues and the anticipated objections to discovery, the potential of several judges reaching different opinions is inevitable. Most importantly, since these cases will be the subject of motions for summary judgment and/or adjudication, a single briefing and hearing would best serve the interests of justice. The possibility that judges would issue different rulings on in limine motions and evidentiary objections during a trial is unmistakable. Whether collateral estoppel applies from one case to another is likely to be another contested matter. Appeals from these rulings, given the enormity of the claims, creates further consumption of judicial resources that can be avoided if a single trial were ordered.

Napa County is the best county for coordination of these actions. This County is located close proximity of the law offices of Plaintiffs' and Defendants' counsel. Although the Plaintiffs and the Elders of the local congregation in the instant action are in Southern California, many of the same depositions of the New York and Pennsylvania Defendants would not be located in Southern California. Therefore, coordination of the new action with the included actions will serve to protect the convenience of the parties and counsel.

Defendants' attorneys have been informed of this motion and request and have informed Plaintiffs' counsel that they will be opposing coordination this new action.

Therefore, Plaintiffs have scheduled this hearing date far enough in advance that will allow for a hearing if one is requested by this Court pursuant to Rules of Court 1544(c).

I declare under penalty of perjury pursuant to the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct. This declaration was executed on this 26th day of October, 2006 at Sacramento, California.

Respectfully submitted,

Dear Ms. Taylor:

The court is in receipt of your recent letter to the judge regarding the above referenced matter.

Because it is improper for a judge to receive communications about pending cases directly from litigants, we are returning your correspondence to you. He is not ethically permitted to read it, and he has not. Any communications should come to the court through your attorney, with copies to all other counsel. If you are unrepresented, you must still proceed through the normal channels of presenting your arguments or defense.

The Church Defendants respectfully submit this response in opposition to Plaintiffs' application to "add on" a recently filed San Diego case (A.B., et al v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, et al., San Diego County Case No. GIE 034558) to six cases that previously were coordinated and assigned to the Napa County Superior Court as the court overseeing coordination.[1] (The Church Defendants in the new San Diego case are composed of two national non-profit religious corporations, Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("Watchtower NY"), Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ("Watch Tower PA"), and a local San Diego association known as Alpine Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. Those Defendants are collectively referred to hereinafter as the "Church Defendants").

I. INTRODUCTION

In Plaintiffs' original Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of Petition for Coordination filed in May 2004, Plaintiffs' counsel sought to alarm the Court into coordinating those cases by prognosticating that it was in "the interests of justice and the economics of trying 20 to 40 cases is unwieldy and seemingly impractical." (Memorandum, p. 9, lns. 15–20, emphasis added.) Also, in the original Declaration of Rudy Nolen in Support of Petition for Coordination filed in May 2004, Plaintiffs' counsel envisioned that "[a]ppeals from these rulings, given the enormity of the claims, creates further consumption of judicial resources that can be avoided if a single trial is ordered." (Declaration of Nolen, ¶ 7 at p.12, lns. 1- 2, emphasis added.)

However, the truth of the matter is that after some three to four years of aggressive "Town Hall meetings" conducted by Plaintiffs' counsel and related media advertisements to try to recruit and enlist more plaintiffs, Plaintiffs' counsel now seeks to convince this court that to advance judicial economy it should add this one case filed in San Diego County, which is over 500 miles from Napa County, to the current list of six remaining coordinated cases. Those six remaining

[1] As background, Plaintiffs' counsel originally filed 17 cases in various northern California counties. Plaintiffs' counsel voluntarily dismissed five of those cases because they lacked merit, such that Plaintiffs' original Petition for coordination (filed in May 2004) sought to coordinate 12 different cases. Since then, Plaintiffs' counsel voluntarily dismissed an additional six cases, leaving only six remaining coordinated cases before the Napa Court. (The six cases that were voluntarily dismissed since Plaintiffs' original Petition for Coordination are: (1) Javier C., Placer County; (2) Lisa H., Monterey County; (3) Nathan D., Tehama County; (4) Jocelyn A., Sonoma County; (5) Danielle A., Sonoma County; and (6) Dennis S., Sonoma County.)

cases are now three years old, and two of those cases are scheduled for trial in April and May of 2007.[2] The Church Defendants submit that contrary to Plaintiffs' counsel assertions, these six remaining coordinated cases before the Napa Court do not represent the "logjam of cases which gives rise to coordination." McGhan Med. Corp. v. Superior Court (1993) 11 Cal.App.4th 804, 812, 14 Cal.Rptr.2d 264, 269-70 (emphasis added).

As described in greater detail below, the Church Defendants request that the Court deny Plaintiffs' request to coordinate a new case from San Diego County as an "add on" case which involves Plaintiffs, an alleged abuser, and a Defendant congregation wholly different from all six of the presently remaining northern California coordinated cases. The Church Defendants base this request on the following grounds: (a) imminence of trial; (b) unfairness; (c) inefficiency; (d) inconsistency; (e) likelihood of settlement; and (f) undue burden on the Courts.

That said, the Church Defendants will stipulate that a very narrow and limited aspect of discovery could effectively be consolidated, specifically written discovery propounded to and depositions of representatives of the two national non-profit religious corporations, Defendants Watchtower NY and Watch Tower PA. However, for that to occur, this newly filed San Diego case does not need to be coordinated with the six coordinated cases now before the Napa court, because the Church Defendants will stipulate to such limited consolidation without any need for formal coordination.

In addition, the Church Defendants' defense counsel in the new San Diego case will include San Diego attorney James McCabe. Thus, there will be some different counsel involved in the San Diego case than in the six coordinated cases. Coordination of the San Diego case in the Napa Court would be inconvenient plainly for him.

[2] As noted, Plaintiffs' counsel initially filed 17 cases. Therefore, given that almost two-thirds of the 17 cases originally filed by Plaintiffs' counsel have been dismissed, including many before the pleadings were even at issue, the Court should not consider Plaintiffs' counsel's statement that designation of the new San Diego case as an "add on" case will not lead to "further consumption of judicial resources". The fact that Plaintiffs' counsel filed numerous unmeritorious complaints that were eventually voluntarily dismissed by Plaintiffs because they had no legal merit reveals it is Plaintiffs, and not the Church Defendants, who have unnecessarily consumed judicial resources in these matters. For Plaintiffs' counsel to use their own apparent waste of judicial resources as a basis for now arguing to the Court to conserve judicial economy lacks all credibility.

II. DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs filed their petition to "add on" the new San Diego case to previously coordinated actions pursuant to CCP §404.4 and Rule 1544 of the Rules of Court. For coordination to occur, CCP §404.4 states that "[t]he presiding judge of any court in which there is pending an action sharing a common question of fact or law with actions coordinated pursuant to Section 404, on … the motion of any party supported by an affidavit stating facts showing that the action meets the standards specified in Section 404.1, … may request the judge assigned to hear the coordinated actions for an order coordinating the action. Coordination of the action shall be determined under the standards specified in Section 404.1." Thus, initially Section 404.1 requires that the civil actions "shar[e] a common question of fact or law". Then, once that threshold criterion is met, the court must determine whether coordination of the cases "will promote the ends of justice[,] taking into account" several factors, including:

- Whether the common question of fact or law is predominating and significant to the litigation;
- The convenience of the parties, witnesses, and counsel;
- The relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel;
- The efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower;
- The calendar of the courts; and
- The disadvantage of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders, or judgments.

See CCP §404.1.

Additionally, Rule 1544 of the California Rules of Court ("CRC") states that "[a] request to coordinate an add-on case must comply with the requirements of rules 1520 through 1523, except that the request must be submitted to the coordination trial judge under section 404.4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, with proof of mailing of one copy to the Chair of the Judicial Council and proof of service as required by CRC 1510."

