SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants.	Case No.: 26-22191 (lead case) JCCP No. 4374 MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF CHURCH DEFENDANTS' MOTIONS TO STRIKE PORTIONS OF COMPLAINTS IN COORDINATED CASES Date: TBA 2-28-05 Time: TBA 8:30 A.M Dept: B Trial Dates: Not yet set
AND COORDINATED CASES

Defendants WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC. ("WTNY"), WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA ("Watch Tower PA"), CHRISTIAN CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES ("CCJW"), and the various congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses named as defendants in these coordinated cases (collectively the "Church Defendants"),[1] through their attorneys of record,

[1] This appearance is not made on behalf of any individual defendants in these coordinated cases. Additionally, Defendant Watch Tower PA only makes a special appearance herein, pending this Court's resolution of its previously filed motions to quash service for lack of personal jurisdiction in the coordinated cases.

submit this memorandum of points and authorities in support of Church Defendants' motions to strike portions of plaintiffs' complaints in each of the coordinated cases.[2]

PLAINTIFFS' COMPLAINTS

The alleged facts in these coordinated cases relevant to the motions to strike are straightforward. These cases concern sexual abuse allegedly committed by an individual defendant against each plaintiff. (Each plaintiff alleges that only one person allegedly abused him or her, and each individual defendant has been sued in only one or two cases.) The complaints generally allege that the alleged abusers were each in an appointed position with a local congregation when the abuse occurred.

Plaintiffs each essentially allege nine causes of action against the Church Defendants. Each of the causes of action is based on and related to: (1) the underlying alleged sexual abuse of each plaintiff by an individual defendant; (2) the Church Defendants' alleged failure to report that abuse, and/or to prevent, protect, or warn each plaintiff about the alleged abuser's claimed propensity toward child abuse; and, (3) the Church Defendants' internal policies, procedures, and actions regarding childhood sexual abuse.

However, each of the operative complaints in the coordinated cases also contains allegations outside the subject matter jurisdiction of this Court. The areas challenged by these motions to strike in each of the coordinated cases include the language in each complaint that describes: (1) the propriety of the ecclesiastical discipline rendered to the alleged abuser in each case; (2) the existence of a conspiracy between and among the corporate Church Defendants, which plaintiffs uniformly allege constitute a single business enterprise; (3) the proposed causes of action for negligent appointment and negligent retention of a minister by a religious organization; and (4) references to the Church Defendants' alleged failure to report alleged child abuse to law enforcement or other government agencies.

As set forth more fully below, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' motions to strike the language of each of the complaints in these coordinated cases that concerns these four issues. By doing so, the Court will properly simplify the complaints in each case and appropriately reduce the number of outstanding issues in these matters.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Any party may move to strike any type of pleading, including a complaint. CCP §435(b)(1). A motion to strike may be directed toward an entire pleading or any part thereof. Id. Thus, a motion to strike may be brought against a portion of a cause of action, a phrase, or even a single word.

The purpose of a motion to strike is to eliminate any "irrelevant, false, or improper matter inserted in any pleading." CCP §436(a). "Immaterial allegation[s]" or "irrelevant" matter, as used in the context of motions to strike, means allegations not essential to the statement of a claim or defense, CCP §431.10(b)(1), or allegations "neither pertinent to nor supported by an otherwise sufficient claim or defense." CCP §431.10(b)(2).

Finally, because "[a] demurrer does not lie to a portion of a cause of action," a defendant must use a motion to strike when challenging only part of a stated cause of action. PH II, Inc. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal.App.4th 1680, 1682, 40 Cal.Rptr.2d 169, 171 ("We conclude that when a substantive defect is clear from the face of a complaint … a defendant may attack that portion of the cause of action by filing a motion to strike").

ARGUMENT

I. The References To Ecclesiastical Discipline And Standing In The Church Should Be Struck As "Irrelevant Matter" Inserted Into The Pleadings.

The complaint in each of the coordinated cases contains various references to the alleged inadequacy of the ecclesiastical discipline administered to the individual defendant or alleged abuser by the Church Defendants. By way of example, in the coordinated case of Javier C. v. Watchtower New York, et al, Placer County Superior Court no. SCV16723, the complaint refers to "Defendant Carlos Vasquez, who remained in good standing at all times mentioned herein," Complaint, ¶ 60, lns. 27-28; "Defendant Carlos Vasquez was a member in good standing," Id., ¶ 60, lns. 4-5; "Defendant Carlos Vasquez as a member in good standing," Id., ¶ 61, lns. 15-16; "member in good standing," Id., ¶ 62, ln. 25; "Defendant Carlos Vasquez was [a] member in good standing," Id., ¶ 63, ln. 2; "Defendant Carlos Vasquez … as a member in good standing," Id., ¶ 64, lns. 5-6; "Defendant Carlos Vasquez … [was] in good standing … to be a member in good standing," Id., ¶ 74, lns. 24-26; and "appointed agent who they held out to be in good standing," Id., ¶ 78, lns. 18-19. Finally, the complaint in Javier C. also alleges that "[t]he [Church] Defendants failed to take appropriate steps to hold their agent, Carlos Vasquez, accountable for his conduct or to assist him in addressing his propensities." Id., ¶ 27, lns. 12-14. Very similar allegations are made in the complaints in each of the other coordinated cases. See the concurrently filed Notice of Church Defendants' Motions to Strike.

Again using the Javier C. case as an example, the question of whether or not Mr. Vasquez was, or should have been, a "member in good standing" in the Church Defendants' religion is an issue beyond the jurisdiction of this secular Court. Only an ecclesiastical tribunal may determine whether one of its members was in "good standing" or not. Could we imagine a civil tribunal or secular court finding or holding otherwise, i.e., that an individual should have been considered a member in "bad standing" (or some other category of "standing") according to the scriptural standards set forth by the Bible or as interpreted by a religious organization?

The California Supreme Court recently reiterated that state courts do not have subject matter jurisdiction over religious matters. As the Court stated:

> "[W]henever ... questions of discipline, or of faith, or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law have been decided by the highest of [the] church judicatories to which the matter has been carried, the legal tribunals must accept such decisions as final, and as binding on them, in their application to the case before them." [Citation.]

Catholic Charities of Sacramento, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 32 Cal.4th 527, 10 Cal.Rptr.3d 283, 294 (emphasis added). Furthermore, the Supreme Court warned: "Courts have no expertise in religious matters, and courts 'so unwise' as to attempt to decide them 'would only involve themselves in a sea of uncertainty and doubt....' [Citation]." Id.

In Paul v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 819 F.2d 875, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that courts cannot constitutionally second-guess matters of religious discipline. In Paul, a former disassociated member of the Jehovah's Witnesses brought an action against the church entities for "shunning" her. The court concluded:

> "Courts generally do not scrutinize closely the relationship among members (or former members) of a church. Churches are afforded great latitude when they impose discipline on members or former members. We agree with Justice Jackson's view that '[r]eligious activities which concern only members of the faith are and ought to be free--as nearly absolutely free as anything can be.' Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 177, 64 S.Ct. 438, 445, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944) (concurring)."

Paul, 819 F.2d at 883 (emphasis added). Thus, the Church Defendants' practices of religious discipline in Paul were upheld under both the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and the Washington state constitution. Id.

In these coordinated cases, and again using the Javier C. case by way of example, regardless of what type of ecclesiastical discipline was administered to Mr. Vasquez by one or more of the Church Defendants, this Court cannot constitutionally second-guess the discipline rendered. Thus, whether or not Vasquez "remained a member in good standing," as alleged by the complaint, is a purely religious matter protected from scrutiny of the civil courts by the federal and state constitutions. U.S. Const. amend. 1; Cal. Const. art. 1, § 4.

Alternatively, this Court does not have to reach the constitutional issues raised in Catholic Charities of Sacramento and Paul because the propriety of the discipline rendered to Vasquez and the other individual defendants or alleged abusers is not relevant to these cases. The challenged allegations are neither essential nor pertinent to any of the claims alleged in the plaintiffs' complaints. CCP §§ 431.10(b)(1), (2).

Thus, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' motions to strike the language cited in the Notice of Church Defendants' Motions to Strike concerning ecclesiastical discipline and standing.

II. The Allegations Concerning Conspiracy Should Be Struck As "Irrelevant Matter" Inserted Into The Pleadings.

The complaint in each of the coordinated cases alleges a cause of action for conspiracy, but also contains several other references to an alleged "conspiracy" among and between the Church Defendants. While the Church Defendants have demurred to the causes of action alleging conspiracy, they move herein to strike the other "conspiracy" references found in the complaints.

Again by way of example, the complaint in the Javier C. case contains the following references to an alleged "conspiracy" between and among the Church Defendants:

> The Defendant entities are collectively referred to herein as the "Watchtower [Church] Defendants" and each is the agent, servant and alter ego of each other and operates as a single business enterprise. Each Defendant was acting within the scope and course of his or its authority as an agent, servant, and/or alter ego of the other and each of them engaged in, joined in and conspired with the other wrongdoers in carrying out the unlawful activities alleged in this complaint.

Complaint, ¶ 9, lns. 8-13; see also "conspiracy of concealment," Id. At ¶ 19, ln. 25; "conspiracy to conceal the sexual molestation," Id. at ¶ 25, ln. 18; "conspire to cover-up," Id. at ¶ 31, ln. 1; and "conspire to conceal," Id. at ¶ 62, ln. 27. Very similar allegations are made in the complaints in each of the other coordinated cases. See the concurrently filed Notice of Church Defendants' Motions to Strike.

The references to conspiracy should be struck because under California law, "agents and employees cannot be held liable for conspiring with their own principals" under the "agent's immunity rule." Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal.4th 503, 512, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 479. The agent's immunity rule provides: "Agents and employees of a corporation cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer where they act in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation and not as individuals for their individual advantage." Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal.App.2d 50, 72, 35 Cal.Rptr. 652, 665.

The rule "derives from the principle that ordinarily corporate agents and employees acting for and on behalf of the corporation cannot be held liable for inducing a breach of the corporation's contract since being in a confidential relationship to the corporation their action in this respect is privileged." Id., 223 Cal.App.2d at 72-73, 35 Cal.Rptr. at 665. The California Supreme Court has "endorsed and applied" the agent's immunity rule. Applied Equip. Corp., 7 Cal.4th at 512 n.4, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d at 479 n.4.

Again using the Javier C. case as an example, the complaint there alleges that the Church Defendants are operating as the "agent, servant and alter ego of each other" and as a "single business enterprise." Complaint, ¶ 9, lns. 9-10. Also, each of the Church Defendants is alleged to have acted within the "scope and course" of its authority as an "agent, servant, and/or alter ego of the other and each of them" when they allegedly "conspired" to commit the activities in the complaint. Id., ¶ 9, lns. 11-13. Thus, the complaint in Javier C. and the complaints in the other coordinated cases allege that the Church Defendants essentially function as a single corporation.

While the Church Defendants dispute that characterization, if those allegations are presumed to be true, as the Court must consider them for these motions to strike, it would mean that the church allegedly conspired with itself, a conclusion barred as a matter of law by the agent's immunity rule. As the Court of Appeal stated, "[a]gents and employees of a corporation cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer where they act in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation." Wise, 223 Cal.App.2d at 72, 35 Cal.Rptr. at 665.

Thus, as pled by plaintiffs, an allegation of "conspiracy" made against them is superfluous and legally immaterial under the agent's immunity rule. For these reasons, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' motions to strike the references to "conspiracy" contained in each of the complaints.

III. The Negligent Appointment And Negligent Retention Allegations Should Be Struck From The Complaints For Failure To State A Claim.

Each complaint in the coordinated cases pleads a cause of action against the Church Defendants for "negligent appointment, retention, and supervision." However, this Court should strike the language concerning negligent appointment and negligent retention for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Because a "demurrer does not lie to a portion of a cause of action," these two unconstitutional allegations must be addressed by a motion to strike. PH II, supra, 33 Cal.App.4th at 1682, 40 Cal.Rptr.2d at 171.[3]

Again using the Javier C. case by way of example, the third cause of action in the complaint alleges that the Church Defendants improperly appointed and retained Vasquez. For example, the complaint states that "[t]he [Church] Defendants failed to adequately investigate, evaluate, and otherwise research the background of their agent, Carlos Vasquez, prior to appointing him to leadership positions [in the church] and entrusting children to his care." Complaint, ¶ 37, lns. 10-12 (emphasis added). Further, the complaint alleges that the Church Defendants negligently "appointed, retained" Vasquez. Complaint, ¶ 40, lns. 22-23; see also Id., at ¶ 28(h) ("negligently retaining" Vasquez). The complaint also makes general allegations about appointment: "[Church] Defendants acted to continue to appoint these sexual offenders to positions of authority." Id., ¶ 18, ln. 9.

The Church Defendants adamantly dispute those allegations. However, the causes of action for negligent appointment and negligent retention cannot be brought against a religious entity as a matter of law. Both the federal and California constitutions prohibit a civil tribunal from determining what standards a religious organization should use to appoint, retain, or remove a minister.

The Supreme Court of the United States long ago established that civil courts cannot interfere with the appointment or hiring decisions of a church. In Gonzalez v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (1929) 280 U.S. 1, the Court stated:

> Because the appointment is a canonical act, it is the function of the church authorities to determine what the essential qualifications of a chaplain are and whether the candidate possesses them. In the absence of fraud, collusion, or arbitrariness, the decisions of the proper church tribunals on matters purely ecclesiastical, although affecting civil rights, are accepted in litigation before the secular courts as conclusive, because the parties in interest made them so by contract or otherwise. Under like circumstances, effect is given in the courts to the determinations of the judicatory bodies established by clubs and civil associations.

Id. at 16-17. Furthermore, the Court added in Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of Russian Orthodox Church (1952) 344 U.S. 94, that "[f]reedom to select the clergy ... must now be said to have federal constitutional protection as a part of the free exercise of religion against state interference." Id. at 116 (emphasis added).

California is in accord with this position. In Schmoll v. Chapman Univ. (1999) 70 Cal.App.4th 1434, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 426, the Court of Appeal prohibited the imposition of civil restrictions on the hiring or firing practices of churches. In a "case of first impression," the Court of Appeal stated:

> It is irrelevant whether the action involves hiring, firing or discipline or simply changes the terms and conditions of the employment. The rule is about as absolute as a rule of law can be: The First Amendment guarantees to a religious institution the right to decide matters affecting its ministers' employment, free from the scrutiny and second-guessing of the civil courts.

70 Cal.App.4th at 1436, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d at 427 (emphasis added). As the Court of Appeal stated, the "rule is about as absolute as a rule of law can be," religious institutions have a First Amendment right to make their own decisions, free from civil interference, about who qualifies to serve or remain as a minister.

As the foregoing cases make clear, the question of who becomes or remains a minister in a religious organization is an ecclesiastical matter in which courts may not interfere. Because the appointment process is a "canonical act," churches alone may decide "what the essential qualifications of a chaplain are and whether the candidate possesses them." Gonzalez, 280 U.S. at 16. Also, the Church Defendants alone may decide matters affecting the "hiring, firing or discipline" of their ministers "free from the scrutiny and second-guessing of the civil courts." Schmoll, 70 Cal.App.4th at 1436, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d at 427. Any civil limitations imposed by law on a religious organization for the acts of appointment or retention of a minister face a steep constitutional burden.

Because a civil tribunal is constitutionally not permitted to impose standards for the appointment or retention of religious ministers on a religious organization, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' motions to strike the language cited in the Notice of Church Defendants' Motions to Strike concerning negligent appointment and retention.

IV. The Allegations Concerning The Church Defendants' Failure To Report Should Be Struck As Irrelevant Matter and For Failure To State A Claim.

Some of the complaints in these coordinated cases make various allegations regarding the Church Defendants' failure to report the alleged abuse to law enforcement officials. For example, the complaint in the case of Jocelyn A., et al v. Watchtower New York, et al, Sonoma County Superior Court no. 234320, states that the Church Defendants "fail[ed] to properly report complaints of sexual misconduct to law enforcement authorities," Complaint, ¶ 23, lns. 23-24; "chose not to report the abuse to law enforcement authorities," Id., ¶ 34, lns. 15, 15; "refus[ed] to report such sexual abuse ... to law enforcement and governmental child welfare agencies," Id., ¶ 35, lns. 1, 2. The complaints in the other coordinated cases contain similar allegations of alleged failure to report. See the concurrently filed Notice of Church Defendants Motion to Strike.

These allegations should be struck for three reasons: 1) the corporate Church Defendants, if considered to be clergy, were under no duty to report the alleged abuse at the time it took place under the reporting statute (California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act ("CANRA"), Calif. Penal Code §§ 11164-74); 2) no California court has ever allowed a civil cause of action against a church for its failure to report alleged child abuse; and, in any event, 3) church entities and religious corporations simply are not mandated reporters under CANRA.

In 1963, under former Penal Code § 11161.5 (i.e., CANRA), the mandatory reporting obligations were applicable only to physicians and surgeons. Stecks v. Young (1995) 38 Cal.App.4th 365, 370-71, 45 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 477. In 1996, the Legislature amended CANRA to add "clergy members" to the list of mandated reporters. Stats.1996, ch. 1081, § 3.5, codified at Penal Code § 11165.7(a)(32). That amendment became effective, as a matter of law, on January 1, 1997.

In the Jocelyn A. case, for example, the complaint alleges that plaintiffs were born on March 3, 1987, April 20, 1985, February 6, 1982, and November 16, 1978, respectively, and that the abuse took place between 1985 and 1989. Complaint, ¶¶ 1-4 and 28-31. Even assuming, arguendo, the allegations of the Jocelyn A. complaint are true, the corporate Church Defendants, assuming they fall within the definition of "clergy member[s]" in CANRA, then had no duty to report under CANRA; instead, that duty was first imposed upon "clergy member[s]" some eight to twelve years later, in 1997.

Furthermore, even if, arguendo, a statutory duty to report was somehow imposed on the Church Defendants before 1997, no California court has ever held that CANRA creates a private right of action to sue for damages resulting from a failure to report. As the Court of Appeal has stated:

> Adoption of a regulatory statute does not automatically create a private right to sue for damages resulting from violations of the statute. Such a private right of action exists only if the language of the statute or its legislative history clearly indicates the Legislature intended to create such a right to sue for damages. If the Legislature intends to create a private cause of action, we generally assume it will do so "directly [,] ... in clear, understandable, unmistakable terms...."

Vikco Ins. Serv., Inc. v. Ohio Indem. Co. (1999) 70 Cal.App.4th 55, 62-63 (citations omitted) (emphasis in original).

Moreover, because CANRA and its predecessors have been repeatedly amended, "if the Legislature had intended to create such a private action, it would have done so by clear and direct language." Schaefer v. Williams (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 1243, 1248, 19 Cal.Rptr.2d 212 (citations omitted); C.C.P. § 1858 (when interpreting statutes, court is "to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted").

Finally with respect to the failure to report allegations, and just as significantly, church entities and religious corporations are not mandated reporters under CANRA. Those persons who are mandated reporters under CANRA are listed in Penal Code § 11165.7(a), and "clergy member[s]" are listed as mandated reporters at sub-section (a)(32). The definition of "clergy member" in sub-section (a)(32) as a mandated reporter "means a priest, minister, rabbi, religious practitioner, or similar functionary of a church, temple, or recognized denomination or organization." That definition refers only to individuals and does not include church entities or religious corporations as mandated reporters. Here, plaintiffs expressly plead in each of the coordinated cases that the Church Defendants are each a corporation and thus, as a matter of law, they do not qualify as mandated reporters under CANRA and Penal Code § 11165.7(a).

Because the Church Defendants were not required to report by CANRA, because no private cause of action exists for alleged violations of CANRA, and because the Church Defendants do not qualify as mandated reporters under CANRA, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' motions to strike the language concerning a failure to report contained in the complaints in these coordinated cases, as cited in the Notice of Church Defendants' Motions to Strike.

CONCLUSION

For each of the reasons set forth above, this Court should grant Church Defendants' motions to strike the allegations in each of the coordinated cases concerning: (1) ecclesiastical discipline; (2) conspiracy; (3) negligent appointment and retention; and (4) references to the Church Defendants' alleged failure to report alleged child abuse that are set forth in the complaints.

of points and authorities in support of the Church Defendants' demurrers against plaintiffs' currently operative complaints in each of the coordinated cases.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

For the purposes of a demurrer, "the rule is that we accept as true all the material allegations of the complaint." Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal.3d 1, 7, 276 Cal.Rptr. 303, 305. The Court thus treats a demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions, or conclusions of fact or law. Demurrers do not test the truth of a plaintiff's allegations or the accuracy with which they describe a defendant's alleged conduct. E.g., Baltins v. James (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 1193, 1196-97, 42 Cal.Rptr.2d 896, 898.

ARGUMENT

I. Church Defendants Cannot Be Held Vicariously Liable For The Alleged Sexual Battery Committed By An Individual Defendant, So The Cause of Action For Sexual Battery Is Thus Subject To Demurrer Under CCP § 430.10(e).

It is well settled in California that employees or agents who commit sexual assaults, apart from police officers in certain situations, act outside the scope of their employment or agency as a matter of law. Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal.3d 202, 218 n. 11, 285 Cal.Rptr. 99, 108 n.11. Thus, in "an action against a religious institution based on allegations of childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by one of its clergy [,] ... the abuse is committed outside the scope of the cleric's employment [and] the doctrine of respondeat superior is not available." Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609, 79 Cal.Rptr.2d 73, 77; see also Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, 283 n.15, 130 Cal.Rptr.2d 601, 619 n. 15.

By way of example in these coordinated cases, the complaint in Javier C. v. Watchtower New York, et al., Placer County Superior Court no. SCV 16723, alleges that defendant Vasquez sexually abused plaintiff. Complaint, ¶ 23; see also Civil Code § 1708.5. Accordingly, the First Cause of Action for "sexual battery" was pled against defendant Vasquez. Complaint, ¶ 30. But the complaint also alleges that each of the Church Defendants "was in the chain of command and acted pursuant to the authority granted to them as agents and alter ego of the Governing Body and each other, [and] utilized such leadership and authority to carry out and/or aid, abet, ratify, cover-up, and conspire to cover-up the sexual abuse of plaintiff by Defendant Carlos Vasquez." Complaint, ¶ 31. Thus, it appears that plaintiff in Javier C. (and the other coordinated cases) is alleging that the Church Defendants are vicariously liable for the "sexual battery" allegedly committed by defendant Vasquez.

However, as a matter of law, a religious organization cannot be held vicariously liable for sexual battery committed by one of its ministers or agents, because such sexual battery is outside of the scope of the minister's employment or agency. Mark K., 67 Cal.App.4th at 609, 79 Cal.Rptr.2d at 77. Thus, this Court should dismiss with prejudice the sexual battery cause of action apparently pled against the Church Defendants in eight of the coordinated cases.

II. The Conspiracy Cause of Action Is Subject To Demurrer Under CCP § 430.10(e) Because It Is Not Recognized As A Separate Cause Of Action In California And Because, As Pled By Plaintiffs In Their Complaints, The Agent's Immunity Rule Precludes A Conspiracy Claim.

Plaintiffs have pled a cause of action for conspiracy in each of the coordinated cases. However, conspiracy itself is not a separate cause of action in California. Rather, it is a theory of vicarious liability under which certain defendants may be held liable for torts committed by others.

The California Supreme Court has stated: "Conspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration." Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal.4th 503, 510-511, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 478; see also Kasparian v. County of Los Angeles (1995) 38 Cal.App.4th 242, 263, 45 Cal.Rptr.2d 90, 101. This is not a new concept, because the California Supreme Court has adopted this position for at least the last 140 years. Herron v. Hughes (1864) 25 Cal. 555, 560 ("A simple conspiracy, however atrocious, unless it results in actual damage to the party, never was the subject of a civil action.").

In addition, the conspiracy cause of action fails under California law because, as pled by plaintiffs in each of the coordinated cases, "agents and employees cannot be held liable for conspiring with their own principals" under the "agent's immunity rule." Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 Cal.4th 503, 512, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 479. The agent's immunity rule provides: "Agents and employees of a corporation cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer where they act in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation and not as individuals for their individual advantage." Wise v. Southern Pacific Co. (1963) 223 Cal.App.2d 50, 72, 35 Cal.Rptr. 652, 665.

The rule "derives from the principle that ordinarily corporate agents and employees acting for and on behalf of the corporation cannot be held liable for inducing a breach of the corporation's contract since being in a confidential relationship to the corporation their action in this respect is privileged." Id., 223 Cal.App.2d at 72-73, 35 Cal.Rptr. at 665. The California Supreme Court has "endorsed and applied" the agent's immunity rule. Applied Equip. Corp., 7 Cal.4th at 512 n.4, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d at 479 n.4.

By way of example, the complaint in the Javier C. case alleges that the Church Defendants are operating as the "agent, servant and alter ego of each other" and as a "single business enterprise." Complaint, ¶ 9, lns. 9-10. The complaint in Javier C. further alleges that each of the Church Defendants acted within the "scope and course" of its authority as an "agent, servant, and/or alter ego of the other and each of them" when they allegedly "conspired" to commit the activities in the complaint. Id., ¶ 9, lns. 11-13. Thus, the complaint in Javier C. (and the complaints in the other coordinated cases) alleges that the Church Defendants essentially function as a single corporation.

While the Church Defendants dispute that characterization, if those allegations are presumed to be true, as the Court must consider them for these demurrers, it would mean that the church allegedly conspired with itself, a conclusion barred by the agent's immunity rule. As the Court of Appeal stated, "[a]gents and employees of a corporation cannot conspire with their corporate principal or employer where they act in their official capacities on behalf of the corporation." Wise, 223 Cal.App.2d at 72, 35 Cal.Rptr. at 665.

Thus, as pled by plaintiffs, the allegations of "conspiracy" alleged against the Church Defendants in the conspiracy cause of action are superfluous and legally immaterial under the agent's immunity rule. For these reasons also, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrers to the conspiracy cause of action alleged in each of the complaints.

III. The Fraud Causes Of Action Fail To Meet The Strict Pleading Requirements For Alleging Fraud Claims Against Corporate Entities And Are Thus Subject to Demurrer Under CCP § 430.10(e).

Plaintiffs in each of the coordinated cases allege causes of action based on the tort of fraud. The Civil Code defines several types of actual fraud:

> A deceit [fraud] ... is either: 1. The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who does not believe it to be true; 2. The assertion, as a fact, of that which is not true, by one who has no reasonable ground for believing it to be true; 3. The > suppression of a fact, by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact ....

Civil Code §§ 1710(1)-(3). Plaintiffs allege two separate species of fraud, one for intentional misrepresentation, see Civil Code § 1710(1), and the other for fraudulent concealment. See Civil Code § 1710(3). However, those causes of action have not been pled here with the specificity required by California law and are thus subject to demurrer.

The common law elements of fraud have been long established and include: "(1) misrepresentation of a material fact (consisting of false representation, concealment or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of falsity (scienter); (3) intent to deceive and induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance on the misrepresentation; and (5) resulting damage." City of Atascadero v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith (1998) 68 Cal.App.4th 445, 481, 80 Cal.Rptr.2d 329, 354; Gonsalves v. Hodgson (1951) 38 Cal.2d 91, 100-01, 237 P.2d 656, 662.

Fraud actions are subject to a stricter pleading standard than other actions: "In California, fraud must be pled specifically; general and conclusory allegations do not suffice." Lazar v. Superior Court of Los Angeles (1996) 12 Cal.4th 631, 645, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d 377, 385. The reason for the strict pleading requirements for allegations of fraud is that such allegations "'involve a serious attack on character, and fairness to the defendant demands that he should receive the fullest possible details of the charge in order to prepare his defense.' [Citation.]" Committee on Children's Television, Inc. v. General Foods Corp. (1983) 35 Cal.3d 197, 216, 197 Cal.Rptr. 783, 795. Indeed, the pleading of fraud is the "last remaining habitat of the common law notion that a complaint should be sufficiently specific that the court can weed out nonmeritorious actions on the basis of the pleadings." Committee on Children's Television, 35 Cal.3d at 216-17, 197 Cal.Rptr. at 795.

Every element of the cause of action for fraud must be alleged in "full, factually and specifically." Wilhelm v. Pray, Price, Williams & Russell (1986) 186 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1331, 231 Cal.Rptr. 355, 358 (emphasis added). The policy of "liberal construction" of pleading will not be invoked to sustain a pleading defective in any material respect. Id. The particularity requirement means that the complaint must set forth facts that "'show how, when, where, to whom, and by what means the representations were tendered.'[Citation.]" Lazar, 12 Cal.4th at 645, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d at 385 (emphasis added).

A plaintiff's burden in alleging a fraud claim against a corporation is even greater. In such cases, the plaintiff must "'allege the names of the persons who made the allegedly fraudulent representations, their authority to speak, to whom they spoke, what they said or wrote, and when it was said or written.'" Lazar, 12 Cal.4th at 645, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d at 385 (quoting Tarmann v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1991) 2 Cal.App.4th 153, 157, 2 Cal.Rptr.2d 861, 862-63).

In these coordinated cases, the causes of action for fraud are alleged against the Church Defendants, which consist of several religious corporations. They include defendant Watchtower PA, an international, non-profit, religious corporation; defendants WTNY and CCJW, two national, non-profit religious corporations; and the local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses, which are California non-profit corporations. (For example, in the Javier C. case, see Complaint, ¶¶ 2-5.

By way of example, in the Javier C. case, the complaint alleges that the Church Defendants made intentional misrepresentations and actively concealed material facts. Complaint, ¶¶ 60, 71, 72. The complaints in the other coordinated cases contain similar, if not identical allegations. However, the complaint does not state "'how, when, where, to whom, and by what means the representations were tendered.'" Lazar, 12 Cal.4th at 645, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d at 385 (emphasis added). Additionally, because all of the Church Defendants are corporations, the complaint fails to allege "the persons who made the allegedly fraudulent representations, their authority to speak, to whom they spoke, what they said or wrote, and when it was said or written." Id.

Thus, plaintiffs have not alleged their fraud causes of action with the specificity required by California law. Accordingly, this Court should grant Church Defendants' demurrers.

IV. The Cause Of Action For Intentional Infliction Of Emotional Distress Fails To State Facts Sufficient To Constitute A Claim for Relief And Thus Is Subject to Demurrer Under CCP § 430.10(e).

The complaints allege a cause of action for the tort of "intentional infliction of emotional distress" ("IIED"). The elements of a prima facie IIED claim are: "(i) outrageous conduct by defendant, (ii) an intention by defendant to cause, or reckless disregard of the probability of causing, emotional distress, (iii) severe emotional distress, and (iv) an actual and proximate causal link between the tortious conduct and the emotional distress." Nally v. Grace Community Church, (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, 300, 253 Cal.Rptr. 97, 110. "Conduct to be outrageous must be so extreme as to exceed all bounds of that usually tolerated in a civilized community." Cervantez v. J.C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal.3d 579, 593, 156 Cal.Rptr. 198, 206.

The tort of IIED also requires that the alleged conduct must be directed primarily at a particular individual and be intended to cause that particular individual severe emotional distress. As the California Supreme Court reasoned:

> It is not enough that the conduct be intentional and outrageous. It must be conduct directed at the plaintiff, or occur in the presence of a plaintiff of whom the defendant is aware. The requirement that the defendant's conduct be directed primarily at the plaintiff is a factor which distinguishes intentional infliction of emotional distress from the negligent infliction of such injury.

Potter v. Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal.4th 965, 1002, 25 Cal.Rptr.2d 550, 574-75 (citations and internal quotations omitted) (emphasis added); see also Christensen v. Superior Court (1992) 54 Cal.3d 868, 906, 2 Cal.Rptr.2d 79, 102 ("Plaintiffs here have not alleged that the conduct of any of the defendants was directed primarily at them, was calculated to cause them severe emotional distress, or was done with knowledge of their presence and of a substantial certainty that they would suffer severe emotional injury." [emphasis added]).

By way of example, plaintiff in the Javier C. case has broadly alleged an IIED cause of action based on the alleged "inaction" of Church Defendants to protect plaintiff. Complaint, ¶ 56. However, the complaint does not explain how that alleged inaction, or omission, was primarily directed at plaintiff, as opposed to other children or even the public in general. The complaints in Javier C. and the other coordinated cases do not state who made the omission, when they made this omission, or what authority the person(s) had to act on behalf of each of the corporate Church Defendants. Furthermore, even if plaintiff Javier C. was "present" at the time of the alleged omission, as claimed in the Javier C. complaint in paragraph 56, the complaint fails to identify who, by their inaction, had a "substantial certainty that [Plaintiff] would suffer severe emotional injury." Christensen, 54 Cal.3d at 906, 2 Cal.Rptr.2d at 102. The same is true of the pleadings in the other coordinated cases.

Because the complaints in the coordinated cases fail to allege facts sufficient to support all essential elements of an IIED cause of action, the Church Defendants' general demurrer on the IIED causes of action should be granted.

V. The Causes Of Action For Common Law Negligence, Gross Negligence - Willful Misconduct, And Breach of Fiduciary Duty Are Uncertain And Ambiguous As Pled And Thus Subject To Demurrer Under CCP § 430.10(f).

Those three claims alleged in each of the complaints are uncertain and ambiguous as pled and thus subject to demurrers. CCP § 430.10(f).

In pleading, the general rule is that the facts must be alleged with sufficient clarity to inform defendants of the issues to be met. Ludgate Insurance Co. v Lockheed Martin Corp. (2000) 82 Cal.App.4th 592, 608, 98 Cal.Rptr.2d 277, 288 (a plaintiff is required to allege "the essential facts of his case with reasonable precision and with particularity sufficient to acquaint a defendant with the nature, source, and extent of his cause of action" [citation omitted]); see also Ankeny v. Lockheed Missiles and Space Co. (1979) 88 Cal.App.3d 531, 537, 151 Cal.Rptr. 828, 832 ("It is settled law that a pleading must allege facts and not conclusions, and that material facts must be alleged directly and not by way of recital." [emphasis added]). The Ankeny court also stated that "the essential facts upon which a determination of the controversy depends should be stated with clearness and precision so that nothing is left to surmise." Id. (emphasis added). Finally, "[t]hose recitals, references to, or allegations of material facts which are left to surmise are subject to special demurrer for uncertainty." Id.

A. The Cause Of Action For Common Law Negligence Is Uncertain And Ambiguous As Pled.

By way of example, in Javier C. the second cause of action is entitled "Common Law Negligence," but plaintiff has "left to surmise" the key material fact necessary for this claim. As a basis for this cause of action, the Javier C. complaint makes the wholly conclusory allegation of law that the Church Defendants "assumed a duty to protect Plaintiff." Complaint, ¶ 34. The complaints in the coordinated cases make similar, if not identical, allegations. However, this cause of action fails to allege any specific or particular facts that would support such a legal conclusion about having "assumed a duty to protect" the plaintiff.

This is an important distinction, because the outcome of the negligence cause of action will depend in large part on the nature of the relationship between each of the Church Defendants and each plaintiff. As the Court of Appeal has noted, "'[a] person is ordinarily not liable for the actions of another and is under no duty to protect another from harm, in the absence of a special relationship of custody or control.' [Citation.]" Romero v. Superior Court (2001) 89 Cal.App.4th 1068, 1078-79, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d 801, 809; see also Garcia v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal.3d 728, 734, 268 Cal.Rptr. 779, 782 ("A special relationship is a prerequisite for liability based on a defendant's failure to act.").

This basic concept is known as the "no duty to aid rule" and is a "fundamental and long-standing rule of tort law." Eric J. v. Betty M. (1999) 76 Cal.App.4th 715, 727, 90 Cal.Rptr.2d 549, 558-559. Furthermore, "[a]bsent a 'special relationship,' one cannot be held liable for mere nonfeasance, such as not protecting another from a criminal attack by a third party." Id.; see Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing, Inc. (1976) 63 Cal.App.3d 538, 541, 134 Cal.Rptr. 29, 32 ("As a basic general principle, in the absence of a special relationship or circumstance, a private person has no duty to protect another from a criminal attack by a third person.").

Merely alleging that Church Defendants "assumed a duty to protect Plaintiff," i.e. pleading the ultimate legal conclusion necessary for this cause of action without alleging the necessary facts, is insufficient for this cause of action. Plaintiffs must also set forth the essential facts with "clearness and precision" concerning each of their alleged relationships with the corporate Church Defendants. Ankeny, 88 Cal.App.3d at 537, 151 Cal.Rptr. at 832. Thus, the Court should grant Church Defendants special demurrers against the common law negligence cause of action alleged in each of the coordinated cases.

B. The Cause Of Action For Gross Negligence/Willful Misconduct Is Uncertain And Ambiguous As Pled.

Again using Javier C. as an example, the fourth cause of action entitled "Gross Negligence/Willful Misconduct" suffers from the same inadequacies as the cause of action for common law negligence. The gross negligence or willful misconduct cause of action also leaves ambiguous a key material fact necessary for this claim. Again, the complaints in the coordinated cases make the wholly conclusory allegation that Church Defendants had a "duty to protect the children entrusted to their ... care and custody." See, e.g., Complaint in Javier C., ¶ 43 (emphasis added). However, the complaints in each case are ambiguous in their explanation about how each plaintiff was somehow entrusted into the care of any of the corporate Church Defendants.

Like the cause of action for common law negligence, this cause of action will turn in large part on the nature of the relationship between each plaintiff and each of the Church Defendants. Absent a "special relationship" between them, this cause of action will not stand. Romero, 89 Cal.App.4th at 1079, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d at 809. Plaintiffs are required to plead the facts that support each plaintiff's conclusory assertion that he or she was somehow "entrusted" into the Church Defendants' care.

Thus, the gross negligent/willful misconduct cause of action alleged in each of the coordinated cases is also subject to a special demurrer for uncertainty for its failure to clearly allege facts setting forth the nature of each plaintiff's relationship with each of the corporate Church Defendants.

C. The Cause Of Action For Breach Of Fiduciary Duty Is Uncertain And Ambiguous As Pled And Thus Subject to Demurrer.

The cause of action is entitled "Breach of Fiduciary Duty" is alleged in each of the coordinated cases but again does not clearly allege the facts necessary to support that cause of action. Obviously, to plead a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty, particular facts must be alleged that establish the existence of a fiduciary relationship between a plaintiff and a defendant. If the fiduciary relationship element is absent, any cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty must be dismissed.

What is the alleged basis for this fiduciary relationship in each of the cases? For example, the complaint in Javier C. states that by "undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling of Plaintiff, the [Church] Defendants, created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiff." Complaint, ¶ 47. Again, what does "undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling" mean in this context? The attempt to hold a religious organization liable for "ecclesiastical teachings" and "spiritual counseling" has been constitutionally prohibited by the California Supreme Court as the classic fact pattern for prohibited clergy malpractice claims. Nally, 47 Cal.3d at 299, 253 Cal.Rptr. at 109 (unconstitutional to impose a duty of care on a church for counseling). Thus, plaintiffs' allegations about religious instruction and counseling will not support any claimed fiduciary duty in these cases.

Because the allegations in each of the coordinated cases do not state any factual basis that would support an alleged fiduciary relationship between each of the Church Defendants and each plaintiff, the breach of fiduciary duty cause of action is subject to a special demurrer for uncertainty.

VI. The Sixth Cause Of Action In Daniel West, et al (Yolo County Case) Based On Alleged Violations Of CANRA Fails To State A Cause Of Action And Is Thus Subject to Demurrer.

In Daniel West, et al v. Watchtower New York, et al, Yolo County Superior Court no. CV03-1439, plaintiffs allege a sixth cause of action for common law negligence and negligence per se based solely on alleged violations of the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, or CANRA. That cause of action is subject to demurrer because: (i) the corporate Church Defendants, if considered to be clergy members, were under no duty to report the alleged abuse at the time it took place under the reporting statute (CANRA, which is codified at Penal Code §§ 11164-74); (ii) no California court has ever allowed a civil cause of action against a church entity for its failure to report alleged child abuse; and, in any event, (iii) church entities and religious corporations simply are not mandated reporters under CANRA.

In 1963, under former Penal Code § 11161.5 (i.e., CANRA), the mandatory reporting obligations were applicable only to physicians and surgeons. Stecks v. Young (1995) 38 Cal.App.4th 365, 370-71, 45 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 477. In 1996, the Legislature amended CANRA to add "clergy member[s]" to the list of mandated reporters. Stats.1996, ch. 1081, § 3.5, codified at Penal Code § 11165.7(a)(32). That amendment became effective, as a matter of law, on January 1, 1997.

Thus, even assuming, arguendo, that the allegations of the Daniel West complaint are true and that the corporate Church Defendants qualify as clergy members under CANRA, the Church Defendants had no duty to report until after January 1, 1997.

Furthermore, even if, arguendo, a statutory duty to report was somehow imposed on any of the Church Defendants before 1997, no California court has ever held that CANRA creates a private right of action to sue for damages resulting from a failure to report. As the Court of Appeal has stated:

> Adoption of a regulatory statute does not automatically create a private right to sue for damages resulting from violations of the statute. Such a private right of action exists only if the language of the statute or its legislative history clearly indicates the Legislature intended to create such a right to sue for damages. If the Legislature intends to create a private cause of action, we generally assume it will do so "directly [,] ... in clear, understandable, unmistakable terms...."

Vikco Ins. Serv., Inc. v. Ohio Indem. Co. (1999) 70 Cal.App.4th 55, 62-63 (citations omitted) (emphasis in original).

Moreover, because CANRA and its predecessors have been repeatedly amended, "if the Legislature had intended to create such a private action, it would have done so by clear and direct language." Schaefer v. Williams (1993) 15 Cal.App.4th 1243, 1248, 19 Cal.Rptr.2d 212 (citations omitted); C.C.P. § 1858 (when interpreting statutes, court is "to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted").

Finally with respect to the failure to report allegations, church entities and religious corporations simply are not mandated reporters under CANRA. Those persons who are mandated reporters under CANRA are listed in Penal Code § 11165.7(a), and "clergy member[s]" are listed as mandated reporters at sub-section (a)(32). The definition of "clergy member" in sub-section (a)(32) as a mandated reporter "means a priest, minister, rabbi, religious practitioner, or similar functionary of a church, temple, or recognized denomination or organization." That definition refers only to individuals and does not include church entities or religious corporations as mandated reporters. Here, the named Church Defendants are each a church entity or religious corporation. (See Complaint in Daniel West, et al at ¶¶ 4 – 8, which alleges that each of the Church Defendants is "a corporation....") Thus, as a matter of law, the Church Defendants do not qualify as mandated reporters under CANRA and Penal Code § 11165.7(a), and the sixth cause of action in Daniel West, et al should be dismissed with prejudice.

For each of the reasons discussed, this Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrer to the sixth cause of action in Daniel West, et al, and in any of the other coordinated cases in which such claims might be alleged without leave to replead.

DEFENDANTS' NOTICE OF DEMURRERS IN COORDINATED CASES

DATE: TBA 2-28-05
TIME: TBA 8:30 A.M.
DEPT.: TBA
TRIAL DATES: Not yet set

TO: ALL PARTIES AND THEIR ATTORNEYS OF RECORD HEREIN:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that on a date and time to be determined by the Honorable W. Scott Snowden in Dept. B of the above-entitled Court, Defendants Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania,[1] Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, and the various congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses named as defendants in one or more of the coordinated cases (collectively hereinafter "Church Defendants"), will and hereby do move the Court under California Code of Civil Procedure

[1] Defendant Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ("Watch Tower Pennsylvania") appears specially herein, because it has filed motions to quash service of summons and complaint based on lack of personal jurisdiction in California. Those motions are still pending.

("CCP") §§ 430.10(e), (f) and 430.30(a) for an Order granting or sustaining their demurrers to the causes of action alleged in plaintiffs' operative complaints in each of the coordinated cases, on the grounds that plaintiffs' pleadings do not allege facts sufficient to constitute the causes of action alleged. Those demurrers are more particularly described, as follows:

The Church Defendants cannot be held vicariously liable for the sexual battery cause of action that is alleged in all coordinated cases except Charissa W., et al and Tabitha H. (Napa County cases).

Plaintiffs' causes of action for common law negligence, gross negligence – willful misconduct, and breach of fiduciary duty, as pled in each of the 10 remaining coordinated cases, fail to allege any facts that would support the requisite element of a special, confidential, or fiduciary relationship between each plaintiff and each of the Church Defendants.

The cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress pled in nine of the 10 remaining coordinated cases (i.e., all except the Napa County case of Charissa W.) fails to allege facts sufficient to constitute all requisite elements of that claim.

The causes of action for fraud – intentional misrepresentation and fraud - concealment pled in each of the 10 remaining coordinated cases are not alleged with the specificity required by California law.

The cause of action for conspiracy, as pled by plaintiffs in each of the 10 remaining coordinated cases, is precluded by the agent's immunity rule and also fails to state a claim under California law.

The cause of action pled in Daniel West, et al (Yolo County case) alleging common law negligence and negligence per se based on alleged violations of the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act ("CANRA") fails as a matter of law for each of the following independent reasons: (1) the Church Defendants were not required to report by CANRA during the time frame at issue, (2) no private cause of action exists for alleged violations of CANRA, and, in any event, (3) none of the Church Defendants qualify as a mandated reporter under CANRA.

These demurrers are based on this notice, the supporting joint memorandum of points and authorities, all papers and records on file in these coordinated cases, and such other oral and documentary information and evidence as may be properly considered by the Court.

CERTIFICATE OF CONFERENCE

Defense counsel hereby certifies that he has met and conferred with plaintiffs' counsel concerning these demurrers before filing them with the court.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants. AND COORDINATED CASES	Case No.: 26-22191 JOINT STATUS REPORT DATE: January 7, 2005 TIME: 9:30 a.m. DEPT.: B Honorable W. Scott Snowden

At the hearing held on December 9, 2004 in these coordinated cases, the Court directed counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants to "meet and confer" concerning certain case management and coordination issues.. After meeting and conferring, counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants respectfully submit this joint status report to the Court in advance of the January 7, 2005 court conference.

Plaintiffs and the Church Defendants have reached agreement on the following issues:

A. Written Discovery

1. Plaintiffs will propound written discovery on defendants in Track I cases within five days after the stay is lifted. Responses will be due per Code, subject to any extensions agreed to by the parties.

2. The Church Defendants will propound form interrogatories on plaintiffs in Track I cases within seven days after the stay is lifted. Responses will be due per Code, subject to any extensions agreed to by the parties.

3. The Church Defendants will propound first sets of other written discovery (special interrogatories, requests for production of documents, and/or requests for admission) on plaintiffs in Track I cases within 30 days after the stay is lifted. Responses will be due per Code, subject to any extensions agreed to by the parties.

4. Within 30 days after the stay is lifted, the Church Defendants will respond to written discovery propounded by plaintiffs in the Charissa W. case before the stay was imposed.

5. Written discovery can proceed in all of the coordinated cases once the stay is lifted. Plaintiffs will then propound written discovery on defendants in non-Track I cases within five days after the stay is lifted. Responses will be due per Code, subject to any extensions agreed to by the parties. The Church Defendants will then propound form interrogatories on plaintiffs in non-Track I cases within seven days of the stay being lifted. Responses will be due per Code, subject to any extensions agreed to by the parties. The Church Defendants may propound other written discovery in non-Track I cases at their discretion.

B. Discovery Motions

1. Counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants propose that the Court now schedule a hearing during late April 2005 to address any then still outstanding issues concerning written discovery.

2. The parties will meet and confer on other discovery issues as they arise and, if appropriate, can schedule properly noticed discovery motions in advance of the late April 2005 hearing date proposed above in ¶B.1.

3. If, in ruling on a discovery motion, the Court should order that additional discovery responses and/or document production is required, the responding party shall have 30 days after entry of such order to provide such additional responses and/or document production.

C. Depositions

1. Depositions of plaintiffs and witnesses identified in written discovery in Track I cases may commence after the stay is lifted but shall begin not later than August 2005.

2. Counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants agree to try and set aside seven to ten weekdays each month starting in August 2005 for depositions in Track I cases.

3. Depositions of plaintiffs in Track I cases will take place at the law offices of Nolen Saul Brelsford in Sacramento, unless counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants jointly agree on a different location.

4. Depositions of PMK's for the local congregation defendants in the Track I cases will take place at the law offices of Bullivant Houser Bailey PC in Gold River, unless counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants jointly agree on a different location.

5. Depositions of PMK's of the so-called national Church Defendants in Track I cases will take place in Brooklyn, New York, unless counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants jointly agree on a different location.

6. Depositions of individual defendants in Track I cases will be taken at any reasonable location agreed to by counsel for those individual defendants.

7. The parties taking the depositions shall arrange for the court reporters for the depositions. All deposition exhibits shall be numbered sequentially from deposition to deposition so as to avoid confusion.

8. For any deposition taken outside of California, if objections are interposed with instructions to the witness not to answer a question or series of questions, and if the inquiring party then successfully moves to compel answers to the question or series of questions, the responding party shall be required to incur the expense of bringing the witness to Sacramento to complete the deposition.

D. Dispositive Motions On 'Key' Liability Issues

1. The filing deadline for dispositive motions (i.e., motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication) on so-called "key" liability issues in Track I cases shall not be less than 30 days after all depositions necessary to support the motions are concluded. The parties acknowledge that flexibility may be required with respect to any filing deadline for such dispositive motions.

2. Counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants presently agree to target the filing of such dispositive motions in Track I cases for November 15, 2005; plaintiffs' responses shall be due about 60 days after the dispositive motions are filed; and Church Defendants' replies would be due from 14 to 21 days after the responses are filed. The parties propose that the Court set a hearing as soon thereafter as possible, at the Court's discretion.

3. A trial setting conference for Track I cases would be held only after the Court rules on the above-referenced dispositive motions.

Plaintiffs and the Church Defendants did NOT reach agreement on the following issues:

A. Watchtower Pennsylvania motions challenging personal jurisdiction

1. Plaintiffs desire to "meet and confer" on discovery issues with respect to personal jurisdiction and anticipate a discovery motion in that regard. Watchtower Pennsylvania requests that a hearing be scheduled for late January 2005 on the motions challenging personal jurisdiction for all coordinated cases. Such a setting would provide ample time for plaintiffs to submit any supplemental briefing they might desire on the personal jurisdiction issue, with time for a further reply from Watchtower Pennsylvania, if such a reply is warranted.

B. Demurrers and Pleading Motions

1. Counsel for plaintiffs propose that the complaints in the Javier C. and Ken L. cases be their so-called form complaints for all coordinated cases. The Church Defendants do not agree and thus request that the demurrers and motions to strike be heard as to each of the coordinated cases.

2. The parties propose that at the January 7, 2005 conference, the Court and the parties discuss the best method of facilitating early scheduling of the hearings on the demurrers and pleading motions, including providing direction to the courts in the counties in which each of the coord nated cases was originally filed as to how the physical file in each could should be handled.

C. Writ ten Discovery

1. Plaintiffs propose that the Church Defen dants have only 15 days in which to interpose ob ections to plaintiffs' written discovery requests on the basis, among others, that such a deadl ne will facilitate earlier resolution of discovery disputes. The Church Defendants oppose such a deadline on the basis, among others, that such a deadline would likely lead to a "piecemeal" meet and confer and discovery process and that the proposed 15 days is less than the time allo ved by Code.

2. Watchtower Pennsylvania proposes that it not be required to respond to general written discc very in any of the coordinated cases until a ruling is issued on its motions challenging personal jurisdiction.

D. Depo sitions

1. Plaintiffs propose that depositions of the Church Defendants in Track I cases may commer ce as soon as the stay is lifted. The Church Defendants oppose commencing such depositions until after all demurrers and pleading motions are ruled on by the Court, the pleadings are set or at issue, and written discovery is completed.