As noted below, Church Defendants submit that the request to "add on" the new San Diego case with the six previously coordinated cases before the Napa court is improper under the applicable code sections and rules, based on the following grounds in opposition.

A. REQUEST TO ADD ON THE SAN DIEGO COUNTY CASE INTO A SINGLE, UNIFIED TRIAL WITH THE COORDINATION OF SIX (6) NAPA COUNTY CASES WILL NOT RESULT IN EFFICIENT JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION OR OTHERWISE ENHANCE JUDICIAL EFFICIENCY, NOR WILL A SINGLE UNIFIED TRIAL BE CONVENIENT FOR THE MANY NON-PARTY WITNESSES FROM SAN DIEGO.

Notwithstanding recent rulings from the Napa court rejecting Plaintiffs' earlier request that the six remaining coordinated cases be unified for a single trial, Plaintiffs' counsel now disingenuously continue to contend here that a single, unified trial should be conducted with this new case filed in San Diego County and the six coordinated Napa County cases. (Declaration of Nolen, p.4, lns. 1 – 9.) The request by Plaintiffs for a single unified trial of the six (6) coordinated cases has already been denied, as noted, because any such unified trial would not lead to more judicial efficiency. Adding another case from San Diego County would only make such a trial even more judicially inefficient, as well as inconvenience the many non-party witnesses for the San Diego case who live in southern California.

Clearly, to add on this present San Diego County case to the six previously coordinated Napa County cases for a single unified trial, as now again advocated by Plaintiffs' counsel, would neither result in efficient judicial administration nor enhance judicial efficiency, because the San Diego County case is so factually unrelated that a separate jury composed of jurors from the community of San Diego County would need to be seated for the new case. (The six coordinated cases remaining before the Napa court involve ten different Plaintiffs accusing five different alleged abusers/co-Defendants who allegedly had some affiliation with six different northern California congregations; each of those six cases has distinct and different facts and circumstances in which the sex abuse of each Plaintiff allegedly occurred and each alleged abuser had differing relationships with each Plaintiff and a differing status with the Church Defendants.) A separate jury for the San Diego case would be in addition to the different juries that will be needed for each of the Plaintiffs' six cases currently coordinated before the Napa Court. It is clear that the logistical problems and judicial inefficiency that would be created by having to shuttle the several juries in and out of the courtroom from witness to witness in a single, unified trial would be considerable and burdensome to the court and to the counsel and the parties.

In addition, a single unified trial with each of the six Napa cases, as Penient for the witnesses in the new San Diego case, because the majority of fact witnesses or percipient witnesses for the San Diego case will not be "local" to any of the six previously coordinated cases. On this point, Plaintiffs' counsel appears to be confused when stating that, "[a]lthough the Plaintiffs and the Elders of the local congregation in the instant action are in Southern California … coordination of the new action with the included actions will serve to protect the conveniences of the parties and counsel." (Declaration of Rudy Nolen, p. 4, lns. 21-25, emphasis added.)

While it is true that "adding on" the San Diego case would "protect the convenience" of Plaintiffs' counsel[3], it would quite obviously adversely and severely impact the fact witnesses or percipient witnesses for the new San Diego case. This is because the facts of the new San Diego case in comparison to each of the six coordinated cases before the Napa Court will be completely different – as noted, there are 10 different Plaintiffs involved in the six previously coordinated actions, five different alleged abusers, and six different local congregations, as well as the distinct and different facts and circumstances in which the sex abuse of each of the 10 Plaintiffs allegedly occurred, the different circumstances involving each alleged abuser's relationship with the particular Plaintiff alleging claims against him, and each alleged abuser's relationship with the local congregation involved. Likewise, the facts supporting any alleged notice to each local congregation and the other Church Defendants that the alleged abuser was a danger to children in the San Diego County case will be different from each of the six cases presently coordinated before the Napa Court.

Thus, a single unified trial like that now advocated again by Plaintiffs' counsel will not be convenient for the all of the witnesses involved in the new San Diego case in comparison with the witnesses for each of the six previously coordinated cases (or for the various San Diego plaintiffs, for that matter). Therefore, the Church Defendants respectfully submit that a single unified trial like that proposed by Plaintiffs in the instant motion to "add on" the new San Diego case will simply not promote the ends of justice.

[3] As noted, defense counsel for the Church Defendants in the new San Diego case will include San Diego attorney James McCabe, so it will be inconvenient for him if the new San Diego case is coordinated before the Napa Court.

B. IMMINENCE OF TRIAL

CRC 1521(d) states that "imminence of a trial in any action otherwise appropriate for coordination may be a ground for summary denial of a petition for coordination, in whole or in part". Plaintiffs concede, as they must, that the two coordinated Track I cases are already set to commence trial on April 3, 2007 and May 15, 2007. (See Declaration of Rudy Nolen, p. 2, lns. 10-12.) This means that from the date the cases were filed in 2003, more than three years have elapsed due to motion practice, discovery, and depositions of witnesses. Given the time that it has taken to complete this process (which is still not completed, even for the Track I cases), it is inconceivable how Plaintiffs can now assert that Church Defendants would not be disadvantaged by the Court designating the present case as an "add on" coordinated case. Therefore, Church Defendants request that this Court deny Plaintiffs' request to designate this case as an "add on" case in view of the imminence of a trial in the Track I cases.

Although Plaintiffs' counsel states in his Declaration (at p. 2, lns. 13-15) that the four (4) non-Track I cases are "in the initial stages of discovery," the facts show that that two (2) Track I cases, as well as the Daniel West, et al non-Track I case, are far along with written discovery and depositions. Given the almost three years that it has taken to conduct the motion practice, discovery, and depositions completed thus far in the Track I and non-Track I cases, and given the imminence of trials of the two Track I cases, the Church Defendants request this Court to deny Plaintiffs' request to designate the recently filed San Diego County case as a "add on" case.[4]

Moreover, the Church Defendants respectfully submit to the Court that there may be one or two of these types of cases filed against any corporation, charitable corporation, religious entity, or individual within a given number of years. To allow Plaintiffs to continually petition the court to "add on" such cases right up until and after a trial has commenced would obviate the provisions of CRC 1521.

[4] The Declaration of Plaintiffs' attorney contains some factual inaccuracies. For example, in Mr. Nolen's Declaration at p. 3, lns 1-2, he incorrectly states that "[c]ommon to each case was a decision by church officials to keep these crimes form law enforcement officials." As Mr. Nolen is aware, his own client, plaintiff Tim W., testified that a local church elder told him and his mother to report the matter to the police. That is just one example of several inaccurate statements about alleged "common[alities] to each case" in the sworn Declaration.

C. UNFAIRNESS

The criteria stated in CCP §404.1 to promote the ends of justice takes into account "the relative development of the actions". Therefore, to approve Plaintiffs' request to "add on" the new San Diego case with the six previously coordinated cases, two of which are set for trial, places an unfair and prejudicial burden on the Church Defendants. As noted, motion practice, discovery, depositions, and other work necessary to develop the six previously coordinated cases has taken some three years. Defendants respectfully submit that approval of Plaintiffs' Petition would not advance the ends of justice, in that it would not allow Church Defendants thorough discovery, depositions, and motion practice that could lead to the eventual dismissal of all or some of the claims of some or all of the Plaintiffs in the new San Diego County case.