CASE NO: 26-22191

PLAINTIFFS' REPLY TO: DEFENDANTS' JOINT STATEMENT RE EXTENT OF COORDINATION AND BRIEF RE EXTENT OF COORDINATION

DATE: December 9, 2004
TIME: 1:30 p.m.
DEPT: B

Reviewing the Brief and Joint Statement, the Church defendants are taking the opportunity to make an "end run" at objecting again to the Order of coordination rather than responding to the Court's direction to give guidance to management of the litigation. It strikes our side as inappropriate. It was the purpose of the hearing, as we understood it, to attempt to reach agreement on the management of discovery. The effort was a failure. Our concerns with defendants' position are expressed below.

Brief Re Extent of Coordination: Coordination is ordered when actions are deemed complex, requiring the court to manage lawsuits for the convenience of parties, witnesses and counsel. Coordination provides a structure to avoid inconsistent rulings, economical use of judicial resources and avoidance of duplication of effort. To illustrate our point, counsel's brief at page 2 contains a heading which reads as follows: "Only Certain Written Discovery and Depositions are Subject to Coordination." This heading graphically demonstrates why our respective sides achieved nothing in our discussions to reach a consensus on a "joint statement". Frankly, it is our position that a statement like this is wholly inconsistent with the purpose of coordination which is to manage all discovery and depositions, not just "certain" discovery and depositions. In fact, it is our understanding that this hearing is not about the "extent" of coordination, instead it is about complete coordination. Dividing this hearing into a discussion about "coordination" and "case management issues" flies in the face of the order ~~of entire coordination.~~ COORDINATION

Joint Statement Re Extent of Coordination: Again, counsel for the Church defendants attemps to distinguish between "coordination" and "case management". Since the avoidance of duplication, convenience to counsel and parties and consistent rulings are the very fabric of the coordination process, how in the world can defense counsel divide his remarks into "the extent of coordination" and "case management"? Plaintiffs' statement gave the court and opposing counsel very specific suggestions to manage the litigation. Those points need not be reiterated here. All counsel for the Church defendants has done is state time and time again that the case involves a number of plaintiffs, different Kingdom Halls and three different Church defendants. At no point does he give a single factual reason why these obvious statistics are an impediment to the management of the lawsuit. In the interest of judicial economy, for example, plaintiffs suggest that the court manage the cases so as to expedite discovery pertaining to anticipated summary judgment motions. Why is it unreasonable to ask the Church defendants to identify and take the depositions which they feel are necessary to prepare their motion or motions? We tried to make that suggestion and got no response.

CONCLUSION

It is abundantly clear to our side that the difficult decisions of managing this litigation will not be made jointly by counsel. We are prepared at the hearing to make specific suggestions to assist the Court in the management of the lawsuit and to establish a reasonable and efficient timetable to bring these cases to trial. The conduct which gave rise to our clients' injuries occurred many years ago and it is time for the judicial system to act efficiently to address their claims.

These cases can be made lengthy and cumbersome or can be streamlined and focused. We contend the latter is achievable and in the bets interests of our clients, counsel and the Court.

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs' "preamble" presents a one-sided view of the parties' attempt to meet and confer regarding extent of coordination issues. First, as plaintiffs' submission makes crystal clear, plaintiffs propose extensive and detailed case management but largely fail to address to extent of coordination issues, and that fact was discussed at length with plaintiffs' counsel.

Second, plaintiffs' "preamble" imputes some improper tactic or motive to the short delay involved in defendants' "draft [that] arrived November 13, 2004." (See p. 2 of plaintiffs' submission at line 9.) However, plaintiffs' attorneys were expressly made aware that the short delay was occasioned by defense counsel Schnack's metastatic cancer condition. Thus, for plaintiffs to now suggest some improper tactic or motive is not only misleadingly inaccurate, but disappointing on both a personal level and a professional level.

Third, plaintiffs' case management proposal ignores plaintiffs' lead counsel Brelsford's own prior statement to the Court that upwards of 80 depositions will be taken in the coordinated cases. Indeed, plaintiffs' proposed case management timeline is patently unrealistic for the ten coordinated cases, given the extent of anticipated written discovery, the anticipated discovery motions, the large number of depositions that will be taken, the anticipated summary judgment motions in each of the ten cases, etc. In the same vein, given that most of the Church Defendants' motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication will turn on facts developed in discovery and depositions in each case, plaintiffs' proposed March 15, 2005 deadline for the Church Defendants to file such motions is, also, patently unrealistic.

DISCUSSION

Plaintiffs' submission does not address the extent of coordination issues discussed in the defendants' joint statement or in the Church Defendants' accompanying brief. The Church Defendants, therefore, will not reiterate here the defense positions on extent of coordination.

With respect to case management issues, plaintiffs do not set forth any achievable timelines. Plaintiffs instead spill a good quantity of ink describing arbitrarily short and unrealistic timelines (such as summary judgment motions being filed just three months from now), arbitrary limitations on the number and scope of permissible discovery requests (with fewer discovery requests for defendants but more for the plaintiffs!), and suggesting that trial setting conferences can be held just seven months from now. (Plaintiffs' counsel even goes so far as to propose that all parties use plaintiffs' counsel's favorite court reporter for all of the numerous depositions that will be taken in these coordinated cases. All such minutiae are clearly not an extent of coordination issue.)

Defendants must have the right to pursue written discovery that is appropriate for these coordinated cases. Setting arbitrarily short timelines and setting arbitrary limitations on the number of discovery requests that defendants (and plaintiffs) are allowed to propound will not advance either the goals of coordination or the ends of justice.

The number of depositions to be taken (as detailed in the prior defense submissions) include 18 plaintiffs, each of the 18 plaintiffs' parents and family members, the individual defendants, the PMKs of each local congregation, the PMKs of the three national religious corporation defendants, the percipient witnesses, etc. Thus, plaintiffs' proposal that the Church Defendants file summary judgment motions just three months from now is simply absurd.

The Church Defendants agree that addressing certain preliminary legal issues will serve to facilitate the progress of these coordinated cases, and the demurrers and motions to strike should help serve that purpose by narrowing the number of plaintiffs' causes of action and their underlying legal theories. (See defendants' proposal in that regard in the Joint Statement at pp. 3-4.) However, plaintiffs' apparent suggestion that issues of notice, legal duty, and various First Amendment defenses, among other issues, are capable of resolution on summary judgment or summary adjudication without conducting any significant written discovery and depositions is fanciful at best, because the Church Defendants would be unfairly and unduly prejudiced by such a case management procedure.

Moreover, the scheduling of the number of depositions that will be required for summary judgment motions in each case will likely extend through all of 2005, and perhaps beyond. Indeed, scheduling even seven to ten depositions each month starting in perhaps March or early April of 2005 (thus consuming up to half of the weekdays in each month) would likely be a "best case" scenario, given the usual problems all attorneys encounter in scheduling depositions in cases involving multiple parties and multiple counsel. Thus, plaintiffs' proposed case management schedule is so impractical that it could not reasonably be implemented, even if the court were, hypothetically, to order it.

CONCLUSION

The Court should order the coordination outlined in defendants' Joint Statement and in the Church Defendants' previously filed accompanying brief. Once the extent of coordination has been ruled on by the Court, the designated "coordination judge" can address case management issues at a later case management conference. In any event, plaintiffs' case management proposals suggest arbitrarily unrealistic and unachievable timelines, as is apparent from defendants' discussion of those issues in defendants' Joint Statement and in the Church Defendants' accompanying brief.

AND COORDINATED CASES

Case No.: 26-22191

DEFENDANTS' JOINT STATEMENT RE EXTENT OF COORDINATION

JCCP no. 4374

DATE: December 9, 2004
TIME: 1:30 p.m.
DEPT.: B

The Church Defendants and the individual defendants who are represented by counsel ("individual defendants") respectfully submit this joint statement regarding extent of coordination issues. The Church Defendants also concurrently submit a brief addressing some of the extent of coordination issues. (The parties had planned to meet and confer regarding extent of coordination issues after exchanging proposed joint statements. However, after doing so, plaintiffs' counsel then chose not to further discuss with defense counsel the issues presented, suggesting instead that all parties simply submit their proposals and briefs to the court on extent of coordination issues.) A stay has been imposed on all proceedings pending the court's rulings on the extent of coordination.

WRITTEN DISCOVERY

The Church Defendants submit that written discovery, and in particular special interrogatories, requests for production of documents, and requests for admissions, are not susceptible to coordination in the ten coordinated cases.[1] As the plaintiffs' pleadings reveal, there are 18 different plaintiffs involved in the ten cases, at least nine different local congregations, and seven different individual defendants (an eighth individual who allegedly committed sex abuse on some of the plaintiffs is deceased). There are different allegations in each case relating to the circumstances of alleged abuse of each plaintiff and regarding the time periods of alleged abuse of each plaintiff. Those time frames range variously from the early 1970s in one case, in the late 1970s or the 1980s in various other cases, and the 1990s in yet other cases. Thus, for those reasons, among others, special interrogatories, requests for production of documents, and requests for admissions are not reasonably susceptible to coordination in all ten cases.

With respect to form interrogatories, the responses of defendants Watchtower New York, Watch Tower Pennsylvania,[2] and Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses to form interrogatories nos. 3.1 – 3.5 would be the same in all cases, because those interrogatories concern the form of legal entity of each of those defendants. However, the Church Defendants submit that the other form interrogatories would be case specific and thus not susceptible to coordination, given the discussion above about the different parties in each of the cases, the different events and circumstances, and the different time frames at issue.

[1] Plaintiffs' counsel recently advised that they will dismiss the Lisa H. case with prejudice (Monterey County Superior Court no. M68295). Thus, there remain ten coordinated cases.

[2] Watch Tower Pennsylvania has motions pending in the cases that challenge personal jurisdiction. Watch Tower Pennsylvania thus specially appears herein and with respect to all proceedings that occur before the court rules on those motions.

The individual defendants submit that all written discovery with respect to them is not susceptible of coordination, because the individual defendants are each involved in only one case. The Church Defendants and individual defendants submit that the same is true of discovery directed to each of the 18 plaintiffs. Thus, such discovery must necessarily be case specific.

LAW AND MOTION

Discovery Motions. The Church Defendants and the individual defendants submit that the procedures set forth in the California Code of Civil Procedure ("CCP") should govern all discovery motions, such as the deadline for such motions after a party's responses are served, the meet and confer requirements before filing a discovery motion, etc.

In order to promote uniformity and consistency in decisions and rulings on discovery motions, the Church Defendants and individual defendants propose that a "coordination judge" be assigned to hear all discovery motions for the coordinated cases. However, given that much of the written discovery is not susceptible to coordination, as discussed above, such motions would likely have to be case specific.

Pleading Motions and Motions to Quash Service. The Church Defendants have demurrers and motions to strike pending in a number of the coordinated cases. At least one individual defendant (defendant Harriman in the Ken L. case, Placer County Superior Court no. SCV 16600) also has demurrers pending. As noted in footnote 2, defendant Watch Tower Pennsylvania also has filed motions to quash service of summons and complaint in each case based on the personal jurisdiction defense.

To resolve the Church Defendants' demurrers and in order to save the court and the parties substantial time and effort, the Church Defendants have proposed the following: First, in each case plaintiffs would voluntarily file an amended complaint that is consistent with the currently operative second amended complaint in the Charissa W. case (Napa County Superior Court no. 26-22191), which alleges five causes of action against the Church Defendants. [3]

Second, the Church Defendants' motions to strike certain allegations from plaintiffs' pleadings pursuant to CCP §§ 435-37 that currently are pending in a number of the cases would then be applied to and heard by the court with respect to each of the then-operative amended complaints in all ten of the coordinated cases. The individual defendants would also have the opportunity to file demurrers and motions to strike against any such amended complaints that they deem appropriate.

In conjunction with the above procedure and in order to promote uniformity and consistency in decisions and rulings, the Church Defendants and individual defendants propose that a "coordination judge" be assigned to hear the Watch Tower Pennsylvania motions to quash service, the above-referenced Church Defendants' motions to strike, and any pleading motions and demurrers filed by any of the individual defendants. (The Watch Tower Pennsylvania motions could be jointly heard or coordinated in all ten cases.)

The procedure proposed above involving plaintiffs filing amended complaints, etc., would save the court and the parties substantial time and effort, because the alternative would be to set each of the now pending demurrers and motions to strike for hearing in each case.

Motions for Summary Judgment and Summary Adjudication. The Church Defendants and individual defendants submit that motions for summary judgment and summary adjudication will depend on the various facts developed in discovery and in depositions in each of the ten coordinated cases. Thus, motions for summary judgment and summary adjudication need to be case specific and are not reasonably susceptible to being coordinated in all ten cases.

However, the Church Defendants and individual defendants propose that, in order to promote uniformity and consistency in decisions and rulings on any similar legal issues that may arise in such motions, a "coordination judge" be assigned to hear all summary judgment and summary adjudication motions filed in each of the coordinated cases.

DEPOSITIONS

Depositions of "Persons Most Knowledgeable" or PMKs of Watchtower New York, Watch Tower Pennsylvania, and Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. The Church Defendants and individual defendants propose that depositions of the so-called PMKs for defendants Watchtower New York, Watch Tower Pennsylvania (if it remains in these cases), and Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses could be coordinated for all ten cases for certain topics truly common to all of the cases. (Such depositions are referred to below as "coordinated PMK depositions.")

However, separate depositions for each of the cases should be required with respect to those so-called national corporate defendants' knowledge of the other parties in the case, alleged notice issues to those defendants in each case, etc. Depending on the topics identified by the noticing party (likely the plaintiffs) under CCP § 2025(d)(6), the same persons might be designated as the PMK as for the separate depositions as for the coordinated PMK depositions. Therefore, the separate depositions could be taken consecutively on the same day, but the deposition in one case would terminate and then a new deposition would begin on the next case, and so on, such that the parties would have separate transcripts for each case dealing only with the particular allegations and the particular facts and circumstances of each case.

Such a procedure would avoid potentially unnecessary and duplicative travel expense for all parties. (Although the proposed deposition procedure is arguably a "case management" issue as opposed to an "extent of coordination" issue, the Church Defendants and individual defendants believe that it is appropriate to consider the proposed procedure within the ruling on extent of coordination.)

Other Depositions. The Church Defendants and individual defendants submit that depositions of parties other than the three national corporate defendants and of percipient or fact witnesses are not susceptible to coordination. Again, in the remaining ten coordinated cases there are 18 different plaintiffs, seven different individual defendants, and at least nine local congregations who are parties. The alleged facts and circumstances of each plaintiff's alleged abuse will certainly differ from each of the other 17 plaintiffs' alleged facts and circumstances. The relationships between each plaintiff, each plaintiff's parents, each plaintiff's other family members, each individual defendant, and each local congregation defendant will certainly differ in each case. Thus, the depositions of the 18 plaintiffs, the parents and family members of each of the 18 plaintiffs, the seven individual defendants, the individual defendants' witnesses, and the PMKs of each of the local congregation defendants, which reasonably could total some 60 to 70 or more depositions, simply are not susceptible to coordination.

Similarly, the depositions of percipient or fact witnesses with respect to each case are not susceptible to coordination, and the total number of such percipient witnesses realistically could exceed 40 to 50 (which would only be about four or five such persons for each of the ten cases). For reasons similar to those addressed above, each case will present different circumstances and events that largely will not share any common facts with the other cases such that coordination of the depositions of plaintiffs, the individual defendants, the PMKs of congregation defendants, and percipient witnesses would not be reasonable.

Trials. The Church Defendants and defendants Silva, Vasquez, and Appling oppose any single, unified trial of all of the ten coordinated cases. Among other reasons, a unified trial would not result in efficient judicial administration or enhance judicial economy or efficiency, nor would a unified trial be convenient for the plaintiffs, the individual defendants, the local congregation defendants, or the percipient or fact witnesses in each of the remaining ten cases.

Instead, the Church Defendants and individual defendants Silva, Vasquez, and Appling submit that each case be tried separately, in the county in which it was filed. Such separate trials in the local counties where each case was filed will, among other things, promote the convenience of the local congregation defendants, the individual defendants, and the percipient or fact witnesses in each case, as well as the plaintiffs themselves.

Defendant Harriman opts for a single coordinated trial. However, if all ten cases are not coordinated into a single unified trial such that the Ken L. case in Placer County in which Mr. Harriman is a named defendant will be tried separately or independently, then Mr. Harriman submits that his trial should be in the venue in which the Ken L. action was filed, i.e., Placer County.

CASE MANAGEMENT ISSUES

The Church Defendants and individual defendants submit that many of the issues proposed by plaintiffs (in their proposed joint statement earlier sent to defense counsel) are purely "case management" issues rather than "extent of coordination" issues appropriate for ruling at the December 9, 2004 hearing. Instead, defendants submit that the "case management" issues should be addressed after extent of coordination issues are ruled upon at the December 9th hearing and after a coordination judge is assigned by the court to oversee the ten coordinated cases. However, because plaintiffs apparently disagree with that (and out of an abundance of caution), the Church Defendants and individual defendants here briefly address the case management issues.

Overall Case Management. The Church Defendants and individual defendants submit that flexibility in case management will be required, given several factors that include, without limitation, the number of parties and counsel involved in the ten cases (as well as three pro se defendants), that there likely will be in excess of 100 depositions, as discussed above, that there will be a number of legal issues addressed in pleading motions that have not yet been heard by the court, and that the parties anticipate discovery motions in some cases and defense motions for summary judgment and summary adjudication in each case.

The Church Defendants and individual defendants all propose that instead of following the procedures contained within the CCP, under which the trial date assigned to a case governs the timing and deadlines for discovery and dispositive motions, the coordination judge should adopt the case management style often followed in federal district courts. That would involve setting a deadline to complete discovery and depositions followed by a later deadline for dispositive motions (i.e., motions for summary judgment and summary adjudication). See Rule 1541 of the California Rules of Court. The coordination judge could extend the discovery and dispositive motion deadlines as prudent or necessary.

Then, only after all dispositive motions are ruled upon and decided, the coordination judge would set trial dates for each of the cases in the local counties where each case was filed. To the extent that the Church Defendants remain in the case after the dispositive motions, the trial dates would have to be staggered because counsel for plaintiffs and the Church Defendants are the same for each case.

Proposed Case Management Deadlines. Given the different facts and circumstances in each case, the anticipated written discovery to be propounded by the parties, and the fact that in excess of 100 depositions likely will be taken in the ten coordinated cases (plaintiffs counsel earlier advised the court that some 85 depositions would likely be taken), among other reasons, the Church Defendants and individual defendants initially propose the following case management schedule and deadlines:

- December 31, 2005 -- Discovery deadline (including completion of all written discovery, depositions, and rulings on discovery motions). The Church Defendants and individual defendants also are amenable to a reasonable deadline for a "first round" of written discovery once the stay on all proceedings is lifted in the coordinated cases.
- April 15, 2006 -- Deadline for filing dispositive motions.
- May 31, 2006 -- Deadline for oppositions to dispositive motions.
- June 30, 2006 -- Deadline for all replies in support of dispositive motions.
- July – August 2006 -- Court hearings on dispositive motions.
- September 2006 -- Trial Setting Conference held, with staggered trials beginning in November 2006.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants. AND COORDINATED CASES	Case No.: 26-22191 CHURCH DEFENDANTS' BRIEF RE EXTENT OF COORDINATION JCCP no. 4374 DATE: December 9, 2004 TIME: 1:30 p.m. DEPT.: B

The Church Defendants respectfully submit this brief to supplement the "Defendants' Joint Statement Re Extent of Coordination." (The Church Defendants include three national non-profit religious corporations that have been named in each case, i.e., Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York ("Watchtower NY"), Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses ("CCJW"), Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ("Watch Tower PA")[1], and at least nine local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses that have been sued in the coordinated cases that remain.[2])

[1] Watch Tower PA appears specially herein, because it has pending motions to quash service of summons and complaint based on the lack of personal jurisdiction in California.

[2] Plaintiffs' counsel recently advised that they will dismiss the Lisa H. case (Monterey County) with prejudice in exchange for a waiver of costs by defendants. Thus, ten cases remain.

ONLY CERTAIN WRITTEN DISCOVERY AND DEPOSITIONS ARE SUBJECT TO COORDINATION

Each of the ten remaining coordinated cases alleges claims arising out of alleged sex abuse of minors. However, as the defendants' Joint Statement discusses, the events and circumstances surrounding the alleged abuse of each of the18 plaintiffs will largely be different, such that only certain of the written discovery and depositions are reasonably susceptible to coordination as envisioned by CCP §§404, et seq. Although three national non-profit religious corporations are defendants in each of the cases (Watchtower NY, CCJW, and Watch Tower PA), plaintiffs also have sued at least nine different local congregations, as well as seven different individual defendants (an eighth individual who allegedly committed sex abuse is deceased). In addition, each plaintiff claims that only one individual defendant abused him or her, and none of the congregations and none of the individual defendants have been sued in more than one county. The time frames allegedly involved in the alleged sex abuse also vary from case to case, from the early 1970s in one, in the late 1970s and early 1980s in others, and into the 1990s in yet others.

To demonstrate that the facts, circumstances, and events underlying the alleged sex abuse in each case will obviously differ, the Church Defendants provide the following examples. In West, et al. v. Watchtower NY, et al. (Yolo County), plaintiffs' verified interrogatory responses (response to special interrogatory no. 3 propounded by the individual defendant) state that their alleged abuse occurred at the individual defendant's Woodland, California apartment, on a trip to Hawaii, and perhaps even in Europe. In Tim W. v. Watchtower NY, et al. (Tehama County), defense counsel understands that the alleged sex abuse allegedly occurred on one or more non-church related business trips on which plaintiff accompanied the individual defendant. In Charissa W., et al. v. Watchtower NY, et al. (Napa County), plaintiffs allege they were abused at a daycare that was privately owned and operated by the now deceased individual who allegedly abused plaintiffs at the private Napa County home of that individual and his wife. In Jocelyn A., et al. v. Watchtower NY, et al. (Sonoma County), some of the plaintiffs are the individual defendant's children and/or stepchildren who, at the time of the alleged abuse, resided at the home of individual defendant (and his wife, the plaintiffs' mother). Those are merely some of the examples of how each case will differ and involve different witnesses and different facts, circumstances, and events.

Also, because the primary element of each plaintiff's claimed damages will likely be emotional distress damages, the particular facts underlying each plaintiff's claimed damages will certainly differ. Abelson v. Nat. Union Fire Ins. Co. (1994) 28 Cal.App.4th 776, 786, 36 Cal.Rptr.2d 13, 20 ("'Damages for emotional distress are inextricably related to the conduct causing that distress[,] obviously includ[ing] the conduct of the defendant.' [Citation omitted.]").

Equally important, discovery in each of the ten coordinated cases will delve into the differing relationships between and among the various parties in each particular case, including (i) each plaintiff's particular relationship with his or her own parents and family members, (ii) each plaintiff's particular relationship with the individual defendant involved in each case, (iii) each plaintiff's particular relationship with the local congregation in each case, (iv) each individual defendant's particular relationship with the local congregation in each case, (v) each plaintiff's relationships with the three national corporate defendants (Watchtower NY, CCJW, and Watch Tower PA), and (vi) each individual defendant's relationships with each of the three national corporate defendants.

The facts underlying each of those relationships will differ depending on the particular facts and circumstances surrounding each case. For example, because the complaint in each case alleges that each plaintiff was a minor at the time of the alleged abuse, each plaintiff's own particular family situation will likely supply discoverable and relevant facts in each case.[3]

[3] E.g., Quigley v. First Church of Christ, Scientist (1998) 65 Cal.App.4th 1027, 76 Cal.Rptr.2d 792, in which the plaintiff, who was the mother a child who had committed suicide after receiving spiritual counseling, sued a church based on an alleged duty of care owed by the church to the child. As is relevant here, the Court of Appeal in Quigley stated that the father who had legal custody of the child at issue owed the child a duty of care and that the child's dependency was thus on his father and not the defendant church. Id., 65 Cal.App.4th at 1034-35. Thus, facts regarding each plaintiff's family situation will be, at a very minimum, discoverable in each case. Such facts also will necessarily differ from plaintiff to plaintiff in the ten cases involving 18 different plaintiffs.

In addition, based on the allegations in the plaintiffs' various complaints, plaintiffs apparently believe that each individual defendant's relationship with the local congregation in each case is relevant. For example, plaintiffs allege in the various complaints that some of the individual defendants were elders in a local congregation, that another was a ministerial servant in a local congregation, that one was a presiding overseer in a local congregation, etc. Further, it appears that in four of the ten cases [Jocelyn A., Danielle A., and Dennis S. (Sonoma County) and Wimberly (Tehama County)], the individual defendants never held any position of authority in any congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, and that in another three of the ten cases [Javier C. (Placer County), Charissa W. (Napa County), and Tabitha H. (Napa County)], the individuals allegedly involved were not in a position of authority during the period of the alleged abuse. In addition, one plaintiff [Javier C. (Placer County)] apparently has a criminal record that will be admissible to challenge his credibility, including on the issue of whether the alleged sex abuse ever occurred. Those examples demonstrate that each case will have different factual settings underlying each plaintiff's claims.

Thus, although coordination of certain written discovery and certain depositions of PMKs from the three national religious corporations who are defendants in each of the ten cases will assist in streamlining these cases, the different facts, circumstances, and events surrounding each particular plaintiff's case and the allegations in each plaintiff's case preclude any wholesale coordination like that proposed by plaintiffs.

THE PARTICULAR FACTS OF EACH CASE WILL LARGELY DETERMINE MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT OR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION.

Although similar legal issues may be raised in each of the ten cases, including whether an actionable legal duty is owed by each of the corporate entity Church Defendants to each plaintiff, notice issues regarding the alleged abuse of each plaintiff, First Amendment limitations on each plaintiff's claims against each of the corporate entity Church Defendants, etc., the ultimate resolution of each of those legal issues will very likely depend on the particular facts developed in each plaintiff's particular case. As noted above, the particular facts and circumstances of each plaintiff's case will be different, including the facts and circumstances of the alleged sex abuse of each of the 18 plaintiffs, each plaintiff's relationship with the individual defendant who allegedly committed the abuse, each plaintiff's own family situation, the facts regarding alleged notice to the local congregation defendant about each particular plaintiff's alleged abuse, the facts regarding alleged notice to each of the three national corporate defendants regarding each particular plaintiff's alleged abuse, and so on.

Thus, many of the legal issues, if not all of them, will turn on the particular facts developed in each case. Thus, coordination of motions for summary judgment or summary adjudication in the ten cases into a single set of motions covering all of the cases would not be appropriate. However, to promote uniformity and consistency in decisions and rulings, as envisioned by the CCP and the CRC governing coordination, the Church Defendants propose assignment of a coordination judge to hear all motions for summary judgment and summary adjudication (as well as discovery motions, as discussed in the defendants' Joint Statement).

A SINGLE, UNIFIED TRIAL OF THE TEN CASES WILL NOT RESULT IN EFFICIENT JUDICIAL ADMINISTRATION OR OTHERWISE ENHANCE JUDICIAL EFFICIENCY, NOR WILL A SINGLE UNIFIED TRIAL BE CONVENIENT FOR THE MANY NON-PARTY WITNESSES FROM EACH OF THE FIVE COUNTIES IN WHICH THE TEN CASES WERE ORIGINALLY FILED.

Plaintiffs have contended that a single, unified (or coordinated) trial should be conducted in these ten cases. However, coordinating the ten cases for a single, unified trial would not result in efficient judicial administration or enhance judicial efficiency, because each of the cases in the various counties is so factually unrelated (again, 18 different plaintiffs involving eight different alleged individuals, at least nine different local congregations, the distinct and different facts and circumstances in which the sex abuse of each plaintiff allegedly occurred, the different intra-family relationships for each plaintiff, the other relationships set forth above, etc.).

Plainly, separate juries would need to be seated for each plaintiff's case. It is not difficult to envision the logistical problems and judicial inefficiency that would be created by having to shuttle the several juries in and out of the courtroom from witness to witness in a single, unified trial.

Moreover, not only would a single, unified trial create severe logistical and case management problems for the court, but a unified trial almost inevitably would result in prejudicial and reversible error in many, if not all, of the ten cases. Thus, rather than enhance judicial efficiency, a single, unified trial would likely result in more judicial resources being required to adjudicate these ten cases, because most, if not all, of the cases would likely go up on appeal after a single, unified trial, and it is not unreasonable to suggest that several of the cases would have to be remanded for new trials after the appellate process had been concluded.

In addition, a single, unified trial would not be at all convenient for the witnesses in each of the ten cases because the majority of fact witnesses or percipient witnesses will be local to each case. As discussed above, the facts of each of the ten cases will be different with respect to the 18 different plaintiffs, the eight different individuals who are alleged to have committed the abuse, and the nine different local congregations. There are distinct and different facts concerning the circumstances in which the sex abuse of each plaintiff allegedly occurred, the circumstances involving each individual defendant's relationship with the particular plaintiff alleging claims against him, the circumstances involving each individual defendant's alleged relationship with the local congregation involved in each case, the issues of alleged notice to each local congregation of the alleged abuse by the individual defendant in each case, and so on. All of those facts will require local witnesses from each county in each case.

Thus, a single, unified trial will not be convenient for the majority of witnesses involved in each case in the five counties (or for the various plaintiffs from each of the five counties, for that matter). A single, unified trial simply will not promote the goals of coordination.

Finally in this regard, each plaintiff's claimed damages also militate against any single, unified trial. As discussed above, the primary element of each plaintiff's claimed damages resulting from the alleged sex abuse will be for claimed emotional distress damages. All claimed emotional distress damages necessarily will be unique to each plaintiff and completely dependent on the particular facts surrounding each individual plaintiff's alleged abuse. Abelson v. Nat. Union Fire Ins. Co., supra. This further supports the view that a single, unified trial would both be improper under the circumstances of these factually distinct cases and create a great risk of prejudicial and reversible error.

CONCLUSION

The Church Defendants have demonstrated above and in the Joint Statement that certain coordination is appropriate for these cases, including certain written discovery and certain PMK depositions of the three national religious corporation defendants. Assignment of a coordination judge to hear all law and motion issues also will promote uniformity and consistency in the court's rulings in the ten cases. However, beyond coordinating those issues, the facts particular to each plaintiff's own case, including the facts relating to the alleged abuse of each plaintiff, each plaintiff's own family circumstances, the differing relationships between each individual defendant and each plaintiff, each individual defendant's relationship to the local congregation in each case, the alleged notice to each local congregation regarding each plaintiff's alleged abuse, etc., dictate that other discovery, other depositions, and the dispositive motions are not reasonably susceptible to coordination.

In addition, a single, unified trial like that which plaintiffs have proposed would not result in efficient judicial administration or otherwise enhance judicial efficiency, because each of the ten cases in the various counties is so factually unrelated (18 different plaintiffs, eight different individuals who allegedly committed the abuse, at least nine different local congregations, the distinct and different facts and factual settings in which the alleged sex abuse occurred, the different relationships between the parties in each particular case, etc.). For those and the other independent reasons discussed herein and in defendants' Joint Statement, a single coordinated trial should not be ordered.

CHARISSA W. et al., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants. AND COORDINATED ACTIONS.	CASE NO: 26-22191 PLAINTIFFS' COORDINATION AND CASE MANAGEMENT PROPOSAL

PREAMBLE

On October 25, 2004, plaintiffs proposed a Joint Statement of Counsel which was forwarded to defense counsel for review and comment. The following day, a meeting was convened at the law offices of Bullivant Houser Bailey to discuss the proposed statement. This meeting was unproductive. It was clear during the meeting, most of whom attended by telephone, that an agreement on even the most basic suggestions was not possible. At the meeting's conclusion, the defense attorneys indicated they would respond in writing with their own proposal.

Their draft arrived November 13, 2004. Their statement, in our opinion, read like another "opposition" to plaintiffs' coordination motion. It was our conclusion there was little attempt on the part of the defense to assist the Court in "managing" the litigation which we believed is fundamental to the coordination process. Their statement contained conclusionary positions without supporting facts. It was precisely this type of reaction that causes Plaintiffs to seek greater involvement on the part of the Court to manage the litigation.

Because of the foregoing, Plaintiffs, therefore, submit their Case Management Proposal seeking to have the Court involved in two important areas: (1) to assist in the discovery process by managing and controlling discovery so as to avoid duplication, unnecessary expenses and anticipated disruptions; and (2) to establish realistic dates for depositions, motions and trial. As can be seen from our proposal, Plaintiffs made very specific proposals to the defendants seeking limitations on written discovery, the scheduling and location of depositions, proposed use of court reporters and videographers, the suggestion of a discovery referee, proposed dates for dispositive motions, trial setting conference, etc. Each of these proposals drew no specific response, at least to the extent of advising plaintiffs why they were unworkable.

I. WRITTEN DISCOVERY

- Form Interrogatories: A single set of form interrogatories approved by the Judicial Council may be served on each plaintiff on or before January 7, 2005. Plaintiffs will serve verified responses no later than February 12, 2005. The sections to be included in the form interrogatories are the following: 1.0, 2.0, 6.0, 8.0, 9.0, 10.0, 11.0, 12.0, 13.0 and 14.0.

Plaintiffs do not intend to serve defendants with form interrogatories.

- Special Interrogatories: Defendants may serve plaintiffs with one set of special interrogatories consisting of no more than 25 questions no later than January 7, 2005. Plaintiffs will serve verified responses no later than February 12, 2005.

In addition to special interrogatories which have already been served on the Watchtower defendants, plaintiffs may serve one additional set of special interrogatories consisting of no more than 50 questions no later than January 7, 2005. Defendants will serve verified responses no later than February 12, 2005.

If additional time is required to respond to written discovery, it shall be agreed to in writing and shall be no more than 15 days from the original agreed upon due date.

- Request for Production of Documents: Defendants may serve plaintiffs with one set of request for production of documents on each plaintiff on or before April 15, 2005. There shall be no more than 15 individual requests for each plaintiff. Verified responses to the document requests shall be served on defendants no later than May 20, 2005. The production of documents will occur at plaintiffs' counsel's office in Sacramento.

In addition to requests for production of documents which have already been served on the Watchtower defendants, plaintiffs shall serve one additional set of request for production of documents consisting of no more than 50 requests no later than January 7, 2005. Defendants will serve verified responses no later than February 12, 2005.

If additional time is required to respond to written discovery, it shall be agreed to in writing and shall be no more than 15 days from the original agreed upon due date.

- Request for Admissions: Defendants may serve plaintiffs with one set of request for admissions on each plaintiff on or before July 15, 2005. Form Interrogatory 17.1 shall accompany the requests for admissions. There shall be no more than 25 individual requests for each plaintiff. Verified responses to the document requests shall be served on defendants no later than August 20, 2005.

In addition to requests for admissions which have already been served on the Watchtower defendants, plaintiffs may serve one additional set of request for admissions consisting of no more than 25 requests no later than July 15, 2005. Defendants will serve verified responses no later than August 20, 2005.

If additional time is required to respond to written discovery, it shall be agreed to in writing and shall be no more than 15 days from the original agreed upon due date.

In the event any of the above discovery is served on opposing counsel prior to the dates set forth above, the time to respond will be accelerated in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure.

II. MOTIONS TO COMPEL

After complying with meet and confer requirements and assuming agreement cannot be reached on further responses, motions to compel further responses to written discovery shall be filed with the coordination judge/discovery referee in accordance with the California Code of Civil Procedure.

III. SCHEDULING OF DEPOSITION TESTIMONY

- Depositions of Plaintiffs: All plaintiff depositions will occur at the law offices of Nolen Saul Brelsford and will commence at 10:00 a.m. and proceed until 5:00 p.m. with appropriate breaks. If a deposition is anticipated to last more than a single day, the noticing party shall inform plaintiff's counsel and arrangements will be made for the deposition to take place on consecutive days until completed.

- Depositions of Witnesses: Any non-party witnesses will be deposed pursuant to subpoena and will take place at a mutually agreeable location within the state of California to accommodate both counsel and the witness.

All depositions occurring within the state of California will utilize the services of Joann Hipp & Associates Court Reporters, located at 2398 Fair Oaks Blvd., Suite 8, Sacramento, CA 95825, phone number 916-646-3272. Hipp shall retain custody of all original deposition transcripts and any documents produced in connection with the deposition testimony until they are requested for trial.

If any deposition is to be videotaped, notice shall be in compliance with the Code of Civil Procedure unless stipulated otherwise.

- Depositions of Watchtower Witnesses: Except for representatives from the individual Kingdom Halls, all depositions will take place in New York at the court reporting firm of _____, phone number _____. Custody of all original deposition transcripts and any documents produced in connection with the deposition testimony shall be forwarded to _____ until they are requested for trial.

If any deposition is to be videotaped, notice shall be in compliance with the Code of Civil Procedure unless stipulated otherwise.

Objections to questions posed during depositions outside the state of California shall be ruled upon immediately by an agreed upon discovery referee to avoid the time and expense of a return trip to the state of New York, or any other state where the depositions occur.

IV. DISCOVERY REFEREE

If circumstances arise that counsel cannot come to agreement on resolving objections to deposition testimony, and deponents and counsel are inconvenienced by delays in completing a deposition, consideration should be given to the appointment of a discovery referee. Should a referee be appointed by the coordination judge, the parties to this agreement agree to split the expenses on a pro-rata basis.

V. MOTIONS FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT/ADJUDICATION

Since the Watchtower defendants intend to file one or more of motions which will likely not require discovery or only very specifically directed discovery, the following is suggested:

- Counsel for the Watchtower defendants notify plaintiffs' counsel of the specific discovery needed for the anticipated motion and this discovery shall be scheduled on a priority basis. Watchtower's counsel shall notify plaintiffs' counsel of specific discovery requests no later than January 7, 2005.

- After the specific discovery requests have been identified, arrangements shall be made for the completion of that discovery no later than February 28, 2005.
- Thereafter, the Watchtower defendants shall file and serve their motion(s) by March 15, 2005. Plaintiffs shall file and serve an opposition no later than April 15, 2005. A reply shall be filed no later than April 22, 2005.

VI. TRIAL SETTING CONFERENCE

In the month of July, 2005, the court shall convene a trial setting conference to schedule one or more dates for trial. At that time, the court and counsel will determine the order in which cases will be tried, the location of trial and the judge who will preside.

A proposed order of trial is set forth below:

- Track I: Charissa W. and Tabitha H. - proposed trial date November, 2005;
- Track II: Tim Ward and Julie Guterrez/Josh Wimberly - proposed trial date February 2006.

The remaining cases most likely will have to be scheduled depending on the length of the Track I and Track II cases and the availability of counsel and witnesses.

VII. MANDATORY SETTLEMENT CONFERENCE/MEDIATION

At the trial setting conference, the court may set a date for a settlement conference(s) depending on input from all counsel regarding the probability that such a conference would be productive. Because settlement discussions will most likely be protracted, consideration will be given to scheduling more than one day and who would preside over these discussions. As an alternative to utilizing a superior court judge, private mediation should be evaluated depending on input from counsel. At this hearing, a briefing schedule will be established for the content and exchange of settlement statements.

HARRIMAN and DOES 1 through 20, inclusive, Defendants.	Case No. 26-22191 OBJECTION TO PLAINTIFF'S LITIGATION CASE COORDINATION PROPOSAL, Tracks 1-7 Placer County Case No. SCV16600

TO PLAINTIFFS HEREIN AND TO THEIR ATTORNEYS OF RECORD:

PLEASE TAKE NOTICE that Defendant A.W. Harriman, a Defendant in the Placer County Superior Court Action, Case No. SCV16600 as coordinated in the Napa County action entitled Charissa W. et al. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., action number 26-22191 of the Napa County Superior Court, hereby objects to the ex parte Litigation Case Coordination Proposal Tracks 1-7

submitted by Greg Love, on behalf of the plaintiffs.

Mr. Love's appearance as it relates to the Ken L. matter was made prior to the granting of his application for appearance pro hac vice which has been objected to pursuant to California Rule of Court 983, citing the 13 matters in which Mr. Love has either appeared or requested permission to appear here in California. Additionally, Defendant Harriman objects as follows:

1. The document was not served on the defendants until after it was provided to the court, during the course of the hearing, effectively denying the Defendants the opportunity to review the document, object to the document or otherwise respond to the document.

2. Plaintiff unilaterally represented to the court in Section "5" that "The Ken L. case involves a child that was molested by A.W. Harriman, a former Elder in the Colfax Congregation (Placer County)."

   To our knowledge, this is simply Plaintiff's allegation and has yet to be proven in any court of law. To represent this to the court in an ex parte fashion as if it were a fact established in the case, violates Rules of Professional Conduct Rule 5-300(B).

JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES LITIGATION
CASE COORDINATION PROPOSAL
TRACKS 1 – 7

A. CASE ORDER – "TRACKS"

1. Charissa W. and Tabitha H. consolidated into one case – deemed "Track 1"

The Charissa W. case has been designated as the lead case as recorded in the Yolo County Order of Coordination (by stipulation of the parties); also first case filed (July 24, 2003).

The Charissa W. and Tabitha H. cases were both originally filed in Napa County where this Court already has primary jurisdiction (not by virtue of the Coordination Order). In the event one or more Defendants wish to mandamus the Yolo County Court's Order of Coordination (which has been suggested), that mandamus would arguably only involve those cases that are impacted by the Order of Coordination (non-Napa County cases). The Charissa W. and Tabitha H. cases could proceed towards trial notwithstanding a coordination challenge.

Additionally, Charissa W. and Tabitha H. both involve molestation by the same Jehovah's Witness Elder – Edward Villegas. The discovery, trial testimony and witnesses would be identical.

A complete set of written discovery has been propounded on the defendants in the Charissa W. case; the Watchtower Defendants' responses are due and are delayed only by virtue of the present stay of proceedings.

2. Tim W. deemed "Track 2"

This case was part of the initial filing of those being coordinated (July 24, 2003).

The Tim W. case involves molestation by James Henderson, a former Elder and Presiding Overseer of the Red Bluff Congregation (Tehama County);

Defendants have expressed the potential of their challenge the constitutionality of the California Civil Statute that provided the one-year window to file civil lawsuits and their intention to request that the Napa Court issue a stay of proceedings pending an outcome of that judicial challenge. Plaintiffs are strongly opposed to any such interlocutory challenge or a stay pending such a challenge. In the event Defendants pursue a constitutional challenge, Plaintiffs recommend that the Tim W. case be deemed Track 2 so as continue the forward movement of the litigation through a case that is not impacted by a challenge to the California Civil Statute (the Tim W. case did not depend on the newly-enacted statute to be timely filed).

Plaintiffs have prepared a full set of discovery virtually identical to that set presently due from the Watchtower Defendants in the Charissa W. case.

3. Julie Guiterrez/Josh Wimberly consolidated into one case and deemed "Track 3"

This case was part of the initial filing of those being coordinated (July 24, 2003).

Julie Guiterrez and Josh Wimberly were molested by Alvin Heard, a person formerly in an appointed leadership position in the Red Bluff Congregation (Tehama County).

In the event the Defendants do not challenge the California Civil Statute, the Guiterrez/Wimberly case could easily be consolidated with the Tim W. case to gain efficiency in discovery (same Congregation, same time periods and many of the same witnesses).

4. Daniel West/Amber West/Shane Pence case deemed "Track 4"

This case was part of the initial filing of those being coordinated (July 24, 2003).

The West/West/Pence case involves three children who were molested by Tim Silva, a person formerly in an appointed leadership position in the Woodland Congregation (Yolo County).

Like the Tim W. case described above, West/West/Pence did not depend on the newly-enacted California statute to be filed timely.

5. Ken L.* case deemed "Track 5"

This case was filed on December 31, 2003; it was the next-filed case after those filed on July 24, 2003.

The Ken L. case involves a child that was molested by A.W. Harriman, a former Elder in the Colfax Congregation (Placer County).

6. Javier C.* case deemed "Track 6"

This case was filed on February 9, 2004; it was the next-filed case after Ken L.'s case

The Javier C. case involves a child that was molested by Carlos Vasquez, a former Elder in the Roseville Congregation (Placer County).

Like the Tim W. and the West/West/Pence cases described above, the Javier C. case did not depend on the newly-enacted California statute to be filed timely.

7. Dennis S.*, Nicholas S. and the Jocelyn A. cases should be consolidated and deemed "Track 7"

The Dennis S. case was filed on December 31, 2003; the Nicholas S. and Jocelyn A. cases were both filed on February 9, 2004.

The Dennis S., Nicholas S. and the Jocelyn A. cases involve children that were molested by Donald Glew, a person formerly in an appointed leadership position in the Santa Rosa Congregation (Sonoma County).

Based on information and issues being discussed with counsel for the Watchtower Defendants, counsel for Plaintiffs are closely evaluating the Sonoma County cases for dismissal of Watchtower Defendants.

C. DISCOVERY

The following discovery has already taken place:

Watch Tower Pennsylvania – all cases

1. Full set of written discovery to Watch Tower Pennsylvania (WTPA) in connection with its Special Appearance

   -responses have been provided and conference has been held regarding matters to be compelled

2. Oral deposition of "person most knowledgeable" about WTPA's California contacts

   -conference is necessary regarding deposition matters to be compelled

Watchtower Defendants – Charissa W. case (Napa County)

1. Full set of written discovery to Watchtower New York (WTNY)
2. Full set of written discovery to Christian Congregation of JW (CCJW)
3. Full set of written discovery to the Napa Congregation

   -discovery was served on these defendants on May 26, 2004; responses from all three entities are due subject to the stay related to the coordination of JW litigation; an extension has already been given

It is Plaintiffs recommendation that the Watchtower Defendants be required to fully answer the outstanding set of discovery presently due in the Charissa W. case. Plaintiff will agree to a similar set of initial discovery in all cases to allow coordination of the responses by the Watchtower Defendants and coordination in the handling of matters needing Court attention (motions to compel and deposition parameters).

Staggered discovery deadlines can be scheduled for all parties following the Track system described above. It is contemplated that discovery rulings in the Track 1 case and the Track 2 case will solve many of the issues that would otherwise arise in all cases individually.

Dear Judge Snowden:

This will clarify our August 17, 2004 correspondence, which we recently discussed with your clerk.

On August 31, 2004, the following hearings are scheduled in your court at 8:30 a.m.;

- Defendants' Motion to Quash Service of Summons for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction in Charissa W., et al.
- Defendants' Motion to Quash Service of Summons for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction, Demurrer, and Motion to Strike in Tabitha H.
- Case Management Conferences in Charissa W., et al. and Tabitha H.

Also scheduled on August 31, 2004 at 8:30 a.m. in the Yolo County Superior Court is plaintiffs' petition for coordination, which was filed with the Judicial Council, with copies filed in all counties where these cases have been instituted. We have conferred with Mr. Schnack who represents the defendants in the above referenced matters and we are both in agreement to postpone the hearings in your court on August 31, 2004. We request that the Court postpone all hearings currently scheduled in your courtroom for August 31, 2004 for approximately 60 days to November 16, 2004. Hopefully, by that time, we will have a ruling on the petition for coordination.

Enclosed for your review is a copy of the Judicial Council's order assigning the coordination motion judge, which was previously filed with the Napa County Superior Court on August 4, 2004. Also enclosed is the Yolo County order assigning the hearing date of August 31, 2004.

abuse and subsequent cover-up that plaintiffs were forced to endure for years. Coordination of these matters is proper as the actions are complex. One judge hearing all of the actions for all purposes in a selected site will promote the ends of justice when considering the common questions of fact and law predominating and significant to this litigation. Judicial economy will be served as these multiple actions will develop consistently without duplicative utilization of judicial facilities and resources. Further, coordination will avoid the disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders or judgments.

All of these cases arise out of a common set of facts and circumstances. For years, child have been sexually abused by men holding positions of authority within the Watchtower Defendants' organization. Many of those children have boldly stepped forward in an attempt to seek justice for the sexual abuse they endured, only to be quashed by the Watchtower Defendants' organization. All plaintiffs have alleged that the Watchtower Defendants have systematically conspired to cover-up allegations of sexual abuse within its organization in order to avoid harm or injury to its reputation and in order to avoid civil and criminal liability.

II

REPLY TO DEFENDANTS' ARGUMENTS

1. Same Set of Facts and Circumstances

While it is true each plaintiff was abused by an individual defendant perpetrator, under separate circumstances, the Watchtower Defendants' response to handle each allegation of abuse has been virtually identical. The Watchtower Defendants contend that plaintiffs have not alleged the causes of action against the "same group of defendants." (See Watchtower Defendants opposition at page 4:1-13.) Essentially, Watchtower Defendants contend there are different congregation defendants in each separate case. Separate defendant congregations were sued based on the geographic location where the abuse occurred. Notably, each congregation is required to follow the same direction, policies and procedures mandated by the Governing Body, an unincorporated group of men who dictate policy for the entire organization. Accordingly, each congregation looks up to the Governing Body, which directed, through a hierarchical system, how the allegations were to be handled.

2. Identical Causes of Action

Watchtower Defendants also contend the cases do not allege "identical cases of action." (See Watchtower Defendants opposition at page 4:14-28.) Two of the complaints originally filed, Charissa W., et al. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al. (Napa County) and Daniel West, et al. v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al. (Yolo County) were demurred to and ruled upon in their respective counties. The rulings in both of those cases resulted in different causes of action being sustained and overruled. All of the other cases that have been filed have been demurred to by Watchtower Defendants and have yet to be ruled upon. Accordingly, all of the cases at this point, to one extent or another, contain separate causes of action based on the timing of the rulings on demurrers. This point is precisely one of the reasons why coordination is appropriate so that all of the cases will proceed with identical causes of action and theories of recovery.[1]

While it is true each case has its own individual fact pattern giving rise to the sexual abuse, how the complaints of the abuse were handled were virtually identical based on organizational policies, which predominate all of the cases. This is also true for the Sonoma County cases Daniella A. v. Roes 1 through 100, et al., and Dennis S., et al. v. Roes 1 through 100, et al. These cases were filed December 31, 2003. The Sonoma County court has recently granted plaintiffs' ex parte applications for orders allowing plaintiffs to file amended complaints against the specific individual defendant entities and perpetrators in both cases. Plaintiffs are in the process of filing the amended complaints which will soon thereafter be served.

[1] Parenthetically, in both of the Napa county cases, (Charissa W., et al. and Tabitha H.) the perpetrator, Edward Villegas, is dead. Accordingly, those cases will not contain an allegation for sexual battery against the perpetrator while the remaining cases will contain a sexual battery cause of action against the individual perpetrator defendants who are still alive.

3. Common Questions of Law

Common questions of law also predominate all of the cases. Watchtower Defendants have filed demurrers in every case contending they are immune from liability due to alleged protections under the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. Originally, these arguments were overruled in part in the Charissa W., et al. (Napa county) and Daniel West, et al. (Yolo County) cases. In both of those cases, Watchtower Defendants then attempted to argue that the organizational defendants do not owe a duty to the plaintiffs to protect them from the sexual abuse plaintiffs were forced to endure. In Charissa W., et al., the Napa County Superior Court overruled this argument, while in Daniel West, et al., the Yolo County Superior Court has yet to rule on this issue. The hearing is scheduled for August 5, 2004. Watchtower Defendants have asserted the same theories of defense in all cases. All courts in which these cases have been filed will be called upon at one time or another to review the extensive case law and briefing on the same issues. Judicial efficiency and economy will be furthered if one court, such as Napa County, were to oversee all of these matters. Napa County is the most logical choice as it has already reviewed and ruled on two separate demurrers asserted by the Watchtower Defendants regarding their defenses premised on the first amendment and the duty issue.