In addition, although similar legal issues may be raised in each case, including whether an actionable legal duty is owed by each of the corporate entity Church Defendants to each Plaintiff, notice issues regarding the alleged abuse of each Plaintiff, First Amendment limitations on each Plaintiff's claims against each of the corporate entity Church Defendants, etc., the resolution of each of those legal issues will very likely depend on the particular facts developed in each separate case. As noted above, the particular facts and circumstances of each Plaintiff's case will be different, including the facts and circumstances of the alleged sex abuse of each Plaintiff, each Plaintiff's relationship with the alleged perpetrator of his or her abuse, each Plaintiff's own family situation, the facts regarding alleged notice to the local congregation Defendant about each particular Plaintiff's alleged abuse, the facts regarding alleged notice to each of the three national corporate Defendants regarding each particular Plaintiff's alleged abuse, and so on.

To avoid unfairness in the treatment of the diverse development of the actions and work product of counsel in the six previously coordinated cases to the San Diego case, the Church Defendants request that the court deny Plaintiffs' request to designate the recently filed San Diego County case as an "add on" to the six remaining coordinated cases.

D. INEFFICIENCY

Not only would a single, unified trial as now again proposed by Plaintiffs' counsel create severe logistical and case management problems for the Court, a unified trial almost inevitably would result in prejudicial and reversible error in many, if not all, of the cases. The Church Defendants submit that a jury hearing all of the evidence for all of the six presently coordinated cases plus the recently filed San Diego case would be thoroughly confused in an effort to separate the evidence relevant to each case and each party and the instructions relevant to each case and each party. Hearing evidence that is not relevant to a particular case and to particular parties would also prejudice such a jury. Thus rather than enhance judicial efficiency, a single, unified trial like that advocated by Plaintiffs' counsel would result in the expenditure of more judicial resources because most, if not all, of the cases, including the recently filed San Diego County case, would likely go up on appeal if a single, unified trial were held. Further, it is not a stretch of the imagination to suggest that several of the cases would have to be remanded for new trials after the appellate process had been concluded.

E. INCONSISTENCY

In Plaintiffs' original Petition to coordinate 12 cases, some 19 Plaintiffs were included; however, there are now just 10 Plaintiffs in six cases.[5] In the recently filed San Diego County case, the Plaintiffs identify one alleged perpetrator. Obviously, the particular facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged sex abuse of each Plaintiff by the alleged perpetrator involved in the San Diego case will be different from any of the previously coordinated cases.

For example, in West, et al. v. Watchtower NY, et al. (Yolo County), the three Plaintiffs have variously testified in deposition that their alleged abuse occurred at the alleged perpetrator's Woodland, California apartment, on a trip to Hawaii, and perhaps even on a trip to Europe. In Tim W. v. Watchtower NY, et al. (Tehama County), the alleged sex abuse occurred on one or more non-church related business-related trips in Northern California on which Plaintiff accompanied the perpetrator, as well as in the alleged perpetrator's business office. In Charissa W., et al. v. Watchtower NY, et al. (Napa County), Plaintiffs allege they were abused at a daycare operated at the private Napa home of the perpetrator and his wife. Thus, the facts and circumstances of each of Plaintiff's alleged abuse in the San Diego case will certainly differ factually from the six remaining coordinated cases now before the Napa court, and the facts underlying each Plaintiff's claimed damages will certainly differ as well. Thus, with respect to the core issue concerning the claimed sex abuse of each Plaintiff, the six remaining coordinated cases certainly will not share with the San Diego County case a common question of fact that is predominating.

[5] As noted, there are five different alleged perpetrators in the six remaining cases coordinated before the Napa Court. Four alleged perpetrators were originally named as individual Defendants in the particular cases involving their alleged sexual misconduct, and the fifth alleged perpetrator died in the 1990's.

Equally important, each of the six previously coordinated cases will also turn factually on the differing relationships between the various parties, including (i) each Plaintiff's particular relationship with the alleged perpetrator involved in each case, (ii) each Plaintiff's particular relationship with the local congregation in each case, (iii) each alleged perpetrator's particular relationship with the local congregation in each case, (iv) each Plaintiff's relationships with the two (2) national corporate Defendants (Watchtower NY, and Watch Tower PA), and (v) each alleged perpetrator's relationships with the two national corporate Defendants.

The facts underlying each of those relationships will differ depending on the peculiar facts and factors surrounding each case. For example, because the Complaint in each case alleges that each Plaintiff was a minor at the time of the alleged abuse, each Plaintiff's own particular family situation will very likely supply relevant facts in each case.[6] In addition, each alleged perpetrator's relationship with the local congregation might be relevant. For example, Plaintiffs allege in the various complaints that some of the alleged perpetrators were elders in a local congregation, that one was a ministerial servant in a local congregation, that one was a presiding overseer in a local congregation, etc. Thus, each case will have different factual settings underlying each Plaintiff's claims.

The recently filed San Diego case likewise will have facts from each of the four named Plaintiffs that will differ depending on the peculiar facts and factors surrounding each of the six case. For example, since all four Plaintiffs in the new San Diego case allege that they were minors at the time of the alleged abuse, each Plaintiff's own particular family situation will very likely supply relevant facts in each case. (See footnote 6, supra.) In fact, the Church Defendants' initial investigation reveals that one or more of the San Diego Plaintiffs might have a familial relationship with the alleged perpetrator. Should that fact be established, then evidence regarding whether it was that familial relationship that allowed the alleged perpetrator to gain access to the Plaintiff will predominate in those proceedings. In addition, the alleged perpetrator's relationship with the local congregation might be relevant. For example, Plaintiffs allege that the perpetrator in the recently filed San Diego case was a ministerial servant. However, in the previously six coordinated cases in Napa County, as noted, the Plaintiffs' various complaints state that some of the alleged perpetrators were elders in a local congregation, that one was a ministerial servant in a local congregation, that one was a presiding overseer in a local congregation, etc. Thus, each case will have different factual settings underlying each Plaintiff's claims.

[6] See Quigley v. First Church of Christ, Scientist (1998) 65 Cal.App.4th 1027, 76 Cal.Rptr.2d 792, in which the plaintiff, who was the mother of a child who had committed suicide after receiving spiritual counseling, sued a church based on an alleged duty of care owed by the church to the child. As is relevant here, the Court of Appeal in Quigley stated that the father who had legal custody of the child at issue owed the child a duty of care and that the child's dependency was thus on his father and not the defendant church.

Again, given the different and varied facts underlying the alleged sexual abuse of each Plaintiff in the recently filed San Diego case in comparison with the alleged sexual abuse of each Plaintiff by the different alleged perpetrator involved in each of the six coordinated cases now before the Napa Court, coupled with the different and varied facts associated with each of the various relationships underlying each Paintiff's claims, there simply is not any common question of fact that is predominating, as required by CCP §404.1 to "add on" the San Diego case with the six cases.

F. LIKELIHOOD OF SETTLEMENT

CCP § 404.1 states that one of the criteria to consider regarding coordination of cases is whether there is "the likelihood of settlement of the actions without further litigation should coordination be denied". Likewise California Civil Practice Procedures § 25:51(7) includes a similar provision as a standard to consider coordination, namely, where there is "the likelihood of settlement of the actions without further litigation, should coordination be denied". The Practice Notes of California Civil Practice Procedures § 25:51 state that "[s]uits that are likely to settle are not good candidates for coordination because actions that have been coordinated are more difficult to settle". Plaintiffs have not asserted, and cannot assert, that the present San Diego case does not have a likelihood of settlement. As this Court is aware, Plaintiffs' Complaint was only filed in San Diego County Superior Court on October 6, 2006, and one of Church Defendants' defense counsel, Robert Schnack, did not formally accept service of the Complaint until October 20, 2006. Thus, it is impossible to know whether there is any possibility of settlement.