Defendants assert that the nature of these cases differ from other cases that have been coordinated, such as breast or hip implant cases. In the breast and hip implant cases, all of the individual plaintiffs presumably contained separate factual backgrounds. Presumably, each plaintiff had different medical reasons for undergoing breast or hip implants. Individual healthcare providers performed separate surgeries on the individual plaintiffs. In those cases, theories of liability were premised on product defect theories against the manufacturer of the silicone and hip implant manufacturers.

In these cases, the individual plaintiffs were sexually abused by individual pedophiles. The Watchtower organizational defendants, analogous to the manufacturers of hip or silicone implants, chose to implement a course of conduct to handle complaints of the sexual abuse. Additionally, it has come to Plaintiffs' counsels' attention that a

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D. Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, CHRISTIAN CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, NAPA KINGDOM HALL now doing business as NAPA CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES and OAK KNOLL CONGREGATION OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, and DOES 1 through 20, inclusive. Defendants.	CASE NO: 26-22191 PETITION FOR COORDINATION DATE: TIME: DEPT: Trial Date: None Set

Request is hereby submitted to the Chair of the Judicial Council for assignment of a judge to determine whether coordination of the within action with the included actions referred to here is appropriate.

The request is made on the grounds set forth in Code of Civil Procedure section 404.1, namely, that the actions are complex; that one judge hearing all of the actions for all purposes in a selected site or sites will promote the ends of justice, taking into account whether the common question of fact or law is predominating and significant to the litigation; the convenience of the parties, witnesses and counsel; the relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel; the efficient utilization of judicial facilities and manpower; the calendar of the courts; the disadvantages of duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders or judgments; and the likelihood of settlement of the actions without further litigation should coordination be denied, all as more particularly set forth in the accompanying affidavits, other supporting papers, and memorandum of points and authorities.

Proof of filing in each included action of a notice of submission of petition for coordination and a copy of this petition as required by Rule 1522 and proof of service upon each party appearing in each included action of the notice of submission of petition for coordination and the petition for coordination, memorandum of points and authorities and declaration in support of petition, as required by Rule 1523 is affixed to the original of this petition as Exhibit A.

Petitioners request that this motion be heard in Napa County because This county is located in close proximity to the law offices of plaintiffs and defendants. Witnesses reside throughout Northern California and this county would be as convenient as any in which to make appearances. This county probably has greater resources to accommodate the litigation proceedings. Therefore, coordination of the included actions will serve to protect the convenience of the parties, witnesses and counsel.

INTRODUCTION

Twenty plaintiffs seek to have their personal injury complaints for monetary damages arising from sexual molestations consolidated in compliance with Code of Civil Procedure §403 and §404 - 404.9. Fifteen separate complaints have been filed to date in six counties in Northern California. These include Placer, Tehama, Monterey, Sonora, Napa and Yolo counties. It is anticipated by plaintiffs' counsel that several more complaints will be filed in these and other counties in the next few months. Each complaint alleges identical causes of action against the same group of defendants, all of whom are part of the Jehovah's Witnesses religious organization.

II

STATEMENT OF FACTS AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

Statement of Facts: Plaintiffs are all victims of child molestation. All were minor children of parents who were members of the Jehovah's Witnesses religious organization and attended services at Kingdom Halls in their respective communities when their molestations occurred. Each perpetrator of the molestations was a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses when the crimes were committed and each held positions of authority in the church organization. In all of the cases, persons of authority at the local Kingdom Halls learned about the sexual abuse and failed to take action to prevent further criminal conduct and instead chose to withhold their knowledge from law enforcement officials. The plaintiffs allege this criminal conduct was concealed from other members of the congregation whose children might be at risk and in some cases, the perpetrators remained in good standing as church leaders and were given unsupervised access to children in the organization.

Procedural Background: The first of 17[1] complaints was filed in Napa County Superior Court on July 24, 2003. The most recent complaints were filed in Placer County and Sonoma County on February 9, 2004. In each case, the complaint was accompanied by a Civil Case Cover Sheet specifying the case was "complex" under rule 1800 of the California Rules of Court. This designation was based on the following: (1) the large number of separately represented parties; (2) extensive motion practice raising difficult or novel issues that will be time consuming to resolve; (3) the large number of witnesses; and (4) that related actions are pending in one or more courts.

Because a number of the plaintiffs were over 26 years of age, specific procedural steps were mandated by Code of Civil Procedure §340.1 before this petition could be prepared. These included:

- File with the court under seal a certificate of merit for each defendant
- File with the court under seal a certificate of merit by a licensed mental health practitioner
- File with the court a complaint designating all defendants as "Doe"
- File with the court an application for permission to amend the complaint to substitute the name of the defendants for the fictitious designation.

In each of the twelve complaints, these statutory requirements have now been met. Once the Watch Tower defendants were specifically identified as required by the aforementioned code section, service of summons and complaint was accomplished on all defendants.

Defendants' responses to the Napa and Yolo County complaints were demurrers to all twelve causes of action. The first ruling on defendants' demurrer was issued by Judge Snowden in Napa County sustaining it as to certain causes of action and overruling their arguments as to others. After a second demurrer was filed in response to a first amended complaint, the court allowed five causes of action to proceed. These included: negligence, negligent appointment, retention and supervision, gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud. Defendants answered the First Amended Complaint on March 11, 2004.

[1] Two of the original 17 complaints have now been dismissed against the Church defendants only and are not included in this Petition. Three additional complaints have been dismissed in their entirety. Two of the remaining 12 cases are awaiting court approval for amendment to name the DOE defendants consistent with CCP § 340.1.

A few weeks after Judge Snowden's initial order, Yolo County Superior Court Judge Warriner issued a tentative ruling inconsistent with the opinion of Judge Snowden. After extensive oral argument requested on the tentative ruling, Judge Warriner modified his original opinion and issued an order consistent with the Napa court's reasoning. A First Amended Complaint was then filed on March 4, 2004.

Defendants' responses to the two Tehama County complaints filed in July 2003, were demurrers to all twelve causes of action. The court has not yet heard either of these motions.

Motions to Quash: The first four of these motions were filed in various counties in October 2003. Since that time, there have been a series of hearings and extensions of time to complete limited discovery requested by plaintiffs. The most significant element of this discovery is the deposition of Richard Abrahamson scheduled for June 16, 2004, in New York.

Since these filings, defendants have filed the same motion in several more cases, necessitating similar oppositions. Presumably, defendants are taking this action to hopefully secure a different ruling than the one issued in Napa. They may also be using these motions to simply occupy plaintiffs' counsel with time consuming work and delay the initiation of discovery. In either case, this conduct demonstrates the importance of this Petition to eliminate needless, time consuming and duplicative law and motion. The cases in which identical motions to quash have been filed, and their hearing dates, are:

Jocelyn A., et al. v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA
Wimberley, et al. v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA
Tim W. v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA
West v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA
Javier C. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 8, 2004
Charissa W. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 23, 2004
Lisa H. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 18, 2004
Ken L. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 22, 2004

Demurrers: Notwithstanding defendants lack of success in Napa and Yolo counties, the same demurrers are awaiting hearings in several additional case. Oppositions virtually identical to the ones previously filed by plaintiffs have been filed in these jurisdictions. If inconsistent rulings are forthcoming, more delay may be occasioned to argue motions for reconsideration, draft amended complaints and possibly initiate appeals. The cases in which demurrers have been filed and their hearing dates are as follows:

Jocelyn A., et al. v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA
Wimberley, et al. v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA
Tim W. v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA
Javier C. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 8, 2004
Lisa H. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 18, 2004
Ken L. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 22, 2004
West v. Watchtower, et al.	TBA

Motions to Strike Portions of Complaint: Also, defendants have filed motions to strike portions of the complaint in the several actions. The cases and their hearing dates are as follows:

Javier C. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 8, 2004
Tabitha H. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 15, 2004
Lisa H. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 18, 2004
Ken L. v. Watchtower, et al.	June 22, 2004

Meet and Confer Requirement: In compliance with California Rules of Court, Rule 1500(a), counsel for plaintiffs, Rudy Nolen, wrote defendants' attorney, Robert Schnack, on February 18, 2004 requesting that he agree to consolidation and coordination of all cases recently filed. Mr. Schnack requested clarification about which cases plaintiffs intended to coordinate, and whether the coordination would be for all purposes, including trial. In a letter dated February 26, 2004, plaintiffs' counsel responded that they intended all cases to be coordinated for all purposes, including trial. Mr. Schnack responded on March 2, 2004, that his clients did not agree that coordination for all purposes was proper. Exception is taken to their position.

LEGAL ARGUMENT

A. COORDINATION IS APPROPRIATE BECAUSE THE VARIOUS COMPLAINTS MEET REQUIREMENTS OF CCP § 403.

1. Common Questions of Fact and Law Predominate and are Significant in Each Action: Unquestionably, each plaintiff's molestation factually differs. The various perpetrators, all of whom were Jehovah's Witnesses who held leadership positions and who exercised authority over members of the congregation, each engaged in nefarious acts under different circumstances. However, crucial to every case, the molestations by these individuals became known to other church leaders at the local Kingdom Halls and eventually further into the church's organizational structure. Common to each case was a decision by church officials to keep these crimes from law enforcement officials. Common to each case was a decision to manage internally the criminal behavior of their fellow member by counseling the perpetrator within the church's structure. Common to each case was a concomitant decision not to tell other members of the congregation that one of their leaders was a sexual predator who had committed heinous and criminal acts on children of their fellow church members. Common to each case, the perpetrator/church leader continued to molest members' children after the perpetrator's criminal acts were known.

Each lawsuit asserts identical legal theories consisting of common law negligence; negligent appointment, retention, and supervision; gross negligence - wilful misconduct; breach of fiduciary duty; fraud - intentional misrepresentation; fraud - concealment; conspiracy; and intentional infliction of emotional distress. With the exception of Charissa W., et al. v. Watchtower, et al. and Tabitha H. v. Watchtower, et al. filed in Napa County, all of the lawsuits also assert a legal theory for sexual battery.[2] Unmistakably, the church intends to defend each lawsuit by claiming that its decision to handle the criminal behavior internally, and their corresponding inaction preventing further molestations and protecting their members' children, was conduct protected by the First Amendment. This common strategy will be utilized in every lawsuit and in view of the briefing already evident in the demurrers, motions for summary judgment/adjudication are a fait accompli.

2. The Actions are Complex: Each plaintiff is claiming emotional and psychological injuries caused by the trauma of the molestations. The injuries and damages, although complex and personal as to each individual, are no more involved than other tort actions claiming personal injuries. The complexity of these cases is related more to the number of injured individuals, their inter-family relationships in the context of their Jehovah's Witnesses beliefs and the control and influence the organization exercised over its members. This cult milieu demanded obedience to the church leadership, and a corresponding fear of ostrization if the leaders' directives were not followed. These facts allowed the events of these lawsuits to persist for years resulting in further injuries to a number of innocent children. Because the allegations involve a religious entity, unique issues of a constitutional nature are extant which are unlike those usually found in most tort claims. One need only review defendants' demurrers to appreciate the scholarly component of the theories promulgated against the Jehovah's Witnesses defendants.

3. Convenience of Parties, Witnesses and Counsel: Discovery will involve a number of depositions of church representatives, both local and out of state. Each plaintiff and close family members familiar with their trauma will be deposed along with health care providers knowledgeable about their injuries. It would be convenient to coordinate this discovery in an orderly and efficient manner here in Northern California and with a judge located near the law firms' offices in Sacramento. It is contemplated there will be numerous court filings regarding discovery issues and the less time spent by counsel traveling to a distant courthouse would benefit everyone.

4. Coordination is Consistent With the Relative Development of the Action and the Work Product of Counsel: The development of the lawsuits needs to be coordinated to avoid a duplication of effort, consistency in rulings on complex legal issues and managing the expense of prosecuting and defending the claims. The work product of counsel would be well served by coordination to the extent a single repository of documents can be agreed upon coupled with the likelihood that documents produced by defendants will be subject to a protective order regarding dissemination outside of litigation.

5. Coordination Will Advance Efficient Use of Judicial Resources: Avoiding duplicate effort in several different counties seems self-evident. Consuming the time of a number of judges and their staffs with telephone calls, lengthy and complex briefs, time consuming law and motion hearings could all be avoided by a single judge presiding over the case. His or her familiarity with the case would certainly expedite these procedures and the amount of time devoted to each matter. Naturally, multiple jury trials would clearly consume an enormous amount of time and expense, particularly when the same legal theories will be tried in each case. Finally, it goes without saying that the cost savings to the litigants would be substantial if only a single trial were necessary.

6. Coordination Will Prevent Duplicative And Inconsistent Rulings, Orders, or Judgments: The parties have already received an inconsistent ruling on demurrers filed in Napa and Yolo Counties. It is likely, given the unique constitutional issues and the anticipated objections to discovery, the potential for several judges reaching different opinions is inevitable. Most importantly, since these cases will be the subject of motions for summary judgment and/or adjudication, a single briefing and hearing would best serve the interests of justice. The possibility that judges would issue different rulings on in limine motions and evidentiary objections during a trial is unmistakable. Whether collateral estoppel applies from one case to another is likely to be another contested matter. Appeals from these rulings, given the enormity of the claims, creates further consumption of judicial resources that can be avoided if a single trial were ordered.

It is difficult to assess at this nascent stage of litigation if settlement is a realistic prospect. Litigants usually expect a settlement effort at a time appropriate to the development of the evidence. We suggest that a single jurist knowledgeable of plaintiffs' injuries and damages, the defenses asserted by the defendants and who would be familiar with counsel so as to foster a greater probability of a global settlement.

B. THE BENEFITS OF COORDINATION OUTWEIGH THE POTENTIAL CONFLICTS OR INCONVENIENCE OF THE PARTIES

It is noteworthy that defendants expressed concern in correspondence about coordinating these cases for discovery purposes. The benefits to them are obvious. They do not want the same witnesses deposed in each of the lawsuits. The expense of litigating in several different counties is something the church defendants can absorb more readily with their greater resources. Choosing to file identical motions in different counties is a tactic available to the defendants where different rulings might work to their benefit. On the other hand, plaintiffs are less likely to engage in such tactics simply because the cost of doing so would be prohibitive. It seems evident that a single judge familiar with the cases and counsel would be more convenient and would engender an atmosphere in which matters might be resolved more efficiently and consume less of the court's time, particularly when the state's budget crisis has limited a number of counties' ability to handle civil matters.

Naturally, the defendants would like to avoid a single trial because of the number of plaintiffs who have made claims. While this is an understandable concern, the interests of justice and the economics of trying 20 to 40 cases is unwieldy and seemingly impractical. The benefits outlined above outweigh the concerns of the Church. After all, it is not the plaintiffs' fault that the instances of abuse was so pervasive within this organization so as to create the problem giving rise to these lawsuits.

3. No other action is known to be pending in a court of this state that shares a common question of fact or law with the included actions.

4. Only one of the included actions has an answers to the Complaint on file. Limited discovery has commenced in the form of interrogatories and document requests, and a single deposition has been taken of a former ministerial servant/congregation secretary. Hearings have occurred, and are currently set, involving demurrers, motions to quash service and motions to strike pertinent poritions of the various complaints, which are outlined in detail at pages 4 and 5 of the memorandum of points and authorities in support of the petition. No trial dates have been ordered in any of the cases. Coordination is consistent with the relative development of the actions and the work product of counsel.

5. Based on information, research and belief, the included actions involve the following questions of fact and law: Various perpetrators, all of whom were Jehovah's Witnesses who held leadership positions and who exercised authority over members of the congregation, each engaged in nefarious acts under different circumstances. Crucial to every case, the molestations by these individuals became known to other church leaders at the local Kingdom Halls and eventually further into the church's organizational structure. Common to each case was a decision by church officials to keep these crimes from law enforcement officials. Common to each case was a decision to manage internally the criminal behavior of their fellow member by counseling the perpetrator within the church's structure. Common to each case was a concomitant decision not to tell other members of the congregation that one of their leaders was a sexual predator who had committed heinous and criminal acts on children of their fellow church members. Common to each case, the perpetrator/church leader continued to molest members' children after the perpetrator's criminal acts were known. Each lawsuit asserts identical legal theories consisting of common law negligence; negligent appointment, retention, and supervision; gross negligence - wilful misconduct; breach of fiduciary duty; fraud - intentional misrepresentation; fraud - concealment; conspiracy; and intentional infliction of emotional distress. With the exception of Charissa W., et al. v. Watchtower, et al. and Tabitha H. v.

Watchtower, et al. filed in Napa County, all of the lawsuits also assert a legal theory for sexual battery. These questions predominate and are significant in each action.

6. The actions are complex: Each plaintiff is claiming emotional and psychological injuries caused by the trauma of the molestations. The injuries and damages, although complex and personal as to each individual, are no more involved than other tort actions claiming personal injuries. The complexity of these cases is related more to the number of injured individuals, their inter-family relationships in the context of their Jehovah's Witnesses beliefs and the control and influence the organization exercised over its members. This cult milieu demanded obedience to the church leadership, and a corresponding fear of ostrization if the leaders' directives were not followed. These facts allowed the events of these lawsuits to persist for years resulting in further injuries to a number of innocent children. Because the allegations involve a religious entity, unique issues of a constitutional nature are extant which are unlike those usually found in most tort claims.

7. The trial of these common issues before one judge at one site will (1) advance the efficient use of judicial resources, (2) prevent duplicative and inconsistent rulings, orders and judgments, and (3) increase the likelihood of settlement: Consuming the time of a number of judges and their staffs with telephone calls, lengthy and complex briefs, time consuming law and motion hearings could all be avoided by a single judge presiding over the case. His or her familiarity with the case would certainly expedite these procedures and the amount of time devoted to each matter. Naturally, multiple jury trials would clearly consume an enormous amount of time and expense, particularly when the same legal theories will be tried in each case. It is likely, given the unique constitutional issues and the anticipated objections to discovery, the potential of several judges reaching different opinions is inevitable. Most importantly, since these cases will be the subject of motions for summary judgment and/or adjudication, a single briefing and hearing would best serve the interests of justice. The possibility that judges would issue different rulings on in limine motions and evidentiary objections during a trial is unmistakable. Whether collateral estoppel applies from one case to another is likely to be another contested matter. Appeals from these rulings, given the enormity of the claims, creates further consumption of judicial resources that can be avoided if a single trial were ordered.

8. The included actions should be coordinated in Napa County. This county is located in close proximity to the law offices of plaintiffs and defendants. Witnesses reside throughout Northern California and this county would be as convenient as any in which to make appearances. This county probably has greater resources to accommodate the litigation proceedings. Therefore, coordination of the included actions will serve to protect the convenience of the parties, witnesses and counsel.

I declare under penalty of perjury pursuant to the laws of the State of California that the foregoing is true and correct. This declaration was executed on May 27 2021 Sacramento, California.

Attachment to CMC Statement No. 6.b.:

Plaintiffs' counsel apparently intends to file a motion to coordinate several California cases filed against the Church Defendants involving different alleged abusers in different counties. Different local congregations in various counties are named as defendants in the various lawsuits. The Church Defendants oppose coordination for purposes of trial but likely will not oppose coordination of certain discovery and other aspects of the cases that may be susceptible to coordination. However, until a petition for coordination is actually filed by plaintiffs' counsel, the Church Defendants cannot fully respond.

Honorable W. Scott Snowden
Napa County Superior Court
Dept. B
825 Brown Street
Napa, Ca 94559

Re: Charissa W., et al v. Watchtower, et al
Napa County Superior Court No. 26-22191

Dear Judge Snowden:

I represent the entity defendants in this action and write on behalf of both plaintiffs and defendants to request a continuance of the hearing currently set for April 14, 2004 at 8:30 a.m. on defendant Watch Tower Pennsylvania's motion to quash service based on the personal jurisdiction defense. As the Court may recall, plaintiffs have requested the deposition of Watch Tower Pennsylvania's 'person most knowledgeable,' or PMK, on the personal jurisdiction issue. I have been advised that Watch Tower Pennsylvania's PMK, Richard Abrahamson, recently had serious surgery and is still out recuperating. I am further advised that, as a result, it will be sometime in May, at the earliest, when he might be available for a deposition. (Defendant Watch Tower Pennsylvania will serve objections to plaintiffs' notice of PMK deposition, but those objections are not now an issue before the Court.)

Thus, the parties respectfully request that the April 14th hearing be continued to June 1, 2004, when a similar motion to quash service in Tabitha H. v. Watchtower, et al, case no. 26-23929, is scheduled. Thank you in advance for your consideration of this request.

Very truly yours,

Robert J. Schnack

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., Defendants.	CASE NO: 26-22191 ORDER ON DEFENDANT'S DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT Date: February 19, 2004 Time: 8:30 a.m. Dept: B

TO: ALL PARTIES AND THEIR ATTORNEYS OF RECORD:

The Church Defendants demur to each cause of action in Plaintiffs' second amended complaint was regularly scheduled for hearing on February 19, 2004 at 8:30 a.m. in Department B of the Napa County Superior Court. None of the parties to the action requested a hearing regarding Defendants' demurrer and the tentative ruling was recorded as stated below.

TENTATIVE RULING: The demurrer is OVERRULED.

Plaintiffs' amended complaint contains causes of action for negligence, negligent appointment, retention and supervision, gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud. Defendants demur to the amended complaint on the ground that plaintiffs have failed to state facts to show that the defendants owed plaintiffs a legal duty of care to support each cause of action. A review of the complaint reveals that plaintiffs have stated facts that, if true, would impose a duty running from defendants to plaintiffs under ordinary negligence principles and under plaintiff's breach of fiduciary duty allegations.

As did the earlier complaint, the Plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges generally that the plaintiffs and other minors were regularly sexually abused by church leaders, that the Church defendants were notified of the abuse, and that they failed to take steps to protect the children entrusted to their care and to take steps to prevent future acts of molestation. The complaint further alleges that "rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the Watchtower defendants acted in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the [defendants'] organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children." The complaint alleges that leaders who molested children were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing and were given continued access to children in the organization, and that the organization prohibited the victims and accusers from speaking to anyone about the alleged abuse under threat of suffering severe sanctions. The complaint also contains specific allegations about the abuse allegedly suffered by the two individual plaintiffs at the hands of Edward Villegas, a Church Elder, and about the defendants' failure to provide the plaintiffs and their families with notice or warning regarding the past abuse inflicted by Villegas or take steps to protect the plaintiffs or to prevent future abuse, when it was in their power to do so. The amended complaint alleges that the Church defendants used the daycare center run out of the Villegas' home to attract new converts, that plaintiffs' families became new converts and placed their trust and confidence in Villegas and the church, and that Villegas used his position as a Church Elder to gain access to the plaintiffs and to sexually abuse them.

Defendants seek to go outside the complaint's allegations to assert that the day care center where the plaintiffs were allegedly molested was an in-home day care center that was not church-affiliated. The complaint's allegations assert otherwise, and must be accepted as true for purposes of ruling on a demurrer.

Under the reasoning expressed in Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377 and other cases cited by plaintiffs, this court concludes that the amended complaint states facts to support all of the asserted causes of action, including the required element of duty. Analyzing the allegations using the factors set down in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal.2d 108 and considering the existence of duty imposed by a special relationship, as discussed in Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, the complaint withstands demurrer.

Defendants shall answer within 20 days.

IT IS ORDERED as follows:

The Court will overrule defendants' demurrer. Defendants shall answer within 20 days.

The Church Defendants' Motion to Quash Service of Summons and Complaint also was heard on February 19, 2004 at 8:30 a.m. in Department B of the Napa County Superior Court. The Court having issued its Tentative Ruling on Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania's Motion to Quash Service of Summons as to Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ruled on February 18, 2004 as follows:

TENTATIVE RULING: The motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction is GRANTED. On November 21, 2003, this court continued this motion to allow plaintiffs to conduct discovery into Watch Tower Pennsylvania's contacts with California. Plaintiffs, who have the burden of proof, have submitted no supplemental evidence to support their opposition to defendant's motion. The defendant has submitted supplemental evidence and points and authorities in support of the motion. The court concludes from all of the evidence presented that moving defendant does not have the requisite substantial, continuous and systematic contacts with California to subject it to this State's general jurisdiction. There is also no basis for asserting personal jurisdiction over moving defendant, as none of the defendant's few contacts with this forum are related to the controversy in question. Finally, plaintiffs have provided no evidence to show that this defendant is the alter ego or that principal of other named defendants.

Counsel for Plaintiffs CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D. requested oral argument regarding the Court's ruling on defendant's Motion to Quash. Appearing for Plaintiffs CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D. was William Brelsford, Esq., of NOLEN SAUL BRELSFORD. Appearing for Defendants was Robert Schnack, Esq., of BULLIVANT HOUSER BAILEY, PC.

After oral argument by the parties, the Court having reviewed all pleadings on file with the Court regarding this motion, the Court ruled as follows:

IT IS ORDERED that the Motion to Quash Service of Summons for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction asserted by Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania is continued until April 14, 2004 at 8:30 a.m. in Department B to allow Plaintiffs additional time conduct discovery on the minimum contacts, if any, Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania has with California.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

Church Defendants generally deny each and every allegation of plaintiffs' complaint pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure § 431.30 and specifically deny that plaintiffs are entitled to any damages. This answer to plaintiffs' complaint is filed without prejudice to these answering Church Defendants' right to file an amended answer, including additional affirmative defenses and/or cross-complaints, after conducting further investigation and discovery.

For their separate and distinct affirmative defenses, Church Defendant allege as follows:

FIRST AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(First Amendment)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, is barred by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution and/or Article 1, §4 of the California Constitution.

SECOND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Constitutional Proscriptions)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, characterizes church hierarchy, doctrine, policy, and practices to establish a foundational basis for liability in violation of federal and state constitutional proscriptions.

THIRD AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Failure To State A Claim)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, fails to state facts sufficient to constitute causes of action against each of these answering Church Defendants.

FOURTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Statute of Limitations)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, is barred by the applicable statutes of limitations set forth in California Code of Civil Procedure.

FIFTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Laches)

Plaintiffs have unreasonably delayed in bringing this action to the prejudice of each of these answering Church Defendants and are therefore barred from bringing the action by the doctrine of laches.

SIXTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Mitigation of Damages)

To the extent that plaintiffs failed and neglected to use reasonable care to minimize and mitigate their claimed losses, injuries, and damages complained of, if there are any, plaintiffs' damages, if any, are barred or subject to reduction.

SEVENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Failure to Plead Fraud with Particularity)

Plaintiffs have failed to plead the requisite elements of fraud and/or misrepresentation with sufficient particularity, pursuant to Civil Code sections 1709 and 1710, and all such claims must therefore be dismissed.

EIGHTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Punitive Damages)

The complaint, and each cause of action thereof, fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against each of these answering Church Defendants for punitive damages.

NINTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Failure to Provide Notice)

Plaintiffs failed to give appropriate or timely notices required to bring their claims.

TENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Waiver and/or Estoppel)

By their own conduct, plaintiffs have waived and are estopped from pursuing the claims alleged in their complaint.

ELEVENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Third Parties)

The acts or omissions of third parties, individuals, or entities for which Church Defendants have no responsibility, either directly or indirectly, whether or not presently named parties to this action, were the sole, intervening, or contributing cause of the plaintiffs' claimed damages, if there are any. Such acts or omissions bar and/or proportionately reduce recovery, if any, by plaintiffs against the Church Defendants.

//

TWELFTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Superceding Acts)

The alleged acts or omissions, if any, of Church Defendants were not a substantial factor in bringing about plaintiffs' claimed damages, if there are any, and thereafter were not a contributing cause thereof, but were superceded by the acts or omissions of other persons and/or entities, which were independent, intervening, and proximate causes of any damages suffered by plaintiffs.

THIRTEENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(No Legal Duty)

None of the Church Defendants owed plaintiffs an actionable legal duty of care necessary to support the causes of action alleged in the complaint.

FOURTEENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Lack of Personal Jurisdiction)

Watch Tower PA lacks the contacts with California necessary for this Court to constitutionally exercise personal jurisdiction over it.

FIFTEENTH AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE

(Punitive Damages Unconstitutional)

Plaintiffs' claims for punitive or exemplary damages violates rights provided under the First, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, and/or Fourteenth Amendments to the U.S. Constitution and under the California Constitution.

WHEREFORE, Church Defendants each pray for judgment as follows:

1. That plaintiffs each take nothing by their complaint;

2. That Church Defendants each be dismissed with prejudice, with an award of costs; and

3. That Church Defendants each be awarded such other and further relief as the court deems just and proper.

By order of the Court, the Tentative Ruling is adopted and incorporated in the minutes as follows:

DEMURRER TO AMENDED COMPLAINT

TENTATIVE RULING: The demurrer is OVERRULED.

Plaintiffs' amended complaint contains causes of action for negligence, negligent appointment, retention and supervision, gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud. Defendants demur to the amended complaint on the ground that plaintiffs have failed to state facts to show that the defendants owed plaintiffs a legal duty of care to support each cause of action. A review of the complaint reveals that plaintiffs have stated facts that, if true, would impose a duty running from defendants to plaintiffs under ordinary negligence principles and under plaintiff's breach of fiduciary duty allegations.

As did the earlier complaint, the Plaintiffs' amended complaint alleges generally that the plaintiffs and other minors were regularly sexually abused by church leaders, that the Church defendants were notified of the abuse, and that they failed to take steps to protect the children entrusted to their care and to take steps to prevent future acts of molestation. The complaint further alleges that "rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the Watchtower defendants acted in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the [defendants'] organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children." The complaint alleges that leaders who molested children were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing and were given continued access to children in the organization, and that the organization prohibited the victims and accusers from speaking to anyone about the alleged abuse under threat of suffering severe sanctions. The complaint also contains specific allegations about the abuse allegedly suffered by the two individual plaintiffs at the hands of Edward Villegas, a Church Elder, and about the defendants' failure to provide the plaintiffs and their families with notice or warning regarding the past abuse inflicted by Villegas or take steps to protect the plaintiffs or to prevent future abuse, when it was in their power to do so. The amended complaint alleges that the Church defendants used the daycare center run out of the Villegas' home to attract new converts, that plaintiffs' families became new converts and placed their trust and confidence in Villegas and the church, and that Villegas used his position as a Church Elder to gain access to the plaintiffs and to sexually abuse them.

Defendants seek to go outside the complaint's allegations to assert that the day care center where the plaintiffs were allegedly molested was an in-home day care center that was not church-affiliated. The complaint's allegations assert otherwise, and must be accepted as true for purposes of ruling on a demurrer.

Under the reasoning expressed in Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377 and other cases cited by plaintiffs, this court concludes that the amended complaint states facts to support all of the asserted causes of action, including the required element of duty. Defendants shall answer within 20 days.

Counsel are advised to meet and confer with regards to the pending discovery motion and motion to quash.

The Court orders that this matter shall be continued to February 27, 2004 at 8:30 AM in Courtroom B for. Counsel may appear via telephone on February 27, 2004.

CHURCH DEFENDANTS' REPLY IN SUPPORT OF DEMURRERS TO PLAINTIFFS' AMENDED COMPLAINT[1]

DATE: February 19, 2004
TIME: 8:30 a.m.
DEPT: B

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs do not appear to challenge that a special (or confidential or fiduciary) relationship is a required element of each of their remaining claims. Also, plaintiffs largely oppose the Church Defendants' demurrers on the basis of Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 12. However, that case dealt strictly with the liability of "youth organizations" like the Boy Scouts, not with church entities, for a volunteer Scoutmaster's sexual molestation of a minor plaintiff at officially sanctioned scouting events. The Juarez court also specifically limited its holding to the facts of the Juarez case.

[1] Defendant Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania specially appears with respect to this reply, because this defendant has pending a motion to quash service of summons and complaint based on the defense that the California courts lack jurisdiction over it.

The bottom line is that Juarez does not assist plaintiffs here, and plaintiffs' operative complaint does not allege any particular facts that establish the requisite relationships with the Church Defendants (special, confidential or fiduciary) to support the remaining five causes of action. The demurrers should each be sustained.

DISCUSSION

Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America. The Juarez case on which plaintiffs heavily rely is plainly distinguishable from this Charissa W. Case, because Juarez concerned "sexual acts [that] were committed during officially sanctioned scouting events [.]" Id., 81 Cal.App.4th at 385, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d at 17 (emphasis added). The perpetrator of the abuse was Jorge Francisco Paz, who was a Scoutmaster of the Boy Scout troop to which plaintiff belonged. Id., 81 Cal.App.4th at 384, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d at 16-17. Thus, the core facts underlying the rulings in the Juarez case were that Scoutmaster Paz sexually molested the minor plaintiff at "officially sanctioned" Boy Scout events.

Those facts alone distinguish Juarez from the allegations in this Charissa W. case. However, the Court of Appeal in Juarez went further, expressly stating that "[w]e do not intend our decision to serve as a manifesto by which lower courts are to impose duties of care upon all forms of charitable organizations engaged in volunteer youth programs [.]" Juarez, 81 Cal.App.4th at 409, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d at 35. Thus, the court's own words express that Juarez does not apply outside the context of the Boy Scouts and the particular facts of the Juarez case. Juarez thus does not apply to church entities or to factual scenarios like that pled in plaintiffs' operative complaint here (see Amended Complaint at ¶24 – the sexual abuse of plaintiffs by Edward Villegas occurred at a "daycare center run out of the Villegas home [.]"). Jaurez thus has no precedential value or application here.

It is also noteworthy that in Juarez, the Court of Appeal flatly rejected the plaintiff's claim that the Boy Scouts were in any way vicariously liable for Paz's sexual molestation of him. The court held that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply, because sexual misconduct falls outside the scope of any employment or agency role that Paz may have had with the Boy Scouts. Id., 81 Cal.App.4th at 393-94, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d at 23-24.[2]

Finally with respect to Juarez, in discussing whether the Boy Scouts could be liable for its volunteer Paz's sexual molestation of the minor plaintiff at the "officially sanctioned scouting events," the Court of Appeal discussed the no duty to aid rule, i.e., the rule that liability for negligence "is not imposed for the failure to assist or protect another, absent some legal or special relationship between the parties giving rise to a duty to act." Id., 81 Cal.App.4th at 410, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d at 35 (citations omitted).

In Juarez, the court identified three instances in which children had been held to be in a "special relationship" with a defendant (significantly, none of those instances apply to this Charissa W. case): An operator of a daycare center or preschool had a special relationship to the children in attendance at the daycare; a school had a special relationship to a child during the time the child was in attendance at school, under an in loco parentis theory; and the wife of a sexual offender had a special relationship to children she invited to play in her house. Juarez, 81 Cal.App.4th at 410, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d at 35-36 (citations omitted). Similarly, in Romero v. Superior Court (2001) 89 Cal.App.4th 1068, 1080-81, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d 801, 810-11, the court held that an adult who invites a minor into his or her home assumes a "special relationship" with the minor.[3]

It is noteworthy that in each of those instances mentioned above, the children were physically present either in school or at a home such that the particular defendants had direct control over the children. Similarly in Juarez, the plaintiff was at "officially sanctioned scouting events," which led the court to find a special relationship may have existed with the Boy Scouts. In the case here, however, plaintiffs' allegations are that the sex abuse occurred at a daycare center in Edward Villegas' home, but not on church property, not at a church-sanctioned event,

[2] The Juarez court's rejection of respondeat superior liability for sexual molestation of minors is consistent with cases earlier cited by the Church Defendants, including Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609, 79 Cal.Rptr.2d 73. See Church Defendants' opening memorandum at p. 13, lines 12-25.

[3] Notwithstanding the finding of a special relationship between the adult homeowners and the child in Romero, the Court of Appeal ordered that the adult homeowner's summary judgment be granted and the case dismissed. Id., 89 Cal.App.4th at 1096.

and not when any of the Church Defendants had direct control over plaintiffs or over the Villegas' home. See Amended Complaint at ¶24.

For each of the reasons stated, Jaurez does not establish or even support plaintiffs' view that the Church Defendants had a "special relationship" with them. Simply stated, Juarez does not assist plaintiffs here.

The Rowland analysis also does not assist plaintiffs here. Plaintiffs also argue in their opposition that the analysis articulated in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal.2d 108, 70 Cal.Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561, dictates that plaintiffs were in a special relationship with the Church Defendants. However, Nally v. Grace Comm. Church of the Valley (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, 253 Cal.Rptr. 97, 763 P.2d 948, is one of several cases that refute plaintiffs' arguments.

In Nally, the California Supreme Court considered the Rowland factors in determining whether a religious counselor providing nonprofessional guidance to another person could be held liable for the person's suicide. The Supreme Court in Nally held that a pastoral counselor who "had no control over the environment of the individual being counseled" (47 Cal.3d at 294) did not have a special relationship with the individual. 47 Cal.3d at 293-301.

In holding that the religious counselor did not have a special relationship with the individual being counseled, the Nally court expressed its concern about "extending liability to voluntary, noncommercial and noncustodial relationships [,]" because such liability would abrogate the no duty to aid rule. Id., 47 Cal.3d at 298.

The same analysis applies here. Plaintiffs were not in custodial relationships with the Church Defendants. Indeed, as alleged in ¶24 of the amended complaint, plaintiffs were not under the direct control of the Church Defendants when they were sexually abused by Villegas at his home. Plaintiffs have failed to allege facts that would establish that they were in a special relationship with any of the Church Defendants, and the demurrers should be granted.

Plaintiffs have not cited any cases which hold that a special, confidential, or fiduciary relationship exists between a church and its parishioners. Plaintiffs do not allege any facts that support the existence of a legal duty imposed on a church entity to generally protect its parishioners (or the parishioners' children) from sexual crimes committed away from church premises. Indeed, plaintiffs have not cited any cases holding that a special relationship exists between a church and its parishioners.[4]

Here, plaintiffs specifically allege that the sexual abuse of them by Villegas occurred in a daycare center at Villegas' home. (Amended Complaint at ¶24). There are not any allegations that the daycare was operated by the Church Defendants, that the Church Defendants somehow had direct control over the Villegas home or of plaintiffs while they were at the Villegas' home, or that the sexual abuse occurred at an officially sanctioned church event.

Instead, plaintiffs allege only the conclusory statements (set forth in the Church Defendants' opening memorandum at p.2, line 2-p.3, line 1) that plaintiffs were somehow totally entrusted to the care of the Church Defendants. Plaintiffs thus ignore the fact that plaintiffs lived with their parents or other legal guardians and, at the time of the alleged abuse, were under the direct control of Villegas at his private home. Plaintiffs simply have not alleged any facts that would create the requisite special relationship (or confidential or fiduciary relationship) between a church and its parishioners for activities occurring away from church premises. As noted above, plaintiffs also do not allege that the Villegas' daycare center was an officially sanctioned church function or event.

Moreover, it would be a novel cause of action in California to impose a legal duty on churches to generally protect their parishioners, no matter where the parishioners might go and no matter what they are doing. Adopting such an expansive rule in California tort law would require churches to extensively screen each and every one of their parishioners, their parishioners' children, and perhaps even their parishioners' relatives and friends. Inquiries made during such a screening process would not only be untenable and unduly burdensome from a logistical viewpoint, but the inquiries also would invade privacy rights guaranteed by both the federal and California constitutions. See Roman Catholic Bishop v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal.App.4th 1556, 1566-67, 50 Cal.Rptr.2d 399, 405-06 (church employer precluded by an individual's constitutional privacy rights from investigating sexual practices of its employee; privacy right also "encompasses mental privacy" such that church employer could not constitutionally require employee to undergo psychological evaluation).

[4] The only California case directly deciding the issue of whether a special relationship exists between a church and its parishioners is unpublished. Thus, under Rule 977(a) of the Rules of Court, that case cannot be cited or relied upon.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs' conclusory allegations in the amended complaint fail to allege facts that establish the requisite special relationship needed to support each of plaintiffs' five remaining causes of action. The demurrers should be sustained under CCP sections 430.10(e) and 430.30(a).

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al. Defendants.	CASE NO: 26-22191 MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF OPPOSITION TO WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' DEMURRER Date: February 19, 2004 Time: 8:30 a.m. Dept: B

COMES NOW CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, in the above-numbered and entitled cause, and opposes Watchtower Defendants' Demurrer to the Second Amended Complaint, as follows:

I

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

This case is about the child sexual abuse of Plaintiffs suffered at the hands of Watchtower Defendants' agent, Edward Villegas. Consistent with Code of Civil Procedure § 340.1, Plaintiffs filed a complaint due to the tortious conduct of the enumerated Watchtower Defendants [1] as Doe Defendants, and then filed an amended complaint specifically naming the Watchtower Defendants after receiving a Court order allowing them to do so. The Watchtower Defendants demurred to Plaintiff's Amended Complaint on a variety of grounds, which Plaintiffs opposed.

On November 20, 2003, this Court issued its Tentative Ruling. That tentative ruling overruled Defendants' demurrer to the following of Plaintiffs' causes of action: 2) Common Law Negligence, 3) Negligent Appointment, Retention, and Supervision, 4) Gross Negligence/Wilful Misconduct, 5) Breach of Fiduciary Duty, and 7) Fraudulent Concealment and Conspiracy; sustained Defendants' demurrer with leave to amend to the following of Plaintiffs' causes of action: 1) Respondeat Superior, 6) Negligence Per Se, 8) Ratification, and 9) Alter Ego/Single Business Enterprise; and sustained without leave to amend the following of Plaintiffs' causes of action: 10) Negligent Usurpation of Investigatory Function, 11) Violation of Penal Code section 182 and 12) Violation of Penal Code section 32.

Defendants did not request oral argument. Therefore, the Tentative Ruling became the Order of the Court, signed by the Honorable W. Scott Snowden on December 2, 2003 and filed by the Court on December 17, 2003, incorporated by reference herein. Most notably, this Court, by its Ruling to Defendants' initial demurrer, concluded that Plaintiffs' causes of action two through five and seven were viable and recognized by current tort law in California and nationwide, and were not barred barred by the First Amendment.

Accordingly, Plaintiffs filed a Second Amended Complaint consistent with this Court's earlier Ruling asserting the following five causes of action: 1) Common Law

[1] Edward Villegas, the criminally convicted pedophile who sexually molested Plaintiffs and who was allowed to remain in a position of authority with Watchtower Defendants after Watchtower Defendants were advised of his criminal related behavior, was not named as defendant in this action because he is dead.

Negligence, 2) Negligent Appointment, Retention, and Supervision, 3) Gross Negligence - Wilful Misconduct, 4) Breach of Fiduciary Duty, and 5) Fraud, Fraudulent Concealment, and Conspiracy.

Now, Defendants demur to Plaintiffs' Second Amended Complaint alleging Plaintiffs' five causes of action, already ruled as viable by this Court, "fail to state facts" sufficient to constitute causes of action and that Watchtower Defendants owe no duty of care to the children entrusted to their organization. They further argue that the determination of the existence of any such duty violates the First Amendment as "clergy malpractice." As set forth in greater detail below, Defendants' arguments are without merit, mandating that this Second Demurrer be overruled in its entirety.

ARGUMENT

A. Watchtower Defendants Owed a Duty to Plaintiffs to Protect them From the Abuse of Watchtower Defendants' Agent, Edward Villegas.

As a backdrop, society's protection of children, by non-religious and religious entities alike, is of utmost priority:

> Our greatest responsibility as members of a civilized society is our common goal of safeguarding our children, our chief legacy, so they can grow to their full potential and can, in time, take our places in the community at large. The achievement of this objective is gravely threatened by sexual predators who prey on young children. The legislative judgment, which reflects a widely shared value of our society, is that the use of children as sexual objects is extremely harmful to their well-being. Its long-lasting injury often lies hidden in a victim's psyche until it works its insidious harm by impairing subsequent emotional development, if not by also crushing the victim's spirit.
> Public policy against the victimization of children is most evidence in our criminal laws, which exact a heavy toll from those who endanger our most precious asset. (Citations omitted.) So, too, it must be in our civil law. The interest of the state in protecting the health, emotional welfare and well-rounded growth of its young citizens, together with its undeniable interest in safeguarding the future of society as a whole, weigh strongly in favor imposing a duty in this case. Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377, 407.

Plaintiffs do not dispute that to support a negligence based claim, a plaintiff must plead and later demonstrate that a defendant owes a duty to the plaintiff. Religious organizations, like any other organization, owe a duty to children entrusted to its care to protect them from sexual molestation when the organization knows, or has reason to know, its own agent presents a risk or danger to its child-member being sexually abused, as alleged in Plaintiffs' Complaint. California case law, other nationwide cases[2], and public policy support this Court in concluding Watchtower Defendants owed Plaintiffs duties to protect them from being sexually abused by Defendants' own agent, Edward Villegas, especially after being on notice Villegas was suspected of sexually molesting Plaintiffs and others.

1. California Law Supports the Existence of a Duty Based upon Defendants' Conduct, as Pled by Plaintiffs:

In order to prove facts sufficient to support a finding of negligence, a plaintiff must show that a defendant had a duty to use due care, that he breached that duty, and that the breach was the proximate or legal cause of the resulting injury. (Citations omitted.) Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc. (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 377, 401.

In this state, the general rule is that all persons have a duty to use ordinary care to prevent others from being injured as a result of their conduct. Randi W. v. Muroc Joint Unified School District (1997) 14 Cal.4th 1066, 1077, citing Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal.2d 108, 112 and Civ. Code § 1714. The seminal case of Rowland enumerates the "multi-element duty assessment" in determining whether a defendant owed a tort duty to a plaintiff, including the following factors: (1) the foreseeability of harm to the injured party; (2) the degree of certainty that the injured party suffered harm; (3) the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered; (4) the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct; (5) the policy of preventing future harm; (6) the extent of the burden to the defendant; and (7) the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care, with resulting potential liability. Juarez, supra, 81 Cal.App.4th at 401, citing Rowland, supra, 69 Cal.2d at 112-113 and Adams v. City of Fremont (1998) 68 Cal.App.4th 243, 267-268.

In Juarez, plaintiff was a boy scout who was sexually molested by a scoutmaster in the organization. The Court, which held, "consideration of the Rowland factors supports the imposition of a duty of care on [defendants] to have taken reasonable protective measures to protect [plaintiff] from the risk of sexual abuse by adult volunteers," (Juarez, supra, 81 Cal.App.4th at 409-410), discussed the Rowland factors as follows: (1) the foreseeability of harm that plaintiff would be sexually molested was great because children engaged in organized group activities are at risk for foreseeable sexual abuse (Id. at 404); (2) plaintiff suffered harm and significant emotional trauma from the sexual abuse he endured (Id. at 405); (3) the absence of information about the warning indicators of impending molestation along with the absence of critical advice as to how to rebuff a sexual advance created a significant causal link between the acts or omissions of the Boy Scouts organization and the harm plaintiff suffered (Id. at 406); (4) the policy behind preventing sexual abuse from occurring is a significant societal interest (Id. at 407); (5) the organization would hardly be "burdened" by an imposed duty on it to take steps to prevent sexual abuse of children by leaders in its organization from occurring (Id. at 409); and (6) imposing a duty on the organization to prevent child sexual abuse from occurring at the hands of its own members directly benefits society as a whole, vastly outweighing any slight burden imposed on the organization (Id. at 408-409.)

Other California cases also support imposition of a duty on people and entities to prevent childhood sexual abuse. In Randi W., supra, 14 Cal.4th 1066, the school district, by and through its agents, writing a letter of recommendation of prospective administrator-employee was held to owe a duty not to misrepresent facts in describing qualifications and character of former employee, when making the misrepresentations presents a substantial, foreseeable risk of physical, sexual injury to a child-student.

In Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal.App.4th 828, 842-843, a child-parishioner's negligent hiring claim against a church for being sexually abused by the child's pastor was allowed to proceed to trial, with the court recognizing the existence of a duty owed by the church to the child-parishioner:

> The principal may be negligent because he has reason to know that the servant or other agent, because of his qualities, is likely to harm other in view of the work or instrumentalities entrusted to him... An agent, although otherwise competent, may be incompetent because of his reckless or vicious disposition, and if a principal, without exercising due care in selection, employs a vicious person to do an act which necessarily brings him contact with others while in the performance of a duty, he is subject to liability for harm cause by the vicious propensity... If liability results it is because, under the circumstances, the employer has not taken the care which a prudent man would take in selecting the person for the business at hand... If... the work is likely to subject third persons to serious risk of great harm, there is a special duty of investigation. Liability results under the rule stated in this Section, not because of the relation of the parties, but because the employer antecedently *had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm would exist because of the employment. (Emphasis added.)

The only Rowland factor which weighed in favor of not imposing a duty was the "moral blame" of the defendant-organization because, unlike the case pled by Plaintiffs herein, there was no evidence in the record that the Boy Scouts had prior notice of the troop leaders' prior sexual abuse of children or were "morally blameworthy." Instead the evidence established that they were to be "commended for being in the vanguard in fighting child sexual abuse with their educational program, which, if communicated, is geared toward teaching volunteer leaders, parents and scouts how to be aware of and avoid child sexual abuse." Juarez, supra, 81 Cal.App4th at 406-407.

Plaintiffs' Complaint satisfies each of the factors set out in Rowland and Juarez. As pled in Plaintiffs' Complaint, the Watchtower Defendants were on notice that Villegas was suspected of sexually abusing children, making it foreseeable that children, including Plaintiffs, would be sexual abuse victims of Villegas. As pled in Plaintiffs' Complaint, Plaintiffs suffered emotional, mental, and physical harm as a result of the sexual abuse they endured. As pled in Plaintiffs' Complaint, the Watchtower Defendants were notified that Villegas was suspected of sexually abusing children within the local congregation yet they continued to place Villegas in positions of authority. This placement caused injuries to Plaintiffs. The Watchtower Defendants also failed to provide any information to Plaintiffs, their families, and others in the organization so they could protect themselves from Villegas' evil acts. The omission of this vital information coupled, with Watchtower Defendants' conspiracy to "cover-up" this information to avoid harm to their reputation, is causally related to the abuse Plaintiffs endured.

As a matter of law, the prevention of childhood sexual abuse is a significant societal interest. As a matter of law, the organization would hardly be burden by taking steps to ensure children entrusted to their care are protected from sexual abuse. And as a matter of law, any conceivable "burden" Watchtower Defendants might assert by the imposition of a duty to prevent childhood sexual abuse committed by its own agent, during sanctioned activities of the organization while children were being tended to in a daycare facility run by Villegas while parents engaged in Watchtower Defendants' sanctioned activities, is vastly outweighed by the benefit to society at large in requiring the organization to take steps to redress child sexual abuse in their organization.

With respect to the "moral blame" factor, this is perhaps where Watchtower Defendants' conduct is most egregious. As pled in Plaintiffs' complaint at ¶¶ 15 through 33, the Watchtower Defendants, and each of them, operate as a single business enterprise in a hierarchical organization receiving direction from the Governing Body which sits atop the hierarchy, directing downward throughout the organization how all aspect of life, especially regarding the handling of sexual abuse claims, should be conducted. Further, the organization, as a whole, placed individuals, like Villegas, who were they knew were sexually abusing children in their organization, in positions of authority, thereby allowing them direct contact with children without taking any steps to eradicate any further abuse from occurring with children of their organization. The organization suppressed information regarding sex abuse complaints and prevented Plaintiffs, their families, and others from protecting themselves from pedophiles like Villegas, thereby exacerbating this issue and allowing it to continue.

Watchtower Defendants did nothing, as alleged in Plaintiffs' Complaint, to prevent Plaintiffs from being sexually abused after being "on notice" of Villegas' propensities to sexually abuse children. If ever there was a defendant considered "morally blameworthy" within the context of the Rowland factors, it is the Watchtower Defendants, who conspired to conceal complaints of sexually molestation to avoid harm to their reputation, again as pled in Plaintiffs' Complaint. Respectfully submitted, all of the Rowland factors support imposition of a duty on Watchtower Defendants' in this case regarding their own tortious conduct, just as in Juarez.

2. California Cases Supporting Existence of a Duty Based on Special Relationship.

In addition to the above basis for finding a duty, a "special relationship" existed between Plaintiffs and Watchtower Defendants. This duty required Watchtower Defendants to protect Plaintiffs from sexual abuse by Watchtower Defendants' own agent, Edward Villegas.

As succinctly stated by the Juarez Court:

> Generally, a greater degree of care is owed to children because of their lack of capacity to appreciate risks and avoid danger. (Citations omitted.) Consequently, California courts have frequently recognized special relationships between children and their adult caregivers that give rise to a duty to prevent harm caused by the intentional or criminal conduct of third parties. Recognized special relationships include an operator of a preschool or daycare center to the children in attendance (Citations omitted); a school district to a mother whose child was sexually molested by another student because the school stood in loco parentis while the child was in attendance (Citations omitted); and the wife of a sexual offender to children she invited to play in her home because '[b]eing of tender years they were particularly vulnerable to this sort of misconduct and not fully able to protect themselves against it. [Citation.]' (Citations omitted.) (Emphasis added.) Juarez, supra, 81 Cal.App.4th at 410.

In Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, the Court explained the meaning of a "fiduciary" or "confidential" relationship giving rise to the imposition of a duty of care:

> "[F]iduciary" and "confidential" have been used synonymously to describe... "any relation existing between parties to a transaction wherein one of the parties is in duty bound to act with the utmost good faith for the benefit of the other party. Such a relation ordinarily arises where a confidence is reposed by one person in the integrity of another, and in such a relation the party in whom the confidence is reposed, if he [or she] voluntarily accepts or assumes to accept the confidence, can take no advantage from his [or her] acts relating to the interest of the other party without the latter's knowledge or consent. (Citations omitted.) Technically, a fiduciary relationship is a recognized legal relationship sich as guardian and ward, trustee and beneficiary, principal and agent, or attorney and client (citation omitted), whereas a "confidential relationship" may be founded on a moral, social, domestic, or merely personal relationship as well as on a legal relationship. Id. at 270-271.

The Court further stated:

> The vagueness of the common law definition of the confidential relation that gives rise to a fiduciary duty, and the range of relationships that can potentially be characterized as fiduciary, led one court to usefully distill the essential elements as follows: (1) the vulnerability of one party to the other which (2) results in the empowerment of the stronger party by the weaker which (3) empowerment has been solicited or accepted by the stronger party and (4) prevents the weaker party from effectively protecting itself. (Citations omitted.) Id. at 272.

The California Supreme has held a confidential relationship may exist although there is no fiduciary relation. Vai v. Bank of America (1961) 56 Cal.2d 329-337-338. The vulnerability that is the necessary predicate of a confidential relationship usually arises from advanced age, youth, lack of education, weakness of mind, grief, sickness, or some other incapacity. Richelle L., supra, 106 Cal.App.4th at 273. Richelle L. did not involved child sexual abuse, but legal seduction of an adult woman. In the context of those facts, the Richelle L. Court concluded the adult plaintiff-appellant could not permissibly pursue her negligence-based tort claims because, "instead of alleging any of the reasons conventionally relied upon to show that a party to an alleged confidential relation is in a vulnerable position - namely, "advanced age, or youth, or lack of education, or ill health, or mental weakness", plaintiff-appellant instead relied solely on her own "piety." Id. at 280.

Here, Plaintiffs have alleged they were vulnerable because they were children entrusted to Defendants' care. Plaintiffs' youth, not their piety, is the basis of the "special", "confidential", and/or "fiduciary" relation between the Watchtower Defendants and Plaintiffs. This relationship gave rise to a duty to prevent and protect Plaintiffs from sexual abuse from Watchtower Defendants' own agent!

Other examples of special, confidential, or fiduciary relations creating a duty of care include: In re Brown's Estate, Brown v. Collins (1948) 89 Cal.App.2d 496 (an individual posing as a "minister" who moved in with an elderly woman taking charge of her household and keeping up his "pose as [decedent's] spiritual advisor, eventually persuading her to change her will and beneficiaries for "minster's" benefit, facts which were quite sufficient to support a finding that a confidential relationship existed between deceased and ["minister"]...); In re Miller's Estate: MacFarlene v. Farwell (1936) 16 Cal.App.2d 141, 152 (a confidential relationship is presumed to exist between a spiritual adviser and parishioner: "Confidential relations are presumed to exist between priest and parishioner...").

As pled in Plaintiffs' Complaint at ¶ 24, Watchtower Defendants empowered their agent Villegas to run a daycare center where Plaintiffs, and others, were "cared for" while parents engaged in activities required by the Watchtower Defendants. The day care facility was used by the Watchtower Defendants to "attract new members" to Watchtower Defendants' organization. At the daycare facility, Villegas sexually abused Plaintiffs, and others. Watchtower Defendants knew that their agent, Villegas, had previously sexually abused children as pled in Plaintiffs' Complaint at ¶¶ 25-32, yet failed to redress these wrongs.

The elements establishing the existence of a confidential relationship giving rise to a fiduciary duty owed by Watchtower Defendants to Plaintiffs are clearly present in this case: (1) Plaintiffs' vulnerability due to their age and being entrusted to the care of Watchtower Defendants (2) resulted in the empowerment of Watchtower Defendants over Plaintiffs which (3) was accepted by Watchtower Defendants and (4) prevented the Plaintiffs from effectively protecting themselves.

The Richelle L. Court recognized "there are circumstances in which tort liability for breach of fiduciary duty may be imposed on a pastor for injuries resulting from the pastor's sexual misconduct with a parishioner without offense to the religion clauses." Id. at 263. And, it also recognized that no First Amendment protection or defense is available when a"cleric is said to have sodomized young children under his charge." Id. at 275. This Court recognized this principle when it denied the Watchtower Defendants' First Demurrer on First Amendment grounds

Defendants voluntarily accepted the charge to supervise, sculpt, train, enlighten, advise, counsel, and teach Plaintiffs and other children in their organization. Yet, now they seek to argue they do not owe a duty to protect these children from their own agent, Villegas, from his proclivities to sexually gratify himself at the expense of Plaintiffs' virtue? Public policy and California dictate otherwise.

3. Out of State Cases also Support Imposing a Duty on Defendants.

Multiple out of state cases, relied on by Plaintiffs in their Opposition to Watchtower Defendants' demurrer to Plaintiffs' First Amended Complaint, also confirm a duty is owed by an organization (like Watchtower Defendants) to Plaintiffs for child sexual abuse: Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church (N.D. Tex. 1995) 898 F.Supp. 1169, 1176-7 (finding that a minister, who had sexual relations with the wife of a couple in marital counseling, owed the couple a fiduciary duty created by minister's undertaking to counsel the couple); Bear Valley Church of Christ v. DuBose (Colo. 1997) 928 P.2d 1315 (jury verdict in favor of plaintiff-child's lawsuit against church and pastor breach of fiduciary duty and negligent hiring/supervision regarding pastor's inappropriate touching of plaintiff during counseling session upheld on appeal); Byrd v. Faber (Ohio 1991) 565 N.E.2d 584, 590 (to survive a 12(b)6 motion regarding a negligent hiring claim against a religious institution, a plaintiff must pled facts indicating the individual hired had a past history of criminal, tortious, or otherwise dangerous conduct about which the religious institution knew or could have discovered through reasonable investigation); Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn (N.Y. App. Div. 1997) 229 A.D.2d 159, 164 (sexually abused plaintiff can assert causes of action for negligent retention and supervision of religious entity for its agent's tortious conduct, which does not violated constitutional of statutory guarantees of free exercise of religion and separation of church and State); Konkle v. Henson (Ind. 1996) 672 N.E.2d 450, 460 (child sex abuse victim in lawsuit need only show religious organization knew or should have had reason to know of religious entities' agent's misconduct and failed to take appropriate action to satisfy the duty element of a negligent hiring, retention and supervision claim); Malicki v. Doe (Fla. 2002) 814 So.2d 347, 361-363 (Florida Supreme Court ruled plaintiff, who was sexually abused by minister, could pursue negligent hiring/supervision/retention claim against church because danger of plaintiff being sexually molested was foreseeable and manifested itself imposing duty on church to protect child-plaintiff); Martinelli v. Bridgeport Roman Catholic Diocesan Corp. (2nd Cir. 1999) 196 F.3d 409, 429-430 (plaintiff's jury verdict was affirmed because sufficient evidence was established to prove a fiduciary duty was owed and breached by the Diocese to plaintiff-victim of sexual abuse by priest because of the "unique degree of trust and confidence between the parties, one of whom had superior knowledge, skill or expertise and is under a duty to represent the interests of the other); and Moses v. Diocese of Colorado (Colo 1993) 863 P.2d 310, 321-325 (Colorado Supreme Court held clergy-parishioner relationship involves "the type of interaction that creates trust and reliance" recognizing along with other courts there indeed is a fiduciary nature of the clergy-parishioner relationship, and upheld a plaintiff's jury verdict stemming from sexual abuse for breach of fiduciary duty and negligent hiring and supervision).

Most notably is the Court's opinion in C.J.C v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop of Yakima (Wash. 1999) 985 P.2d 262.[3] Regarding child sexual abuse suffered by plaintiffs

[3] Assuming Watchtower Defendants point out the sexual predator in their organization who abused Plaintiffs was not an employee, and instead a "volunteer" attempting to further avoid liability, C.J.C. strongly pointed out: "The fact that [both perpetrators] were volunteers does not impact our analysis. A charitable entity may be held liable for the negligence of volunteers acting in an agency capacity. Abel v. Firs Bible & Missionary Conf., 57 Wash.2d 853, 855, 360 P.2d 356 (1961). Furthermore, one who assumes to act, even though gratuitously, may be held liable for his or her negligence in from persons with authority in the church, the Court noted the current state of the law regarding the duty question, attacked by Watchtower Defendants in this case:

> Whether there is a special relationship between a church and the children of its congregation that gives rise to a duty to protect the children against foreseeable harms is an issue of first impression. In important aspects, however, activities of a church generate the kind of relationships where we have, in other contexts, imposed a duty of reasonable care. The children of a congregation may be delivered into the custody and care of a church and its workers, whether it be on the premises for services and Sunday school, or off the premises at church sponsored activities or youth camps. As in other agency relationships, a church chooses its officials, directs their activities, and may restrict and control their conduct. In many respects, the activities of a church, and the corresponding duties legitimately imposed upon it, are similar to those of a school. As a matter of public policy, the protection of children is a high priority. In general, therefore, we find churches (and other religious organizations) subject to the same duties of reasonable care as would be imposed on any person or entity in selecting and supervising their workers, or protecting vulnerable persons within their custody, so as to prevent reasonably foreseeable harm. [Emphasis added.] Id. at 273-274.

The Washington Supreme Court found in favor of imposing a duty on the Church defendants in C.J.C. to protect children from foreseeable sexual abuse by the Church's agents by stating:

> [L]iability exists not because of when (or where) the injury occurs, but because 'the actor has brought into contact or association with the [victim] a person whom the actor knows or should know to be peculiarly likely to commit intentional misconduct.... Marquay, 139 N.H. at 719, 662 A.2d 272 (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 302B cmt. E(D))....
>
> We find the rationale adopted in Marquay persuasive when analogized to circumstances presented here. In particular, we find the conjunction of four factors present in the case before us decisive to finding the existence of a duty is not foreclosed as a matter of law: (1) the special relationship between the Church and deacon Wilson; (2) the special relationship between the Church and the plaintiffs; (3) the carrying out the act. See Roth v. Kay 35 Wash.App. 1, 4, 664 P.2d 1299 (9183). See also Curran v. City of Marysville, 53 Wash.App. 358, 365, 766 P.2d 1141 (1989) (one who voluntarily assumes responsibility for the care of a child has a duty to exercise reasonable care to protect that child.)

> alleged knowledge of the risk of harm possessed by the Church; and (4) the alleged causal connection between [perpetrator's] position in the Church and the resulting harm. Under these circumstances, we simply do not agree with the Church that its duty to take protective action was arbitrarily relieved at the church door. Where a protective relationship exists, a principal is not free to ignore the risk posed by its agents, place such agents into association with vulnerable persons it would otherwise be required to protect, and then escape liability simply because the harm was accomplished off premises or after-hours. Under these facts, the focus is not on where or when the harm occurred, but on whether the Church or its individual officials negligently caused the harm by placing its agent into association with the plaintiffs when the risk was, or should have been, known. Id. at 274-275.

The holding in C.J.C. is directly applicable to this case. Villegas was an elder of Watchtower Defendants, creating a special relationship between them. Plaintiffs have pled that they were children entrusted to Watchtower Defendants' care not only during on-premises activities, but also off-premises activities being cared for by Villegas wife, while parents went out, door-to-door to attract new members within Watchtower Defendants' organization. Plaintiffs have further pled that the Watchtower Defendants were notified, on notice, and aware of suspicions that their agent Villegas was sexually molesting children, including Plaintiffs. There is a direct causal connection between the Villegas' position in the organization, the harm suffered by Plaintiffs, and Watchtower Defendants' failure to protect Plaintiffs and prevent any further acts of sexual molestation.

Watchtower Defendants owed a duty to Plaintiffs to prevent Watchtower Defendants' agent, Villegas, from sexually abusing Plaintiffs, and to protect Plaintiffs from the sexual abuse. California case law, out-of-state case law, and public policy mandate that Watchtower Defendants cannot be permitted to ignore the risk that their agent Villegas would sexually abuse children, especially after being notified Villegas was suspected of sexually abusing children. Accordingly, this Court is well within its right to overrule Watchtower Defendants' second demurrer on the Common Law Negligence, Negligent Appointment, Retention and Supervision, Gross Negligence, and Breach of Fiduciary Duty causes of action. Additionally, because it is clear that a special, confidential and fiduciary relation existed between Plaintiffs and Watchtower Defendants, it necessarily follows the cause of action for Fraud, Fraudulent Concealment, and Conspiracy should be declared viable, premised on existence of that relationship and Watchtower Defendants' own legal arguments (e.g., "Plaintiffs' amended cause of action for fraud, fraudulent concealment, and conspiracy should be dismissed, because it requires the establishment of a "special" or "fiduciary" relationship between themselves and the Church Defendants," relying on Peterson Dev. Co., Inc. v. Torrey Pines Bank (1991) 233 Cal.App.3d 103, 116, 284 Cal.Rptr. 367. See Defendants' instant demurrer at Page 11, lines 22-26. [Emphasis added.])

CONCLUSION

For all the reasons set forth hereinabove, Plaintiffs respectfully request this Court overrule Watchtower Defendants' instant Demurrer in its entirety.

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D.,

Plaintiffs,

vs.

WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al.,

Defendants.

Case No.: 26-22191

SECOND AFFIDAVIT OF RICHARD E. ABRAHAMSON

STATE OF NEW YORK)
) ss.: COUNTY OF KINGS)

I, Richard E. Abrahamson, after being duly sworn, depose and state as follows:

1. I am over 18 years of age, of sound mind, and competent to make this Affidavit. I have personal knowledge of the matters contained herein, and they are all true and correct.

2. I am the secretary and treasurer of Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ("Watch Tower PA"), who is a Defendant in this proceeding.

3. Watch Tower PA coordinates the worldwide activities of Jehovah's Witnesses by providing copyrighted literature (text and images for various publications) and financial support. Historically, Watch Tower PA has also given powers of attorney to individuals in foreign countries to act on its behalf where the national laws require the appointment of a "chief" religious person. Few, if any, foreign countries now have such requirements.

4. In most countries where Jehovah's Witnesses are legally recognized, a local corporation has been formed to be legally responsible for the various appointments of individuals and is used to communicate with congregations in that country.

5. Watch Tower PA has never acted in a supervisory capacity to any congregation in the United States, other than providing infrequent spiritual direction by mail. Additionally, Watch Tower PA has never been responsible for the appointment of individual Elders or others in the United States. Furthermore, Watch Tower PA is not responsible for any assemblies or conventions of Jehovah's Witnesses held in California or in the United States.

6. Watch Tower PA, as a recognized charity, has received donations from individuals in California. Some of these donations are in the form of real property. In many cases, the individuals have deeded a part of their property to Watch Tower PA, but have retained a life estate in the property donated.

7. Watch Tower PA administers a fund for the construction of church buildings entitled the Kingdom Hall Fund. Through this fund, Watch Tower PA has provided financial assistance to congregations in the United States and around the world to build their places of worship known as Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls. In return for the financial assistance, the congregations have executed promissory notes, or some mortgages before 1988, agreeing to pay back the loans.

8. Watch Tower PA has lent money to congregations in California through its Kingdom Hall Fund to assist in the construction of places of worship and received promissory notes or mortgages in return for the money lent. However, these financing arrangements have been conducted exclusively through the mails and over the telephone.

9. Watch Tower PA does not hold, and has never held, promissory notes or mortgages from the Napa Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Napa, California, or from the Oak Knoll Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Napa, California.

10. Watch Tower PA administers a fund named the Kingdom Hall Assistance Arrangement ("KHAA"). The KHAA is a fund created from voluntary donations and used for the discretionary purposes of Watch Tower PA. These discretionary purposes include paying for uninsured property damage to Kingdom Halls as well as expenses and liability claims arising from accidents at Kingdom Halls. No premiums have ever been collected for the KHAA. Similarly, the KHAA does not guarantee payment to any person or legal entity that contributes to the fund. Finally, the KHAA has been used by Watch Tower PA in all 50 States in the United States and in many countries around the world.

11. The Watchtower Bible School of Gilead ("School") has been owned and operated by Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. ("WTNY") since its inception in 1942. The School does not have income, in the classical sense, because students do not pay tuition or other fees. WTNY underwrites all expenses for the School. All invitations to the School have been sent by WTNY to students in the United States and around the world since its inception.

12. Watch Tower PA maintains its own separate corporate meetings. Watch Tower PA maintains its own separate corporate books and records. Members of the Board of Directors and Officers of Watch Tower PA do not sit on any other corporations, including WTNY or Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses ("CCJW").

13. Watch Tower PA prepares its own annual financial reports. These financial reports are prepared separately from all other corporations, including WTNY and CCJW.

14. Watch Tower PA maintains separate bank accounts from all other corporations. Watch Tower PA does not commingle funds with any other corporation.

15. Watch Tower PA has provided funds to other corporations, including WTNY and CCJW. These funds have been recorded as long-term receivables by Watch Tower PA and long-term payables by the other corporations. Watch Tower PA has also made gifts to other corporations and recorded them as such.

16. Watch Tower PA is not held out as liable for the debts of any other corporation, including WTNY or CCJW.

17. Watch Tower PA occupies WTNY office space under a written lease. To some extent, some of the same personnel serve all of the corporations in providing legal, accounting, and risk management services.

18. Watch Tower PA maintains all corporate formalities required by Pennsylvania law. Watch Tower PA holds annual meetings of members and directors and documents all its meetings (annual, regular, or special), and all significant corporate actions.

SIGNED this the 26th day of January, 2004.

Richard E. Abrahamson
Secretary-Treasurer of Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania

Calif. Code Civ. Proc., § 410.10 2

I. STATEMENT OF RELEVANT FACTS

On December 9, 2003, Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint naming as Defendants two local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in Napa, California, and three national religious corporations. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 3-7. One of these national religious corporations is Watch Tower PA. Amended Complaint, ¶ 4. Although the Church Defendants have collectively filed demurrers to each of Plaintiffs' five remaining causes of action alleged in the amended complaint, Watch Tower PA also earlier moved herein to quash service of summons on the basis that California courts lack personal jurisdiction over Watch Tower PA.

Richard E. Abrahamson, Secretary and Treasurer of Watch Tower PA, has previously submitted an affidavit setting forth facts about Watch Tower PA's lack of traditional physical contacts with California. For example, Watch Tower PA does not have and has never had an office, mailing address, or telephone number in California, nor does it have employees, officers, or directors residing in the State of California. (Abrahamson 1st Aff., ¶ 5) Additionally, Watch Tower PA has never maintained a place of business in California, paid taxes in California, maintained a bank account in California, held any corporate meeting in California, or engaged in commercial activity in California. (Abrahamson 1st Aff., ¶¶ 5, 6)

In further support of this motion, Mr. Abrahamson submits herewith a second affidavit explaining Watch Tower PA's non-traditional contacts with California as well as facts about Watch Tower PA's existence as a separate corporate entity. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff.)

As discussed below, the facts established by the Abrahamson affidavits demonstrate that this Court lacks both general and specific jurisdiction over Watch Tower PA. These facts also show that Watch Tower PA exists as a separate corporate entity and that the theories of alter ego, agency, and conspiracy on which Plaintiffs may rely are inapplicable to Watch Tower PA.

II. JURISDICTIONAL REQUIREMENTS

California permits its courts to exercise jurisdiction over nonresidents "on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States." CCP § 410.10. Unlike other states that limit personal jurisdiction by statute, section 410.10 "manifests an intent to exercise the broadest possible jurisdiction, limited only by constitutional considerations." Sibley v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal.3d 442, 445, 128 Cal.Rptr. 34, 36.

The federal Constitution permits a state to exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant if that defendant has sufficient "minimum contacts" with the forum State so that "maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' [Citations omitted.]" Internat. Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 316. "The 'substantial connection' between the defendant and the forum State necessary for a finding of minimum contacts must come about by an action of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum State. [Citations omitted.]" Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 112 (emphasis in original). "This restriction on the states is not merely a protection against inconvenient litigation; it is 'a consequence of territorial limitations on the power of the respective States.'[Citation omitted.]" Thos. P. Gonzalez Corp. v. Consejo Nacional de Produccion de Costa Rica (9th Cir. 1980) 614 F.2d 1247, 1251 (hereinafter "Gonzalez").

Personal jurisdiction may be either general or specific. Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal.4th 434, 445, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d 899, 906. A nonresident defendant is subject to the forum's general jurisdiction where the defendant's contacts are "'substantial ... continuous and systematic.'" Id. (quoting Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Mining Co. (1952) 342 U.S. 437, 445-46). If a defendant is subject to general jurisdiction, he or she may be subject to any cause of action in the state, including those that are not related to the defendant's contacts with the state. Id., 14 Cal.4th at 445, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d at 906. "Such a defendant's contacts with the forum are so wide-ranging that they take the place of physical presence in the forum as a basis for jurisdiction." Id., 14 Cal.4th at 446, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d at 906 (emphasis added).

If a nonresident defendant does not have substantial and systematic contacts with the state, he or she may be subject to specific jurisdiction. A nonresident defendant is subject to specific jurisdiction if all three of the following apply: (1) the defendant "'purposefully availed [itself] of forum benefits;'" (2) the controversy is "related to or arises out of" the defendant's contacts with the forum; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction would comport with "fair play and substantial justice." Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal.4th 262, 269, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d 329, 335. Thus, a nonresident defendant who is subject to specific jurisdiction may only be subject to causes of action that are related to or arise out of its contacts with the state.

III. BURDEN OF PROOF

If a nonresident defendant challenges personal jurisdiction through a motion to quash, the plaintiff must show by a "preponderance of the evidence" that the defendant has sufficient minimum contacts with the state to satisfy the constitutional considerations. DVI, Inc. v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal.App.4th 1080, 1090, 128 Cal.Rptr.2d 683, 690. The plaintiff must "present facts demonstrating that the conduct of defendants related to the pleaded causes is such as to constitute constitutionally cognizable 'minimum contacts.'" Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal.App.3d 703, 710, 215 Cal.Rptr. 442, 445. An unverified complaint (like the complaint and the amended complaint filed here by Plaintiffs) has no evidentiary value whatsoever in meeting plaintiff's burden of proving minimum contacts. Id.

IV. GENERAL JURISDICTION

A. Standard for General Jurisdiction

It is important to note that "[t]he level of contact with the forum state necessary to establish general jurisdiction is quite high." Shute v. Carnival Cruise Lines (9th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2d 377, 380, rev'd on other grounds, 499 U.S. 585 (1991); see also Bancroft & Masters, Inc. v. Augusta National Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 223 F.3d 1082, 1086 (standard for general jurisdiction is "fairly high"). The contacts with the forum state must be of a sort that "approximate[s] physical presence." Bancroft, 223 F.3d at 1086.

The test for determining general jurisdiction is whether the nonresident defendant has 'substantial, continuous, and systematic' contacts with the forum state. Vons, 14 Cal.4th at 445, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d at 906. "Factors to be taken into consideration are whether the defendant makes sales, solicits or engages in business in the state, serves the state's markets, designates an agent for service of process, holds a license, or is incorporated there." Bancroft, 223 F.3d at 1086. However, "engaging in commerce with residents of the forum state is not in and of itself the kind of activity that approximates physical presence within the state's borders." Id. Thus, "it is not the quantity, but rather the 'nature and quality' of the defendant's activities which determine whether extension of jurisdiction offends due process." Gonzalez, 614 F.2d at 1252 (emphasis added).

For example, in Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Mining Co., supra, the United States Supreme Court found that Ohio had general jurisdiction over a Philippines company when the president of the company maintained an office, kept company files, held director meetings, distributed salaries, and conducted other company business within the state. Id., 342 U.S. at 445-46. Also, in Koninklijke L.M. v. Superior Court (1951) 107 Cal.App.2d 495, a California Court of Appeal found that a Dutch company was subject to general jurisdiction in California because it had made substantial purchases of airplanes, employed some 30 local employees, and conducted other local business operations within the state.

On the other hand, when nonresidents do not have a substantial physical presence within the state, the courts have been much more reluctant to exercise general jurisdiction over them. E.g., Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall (1984) 466 U.S. 408, 414 (no jurisdiction over foreign corporation that sent officers to forum for a negotiating session, accepted checks drawn from a forum bank, purchased equipment from the forum, and sent personnel to the forum to be trained); Gates Learjet Corp. v. Jensen (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 1325, 1330-31 (no general jurisdiction over defendants despite several visits and purchases in forum, solicitation of contracts in forum, and extensive communication with forum), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1066 (1985); Boaz v. Boyle & Company, Inc. (1995) 40 Cal.App.4th 700, 717, 46 Cal.Rptr.2d 888, 898 (no general jurisdiction over corporation that targeted mailers to physicians in California and advertised in national medically related publication).

Thus, licensing agreements with California television networks and vendors has been found insufficient for general jurisdiction, even though it constitutes doing business with California. Bancroft, 223 F.3d at 1086. Additionally, the "regular sale and purchase agreements" with California residents, payments made in California, and frequent communication through the mails and by telephone "do not qualify as purposeful activity invoking the benefits and protection of the state" for the purposes of general jurisdiction. Gonzalez, 614 F.2d at 1254. Finally, the "[o]wnership of property in California 'alone'" does not support general jurisdiction. Thomson v. Anderson (2003) 113 Cal.App.4th 258, 6 Cal.Rptr.3d 262, 270 (citation omitted).

B. Watch Tower PA is Not Subject to General Jurisdiction in California

Plaintiffs in this case have urged the Court to exercise general jurisdiction over Watch Tower PA, which would subject the corporation to liability claims for any cause of action in California. However, Watch Tower PA has established through admissible evidence that it does not have the 'substantial, continuous and systematic' contacts with California that approximate a "physical presence." Vons, 14 Cal.4th at 446, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d at 906.

The first Abrahamson affidavit established that Watch Tower PA does not have any of the traditional contacts used to assert general jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. For example, Watch Tower PA was incorporated in Pennsylvania in 1884 and maintains a place of business in New York. (Abrahamson 1st Aff., ¶ 3) Watch Tower PA does not maintain an office, mailing address, telephone number in California; does not have employees, officers, or directors residing in California; has not directed commercial activity toward California; has never maintained a place of business in California; has never paid taxes in California; has never maintained a bank account in California; and has never held any sort of meeting in California. (Abrahamson 1st Aff., ¶¶ 5, 6) These undisputed facts mean that Watch Tower PA cannot be subject to jurisdiction in the California courts on the basis of the traditional indicia for general jurisdiction used in cases like Perkins or Koninklijke.

Furthermore, the second Abrahamson Affidavit submitted herewith shows that Watch Tower PA has a few non-traditional contacts with California but importantly, establishes that those are not the quality of contacts needed to establish general jurisdiction. For example, Watch Tower PA, as a charity, has received donations of real property from individuals in California. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶ 6) However, the mere ownership of property in a forum does not subject one to general jurisdiction. Thomson, 6 Cal.Rptr.3d at 270. If this were the case, then all charitable organizations would be subject to general jurisdiction in every State from which they received donated property.

According to the affidavit, Watch Tower PA has also made loans to California congregations through its Kingdom Hall Fund. The Kingdom Hall Fund is used by Watch Tower PA to provide financial assistance to congregations around the world to build their places of worship known as Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶ 7) Through this fund, Watch Tower PA has extended loans to congregations and, in return, has obtained a promissory note or mortgage from the congregations. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶ 7)

This lending arrangement, however, does not mean that Watch Tower PA has a "physical presence" in California. Vons, 14 Cal.4th at 446, 58 Cal.Rptr.2d at 906. If the "regular sale and purchase agreements" in Gonzalez, 614 F.2d at 1253-54, the licensing agreements in Bancroft, 223 F.3d at 1086, and the solicitation of contracts in Gates, 743 F.2d at 1330-31, were insufficient acts to establish general jurisdiction in the respective forums, then Watch Tower PA's acceptance of promissory notes is similarly insufficient.

Watch Tower PA, acting as an out-of-state lender, conducts these financing arrangements through the telephone and mails. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶ 8) As was pointed out by the Ninth Circuit in Gonzalez, use of the telephone and mails by a corporation like Watch Tower PA to execute these promissory notes does not lead to general jurisdiction. Gonzalez, 743 F.2d at 1331. If this were the case, then any out-of-state lending institution could be subject to general jurisdiction in California for simply making loans within the state. This result would have serious consequences not only for lending institutions but for California businesses as well.

A third contact Watch Tower PA has with California is the Kingdom Hall Assistance Arrangement (KHAA). The KHAA is a discretionary fund used to cover uninsured damage to Kingdom Halls and for liabilities arising from accidents at Kingdom Halls. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶ 10) However, the KHAA fund is not directed toward California, but is used in all fifty States of the United States and most countries worldwide. Id. Additionally, no "premiums" have ever been collected by the KHAA from California congregations for the KHAA fund; instead, congregations only made voluntary donations, and the KHAA does not guarantee payment to any person or legal entity that makes donations to it. Id. Thus, the KHAA does not constitute the type of "purposeful activity" that invokes the benefits of the California forum for purposes of general jurisdiction.

Because Watch Tower PA lacks substantial, continuous and systematic contacts with California, this Court should rule that Watch Tower PA is not subject to general jurisdiction and grant Watch Tower PA's motion to quash.

V. SPECIFIC JURISDICTION

A. Standard for Specific Jurisdiction

If a nonresident defendant does not have sufficient contacts with a forum state for general jurisdiction, the defendant may still be subject to specific jurisdiction for certain forum-related activities. When determining whether specific jurisdiction is appropriate, courts consider the "'relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation.'[Citation omitted.]" Helicopteros, 466 U.S. at 414.

A California court may exercise specific jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant provided the following three-prong test is met: "(1) 'the defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of forum benefits;'" (2) "the controversy is related to or 'arises out of' [the] defendant's contacts with the forum"; and (3) "'the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with "fair play and substantial justice."'[Citations omitted.]" Pavlovich, 29 Cal.4th at 269, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d at 335.

The purposeful availment analysis of the first prong focuses on the nonresident defendant's intent to direct activity to the state. This requirement is meant to serve as a protection for nonresident defendants so that they are not subject to a foreign jurisdiction because of "'random,' 'fortuitous,' or 'attenuated'" contacts, or as a result of the "'unilateral activity'" of another party. Id. (quoting Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 475). The principal question is whether the defendant, by 'expressly aiming at or targeting the forum state,' should reasonably anticipate being subject to that forum's jurisdiction. Bancroft, 223 F.3d at 1087.

Once the court is satisfied that a nonresident defendant has purposefully availed itself with respect to the forum, an inquiry must be made under the second prong of the test to determine whether the plaintiff's cause of action is "related to" or "arises out of" the defendant's forum contacts. Pavlovich, 29 Cal.4th at 269, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d at 335. The "relatedness factor" can be determined by considering the following: "(1) what is the business relationship between the defendant and California-based interests, (2) what is the claim asserted by the plaintiff against the defendant and (3) is there substantial nexus or relationship between the two because the latter arises out of or is substantially connected to the former." Virtualmagic Asia, Inc. v. Fil-Cartoons, Inc. (2002) 99 Cal.App.4th 228, 239-40, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d 1, 9-10. Thus, the "[c]rucial inquiry concerns ... whether the cause of action arises out of or has a substantial connection with [the forum] activity." Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal.3d 143, 148, 127 Cal.Rptr. 352, 354-55 (emphasis added).

The final prong of the test for specific jurisdiction concerns the reasonableness of subjecting a nonresident defendant to a particular forum. In order for jurisdiction to be reasonable, it must comport with "fair play and substantial justice." Bancroft, 223 F.3d at 1088.

B. Watch Tower PA is Not Subject to Specific Jurisdiction in California

As set forth above, the specific jurisdiction analysis begins with a determination of whether a nonresident defendant has purposefully availed itself to the forum state. Pavlovich, 29 Cal.4th at 269, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d at 335. In this case, Watch Tower PA arguably may have availed itself to California through its ownership of real property that was donated to it and loans made through the Kingdom Hall Fund. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶¶ 6, 8) Significantly, however, there are no other contacts where Watch Tower PA has "expressly aimed at or target[ed]" California that would constitute purposeful availment. Pavlovich, 29 Cal.4th at 271, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d at 336; see id. at 271-73, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d at 336-38 (knowledge, without express aiming at particular forum, is insufficient for purposeful availment analysis).

The second prong of the test for specific jurisdiction is whether there is a "substantial connection" or "nexus" between Watch Tower PA's forum contacts and the plaintiff's causes of action. Virtualmagic, 99 Cal.App.4th at 239-40, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d at 9. Here, the specific jurisdiction analysis completely breaks down, because none of the causes of action set forth in the amended complaint in this case are even remotely "related to" or "arise out of" Watch Tower PA's forum contacts. Pavlovich, 29 Cal.4th at 269, 127 Cal.Rptr.2d at 335. Plaintiffs' tort claims alleged here all relate to and arise out of alleged sexual abuse by Edward Villegas. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 27, 29. Plaintiffs' claims do not arise out of property held by Watch Tower PA or loans given through the Kingdom Hall Fund. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶¶ 6, 8) In fact, Watch Tower PA does not hold, and has never held, promissory notes or mortgages from the Napa Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses or the Oak Knoll Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, the two local congregations named as Defendants in this case. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶ 9)

Because Plaintiffs' causes of action do not arise out of or have a "substantial connection" to forum activity, the second prong for specific jurisdiction fails. Cornelison, 16 Cal.3d at 148, 127 Cal.Rptr. at 355. Thus, this Court should rule that specific jurisdiction does not exist and grant Watch Tower PA's motion to quash.

VI. ALTER EGO, PRINCIPAL/AGENT, AND CONSPIRACY THEORIES

In the alternative to their arguments for general and specific jurisdiction, Plaintiffs' counsel have stated to defense counsel that Watch Tower PA is subject to jurisdiction in California on the theories of alter ego, principal and agent, and conspiracy. As will be shown below, these alternative theories are insufficient to establish personal jurisdiction in California over Watch Tower PA.

A. Alter Ego

In the normal course of business, a corporation is considered to be a legal entity, separate and distinct from its stockholders, officers and directors. Sonora Diamond Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 523, 538, 99 Cal.Rptr.2d 824, 836. However, a corporate identity may be set aside, or the "corporate veil" pierced, when an abuse of the corporation arrangement justifies holding the equitable owner responsible for the corporation's actions. Id. Thus, under the "alter ego" doctrine, the courts will ignore the corporate entity when a corporate form is "used to perpetrate a fraud, circumvent a statute, or accomplish some other wrongful or inequitable purpose." Id.

In California, the alter ego doctrine cannot be invoked unless two elements are present. First, the party alleging the doctrine must show that: (1) there is "'such a unity of interest and ownership between the corporation and its equitable owner that the separate personalities of the corporation and the shareholder do not in reality exist,'" and (2) "'an inequitable result if the acts in question are treated as those of the corporation alone.'[Citation omitted.]" Virtualmagic, 99 Cal.App.4th at 244-45, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d at 13. Thus, "[a]lter ego is a limited doctrine, invoked only where recognition of the corporate form would work an injustice to a third person." Tomaselli v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1269, 1285, 31 Cal.Rptr.2d 433, 443; Sonora, 83 Cal.App.4th at 539, 99 Cal.Rptr.2d at 836 ("Alter ego is an extreme remedy, sparingly used.").

The courts have used numerous factors to determine whether a "unity of interest" exists between two corporations. Among the factors to be considered are:

> inadequate capitalization, commingling of funds and other assets of the two entities, the holding out by one entity that it is liable for the debts of the other, identical equitable ownership in the two entities, use of the same offices and employees, use of one as a mere conduit for the affairs of the other, disregard of corporate formalities, lack of segregation of corporate records, and identical directors and officers.

Virtualmagic, 99 Cal.App.4th at 245, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d at 13. No single characteristic is determinative, and the court must examine all of the circumstances before applying the doctrine. Talbot v. Fresno-Pacific Corp. (1960) 181 Cal.App.2d 425, 432, 5 Cal.Rptr. 361, 366.

Furthermore, even if a "unity of interest" is shown between two entities, "alter ego will not be applied absent evidence that an injustice would result from the recognition of separate corporate identities." Virtualmagic, 99 Cal.App.4th at 245, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d at 13 (emphasis added). Also, "[d]ifficulty in enforcing a judgment or collecting a debt does not satisfy this [injustice] standard." Id.

Because Plaintiffs have failed to make even a prima facie case to support any alter ego theory against Watch Tower PA, this Court should grant Watch Tower PA's motion to quash.

B. Principal/Agent Theory

Under the principal/agent theory, California courts may, under certain conditions, exercise jurisdiction over a parent corporation for its subsidiary's contacts with the forum state. Sonora, 83 Cal.App.4th at 536-537, 99 Cal.Rptr.2d at 834-35. According to this theory, if a "forum may assert jurisdiction over the subsidiary, the forum may extend its jurisdiction to the parent if the parent exerts a sufficiently high degree of control over its subsidiary to reasonably deem the subsidiary the agent of the parent under traditional agency principles." Virtualmagic, 99 Cal.App.4th at 244, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d at 13. Because some degree of control is a necessary incident to the parent's ownership, the degree of control for this theory must "reflect[] the parent's purposeful disregard of the subsidiary's independent corporate existence" and be exercised over the "'subsidiary's day-to-day operations.'[Citation omitted.]" Id., 99 Cal.App.4th at 245, 121 Cal.Rptr.2d at 14 (emphasis in original).

In this case, Watch Tower PA is an independent, non-profit corporation that does not act in a supervisory capacity, does not provide advice, and does not control any congregation in the United States except for occasional spiritual direction communicated by mail prior to 2001. (Abrahamson 2nd Aff., ¶¶ 4, 5) Because Watch Tower PA does not direct or control the "day-to-day operations" of WTNY, CCJW or the local Napa congregations, the agent/principal analysis fails as to Watch Tower PA. This Court should grant Watch Tower PA's motion to quash.

C. Conspiracy Theory

Plaintiffs allege that Watch Tower PA is part of a conspiracy with WTNY, CCJW and the local Napa congregations and imply that the alleged forum-related activity of the alleged co-conspirators may be used to obtain jurisdiction over Watch Tower PA. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 4, 54, 55. However, that conspiracy argument fails for two reasons. First, "the bland allegation of a conspiracy without a prima facie showing of its existence is insufficient to establish personal jurisdiction." Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal.App.3d 103, 114, 265 Cal.Rptr. 672, 678. Plaintiffs have not presented any admissible facts to the Court to support their conspiracy allegations. Second, "California does not recognize conspiracy as a basis for acquiring personal jurisdiction over a party. The cases expressly considering the issue have rejected it." Mansour v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal.App.4th 1750, 1760, 46 Cal.Rptr.2d 191, 197. Thus, even assuming, arguendo, that Plaintiffs could present evidence of a conspiracy, their conspiracy theory is insufficient as a matter of law for this Court to exercise jurisdiction over Watch Tower PA.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs have failed to present any evidence, much less sufficient evidence, to show that Watch Tower PA is subject to general jurisdiction in California or specific jurisdiction as to this case in California. Additionally, Plaintiffs cannot show that Watch Tower PA is subject to personal jurisdiction under their theories of alter ego and principal/agent or under their conspiracy theory. Thus, this Court should grant Watch Tower PA's motion to quash service for lack of personal jurisdiction in California with prejudice and dismiss Watch Tower PA from this case.

ASAHI METAL INDUSTRY CO., LTD., Petitioner
v.
SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA, SOLANO COUNTY (Cheng Shin Rubber Industrial Co., Ltd., Real Party in Interest).

No. 85-693.

Argued Nov. 5, 1986.
Decided Feb. 24, 1987.

Japanese manufacturer of valve stems, cross-claimed defendant, sought by petition for writ of mandate to compel Superior Court to quash summons upon it in state products liability action. The Superior Court, Solano County, denied petition. On appeal, the Court of Appeal issued peremptory writ of mandate commanding Superior Court to quash service of summons, and review was granted. The Supreme Court of California, 39 Cal.3d 35, 216 Cal.Rptr. 385, 702 P.2d 543, reversed and discharged the writ, and certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Justice O'Connor, held that exercise of jurisdiction by California court over Japanese manufacturer would be unreasonable and unfair.

Reversed and remanded.

Justice Brennan concurred in part and in the judgment and filed opinion in which Justices White, Marshall and Blackmun joined.

Justice Stevens concurred in part and in the judgment and filed opinion in which Justices White and Blackmun joined.

Order on remand, 236 Cal.Rptr. 153, 734 P.2d 989.

Petitioner manufactures tire valve assemblies in Japan and sells them to several tire manufacturers, including Cheng Shin Rubber Industrial Co. (Cheng Shin). The sales to Cheng Shin, which amounted to at least 100,000 assemblies annually from 1978 to 1982, took place in Taiwan, to which the assemblies were shipped from Japan. Cheng Shin incorporates the assemblies into its finished tires, which it sells throughout the world, including the United States, where 20 percent of its sales take place in California. Affidavits indicated that petitioner was aware that tires incorporating its assemblies would end up in California, but, on the other hand, that it never contemplated that its sales to Cheng Shin in Taiwan would subject it to lawsuits in California. Nevertheless, in 1979, a 1027 product liability suit was brought in California Superior Court arising from a motorcycle accident allegedly caused by defects in a tire manufactured by Cheng Shin, which in turn filed a cross- complaint seeking indemnification from petitioner. Although the main suit was eventually settled and dismissed, the Superior Court denied petitioner's motion to quash the summons issued against it. The State Court of Appeal then ordered that the summons be quashed, but the State Supreme Court reversed, finding that petitioner's intentional act of placing its assemblies into the stream of commerce by delivering them to Cheng Shin in Taiwan, coupled with its awareness that some of them would eventually reach California, were sufficient to support state court jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause.

Held: The judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded.

39 Cal.3d 35, 216 Cal.Rptr. 385, 702 P.2d 543, reversed and remanded.

Justice O'CONNOR, delivered the opinion of the Court as to Parts I and II-B, concluding that the state court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over petitioner would be unreasonable and unfair in violation of the Due Process Clause. Pp. 1033-1034.

(a) The burden imposed on petitioner by the exercise of state court jurisdiction would be severe, since petitioner would be required not only to traverse the distance between Japan and California, but also to submit *103 its dispute with Cheng Shin to a foreign judicial system. Such unique burdens should have significant weight in assessing the reasonableness of extending personal jurisdiction over national borders. Pp. 1033-1034.

(b) The interests of Cheng Shin and the forum State in the exercise of jurisdiction over petitioner would be slight, and would be insufficient to justify the heavy burdens placed on petitioner. The only surviving question is whether a Japanese corporation should indemnify a Taiwanese corporation on the bases of a sale made in Taiwan and a shipment of goods from Japan to Taiwan. The facts do not demonstrate that it would be more convenient for Cheng Shin to litigate its claim in California rather than in Taiwan or Japan, while California's interests are diminished by Cheng Shin's lack of a California residence and by the fact that the dispute is primarily about indemnity rather than the safety of consumers. While the possibility of being sued in California might create an additional deterrent to petitioner's manufacture of unsafe assemblies, the same effect would result from pressures placed on petitioner by Cheng Shin, whose California sales would subject it to state tort law. P. 1034.

(c) The procedural and substantive policies of other nations whose interests are affected by the forum State's assertion of jurisdiction over an alien defendant must be taken into account, and great care must be exercised when considering personal jurisdiction in the international context. Although other nations' interests will differ from case to case, those interests, as well as the Federal Government's interest in its foreign relations policies, will always be best served by a careful inquiry into the reasonableness of the particular assertion of jurisdiction, and an unwillingness to find an alien defendant's serious burdens outweighed where, as here, the interests of the plaintiff and the forum State are minimal. P. 1034.

Justice O'CONNOR, joined by THE CHIEF JUSTICE, Justice POWELL, and Justice SCALIA, concluded in Parts II-A and III that, even assuming, arguendo, that petitioner was aware that some of the assemblies it sold to Cheng Shin would be incorporated into tires sold in California, the facts do not establish minimum contacts sufficient to render the State's exercise of personal jurisdiction consistent with fair play and substantial justice as required by the Due Process Clause. Since petitioner does not do business, have an office, agents, employees, or property, or advertise or solicit business in California, and since it did not create, control, or employ the distribution system that brought its assemblies to, or design them in anticipation of sales in, California, it did not engage *1028 in any action to purposely avail itself of the California market. The "substantial connection" between a defendant and the forum State necessary for a finding of minimum contacts must derive from an action purposely directed toward the forum State, and the mere placement of a product 104 into the stream of commerce is not such an act, even if done with an awareness that the stream will sweep the product into the forum State absent additional conduct indicating an intent to serve the forum state market. Pp. --- - ---.

Justice BRENNAN, joined by Justice WHITE, Justice MARSHALL, and Justice BLACKMUN, agreed with the Court's conclusion in Part II-B that the exercise of jurisdiction over petitioner would not comport with "fair play and substantial justice," but disagreed with the Part II-A's interpretation of the stream-of- commerce theory, and with the conclusion that petitioner did not purposely avail itself of the California market. As long as a defendant is aware that the final product is being marketed in the forum State, jurisdiction premised on the placement of a product into the stream of commerce is consistent with the Due Process Clause, and no showing of additional conduct is required. Here, even though petitioner did not design or control the distribution system that carried its assemblies into California, its regular and extensive sales to a manufacturer it knew was making regular sales of the final product in California were sufficient to establish minimum contacts with California. Pp. 1035-1037.

Justice STEVENS, joined by Justice WHITE and Justice BLACKMUN, agreed that the California Supreme Court's judgment should be reversed for the reasons stated in Part II-B of the Court's opinion, but did not join Part II-A, for the reasons that (1) the Court's holding that the State's exercise of jurisdiction over petitioner would be "unreasonable and unfair" alone requires reversal, and renders any examination of minimum contacts unnecessary; and (2) even assuming that the "purposeful availment" test should be formulated here, Part II-A misapplies it to the facts of this case since, in its dealings with Cheng Shin, petitioner has arguably engaged in a higher quantum of conduct than the mere placement of a product into the stream of commerce. P. 1038.

O'CONNOR, J., announced the judgment of the Court and delivered the opinion for a unanimous Court with respect to Part I, the opinion of the Court with respect to Part II-B, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, POWELL, and STEVENS, JJ., joined, and an opinion with respect to Parts II-A and III, in which REHNQUIST, C.J., and POWELL and SCALIA, JJ., joined. BRENNAN, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, in which WHITE, MARSHALL, and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. ---. STEVENS, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment, in which WHITE and BLACKMUN, JJ., joined, post, p. ---.

State in the stream of commerce constitutes "minimum contacts" between the defendant and the forum State such that the exercise of jurisdiction "does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' On September 23, 1978, on Interstate Highway 80 in Solano County, California, Gary Zurcher lost control of his Honda motorcycle and collided with a tractor. Zurcher was severely injured, and his passenger and wife, Ruth Ann Moreno, was killed. In September 1979, Zurcher filed a product liability action in the Superior Court of the State of 106 California in and for the County of Solano. Zurcher alleged that the 1978 accident was caused by a sudden loss of air and an explosion in the rear tire of the motorcycle, and alleged that the motorcycle tire, tube, and sealant were defective. Zurcher's complaint named, inter alia, Cheng Shin Rubber Industrial Co., Ltd. (Cheng Shin), the Taiwanese manufacturer of the tube. Cheng Shin in turn filed a cross-complaint seeking indemnification from its codefendants and from petitioner, Asahi Metal Industry Co., Ltd. (Asahi), the manufacturer of the tube's valve assembly. Zurcher's claims against Cheng Shin and the other defendants were eventually settled and dismissed, leaving only Cheng Shin's indemnity action against Asahi.

California's long-arm statute authorizes the exercise of jurisdiction "on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States." Cal.Civ.Proc.Code Ann. § 410.10 (West 1973). Asahi moved to quash Cheng Shin's service of summons, arguing the State could not exert jurisdiction over it consistent with the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

In relation to the motion, the following information was submitted by Asahi and Cheng Shin. Asahi is a Japanese corporation. It manufactures tire valve assemblies in Japan and sells the assemblies to Cheng Shin, and to several other tire manufacturers, for use as components in finished tire tubes. Asahi's sales to Cheng Shin took place in Taiwan. The shipments from Asahi to Cheng Shin were sent from Japan to Taiwan. Cheng Shin bought and incorporated into its tire tubes 150,000 Asahi valve assemblies in 1978; 500,000 in 1979; 500,000 in 1980; 100,000 in 1981; and 100,000 in 1982. Sales to Cheng Shin accounted for 1.24 percent of Asahi's income in 1981 and 0.44 percent in 1982. Cheng Shin alleged that approximately 20 percent of its sales in the United States are in California. Cheng Shin purchases valve assemblies from other suppliers as well, and sells finished tubes throughout the world.

107 In 1983 an attorney for Cheng Shin conducted an informal examination of the valve stems of the tire tubes sold in one cycle store in Solano County. The attorney declared that of the approximately 115 tire tubes in the store, 97 were purportedly manufactured in Japan or Taiwan, and of those 97, 21 valve stems were marked with the circled letter "A", apparently Asahi's trademark. Of the 21 Asahi valve stems, 12 were incorporated into Cheng Shin tire tubes. The store contained 41 other Cheng Shin tubes that incorporated the valve assemblies of other manufacturers. Declaration of Kenneth B. Shepard in Opposition to Motion to Quash Subpoena, App. to Brief for Respondent 5-6. An affidavit of a manager of Cheng Shin whose duties included the purchasing of component parts stated: " 'In discussions with Asahi regarding the purchase of valve stem assemblies the fact that my Company sells tubes throughout the world and specifically the United States has been discussed. I am informed and believe that Asahi was fully aware that valve stem assemblies sold to my Company and to others would end up throughout the United States and in California.' " 39 Cal.3d 35, 48, n. 4, 216 Cal.Rptr. 385, 392, n. 4, 702 P.2d 543, 549-550, n. 4 (1985). An affidavit of the president of Asahi, on the other hand, declared that Asahi " 'has never contemplated that its limited sales of tire valves to Cheng Shin in Taiwan would subject it to lawsuits in California.' " Ibid. The record does not include any contract between Cheng Shin and Asahi. Tr. of Oral Arg. 24.