Only after discovery is completed will it be possible for Plaintiffs and Church Defendants to ascertain whether the case lacks any merit or whether there is evidence that would lead to a settlement. In view of the fact that the two Track I cases are scheduled for trial in April 2007 and May 2007, and that there might be a likelihood of settlement in the recently filed San Diego case, Church Defendants request the Court to summarily deny Plaintiffs' request to "add on" the recently filed San Diego case with the six previously coordinated Napa cases.

G. UNDUE BURDEN ON THE COURTS

Although there have been a number of coordinated cases approved by the Chair of the Judicial Council, the recently filed San Diego case does not fall within those parameters because the purpose of coordinating cases is stated as "the intent of the Judicial Council to vest in the coordinating judge whatever great breadth of discretion may be necessary and appropriate to ease the transition through the judicial system of the logjam of cases which gives rise to coordination". McGhan Med. Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 11 Cal.App.4th at 812, 14 Cal.Rptr.2d at 269-70 (emphasis added); see also California Practice Guide: Civil Trials and Evidence § 4:432.35.

As discussed above, contrary to what has been asserted by Plaintiffs' counsel, litigation against the Church Defendants has not become the "20 to 40 cases" which would make trying them in separate courts "unwieldy and seemingly impractical". In reality, after almost three years of filing complaints, only six of Plaintiffs' counsel's original 17 cases have survived. Contrary to the apparent assertion of Plaintiffs' counsel, the San Diego case is unlike the breast implant cases noted in McGhan where the court stated that they were "advised by counsel for petitioners that some 600 cases are now pending in over 20 counties in California, and that additional cases are being filed almost daily". McGhan Med. Corp. v. Superior Court, supra, 11 Cal.App.4th at 808, 14 Cal.Rptr.2d at 266.

The Church Defendants submit that Plaintiffs here have not met the necessary threshold of evidence to persuade the court that it should overlook the (a) imminence of trial, (b) unfairness, (c) inefficiency, (d) inconsistency, (e) likelihood of settlement, and (f) undue burden on the courts so as to "add on" the instant San Diego case to the six previously coordinated cases before the Napa Court.

H. THE PRESENT SAN DIEGO COUNTY CASE DIFFERS SUBSTANTIALLY FROM PRIOR COORDINATED CASES.

The reported appellate cases that have discussed and authorized coordination have involved situations very different from the distinct factual scenarios presented in this present case, such as tort liability for product defects (breast implants, for example) or related actions pending in different courts but arising from a single transaction or occurrence (a plane crash, for example). None of the California cases authorizing or upholding coordination involve prescribing that a San Diego County case be coordinated with the already existing six Napa County cases concerning very fact-specific allegations of sex abuse of the Plaintiffs by different perpetrators in distinctly different factual settings, involving different local defendants in each case and in each county, etc. See, e.g., McGhan Med. Corp. v. Superior Court, supra (ordering coordination of "some 600 cases" pending in over 20 counties involving product defect claims against breast implant manufacturers); Keenan v. Superior Court (1980) 111 Cal.App.3d 336, 168 Cal.Rptr. 561; Pesses v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal.App.3d 117, 165 Cal.Rptr. 680 (involving five negligence claims arising from the same crash of a commercial airliner).

The McGhan case is instructive in that the number of breast implant cases was significantly greater ("some 600 cases") than the six coordinated cases before the Napa Court and the one new San Diego case that Plaintiffs seek to coordinate here as an "add on" case. In addition, the issue in McGhan plainly presented a common question to be resolved by the court, that being the liability resulting from each plaintiff having received silicone breast implants. By contrast, these cases are not mass tort-type of cases involving a single product (such as silicone breast implants) or a single occurrence (such as plane crash). Here, the facts in the recently filed San Diego case will differ substantially from the varying facts in each of the six previously coordinated actions. (Again, in the six coordinated actions, there are 10 different Plaintiffs involved, five different alleged perpetrators involved, and six different local congregations involved; there will be distinct and different facts and circumstances concerning when, how, and where the sex abuse of each Plaintiff allegedly occurred; there will be different facts and circumstances involving each alleged perpetrator's relationship with the particular Plaintiff alleging claims against him and each alleged perpetrator's relationship with the local congregation involved; there will be different facts in each case concerning alleged notice to each local congregation of the alleged abuse by the alleged perpetrator in each case; etc.)[7]

As noted, there is only one San Diego case that Plaintiffs' counsel has requested to "add on" to the six previously coordinated cases before the Napa County Court. Adding on just one case alone raises questions about any perceived efficiencies that might be gained by extensive coordination of the present San Diego case with the six previously coordinated cases, particularly with the varied factual differences involved in each case. Coordination will not promote the ends of justice, and Plaintiffs' Petition should be denied.

The bottom line is that extensive coordination of the recently filed San Diego County case with the six coordinated cases before the Napa court will not result in any enhanced judicial efficiencies or judicial economy. Indeed, given that each individual Plaintiff's case will involve different factual settings, different relationships between the alleged perpetrator of the sex abuse and each Plaintiff, different family relationships involved in each Plaintiff's case, lists of different fact or percipient witnesses, etc., the Church Defendants submit that it does not make sense from a judicial efficiency or judicial economy standpoint to coordinate the new San Diego case as an "add on" case.

In addition, as noted above, coordination of these cases for a single unitary trial in one court or one county, as Plaintiffs' counsel proposes anew here, also will not promote the convenience of the witnesses, because enormous logistical problems would be involved in subpoenaing witnesses from San Diego County. Each case will undoubtedly have a large number of local witnesses for each Plaintiff's case. Moreover, as noted in the introduction section of this response, the Church Defendants will stipulate without any need for coordination that written discovery from the two national non-profit religious corporations named as Defendants and depositions of the representatives of those two national non-profit religious corporations be "consolidated". That stipulation plainly can be accomplished without formal or extensive coordination of the recently filed San Diego County case with the six previously coordinated cases.

[7] Of interest, the McGhan court did not include the 60 cases that also alleged medical malpractice in its order -- likely because the facts of each such case were different as in the cases Plaintiffs are asking this Court to consider.

III. CONCLUSION

The Church Defendants have demonstrated that the threshold criteria for coordination of the new San Diego case as an "add on" case, i.e., that there is a common question of fact or law that is predominating, is not present between the six previously coordinated cases and the one (1) new San Diego case that Plaintiffs seek to "add on." The new San Diego case does not involve the same group of Defendants, the San Diego case and its underlying facts are over 500 miles away from the six northern California coordinated cases and involve a different local congregation, different witnesses, and a different alleged perpetrator. Plaintiffs also allege different causes of action against the Defendants in the various cases. (Declaration of Rudy Nolen, p. 3, lns. 9-13). Each Plaintiff's case also will turn on the facts peculiar to that case, including the facts relating to the alleged abuse of each Plaintiff, each Plaintiff's own family circumstances, the differing relationships between each alleged perpetrator and each Plaintiff, each alleged perpetrator's relationship to the local congregation in each case, and the alleged notice to each local congregation regarding each Plaintiff's alleged abuse, etc.

In addition, a single, unified trial like that proposed again by Plaintiffs' counsel would not result in efficient judicial administration or otherwise enhance judicial efficiency, because the recently filed San Diego case is so factually unrelated to the six previously coordinated cases 10 different plaintiffs, five different alleged perpetrators, six different local congregations, the distinct and different facts and factual settings in which the alleged sex abuse occurred, the different relationships between the parties in each particular case, etc.). For those and the other independent reasons discussed herein, Plaintiffs' Petition for Coordination of the San Diego case as an "add on" case should be denied.