*1030 Primarily on the basis of the above information, the Superior Court denied the motion to quash summons, stating: "Asahi obviously does business on an international scale. It is not unreasonable that they defend claims of defect in their product on an international scale." Order

Denying Motion to Quash Summons, Zurcher v. Dunlop Tire & Rubber Co., No. 76180 (Super.Ct., Solano County, Cal., Apr. 20, 1983).

The Court of Appeal of the State of California issued a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the Superior Court to quash service of summons. The court concluded that "it 108 would be unreasonable to require Asahi to respond in California solely on the basis of ultimately realized foreseeability that the product into which its component was embodied would be sold all over the world including California." App. to Pet. for Cert. B5-B6.

The Supreme Court of the State of California reversed and discharged the writ issued by the Court of Appeal. 39 Cal.3d 35, 216 Cal.Rptr. 385, 702 P.2d 543 (1985). The court observed: "Asahi has no offices, property or agents in California. It solicits no business in California and has made no direct sales [in California]." Id., at 48, 216 Cal.Rptr., at 392, n. 4, 702 P.2d, at 549. Moreover, "Asahi did not design or control the system of distribution that carried its valve assemblies into California." Id., at 49, 216 Cal.Rptr., at 392, 702 P.2d, at 549. Nevertheless, the court found the exercise of jurisdiction over Asahi to be consistent with the Due Process Clause. It concluded that Asahi knew that some of the valve assemblies sold to Cheng Shin would be incorporated into tire tubes sold in California, and that Asahi benefited indirectly from the sale in California of products incorporating its components. The court considered Asahi's intentional act of placing its components into the stream of commerce--that is, by delivering the components to Cheng Shin in Taiwan--coupled with Asahi's awareness that some of the components would eventually find their way into California, sufficient to form the basis for state court jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause.

The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment limits the power of a state court to exert personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. "[T]he constitutional touchstone" of the determination whether an exercise of personal jurisdiction comports with due process "remains whether the defendant purposefully established 'minimum contacts' in the 109 forum State." Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 474, 105 S.Ct. 2174, 2183, 85 L.Ed.2d 528 (1985), quoting International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S., at 316, 66 S.Ct., at 158. Most recently we have reaffirmed the oft-quoted reasoning of Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 1239, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958), that minimum contacts must have a basis in "some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws." Burger King, 471 U.S., at 475, 105 S.Ct., at 2183. "Jurisdiction is proper ... where the contacts proximately result from actions by the defendant himself that create a 'substantial connection' with the forum State." Ibid., quoting McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220, 223, 78 S.Ct. 199, 201, 2 L.Ed.2d 223 (1957) (emphasis in original).

Applying the principle that minimum contacts must be based on an act of the defendant, the Court in World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 100 S.Ct. 559, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980), rejected the assertion that a consumer's unilateral act of bringing the defendant's product into the forum State was a sufficient constitutional basis for personal jurisdiction over the defendant. It had been argued in World-Wide Volkswagen that because an automobile retailer and its wholesale distributor *1031 sold a product mobile by design and purpose, they could foresee being haled into court in the distant States into which their customers might drive. The Court rejected this concept of foreseeability as an insufficient basis for jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause. Id., at 295-296, 100 S.Ct., at 566. The Court disclaimed, however, the idea that "foreseeability is wholly irrelevant" to personal jurisdiction, concluding that "[t]he forum State does not exceed its powers under the Due Process Clause if it asserts personal jurisdiction over a corporation that delivers its products into the stream of commerce with the expectation that they will be purchased by consumers in the forum State." Id., at 297-298, 100 S.Ct., at 567 (citation omitted). The Court reasoned:

110 "When a corporation 'purposefully avails

itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State,' Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. [235,] 253 [78 S.Ct. 1228, 1239, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958)], it has clear notice that it is subject to suit there, and can act to alleviate the risk of burdensome litigation by procuring insurance, passing the expected costs on to customers, or, if the risks are too great, severing its connection with the State. Hence if the sale of a product of a manufacturer or distributor ... is not simply an isolated occurrence, but arises from the efforts of the manufacturer or distributor to serve, directly or indirectly, the market for its product in other States, it is not unreasonable to subject it to suit in one of those States if its allegedly defective merchandise has there been the source of injury to its owners or to others." Id., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567.

In World-Wide Volkswagen itself, the state court sought to base jurisdiction not on any act of the defendant, but on the foreseeable unilateral actions of the consumer. Since World-Wide Volkswagen, lower courts have been confronted with cases in which the defendant acted by placing a product in the stream of commerce, and the stream eventually swept defendant's product into the forum State, but the defendant did nothing else to purposefully avail itself of the market in the forum State. Some courts have understood the Due Process Clause, as interpreted in World-Wide Volkswagen, to allow an exercise of personal jurisdiction to be based on no more than the defendant's act of placing the product in the stream of commerce. Other courts have understood the Due Process Clause and the above-quoted language in World- Wide Volkswagen to require the action of the defendant to be more purposefully directed at the forum State than the mere act of placing a product in the stream of commerce.

The reasoning of the Supreme Court of California in the present case illustrates the former interpretation of World-Wide Volkswagen. The Supreme Court of California held that, because the stream of commerce eventually brought 111 some valves Asahi sold Cheng Shin into California, Asahi's awareness that its valves would be sold in California was sufficient to permit California to exercise jurisdiction over Asahi consistent with the requirements of the Due Process Clause. The Supreme Court of California's position was consistent with those courts that have held that mere foreseeability or awareness was a constitutionally sufficient basis for personal jurisdiction if the defendant's product made its way into the forum State while still in the stream of commerce. See Bean Dredging Corp. v. Dredge Technology Corp., 744 F.2d 1081 (CA5 1984); Hedrick v. Daiko Shoji Co., 715 F.2d 1355 (CA9 1983).

Other courts, however, have understood the Due Process Clause to require something more than that the defendant was aware of its product's entry into the forum State through the stream of commerce in order for the State to exert jurisdiction over the defendant. In the present case, for example, the State Court of Appeal did not read the Due Process Clause, as interpreted by World-Wide Volkswagen, to allow "mere foreseeability that the product *1032 will enter the forum state [to] be enough by itself to establish jurisdiction over the distributor and retailer." App. to Pet. for Cert. B5. In Humble v. Toyota Motor Co., 727 F.2d 709 (CA8 1984), an injured car passenger brought suit against Arakawa Auto Body Company, a Japanese corporation that manufactured car seats for Toyota. Arakawa did no business in the United States; it had no office, affiliate, subsidiary, or agent in the United States; it manufactured its component parts outside the United States and delivered them to Toyota Motor Company in Japan. The Court of Appeals, adopting the reasoning of the District Court in that case, noted that although it "does not doubt that Arakawa could have foreseen that its product would find its way into the United States," it would be "manifestly unjust" to require Arakawa to defend itself in the United States. Id., at 710-711, quoting 578 F.Supp. 530, 533 (ND Iowa 1982). See also 112Hutson v. Fehr Bros., Inc.,* 584 F.2d 833 (CA8 1978); see generally Max Daetwyler Corp. v. R. Meyer, 762 F.2d 290, 299 (CA3 1985) (collecting "stream of commerce" cases in which the "manufacturers involved had made deliberate decisions to market their products in the forum state").

[1] We now find this latter position to be consonant with the requirements of due process. The "substantial connection," Burger King, 471 U.S., at 475, 105 S.Ct., at 2184; McGee, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201, between the defendant and the forum State necessary for a finding of minimum contacts must come about by an action of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum State. Burger King, supra, 471 U.S., at 476, 105 S.Ct., at 2184; Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 774, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1478, 79 L.Ed.2d 790 (1984). The placement of a product into the stream of commerce, without more, is not an act of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum State. Additional conduct of the defendant may indicate an intent or purpose to serve the market in the forum State, for example, designing the product for the market in the forum State, advertising in the forum State, establishing channels for providing regular advice to customers in the forum State, or marketing the product through a distributor who has agreed to serve as the sales agent in the forum State. But a defendant's awareness that the stream of commerce may or will sweep the product into the forum State does not convert the mere act of placing the product into the stream into an act purposefully directed toward the forum State.

[2] Assuming, arguendo, that respondents have established Asahi's awareness that some of the valves sold to Cheng Shin would be incorporated into tire tubes sold in California, respondents have not demonstrated any action by Asahi to purposefully avail itself of the California market. Asahi does not do business in California. It has no office, agents, employees, or property in California. It does not advertise or otherwise solicit business in California. It did not create, control, or employ the distribution system that brought its valves to California. Cf. *113*Hicks v. Kawasaki Heavy Indus* tries, 452 F.Supp. 130 (MD Pa.1978). There is no evidence that Asahi designed its product in anticipation of sales in California. Cf. Rockwell International Corp. v. Costruzioni Aeronautiche Giovanni Agusta, 553 F.Supp. 328 (ED Pa.1982). On the basis of these facts, the exertion of personal jurisdiction over Asahi by the Superior Court of California [FN*] exceeds the limits of due process.

FN* We have no occasion here to determine whether Congress could, consistent with the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment, authorize federal court personal jurisdiction over alien defendants based on the aggregate of national contacts, rather than on the contacts between the defendant and the State in which the federal court sits. See Max Daetwyler Corp. v. R. Meyer, 762 F.2d 290, 293-295 (CA3 1985); DeJames v. Magnificence Carriers, Inc., 654 F.2d 280, 283 (CA3 1981); see also Born, Reflections on Judicial Jurisdiction in International Cases, to be published in 17 Ga.J. Int'l & Comp.L. 1 (1987); Lilly, Jurisdiction Over Domestic and Alien Defendants, 69 Va.L.Rev. 85, 127-145 (1983).

The strictures of the Due Process Clause forbid a state court to exercise personal jurisdiction over Asahi under circumstances that would offend " 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' " International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S., at 316, 66 S.Ct., at 158; quoting Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S., at 463, 61 S.Ct., at 342.

We have previously explained that the determination of the reasonableness of the exercise of jurisdiction in each case will depend on an evaluation of several factors. A court must consider the burden on the defendant, the interests of the forum State, and the plaintiff's interest in obtaining relief. It must also weigh in its determination "the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies; and the shared interest of the several States in furthering fundamental substantive social policies." World-Wide Volkswagen, 444 U.S., at 292, 100 S.Ct., at 564 (citations omitted).

114 [3] A consideration of these factors in the present case clearly reveals the unreasonableness of the assertion of jurisdiction over Asahi, even apart from the question of the placement of goods in the stream of commerce.

Certainly the burden on the defendant in this case is severe. Asahi has been commanded by the Supreme Court of California not only to traverse the distance between Asahi's headquarters in Japan and the Superior Court of California in and for the County of Solano, but also to submit its dispute with Cheng Shin to a foreign nation's judicial system. The unique burdens placed upon one who must defend oneself in a foreign legal system should have significant weight in assessing the reasonableness of stretching the long arm of personal jurisdiction over national borders.

When minimum contacts have been established, often the interests of the plaintiff and the forum in the exercise of jurisdiction will justify even the serious burdens placed on the alien defendant. In the present case, however, the interests of the plaintiff and the forum in California's assertion of jurisdiction over Asahi are slight. All that remains is a claim for indemnification asserted by Cheng Shin, a Taiwanese corporation, against Asahi. The transaction on which the indemnification claim is based took place in Taiwan; Asahi's components were shipped from Japan to Taiwan. Cheng Shin has not demonstrated that it is more convenient for it to litigate its indemnification claim against Asahi in California rather than in Taiwan or Japan.

Because the plaintiff is not a California resident, California's legitimate interests in the dispute have considerably diminished. The Supreme Court of California argued that the State had an interest in "protecting its consumers by ensuring that foreign manufacturers comply with the state's safety standards." 39 Cal.3d, at 49, 216 Cal.Rptr., at 392, 702 P.2d, at 550. The State Supreme Court's definition of California's interest, however, was overly broad. The dispute between Cheng Shin and Asahi is primarily about indemnification rather than safety 115 standards. Moreover, it is not at all clear at this point that California law should govern the question whether a Japanese corporation should indemnify a Taiwanese corporation on the basis of a sale made in Taiwan and a shipment of goods from Japan to Taiwan. Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 821-822, 105 S.Ct. 2965, 2979-2980, 86 L.Ed.2d 628 (1985); Allstate Insurance Co. v. Hague, 449 U.S. 302, 312-313, 101 S.Ct. 633, 639-640, 66 L.Ed.2d 521 (1981). The possibility of being haled into a California court as a result of an accident involving Asahi's components undoubtedly creates an additional deterrent to the manufacture of unsafe components; however, similar pressures will be placed on Asahi by the purchasers of its components as long as those who use Asahi components in their final products, and sell those products in California, are subject to the application of California tort law.

1034 World-Wide Volkswagen also admonished courts to take into consideration the interests of the "several States," in addition to the forum State, in the efficient judicial resolution of the dispute and the advancement of substantive policies. In the present case, this advice calls for a court to consider the procedural and substantive policies of other nations whose interests are affected by the assertion of jurisdiction by the California court. The procedural and substantive interests of other nations in a state court's assertion of jurisdiction over an alien defendant will differ from case to case. In every case, however, those interests, as well as the Federal interest in Government's foreign relations policies, will be best served by a careful inquiry into the reasonableness of the assertion of jurisdiction in the particular case, and an unwillingness to find the serious burdens on an alien defendant outweighed by minimal interests on the part of the plaintiff or the forum State. "Great care and reserve should be exercised when extending our notions of personal jurisdiction into the international field." United States v. First National City Bank, 379 U.S. 378, 404, 85 S.Ct. 528, 542, 13 L.Ed.2d 365 (1965) (Harlan, J., dissenting). See Born, Reflections on Judicial Jurisdiction in International Cases, to be published in 17 Ga.J. Int'l & Comp. L. 1 (1987).

116 Considering the international context, the heavy burden on the alien defendant, and the slight interests of the plaintiff and the forum State, the exercise of personal jurisdiction by a California court over Asahi in this instance would be unreasonable and unfair.

III

Because the facts of this case do not establish minimum contacts such that the exercise of personal jurisdiction is consistent with fair play and substantial justice, the judgment of the Supreme Court of California is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

I do not agree with the interpretation in Part II-A of the stream-of-commerce theory, nor with the conclusion that Asahi did not "purposely avail itself of the California market." Ante, at 1034. I do agree, however, with the Court's conclusion in Part II-B that the exercise of personal jurisdiction over Asahi in this case would not comport with "fair play and substantial justice," International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320, 66 S.Ct. 154, 160, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945). This is one of those rare cases in which "minimum requirements inherent in the concept of 'fair play and substantial justice' ... defeat the reasonableness of jurisdiction even [though] the defendant has purposefully engaged in forum activities." Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 477-478, 105 S.Ct. 2174, 2184-2185, 85 L.Ed.2d 528 (1985). I therefore join Parts I and II-B of the Court's opinion, and write separately to explain my disagreement with Part II-A.

Part II-A states that "a defendant's awareness that the stream of commerce may or will sweep the product into the forum State does not convert the mere act of placing the product into the stream into an act purposefully directed toward 117 the forum State." Ante, at 1033. Under this view, a plaintiff would be required to show "[a]dditional conduct" directed toward the forum before finding the exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant to be consistent with the Due Process Clause. Ibid. I see no need for such a showing, however. The stream of commerce refers not to unpredictable currents or eddies, but to the regular and anticipated flow of products from manufacture to distribution to retail sale. As long as a participant in this process is aware that the final product is being marketed in the forum State, the possibility of a lawsuit there cannot come as a surprise. Nor will the litigation present a burden for *1035 which there is no corresponding benefit. A defendant who has placed goods in the stream of commerce benefits economically from the retail sale of the final product in the forum State, and indirectly benefits from the State's laws that regulate and facilitate commercial activity. These benefits accrue regardless of whether that participant directly conducts business in the forum State, or engages in additional conduct directed toward that State. Accordingly, most courts and commentators have found that jurisdiction premised on the placement of a product into the stream of commerce is consistent with the Due Process Clause, and have not required a showing of additional conduct. 118 The endorsement in Part II-A of what appears to be the minority view among Federal Courts of Appeals [FN2] represents a marked retreat from the analysis in World-Wide Volkswagen v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 100 S.Ct. 559, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980). In that case, "respondents [sought] to base jurisdiction on one, isolated occurrence and whatever inferences can be drawn therefrom: the fortuitous circumstance that a single Audi automobile, sold in New York to New York residents, happened to suffer an accident while passing through Oklahoma." Id., at 295, 100 S.Ct., at 566. The Court held that the possibility of an accident in Oklahoma, while to some extent foreseeable in light of the inherent mobility of the automobile, was not enough to establish 119 minimum contacts between the forum State and the retailer or distributor. Id., at 295-296, 100 S.Ct., at 566. The Court then carefully explained:

> FN2. The Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit appears to be the only Court of Appeals to have expressly adopted a narrow construction of the stream-of-commerce theory analogous to the one articulated in Part II-A today, although the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has implicitly adopted it. See Humble v. Toyota Motor Co., Ltd., 727 F.2d 709 (CA8 1984); Banton Industries, Inc. v. Dimatic Die & Tool Co., 801 F.2d 1283 (CA11 1986). Two other Courts of Appeals have found the theory inapplicable when only a single sale occurred in the forum State, but do not appear committed to the interpretation of the theory that the Court adopts today. E.g., Chung v. NANA Development Corp., 783 F.2d 1124 (CA4), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 948, 107 S.Ct. 431, 93 L.Ed.2d 381 (1986); Dalmau Rodriguez v. Hughes Aircraft Co., 781 F.2d 9 (CA1 1986). Similarly, the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has not interpreted the theory as Justice O'CONNOR's opinion has but has rejected stream-of-commerce arguments for jurisdiction when the relationship between the distributor and the defendant "remains in dispute" and "evidence indicating that [defendant] could anticipate either use of its product or litigation in [the forum State] is totally lacking," Max Daetwyler Corp. v. R. Meyer, 762 F.2d 290, 298, 300, n. 13, cert. denied, 474 U.S. 980, 106 S.Ct.383, 88 L.Ed.2d 336 (1985), and when the defendant's product was not sold in the forum State and the defendant "did not take advantage of an indirect marketing scheme," DeJames v. Magnificence Carriers, Inc., 654 F.2d 280, 285, cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1085, 102 S.Ct. 642, 70 L.Ed.2d 620 (1981).

> "[T]his is not to say, of course, that foreseeability is wholly irrelevant. But the foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis is not the mere likelihood that a product will find its way into the forum State. Rather, it is that the defendant's conduct and connection with *1036 the forum State are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into Court there." Id., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567.

The Court reasoned that when a corporation may reasonably anticipate litigation in a particular forum, it cannot claim that such litigation is unjust or unfair, because it "can act to alleviate the risk of burdensome litigation by procuring insurance, passing the expected costs on to consumers, or, if the risks are too great, severing its connection with the State." Ibid.

To illustrate the point, the Court contrasted the foreseeability of litigation in a State to which a consumer fortuitously transports a defendant's product (insufficient contacts) with the foreseeability of litigation in a State where the defendant's product was regularly sold (sufficient contacts). The Court stated:

> "Hence if the sale of a product of a manufacturer or distributor such as Audi or Volkswagen is not simply an isolated occurrence, but arises from the efforts of the manufacturer or distributor to serve, directly or indirectly, the market for its product in other States, it is not unreasonable to subject it to suit in one of those States if its allegedly defective merchandise has there been the source of injury to its owner or to others. The forum State does not exceed its powers under the Due Process Clause if it asserts personal jurisdiction over a corporation that delivers its products into the stream of commerce with the expectation that they will be purchased 120 by consumers in the forum State." Id., at 297-298, 100 S.Ct., at 567 (emphasis added).

The Court concluded its illustration by referring to Gray v. American Radiator & Standard Sanitary Corp., 22 Ill.2d 432, 176 N.E.2d 761 (1961), a well-known stream-of-commerce case in which the Illinois Supreme Court applied the theory to assert jurisdiction over a component-parts manufacturer that sold no components directly in Illinois, but did sell them to a manufacturer who incorporated them into a final product that was sold in Illinois. 444 U.S., at 297-298, 100 S.Ct., at 567.

The Court in World-Wide Volkswagen thus took great care to distinguish "between a case involving goods which reach a distant State through a chain of distribution and a case involving goods which reach the same State because a consumer ... took them there." Id., at 306-307, 100 S.Ct., at 584 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting). [FN3] The California Supreme Court took note of this distinction, and correctly concluded that our holding in World-Wide Volkswagen preserved the stream-of-commerce theory. See App. to Pet. for Cert. C-9, and n. 3, C-13--C-15; cf. Comment, Federalism, Due Process, and Minimum Contacts: World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 80 Colum.L.Rev. 1341, 1359-1361, and nn. 140-146 (1980).

FN3. In dissent, I argued that the distinction was without constitutional significance, because in my view the foreseeability that a customer would use a product in a distant State was a sufficient basis for jurisdiction. 444 U.S., at 306-307, and nn. 11, 12, 100 S.Ct., at 584-585, and nn. 11, 12. See also id., at 315, 100 S.Ct., at 569 (MARSHALL, J., dissenting) ("I cannot agree that jurisdiction is necessarily lacking if the product enters the State not through the channels of distribution but in the course of its intended use by the consumer"); id., at 318-319, 100 S.Ct., at 570-571 (BLACKMUN, J., dissenting) ("[F]oreseeable use in another State seems to me little different from foreseeable resale in another State"). But I do not read the decision in World-Wide Volkswagen to establish a per se rule against the exercise of jurisdiction where the contacts arise from a consumer's use of the product in a given State, but only a rule against jurisdiction in cases involving "one, isolated occurrence [of consumer use, amounting to] ... the fortuitous circumstance...." Id., at 295, 100 S.Ct., at 566. See Hedrick v. Daiko Shoji Co., 715 F.2d, at 1358-1359.

121 In this case, the facts found by the California Supreme Court support its finding of minimum contacts. The court found that "[a]lthough Asahi did not design or control the system of distribution that carried its valve assemblies into California, Asahi was aware of the distribution system's operation, and it knew that it would *1037 benefit economically from the sale in California of products incorporating its components." App. to Pet. for Cert. C-11. [FN4] Accordingly, I cannot join the determination in Part II-A that Asahi's regular and extensive sales of component parts to a manufacturer it knew was making regular sales of the final product in California is insufficient to establish minimum contacts with California.

FN4. Moreover, the Court found that "at least 18 percent of the tubes sold in a particular California motorcycle supply shop contained Asahi valve assemblies," App. to Pet. for Cert. C-11, n. 5, and that Asahi had an ongoing business relationship with Cheng Shin involving average annual sales of hundreds of thousands of valve assemblies, id., at C-2.

Justice STEVENS, with whom Justice WHITE and Justice BLACKMUN join, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of California should be reversed for the reasons stated in Part II-B of the Court's opinion. While I join Parts I and II-B, I do not join Part II-A for two reasons. First, it is not necessary to the Court's decision. An examination of minimum contacts is not always necessary to determine whether a state court's assertion of personal jurisdiction is constitutional. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476-478, 105 S.Ct. 2174, 2184-2185, 85 L.Ed.2d 528 (1985). Part II- B establishes, after considering the factors set forth in World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 292, 100 S.Ct. 559, 564, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980), that California's exercise of jurisdiction over Asahi in this case would be "unreasonable and unfair." Ante, at 1035. This finding alone requires reversal; this case fits within the rule that "minimum requirements inherent in the concept of 'fair play and substantial justice' may defeat 122 the reasonableness of jurisdiction even if the defendant has purposefully engaged in forum activities." Burger King, 471 U.S., at 477- 478, 105 S.Ct., at 2184-2185 (quoting International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320, 66 S.Ct. 154, 160, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945)). Accordingly, I see no reason in this case for the plurality to articulate "purposeful direction" or any other test as the nexus between an act of a defendant and the forum State that is necessary to establish minimum contacts.

Second, even assuming that the test ought to be formulated here, Part II-A misapplies it to the facts of this case. The plurality seems to assume that an unwavering line can be drawn between "mere awareness" that a component will find its way into the forum State and "purposeful availment" of the forum's market. Ante, at 1033. Over the course of its dealings with Cheng Shin, Asahi has arguably engaged in a higher quantum of conduct than "[t]he placement of a product into the stream of commerce, without more...." Ibid. Whether or not this conduct rises to the level of purposeful availment requires a constitutional determination that is affected by the volume, the value, and the hazardous character of the components. In most circumstances I would be inclined to conclude that a regular course of dealing that results in deliveries of over 100,000 units annually over a period of several years would constitute "purposeful availment" even though the item delivered to the forum State was a standard product marketed throughout the world.

United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

BANCROFT & MASTERS, INC., a California corporation, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
AUGUSTA NATIONAL INC., a Georgia corporation, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 99-15099.

Argued and Submitted April 13, 2000.
Filed Aug. 18, 2000.

California computer services corporation, which owned Internet domain name "masters.com," brought action against Georgia golf club, which held "Masters" trademark, seeking declaratory judgment of non-dilution and non-infringement of mark, and cancellation of golf club's mark due to misuse. The United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Thelton E. Henderson, J., 45 F.Supp.2d 777, dismissed for lack of personal jurisdiction over club, and corporation appealed. The Court of Appeals, Schroeder, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) action was not rendered moot by club's settlement offer; (2) club's contacts with California were insufficient to establish general jurisdiction; but (3) club was subject to specific jurisdiction in California.

Reversed and remanded.

Sneed, Circuit Judge, filed concurring opinion in which Trott, Circuit Judge, joined.

Computer services corporation's action against golf club, seeking declaration that corporation's use of Internet domain name "masters.com" did not dilute or infringe club's "Masters" trademark, and seeking cancellation of that trademark, was not rendered moot by club's offer to waive all trademark infringement, dilution, and unfair competition claims against corporation if corporation stayed out of the golf business, since club's offer was incomplete and qualified, and cancellation count was separate from declaratory judgment count and was not obviously meritless.

Because California permits the exercise of personal jurisdiction to the full extent permitted by due process, issue of whether California court has personal jurisdiction over nonresident defendant depends on whether plaintiff has alleged minimum contacts between defendant and the state of California for purposes of general or specific jurisdiction. The standard for establishing general jurisdiction is fairly high and requires that the defendant's contacts be of the sort that approximate physical presence; factors to be taken into consideration are whether the defendant makes sales, solicits or engages in business in the state, serves the state's markets, designates an agent for service of process, holds a license, or is incorporated there.

Georgia golf club's contacts with California were not sufficiently substantial or continuous and systematic to support exercise of general jurisdiction over club in California, as club's only contacts with state were its passive Internet web site, its occasional unsolicited sales of tournament tickets and merchandise to California residents, and its license agreements with two television networks and a handful of California vendors.

Before: SNEED, SCHROEDER, and TROTT, Circuit Judges.

Opinion By Judge SCHROEDER; Concurrence by Judge SNEED.

SCHROEDER, Circuit Judge:

This is a trademark dispute. The principal issue is whether the district court in California has personal jurisdiction over the defendant, a Georgia corporation. We hold that the district court can exercise specific jurisdiction over this suit because the complaint alleges the defendant engaged in wrongful conduct that individually targeted the plaintiff in California.

BACKGROUND

Plaintiff-appellant Bancroft & Masters, Inc. ("B & M") is a small California corporation that sells computer and networking products and support services. B & M does almost all of its business in the San Francisco area. It brought this action against defendant-appellee Augusta National Inc. ("ANI"), which operates the Augusta National Golf Club in Augusta, Georgia and sponsors the annual PGA Tour event known as the Masters Tournament.

ANI holds several federally registered trademarks for the mark "Masters" and operates a website at the domain name "masters.org." B & M registered the domain name "masters.com" with Network Solutions, Inc. ("NSI") in 1995. Until recently, NSI was the sole registrar of domain 1085 names in the United States, under an exclusive contract with the U.S. government. B & M alleges that sometime in late 1997, ANI sent a letter to NSI's Virginia headquarters challenging B & M's use of the domain name masters.com. ANI also sent a letter to B & M in California demanding that B & M cease and desist its use of masters.com and transfer it immediately to ANI.

ANI's letter to NSI triggered NSI's then-applicable dispute resolution policy. Under this policy, B & M had three options: (1) voluntarily transfer the masters.com domain name to ANI; (2) allow the domain name to be placed "on hold," meaning that it could not be used by either party; or (3) obtain a declaratory judgment establishing its right to use the masters.com domain name. See Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 194 F.3d 980, 982 (9th Cir.1999) (explaining NSI's procedures). Rather than give up its website, B & M chose the third option. B & M filed suit in the Northern District of California seeking a judgment declaring non-dilution and non- infringement. B & M's complaint also requested in a separate count that the court order the cancellation of ANI's federally registered trademarks.

The district court granted ANI's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, reasoning that the continuous and systematic contacts in California necessary for general jurisdiction were lacking and that B & M had not satisfied the criteria for specific jurisdiction. See Bancroft & Masters, Inc. v. Augusta Nat'l Inc., 45 F.Supp.2d 777 (1998). B & M appeals this dismissal. We now hold that the district court had specific jurisdiction and reverse and remand. ANI's contention that its settlement offer moots this appeal is without merit.

DISCUSSION

[1] ANI's threshold argument is that this appeal has been rendered moot because ANI has offered to waive all trademark infringement, dilution, and unfair competition claims against B & M, so long as B & M stays out of the golf business. B & M's request for a declaratory judgment that it is entitled to use the domain name is not moot, however, because ANI has not made the requisite showing that it is absolutely clear that it will never seek to prevent B & M from using its domain name in the future. See FTC v. Affordable Media, LLC, 179 F.3d 1228, 1238 (9th Cir.1999) (A declaratory judgment action is not moot unless it is absolutely clear that the defendant will never renew its allegedly wrongful behavior.). ANI's promise was an incomplete and qualified one.

Furthermore, even if ANI's promise had been unqualified, it would not have mooted B & M's separate request for cancellation of ANI's "Masters" trademarks. The trademark cancellation count is separate from the declaratory judgment count in the complaint and does not appear to be obviously meritless. Cf. Arizonans For Official English v. Arizona, 520 U.S. 43, 71, 117 S.Ct. 1055, 137 L.Ed.2d 170 (1997) (obviously meritless and belatedly asserted damages claim cannot save appeal from mootness). The Lanham Act authorizes district courts to order trademark cancellation in any action involving a registered mark. See 15 U.S.C. § 1119.

ANI further suggested at oral argument that the case may be moot because NSI's dispute resolution procedures have recently changed. This argument was neither developed on appeal nor adequately supported in the record. As a result, we are unable to evaluate that suggestion on the record before us.

[2] ANI also contends that there is insufficient evidence in the record to establish jurisdiction. Where, as here, however, the district court does not hold an evidentiary hearing but rather decides the jurisdictional issue on the basis of the pleadings and supporting declarations, we will presume that the facts set forth therein can be proven. See Omeluk v. Langsten Slip & Batbyggeri A/S, 52 F.3d 267, 268 (9th Cir.1995). ANI's challenge to the evidentiary 1086 basis for the district court's ruling is therefore irrelevant.

General Jurisdiction

[3] California permits the exercise of personal jurisdiction to the full extent permitted by due process. See Cal. Civ.Code § 410.10. Whether a California court has personal jurisdiction over ANI thus depends on whether B & M has alleged "minimum contacts" between ANI and the state of California for purposes of general or specific jurisdiction. See International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945).

[4][5] A defendant whose contacts with a state are "substantial" or "continuous and systematic" can be haled into court in that state in any action, even if the action is unrelated to those contacts. See Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 415, 104 S.Ct. 1868, 80 L.Ed.2d 404 (1984). This is known as general jurisdiction. The standard for establishing general jurisdiction is "fairly high," Brand v. Menlove Dodge, 796 F.2d 1070, 1073 (9th Cir.1986), and requires that the defendant's contacts be of the sort that approximate physical presence. See Gates Learjet Corp. v. Jensen, 743 F.2d 1325, 1331 (9th Cir.1984). Factors to be taken into consideration are whether the defendant makes sales, solicits or engages in business in the state, serves the state's markets, designates an agent for service of process, holds a license, or is incorporated there. See Hirsch v. Blue Cross, Blue Shield of Kansas City, 800 F.2d 1474, 1478 (9th Cir.1986).

[6] The district court correctly found general jurisdiction lacking in this case, because ANI's contacts do not qualify as either substantial or continuous and systematic. ANI is not registered or licensed to do business in California. It pays no taxes in California, maintains no bank accounts in California, and targets no print, television, or radio advertising toward California. ANI's masters.org website is "passive," i.e., consumers cannot use it to make purchases. Furthermore, ANI's occasional, unsolicited sales of tournament tickets and merchandise to California residents are insufficient to create general jurisdiction. See Brand, 796 F.2d at 1073 (occasional sales to California residents insufficient to create general jurisdiction).

[7] ANI continues to have license agreements with two television networks and a handful of California vendors. These agreements constitute doing business with California, but do not constitute doing business in California. See Helicopteros, 466 U.S. at 418, 104 S.Ct. 1868 (no general jurisdiction in Texas over helicopter transportation company that purchased 80 percent of its helicopters, spare parts, and accessories from Texas sources over a four year period). This is because engaging in commerce with residents of the forum state is not in and of itself the kind of activity that approximates physical presence within the state's borders. See id.

Compare Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437, 447, 72 S.Ct. 413, 96 L.Ed. 485 (1952) (upholding Ohio's exercise of general jurisdiction over corporation where corporation's president worked out of an office in Ohio from which he drew and distributed payroll checks, performed corporation's filing and correspondence, and held regular directors' meetings, and where the corporation held two Ohio bank accounts). ANI's limited contacts with California are insufficient to establish general jurisdiction.

Specific Jurisdiction

[8] Even though there is no general jurisdiction over ANI in California, California courts may still exercise personal jurisdiction if the case arises out of certain forum-related acts. This "specific" jurisdiction exists if (1) the defendant has performed some act or consummated some transaction within the forum or otherwise purposefully availed himself of the privileges of conducting activities in the forum, (2) the claim arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities, and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable. See Cybersell, Inc. v. Cybersell, Inc., 130 F.3d 414, 416 (9th Cir.1997).

1087 [9] The claims in this case center on ANI's letter to NSI in Virginia, which forced B & M to bring suit or lose control of its website. B & M argues that this letter, addressed to Virginia but intended to affect B & M in California, constitutes "purposeful availment" under the "effects test" first announced by the Supreme Court in Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 104 S.Ct. 1482, 79 L.Ed.2d 804 (1984). ANI describes the letter as purely defensive, aimed only at protecting its intellectual property rights from incursion by B & M. B & M's complaint, however, contends that ANI deliberately triggered NSI's dispute resolution procedures not only to defend its own trademarks but also to interfere wrongfully with B & M's use of its domain name and to misappropriate that name, "masters.com," for ANI's own use. Because the prima facie jurisdictional analysis requires us to accept the plaintiff's allegations as true, we must adopt B & M's version of events for purposes of this appeal.

[10] In Calder, the Supreme Court held that a foreign act that is both aimed at and has effect in the forum state satisfies the purposeful availment prong of the specific jurisdiction analysis. To meet the effects test, the defendant must have (1) committed an intentional act, which was (2) expressly aimed at the forum state, and (3) caused harm, the brunt of which is suffered and which the defendant knows is likely to be suffered in the forum state. See Panavision Int'l, L.P. v. Toeppen, 141 F.3d 1316, 1321 (9th Cir.1998). Subsequent cases have struggled somewhat with Calder 's import, recognizing that the case cannot stand for the broad proposition that a foreign act with foreseeable effects in the forum state always gives rise to specific jurisdiction. We have said that there must be "something more," but have not spelled out what that something more must be. See Panavision, 141 F.3d at 1322.

[11] We now conclude that "something more" is what the Supreme Court described as "express aiming" at the forum state. See Calder, 465 U.S. at 789, 104 S.Ct. 1482. Express aiming is a concept that in the jurisdictional context hardly defines itself. From the available cases, we deduce that the requirement is satisfied when the defendant is alleged to have engaged in wrongful conduct targeted at a plaintiff whom the defendant knows to be a resident of the forum state. For example, in Calder itself, the defendants were a reporter and an editor of a nationally-circulated tabloid newspaper whom plaintiff, a well-known California resident, accused of libel. The defendants argued that the alleged wrong had no intended nexus with California and that they should be treated like "a welder employed in Florida who works on a boiler which subsequently explodes in California." Id. The Supreme Court rejected this proposed analogy, pointing out that "petitioners are not charged with mere untargeted negligence. Rather, their intentional, and allegedly tortious, actions were expressly aimed at California." Id.

Subsequent cases from this circuit bear out the conclusion that "express aiming" encompasses wrongful conduct individually targeting a known forum resident. In Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. v. Neaves, 912 F.2d 1062 (9th Cir.1990), we held that an Alabama resident could be haled into a California court on the basis of a letter she sent to an insurance company representing that she was entitled to an insurance payment that actually belonged to a California resident. We stated that under Calder, it was irrelevant where the letter was sent. The critical factor was that in sending the letter, the defendant "was purposefully defrauding [plaintiff] in California." 912 F.2d at 1065. Similarly, in Brainerd v. Governors of the University of Alberta, 873 F.2d 1257 (9th Cir.1989) , we held that an Arizona court could exercise specific jurisdiction over Canadian residents who, in response to telephone calls directed to them in Canada, made statements that allegedly defamed a person they knew resided in Arizona. Id. at 1259-60. Even though the Canadian defendants had not initiated the telephone 1088 calls, the statements they made about the plaintiff during the conversations were not "untargeted negligence" but rather were "performed for the very purpose of having their consequences felt in the forum state." Id. See also Gordy v. Daily News, L.P., 95 F.3d 829, 833 (9th Cir.1996) (holding that specific jurisdiction existed in light of evidence of "targeting" of the plaintiff, who was a forum resident); Lake v. Lake, 817 F.2d 1416, 1422-23 (9th Cir.1987) (holding that specific jurisdiction existed where defendant performed foreign acts for the purpose of having their consequences felt in the forum state); Haisten v. Grass Valley Med. Reimbursement Fund, Ltd., 784 F.2d 1392, 1398 (9th Cir.1986) (finding purposeful availment where forum effect of a foreign act "was not only foreseeable, it was contemplated and bargained for").

The presence of individualized targeting is what separates these cases from others in which we have found the effects test unsatisfied. In Cybersell, for example, there was no showing that the defendants even knew of the existence of the plaintiffs, let alone targeted them individually. See 130 F.3d at 420. See also Gordy, 95 F.3d at 833 (distinguishing certain cases holding that no personal jurisdiction existed under Calder on the ground that in those cases targeting was lacking).

Applying these concepts to the instant case, we conclude that B & M has demonstrated purposeful availment by ANI under the Calder effects test. ANI acted intentionally when it sent its letter to NSI. The letter was expressly aimed at California because it individually targeted B & M, a California corporation doing business almost exclusively in California. Finally, the effects of the letter were primarily felt, as ANI knew they would be, in California.

This case resembles Panavision, in which an Illinois resident registered as his domain name a California corporation's trademark. Though this activity was conducted outside of California, it was clear that the defendant's deliberate choice of the plaintiff's trademark, and his subsequent attempts to extort compensation for his conveyance of the domain name, targeted that individual plaintiff. See Panavision, 141 F.3d at 1321. Here, too, ANI was well aware that B & M currently held the masters.com website and that it was B & M that would be affected if the NSI dispute resolution procedures were triggered. This is sufficient to satisfy Calder and thereby demonstrate the purposeful availment necessary for an exercise of specific jurisdiction.

[12] The second requirement for specific jurisdiction is that the contacts constituting purposeful availment must be the ones that give rise to the current suit. We measure this requirement in terms of "but for" causation. See Ziegler v. Indian River County, 64 F.3d 470, 474 (9th Cir.1995). This requirement is met here. But for the letter to NSI, which under the NSI dispute resolution procedures forced B & M to choose between bringing this suit and losing the use of its website, it is clear that B & M would have no need for a judicial declaration of its right to use masters.com.

[13] The final requirement for specific jurisdiction, and the one that the district court apparently found to be lacking, is reasonableness. For jurisdiction to be reasonable, it must comport with fair play and substantial justice. See Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476, 105 S.Ct. 2174, 85 L.Ed.2d 528 (1985). Burger King explicitly places upon the defendant the burden of demonstrating unreasonableness and requires the defendant to put on a "compelling case." Id. at 476-77, 105 S.Ct. 2174. The reasonableness determination requires the consideration of several specific factors: (1) the extent of the defendant's purposeful interjection into the forum state, (2) the burden on the defendant in defending in the forum, (3) the extent of the conflict with the sovereignty of the defendant's state, (4) the forum state's interest in adjudicating the dispute, (5) the most efficient judicial resolution of the controversy, (6) the importance of the forum to the plaintiff's interest in convenient and effective relief, and (7) the existence of an alternative forum. Id.

1089 In the district court, ANI attempted no factual showing with regard to the Burger King factors. Instead, ANI stated without elaboration that jurisdiction would be unreasonable. ANI supported this assertion with citations to various district court cases and two pre-Burger King cases from this circuit holding that a cease-and-desist letter sent by a trademark holder to a putative infringer is not, by itself, a sufficient basis for personal jurisdiction in the putative infringer's home state. See Kransco Mf'g, Inc. v. Markwitz, 656 F.2d 1376 (9th Cir.1981); Cascade Corp. v. Hiab-Foco AB, 619 F.2d 36 (9th Cir.1980); Douglas Furniture Co. v. Wood Dimensions, Inc., 963 F.Supp. 899 (C.D.Cal.1997). This is inadequate to discharge Burger King 's requirement that the defendant demonstrate a "compelling case," focused on the seven specific factors listed above, in order to establish unreasonableness. ANI did not focus on the Burger King factors and apply them to the particular circumstances of this case.

Moreover, the cases on which ANI relies are inapposite because they concern only cease-and-desist letters. This case does not arise solely out of ANI's cease-and-desist letter to B & M, which placed B & M on notice of ANI's competing claim. This case arises principally out of ANI's letter to NSI, and that letter did more than warn or threaten B & M. Under NSI procedures, the letter would have operated automatically to prevent B & M from using its website had B & M not filed suit. ANI has not demonstrated any hardship or any other specific factors suggesting that jurisdiction in California would be unreasonable. We therefore conclude that the reasonableness requirement is met.

CONCLUSION

The district court's order dismissing the case for lack of personal jurisdiction is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings. We decline B & M's request for 28 U.S.C. § 1927 sanctions against ANI for its attempt to have this appeal dismissed as moot. ANI's mootness argument was neither unreasonable nor vexatious, and does not appear to have been raised in bad faith.

REVERSED AND REMANDED.

SNEED, Circuit Judge, with whom TROTT, Circuit Judge, joins, Concurring:

The "effects test" has normally been restricted to tortious conduct in which the "aimer" in state Y was seeking to injure wrongfully the target in state X. I concur in the opinion only on the assumption that Augusta National, through its letter to NSI, engaged in tortious conduct, i.e., that they intended to effect a conversion of the masters.com domain name.

I am skeptical of Bancroft & Masters's selection of masters.com as its domain name. I suspect that Augusta National's initial reaction was similar. Therefore, I do not find it implausible that Augusta National, through its letter to NSI, merely intended to protect its trademark from dilution and infringement. At this point, however, there is insufficient information with which to make such a judgment. Jurisdiction in California would be ripe for challenge if following the development of trial it should appear that Augusta National acted reasonably and in good faith to protect its trademark against an infringer.

Supreme Court of the United States

BURGER KING CORPORATION, Appellant
v.
John RUDZEWICZ.

No. 83-2097.

Argued Jan. 8, 1985.
Decided May 20, 1985.

Franchisor brought action against franchisee alleging breach of franchise obligations and trademark infringement. The United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida entered judgment in favor of franchisor and franchisee appealed. The Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, 724 F.2d 1505, reversed and denied rehearing, 729 F.2d 1468. The Supreme Court, Justice Brennan, held that: (1) where it was not clear that Court of Appeals had found Florida long-arm statute unconstitutional as applied, Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction over appeal; (2) jurisdictional statement would be treated as petition for writ of certiorari; and (3) exercise of long- arm jurisdiction over Michigan franchisee in Florida did not offend due process.

Reversed and remanded.

Justice Stevens dissented and filed an opinion in which Justice White joined.

Appellant is a Florida corporation whose principal offices are in Miami. It conducts most of its restaurant business through a franchise operation, under which franchisees are licensed to use appellant's trademarks and service marks in leased standardized restaurant facilities for a period of 20 years. The governing contracts provide that the franchise relationship is established in Miami and governed by Florida law, and call for payment of all required monthly fees and forwarding of all relevant notices to the Miami headquarters. The Miami headquarters sets policy and works directly with the franchisees in attempting to resolve major problems. Day-to-day monitoring of franchisees, however, is conducted through district offices that in turn report to the Miami headquarters. Appellee is a Michigan resident who, along with another Michigan resident, entered into a 20-year franchise contract with appellant to operate a restaurant in Michigan. Subsequently, when the restaurant's patronage declined, the franchisees fell behind in their monthly payments. After extended negotiations among the franchisees, the Michigan district office, and the Miami headquarters proved unsuccessful in solving 2177 the problem, headquarters terminated the franchise and ordered the franchisees to vacate the premises. They refused and continued to operate the restaurant. Appellant then brought a diversity action in Federal District Court in Florida, alleging that the franchisees had breached their franchise obligations and requesting damages and injunctive relief. The franchisees claimed that, because they were Michigan residents and because appellant's claim did not "arise" within Florida, the District Court lacked personal jurisdiction over them. But the court held that the franchisees were subject to personal jurisdiction pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute, which extends jurisdiction to any person, whether or not a citizen or resident of the State, who breaches a contract in the State by failing to perform acts that the contract requires to be performed there. Thereafter, the court entered judgment against the franchisees on the merits. The Court of Appeals reversed, holding that "[j]urisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process."

Held: The District Court's exercise of jurisdiction pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute did not violate the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Pp. 2181-2190.

Justice BRENNAN delivered the opinion of the Court.

The State of Florida's long-arm statute extends jurisdiction to "[a]ny person, whether or not a citizen or resident of this state," who, inter alia, "[b]reach [es] a contract in this state by failing to perform acts required by the contract to be performed in this state," so long as the cause of action 464 arises from the alleged contractual breach. Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984). The United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, sitting in diversity, relied on this provision in exercising personal jurisdiction over a Michigan resident who allegedly had breached a franchise agreement with a Florida corporation by failing to make required payments in Florida. The question presented is whether this exercise of long-arm jurisdiction offended "traditional conception[s] of fair play and substantial justice" embodied in the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. 2178International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320, 66 S.Ct. 154, 160, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945).

Burger King Corporation is a Florida corporation whose principal offices are in Miami. It is one of the world's largest restaurant organizations, with over 3,000 outlets in the 50 States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and 8 foreign nations. Burger King conducts approximately 80% of its business through a franchise operation that the company styles the "Burger King System"--"a comprehensive restaurant format and operating system for the sale of uniform and quality food products." App. 46. [FN1] Burger King licenses its franchisees to use its trademarks and service marks for a period of 20 years and leases standardized restaurant facilities to them for the same term. In addition, franchisees acquire a variety of proprietary information concerning the "standards, specifications, procedures and methods for operating 465 a Burger King Restaurant." Id., at 52. They also receive market research and advertising assistance; ongoing training in restaurant management; [FN2] and accounting, cost-control, and inventory- control guidance. By permitting franchisees to tap into Burger King's established national reputation and to benefit from proven procedures for dispensing standardized fare, this system enables them to go into the restaurant business with significantly lowered barriers to entry. [FN3]

FN1. Burger King's standard Franchise Agreement further defines this system as "a restaurant format and operating system, including a recognized design, decor, color scheme and style of building, uniform standards, specifications and procedures of operation, quality and uniformity of products and services offered, and procedures for inventory and management control...." App. 43.

FN2. Mandatory training seminars are conducted at Burger King University in Miami and at Whopper College Regional Training Centers around the country. See id., at 39; 6 Record 540-541.

FN3. See App. 43-44. See generally H. Brown, Franchising Realities and Remedies 6-7, 16-17 (2d ed. 1978).

In exchange for these benefits, franchisees pay Burger King an initial $40,000 franchise fee and commit themselves to payment of monthly royalties, advertising and sales promotion fees, and rent computed in part from monthly gross sales. Franchisees also agree to submit to the national organization's exacting regulation of virtually every conceivable aspect of their operations. [FN4] Burger King imposes these standards and undertakes its rigid regulation out of conviction that "[u]niformity of service, appearance, and quality of product is essential to the preservation of the Burger King image and the benefits accruing therefrom to both Franchisee and Franchisor." Id., at 31.

FN4. See, e.g., App. 24-25, 26 (range, "quality, appearance, size, taste, and processing" of menu items), 31 ("standards of service and cleanliness"), 32 (hours of operation), 47 ("official mandatory restaurant operating standards, specifications and procedures"), 48-50 (building layout, displays, equipment, vending machines, service, hours of operation, uniforms, advertising, and promotion), 53 (employee training), 55-56 (accounting and auditing requirements), 59 (insurance requirements). Burger King also imposes extensive standards governing franchisee liability, assignments, defaults, and termination. See id., at 61-74.

Burger King oversees its franchise system through a two-tiered administrative structure. The governing contracts 466 provide that the franchise relationship is established in Miami and governed by Florida law, and call for payment of all required fees and forwarding of all relevant notices to the Miami headquarters. [FN5] The Miami headquarters sets policy and works directly with its franchisees in attempting to resolve major problems. See nn. 7, 9, infra. Day-to-day monitoring of franchisees, however, is conducted through a network of 10 district offices which in turn report to the Miami headquarters.

FN5. See id., at 10-11, 37, 43, 72-73, 113. See infra, at 2187.

The instant litigation grows out of Burger King's termination of one of its franchisees, *2179 and is aptly described by the franchisee as "a divorce proceeding among commercial partners." 5 Record 4. The appellee John Rudzewicz, a Michigan citizen and resident, is the senior partner in a Detroit accounting firm. In 1978, he was approached by Brian MacShara, the son of a business acquaintance, who suggested that they jointly apply to Burger King for a franchise in the Detroit area. MacShara proposed to serve as the manager of the restaurant if Rudzewicz would put up the investment capital; in exchange, the two would evenly share the profits. Believing that MacShara's idea offered attractive investment and tax-deferral opportunities, Rudzewicz agreed to the venture. 6 id., at 438-439, 444, 460.

Rudzewicz and MacShara jointly applied for a franchise to Burger King's Birmingham, Michigan, district office in the autumn of 1978. Their application was forwarded to Burger King's Miami headquarters, which entered into a preliminary agreement with them in February 1979. During the ensuing four months it was agreed that Rudzewicz and MacShara would assume operation of an existing facility in Drayton Plains, Michigan. MacShara attended the prescribed management courses in Miami during this period, see n. 2, supra, and the franchisees purchased $165,000 worth of restaurant equipment from Burger King's Davmor Industries division in 467 Miami. Even before the final agreements were signed, however, the parties began to disagree over site- development fees, building design, computation of monthly rent, and whether the franchisees would be able to assign their liabilities to a corporation they had formed. [FN6] During these disputes Rudzewicz and MacShara negotiated both with the Birmingham district office and with the Miami headquarters. [FN7] With some misgivings, Rudzewicz and MacShara finally obtained limited concessions from the Miami headquarters, [FN8] signed the final agreements, and commenced operations in June 1979. By signing the final agreements, Rudzewicz obligated himself personally to payments exceeding $1 million over the 20-year franchise relationship.