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants. AND COORDINATED CASES.	CASE NO: 26-22191 Judicial Council Coordination Proceeding No. 4374 PLAINTIFFS' REPLY TO DEFENDANT'S OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFFS' PETITION TO COORDINATE AN "ADD ON" CASE Date: December 5, 2006 Time: 9:00 a.m. Dept. A Judge: Hon. Raymond A. Guadagni

I. CLARIFICATION OF PLAINTIFF'S POSITION

The main basis of defendant's opposition to plaintiff's petition is based upon a misconception of the purpose of adding the San Diego case to the previously coordinated actions. Plaintiffs are not proposing a "single, unified trial" and are in agreement with the procedure which has been proposed by this Court that this Court handle the coordination of the pretrial aspects of these cases and assign the cases to other counties for trial.

Received
NOV 29 2006

It is the position of plaintiffs that coordinating the recently filed San Diego action with the previously coordinated actions carries out the purposes of California Code of Civil Procedure Section 404.1 and will "promote the ends of justice."

Respectfully submitted,

STIPULATED ORDER EXTENDING CERTAIN DECEMBER 1, 2006 DEADLINES IN TRACK I CASES FOR NON-EXPERT DISCOVERY AND DISPOSITIVE MOTIONS

Plaintiffs and the Church Defendants hereby stipulate to extend (i) the December 1, 2006 deadline in the two Track I cases for non-expert discovery, and (ii) the December 1, 2006 deadline for dispositive motions in the Track I case of Julianne Wimberley Gutierrez, et al, to a future date or dates to be set by the Court at a further Case Management Conference. COME NOW CHARISSA W. AND NICOLE D., Plaintiffs in the above entitled cause, and file this, their Third Amended Complaint, and allege as follows:

I.
PARTIES

1. Plaintiff, CHARISSA W., is a resident of Napa County, California.

2. Plaintiff, NICOLE D., is a resident of Napa County, California.

3. ///

4. Defendant, WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York has appeared herein.

5. Defendant NAPA KINGDOM HALL, now doing business as NAPA CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, has appeared herein.

6. OAK KNOLL CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES , NAPA, CA, INC., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of California, has appeared herein.

7. Plaintiffs allege on information and belief that at all relevant times, defendants DOES 1 through 20 inclusive, are individuals and/or business or corporate entities incorporated in and/or doing business in California.

8. The true names and capacities, whether individual, corporate, associate, or otherwise, of defendants DOES 1 through 20, inclusive, are unknown to Plaintiffs who therefore sue such defendants by such fictitious names, and will amend the amended complaint to show the true names and capacities of each DOE defendant when ascertained. Plaintiffs allege on information and belief that each defendant designated as a DOE is legally responsible in some manner for the events, happenings, and/or tortuous, and unlawful conduct that caused the injuries and damages alleged in this complaint.

9. The Defendant entities are collectively referred to herein as the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS and operate as a single business enterprise.

II.
JURISDICTION AND VENUE

10. Each Plaintiff has been damaged in an amount exceeding the minimum jurisdictional requirements of this Court.

11. Venue is proper in Napa County, California because most of the acts or omissions that give rise to Plaintiffs' claims occurred in Napa County, California and Defendant NAPA KINGDOM HALL now doing business as NAPA CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES and OAK KNOLL CONGREGATION and JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES SILVERADO CONGREGATION are residents of Napa County.

III.
FACTS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

12. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS comprise a hierarchical organization made up of different corporations and other entities. The "Governing Body" establishes policies and dictates practices for Jehovah's Witnesses and operates through various corporate entities, primarily the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

13. Local congregations are led by elders and ministerial servants who are appointed by the Governing Body acting through the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. Local congregations, elders and ministerial servants are agents of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and the Governing Body and are required to obey and follow the rules handed down by those entities.

14. Local congregations, and their elders and ministerial servants are agents of the Governing Body and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. At all times material hereto, NAPA KINGDOM HALL now doing business as NAPA CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES and OAK KNOLL CONGREGATION and JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES SILVERADO CONGREGATION as well as the elders of those congregations, were acting as agents and managing agents of the Governing Body and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., and their wrongful conduct occurred during the course and scope of that agency relationship.

15. Through their rules and policies, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect children in their organization, including Plaintiffs; unfortunately, they negligently failed to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

16. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of the potential for children in the organization to be sexually exploited by appointed leaders, they negligently failed to enact common sense policies to prevent sexual abuse within the organization. For example, they negligently failed to promulgate a policy forbidding unsupervised one-on-one contact between elders or ministerial servants and children.

17. Rather than taking reasonable steps to prevent children from being vulnerable to assault and abuse, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS actually encouraged parents in the congregation to view elders and ministerial servants as persons with whom they could entrust their children's safety. They permitted children to go out on service, alone, with male congregation members; they encouraged children to attend unchaperoned Bible study and book study with adult males and they allowed elders to "counsel" children away from the Kingdom Hall and without any supervision.

18. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to instruct their elders as to what to do when they received allegations of child sexual abuse, but those policies were primarily intended to keep those allegations secret. They promulgated policies and rules directing the elders to call the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Legal Department" for direction about whether to report allegations of sexual abuse to police and law enforcement. However, such policies were designed to prevent cooperation with, if not frustrate, secular investigations. For example, elders were sometimes instructed to make anonymous calls from telephone booths so that law enforcement authorities would be unable to contact them for more information.

19. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated policies and rules requiring local congregations, through their elders, to investigate allegations of child sexual abuse, and prescribing the manner in which such investigation would be conducted. However, those policies had the effect of allowing child molesters to remain in the organization, sheltered from law enforcement, their crimes concealed from other members of the community. For example, the elders were required to apply the "two witness rule," which required allegations of child sexual abuse to be disregarded unless the perpetrator confessed or there were two eye witnesses to the crime. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS enacted procedural and evidentiary rules governing the formation and operation of "judicial committees," comprised of elders, which gathered and considered evidence, questioned witnesses and rendered judgments about what punishment, if any, would be imposed on a child abuser. The elders were forbidden from revealing the results of their investigations to law enforcement authorities or other congregation members.

20. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed the duty to punish organization members who were guilty of child sexual abuse. Since the allegations were usually concealed from secular authorities, the perpetrators often received no punishment except for that meted out by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS. Sometimes the offenders were "disfellowshipped," or expelled from the organization. But other times their punishment was secret; they were "reproved" or placed on "restrictions" so that other congregation members would not know that a dangerous child abuser was in their midst. In either case, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS would usually reinstate a disfellowshipped member or remove his restrictions after a shockingly short period of time. In the interim, the child molester often continued to attend meetings at the Kingdom Hall and members of the congregation were not warned.

21. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' policies, which ostensibly were promulgated to protect children in the organization, emphasized secrecy above all other concerns. Victims of child sexual abuse, and their families, were routinely told not to inform secular authorities. Victims were often discouraged, if not prevented, from obtaining appropriate medical and psychological care or from confiding in their siblings or close friends. Instead, they were instructed to rely on elders for counsel.

22. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS instructed the local congregations and elders to make written reports to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Service Department" about allegations of child sexual abuse leveled against elders, ministerial servants and pioneers, as well as written reports of judicial committee actions concerning child sexual abuse allegations made against any Jehovah's Witness. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have for years maintained files and, more recently, a computerized database containing such information. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to compile this information to protect congregation members and they therefore assumed a duty to utilize this information with reasonable care. However, despite having confidential information that would allow parents, law enforcement authorities and even elders to identify sexual predators and actually take steps to protect children, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently concealed this information from the persons who needed it most urgently and they negligently failed to implement any policies to actually prevent child sexual abuse.

23. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have, at all material times, had the ability to know when a "known pedophile," a term they sometimes use, moves from one congregation to another. However, they have negligently failed to utilize the information they have compiled to monitor the movement of sexual predators through their organization so that appropriate warnings could be issued.

24. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated rules and policies that require the former congregation to write a "letter of introduction" when a member moved to another congregation. However, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to take any steps to ensure that such a letter was actually sent or that the letter contained accurate information and adequate warnings. If a sexual predator moved from a congregation where he was known to be a pedophile, but then moved a second time, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' rules did not even require the first congregation's letter to be passed along to the third congregation.

25. These are but a few examples of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assuming a duty to protect children in the organization but failing to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

26. Edward Villegas was appointed elder by the Governing Body acting through the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. An elder is an agent and managing agent of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., and the Governing Body and the other Watchtower Defendants.

27. An elder is held out by the Watchtower Defendants to be a person of good character and a person one can trust to supervise minor children. Parents within the Watchtower organization are encouraged to view elders as role models for their children. Children within the organization are taught to look up to and respect elders.

28. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that Edward Villegas was a pedophile. Nevertheless, he was appointed elder and allowed to occupy a leadership position in the Jehovah's Witnesses organization.

29. Beginning in approximately 1972, Villegas used the position of trust that his status as elder represented and conferred, to obtain access to Plaintiffs so that he could sexually abuse them. He abused Charissa W. from approximately 1972 to approximately 1985. He abused Nicole D. in approximately 1978.

IV.
FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE

30. Plaintiffs incorporate and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 29 of this Amended Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

31. Plaintiffs allege that at all times herein mentioned, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect Plaintiffs from sexual predators within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization.

32. However, they negligently failed to implement any policies to prevent unsupervised , unchaperoned contact between elders or ministerial servants and children within their congregations; to the contrary, they actually encouraged such contact. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that Plaintiffs were at risk of foreseeable harm by their agent, Edward Villegas, but failed to act to protect them from such harm. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS breached their duty to Plaintiffs, thereby causing them great harm.

33. Despite the fact that the Watchtower Defendants knew or should have known of Villegas' dangerous propensities, they negligently failed to warn Plaintiffs or their families and they negligently permitted him to be alone with children in the congregations including Plaintiffs.

34. As a result of Defendants' negligence, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer psychological trauma, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life.

V.
SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENT APPOINTMENT, RETENTION AND SUPERVISION

35. Plaintiffs incorporate and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 34 of this Amended Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

36. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew, or should have known, of Villegas' dangerous tendencies, they negligently appointed him to the office of elder when they knew or should have known that he would be allowed unsupervised access to minor children in the course and scope of his duties.

37. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to monitor and/or supervise Villegas despite their actual or constructive knowledge that he posed a potential and foreseeable danger to children.

38. As a result of Defendants' negligence, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer psychological trauma, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life.

VI.
THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION
BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

39. Plaintiffs incorporate and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 38 of this Amended Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

40. Plaintiffs allege, at all times mentioned herein, that by assuming the responsibility to protect and care for Plaintiffs, who were young and vulnerable, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS occupied positions of trust and confidence with Plaintiffs and such relationship imposed on them a duty to act to protect Plaintiffs' best interests.

41. Plaintiffs further allege that because of this special relationship, Plaintiffs placed their trust and confidence in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS to protect them from harm and to warn Plaintiffs of potential harm. The conduct described above constituted a breach of the fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiffs by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS.

42. As a result of Defendants' misconduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer psychological trauma, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life.

VII.
PRAYER

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs demand judgment against the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS individually, jointly and severally as follows:

1. For general damages according to proof;

2. For past and future medical expenses according to proof;

3. For past and future loss of earnings according to proof;

4. For prejudgment interest;

5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

6. For such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

10. Plaintiff has been damaged in an amount exceeding the minimum jurisdictional requirements of this Court.

11. Venue is proper in Napa County, California because most of the acts or omissions that give rise to Plaintiff's claims occurred in Napa County, California and Defendant NAPA KINGDOM HALL now doing business as NAPA CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES and OAK KNOLL CONGREGATION and JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES SILVERADO CONGREGATION are residents of Napa County.

III.
FACTS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

12. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS comprise a hierarchical organization made up of different corporations and other entities. The "Governing Body" establishes policies and dictates practices for Jehovah's Witnesses and operates through various corporate entities, primarily the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

13. Local congregations are led by elders and ministerial servants who are appointed by the Governing Body acting through the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. Local congregations, elders and ministerial servants are agents of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and the Governing Body and are required to obey and follow the rules handed down by those entities.

14. Local congregations, and their elders and ministerial servants are agents of the Governing Body and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. At all times material hereto, NAPA KINGDOM HALL now doing business as NAPA CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES and OAK KNOLL CONGREGATION and JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES SILVERADO CONGREGATION as well as the elders of those congregations, were acting as agents and managing agents of the Governing Body and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., and their wrongful conduct occurred during the course and scope of that agency relationship.

15. Through their rules and policies, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect children in their organization, including Plaintiffs; unfortunately, they negligently failed to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

16. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of the potential for children in the organization to be sexually exploited by appointed leaders, they negligently failed to enact common sense policies to prevent sexual abuse within the organization. For example, they negligently failed to promulgate a policy forbidding unsupervised one-on-one contact between elders or ministerial servants and children.

17. Rather than taking reasonable steps to prevent children from being vulnerable to assault and abuse, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS actually encouraged parents in the congregation to view elders and ministerial servants as persons with whom they could entrust their children's safety. They permitted children to go out on service, alone, with male congregation members; they encouraged children to attend unchaperoned Bible study and book study with adult males and they allowed elders to "counsel" children away from the Kingdom Hall and without any supervision.

18. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to instruct their elders as to what to do when they received allegations of child sexual abuse, but those policies were primarily intended to keep those allegations secret. They promulgated policies and rules directing the elders to call the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Legal Department" for direction about whether to report allegations of sexual abuse to police and law enforcement. However, such policies were designed to prevent cooperation with, if not frustrate, secular investigations. For example, elders were sometimes instructed to make anonymous calls from telephone booths so that law enforcement authorities would be unable to contact them for more information.

19. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated policies and rules requiring local congregations, through their elders, to investigate allegations of child sexual abuse, and prescribing the manner in which such investigation would be conducted. However, those policies had the effect of allowing child molesters to remain in the organization, sheltered from law enforcement, their crimes concealed from other members of the community. For example, the elders were required to apply the "two witness rule," which required allegations of child sexual abuse to be disregarded unless the perpetrator confessed or there were two eye witnesses to the crime. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS enacted procedural and evidentiary rules governing the formation and operation of "judicial committees," comprised of elders, which gathered and considered evidence, questioned witnesses and rendered judgments about what punishment, if any, would be imposed on a child abuser. The elders were forbidden from revealing the results of their investigations to law enforcement authorities or other congregation members.

20. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed the duty to punish organization members who were guilty of child sexual abuse. Since the allegations were usually concealed from secular authorities, the perpetrators often received no punishment except for that meted out by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS. Sometimes the offenders were "disfellowshipped," or expelled from the organization. But other times their punishment was secret; they were "reproved" or placed on "restrictions" so that other congregation members would not know that a dangerous child abuser was in their midst. In either case, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS would usually reinstate a disfellowshipped member or remove his restrictions after a shockingly short period of time. In the interim, the child molester often continued to attend meetings at the Kingdom Hall and members of the congregation were not warned.

21. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' policies, which ostensibly were promulgated to protect children in the organization, emphasized secrecy above all other concerns. Victims of child sexual abuse, and their families, were routinely told not to inform secular authorities. Victims were often discouraged, if not prevented, from obtaining appropriate medical and psychological care or from confiding in their siblings or close friends. Instead, they were instructed to rely on elders for counsel.

22. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS instructed the local congregations and elders to make written reports to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Service Department" about allegations of child sexual abuse leveled against elders, ministerial servants and pioneers, as well as written reports of judicial committee actions concerning child sexual abuse allegations made against any Jehovah's Witness. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have for years maintained files and, more recently, a computerized database containing such information. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to compile this information to protect congregation members and they therefore assumed a duty to utilize this information with reasonable care. However, despite having confidential information that would allow parents, law enforcement authorities and even elders to identify sexual predators and actually take steps to protect children, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently concealed this information from the persons who needed it most urgently and they negligently failed to implement any policies to actually prevent child sexual abuse.

23. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have, at all material times, had the ability to know when a "known pedophile," a term they sometimes use, moves from one congregation to another. However, they have negligently failed to utilize the information they have compiled to monitor the movement of sexual predators through their organization so that appropriate warnings could be issued.

24. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated rules and policies that require the former congregation to write a "letter of introduction" when a member moved to another congregation. However, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to take any steps to ensure that such a letter was actually sent or that the letter contained accurate information and adequate warnings. If a sexual predator moved from a congregation where he was known to be a pedophile, but then moved a second time, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' rules did not even require the first congregation's letter to be passed along to the third congregation.

25. These are but a few examples of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assuming a duty to protect children in the organization but failing to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

26. Edward Villegas was appointed elder by the Governing Body acting through the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. An elder is an agent and managing agent of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., and the Governing Body and the other Watchtower Defendants.

27. An elder is held out by the Watchtower Defendants to be a person of good character and a person one can trust to supervise minor children. Parents within the Watchtower organization are encouraged to view elders as role models for their children. Children within the organization are taught to look up to and respect elders.

28. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that Edward Villegas was a pedophile. Nevertheless, he was appointed elder and allowed to occupy a leadership position in the Jehovah's Witnesses organization.

29. Beginning in approximately 1972, Villegas used the position of trust that his status as elder represented and conferred, to obtain access to Plaintiff so that he could sexually abuse her. He abused Tabitha H. from approximately 1977 to 1980.

IV.
FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE

30. Plaintiff incorporates and re-alleges paragraphs 1 through 29 of this Amended Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

31. Plaintiff alleges that at all times herein mentioned, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect Plaintiff from sexual predators within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization.

32. However, they negligently failed to implement any policies to prevent unsupervised , unchaperoned contact between elders or ministerial servants and children within their congregations; to the contrary, they actually encouraged such contact. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that Plaintiff was at risk of foreseeable harm by her agent, Edward Villegas, but failed to act to protect her from such harm. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS breached their duty to Plaintiff, thereby causing her great harm.

33. Despite the fact that the Watchtower Defendants knew or should have known of Villegas' dangerous propensities, they negligently failed to warn Plaintiff or her family and they negligently permitted him to be alone with children in the congregations including Plaintiff.

34. As a result of Defendants' negligence, Plaintiff has suffered, and will continue to suffer psychological trauma, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life.

V.
SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION

NEGLIGENT APPOINTMENT, RETENTION AND SUPERVISION

35. Plaintiff incorporates and re-alleges paragraphs 1 through 34 of this Amended Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

36. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew, or should have known, of Villegas' dangerous tendencies, they negligently appointed him to the office of elder when they knew or should have known that he would be allowed unsupervised access to minor children in the course and scope of his duties.

37. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to monitor and/or supervise Villegas despite their actual or constructive knowledge that he posed a potential and foreseeable danger to children.

38. As a result of Defendants' negligence, Plaintiff has suffered, and will continue to suffer psychological trauma, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life.

VI.
THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION
BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

39. Plaintiff incorporates and re-alleges paragraphs 1 through 38 of this Amended Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

40. Plaintiff alleges, at all times mentioned herein, that by assuming the responsibility to protect and care for Plaintiff, who was young and vulnerable, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiff. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS occupied positions of trust and confidence with Plaintiff and such relationship imposed on them a duty to act to protect Plaintiff's best interests.

41. Plaintiff further alleges that because of this special relationship, Plaintiff placed her trust and confidence in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS to protect her from harm and to warn Plaintiff of potential harm. The conduct described above constituted a breach of the fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiff by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS.

42. As a result of Defendants' misconduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiff has suffered, and will continue to suffer psychological trauma, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life.

VII.
PRAYER

WHEREFORE, Plaintiff demands judgment against the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS individually, jointly and severally as follows:

1. For general damages according to proof;
2. For past and future medical expenses according to proof;
3. For past and future loss of earnings according to proof;
4. For prejudgment interest;
5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and

The "Governing Body" establishes policies and dictates practices for Jehovah's Witnesses and operates through various corporate entities, primarily the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York.

8. Local congregations are led by elders and ministerial servants whom are appointed by the Governing Body acting through the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and are required to obey and follow the rules handed down by those entities.

At all times material hereto, the North Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Red Bluff, CA, Inc. as well as the elders of that congregation, were acting as agents and managing agents of the Governing Body and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., and their wrongful conduct occurred during the course and scope of that agency relationship.

10. Through their rules and policies, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect children in their organization, including Plaintiff; unfortunately, they negligently failed to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

11. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of the potential for children in the organization to be sexually exploited by appointed leaders, they negligently failed to enact common sense policies to prevent sexual abuse within the organization. For example, they negligently failed to promulgate a policy forbidding unsupervised one-on-one contact between elders or ministerial servants and children.

12. Rather than taking reasonable steps to prevent children from being vulnerable to assault and abuse, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS actually encouraged parents in the congregation to view elders and ministerial servants as persons with whom they could entrust their children's safety. They permitted children to go out on service, alone, with male congregation members; they encouraged children to attend unchaperoned Bible study and book study with adult males and they allowed elders to "counsel" children away from the Kingdom Hall and without any supervision.

13. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to instruct their elders as to what to do when they received allegations of child sexual abuse. They promulgated policies and rules directing the elders to call the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Legal Department" for direction about whether to report allegations of sexual abuse to police and law enforcement. However, such policies were designed to prevent cooperation with, if not frustrate, secular investigations. For example, elders were sometimes instructed to make anonymous calls from telephone booths so that law enforcement authorities would be unable to contact them for more information.

14. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated policies and rules requiring local congregations, through their elders, to investigate allegations of child sexual abuse, and prescribing the manner in which such investigation would be conducted. For example, the elders were required to apply the "two witness rule," which required allegations of child sexual abuse to be disregarded unless the perpetrator confessed or there were two eye witnesses to the crime.

15. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS enacted procedural and evidentiary rules governing the formation and operation of "judicial committees," comprised of elders, which gathered and considered evidence, questioned witnesses and rendered judgments about what punishment, if any, would be imposed on a child abuser. The elders were forbidden from revealing the results of their investigations to law enforcement authorities.

16. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed the duty to punish organization members who were guilty of child sexual abuse. Since the allegations were usually concealed from secular authorities, the perpetrators often received no punishment except for that meted out by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS. Sometimes the offenders were "disfellowshipped," or expelled from the organization. But other times their punishment was secret; they were "reproved" or placed on "restrictions" so that other congregation members would not know that a dangerous child abuser was in their midst. In either case, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS would usually reinstate a disfellowshipped member or remove his restrictions after a shockingly short period of time. In the interim, the child molester often continued to attend meetings at the Kingdom Hall and members of the congregation were not warned.

17. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' policies, which ostensibly were promulgated to protect children in the organization, emphasized secrecy above all other concerns. Victims of child sexual abuse, and their families, were routinely told not to inform secular authorities. Victims were often discouraged, if not prevented, from obtaining appropriate medical and psychological care or from confiding in their siblings or close friends. Instead, they were instructed to rely on elders for counsel.

18. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS instructed the local congregations and elders to make written reports to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' "Service Department" about allegations of child sexual abuse leveled against elders, ministerial servants and pioneers, as well as written reports of judicial committee actions concerning child sexual abuse allegations made against any Jehovah's Witness. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have for years maintained files and, more recently, a computerized database containing such information. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS undertook the responsibility to compile this information to protect congregation members and they therefore assumed a duty to utilize this information with reasonable care. However, despite having confidential information that would allow parents, law enforcement authorities and even elders to identify sexual predators and actually take steps to protect children, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently concealed this information from the persons who needed it most urgently and they negligently failed to implement any policies to actually prevent child sexual abuse.

19. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have, at all material times, had the ability to know when a "known pedophile," a term they sometimes use, moves from one congregation to another. However, they have negligently failed to utilize the information they have compiled to monitor the movement of sexual predators through their organization so that appropriate warnings could be issued.

20. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS promulgated rules and policies that require the former congregation to write a "letter of introduction" when a member moved to another congregation. However, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently failed to take any steps to ensure that such a letter was actually sent or that the letter contained accurate information and adequate warnings. If a sexual predator moved from a congregation where he was known to be a pedophile, but then moved a second time, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' rules did not even require the first congregation's letter to be passed along to the third congregation.

21. These are but a few examples of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assuming a duty to protect children in the organization but failing to exercise reasonable care in fulfilling that duty.

22. The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., had actual knowledge that James Henderson was a sexual predator since at least 1964. Yet, for the better part of three decades, they appointed and re-appointed him to the positions of elder and ministerial servant. They also permitted him to move from congregation to congregation, committing acts of sexual perversion and abuse, acts which were reported, again and again, to various Jehovah's Witnesses entities.

23. On July 13, 1964, the Clearlake Highlands Congregation wrote the Service Department of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., describing an incident in which Henderson had sodomized another congregation member who had passed out from intoxication. The letter quoted Henderson, who had occupied appointed positions in the congregation since 1962, as telling the victim that he had "done it only once before."

24. The letter, which actually sought counsel about whether to disfellowship Henderson's victim for having an extramarital, heterosexual affair, was received by Merton Victor Campbell, the service department "desk man" in charge of California. As a desk man, Campbell was responsible for providing advice to congregations, including, occasionally, direction as to whether a member should be disfellowshipped. He also had been delegated the authority to appoint elders and ministerial servants. He was a managing agent of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc.

25. Campbell recognized that Henderson was a danger to others in the congregation. Nevertheless, eight years later, Campbell, acting as an agent and managing agent of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. and the Governing Body, appointed Henderson to the positions of congregation servant, then elder and field overseer in the Ukiah, California Congregation.

26. Since at least the mid-1960's, congregations have sent letters of introduction, as described above, when a member moves to a new congregation, and those letter were supposed to describe any accusations of serious offenses, such as child sexual abuse. Thus, according to the policies of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, the Ukiah Congregation would have been advised about Henderson's past.

27. From Ukiah, Henderson moved to Yuba City where he was again appointed elder. He was removed from that position in about 1974 after he confessed to a judicial committee that he had "done some perverted things with two young men." Even his wife was not told the reason he was reproved. The Jehovah's Witnesses' practice was, and remains, that members can be disciplined secretly and even their spouses are not told the reason. However, according to the policies of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, the service department would have received a report.

28. Henderson moved on to another congregation and, if the Watchtower Defendants' policies were followed, a letter of introduction followed him. At some point during the 1970's, Henderson was again reproved and removed from his position of elder or ministerial servant by a congregation in the Marysville, California area for sexual abuse. Another report would have been made to headquarters.

29. On January 21, 1981, The Upper Lake Congregation wrote a letter of introduction for Henderson to the Red Bluff Congregation stating, among other things, that Upper Lake had considered appointing him to be a ministerial servant. It mentioned nothing about his criminal past.

30. On November 23, 1988, Henderson, by then an elder in Red Bluff North, was appointed to be Red Bluff City Overseer. At about the same time, an elder or ministerial servant from the Red Bluff South Congregation received and ignored a report that Henderson had molested a young boy at Henderson' place of employment.

31. On October 20, 1992, a young man called an elder at the Red Bluff congregation and told him that he had been molested by Henderson. He also told the elder that Henderson had signed a confession admitting to abusing him and others. He offered to meet with the elder and give him a copy of the confession. The elder rejected the offer and told him not to contact him again.

32. After another Henderson victim went to the police in 1994, Henderson confessed to elder Bodie Lyon that he had committed child sexual abuse. Once again, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS attempted to deal with Henderson with a slap on the wrist-reproval–until information about other victims, including Plaintiff, was brought to their attention and, more importantly, the attention of the Red Bluff police. Finally, Henderson was disfellowshipped.

33. Thus, at least five times, between 1963 and 1993, when Henderson's abuse of Tim Ward began, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS received reports that Henderson had committed a sexual crime.

34. Beginning in 1993, thirty years after the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS first had actual, incontrovertible knowledge that James Henderson was a dangerous sexual predator, they negligently allowed him unsupervised access to Plaintiff, Tim W. Predictably, he exploited the confidence and respectability that his status as elder and city overseer conferred and began to prey upon Tim W. The abuse continued until 1994.

35. By repeatedly appointing Henderson to serve as an elder and permitting him to remain in that position, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS put him in a position of trust and confidence vis-à-vis his congregation. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew that congregation members would view him as being worthy of their trust and that they would feel comfortable entrusting him with their children's safety. Likewise, the children in the congregation were taught that they could trust elders and ministerial servants such as Henderson.

36. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS intentionally concealed a material fact from Plaintiff Tim W. and his mother. They withheld the knowledge that Henderson had been, for at least three decades, a sexual predator whose conduct they tolerated and covered up and thus aided and abetted. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS concealed this information because they valued secrecy above the rights and safety of children in the congregation. They thus concealed this material fact with the intention of depriving Tim W. and others of their legal right to be safe.

IV.
FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE

37. Plaintiff incorporates and re-alleges paragraphs 1 through 36 of this Amended Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

38. Plaintiff alleges that at all times herein mentioned, WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect Plaintiff from sexual predators within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization.

41. Despite the fact that the Watchtower Defendants knew or should have known of Henderson's history of pedophilia, they negligently failed to warn Plaintiff or his family of Henderson's history of sexually abusing children and actually conceded those facts.

42. Despite the fact that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew, or should have known, of Henderson's history of pedophilia, they negligently permitted him to be alone with children in the congregations including Plaintiff.

Note from Barbara Anderson

By request of the Superior Court in Napa County, the following thirteen pages are deleted. The thirteen deleted pages contain settlement details.

The court's request is documented in a letter dated June 27, 2007 from Stephen A. Bouch, Court Executive Officer of the Superior Court of California, County of Napa. A copy of Mr. Bouch's letter follows the thirteen deleted pages. This letter should not be confused as being part of the Charissa et al coordinated lawsuits' case file. Mr. Bouch's letter was issued post-lawsuit settlement/dismissal as a result of the court releasing documents Mr. Bouch says should have been sealed.

Researchers are left to consider contemporary settlements in child abuse lawsuits against religious organizations. For example, in 2003 the Catholic Archdiocese of Seattle settled child abuse lawsuits against it for an average of about $500,000 per plaintiff. In 2007 the Rockford Diocese settled sexual abuse cases with victims receiving a little over $1,000,000 each.

Disclaimer: There was approximately a ten (10) day span between the Napa court sending these documents and its subsequent request for their deletion. During this period several copies were distributed to several individuals and organizations. This author has no control over how these documents might be used.