FN6. The latter two matters were the major areas of disagreement. Notwithstanding that Burger King's franchise offering advised that minimum rent would be based on a percentage of "approximated capitalized site acquisition and construction costs," id., at 23, Rudzewicz assumed that rent would be a function solely of renovation costs, and he thereby underestimated the minimum monthly rent by more than $2,000. The District Court found Rudzewicz' interpretation "incredible." 7 Record 649.
With respect to assignment, Rudzewicz and MacShara had formed RMBK Corp. with the intent of assigning to it all of their interest and liabilities in the franchise. Consistent with the contract documents, however, Burger King insisted that the two remain personally liable for their franchise obligations. See App. 62, 109. Although the franchisees contended that Burger King officials had given them oral assurances concerning assignment, the District Court found that pursuant to the parol evidence rule any such assurances "even if they had been made and were misleading were joined and merged" into the final agreement. 7 Record 648.

FN7. Although Rudzewicz and MacShara dealt with the Birmingham district office on a regular basis, they communicated directly with the Miami headquarters in forming the contracts; moreover, they learned that the district office had "very little" decisionmaking authority and accordingly turned directly to headquarters in seeking to resolve their disputes. 5 id., at 292. See generally App. 5-6; 5 Record 167-168, 174-179, 182-184, 198-199, 217-218, 264-265, 292-294; 6 id., at 314-316, 363, 373, 416, 463, 496.

FN8. They were able to secure a $10,439 reduction in rent for the third year. App. 82; 5 Record 222-223; 6 id., at 500.

468 The Drayton Plains facility apparently enjoyed steady business during the summer of 1979, but patronage declined after a recession began later that year. Rudzewicz and MacShara soon fell far behind in their monthly payments to Miami. Headquarters sent notices of default, and an extended period of negotiations began among the franchisees, the Birmingham district office, and the Miami headquarters. After several Burger King officials in Miami had engaged in prolonged but ultimately unsuccessful negotiations with the franchisees *2180 by mail and by telephone, [FN9] headquarters terminated the franchise and ordered Rudzewicz and MacShara to vacate the premises. They refused and continued to occupy and operate the facility as a Burger King restaurant.

FN9. Miami's policy was to "deal directly" with franchisees when they began to encounter financial difficulties, and to involve district office personnel only when necessary. 5 id., at 95. In the instant case, for example, the Miami office handled all credit problems, ordered cost-cutting measures, negotiated for a partial refinancing of the franchisees' debts, communicated directly with the franchisees in attempting to resolve the dispute, and was responsible for all termination matters. Burger King commenced the instant action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida in May 1981, invoking that court's diversity jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1332(a) and its original jurisdiction over federal trademark disputes pursuant to § 1338(a). [FN10] Burger King alleged that Rudzewicz and MacShara had breached their franchise obligations "within [the jurisdiction of] this district court" by failing to make the required payments "at plaintiff's place of business in Miami, Dade County, Florida," ¶ 6, App. 121, and also charged that they were tortiously infringing 469 its trademarks and service marks through their continued, unauthorized operation as a Burger King restaurant, ¶¶ 35-53, App. 130-135. Burger King sought damages, injunctive relief, and costs and attorney's fees. Rudzewicz and MacShara entered special appearances and argued, inter alia, that because they were Michigan residents and because Burger King's claim did not "arise" within the Southern District of Florida, the District Court lacked personal jurisdiction over them. The District Court denied their motions after a hearing, holding that, pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute, "a non- resident Burger King franchisee is subject to the personal jurisdiction of this Court in actions arising out of its franchise agreements." Id., at 138. Rudzewicz and MacShara then filed an answer and a counterclaim seeking damages for alleged violations by Burger King of Michigan's Franchise Investment Law, Mich.Comp.Laws § 445.1501 et seq. (1979).

FN10. Rudzewicz and MacShara were served in Michigan with summonses and copies of the complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4. 2 id., at 102-103.

After a 3-day bench trial, the court again concluded that it had "jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties to this cause." App. 159. Finding that Rudzewicz and MacShara had breached their franchise agreements with Burger King and had infringed Burger King's trademarks and service marks, the court entered judgment against them, jointly and severally, for $228,875 in contract damages. The court also ordered them "to immediately close Burger King Restaurant Number 775 from continued operation or to immediately give the keys and possession of said restaurant to Burger King Corporation," id., at 163, found that they had failed to prove any of the required elements of their counterclaim, and awarded costs and attorney's fees to Burger King.

Rudzewicz appealed to the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit. [FN11] A divided panel of that Circuit reversed the 470 judgment, *2181 concluding that the District Court could not properly exercise personal jurisdiction over Rudzewicz pursuant to Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984) because "the circumstances of the Drayton Plains franchise and the negotiations which led to it left Rudzewicz bereft of reasonable notice and financially unprepared for the prospect of franchise litigation in Florida." Burger King Corp. v. MacShara, 724 F.2d 1505, 1513 (1984). Accordingly, the panel majority concluded that "[j]urisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process." Ibid.

> FN11. MacShara did not appeal his judgment. See Burger King Corp. v. MacShara, 724 F.2d 1505, 1506, n. 1 (CA11 1984). In addition, Rudzewicz entered into a compromise with Burger King and waived his right to appeal the District Court's finding of trademark infringement and its entry of injunctive relief. See 4 Record 804-816. Accordingly, we need not address the extent to which the tortious act provisions of Florida's long-arm statute, see Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(b) (Supp.1984), may constitutionally extend to out-of-state trademark infringement. Cf. Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 788-789, 104 S.Ct. 1482, 1486-1487, 79 L.Ed.2d 804 (1984) (tortious out-of-state conduct); Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 776, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1479, 79 L.Ed.2d 790 (1984) (same).

[1][2] Burger King appealed the Eleventh Circuit's judgment to this Court pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2), and we postponed probable jurisdiction. 469 U.S. 814, 105 S.Ct. 77, 83 L.Ed.2d 25 (1984). Because it is unclear whether the Eleventh Circuit actually held that Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984) itself is unconstitutional as applied to the circumstances of this case, we conclude that jurisdiction by appeal does not properly lie and therefore dismiss the appeal. [FN12] Treating the jurisdictional 471 statement as a petition for a writ of certiorari, see 28 U.S.C. § 2103, we grant the petition and now reverse.

> FN12. The District Court had found both that Rudzewicz fell within the reach of Florida's long-arm statute and that the exercise of jurisdiction was constitutional. The Court of Appeals did not consider the statutory question, however, because, as Burger King acknowledged at argument, that court "accepted the parties' stipulation" that § 48.193 reached Rudzewicz "in lieu of [making] a determination of what Florida law provides." Tr. of Oral Arg. 12. Burger King contends that an appeal is proper "on the basis of the Circuit Court's holding that given that stipulation the statute was unconstitutional as applied," Id., at 13 (emphasis added).

> We disagree. Our "overriding policy, historically encouraged by Congress, of minimizing the mandatory docket of this Court in the interests of sound judicial administration," Gonzalez v. Automatic Employees Credit Union, 419 U.S. 90, 98, 95 S.Ct. 289, 294, 42 L.Ed.2d 249 (1974) (construing 28 U.S.C. § 1253), would be threatened if litigants could obtain an appeal through the expedient of stipulating to a particular construction of state law where state law might in fact be in harmony with the Federal Constitution. Jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2) is properly invoked only where a court of appeals squarely has "held" that a state statute is unconstitutional on its face or as applied; jurisdiction does not lie if the decision might rest on other grounds. Public Service Comm'n v. Batesville Telephone Co., 284 U.S. 6, 7, 52 S.Ct. 1, 76 L.Ed. 135 (1931) (per curiam). Consistent with "our practice of strict construction" of § 1254(2), Fornaris v. Ridge Tool Co., 400 U.S. 41, 42, n. 1, 91 S.Ct. 156, 157, n. 1, 27 L.Ed.2d 174 (1970) (per curiam), we believe that an appeal cannot lie where a court of appeals' judgment rests solely on the stipulated applicability of state law. Rather, it must be reasonably clear that the court independently concluded that the challenged statute governs the case and held the statute itself unconstitutional as so applied. The Court of Appeals did neither in this case, concluding simply that "[j]urisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process." 724 F.2d, at 1513.

Of course, if it were clear under Florida law that § 48.193(1)(g) governed every transaction falling within its literal terms, there could be no objection to a stipulation that merely recognized this established construction. But the Florida Supreme Court has not ruled on the breadth of § 48.193(1)(g), and several state appellate courts have held that the provision extends only to the limits of the Due Process Clause. See, e.g., Scordilis v. Drobnicki, 443 So.2d 411, 412-414 (Fla.App.1984); Lakewood Pipe of Texas, Inc. v. Rubaii, 379 So.2d 475, 477 (Fla.App.1979), appeal dism'd, 383 So.2d 1201 (Fla.1980); Osborn v. University Society, Inc., 378 So.2d 873, 874 (Fla.App.1979). If § 48.193(1)(g) is construed and applied in accordance with due process limitations as a matter of state law, then an appeal is improper because the statute cannot be "invalid as repugnant to the Constitution ... of the United States," 28 U.S.C. § 1254(2), since its boundaries are defined by, rather than being in excess of, the Due Process Clause. See, e.g., Calder v. Jones, supra, 465 U.S., at 787-788, n. 7, 104 S.Ct., at 1486, n. 7; Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 90, and n. 4, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 1695-1696, and n. 4, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978).

[3][4] The Due Process Clause protects an individual's liberty interest in not being subject to the binding judgments of a 472 forum with which he has established no meaningful "contacts, ties, or relations." 2182International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S., at 319, 66 S.Ct., at 160. [FN13] By requiring that individuals have "fair warning that a particular activity may subject [them] to the jurisdiction of a foreign sovereign," Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 218, 97 S.Ct. 2569, 2587, 53 L.Ed.2d 683 (1977) (STEVENS, J., concurring in judgment), the Due Process Clause "gives a degree of predictability to the legal system that allows potential defendants to structure their primary conduct with some minimum assurance as to where that conduct will and will not render them liable to suit," World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S.Ct. 559, 567, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980).

FN13. Although this protection operates to restrict state power, it "must be seen as ultimately a function of the individual liberty interest preserved by the Due Process Clause" rather than as a function "of federalism concerns." Insurance Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, 456 U.S. 694, 702-703, n. 10, 102 S.Ct. 2099, 2104- 2105, n. 10, 72 L.Ed.2d 492 (1982).

[5][6][7] Where a forum seeks to assert specific jurisdiction over an out-of-state defendant who has not consented to suit there, [FN14] this "fair warning" requirement is satisfied if the defendant has "purposefully directed" his activities at residents of the forum, Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 774, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1478, 79 L.Ed.2d 790 (1984), and the litigation results from alleged injuries that "arise out of or relate to" those activities, 473Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall,* 466 U.S. 408, 414, 104 S.Ct. 1868, 1872, 80 L.Ed.2d 404 1984). [FN15] Thus "[t]he forum State does not exceed its powers under the Due Process Clause if it asserts personal jurisdiction over a corporation that delivers its products into the stream of commerce with the expectation that they will be purchased by consumers in the forum State" and those products subsequently injure forum consumers. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 297-298, 100 S.Ct., at 567-568. Similarly, a publisher who distributes magazines in a distant State may fairly be held accountable in that forum for damages resulting there from an allegedly defamatory story. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra; see also Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 104 S.Ct. 1482, 79 L.Ed.2d 804 (1984) (suit against author and editor). And with respect to interstate contractual obligations, we have emphasized that parties who "reach out beyond one state and create continuing relationships and obligations with citizens of another state" are subject to regulation and sanctions in the other State for the consequences of their activities. Travelers Health Assn. v. Virginia, 339 U.S. 643, 647, 70 S.Ct. 927, 929, 94 L.Ed. 1154 (1950). See also McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220, 222-223, 78 S.Ct. 199, 200-201, 2 L.Ed.2d 223 (1957).

FN14. We have noted that, because the personal jurisdiction requirement is a waivable right, there are a "variety of legal arrangements" by which a litigant may give "express or implied consent to the personal jurisdiction of the court." Insurance Corp. of Ireland v. Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee, supra, at 703, 102 S.Ct., at 2105. For example, particularly in the commercial context, parties frequently stipulate in advance to submit their controversies for resolution within a particular jurisdiction. See National Equipment Rental, Ltd. v. Szukhent, 375 U.S. 311, 84 S.Ct. 411, 11 L.Ed.2d 354 (1964). Where such forum-selection provisions have been obtained through "freely negotiated" agreements and are not "unreasonable and unjust," The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S. 1, 15, 92 S.Ct. 1907, 1916, 32 L.Ed.2d 513 (1972), their enforcement does not offend due process.

FN15. "Specific" jurisdiction contrasts with "general" jurisdiction, pursuant to which "a State exercises personal jurisdiction over a defendant in a suit not arising out of or related to the defendant's contacts with the forum." Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S., at 414, n. 9, 104 S.Ct., at 1872, n. 9; see also Perkins v. Benguet Consolidated Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437, 72 S.Ct. 413, 96 L.Ed. 485 (1952).

[8] We have noted several reasons why a forum legitimately may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident who "purposefully directs" his activities toward forum residents. A State generally has a "manifest interest" in providing its residents with a convenient forum for redressing injuries inflicted by out-of-state actors. 2183 Id., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201; see also Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 776, 104 S.Ct., at 1479. Moreover, where individuals "purposefully derive benefit" from their interstate activities, 474Kulko v. California Superior Court,* 436 U.S. 84, 96, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 1699, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978), it may well be unfair to allow them to escape having to account in other States for consequences that arise proximately from such activities; the Due Process Clause may not readily be wielded as a territorial shield to avoid interstate obligations that have been voluntarily assumed. And because "modern transportation and communications have made it much less burdensome for a party sued to defend himself in a State where he engages in economic activity," it usually will not be unfair to subject him to the burdens of litigating in another forum for disputes relating to such activity. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201.

[9][10] Notwithstanding these considerations, the constitutional touchstone remains whether the defendant purposefully established "minimum contacts" in the forum State. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S., at 316, 66

S.Ct., at 158. Although it has been argued that foreseeability of causing injury in another State should be sufficient to establish such contacts there when policy considerations so require, [FN16] the Court has consistently held that this kind of foreseeability is not a "sufficient benchmark" for exercising personal jurisdiction. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 295, 100 S.Ct., at 566. Instead, "the foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis ... is that the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum State are such that he should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there." Id., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567. In defining when it is that a potential defendant should "reasonably anticipate" out-of-state litigation, the Court frequently has drawn from the reasoning of Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 1239-1240, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958):

> FN16. See, e.g., World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 299, 100 S.Ct. 559, 568, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980) (BRENNAN, J., dissenting); Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 219, 97 S.Ct. 2569, 2588, 53 L.Ed.2d 683 (1977) (BRENNAN, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

> "The unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum State. The application 475 of that rule will vary with the quality and nature of the defendant's activity, but it is essential in each case that there be some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws."

[11][12][13] This "purposeful availment" requirement ensures that a defendant will not be haled into a jurisdiction solely as a result of "random," "fortuitous," or "attenuated" contacts, Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 774, 104 S.Ct., at 1478; World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 299, 100 S.Ct., at 568, or of the "unilateral activity of another party or a third person," Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, supra, 466 U.S., at 417, 104 S.Ct., at 1873. [FN17] Jurisdiction is proper, however, *2184 where the contacts proximately result from actions by the defendant himself that create a "substantial connection" with the forum State. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201; see also Kulko v. California Superior Court, supra, 436 U.S., at 94, n. 7, 98 S.Ct., at 1698, n. 7. [FN18] Thus where the defendant "deliberately" has 476 engaged in significant activities within a State, Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 781, 104 S.Ct., at 1481, or has created "continuing obligations" between himself and residents of the forum, Travelers Health Assn. v. Virginia, 339 U.S., at 648, 70 S.Ct., at 929, he manifestly has availed himself of the privilege of conducting business there, and because his activities are shielded by "the benefits and protections" of the forum's laws it is presumptively not unreasonable to require him to submit to the burdens of litigation in that forum as well.

> FN17. Applying this principle, the Court has held that the Due Process Clause forbids the exercise of personal jurisdiction over an out- of-state automobile distributor whose only tie to the forum resulted from a customer's decision to drive there, World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra; over a divorced husband sued for child-support payments whose only affiliation with the forum was created by his former spouse's decision to settle there, Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978); and over a trustee whose only connection with the forum resulted from the settlor's decision to exercise her power of appointment there, Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958). In such instances, the defendant has had no "clear notice that it is subject to suit" in the forum and thus no opportunity to "alleviate the risk of burdensome litigation" there. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567.

> FN18. So long as it creates a "substantial connection" with the forum, even a single > act can support jurisdiction. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201. The Court has noted, however, that "some single or occasional acts" related to the forum may not be sufficient to establish jurisdiction if "their nature and quality and the circumstances of their commission" create only an "attenuated" affiliation with the forum. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 318, 66 S.Ct. 154, 159, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945); World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 299, 100 S.Ct., at 568. This distinction derives from the belief that, with respect to this category of "isolated" acts, id., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567, the reasonable foreseeability of litigation in the forum is substantially diminished.

[14][15] Jurisdiction in these circumstances may not be avoided merely because the defendant did not physically enter the forum State. Although territorial presence frequently will enhance a potential defendant's affiliation with a State and reinforce the reasonable foreseeability of suit there, it is an inescapable fact of modern commercial life that a substantial amount of business is transacted solely by mail and wire communications across state lines, thus obviating the need for physical presence within a State in which business is conducted. So long as a commercial actor's efforts are "purposefully directed" toward residents of another State, we have consistently rejected the notion that an absence of physical contacts can defeat personal jurisdiction there. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 774-775, 104 S.Ct., at 1478; see also Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S., at 778- 790, 104 S.Ct., at 1486-1487; McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 222-223, 78 S.Ct., at 200-201. Cf. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 317, 63 S.Ct. 602, 605, 87 L.Ed. 777 (1943).

[16][17][18] Once it has been decided that a defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum State, these contacts may be considered in light of other factors to determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with "fair play and substantial justice." International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S., at 320, 66 S.Ct., at 160. Thus 477 courts in "appropriate case[s]" may evaluate "the burden on the defendant," "the forum State's interest in adjudicating the dispute," "the plaintiff's interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief," "the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies," and the "shared interest of the several States in furthering fundamental substantive social policies." World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 292, 100 S.Ct., at 564. These considerations sometimes serve to establish the reasonableness of jurisdiction upon a lesser showing of minimum contacts than would otherwise be required. See, e.g., Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., supra, 465 U.S., at 780, 104 S.Ct., at 1481; Calder v. Jones, supra, 465 U.S., at 788-789, 104 S.Ct., at 1486-1487; McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223-224, 78 S.Ct., at 201-202. On the other hand, where a defendant who purposefully has directed his activities at *2185 forum residents seeks to defeat jurisdiction, he must present a compelling case that the presence of some other considerations would render jurisdiction unreasonable. Most such considerations usually may be accommodated through means short of finding jurisdiction unconstitutional. For example, the potential clash of the forum's law with the "fundamental substantive social policies" of another State may be accommodated through application of the forum's choice-of-law rules. [FN19] Similarly, a defendant claiming substantial inconvenience may seek a change of venue. [FN20] Nevertheless, minimum requirements inherent in the concept of "fair play and substantial 478 justice" may defeat the reasonableness of jurisdiction even if the defendant has purposefully engaged in forum activities. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, supra, 444 U.S., at 292, 100 S.Ct., at 564; see also Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws §§ 36-37 (1971). As we previously have noted, jurisdictional rules may not be employed in such a way as to make litigation "so gravely difficult and inconvenient" that a party unfairly is at a "severe disadvantage" in comparison to his opponent. The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S. 1, 18, 92 S.Ct. 1907, 1917, 32 L.Ed.2d 513 (1972) (re forum-selection provisions); McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223-224, 78 S.Ct., at 201-202.

This provision embodies in an expanded version the common-law doctrine of forum non conveniens, under which a court in appropriate circumstances may decline to exercise its jurisdiction in the interest of the "easy, expeditious and inexpensive" resolution of a controversy in another forum. See Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. 501, 508-509, 67 S.Ct. 839, 843, 91 L.Ed. 1055 (1947).

[19][20] Applying these principles to the case at hand, we believe there is substantial record evidence supporting the District Court's conclusion that the assertion of personal jurisdiction over Rudzewicz in Florida for the alleged breach of his franchise agreement did not offend due process. At the outset, we note a continued division among lower courts respecting whether and to what extent a contract can constitute a "contact" for purposes of due process analysis. [FN21] If the question is whether an individual's contract with an out-of-state party alone can automatically establish sufficient minimum contacts in the other party's home forum, we believe the answer clearly is that it cannot. The Court long ago rejected the notion that personal jurisdiction might turn on "mechanical" tests, International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S., at 319, 66 S.Ct., at 159, or on "conceptualistic ... theories of the place of contracting or of performance," 479Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen,* 318 U.S., at 316, 63 S.Ct., at 604. Instead, we have emphasized the need for a "highly realistic" approach that recognizes that a "contract" is "ordinarily but an intermediate step serving to tie up prior business negotiations with future consequences which themselves are the real object of the business transaction." Id., at 316- 317, 63 S.Ct., at 604-605. It is these factors--prior negotiations and contemplated future consequences, along with the terms of the contract and the parties' actual course of dealing--that must be evaluated in determining whether the defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum.

FN21. See, e.g., Lakeside Bridge & Steel Co. v. Mountain State Construction Co., 445 U.S. 907, 909-910, 100 S.Ct. 1087, 1088-1089, 63 L.Ed.2d 325 (1980) (WHITE, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (collecting cases); Brewer, Jurisdiction in Single Contract Cases, 6 U.Ark. *2186 [21] In this case, no physical ties to Florida can be attributed to Rudzewicz other than MacShara's brief training course in Miami. [FN22] Rudzewicz did not maintain offices in Florida and, for all that appears from the record, has never even visited there. Yet this franchise dispute grew directly out of "a contract which had a substantial connection with that State." McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201 (emphasis added). Eschewing the option of operating an independent local enterprise, Rudzewicz deliberately "reach[ed] out beyond" Michigan and negotiated with a Florida corporation for the purchase of a long- term franchise and 480 the manifold benefits that would derive from affiliation with a nationwide organization. Travelers Health Assn. v. Virginia, 339 U.S., at 647, 70 S.Ct., at 929. Upon approval, he entered into a carefully structured 20-year relationship that envisioned continuing and wide-reaching contacts with Burger King in Florida. In light of Rudzewicz' voluntary acceptance of the long-term and exacting regulation of his business from Burger King's Miami headquarters, the "quality and nature" of his relationship to the company in Florida can in no sense be viewed as "random," "fortuitous," or "attenuated." Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S., at 253,

> FN22. The Eleventh Circuit held that MacShara's presence in Florida was irrelevant to the question of Rudzewicz's minimum contacts with that forum, reasoning that "Rudzewicz and MacShara never formed a partnership" and "signed the agreements in their individual capacities." 724 F.2d, at 1513, n. 14. The two did jointly form a corporation through which they were seeking to conduct the franchise, however. See n. 6, supra. They were required to decide which one of them would travel to Florida to satisfy the training requirements so that they could commence business, and Rudzewicz participated in the decision that MacShara would go there. We have previously noted that when commercial activities are "carried on in behalf of" an out-of-state party those activities may sometimes be ascribed to the party, International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 320, 66 S.Ct. 154, 160, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945), at least where he is a "primary participan[t]" in the enterprise and has acted purposefully in directing those activities, Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S., at 790, 104 S.Ct., at 1487. Because MacShara's matriculation at Burger King University is not pivotal to the disposition of this case, we need not resolve the permissible bounds of such attribution.

The Court of Appeals concluded, however, that in light of the supervision emanating from Burger King's district office in Birmingham, Rudzewicz reasonably believed that "the Michigan office was for all intents and purposes the embodiment of Burger King" and that he therefore had no "reason to anticipate a Burger King suit outside of Michigan." 724 F.2d, at 1511. See also post, at 2190 (STEVENS, J., dissenting). This reasoning overlooks substantial record evidence indicating that Rudzewicz most certainly knew that he was affiliating himself with an enterprise based primarily in Florida. The contract documents themselves emphasize that Burger King's operations are conducted and supervised from the Miami headquarters, that all relevant notices and payments must be sent there, and that the agreements were made in and enforced from Miami. See n. 5, supra. Moreover, the parties' actual course of dealing repeatedly confirmed that decisionmaking authority was vested in the Miami headquarters 481 and that the district office served largely as an intermediate link between the headquarters and the franchisees. When problems arose over building design, site-development fees, rent computation, and the defaulted payments, Rudzewicz and MacShara learned that the Michigan office was powerless to resolve their disputes and *2187 could only channel their communications to Miami. Throughout these disputes, the Miami headquarters and the Michigan franchisees carried on a continuous course of direct communications by mail and by telephone, and it was the Miami headquarters that made the key negotiating decisions out of which the instant litigation arose. See nn. 7, 9, supra.

[22][23] Moreover, we believe the Court of Appeals gave insufficient weight to provisions in the various franchise documents providing that all disputes would be governed by Florida law. The franchise agreement, for example, stated:

> "This Agreement shall become valid when executed and accepted by BKC at Miami, Florida; it shall be deemed made and entered into in the State of Florida and shall be governed and construed under and in accordance with the laws of the State of Florida. The choice of law designation does not require that all suits concerning this Agreement be filed in Florida." App. 72.

See also n. 5, supra. The Court of Appeals reasoned that choice-of-law provisions are irrelevant to the question of personal jurisdiction, relying on Hanson v. Denckla for the proposition that "the center of gravity for choice-of-law purposes does not necessarily confer the sovereign prerogative to assert jurisdiction." 724 F.2d, at 1511-1512, n. 10, citing 357 U.S., at 254, 78 S.Ct., at 1240. This reasoning misperceives the import of the quoted proposition. The Court in Hanson and subsequent cases has emphasized that choice-of-law analysis --which focuses on all elements of a transaction, and not simply on the defendant's conduct--is distinct from minimum-contacts jurisdictional analysis--which focuses at the threshold 482 solely on the defendant's purposeful connection to the forum. [FN23] Nothing in our cases, however, suggests that a choice-of-law provision should be ignored in considering whether a defendant has "purposefully invoked the benefits and protections of a State's laws" for jurisdictional purposes. Although such a provision standing alone would be insufficient to confer jurisdiction, we believe that, when combined with the 20-year interdependent relationship Rudzewicz established with Burger King's Miami headquarters, it reinforced his deliberate affiliation with the forum State and the reasonable foreseeability of possible litigation there. As Judge Johnson argued in his dissent below, Rudzewicz "purposefully availed himself of the benefits and protections of Florida's laws" by entering into contracts expressly providing that those laws would govern franchise disputes. 724 F.2d, at 1513. [FN24]

FN23. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S., at 253-254, 78 S.Ct., at 1239- 1240. See also Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 778, 104 S.Ct., at 1480; Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 98, 98 S.Ct., at 1700; Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S., at 215, 97 S.Ct., at 2585.

FN24. In addition, the franchise agreement's disclaimer that the "choice of law designation does not require that all suits concerning this Agreement be filed in Florida," App. 72 (emphasis added), reasonably should have suggested to Rudzewicz that by negative implication such suits could be filed there.
The lease also provided for binding arbitration in Miami of certain condemnation disputes, id., at 113, and Rudzewicz conceded the validity of this provision at oral argument, Tr. of Oral Arg. 37. Although it does not govern the instant dispute, this provision also should have made it apparent to the franchisees that they were dealing directly with the Miami headquarters and that the Birmingham district office was not "for all intents and purposes the embodiment of Burger King." 724 F.2d, at 1511.

[24][25] Nor has Rudzewicz pointed to other factors that can be said persuasively to outweigh the considerations discussed above and to establish the unconstitutionality of Florida's assertion of jurisdiction. We cannot conclude that Florida had no "legitimate interest in holding [Rudzewicz] answerable 483 on a claim related to" the contacts he had established in that State. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S., at 776, 104 S.Ct., at 1479; see also 2188McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201 (noting that State frequently will have a "manifest interest in providing effective means of redress for its residents"). [FN25] Moreover, although Rudzewicz has argued at some length that Michigan's Franchise Investment Law, Mich.Comp.Laws § 445.1501 et seq. (1979), governs many aspects of this franchise relationship, he has not demonstrated how Michigan's acknowledged interest might possibly render jurisdiction in Florida unconstitutional. [FN26] Finally, the Court of Appeals' assertion that the Florida litigation "severely impaired [Rudzewicz'] ability to call Michigan witnesses who might be essential to his defense and counterclaim," 724 F.2d, at 1512-1513, is wholly without support in the record. [FN27] And even to the extent that it is inconvenient 484 for a party who has minimum contacts with a forum to litigate there, such considerations most frequently can be accommodated through a change of venue. See n. 20, supra. Although the Court has suggested that inconvenience may at some point become so substantial as to achieve constitutional magnitude, McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., supra, 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201, this is not such a case.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN25. Complaining that "when Burger King is the plaintiff, you won't 'have it your way' because it sues all franchisees in Miami," Brief for Appellee 19, Rudzewicz contends that Florida's interest in providing a convenient forum is negligible given the company's size and ability to conduct litigation anywhere in the country.

We disagree. Absent compelling considerations, cf. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201, a defendant who has purposefully derived commercial benefit from his affiliations in a forum may not defeat jurisdiction there simply because of his adversary's greater net wealth.

FN26. Rudzewicz has failed to show how the District Court's exercise of jurisdiction in this case might have been at all inconsistent with Michigan's interests. To the contrary, the court found that Burger King had fully complied with Michigan law, App. 159, and there is nothing in Michigan's franchise Act suggesting that Michigan would attempt to assert exclusive jurisdiction to resolve franchise disputes affecting its residents. In any event, minimum-contacts analysis presupposes that two or more States may be interested in the outcome of a dispute, and the process of resolving potentially conflicting "fundamental substantive social policies," World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 292, 100 S.Ct., at 564, can usually be accommodated through choice-of-law rules rather than through outright preclusion of jurisdiction in one forum. See n. 19, supra.

FN27. The only arguable instance of trial inconvenience occurred when Rudzewicz had difficulty in authenticating some corporate records; the court offered him as much time as would be necessary to secure the requisite authentication from the Birmingham district office, and Burger King ultimately stipulated to their authenticity rather than delay the trial. See 7 Record 574-575, 578-579, 582, 598-599.

[26] The Court of Appeals also concluded, however, that the parties' dealings involved "a characteristic disparity of bargaining power" and "elements of surprise," and that Rudzewicz "lacked fair notice" of the potential for litigation in Florida because the contractual provisions suggesting to the contrary were merely "boilerplate declarations in a lengthy printed contract." 724 F.2d, at 1511-1512, and n. 10. See also post, at 2190 (STEVENS, J., dissenting). Rudzewicz presented many of these arguments to the District Court, contending that Burger King was guilty of misrepresentation, fraud, and duress; that it gave insufficient notice in its dealings with him; and that the contract was one of adhesion. See 4 Record 687-691. After a 3-day bench trial, the District Court found that Burger King had made no misrepresentations, that Rudzewicz and MacShara "were and are experienced and sophisticated businessmen," and that "at no time" did they "act [t] under economic duress or disadvantage imposed by" Burger King. App. 157- 158. See also 7 Record 648-649. Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 52(a) requires that "[f]indings of fact shall not be set aside unless clearly erroneous," and neither Rudzewicz nor the Court of Appeals has pointed to record evidence that would support a "definite and firm conviction" that the District Court's findings are mistaken. United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 333 U.S. 364, 395, 68 S.Ct. 525, 542, 92 L.Ed. 746 (1948). See also 485 2189 Anderson v. Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 573-576, 105 S.Ct. 1504, ---- - ----, 84 L.Ed.2d 518 (1985). To the contrary, Rudzewicz was represented by counsel throughout these complex transactions and, as Judge Johnson observed in dissent below, was himself an experienced accountant "who for five months conducted negotiations with Burger King over the terms of the franchise and lease agreements, and who obligated himself personally to contracts requiring over time payments that exceeded $1 million." 724 F.2d, at 1514. Rudzewicz was able to secure a modest reduction in rent and other concessions from Miami headquarters, see nn. 8, 9, supra; moreover, to the extent that Burger King's terms were inflexible, Rudzewicz presumably decided that the advantages of affiliating with a national organization provided sufficient commercial benefits to offset the

FN28. We do not mean to suggest that the jurisdictional outcome will always be the same in franchise cases. Some franchises may be primarily intrastate in character or involve different decisionmaking structures, such that a franchisee should not reasonably anticipate out-of-state litigation. Moreover, commentators have argued that franchise relationships may sometimes involve unfair business practices in their inception and operation. See H. Brown, Franchising Realities and Remedies 4-5 (2d ed. 1978). For these reasons, we reject Burger King's suggestion for "a general rule, or at least a presumption, that participation in an interstate franchise relationship" represents consent to the jurisdiction of the franchisor's principal place of business. Brief for Appellant 46.

[27] Notwithstanding these considerations, the Court of Appeals apparently believed that it was necessary to reject jurisdiction in this case as a prophylactic measure, reasoning that an affirmance of the District Court's judgment would result in the exercise of jurisdiction over "out-of-state consumers to collect payments due on modest personal purchases" and would "sow the seeds of default judgments against franchisees owing smaller debts." 724 F.2d, at 1511. We share the Court of Appeals' broader concerns and therefore reject any talismanic jurisdictional formulas; "the 486 facts of each case must [always] be weighed" in determining whether personal jurisdiction would comport with "fair play and substantial justice." Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 92, 98 S.Ct., at 1696-1697. [FN29] The "quality and nature" of an interstate transaction may sometimes be so "random," "fortuitous," or "attenuated" [FN30] that it cannot fairly be said that the potential defendant "should reasonably anticipate being haled into court" in another jurisdiction. World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S., at 297, 100 S.Ct., at 567; see also n. 18, supra. We also have emphasized that jurisdiction may not be grounded on a contract whose terms have been obtained through "fraud, undue influence, or overweening bargaining power" and whose application would render litigation "so gravely difficult and inconvenient that [a party] will for all practical purposes be deprived of his day in court." The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S., at 12, 18, 92 S.Ct., at 1914, 1917. Cf. Fuentes v. Shevin, 407 U.S. 67, 94-96, 92 S.Ct. 1983, 2001-2002, 32 L.Ed.2d 556 (1972); National Equipment Rental, Ltd. v. Szukhent, 375 U.S. 311, 329, 84 S.Ct. 411, 421, 11 L.Ed.2d 354 (1964) (BLACK, J., dissenting) (jurisdictional rules may not be employed against small consumers so as to "crippl[e] their defense"). Just as the Due Process Clause allows flexibility in ensuring that commercial actors are not effectively *2190 "judgment proof" for the consequences of obligations they voluntarily assume in other States, McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S., at 223, 78 S.Ct., at 201, so too does it prevent rules that would unfairly enable them to obtain default judgments against unwitting customers. Cf. United States v. Rumely, 345 U.S. 41, 44, 73 S.Ct. 543, 545, 97 L.Ed. 770 (1953) (courts must not be " 'blind' " to what " '[a]ll others can see and understand' ").

FN29. This approach does, of course, preclude clear-cut jurisdictional rules. But any inquiry into "fair play and substantial justice" necessarily requires determinations "in which few answers will be written 'in black and white. The greys are dominant and even among them the shades are innumerable.' " Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 92, 98 S.Ct., at 1697.

487 For the reasons set forth above, however, these dangers are not present in the instant case. Because Rudzewicz established a substantial and continuing relationship with Burger King's Miami headquarters, received fair notice from the contract documents and the course of dealing that he might be subject to suit in Florida, and has failed to demonstrate how jurisdiction in that forum would otherwise be fundamentally unfair, we conclude that the District Court's exercise of jurisdiction pursuant to Fla.Stat. § 48.193(1)(g) (Supp.1984) did not offend due process. The judgment of the Court of Appeals is accordingly reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

Justice POWELL took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Justice STEVENS, with whom Justice WHITE joins, dissenting.

In my opinion there is a significant element of unfairness in requiring a franchisee to defend a case of this kind in the forum chosen by the franchisor. It is undisputed that appellee maintained no place of business in Florida, that he had no employees in that State, and that he was not licensed to do business there. Appellee did not prepare his French fries, shakes, and hamburgers in Michigan, and then deliver them into the stream of commerce "with the expectation that they [would] be purchased by consumers in" Florida. Ante, at 2182. To the contrary, appellee did business only in Michigan, his business, property, and payroll taxes were payable in that State, and he sold all of his products there.

Throughout the business relationship, appellee's principal contacts with appellant were with its Michigan office. Notwithstanding its disclaimer, ante, at 2185, the Court seems ultimately to rely on nothing more than standard boilerplate language contained in various documents, ante, at 2187, 488 to establish that appellee " 'purposefully availed himself of the benefits and protections of Florida's laws.' " Id., at 2187. Such superficial analysis creates a potential for unfairness not only in negotiations between franchisors and their franchisees but, more significantly, in the resolution of the disputes that inevitably arise from time to time in such relationships.

Judge Vance's opinion for the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit adequately explains why I would affirm the judgment of that court. I particularly find the following more persuasive than what this Court has written today:

> "Nothing in the course of negotiations gave Rudzewicz reason to anticipate a Burger King suit outside of Michigan. The only face-to-face or even oral contact Rudzewicz had with Burger King throughout months of protracted negotiations was with representatives of the Michigan office. Burger King had the Michigan office interview Rudzewicz and MacShara, appraise their application, discuss price terms, recommend the site which the defendants finally agreed to, and attend the final closing ceremony. There is no evidence that Rudzewicz ever negotiated with anyone in Miami or even sent mail there during negotiations. He maintained no staff in the state of Florida, and as far as the record reveals, he has never even visited the state.
> "The contracts contemplated the startup of a local Michigan restaurant whose profits would derive solely from food sales made to customers in Drayton Plains. The sale, which involved the use of an intangible trademark in Michigan and occupancy of a Burger King facility *2191 there, required no performance in the state of Florida. Under the contract, the local Michigan district office was responsible for providing all of the services due Rudzewicz, including advertising and management consultation. Supervision, moreover, emanated from that office alone. To Rudzewicz, the Michigan office was for all intents and purposes the embodiment 489 of Burger King. He had reason to believe that his working relationship with Burger King began and ended in Michigan, not at the distant and anonymous Florida headquarters.... "Given that the office in Rudzewicz' home state conducted all of the negotiations and wholly supervised the contract, we believe that he had reason to assume that the state of the supervisory office would be the same state in which Burger King would file suit. Rudzewicz lacked fair notice that the distant corporate headquarters which insulated itself from direct dealings with him would later seek to assert jurisdiction over him in the courts of its own home state....

"Just as Rudzewicz lacked notice of the possibility of suit in Florida, he was financially unprepared to meet its added costs. The franchise relationship in particular is fraught with potential for financial surprise. The device of the franchise gives local retailers the access to national trademark recognition which enables them to compete with better-financed, more efficient chain stores. This national affiliation, however, does not alter the fact that the typical franchise store is a local concern serving at best a neighborhood or community. Neither the revenues of a local business nor the geographical range of its market prepares the average franchise owner for the cost of distant litigation....

"The particular distribution of bargaining power in the franchise relationship further impairs the franchisee's financial preparedness. In a franchise contract, 'the franchisor normally occupies [the] dominant role'.... "We discern a characteristic disparity of bargaining power in the facts of this case. There is no indication that Rudzewicz had any latitude to negotiate a reduced rent or franchise fee in exchange for the added risk of suit in Florida. He signed a standard form contract whose terms were non-negotiable and which appeared 490 in some respects to vary from the more favorable terms agreed to in earlier discussions. In fact, the final contract required a minimum monthly rent computed on a base far in excess of that discussed in oral negotiations. Burger King resisted price concessions, only to sue Rudzewicz far from home. In doing so, it severely impaired his ability to call Michigan witnesses who might be essential to his defense and counterclaim.

"In sum, we hold that the circumstances of the Drayton Plains franchise and the negotiations which led to it left Rudzewicz bereft of reasonable notice and financially unprepared for the prospect of franchise litigation in Florida. Jurisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process." 724 F.2d 1505, 1511-1513 (1984) (footnotes omitted).

Accordingly, I respectfully dissent.

United States Court of Appeals,

GATES LEARJET CORPORATION and Gates Learjet Export Corporation, Plaintiffs/Appellants,
v.
James B. JENSEN, Jr.; Ricardo S. Tomacruz; Learjet Philippines, Inc., a corporation; James B. Jensen & Co., Inc., a corporation, and Hamix International, Ltd., a corporation, Defendants/Appellees.

No. 83-2643.

Argued and Submitted May 14, 1984.
Decided Sept. 27, 1984.

Arizona aircraft manufacturer filed suit against nonresident defendants alleging unauthorized use of trade names and trademarks, abuse of process, interference with contractual relations and conspiracy to make unauthorized use of trade names and trademarks. The United States District Court for the District of Arizona, Alfredo C. Marquez, J., dismissed the abuse of process and interference with contractual relations counts for lack of personal jurisdiction and dismissed the trademark claims on grounds of forum non conveniens. Appeal was taken. The Court of Appeals, Choy, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) although the nonresident defendants did not have sufficient contacts with Arizona to support general jurisdiction, the abuse of process and interference with contractual relations claims were sufficiently related to the trademark claims, over which there was personal jurisdiction, to support a finding of limited jurisdiction, and (2) the district court's dismissal of the trademark counts for forum non conveniens was an abuse of discretion.

Reversed and remanded.

I. BACKGROUND

Gates Learjet Corporation and Gates Learjet Export Corporation ("Gates") entered into an international distributorship agreement with Learjet Philippines, Inc. ("LPI") in 1978. Gates, principally located in Tucson, Arizona, manufactures executive aircraft known as Learjets. LPI is a Philippine corporation. The original agreement was for a period of one year but was renewed for an additional two years and four months.

1329 James B. Jensen, Jr., a United States citizen with residence in California and the Philippines, is the president of LPI and James B. Jensen & Co. ("Jensen, Inc."), a California corporation located in San Francisco. The negotiations for the international distributorship agreement occurred both in Tucson, when Jensen visited Gates, and by telephone, correspondence, and telex from Tucson to Manila and San Francisco. The agreement provides that it "is an Arizona agreement and that it shall be governed by the laws of the State of Arizona of the United States of America in all matters, included but not limited to, validity, obligation, interpretation, construction, performance and termination."

During the time the agreement was in effect, Jensen and Ricardo S. Tomacruz, the vice-president and general manager of LPI and a citizen and resident of the Philippines, made several trips to Tucson on behalf of LPI. The purposes of Jensen's visits, which numbered at least seven between February 1978 and September 1981, included arrangement of an aircraft sale, meetings with Gates' employees, and attendance at Gates' international distributor conference and the delivery of several airplanes. LPI also entered into several airplane purchase agreements with Gates in Tucson. Each agreement contained a choice of law provision specifying Arizona and a choice of forum provision that the "courts of Arizona shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all claims, disputes, actions, or suits which may arise hereunder." In addition, LPI and Jensen, Inc. purchased over $200,000 in spare parts from Gates.

In 1981, Gates did not renew the international distributorship agreement with LPI. On February 3, 1982, Gates filed a four-count complaint in an Arizona state court against Jensen, Tomacruz, LPI, Jensen, Inc., and Hamix International Ltd., a Hong Kong corporation ("defendants"). Count one of the complaint alleges unauthorized use of Gates' tradenames and trademarks. Count two alleges abuse of process arising out of the seizure by Philippine authorities of a Gates' aircraft and the jailing of its pilot. Count three alleges interference with contractual relations between Gates and customers in the Philippines. Count four alleges a conspiracy to make unauthorized use of Gates' tradename and trademark. The action was removed to a federal district court for diversity of citizenship.

On September 23, 1982, the United States District Court for the District of Arizona dismissed counts two and three for lack of personal jurisdiction as to one of the defendants, Jensen, Inc. Gates Learjet Corp. v. Jensen, No. CIV 82-139 (D.Ariz. Sept. 23, 1982) (Gates Learjet I). After this partial dismissal, the defendants answered the complaint and filed a six-count counterclaim. The counterclaim alleges improper termination of the distributorship agreement, unjust enrichment, interference with contractual relations, and defamation. It added three parties to the litigation: B.S. Stillwell, Jane Doe Stillwell, and Stillwell Aviation Australia Party, Ltd. On May 31, 1983, the district court clarified its earlier dismissal order and dismissed counts two and three as to all of the defendants.

On October 5, 1983, after 18 months of trial preparation, the defendants challenged the convenience of the forum. The defendants allege that two civil actions pending in Philippine courts make the same allegations as the action brought by Gates in Arizona. On November 1, 1983, the district court conditionally dismissed counts one and four of the complaint under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. The court dismissed Gates' complaint on the following conditions: 1) The Philippine courts accept jurisdiction; 2) the defendants submit to that jurisdiction; 3) the defendants make their employees available for process and as witnesses; 4) the defendants waive any newly arisen statute of limitations defenses; 5) the defendants recognize any Philippine court judgment; and 6) all discovery and products may be used in any action in the Philippines, subject to objections which could be made in this court. Gates Learjet Corp. v. Jensen, No. CIV 82-139, slip op. at 11 (D.Ariz. Nov. 1, 1983) (Gates Learjet II).

1330 II. DISCUSSION

A. Personal Jurisdiction

[1] The district court dismissed counts two and three of Gates' complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction. As the party seeking to invoke the jurisdiction of the court, Gates has the burden of establishing personal jurisdiction. Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Technology Associates, Inc., 557 F.2d 1280, 1285 (9th Cir.1977). [FN1] Arizona's long-arm statute establishes personal jurisdiction over nonresidents to the maximum extent permitted by due process. Houghton v. Piper Aircraft Corp., 112 Ariz. 365, 542 P.2d 24, 26 (1975). Due process requires the defendants to have certain minimum contacts with the forum so that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 158, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945); Colonial Leasing Co. v. Pugh Brothers Garage, 735 F.2d 380, 383 (9th Cir.1984). To satisfy this due process requirement, Gates may prove "general jurisdiction" or "limited jurisdiction."

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN1. Gates contends that the defendants waived any objection to personal jurisdiction when they invoked the jurisdiction of this court by asking for affirmative relief in a permissive counterclaim. The courts are divided on the issue of whether the assertion of a permissive counterclaim should constitute a waiver of a jurisdictional defense. Compare North Branch Products, Inc. v. Fisher, 284 F.2d 611, 615 (D.C.Cir.1960) (waiver) and Merz v. Hemmerle, 90 F.R.D. 566, 569 (E.D.N.Y.1981) (waiver) with Neifeld v. Steinberg, 438 F.2d 423, 427 (3d Cir.1971) (no waiver) and Lomanco, Inc. v. Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., 566 F.Supp. 846, 851 (E.D.Ark.1983) (no waiver). See generally Annot., 17 A.L.R.Fed. 390 (1973). Although this court has held that the defendant's assertion of a compulsory counterclaim "does not constitute a waiver of any jurisdictional defense he previously or concurrently asserts," Dragor Shipping Corp. v. Union Tank Car Co., 378 F.2d 241, 244 (9th Cir.1967), we have not decided whether the assertion of a permissive counterclaim constitutes a waiver.

As to defendant Jensen, Inc., this case is easily resolved because Jensen, Inc. brought a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction prior to the filing of the answer and counterclaim. See Neifeld v. Steinberg, 438 F.2d at 428 n. 10 (clearly no waiver when jurisdictional defenses raised by motion prior to filing of answer).

The other defendants, however, did not raise the jurisdictional defense until they filed their answer and counterclaim. Nevertheless, we hold that the filing of a permissive counterclaim does not constitute a waiver of a personal jurisdiction defense asserted in the same pleading. Rule 12(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure implicitly authorizes a defendant to join a jurisdictional defense with a counterclaim without waiving this defense. The rule permits a defendant to raise jurisdictional defenses by motion or by answer. If we were to find a waiver when a defendant files a permissive counterclaim in the same pleading in which he asserts jurisdictional defenses, the purposes behind Rule 12(b)--to avoid the delay caused by successive motions and pleadings and to reverse the prior practice of asserting jurisdictional defenses by "special appearances"--would be thwarted. See Neifeld v. Steinberg, 438 F.2d at 429. Moreover, courts have noted that when the rule makers wanted to attach "waiver" consequences in certain situations, they did so explicitly. See id. at 428 & n. 11; Lomanco, Inc. v. Missouri Pacific Railroad Co., 566 F.Supp. at 850.

1. General Jurisdiction

[2] A sufficient relationship between the defendants and Arizona exists to support general jurisdiction if Gates can demonstrate that the defendants' activities within Arizona are "substantial" or "continuous and systematic." See Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Technology Associates, Inc., 557 F.2d at 1287. We review the district court's holding that Jensen "does not transact business within Arizona on a continuous or systematic basis, and does not provide the kind of contacts that would sustain exercise of general jurisdiction." Gates Learjet I, slip op. at 7.

Gates cites five activities to prove that defendants' contacts with Arizona were "continuous and systematic" and "substantial": 1) Jensen solicited the distributorship agreement in Arizona; 2) the defendants visited Tucson a number of times; 3) the airplane purchase agreements between Gates and Jensen contained an Arizona choice of law and forum provision; 4) the defendants purchased spare parts from Gates in Tucson; and 5) the defendants sent many letters and telexes and made numerous telephone calls to Tucson.

1331 [3][4] We must decide whether these contacts constitute sufficient activity in Arizona to conclude that the defendants "may in fact be said already to be 'present' there." Wells Fargo & Co. v. Wells Fargo Express Co., 556 F.2d 406, 413 (9th Cir.1977). Moreover, we must focus upon the "economic reality" of the defendants' activities rather than a mechanical checklist. See Thos. P. Gonzalez Corp. v. Consejo Nacional, 614 F.2d 1247, 1254 (9th Cir.1980) (quoting*Foster v. Mooney Aircraft Corp.,* 68 Cal.App.3d 887, 137 Cal.Rptr. 694, 697 (1977)).

[5][6][7][8] We conclude that the "economic reality" here is that defendants' activities in Arizona were not "continuous and systematic" or "substantial". Jensen's solicitation of the distributorship agreement in Arizona and the defendants' visits to Tucson do not constitute "conducting business" in Arizona. See Rocke v. Canadian Automobile Sport Club, 660 F.2d 395, 399 (9th Cir.1981). Making telephone calls and sending telexes and letters to Tucson are not activities which support a finding of general jurisdiction. See Thos. P. Gonzalez Corp. v. Consejo Nacional, 614 F.2d at 1254. Furthermore, the choice of forum provision in the airplane purchase agreement applies only to disputes arising out of those agreements. Significantly, the defendants did not establish a regular place of business in Arizona. See Rocke v. Canadian Automobile Sport Club, 660 F.2d at 399. These contacts in their totality do not demonstrate sufficient activity in Arizona to support general jurisdiction. Defendants' activities in Arizona were more occasional than continuous, and more infrequent than systematic.

2. Limited Jurisdiction

[9] If a defendant's activities are not so pervasive to subject them to general jurisdiction, this court makes the following evaluation in determining whether there is limited jurisdiction:

> (1) The nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act by which he purposely avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws.
> (2) The claim must be one which arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities.
> (3) Exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable.

Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Technology Associates, Inc., 557 F.2d 1280, 1287 (9th Cir.1977).

[10] Gates clearly satisfies the first prong of this test. Not only did Jensen solicit the distributorship agreement in Arizona, but also the agreement specifically provides that Arizona law governs it. The distributorship agreement, therefore, directly invokes the benefits and protections of Arizona laws. See O'Hare International Bank v. Hampton, 437 F.2d 1173, 1177 (7th Cir.1971); Alchemie International, Inc. v. Metal World, Inc., 523 F.Supp. 1039, 1054 (D.N.J.1981). Given these circumstances, Jensen should have reasonably anticipated "being haled into court" in Arizona. See World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S.Ct. 559, 567, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980).

Prong two of the Data Disc inquiry requires that each claim "arises out of or results from" the defendants' forum related activity. 557 F.2d at 1287. The district court had the most trouble with this part of the test, stating:

> The claims of counts two and three, sounding in tort law, cannot be said to arise out of the distributorship agreement. These claims result from the conduct of defendant outside the state, and are too attenuated a contact to justify exercise of personal jurisdiction.

Gates Learjet I, slip op. at 10. After examining the record, we conclude that the district court erred in finding that the claims in counts two and three are "too attenuated a contact" to justify the exercise of personal jurisdiction.

[11] Count two of Gates' complaint alleges that the defendants filed two civil 1332 actions and one criminal complaint in the Philippines which caused the seizure of one of Gates' Learjets and the arrest of one of its employees. Count two alleges further that these actions were meant to harass, intimidate and threaten Gates and constitute an abuse of process. At first blush, this count may appear to be unrelated to the distributorship agreement. An examination of the complaint that the defendants filed in the Philippines on December 1, 1981, however, dispels any doubt that this count "arises out of" the distributorship agreement.

The first cause of action in the Philippines complaint alleges that Gates' nonrenewal of the distributorship agreement with the defendants was "clearly contrary to law, morals, good customs, public policy and public order." The second cause of action alleges "moral" and reputation damages for Gates' bad faith in refusing to renew the distributorship agreement. The third cause of action alleges wanton and fraudulent behavior in refusing to negotiate the renewal of the distributorship agreement. Thus, count two of Gates' complaint arose out of the distributorship agreement because its termination induced defendants' alleged harassment and intimidation of Gates. Count two was not too attenuated from the distributorship agreement to support a finding of limited jurisdiction.

[12] We similarly conclude that count three of Gates' complaint satisfies the second prong of the Data Disc test. Count three alleges that the defendants interfered with Gates' contractual relations with its customers in the Philippines. This count also arises out of the distributorship agreement because its factual basis concerns whether Jensen improperly used Gates' tradenames contrary to the terms of the distributorship agreement. [FN2]

> FN2. Gates cites cases that interpret an Arizona attorney's fee statute and hold that tort claims arise out of a contract if they could not exist "but for" the contract. See, e.g., Sparks v. Republic National Life Insurance Co., 132 Ariz. 529, 544, 647 P.2d 1127, 1141 (1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1070, 103 S.Ct. 490, 74 L.Ed.2d 632. Although these cases interpret the "arises out of" language in a manner that supports Gates' construction, Gates never demonstrates why this court, in applying a constitutional due process test, should adopt an Arizona court's interpretation of an irrelevant state statute.

The third and final prong of the Data Disc inquiry requires a court's exercise of jurisdiction to be reasonable. 557 F.2d at 1287. This court has identified seven factors as pertinent to the reasonableness inquiry:

> (A) the extent of the defendant's purposeful interjection into the forum state; (B) the burden of defending in the forum state; (C) the extent of the conflict with the sovereignty of the defendant's state; (D) the forum state's interest in adjudicating the dispute; (E) the most efficient judicial resolution of the controversy; (F) the importance of the forum to the plaintiff's interest in convenient and effective relief; and (G) the existence of an alternative forum.

Rocke v. Canadian Automobile Sport Club, 660 F.2d 395, 399 (9th Cir.1981); see Insurance Co. of North America v. Marina Salina Cruz, 649 F.2d 1266, 1270 (9th Cir.1981). "These factors are not mandatory tests, each of which plaintiff must pass in order for a court properly to assume jurisdiction. Instead, the factors illuminate the considerations of fairness and due process set forth in International Shoe, 326 U.S. at 310 [66 S.Ct. at 154]." Hedrick v. Daiko Shoji Co., Ltd., Osaka, 715 F.2d 1355, 1359 (9th Cir.1983).

The application of these factors to this case convinces us that it would be reasonable to subject the defendants to the jurisdiction of the Arizona court. We consider each of the factors in turn.

[13] Although not extensive enough to support general jurisdiction, the contacts of LPI, Jensen, and Tomacruz with Arizona are sufficient to demonstrate a purposeful interjection into the forum state. Jensen solicited an international distributorship agreement in Tucson, which contained a choice of law provision specifying Arizona. 1333 Both Jensen and Tomacruz made several visits to the Gates' facilities and even accepted delivery of airplanes in Tucson. Moreover, these airplane purchase agreements contained choice of law and forum provisions, both of which specified Arizona. Thus, the terms of important contracts between Gates and the defendants demonstrate that the defendants had notice that they might be brought into a court in Arizona.

[14] The burden on the defendants of defending in Arizona, as opposed to the Philippines, is potentially significant. Litigating abroad imposes significant inconveniences upon the party appearing in a foreign country. Olsen By Sheldon v. Mexico, 729 F.2d 641, 650 (9th Cir.1984). We nevertheless conclude that the burden on the defendants would not be substantial here, primarily because the defendants must litigate in Arizona anyway. The district court found personal jurisdiction as to counts one and four. The extra burden of defending counts two and three in Arizona, particularly in light of their connection to counts one and four, would be minimal.

[15][16] The reasonableness of jurisdiction depends also in part upon the seriousness of the potential affront to the sovereignty of the defendants' state. A foreign nation presents a higher sovereignty barrier than that between two states within our union. Insurance Co. of North America v. Marina Salina Cruz, 649 F.2d at 1272.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Two of the three defendants named in counts two and three are residents of the Philippines. The government of the Philippines clearly has an interest in resolving disputes that involve its citizens. Nevertheless, we note that this factor is not dispositive because, if given controlling weight, it would always prevent suit against a foreign national in a United States court.

[17] We examine next Arizona's interest in adjudicating this dispute. Arizona has a strong interest in ensuring that its citizens are fully compensated for their injuries, in part to protect the state's economic resources from unnecessary expenditures. See Olsen By Sheldon v. Mexico, 729 F.2d at 651.

[18] At the current stage of the litigation, Arizona would appear to be the more efficient forum to resolve this dispute. Gates alleges, and defendants do not dispute, that discovery is completed and "this matter could be tried in a matter of weeks." In addition, although parts of counts two and three may require the application of Philippine law, the proof of both counts may also involve the application of Arizona law. For example, Gates may attempt to prove the unreasonableness of defendants' alleged actions in count two, in part, by demonstrating that Gates properly terminated the distributorship agreement, which proof would require the application of Arizona law. The district court in Arizona is the more efficient forum to resolve such interpretations of Arizona law. See Hedrick v. Daiko Shoji Co., Ltd., Osaka, 715 F.2d at 1359; Raffaele v. Compagnie Generale Maritime, 707 F.2d 395, 399 (9th Cir.1983); Insurance Co. of North America v. Marina Salina Cruz, 649 F.2d at 1273. [FN3]

> FN3. The Philippines, of course, may be the more efficient forum to apply possible Philippine law questions. Nevertheless, we conclude that Arizona is the more efficient forum because the action is almost ready for trial in Arizona.

[19] An Arizona court certainly provides Gates with the most convenient forum for seeking relief. Unlike the individual plaintiff in Raffaele v. Compagnie Generale Maritime, 707 F.2d at 399, both parties here involve corporate entities apparently with sufficient resources to defend in either country. We therefore give some, but not significant, weight to this factor.

[20] The final factor we consider is the availability of an alternative forum. Gates alleges that it may not receive a fair trial in the Philippines because of the "well publicized violent upheavals" there. We note that the "appellants must carry the burden 1334 of proving the unavailability of an alternative forum." Olsen By Sheldon v. Mexico, 729 F.2d at 651. We cannot say that Gates has satisfied this burden. In light of the other factors, however, this factor is not dispositive.

[21] After considering all the relevant factors, we conclude that, on balance, the exercise of limited personal jurisdiction over the defendants by a federal district court in Arizona is reasonable. The defendants' numerous visits to Tucson and Jensen's solicitation of the distributorship agreement there demonstrate a purposeful interjection into the state of Arizona. Moreover, defending counts two and three would not burden defendants significantly because they must litigate counts one and four in Arizona anyway. We place some, but not substantial, weight on the convenience to Gates of litigating this dispute in Arizona. Finally, Arizona has an interest in adjudicating this dispute and, at this stage of the litigation, it is the more efficient forum.

In weighing these factors, we are not convinced that adjudication of this dispute in Arizona will affront the sovereignty of the Philippines. Although the availability of an alternative forum supports the defendants' position, the other factors weigh more strongly in Gates' favor. The district court in its order did not weigh these factors, nor did it examine whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction would be reasonable. Under the Data Disc three-prong inquiry, therefore, the district court erred in dismissing counts two and three for lack of personal jurisdiction.

B. Forum Non Conveniens

On November 1, 1983, the district court conditionally dismissed Gates' complaint under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. Because the district court had dismissed counts two and three for lack of personal jurisdiction one year earlier, this dismissal pertained only to counts one and four, which allege unauthorized use of Gates' tradenames and trademarks. The dismissal would require Gates to pursue relief in the Philippine courts.

Whether an action may be dismissed for forum non conveniens when jurisdiction is otherwise properly invoked is governed by the factors outlined in Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. 501, 508-09, 67 S.Ct. 839, 843, 91 L.Ed. 1055 (1947). The Court divided these factors into "private interest" and "public interest" factors, each of which must be weighed by the district court. As this court has noted:

> The private interest factors include "the relative ease of access to sources of proof; availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling, and the cost of obtaining attendance of willing, witnesses; possibility of view of premises, if view would be appropriate to the action; and all other practical problems that make trial of a case easy, expeditious and inexpensive." ... The public interest factors include the administrative difficulties flowing from court congestion; the local interest in having localized controversies resolved at home; the interest in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is familiar with the law that must govern the action; the avoidance of unnecessary problems in conflicts of law, or in application of foreign law; and the unfairness of burdening citizens in an unrelated forum with jury duty.

Cheng v. Boeing Co., 708 F.2d 1406, 1409-10 (9th Cir.1983) (citations omitted), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1017, 104 S.Ct. 549, 78 L.Ed.2d 723 (1983).

[22] If a district court properly analyzes and considers all relevant factors and its balancing of these factors is reasonable, its forum non conveniens dismissal "may be reversed only when there has been a clear abuse of discretion." Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. 235, 257, 102 S.Ct. 252, 266, 70 L.Ed.2d 419 (1981). A district court, therefore, abuses its discretion when it fails to balance the relevant factors. La Seguridad v. Transytur Line, 707 F.2d 1304, 1308 (11th Cir.1983). "Emphasis on the district court's discretion ... must not overshadow the central principle of the Gilbert doctrine that 'unless the balance is strongly in favor of the defendant, the 1335 plaintiff's choice of forum should rarely be disturbed.' " Manu International, S.A. v. Avon Products, Inc., 641 F.2d 62, 65 (2d Cir.1981) (quoting Gulf Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. at 508, 67 S.Ct. at 843).

We conclude that the district court did not balance the important relevant factors. The balance of the public and private interest factors is not strongly in favor of the defendants. We therefore hold that the district court's dismissal of counts one and four for forum non conveniens was an abuse of discretion.

1. Private Interest Factors

[23] The district court failed to examine at least two important and relevant private interest factors. [FN4] First, the district court did not recognize or consider in its balancing that Gates is a United States citizen and a resident of Arizona. A United States citizen has no absolute right to sue in a United States court. Mizokami Brothers of Arizona, Inc. v. Baychem Corp., 556 F.2d 975, 977 (9th Cir.1977) (per curiam), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1035, 98 S.Ct. 770, 54 L.Ed.2d 783 (1978). The Supreme Court, however, has observed "that a plaintiff's choice of forum is entitled to greater deference when the plaintiff has chosen the home forum." Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. at 255, 102 S.Ct. at 265; see Koster v. Lumbermens Mutual Co., 330 U.S. 518, 524, 67 S.Ct. 828, 832, 91 L.Ed. 1067 (1947); Paper Operations Consultants International, Ltd. v. SS Hong Kong Amber, 513 F.2d 667, 672 (9th Cir.1975). Greater deference is due because "a real showing of convenience by a plaintiff who has sued in his home forum will normally outweigh the inconvenience the defendant may have shown." Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. at 255 n. 23, 102 S.Ct. at 266 n. 23 (quoting Koster v. Lumbermens Mutual Co., 330 U.S. at 524, 67 S.Ct. at 832).

> FN4. The district court correctly began its analysis with a determination of whether there exists an alternative forum. See Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. at 254 n. 22, 102 S.Ct. at 265 n. 22; Cheng v. Boeing Co., 708 F.2d at 1410; Pain v. United Technologies Corp., 637 F.2d 775, 784 (D.C.Cir.1980), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1128, 102 S.Ct. 980, 71 L.Ed.2d 116 (1981). The court noted that a defendant's amenability to process in the other jurisdiction ordinarily satisfies this requirement. See Gulf Oil Co. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. at 506-07, 67 S.Ct. at 842. We > do not overturn the district court's finding of an alternative forum. That an alternative forum exists, however, is not dispositive in the balancing required in a forum non conveniens analysis.

[24] The second relevant private interest factor the district court failed to examine is that the parties were ready for trial when it dismissed the complaint for forum non conveniens. The discovery deadline had passed; all documents needed for trial had been exchanged and/or identified; and all necessary trial documents were located in Tucson, Arizona. The central purpose of any forum non conveniens inquiry is to ensure that the trial is convenient. Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno, 454 U.S. at 256, 102 S.Ct. at 266; La Seguridad v. Transytur Line, 707 F.2d at 1307. That trial preparation had progressed nearly to the point of trial certainly was a relevant factor when the district court considered whether trial of the case in Arizona would have been more "easy, expeditious and inexpensive" than trial in the Philippines. See Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert, 330 U.S. at 508, 67 S.Ct. at 843. Although no single factor is dispositive, we conclude that the district court's failure to weigh these private interest factors was an abuse of discretion.

[25] We also observe that the private interest factors mentioned by the district court do not strongly support the defendants' position on forum non conveniens. The district court noted that "the vast majority of the witnesses reside in the Philippines ...." Gates Learjet II, slip op. at 9. The defendants, however, admit that the district court was not absolutely correct. In fact, 23 of the 44 witnesses, whom the parties designated in response to interrogatories, reside in the Philippines, which is hardly a "vast majority."

Furthermore, the district court improperly focused on the number of witnesses in each location. Instead, the court should have examined the materiality and importance of the anticipated witnesses' testimony and then determined their accessibility 1336 and convenience to the forum. See La Seguridad v. Transytur Line, 707 F.2d at 1308-09; Thomson & McKinnon v. Minyard, 291 F.Supp. 573, 576 (S.D.N.Y.1968). We also note that a district court should keep in mind that "the increased speed and ease of travel and communication ... makes, especially when a key issue is the location of witnesses, no forum 'as inconvenient [today] as it was in 1947,' " when the Supreme Court decided Gilbert. Manu International, S.A. v. Avon Products, Inc., 641 F.2d 62, 65 (2d Cir.1981). We are not convinced that the court here properly considered and weighed this private interest factor. We therefore cannot give much deference to the district court's consideration of it. [FN5]

> FN5. In its discussion of private interest factors, the district court also noted that "almost all of the acts alleged in the complaints and counterclaims occurred in the Philippines." This observation, however, seems to pertain to the Philippines' interest in the action, which is a public interest factor. If the district court was instead referring to the convenience of obtaining certain evidence, it failed to explain what evidence was unavailable. As discussed above, most trial materials were located in Arizona at the time the district court dismissed counts one and four for forum non conveniens.

2. Public Interest Factors

In its consideration of public interest factors, the district court concluded that the Philippines "has a substantial interest in the outcome of the litigation." It reasoned that "most of the operating facts occurred in the Philippines," and that "[t]he controversies will require the application of Arizona law and Philippine law." Gates Learjet II, slip op. at 10. Public interest factors properly considered include "the local interest in having localized controversies resolved at home," and "the interest in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is familiar with the law that must govern the action." Cheng v. Boeing Co., 708 F.2d at 1410.

[26] We nevertheless conclude that the district court's consideration of these public interest factors rested on a mistaken assumption about the applicable law and improperly ignored the advantages of an Arizona forum for the trial. In noting that both Philippine and Arizona law applied to this matter, the district court apparently considered all four counts of the Gates complaint. The defendants' motion to dismiss for forum non conveniens, however, could pertain only to counts one and four because the court had already dismissed counts two and three for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Counts one and four allege unauthorized use and a conspiracy to make unauthorized use of Gates' tradename and trademark. These counts involve an interpretation of the international distributorship agreement entered into between Gates and LPI. Under the heading, "Post-Termination Actions," the distributorship agreement provides:

> The Distributor shall immediately discontinue the use of any trade names or trademarks referred to in Article III above and shall make no further use of the same nor any other name, title, expression or mark so nearly resembling such trade names or trademarks as to be deceptive in nature.

The distributorship agreement also specifically provides that it shall be governed by Arizona law. Thus, counts one and four apparently are contract actions that require the application of Arizona law, not Philippine law. [FN6]

> FN6. Defendants implicitly admit this point, conceding that Arizona law would apply to a contract action.

[27] In addition to making a mistaken assumption about the applicable law, the district court failed to weigh Arizona's interests in having the controversy "resolved at home." Arizona has a significant interest in interpreting its own laws. See Cheng v. Boeing Co., 708 F.2d at 1411. Arizona also has an interest in protecting its companies from trademark infringement abroad to preserve the state's economic vitality. Although the situs of the alleged trademark and tradename infringement was the Philippines, it appears that Philippine law is not applicable. We therefore conclude that these public interest factors 1337 should not weigh heavily in defendants' favor. A proper understanding of the applicable law and the relative interests, in fact, suggests that Arizona has the more substantial interest in this litigation.

[28] The district court particularly emphasized one public interest factor: the docket congestion of its court. It stated:

> Counsel have indicated that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of exhibits involved. There will be many witnesses testifying for both sides. The case will take weeks to try. The Tucson division of the District of Arizona is presently operating with two district judges. Normally there are three judges in the division. The two judges are handling all of the criminal calendar. Outside judges have been assigned to handle part of the civil calendar and it is contemplated that more help will be necessary in the future.

Gates Learjet II, slip op. at 10.

This factor also should not weigh heavily in defendants' favor. The real issue is not whether a dismissal will reduce a court's congestion but whether a trial may be speedier in another court because of its less crowded docket. See Starnes v. McGuire, 512 F.2d 918, 932 (D.C.Cir.1974) (en banc); 15 C. Wright, A. Miller & E. Cooper, Federal Practice & Procedure § 3854 at 289-91 (1976); see also Foster v. Litton Industries, Inc., 431 F.Supp. 86, 88 (S.D.N.Y.1977) (relative docket conditions accorded some, but not decisive, weight in transfer motions). The district court here observed only that its docket was congested; it did not determine whether a trial would be speedier in the Philippines. Even if it were, however, it is unfair for a court to subject a United States corporation to the courts of another country merely because plaintiff's home country courts are congested. The forum non conveniens doctrine should not be used as a solution to court congestion; other remedies, such as placing reasonable limitations on the amount of time each side may have to present evidence, are more appropriate.

We hold that the district court failed to consider relevant private and public interest factors and misconstrued others. The district court therefore abused its discretion. On balance, we conclude that the relevant private and public interest factors support the district court's retention of jurisdiction and the dismissal of defendants' forum non conveniens motion.

III. CONCLUSION

Gates cannot demonstrate that the defendants had sufficient activity in Arizona to establish general jurisdiction. Under the Data Disc three-prong inquiry into limited jurisdiction, however, we hold that the district court erred in dismissing counts two and three for lack of personal jurisdiction. As to the district court's dismissal of counts one and four for forum non conveniens, we find an abuse of discretion. The district court's orders are therefore REVERSED AND THE CASE IS REMANDED.

HELICOPTEROS NACIONALES DE COLOMBIA, S.A., Petitioner,
v.
Elizabeth HALL et al.

No. 82-1127.

Argued Nov. 8, 1983.
Decided April 24, 1984.

Wrongful death action was instituted in a Texas state court against a Colombian corporation and others. Denying Colombian corporation's motion to dismiss actions for lack of in personam jurisdiction over it, the District Court, Harris County, Wyatt H. Heard, J., entered judgment against corporation on a jury verdict in favor of plaintiffs. Corporation appealed. The Texas Court of Civil Appeals, 616 S.W.2d 247, reversed and dismissed case for lack of jurisdiction, and plaintiffs appealed. The Texas Supreme Court, 638 S.W.2d 870, reversed. Certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Justice Blackmun, held that Colombian corporation's contacts with Texas, which consisted of one trip to Texas by corporation's chief executive officer for purpose of negotiating transportation services contract, acceptance of checks drawn on Texas bank, and purchases of helicopters and equipment from Texas manufacturer and related training trips, were insufficient to satisfy requirements of due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and hence to allow Texas court to assert in personam jurisdiction over corporation in wrongful death action.

Texas Supreme Court judgment reversed.

Justice Brennan dissented and filed an opinion.

Petitioner, a Colombian corporation, entered into a contract to provide helicopter transportation for a Peruvian consortium, the alter ego of a joint venture that had its headquarters in Houston, Tex., during the consortium's construction of a pipeline in Peru for a Peruvian state-owned oil company. Petitioner has no place of business in Texas and never has been licensed to do business there. Its only contacts with the State consisted of sending its chief executive officer to Houston to negotiate the contract with the consortium, accepting into its New York bank account checks drawn by the consortium on a Texas bank, purchasing helicopters, equipment, and training services from a Texas manufacturer, and sending personnel to that manufacturer's facilities for training. After a helicopter owned by petitioner crashed in Peru, resulting in the death of respondents' decedents--United States citizens who were employed by the consortium--respondents instituted wrongful-death actions in a Texas state court against the consortium, the Texas manufacturer, and petitioner. Denying petitioner's motion to dismiss the actions for lack of in personam jurisdiction over it, the trial court entered judgment against petitioner on a jury verdict in favor of respondents. The Texas Court of Civil Appeals reversed, holding that in personam jurisdiction over petitioner was lacking, but in turn was reversed by the Texas Supreme Court.

Held: Petitioner's contacts with Texas were insufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and hence to allow the Texas court to assert in personam jurisdiction over petitioner. The one trip to Houston by petitioner's chief executive officer for the purpose of negotiating the transportation services contract cannot be regarded as a contact of a "continuous and systematic" nature, and thus cannot support an assertion of general jurisdiction. Similarly, petitioner's acceptance of checks drawn on a Texas bank is of negligible significance for purposes of determining whether petitioner had sufficient contacts in Texas. Nor were petitioner's purchases of helicopters and equipment from the Texas manufacturer and the related training trips a sufficient basis for the Texas court's assertion of jurisdiction. Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, 43 S.Ct. 170, 67 L.Ed. 372. Mere purchases, even if occurring at regular intervals, are not enough to warrant 409 a State's assertion of in personam jurisdiction over a nonresident corporation in a cause of action not related to the purchases. And the fact that petitioner sent personnel to Texas for training in connection with the purchases did not enhance the nature of petitioner's contacts with Texas. Pp. 1872-1874.

to the corporation's activities within the State.

I

Petitioner Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. (Helicol), is a Colombian corporation with its principal place of business in the city of Bogota in that country. It is engaged in the business of providing helicopter transportation for oil and construction companies in South America. On *410 January 26, 1976, a helicopter owned by Helicol crashed in Peru. Four United States citizens were among those who lost their lives in the accident. Respondents are the survivors and representatives of the four decedents.

At the time of the crash, respondents' decedents were employed by Consorcio, a Peruvian consortium, and were working on a pipeline in Peru. Consorcio is the alter ego of a joint venture named Williams-Sedco-Horn (WSH). [FN1] The venture had its headquarters in Houston, Tex. Consorcio had been formed to enable the venturers to enter into a contract with Petro Peru, the Peruvian state-owned oil company. Consorcio was to construct a pipeline for Petro Peru running from the interior of Peru westward to the Pacific Ocean. Peruvian law forbade construction of the pipeline by any non-Peruvian entity.

FN1. The participants in the joint venture were Williams International Sudamericana, Ltd., a Delaware corporation; Sedco Construction Corporation, a Texas corporation; and Horn International, Inc., a Texas corporation.

Consorcio/WSH [FN2] needed helicopters to move personnel, materials, and equipment into and out of the construction area. In 1974, upon request of Consorcio/WSH, the chief executive officer of Helicol, Francisco Restrepo, flew to the United States and conferred in Houston with representatives of the three joint venturers. At that meeting, there was a discussion of prices, availability, working conditions, fuel, supplies, and housing. Restrepo represented that Helicol could have the first helicopter on the job in 15 days. The Consorcio/WSH representatives decided to accept the contract proposed by Restrepo. Helicol began performing before the agreement was formally signed in Peru on November 11, 1974. [FN3] The contract was written in Spanish on *411 official government stationery and provided that the residence of all the parties would be Lima, Peru. It further stated that controversies arising out of the contract would be submitted to the jurisdiction of Peruvian courts. In addition, it provided that Consorcio/WSH would make payments to Helicol's account with the Bank of America in New York City. App. 12a.

FN2. Throughout the record in this case the entity is referred to both as Consorcio and as WSH. We refer to it hereinafter as Consorcio/WSH.

FN3. Respondents acknowledge that the contract was executed in Peru and not in the United States. Tr. of Oral Arg. 22-23. See App. 79a; Brief for Respondents 3.

Aside from the negotiation session in Houston between Restrepo and the representatives of Consorcio/WSH, Helicol had other contacts with Texas. During the years 1970-1977, it purchased helicopters (approximately 80% of its fleet), spare parts, and accessories for more than $4 million from Bell Helicopter Company in Fort Worth. In that period, Helicol sent prospective pilots to Fort Worth for training and to ferry the aircraft to South America. It also sent management and maintenance personnel to visit Bell Helicopter in Fort Worth during the same period in order to receive "plant familiarization" and for technical consultation. Helicol received into its New York City and Panama City, Fla., bank accounts over $5 million in payments from Consorcio/WSH drawn upon First City National Bank of Houston.

[1] Beyond the foregoing, there have been no other business contacts between Helicol and the State of Texas. Helicol never has been authorized to do business in Texas and never has had an agent for the 1871 service of process within the State. It never has performed helicopter operations in Texas or sold any product that reached Texas, never solicited business in Texas, never signed any contract in Texas, never had any employee based there, and never recruited an employee in Texas. In addition, Helicol never has owned real or personal property in Texas and never has maintained an office or establishment there. Helicol has maintained no records in Texas and has no shareholders in that State. [FN4] None of the 412 respondents or their decedents were domiciled in Texas, Tr. of Oral Arg. 17, 18, [FN5] but all of the decedents were hired in Houston by Consorcio/WSH to work on the Petro Peru pipeline project.

FN4. The Colombian national airline, Aerovias Nacionales de Colombia, owns approximately 94% of Helicol's capital stock. The remainder is held by Aerovias Corporacion de Viajes and four South American individuals. See Brief for Petitioner 2, n. 2.

FN5. Respondents' lack of residential or other contacts with Texas of itself does not defeat otherwise proper jurisdiction. Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 780, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1481, 79 L.Ed.2d 790 (1984); Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S. 783, 788, 104 S.Ct. 1482, 1486, 79 L.Ed.2d 804 (1984). We mention respondents' lack of contacts merely to show that nothing in the nature of the relationship between respondents and Helicol could possibly enhance Helicol's contacts with Texas. The harm suffered by respondents did not occur in Texas. Nor is it alleged that any negligence on the part of Helicol took place in Texas.

Respondents instituted wrongful-death actions in the District Court of Harris County, Tex., against Consorcio/WSH, Bell Helicopter Company, and Helicol. Helicol filed special appearances and moved to dismiss the actions for lack of in personam jurisdiction over it. The motion was denied. After a consolidated jury trial, judgment was entered against Helicol on a jury verdict of $1,141,200 in favor of respondents. [FN6] App. 174a.

FN6. Defendants Consorcio/WSH and Bell Helicopter Company were granted directed verdicts with respect to respondents' claims against them. Bell Helicopter was granted a directed verdict on Helicol's cross-claim against it. App. 167a. Consorcio/WSH, as cross-plaintiff in a claim against Helicol, obtained a judgment in the amount of $70,000. Id., at 174a.

The Texas Court of Civil Appeals, Houston, First District, reversed the judgment of the District Court, holding that in personam jurisdiction over Helicol was lacking. 616 S.W.2d 247 (Tex.1981). The Supreme Court of Texas, with three justices dissenting, initially affirmed the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals. App. to Pet. for Cert. 46a-62a. Seven months later, however, on motion for rehearing, the court withdrew its prior opinions and, again with three justices dissenting, reversed the judgment of the intermediate court. 638 S.W.2d 870 (Tex.1982). In ruling that the Texas courts had 413 in personam jurisdiction, the Texas Supreme Court first held that the State's long-arm statute reaches as far as the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment permits. Id., at 872. [FN7] Thus, the only question remaining *1872 for the court to decide was whether it was consistent with the Due Process Clause for Texas courts to assert in personam jurisdiction over Helicol. Ibid.

FN7. The State's long-arm statute is Tex.Rev.Civ.Stat.Ann., Art. 2031b (Vernon 1964 and Supp.1982-1983). It reads in relevant part:
"Sec. 3. Any foreign corporation ... that engages in business in this State, irrespective of any Statute or law respecting designation or maintenance of resident agents, and does not maintain a place of regular business in this State or a designated agent upon whom service may be made upon causes of action arising out of such business done in this State, the act or acts of engaging in such business within this State shall be deemed equivalent to an appointment by such foreign corporation ... of the Secretary of State of Texas as agent upon whom service of process may be made in any action, suit or proceedings > arising out of such business done in this State, wherein such corporation ... is a party or is to be made a party.

> "Sec. 4. For the purpose of this Act, and without including other acts that may constitute doing business, any foreign corporation ... shall be deemed doing business in this State by entering into contract by mail or otherwise with a resident of Texas to be performed in whole or in part by either party in this State, or the committing of any tort in whole or in part in this State. The act of recruiting Texas residents, directly or through an intermediary located in Texas, for employment inside or outside of Texas shall be deemed doing business in this State." The last sentence of § 4 was added by 1979 Tex.Gen.Laws, ch. 245, § 1, and became effective August 27, 1979.
> The Supreme Court of Texas in its principal opinion relied upon rulings in U-Anchor Advertising, Inc. v. Burt, 553 S.W.2d 760 (Tex.1977); Hoppenfeld v. Crook, 498 S.W.2d 52 (Tex.Civ.App.1973) ; and O'Brien v. Lanpar Co., 399 S.W.2d 340 (Tex.1966). It is not within our province, of course, to determine whether the Texas Supreme Court correctly interpreted the State's long-arm statute. We therefore accept that court's holding that the limits of the Texas statute are coextensive with those of the Due Process Clause.

[2][3] The Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment operates to limit the power of a State to assert in personam 414 jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565 (1878). Due process requirements are satisfied when in personam jurisdiction is asserted over a nonresident corporate defendant that has "certain minimum contacts with [the forum] such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' " International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 158, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945), quoting Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463, 61 S.Ct. 339, 342, 85 L.Ed. 278 (1940). When a controversy is related to or "arises out of" a defendant's contacts with the forum, the Court has said that a "relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation" is the essential foundation of in personam jurisdiction. Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 204, 97 S.Ct. 2569, 2579, 53 L.Ed.2d 683 (1977). [FN8]

> FN8. It has been said that when a State exercises personal jurisdiction over a defendant in a suit arising out of or related to the defendant's contacts with the forum, the State is exercising "specific jurisdiction" over the defendant. See Von Mehren & Trautman, Jurisdiction to Adjudicate: A Suggested Analysis, 79 Harv.L.Rev. 1121, 1144-1164 (1966).

Even when the cause of action does not arise out of or relate to the foreign corporation's activities in the forum State, [FN9] due process is not offended by a State's subjecting the corporation to its in personam jurisdiction when there are sufficient contacts between the State and the foreign corporation. Perkins v. Benguet Consolidated Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437, 72 S.Ct. 413, 96 L.Ed. 485 (1952); see Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., 465 U.S. 770, 779-780, 104 S.Ct. 1473, 1480-1481, 79 L.Ed.2d 790 (1984). In Perkins, the Court addressed a situation in which state courts had asserted general jurisdiction over a defendant foreign corporation. During the Japanese 415 occupation of the Philippine Islands, the president and general manager of a Philippine mining corporation maintained an office in Ohio from which he conducted activities on behalf of the company. He kept company files and held directors' meetings in the office, carried on correspondence relating to the business, distributed salary checks drawn on two active Ohio bank accounts, engaged an Ohio bank to act as transfer agent, and supervised policies dealing with the rehabilitation of the corporation's properties in the Philippines. In short, the foreign corporation, through its president, "ha[d] been carrying on in Ohio a continuous and systematic, but limited, part of its general business," and the exercise of general jurisdiction over the Philippine corporation by an Ohio court was "reasonable and just." 342 U.S., at 438, 445, 72 S.Ct., at 414, 418.

FN9. When a State exercises personal jurisdiction over a defendant in a suit not arising out of or related to the defendant's contacts with the forum, the State has been said to be exercising "general jurisdiction" over the defendant. See Brilmayer, How Contacts Count: Due Process Limitations on State Court Jurisdiction, 1980 S.Ct.Rev. 77, 80-81; Von Mehren & Trautman, 79 Harv.L.Rev., at 1136-1144; Calder v. Jones, 465 U.S., at 786, 104 S.Ct., at 1485.

[4] All parties to the present case concede that respondents' claims against Helicol did not "arise out of," and are not related to, Helicol's activities within Texas. [FN10] We thus must *416 explore the nature 1873 of Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas to determine whether they constitute the kind of continuous and systematic general business contacts the Court found to exist in Perkins. We hold that they do not.

FN10. See Brief for Respondents 14; Tr. of Oral Arg. 26-27, 30-31. Because the parties have not argued any relationship between the cause of action and Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas, we, contrary to the dissent's implication, post, at 1875, assert no "view" with respect to that issue.
The dissent suggests that we have erred in drawing no distinction between controversies that "relate to" a defendant's contacts with a forum and those that "arise out of" such contacts. Post, at 1875. This criticism is somewhat puzzling, for the dissent goes on to urge that, for purposes of determining the constitutional validity of an assertion of specific jurisdiction, there really should be no distinction between the two. Post, at 1879.
We do not address the validity or consequences of such a distinction because the issue has not been presented in this case. Respondents have made no argument that their cause of action either arose out of or is related to Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas. Absent any briefing on the issue, we decline to reach the questions (1) whether the terms "arising out of" and "related to" describe different connections between a cause of action and a defendant's contacts with a forum, and (2) what sort of tie between a cause of action and a defendant's contacts with a forum is necessary to a determination that either connection exists. Nor do we reach the question whether, if the two types of relationship differ, a forum's exercise of personal jurisdiction in a situation where the cause of action "relates to," but does not "arise out of," the defendant's contacts with the forum should be analyzed as an assertion of specific jurisdiction.

It is undisputed that Helicol does not have a place of business in Texas and never has been licensed to do business in the State. Basically, Helicol's contacts with Texas consisted of sending its chief executive officer to Houston for a contract-negotiation session; accepting into its New York bank account checks drawn on a Houston bank; purchasing helicopters, equipment, and training services from Bell Helicopter for substantial sums; and sending personnel to Bell's facilities in Fort Worth for training.

[5] The one trip to Houston by Helicol's chief executive officer for the purpose of negotiating the transportation-services contract with Consorcio/WSH cannot be described or regarded as a contact of a "continuous and systematic" nature, as Perkins described it, see also International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S., at 320, 66 S.Ct., at 160, and thus cannot support an assertion of in personam jurisdiction over Helicol by a Texas court. Similarly, Helicol's acceptance from Consorcio/WSH of checks drawn on a Texas bank is of negligible significance for purposes of determining whether Helicol had sufficient contacts in Texas. There is no indication that Helicol ever requested that the checks be drawn on a Texas bank or that there was any negotiation between Helicol and Consorcio/WSH with respect to the location or identity of the bank on which checks would be drawn. Common sense and everyday experience suggest that, absent unusual circumstances, [FN11] the bank on which a check is drawn is generally of little *417 consequence to the payee and is a matter left to the discretion of the drawer. Such unilateral activity of another party or a third person is not an appropriate consideration when determining whether a defendant has sufficient contacts with a forum State to justify an assertion of jurisdiction. See Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 93, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 1697, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978) (arbitrary to subject one parent to suit in any State where other parent chooses to spend time while having custody of child pursuant to separation agreement); Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 1239, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958) ("The unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum State"); see also Lilly, Jurisdiction Over Domestic and Alien Defendants, 69 Va.L.Rev. 85, 99 (1983).

FN11. For example, if the financial health and continued ability of the bank to honor the draft are questionable, the payee might request that the check be drawn on an account at some other institution.

The Texas Supreme Court focused on the purchases and the related training trips in 1874 finding contacts sufficient to support an assertion of jurisdiction. We do not agree with that assessment, for the Court's opinion in Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, 43 S.Ct. 170, 67 L.Ed. 372 (1923) (Brandeis, J., for a unanimous tribunal), makes clear that purchases and related trips, standing alone, are not a sufficient basis for a State's assertion of jurisdiction.

The defendant in Rosenberg was a small retailer in Tulsa, Okla., who dealt in men's clothing and furnishings. It never had applied for a license to do business in New York, nor had it at any time authorized suit to be brought against it there. It never had an established place of business in New York and never regularly carried on business in that State. Its only connection with New York was that it purchased from New York wholesalers a large portion of the merchandise sold in its Tulsa store. The purchases sometimes were made by correspondence and sometimes through visits to New York by an officer of the defendant. The Court concluded: "Visits on such business, even if occurring at regular intervals, would not warrant the inference that the corporation was present within the jurisdiction of [New York]." Id., at 518, 43 S.Ct., at 171.

[6] *418 This Court in International Shoe acknowledged and did not repudiate its holding in Rosenberg. See 326 U.S., at 318, 66 S.Ct., at 159. In accordance with Rosenberg, we hold that mere purchases, even if occurring at regular intervals, are not enough to warrant a State's assertion of in personam jurisdiction over a nonresident corporation in a cause of action not related to those purchase transactions. [FN12] Nor can we conclude that the fact that Helicol sent personnel into Texas for training in connection with the purchase of helicopters and equipment in that State in any way enhanced the nature of Helicol's contacts with Texas. The training was a part of the package of goods and services purchased by Helicol from Bell Helicopter. The brief presence of Helicol employees in Texas for the purpose of attending the training sessions is no more a significant contact than were the trips to New York made by the buyer for the retail store in Rosenberg. See also Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S., at 93, 98 S.Ct., at 1697 (basing California jurisdiction on 3-day and 1-day stopovers in that State "would make a mockery of" due process limitations on assertion of personal jurisdiction).

FN12. This Court in International Shoe cited Rosenberg for the proposition that "the commission of some single or occasional acts of the corporate agent in a state sufficient to impose an obligation or liability on the corporation has not been thought to confer upon the state authority to enforce it." 326 U.S., at 318, 66 S.Ct., at 159. Arguably, therefore, Rosenberg also stands for the proposition that mere purchases are not a sufficient basis for either general or specific jurisdiction. Because the case before us is one in which there has been an assertion of general jurisdiction over a foreign defendant, we need not decide the continuing validity of Rosenberg with respect to an assertion of specific jurisdiction, i.e., where the cause of action arises out of or relates to the purchases by the defendant in the forum State.

We hold that Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas were insufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Due Process 419 Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. [FN13] Accordingly, we reverse the judgment of the Supreme Court of Texas.

> FN13. As an alternative to traditional minimum-contacts analysis, respondents suggest that the Court hold that the State of Texas had personal jurisdiction over Helicol under a doctrine of "jurisdiction by necessity." See Shaffer v. Heitner, 433 U.S. 186, 211, n. 37, 97 S.Ct. 2569, 2583, n. 37, 53 L.Ed.2d 683 (1977). We conclude, however, that respondents failed to carry their burden of showing that all three defendants could not be sued together in a single forum. It is not clear from the record, for example, whether suit could have been brought against all three defendants in either Colombia or Peru. We decline to consider adoption of a doctrine of jurisdiction by necessity--a potentially far- reaching modification of existing law--in the absence of a more complete record.

It is so ordered.

*1875 Justice BRENNAN, dissenting.

Decisions applying the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to determine whether a State may constitutionally assert in personam jurisdiction over a particular defendant for a particular cause of action most often turn on a weighing of facts. See, e.g., Kulko v. California Superior Court, 436 U.S. 84, 92, 98 S.Ct. 1690, 1697, 56 L.Ed.2d 132 (1978); id., at 101-102, 98 S.Ct., at 1701-1702 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting). To a large extent, today's decision follows the usual pattern. Based on essentially undisputed facts, the Court concludes that petitioner Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas were insufficient to allow the Texas state courts constitutionally to assert "general jurisdiction" over all claims filed against this foreign corporation. Although my independent weighing of the facts leads me to a different conclusion, see infra, at 1877, the Court's holding on this issue is neither implausible nor unexpected.

What is troubling about the Court's opinion, however, are the implications that might be drawn from the way in which the Court approaches the constitutional issue it addresses. First, the Court limits its discussion to an assertion of general jurisdiction of the Texas courts because, in its view, the 420 underlying cause of action does "not aris[e] out of or relat[e] to the corporation's activities within the State." Ante, at 1870. Then, the Court relies on a 1923 decision in Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, 43 S.Ct. 170, 67 L.Ed. 372, without considering whether that case retains any validity after our more recent pronouncements concerning the permissible reach of a State's jurisdiction. By posing and deciding the question presented in this manner, I fear that the Court is saying more than it realizes about constitutional limitations on the potential reach of in personam jurisdiction. In particular, by relying on a precedent whose premises have long been discarded, and by refusing to consider any distinction between controversies that "relate to" a defendant's contacts with the forum and causes of action that "arise out of" such contacts, the Court may be placing severe limitations on the type and amount of contacts that will satisfy the constitutional minimum.

In contrast, I believe that the undisputed contacts in this case between petitioner Helicol and the State of Texas are sufficiently important, and sufficiently related to the underlying cause of action, to make it fair and reasonable for the State to assert personal jurisdiction over Helicol for the wrongful-death actions filed by the respondents. Given that Helicol has purposefully availed itself of the benefits and obligations of the forum, and given the direct relationship between the underlying cause of action and Helicol's contacts with the forum, maintenance of this suit in the Texas courts "does not offend [the] 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice,' " International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945) (quoting Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463, 61 S.Ct. 339, 342, 85 L.Ed. 278 (1940)), that are the touchstone of jurisdictional analysis under the Due Process Clause. I therefore dissent.

I

The Court expressly limits its decision in this case to "an assertion of general jurisdiction over a foreign defendant." 421 Ante, at 1874, n. 12. See ante, at 1873, and n. 10. Having framed the question in this way, the Court is obliged to address our prior holdings in Perkins v. Benguet Consolidated Mining Co., 342 U.S. 437, 72 S.Ct. 413, 96 L.Ed. 485 (1952), and Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., supra. In Perkins, the Court considered a State's assertion of general jurisdiction over a foreign corporation that "ha[d] been carrying on ... a continuous and systematic, but limited, part of its general business" in the forum. 342 U.S., at 438, 72 S.Ct., at 414. Under the circumstances of that case, we held that such contacts were constitutionally sufficient "to make it reasonable and just to subject the corporation *1876 to the jurisdiction" of that State. Id., at 445, 72 S.Ct., at 418 (citing International Shoe, supra, 326 U.S., at 317-320, 66 S.Ct., at 158-160). Nothing in Perkins suggests, however, that such "continuous and systematic" contacts are a necessary minimum before a State may constitutionally assert general jurisdiction over a foreign corporation.

The Court therefore looks for guidance to our 1923 decision in Rosenberg, supra, which until today was of dubious validity given the subsequent expansion of personal jurisdiction that began with International Shoe, supra, in 1945. In Rosenberg, the Court held that a company's purchases within a State, even when combined with related trips to the State by company officials, would not allow the courts of that State to assert general jurisdiction over all claims against the nonresident corporate defendant making those purchases. [FN1] 422 Reasoning by analogy, the Court in this case concludes that Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas are no more significant than the purchases made by the defendant in Rosenberg. The Court makes no attempt, however, to ascertain whether the narrow view of in personam jurisdiction adopted by the Court in Rosenberg comports with "the fundamental transformation of our national economy" that has occurred since 1923. McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 355 U.S. 220, 222-223, 78 S.Ct. 199, 200-201, 2 L.Ed.2d 223 (1957). See also World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 292-293, 100 S.Ct. 559, 564-565, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980); id., at 308-309, 100 S.Ct., at 585-586 (BRENNAN, J., dissenting); Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 250-251, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 1237-1238, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958); id., at 260, 78 S.Ct., at 1243 (Black, J., dissenting). This failure, in my view, is fatal to the Court's analysis.

> FN1. The Court leaves open the question whether the decision in Rosenberg was intended to address any constitutional limits on an assertion of "specific jurisdiction." Ante, at 1874, n. 12 (citing International Shoe, 326 U.S., at 318, 66 S.Ct., at 159). If anything is clear from Justice Brandeis' opinion for the Court in Rosenberg, however, it is that the Court was concerned only with general jurisdiction over the corporate defendant. See 260 U.S., at 517, 43 S.Ct., at 171 ("The sole question for decision is whether ... defendant was doing business within the State of New York in such manner and to such extent as to warrant the inference that it was present there"); id., at 518, 43 S.Ct., at 171 (the corporation's contacts with the forum "would not warrant the inference that the corporation was present within the jurisdiction of the State"); ante, at 1874. The Court's resuscitation of Rosenberg, therefore, should have no bearing upon any forum's assertion of jurisdiction over claims that arise out of or relate to a defendant's contacts with the State.

The vast expansion of our national economy during the past several decades has provided the primary rationale for expanding the permissible reach of a State's jurisdiction under the Due Process Clause. By broadening the type and amount of business opportunities available to participants in interstate and foreign commerce, our economy has increased the frequency with which foreign corporations actively pursue commercial transactions throughout the various States. In turn, it has become both necessary and, in my view, desirable to allow the States more leeway in bringing the activities of these nonresident corporations within the scope of their respective jurisdictions.

This is neither a unique nor a novel idea. As the

Court first noted in 1957:

> "[M]any commercial transactions touch two or more States and may involve parties separated by the full continent. With this increasing nationalization of commerce has come a great increase in the amount of business conducted by mail across state lines. At the *423 same time modern transportation and communication have made it much less burdensome for a party sued to defend himself in a State where he engages in economic activity." McGee, supra, at 222-223, 78 S.Ct., at 200-201.

See also World-Wide Volkswagen, supra, 444 U.S., at 293, 100 S.Ct., at 565 (reaffirming that "[t]he historical developments noted in McGee ... have only accelerated in the generation since that case was decided"); 1877 Hanson v. Denckla, supra, 357 U.S., at 250-251, 78 S.Ct., at 1237-1238.

Moreover, this "trend ... toward expanding the permissible scope of state jurisdiction over foreign corporations and other nonresidents," McGee, supra, 355 U.S., at 222, 78 S.Ct., at 200, is entirely consistent with the "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice," International Shoe, 326 U.S., at 316, 66 S.Ct., at 158, that control our inquiry under the Due Process Clause. As active participants in interstate and foreign commerce take advantage of the economic benefits and opportunities offered by the various States, it is only fair and reasonable to subject them to the obligations that may be imposed by those jurisdictions. And chief among the obligations that a nonresident corporation should expect to fulfill is amenability to suit in any forum that is significantly affected by the corporation's commercial activities.

As a foreign corporation that has actively and purposefully engaged in numerous and frequent commercial transactions in the State of Texas, Helicol clearly falls within the category of nonresident defendants that may be subject to that forum's general jurisdiction. Helicol not only purchased helicopters and other equipment in the State for many years, but also sent pilots and management personnel into Texas to be trained in the use of this equipment and to consult with the seller on technical matters. [FN2] Moreover, negotiations for the *424 contract under which Helicol provided transportation services to the joint venture that employed the respondents' decedents also took place in the State of Texas. Taken together, these contacts demonstrate that Helicol obtained numerous benefits from its transaction of business in Texas. In turn, it is eminently fair and reasonable to expect Helicol to face the obligations that attach to its participation in such commercial transactions. Accordingly, on the basis of continuous commercial contacts with the forum, I would conclude that the Due Process Clause allows the State of Texas to assert general jurisdiction over petitioner Helicol.

FN2. Although the Court takes note of these contacts, it concludes that they did not "enhanc[e] the nature of Helicol's contacts with Texas [[because the] training was a part of the package of goods and services purchased by Helicol." Ante, at 1874. Presumably, the Court's statement simply recognizes that participation in today's interdependent markets often necessitates the use of complicated purchase contracts that provide for numerous contacts between representatives of the buyer and seller, as well as training for related personnel. Ironically, however, while relying on these modern-day realities to denigrate the significance of Helicol's contacts with the forum, the Court refuses to acknowledge that these same realities require a concomitant expansion in a forum's jurisdictional reach. See supra, at 1876 - 1877. As a result, when deciding that the balance in this case must be struck against jurisdiction, the Court loses sight of the ultimate inquiry: whether it is fair and reasonable to subject a nonresident corporate defendant to the jurisdiction of a State when that defendant has purposefully availed itself of the benefits and obligations of that particular forum. Cf. Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 1239, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958).

II

The Court also fails to distinguish the legal principles that controlled our prior decisions in Perkins and Rosenberg. In particular, the contacts between petitioner Helicol and the State of Texas, unlike the contacts between the defendant and the forum in each of those cases, are significantly related to the cause of action alleged in the original suit filed by the respondents. Accordingly, in my view, it is both fair and reasonable for the Texas courts to assert specific jurisdiction over Helicol in this case.

By asserting that the present case does not implicate the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts, see ante, at 1872-1873, and nn. 10 and 12, the Court necessarily removes its decision 425 from the reality of the actual facts presented for our consideration. [FN3] Moreover, the Court refuses to consider *1878 any distinction between contacts that are "related to" the underlying cause of action and contacts that "give rise" to the underlying cause of action. In my view, however, there is a substantial difference between these two standards for asserting specific jurisdiction. Thus, although I agree that the respondents' cause of action did not formally "arise out of" specific activities initiated by Helicol in the State of Texas, I believe that the wrongful-death claim filed by the respondents is significantly related to the undisputed contacts between Helicol and the forum. On that basis, I would conclude that the Due Process Clause allows the Texas courts to assert specific jurisdiction over this particular action.

> FN3. Nor do I agree with the Court that the respondents have conceded that their claims are not related to Helicol's activities within the State of Texas. Although parts of their written and oral arguments before the Court proceed on the assumption that no such relationship exists, other portions suggest just the opposite:
> "If it is the concern of the Solicitor General [appearing for the United States as amicus curiae] that a holding for Respondents here will cause foreign companies to refrain from purchasing in the United States for fear of exposure to general jurisdiction on unrelated causes of action, such concern is not well founded.
> "Respondents' cause is not dependent on a ruling that mere purchases in a state, together with incidental training for operating and maintaining the merchandise purchased can constitute the ties, contacts and relations necessary to justify jurisdiction over an unrelated cause of action. However, regular purchases and training coupled with other contacts, ties and relations may form the basis for jurisdiction." Brief for Respondents 13-14. Thus, while the respondents' position before this Court is admittedly less than clear, I believe it is preferable to address the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts because Helicol's contacts with Texas are in fact related to the underlying cause of action.

The wrongful-death actions filed by the respondents were premised on a fatal helicopter crash that occurred in Peru. Helicol was joined as a defendant in the lawsuits because it provided transportation services, including the particular helicopter and pilot involved in the crash, to the joint venture 426 that employed the decedents. Specifically, the respondent Hall claimed in her original complaint that "Helicol is ... legally responsible for its own negligence through its pilot employee." App. 6a. Viewed in light of these allegations, the contacts between Helicol and the State of Texas are directly and significantly related to the underlying claim filed by the respondents. The negotiations that took place in Texas led to the contract in which Helicol agreed to provide the precise transportation services that were being used at the time of the crash. Moreover, the helicopter involved in the crash was purchased by Helicol in Texas, and the pilot whose negligence was alleged to have caused the crash was actually trained in Texas. See Tr. of Oral Arg. 5, 22. This is simply not a case, therefore, in which a state court has asserted jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant on the basis of wholly unrelated contacts with the forum. Rather, the contacts between Helicol and the forum are directly related to the negligence that was alleged in the respondent Hall's original complaint. [FN4] Because Helicol should have expected to be amenable to suit in the Texas courts for claims directly related to these contacts, it is fair and reasonable to allow the assertion of jurisdiction in this case.

> FN4. The jury specifically found that "the pilot failed to keep the helicopter under > proper control," that "the helicopter was flown into a treetop fog condition, whereby the vision of the pilot was impaired," that "such flying was negligence," and that "such negligence ... was a proximate cause of the crash." See App. 167a-168a. On the basis of these findings, Helicol was ordered to pay over $1 million in damages to the respondents.

Despite this substantial relationship between the contacts and the cause of action, the Court declines to consider whether the courts of Texas may assert specific jurisdiction over this suit. Apparently, this simply reflects a narrow interpretation of the question presented for review. See ante, at 1873, n. 10. It is nonetheless possible that the Court's opinion may be read to imply that the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts is inapplicable because the cause of action 427 did not formally "arise out of" the contacts between Helicol and the forum. In my view, however, such a rule would place unjustifiable limits on the *1879 bases under which Texas may assert its jurisdictional power. [FN5]

Compare Von Mehren & Trautman, Jurisdiction to Adjudicate: A Suggested Analysis, 79 Harv.L.Rev. 1121, 1144-1163 (1966), with Brilmayer, How Contacts Count: Due Process Limitations on State Court Jurisdiction, 1980 S.Ct.Rev. 77, 80-88. See also Lilly, Jurisdiction Over Domestic and Alien Defendants, 69 Va.L.Rev. 85, 100-101, and n. 66 (1983).

Limiting the specific jurisdiction of a forum to cases in which the cause of action formally arose out of the defendant's contacts with the State would subject constitutional standards under the Due Process Clause to the vagaries of the substantive law or pleading requirements of each State. For example, the complaint filed against Helicol in this case alleged negligence based on pilot error. Even though the pilot was trained in Texas, the Court assumes that the Texas courts may not assert jurisdiction over the suit because the cause of action "did not 'arise out of,' and [is] not related to," that training. See ante, at 1872. If, however, the applicable substantive law required that negligent training of the pilot was a necessary element of a cause of action for pilot error, or if the respondents had simply added an allegation of negligence in the training provided for the Helicol pilot, then presumably the Court would concede that the specific jurisdiction of the Texas courts was applicable.

Our interpretation of the Due Process Clause has never been so dependent upon the applicable substantive law or the State's formal pleading requirements. At least since International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945), the principal focus when determining whether a forum may constitutionally assert jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant has been on fairness and reasonableness to the defendant. To this extent, a court's specific jurisdiction should be applicable whenever the cause of action arises out of or relates to the contacts between the defendant and the forum. It is eminently 428 fair and reasonable, in my view, to subject a defendant to suit in a forum with which it has significant contacts directly related to the underlying cause of action. Because Helicol's contacts with the State of Texas meet this standard, I would affirm the judgment of the Supreme Court of Texas.

*156 *311 Appeal from the Supreme Court of the State of Washington.

Mr. Henry C. Lowenhaupt, of St. Louis Mo., for appellant.

Mr. George W. Wilkins, of Olympia, Wash., for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice STONE delivered the opinion of the Court.

The questions for decision are (1) whether, within the limitations of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, appellant, a Delaware corporation, has by its activities in the State of Washington rendered itself amenable to proceedings in the courts of that state to recover unpaid contributions to the state unemployment compensation fund exacted by state statutes, Washington Unemployment Compensation Act, Washington Revised Statutes, s 9 998--103a through s 9998--123a, 1941 Supp., and (2) whether the state can exact those contributions consistently with the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The statutes in question set up a comprehensive scheme of unemployment compensation, the costs of which are defrayed by contributions required to be made by employers to a state unemployment compensation fund. 312 The contributions are a specified percentage of the wages payable annually by each employer for his employees' services in the state. The assessment and collection of the contributions and the fund are administered by respondents. Section 14(c) of the Act, Wash.Rev.Stat. 1941 Supp., s 9998--114c, authorizes respondent Commissioner to issue an order and notice of assessment of delinquent contributions upon prescribed personal service of the notice upon the employer if found within the state, or, if not so found, by mailing the notice to the employer by registered mail at his last known address. That section also authorizes the Commissioner to collect the assessment by distraint if it is not paid within ten days after service of the notice. By ss 14(e) and 6(b) the order of assessment may be administratively reviewed by an appeal tribunal within the office of unemployment upon petition of the employer, and this determination is by s 6(i) made subject to judicial review on questions of law by the state Superior Court, with further right of appeal in the state Supreme Court as in other civil cases.

In this case notice of assessment for the years in question was personally served upon a sales solicitor employed by appellant in the State of Washington, and a copy of the notice was mailed by registered mail to appellant at its address in St. Louis, Missouri. Appellant appeared specially before the office of unemployment and moved to set aside the order and notice of assessment on the ground that the service upon appellant's salesman was not proper service upon appellant; that appellant was not a corporation of the State of Washington and was not doing business within the state; that it had no agent within the state upon whom service could be made; and that appellant is not an employer and does not furnish employment within the meaning of the statute.

The motion was heard on evidence and a stipulation of facts by the appeal tribunal which denied the motion 313 and ruled that respondent Commissioner was entitled to recover the unpaid contributions. That action *157 was affirmed by the Commissioner; both the Superior Court and the Supreme Court affirmed. 154 P.2d 801. Appellant in each of these courts assailed the statute as applied, as a violation of the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and as imposing a constitutionally prohibited burden on interstate commerce. The cause comes here on appeal under s 237(a) of the Judicial Code, 28 U.S.C. s 344(a), 28 U.S.C.A. s 344(a), appellant assigning as error that the challenged statutes as applied infringe the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment and the commerce clause.

The facts as found by the appeal tribunal and accepted by the state Superior Court and Supreme Court, are not in dispute. Appellant is a Delaware corporation, having its principal place of business in St. Louis, Missouri, and is engaged in the manufacture and sale of shoes and other footwear. It maintains places of business in several states, other than Washington, at which its manufacturing is carried on and from which its merchandise is distributed interstate through several sales units or branches located outside the State of Washington.

Appellant has no office in Washington and makes no contracts either for sale or purchase of merchandise there. It maintains no stock of merchandise in that state and makes there no deliveries of goods in intrastate commerce. During the years from 1937 to 1940, now in question, appellant employed eleven to thirteen salesmen under direct supervision and control of sales managers located in St. Louis. These salesmen resided in Washington; their principal activities were confined to that state; and they were compensated by commissions based upon the amount of their sales. The commissions for each year totaled more than $31,000. Appellant supplies its salesmen with a line of samples, each consisting of one shoe of a pair, which 314 they display to prospective purchasers. On occasion they rent permanent sample rooms, for exhibiting samples, in business buildings, or rent rooms in hotels or business buildings temporarily for that purpose. The cost of such rentals is reimbursed by appellant.

The authority of the salesmen is limited to exhibiting their samples and soliciting orders from prospective buyers, at prices and on terms fixed by appellant. The salesmen transmit the orders to appellant's office in St. Louis for acceptance or rejection, and when accepted the merchandise for filling the orders is shipped f.o.b. from points outside Washington to the purchasers within the state. All the merchandise shipped into Washington is invoiced at the place of shipment from which collections are made. No salesman has authority to enter into contracts or to make collections.

The Supreme Court of Washington was of opinion that the regular and systematic solicitation of orders in the state by appellant's salesmen, resulting in a continuous flow of appellant's product into the state, was sufficient to constitute doing business in the state so as to make appellant amenable to suit in its courts. But it was also of opinion that there were sufficient additional activities shown to bring the case within the rule frequently stated, that solicitation within a state by the agents of a foreign corporation plus some additional activities there are sufficient to render the corporation amenable to suit brought in the courts of the state to enforce an obligation arising out of its activities there. International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U.S. 579, 587, 34 S.Ct. 944, 946, 58 L.Ed. 1479; People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 246 U.S. 79, 87, 38 S.Ct. 233, 235, 62 L.Ed. 587, Ann.Cas.1918C, 537; Frene v. Louisville Cement Co., 77 U.S.App.D.C. 129, 134 F.2d 511, 516, 146 A.L.R. 926. The court found such additional activities in the salesmen's display of samples sometimes in permanent display rooms, and the salesmen's residence within the state, continued over a period of years, all resulting in a 315 substantial volume of merchandise regularly shipped by appellant to purchasers within the state. The court also held that the statute as applied did not invade the constitutional power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce and did not impose a prohibited burden on such commerce.

[1][2] Appellant's argument, renewed here, that the statute imposes an unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce need not detain us. For 53 Stat. 1391, 26 U.S.C. s 1606(a), 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, s 1606(a), provides that 'No person required under a State law to make payments to an unemployment fund shall be *158 relieved from compliance therewith on the ground that he is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or that the State law does not distinguish between employees engaged in interstate or foreign commerce and those engaged in intrastate commerce.' It is no longer debatable that Congress, in the exercise of the commerce power, may authorize the states, in specified ways, to regulate interstate commerce or impose burdens upon it. Kentucky Whip & Collar Co. v. Illinois Central R. Co., 299 U.S. 334, 57 S.Ct. 277, 81 L.Ed. 270; Perkins v. Pennsylvania, 314 U.S. 586, 62 S.Ct. 484, 86 L.Ed. 473; Standard Dredging Corp. v. Murphy, 319 U.S. 306, 308, 63 S.Ct. 1067, 1068, 87 L.Ed. 1416; Hooven & Allison v. Evatt, 324

Appellant also insists that its activities within the state were not sufficient to manifest its 'presence' there and that in its absence the state courts were without jurisdiction, that consequently it was a denial of due process for the state to subject appellant to suit. It refers to those cases in which it was said that the mere solicitation of orders for the purchase of goods within a state, to be accepted without the state and filled by shipment of the purchased goods interstate, does not render the corporation seller amenable to suit within the state. See Green v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., 205 U.S. 530, 533, 27 S.Ct. 595, 596, 51 L.Ed. 916; International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, supra, 234 U.S. 586, 587, 34 S.Ct. 946, 58 L.Ed. 1479; Philadelphia & Reading R. Co. v. McKibbin, 243 U.S. 264, 268, 37 S.Ct. 280, 61 L.Ed. 710; People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., supra, 246 U.S. 87, 38 S.Ct. 235, 62 L.Ed. 587, Ann.Cas.1918C, 537. 316 And appellant further argues that since it was not present within the state, it is a denial of due process to subject it to taxation or other money exaction. It thus denies the power of the state to lay the tax or to subject appellant to a suit for its collection.

[3] Historically the jurisdiction of courts to render judgment in personam is grounded on their de facto power over the defendant's person. Hence his presence within the territorial jurisdiction of court was prerequisite to its rendition of a judgment personally binding him. Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U.S. 714, 733, 24 L.Ed. 565. But now that the capias ad respondendum has given way to personal service of summons or other form of notice, due process requires only that in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam, if he be not present within the territory of the forum, he have certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 463, 61 S.Ct. 339, 343, 85 L.Ed. 278, 132 A.L.R. 1357. See Holmes, J., in McDonald v. Mabee, 243 U.S. 90, 91, 37 S.Ct. 343, 61 L.Ed. 608, L.R.A.1917F, 458. Compare Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 316, 319, 63 S.Ct. 602, 604, 606, 87 L.Ed. 777, 145 A.L.R. 1113. See Blackmer v. United States, 284 U.S. 421, 52 S.Ct. 252, 76 L.Ed. 375; Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 352, 47 S.Ct. 632, 71 L.Ed. 1091; Young v. Masci, 289 U.S. 253, 53 S.Ct. 599, 77 L.Ed. 1158, 88 A.L.R. 170.

[4][5] Since the corporate personality is a fiction, although a fiction intended to be acted upon as though it were a fact, Klein v. Board of Tax Supervisors, 282 U.S. 19, 24, 51 S.Ct. 15, 16, 75 L.Ed. 140, 73 A.L.R. 679, it is clear that unlike an individual its 'presence' without, as well as within, the state of its origin can be manifested only by activities carried on in its behalf by those who are authorized to act for it. To say that the corporation is so far 'present' there as to satisfy due process requirements, for purposes of taxation or the maintenance of suits against it in the courts of the state, is to beg the question to be decided. For the terms 'present' or 'presence' are 317 used merely to symbolize those activities of the corporation's agent within the state which courts will deem to be sufficient to satisfy the demands of due process. L. Hand, J., in Hutchinson v. Chase & Gilbert, 2 Cir., 45 F.2d 139, 141. Those demands may be met by such contacts of the corporation with the state of the forum as make it reasonable, in the context of our federal system of government, to require the corporation to defend the particular suit which is brought there. An 'estimate of the inconveniences' which would result to the corporation from a trial away from its 'home' or principal place of business is relevant in this connection. Hutchinson v. Chase & Gilbert, supra, 45 F.2d 141.

*159 [6][7] 'Presence' in the state in this sense has never been doubted when the activities of the corporation there have not only been continuous and systematic, but also give rise to the liabilities sued on, even though no consent to be sued or authorization to an agent to accept service of process has been given. St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U.S. 350, 355, 1 S.Ct. 354, 359, 27 L.Ed. 222; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U.S. 602, 610, 611, 19 S.Ct. 308, 311, 312, 43 L.Ed. 569; Pennsylvania Lumbermen's Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Conversely it has been generally recognized that the casual presence of the corporate agent or even his conduct of single or isolated items of activities in a state in the corporation's behalf are not enough to subject it to suit on causes of action unconnected with the activities there. St. Clair v. Cox, supra, 106 U.S. 359, 360, 1 S.Ct. 362, 363, 27 L.Ed. 222; Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U.S. 8, 21, 27 S.Ct. 236, 240, 51 L.Ed. 345; Frene v. Louisville Cement Co., supra, 77 U.S.App.D.C. 133, 134 F.2d 515, 146 A.L.R. 926, and cases cited. To require the corporation in such circumstances to defend the suit away from its home or other jurisdiction where it carries on more substantial activities has been thought to lay too great and unreasonable a burden on the corporation to comport with due process.

318 While it has been held in cases on which appellant relies that continuous activity of some sorts within a state is not enough to support the demand that the corporation be amenable to suits unrelated to that activity, Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, supra; Green v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., supra; Simon v. Southern R. Co., 236 U.S. 115, 35 S.Ct. 255, 59 L.Ed. 492; People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., supra; cf. Davis v. Farmers' Co-operative Equity Co., 262 U.S. 312, 317, 43 S.Ct. 556, 558, 67 L.Ed. 996, there have been instances in which the continuous corporate operations within a state were thought so substantial and of such a nature as to justify suit against it on causes of action arising from dealings entirely distinct from those activities. See Missouri, K. & T.R. Co. v. Reynolds, 255 U.S. 565, 41 S.Ct. 446, 65 L.Ed. 788; Tauza v. Susquehanna Coal Co., 220 N.Y. 259, 115 N.E. 915; cf. St. Louis S.W.R. Co. v. Alexander, supra.

[8] Finally, although the commission of some single or occasional acts of the corporate agent in a state sufficient to impose an obligation or liability on the corporation has not been thought to confer upon the state authority to enforce it, Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, 43 S.Ct. 170, 67 L.Ed. 372, other such acts, because of their nature and quality and the circumstances of their commission, may be deemed sufficient to render the corporation liable to suit. Cf. Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U.S. 160, 37 S.Ct. 30, 61 L.Ed. 222; Hess v. Pawloski, supra; Young v. Masci, supra. True, some of the decisions holding the corporation amenable to suit have been supported by resort to the legal fiction that it has given its consent to service and suit, consent being implied from its presence in the state through the acts of its authorized agents. Lafayette Insurance Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 407, 15 L.Ed. 451; St. Clair v. Cox, supra, 106 U.S. 356, 1 S.Ct. 359, 27 L.Ed. 222; Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, supra, 213 U.S. 254, 29 S.Ct. 447, 53 L.Ed. 782; State of Washington v. Superior Court, 289 U.S. 361, 364, 365, 53 S.Ct. 624, 626, 627, 77 L.Ed. 1256, 89 A.L.R. 653. But more realistically it may be said that those authorized acts were of such a nature as to justify the fiction. Smolik v. Philadelphia & R.C. & I. Co., D.C., 222 F. 148, 151. 319 Henderson, The Position of Foreign Corporations in American Constitutional Law, 94, 95.

[9][10] It is evident that the criteria by which we mark the boundary line between those activities which justify the subjection of a corporation to suit, and those which do not, cannot be simply mechanical or quantitative. The test is not merely, as has sometimes been suggested, whether the activity, which the corporation has seen fit to procure through its agents in another state, is a little more or a little less. St. Louis S.W.R. Co. v. Alexander, supra, 227 U.S. 228, *16033 S.Ct. 248, 57 L.Ed. 486, Ann.Cas.1915B, 77; International Harvestor Co. v. Kentucky, supra, 234 U.S. 587, 34 S.Ct. 946, 58 L.Ed. 1479. Whether due process is satisfied must depend rather upon the quality and nature of the activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure. That clause does not contemplate that a state may make binding a judgment in personam against an individual or corporate defendant with which the state has no contacts, ties, or relations. Cf. Pennoyer v. Neff, supra; Minnesota Commercial Men's Ass'n v. Benn, 261 U.S. 140, 43 S.Ct. 293, 67 L.Ed. 573.

[11] But to the extent that a corporation exercises the privilege of conducting activities within a state, it enjoys the benefits and protection of the laws of that state. The exercise of that privilege may give rise to obligations; and, so far as those obligations arise out of or are connected with the activities within the state, a procedure which requires the corporation to respond to a suit brought to enforce them can, in most instances, hardly be said to be undue. Compare International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, supra, with Green v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy R. Co., supra, and People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., supra. Compare Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, supra, 172 U.S. 619, 620, 19 S.Ct. 314, 315, 43 L.Ed. 569, and Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, supra, with Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, supra. See 29 Columbia Law Review, 187-195.

[12] 320 Applying these standards, the activities carried on in behalf of appellant in the State of Washington were neither irregular nor casual. They were systematic and continuous throughout the years in question. They resulted in a large volume of interstate business, in the course of which appellant received the benefits and protection of the laws of the state, including the right to resort to the courts for the enforcement of its rights. The obligation which is here sued upon arose out of those very activities. It is evident that these operations establish sufficient contacts or ties with the state of the forum to make it reasonable and just according to our traditional conception of fair play and substantial justice to permit the state to enforce the obligations which appellant has incurred there. Hence we cannot say that the maintenance of the present suit in the State of Washington involves an unreasonable or undue procedure.

[13][14][15] We are likewise unable to conclude that the service of the process within the state upon an agent whose activities establish appellant's 'presence' there was not sufficient notice of the suit, or that the suit was so unrelated to those activities as to make the agent an inappropriate vehicle for communicating the notice. It is enough that appellant has established such contacts with the state that the particular form of substituted service adopted there gives reasonable assurance that the notice will be actual. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, supra, 172 U.S. 618, 619, 19 S.Ct. 314, 315, 43 L.Ed. 569; Board of Trade v. Hammond Elevator Co., 198 U.S. 424, 437, 438, 25 S.Ct. 740, 743, 744, 49 L.Ed. 1111; Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, supra, 213 U.S. 254, 255, 29 S.Ct. 447, 448, 53 L.Ed. 782. Cf. Mabee, supra; Milliken v. Meyer, supra. Nor can we say that the mailing of the notice of suit to appellant by registered mail at its home office was not reasonably calculated to apprise appellant of the suit. Compare Hess v. Pawloski, supra, with McDonald v. Mabee, supra, 243 U.S. 92, 37 S.Ct. 344, 61 L.Ed. 608, L.R.A.1917F, 458, 321 and Wuchter v. Pizzutti, 276 U.S. 13, 19, 24, 48 S.Ct. 259, 260, 262, 72 L.Ed. 446, 57 A.L.R. 1230; cf. Bequet v. MacCarthy, 2 B. & Ad. 951; Maubourquet v. Wyse, 1 Ir.Rep.C.L. 471. See State of Washington v. Superior Court, supra, 289 U.S. 365, 53 S.Ct. 626, 77 L.Ed. 1256, 89 A.L.R. 653.

[16] Only a word need be said of appellant's liability for the demanded contributions of the state unemployment fund. The Supreme Court of Washington, construing and applying the statute, has held that it imposes a tax on the privilege of employing appellant's salesmen within the state measured by a percentage of the wages, here the commissions payable to the salesmen. This construction we accept for purposes of determining the constitutional validity of the statute. The right to employ labor has been *161 deemed an appropriate subject of taxation in this country and England, both before and since the adoption of the Constitution. Steward Machine Co. v. Davis, 301 U.S. 548, 579 et seq., 57 S.Ct. 883, 887 et seq., 81 L.Ed. 1279, 109 A.L.R. 1293. And such a tax imposed upon the employer for unemployment benefits is within the constitutional power of the states. Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., 301 U.S. 495, 508 et seq., 57 S.Ct. 868, 871 et seq., 81 L.Ed. 1245, 109 A.L.R. 1327.

Appellant having rendered itself amenable to suit upon obligations arising out of the activities of its salesmen in Washington, the state may maintain the present suit in personam to collect the tax laid upon the exercise of the privilege of employing appellant's salesmen within the state. For Washington has made one of those activities, which taken together establish appellant's 'presence' there for purposes of suit, the taxable event by which the state brings appellant within the reach of its taxing power. The state thus has constitutional power to lay the tax and to subject appellant to a suit to recover it. The activities which establish its 'presence' subject it alike to taxation by the state and to suit to recover the tax. Equitable Life Assur.

Affirmed.

Mr. Justice JACKSON took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Mr. Justice BLACK delivered the following opinion.

Congress, pursuant to its constitutional power to regulate commerce, has expressly provided that a State shall not be prohibited from levying the kind of unemployment compensation tax here challenged. 26 U.S.C. s 1606, 26 U.S.C.A. Int.Rev.Code, s 1606. We have twice decided that this Congressional consent is an adequate answer to a claim that imposition of the tax violates the Commerce Clause. Perkins v. Pennsylvania, 314 U.S. 586, 62 S.Ct. 484, 86 L.Ed. 473, affirming 342 Pa. 529, 21 A.2d 45; Standard Dredging Corp. v. Murphy, 319 U.S. 306, 308, 63 S.Ct. 1067, 1068, 87 L.Ed. 1416. Two determinations by this Court of an issue so palpably without merit are sufficient. Consequently that part of this appeal which again seeks to raise the question seems so patently frivolous as to make the case a fit candidate for dismissal. Fay v. Crozer, 217 U.S. 455, 30 S.Ct. 568, 54 L.Ed. 837. Nor is the further ground advanced on this appeal, that the State of Washington has denied appellant due process of law, any less devoid of substance. It is my view, therefore, that we should dismiss the appeal as unsubstantial, [FN1] Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Watson, 287 U.S. 86, 90, 92, 53 S.Ct. 32, 34, 35, 77 L.Ed. 180, 86 A.L.R. 174; and decline the invitation to formulate broad rules as to the meaning of due process, which here would amount to deciding a constitutional question 'in advance of the necessity for its decision.' Alabama State Federation of Labor v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 450, 461, 65 S.Ct. 1384, 1389, 89 L.Ed. 1725, 1734.

FN1 This Court has on several occasions pointed out the undesirable consequences of a failure to dismiss frivolous appeals. Salinger v. United States, 272 U.S. 542, 544, 47 S.Ct. 173, 174, 71 L.Ed. 398; United Surety Co. v. American Fruit Product Co., 238 U.S. 140, 35 S.Ct. 828, 59 L.Ed. 1238; De Bearn v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co., 233 U.S. 24, 33, 34, 34 S.Ct. 584, 586, 587, 58 L.Ed. 833.

323 Certainly appellant cannot in the light of our past decisions meritoriously claim that notice by registered mail and by personal service on its sales solicitors in Washington did not meet the requirements of procedural due process. And the due process clause is not brought in issue any more by appellant's further conceptualistic contention that Washington could not levy a tax or bring suit against the corporation because it did not honor that State with its mystical 'presence.' For it is unthinkable that the vague due process clause was ever intended to prohibit a State from regulating or taxing a business carried on within its boundaries simply because this is done by agents of a corporation organized and having its headquarters elsewhere. *162 To read this into the due process clause would in fact result in depriving a State's citizens of due process by taking from the State the power to protect them in their business dealings within its boundaries with representatives of a foreign corporation. Nothing could be more irrational or more designed to defeat the function of our federative system of government. Certainly a State, at the very least, has power to tax and sue those dealing with its citizens within its boundaries, as we have held before. Hoopeston Canning Co. v. Cullen, 318 U.S. 313, 63 S.Ct. 602, 87 L.Ed. 1722, 145 A.L.R. 1113. Were the Court to follow this principle, it would provide a workable standard for cases where, as here, no other questions are involved. The Court has not chosen to do so, but instead has engaged in an unnecessary discussion in the course of which it has announced vague Constitutional criteria applied for the first time to the issue before us. It has thus introduced uncertain elements confusing the simple pattern and tending to curtail the exercise of State powers to an extent not justified by the Constitution.

The criteria adopted insofar as they can be identified read as follows: Due process does permit State courts to 'enforce the obligations which appellant has incurred' if 324 it be found 'reasonable and just according to our traditional conception of fair play and substantial justice.' And this in turn means that we will 'permit' the State to act if upon 'an 'estimate of the inconveniences' which would result to the corporation from a trial away from its 'home' or principal place of business', we conclude that it is 'reasonable' to subject it to suit in a State where it is doing business.

It is true that this Court did use the terms 'fair play' and 'substantial justice' in explaining the philosophy underlying the holding that it could not be 'due process of law' to render a personal judgment against a defendant without notice to and an opportunity to be heard by him. Milliken v. Meyer, 311 U.S. 457, 61 S.Ct. 339, 85 L.Ed. 278, 132 A.L.R. 1357. In McDonald v. Mabee, 243 U.S. 90, 91, 37 S.Ct. 343, 61 L.Ed. 608, L.R.A.1917F, 458, cited in the Milliken case, Mr. Justice Holmes speaking for the Court warned against judicial curtailment of this opportunity to be heard and referred to such a curtailment as a denial of 'fair play', which even the common law would have deemed 'contrary to natural justice.' And previous cases had indicated that the ancient rule against judgments without notice had stemmed from 'natural justice' concepts. These cases, while giving additional reasons why notice under particular circumstances is inadequate, did not mean thereby that all legislative enactments which this Court might deem to be contrary to natural justice ought to be held invalid under the due process clause. None of the cases purport to support or could support a holding that a State can tax and sue corporations only if its action comports with this Court's notions of 'natural justice.' I should have thought the Tenth Amendment settled that.

I believe that the Federal Constitution leaves to each State, without any 'ifs' or 'buts', a power to tax and to open the doors of its courts for its citizens to sue corporations whose agents do business in those States. Believing that the Constitution gave the States that power, I think it a judicial deprivation to condition its exercise upon this 325 Court's notion of 'fairplay', however appealing that term may be. Nor can I stretch the meaning of due process so far as to authorize this Court to deprive a State of the right to afford judicial protection to its citizens on the ground that it would be more 'convenient' for the corporation to be sued somewhere else.

There is a strong emotional appeal in the words 'fair play', 'justice', and 'reasonableness.' But they were not chosen by those who wrote the original Constitution or the Fourteenth Amendment as a measuring rod for this Court to use in invalidating State or Federal laws passed by elected legislative representatives. No one, not even those who most feared a democratic government, ever formally proposed that courts should be given power to invalidate legislation under any such elastic standards. Express prohibitions against certain types of legislation are found in the Constitution, and under the long settled practice, courts invalidate laws found to conflict with them. This requires interpretation, and interpretation, it is true, may result in extension of the Constitution's purpose. But that is no reason for reading the due process clause so as to restrict a State's power to tax and sue *163 those whose activities affect persons and businesses within the State, provided proper service can be had. Superimposing the natural justice concept on the Constitution's specific prohibitions could operate as a drastic abridgment of democratic safeguards they embody, such as freedom of speech, press and religion, [FN2] and the right to counsel. This 326 has already happened. Betts v. Brady, 316 U.S. 455, 62 S.Ct. 1252, 86 L.Ed. 1595. Compare Feldman v. United States, 322 U.S. 487, 494--503, 64 S.Ct. 1082, 1085--1089, 88 L.Ed. 1408, 154 A.L.R. 982. For application of this natural law concept, whether under the terms 'reasonableness', 'justice', or 'fair play', makes judges the supreme arbiters of the country's laws and practices. Polk Co. v. Glover, 305 U.S. 5, 17--18, 59 S.Ct. 15, 20, 21, 83 L.Ed. 6; Federal Power Commission v. Natural Gas Pipeline Co., 315 U.S. 575, 600, 62 S.Ct. 736, 750, 86 L.Ed. 1037, note 4. This result, I believe, alters the form of government our Constitution provides. I cannot agree.

FN2 These First Amendment liberties--freedom of speech, press and religion--provide a graphic illustration of the potential restrictive capacity of a rule under which they are protected at a particular time only because the Court, as then constituted believes them to be a > requirement of fundamental justice. Consequently, under the same rule, another Court, with a different belief as to fundamental justice, could at least as against State action, completely or partially withdraw Constitutional protection from these basic freedoms, just as though the First Amendment had never been written.

True, the State's power is here upheld. But the rule announced means that tomorrow's judgment may strike down a State or Federal enactment on the ground that it does not conform to this Court's idea of natural justice. I therefore find myself moved by the same fears that caused Mr. Justice Holmes to say in 1930:

'I have not yet adequately expressed the more than anxiety that I feel at the ever increasing scope given to the Fourteenth Amendment in cutting down what I believe to be the constitutional rights of the States. As the decisions now stand, I see hardly any limit but the sky to the invalidating of those rights if they happen to strike a majority of this Court as for any reason undesirable.' Baldwin v. Missouri, 281 U.S. 586, 595, 50 S.Ct. 436, 439, 74 L.Ed. 1056, 72 A.L.R. 1303.

BENGUET CONSOLIDATED MINING CO. et al.

No. 85.

Argued Nov. 27, 28, 1951.
Decided March 3, 1952.
Rehearing Denied March 31, 1952.
See 343 U.S. 917, 72 S.Ct. 645.

Actions by Idonah Slade Perkins against Benguet Consolidated Mining Company, an alien business association known as A Sociedad Anonima and others. The Court of Appeals of Ohio, Clermont County, Per Curiam, 88 Ohio App. 118, 95 N.E.2d 5, affirmed a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, Clermont County, sustaining a motion to quash service of summons on the named defendant, 99 N.E.2d 515, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, 155 Ohio St. 116, 98 N.E.2d 33, affirmed the judgment, and plaintiff brought certiorari. The United States Supreme Court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Burton, held that under the circumstances it would not violate due process of law under the Fourteenth Amendment for Ohio courts either to take or refuse to take jurisdiction of a foreign corporation in action not arising out of the corporation's activities within the state.

Judgment of the Supreme Court of Ohio vacated, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

Mr. Justice Minton, with whom Chief Justice Vinson joined, dissented.

*414 Mr. 438 Robert N. Gorman, Cincinnati, Ohio, for petitioner.

Mr. Lucien H. Mercier, Washington, D.C., for respondent.

Mr. Justice BURTON delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case calls for an answer to the question whether the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States precludes Ohio from subjecting a foreign corporation to the jurisdiction of its courts in this action in personam. The corporation has been carrying on in Ohio a continuous and systematic, but limited, part of its general business. Its president, while engaged in doing such business in Ohio, has been *415 served with summons in this proceeding. The cause of action sued upon did not arise in Ohio and does not relate to the corporation's activities there. For the reasons hereafter stated, we hold that the Fourteenth Amendment leaves Ohio free to take or decline jurisdiction over the corporation.

After extended litigation elsewhere [FN1] petitioner, Idonah Slade Perkins, a nonresident of Ohio, filed two actions in personam in the Court of Common Pleas of Clermont 439 County, Ohio, against the several respondents. Among those sued is the Benguet Consolidated Mining Company, here called the mining company. It is styled a 'sociedad anonima' under the laws of the Philippine Islands, where it owns and has operated profitable gold and silver mines. In one action petitioner seeks approximately $68,400 in dividends claimed to be due her as a stockholder. In the other she claims $2,500,000 damages largely because of the company's failure to issue to her certificates for 120,000 shares of its stock.

First National Bank of Cincinnati, Com.Pl., Hamilton County, Ohio, 79 N.E.2d 159.

In each case the trial court sustained a motion to quash the service of summons on the mining company. Ohio Com.Pl., 99 N.E.2d 515. The Court of Appeals of Ohio affirmed that decision, 88 Ohio App. 118, 95 N.E.2d 5, as did the Supreme Court of Ohio, 155 Ohio St. 116, 98 N.E.2d 33. The cases were consolidated and we granted certiorari in order to pass upon the conclusion voiced within the court below that federal due process required the result there reached. 342 U.S. 808, 72 S.Ct. 33, 96 L.Ed. 611.

[1] We start with the holding of the Supreme Court of Ohio, not contested here, that, under Ohio law, the mining company is to be treated as a foreign corporation. [FN2] Actual notice of the proceeding was given to the corporation 440 in the instant case through regular service of summons upon its president while he was in Ohio acting in that capacity. Accordingly, there can be no jurisdictional objection based upon a lack of notice to a responsible representative of the corporation.

FN2. Ohio requires a foreign corporation to secure a license to transact 'business' in that State, Throckmorton's Ohio Code, 1940, s 8625-- 4, and to appoint a 'designated agent' upon whom process may be served, ss 8625--2, 8625--5. The mining company has neither secured such a license nor designated such an agent. While this may make it subject to penalties and handicaps, this does not prevent it from transacting business or being sued. s 8625--25. If it has a 'managing agent' in Ohio, service may be made upon him. s 11290. Such service is a permissive alternative to service on the corporation through its president or other chief officer. s 11288. Lively v. Picton, 6 Cir., 218 F. 401, 406--407. The evidence as to the business activities of the corporation in Ohio is summarized by the Ohio Court of Appeals. 88 Ohio App. 118, 119--125, 95 N.E.2d 5, 6--9. That court held that such activities did not constitute the transaction of business referred to in the Code. In its syllabus, however, the Supreme Court of Ohio, without passing upon the sufficiency of such acts for the above statutory purpose, and without defining its use of the term, affirmed the judgment dismissing the complaint and assumed that what the corporation had done in Ohio constituted 'doing business' to an extent sufficient to be recognized in reaching its decision.

[2] The answer to the question of whether the state courts of Ohio are open to a proceeding in personam, against an amply notified foreign corporation, to enforce a cause of action not arising in Ohio and not related to the business or activities of the corporation in that State rests entirely *416 upon the law of Ohio, unless the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment compels a decision either way.

[3][4][5][6] The suggestion that federal due process compels the State to open its courts to such a case has no substance.

'Provisions for making foreign corporations subject to service in the state is a matter of legislative discretion, and a failure to provide for such service is not a denial of due process. Still less is it incumbent upon a state in furnishing such process to make the jurisdiction over the foreign corporation wide enough to include the adjudication of transitory actions not arising in the state.' Missouri P.R. Co. v. Clarendon Co., 257 U.S. 533, 535, 42 S.Ct. 210, 211, 66 L.Ed. 354.

441 Also without merit is the argument that merely because Ohio permits a complainant to maintain a proceeding in personam in its courts against a properly served nonresident natural person to enforce a cause of action which does not arise out of anything done in Ohio, therefore, the Constitution of the United States compels Ohio to provide like relief against a foreign corporation.

A more serious question is presented by the claim that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits Ohio from granting such relief against a foreign corporation. The syllabus in the report of the case below, while denying the relief sought, does not indicate whether the Supreme Court of Ohio rested its decision on Ohio law or on the Fourteenth Amendment. The first paragraph of that syllabus is as follows:

'1. The doing of business in this state by a foreign corporation, which has not appointed a statutory agent upon whom service of process against the corporation can be made in this state or otherwise consented to service of summons upon it in actions brought in this state, will not make the corporation subject to service of summons in an action in personam brought in the courts of this state to enforce a cause of action not arising in this state and in no way related to the business or activities of the corporation in this state.' 155 Ohio St. 116, 117, 98 N.E.2d 33, 34.

[7] If the above statement stood alone, it might mean that the decision rested solely upon the law of Ohio. In support of that possibility we are told that, under the rules and practice of the Supreme Court of Ohio, only the syllabus necessarily carries the approval of that court. [FN3] As 442 we understand the Ohio practice, the syllabus of its *417 Supreme Court constitutes the official opinion of that court but it must be read in the light of the facts and issues of the case.

FN3. In 1858 the Supreme Court of Ohio promulgated the following rule: 'A syllabus of the points decided by the Court in each case, shall be stated, in writing, by the Judge assigned to deliver the opinion of the Court, which shall be confined to the points of law, arising from the facts of the case, that have been determined by the Court. And the syllabus shall be submitted to the Judges concurring therein, for revisal, before publication thereof; and it shall be inserted in the book of reports without alteration, unless by the consent of the Judges concurring therein.' 5 Ohio St. vii.

This policy has been recognized by statute. Bates Ohio R.S. s 427, as amended, 103 Ohio Laws 1913, s 1483, and 108 Ohio Laws 1919, s 1483. It appears now in Throckmorton's Ohio Code, 1940, s 1483, as follows: 'Whenever it has been thus decided to report a case for publication the syllabus thereof shall be prepared by the judge delivering the opinion, and approved by a majority of the members of the court; and the report may be per curiam, or if an opinion be reported, the same shall be written in as brief and concise form as may be consistent with a clear presentation of the law of the case. * * * Only such cases as are hereafter reported in accordance with the provisions of this section shall be recognized by and receive the official sanction of any court within the state.'

There are many references to this practice, both in the syllabi and opinions written for the Supreme Court of Ohio. Typical of these is the following:

'It has long been the rule of this court that the syllabus contains the law of the case. It is the only part of the opinion requiring the approval of all the members concurring in the judgment. Where the judge writing an opinion discusses matters or gives expression to his views on questions not contained in the syllabus, it is merely the personal opinion of that judge.' State ex rel. Donahey v. Edmondson, 89 Ohio St. 93, 107--108, 105 N.E. 269, 273, 52 L.R.A.,N.S., 305.

See also, Williamson Heater Co. v. Radich, 128 Ohio St. 124, 190 N.E. 403; Baltimore & O.R. Co. v. Baillie, 112 Ohio St. 567, 148 N.E. 233. A syllabus must be read in the light of the facts in the case, even where brought out in the accompanying opinion rather than in the syllabus itself. See Williamson Heater Co. v. Radich, supra; Perkins v. Bright, 109 Ohio St. 14, 19--20, 141 N.E. 689, 690--691; In re Poage, 87 Ohio St. 72, 82--83, 100 N.E. 125, 127--128.

443 The only opinion accompanying the syllabus of the court below places the concurrence of its author unequivocally upon the ground that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment prohibits the Ohio courts from exercising jurisdiction over the respondent corporation in this proceeding. [FN4] That opinion is an official part of the report of the case. The report, however, does not disclose to what extent, if any, the other members of the court may have shared the view expressed in that opinion. Accordingly, for us to allow the judgment to stand as it is would risk an affirmance of a decision which might have been decided differently if the court below had felt free, under our decisions, to do so.

FN4. 'However, the doing of business in a state by a foreign corporation, which has not appointed a statutory agent upon whom service of process against the corporation can be made in that state or otherwise consented to service of summons upon it in actions brought in that state, will not make the corporation subject to service of summons in an action in personam brought in the courts of that state to enforce a cause of action in no way related to the business or activities of the corporation in that state.

> 'An examination of the opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the foregoing cases will clearly disclose that service of summons in such an instance would be void as wanting in due process of law.' 155 Ohio St. 116, 119--120, 98 N.E.2d 33, 35.

The cases primarily relied on by the author of the opinion accompanying the syllabus below are Old Wayne Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U.S. 8, 27 S.Ct. 236, 51 L.Ed. 345, and Simon v. Southern R. Co., 236 U.S. 115, 35 S.Ct. 255, 59 L.Ed. 492. Unlike the case at bar, no actual notice of the proceedings was received in those cases by a 444 responsible representative of the foreign corporation. In each case, the public official who was served with process in an attempt to bind the foreign corporation was held to lack the necessary authority to accept service so as to bind it in a proceeding to enforce a cause of action arising outside of the state of the forum. See 204 U.S. at pages 22--23, 27 S.Ct. at pages 240--241, and 236 U.S. at page 130, 35 S.Ct. at page 260. The necessary result was a finding of inadequate service in each case and a conclusion that the foreign corporation was not bound by it. The same would be true today in a like proceeding where the only service had and the only notice given was that directed to a public official who had no authority, by statute or otherwise, to accept it in that kind of a proceeding. At the time of rendering the above decisions this Court was aided, in reaching its conclusion as to the limited scope of the statutory authority of the public officials, by this Court's conception that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment precluded a state from giving its public officials authority to accept service in terms broad enough to bind a foreign corporation in proceedings against it to enforce an obligation arising outside of the state of the forum. That conception now has been modified by the *418 rationale adopted in later decisions and particularly in International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95.

[8] Today if an authorized representative of a foreign corporation be physically present in the state of the forum and be there engaged in activities appropriate to accepting service or receiving notice on its behalf, we recognize that there is no unfairness in subjecting that corporation to the jurisdiction of the courts of that state through such service of process upon that representative. This has been squarely held to be so in a proceeding in personam against such a corporation, at least in relation to a cause of action 445 arising out of the corporation's activities within the state of the forum. [FN5]

> FN5. '* * * The obligation which is here sued upon arose out of those very activities. It is evident that these operations establish sufficient contacts or ties with the state of the forum to make it reasonable and just according to our traditional conception of fair play and substantial justice to permit the state to enforce the obligations which appellant has incurred there. Hence we cannot say that the maintenance of the present suit in the State of Washington involves an unreasonable or undue procedure.' International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S. at page 320, 66 S.Ct. at page 160.

[9][10] The essence of the issue here, at the constitutional level, is a like one of general fairness to the corporation. Appropriate tests for that are discussed in International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S. at pages 317--320, 66 S.Ct. at pages 158, 160. The amount and kind of activities which must be carried on by the foreign corporation in the state of the forum so as to make it reasonable and just to subject the corporation to the jurisdiction of that state are to be determined in each case. The corporate activities of a foreign corporation which, under state statute, make it necessary for it to secure a license and to designate a statutory agent upon whom process may be served provide a helpful but not a conclusive test. For example, the state of the forum may by statute require a foreign mining corporation to secure a license in order lawfully to carry on there such functional intrastate operations as those of mining or refining ore. On the other hand, if the same corporation carries on, in that state, other continuous and systematic corporate activities as it did here--consisting of directors' meetings, business correspondence, banking, stock transfers, payment of salaries, purchasing of machinery, etc.--those activities are enough to make it fair and reasonable to subject that corporation to proceedings in personam in that state, at least insofar as the proceedings in personam seek to enforce*446 causes of action relating to those very activities or to other activities of the corporation within the state.

[11] The instant case takes us one step further to a proceeding in personam to enforce a cause of action not arising out of the corporation's activities in the state of the forum. Using the tests mentioned above we find no requirement of federal due process that either prohibits Ohio from opening its courts to the cause of action here presented or compels Ohio to do so. This conforms to the realistic reasoning in International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S. at pages 318--319, 66 S.Ct. at pages 159--160:

'* * * there have been instances in which the continuous corporate operations within a state were thought so substantial and of such a nature as to justify suit against it on causes of action arising from dealings entirely distinct from those activities. See Missouri, K. & T.R. Co. v. Reynolds, 255 U.S. 565, 41 S.Ct. 446, 65 L.Ed. 788; [FN6] 419 Tauza v. Susquehanna Coal Co., 220 N.Y. 259, 115 N.E. 915; cf. St. Louis S.W.R. Co. v. Alexander, supra (227 U.S. 218, 33 S.Ct. 245, 57 L.Ed. 486).

> FN6. This citation does not disclose the significance of this decision but light is thrown upon it by the opinions of the state court below. Reynolds v. Missouri, K. & T.R. Co., 224 Mass. 379, 113 N.E. 413; 228 Mass. 584, 117 N.E. 913. In addition to the cases cited in the text see Barrow S.S. Co. v. Kane, 170 U.S. 100, 18 S.Ct. 526, 42 L.Ed. 964; Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Co. v. Gold Issue Mining Co., 243 U.S. 93, 37 S.Ct. 344, 61 L.Ed. 610 (statutory agent appointed); Philadelphia & Reading R. Co. v. McKibbin, 243 U.S. 264, 268--269, 37 S.Ct. 280, 281, 282, 61 L.Ed. 710 (question left open).

'* * * some of the decisions holding the corporation amenable to suit have been supported by resort to the legal fiction that it has given its consent to service and suit, consent being implied from its presence in the state through the acts of its authorized agents. Lafayette Insurance Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 407; St. Clair v. Cox, supra, 106 U.S. (350) 356, 1 S.Ct. (354) 359, 27 L.Ed. 222; *447Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, supra, 213 U.S. (245) 254, 29 S.Ct. (445) 447, 53 L.Ed. 782; State of Washington v. Superior Court, 289 U.S. 361, 364, 365, 53 S.Ct. 624, 626, 627, 77 L.Ed. 1256. But more realistically it may be said that those authorized acts were of such a nature as to justify the fiction. Smolik v. Philadelphia & Reading Co., D.C., 222 F. 148, 151. Henderson, The Position of Foreign Corporations in American Constitutional Law, 94, 95.

'* * * Whether due process is satisfied must depend rather upon the quality and nature of the activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure. That clause does not contemplate that a state may make binding a judgment in personam against an individual or corporate defendant with which the state has no contacts, ties, or relations. Cf. Pennoyer v. Neff, supra (95 U.S. 714, 24 L.Ed. 565); Minnesota Commercial Assn. v. Benn, 261 U.S. 140, 43 S.Ct. 293, 67 L.Ed. 573.'

It remains only to consider, in more detail, the issue of whether, as a matter of federal due process, the business done in Ohio by the respondent mining company was sufficiently substantial and of such a nature as to permit Ohio to entertain a cause of action against a foreign corporation, where the cause of action arose from activities entirely distinct from its activities in Ohio. See International Shoe Co. v. Washington, supra, 326 U.S. at page 318, 66 S.Ct. at page 159.

[12][13] The Ohio Court of Appeals summarized the evidence on the subject. 88 Ohio App. at pages 119--125, 95 N.E.2d at pages 6--9. From that summary the following facts are substantially beyond controversy: The company's mining properties were in the Philippine Islands. Its operations there were completely halted during the occupation of the Islands by the Japanese. During that interim the president, who was also the general manager and principal stockholder of the company, returned to his home in Clermont County, Ohio. There he maintained an office in *448 which he conducted his personal affairs and did many things on behalf of the company. He kept there office files of the company. He carried on there correspondence relating to the business of the company and to its employees. He drew and distributed there salary checks on behalf of the company, both in his own favor as president and in favor of two company secretaries who worked there with him. He used and maintained in Clermont County, Ohio, two active bank accounts carrying substantial balances of company funds. A bank in Hamilton County, Ohio, acted as transfer agent for the stock of the company. Several directors' meetings were held at his office or home in Clermont County. From that office he supervised policies dealing with the rehabilitation of the corporation's properties in the Philippines and he dispatched funds to cover purchases of machinery for such rehabilitation. Thus he carried on in Ohio a continuous and systematic supervision of the necessarily limited wartime activities of the company. He there discharged his duties as president and general manager, both during the occupation of the company's properties by the Japanese and immediately thereafter. While *420 no mining properties in Ohio were owned or operated by the company, many of its wartime activities were directed from Ohio and were being given the personal attention of its president in that State at the time he was served with summons. Consideration of the circumstances which, under the law of Ohio, ultimately will determine whether the courts of that State will choose to take jurisdiction over the corporation is reserved for the courts of that State. Without reaching that issue of state policy, we conclude that, under the circumstances above recited, it would not violate federal due process for Ohio either to take or decline jurisdiction of the corporation in this proceeding. This relieves the Ohio courts of the restriction relied upon in the opinion 449 accompanying the syllabus below and which may have influenced the judgment of the court below.

[14] Accordingly, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Ohio is vacated and the cause is remanded to that court for further proceedings in the light of this opinion. [FN7]

FN7. For like procedure followed under somewhat comparable circumstances see State Tax Comm'n v. Van Cott, 306 U.S. 511, 59 S.Ct. 605, 83 L.Ed. 950.

It is so ordered.

Judgment vacated and cause remanded for further proceedings.

Mr. Justice BLACK concurs in the result.

Mr. Justice MINTON, with whom the CHIEF JUSTICE joins, dissenting.

As I understand the practice in Ohio, the law as agreed to by the court is stated in the syllabus. If an opinion is filed, it expresses the views of the writer of the opinion and of those who may join him as to why the law was so declared in the syllabus. Judge Taft alone filed an opinion in the instant case.

The law as declared in the syllabus, which is the whole court speaking, is clearly based upon adequate state grounds. Judge Taft in his opinion expresses the view that the opinions of this Court on due process grounds require the court to declare the law as stated in the syllabus. As the majority opinion of this Court points out, this is an erroneous view of this Court's decisions. 'This brings the situation clearly within the settled rule whereby this Court will not review a State court decision resting on an adequate and independent nonfederal ground even though the State court may have also summoned to its support an erroneous view of federal law.' Radio Station WOW v. Johnson, 326 U.S. 120, 129, 65 S.Ct. 1475, 1480, 89 L.Ed. 2092.

The case of State Tax Comm'n v. Van Cott, 306 U.S. 511, 59 S.Ct. 605, 83 L.Ed. 950, is not this case. There the case was not clearly decided 450 on an adequate state ground, but the state ground and the federal ground were so interwoven that this Court was 'unable to conclude that the judgment rests upon an independent interpretation of the state law.' 306 U.S. at page 514, 59 S.Ct. at page 606. In the instant case, a clear statement of the state law is made by the court in the syllabus. Only Judge Taft has summoned the erroneous view of this Court's decisions to his support of the adequate state ground approved by the whole court.

What we are saying to Ohio is: 'You have decided this case on an adequate state ground, denying service, which you had a right to do, but you don't have to do it if you don't want to, as far as the decisions of this Court are concerned.' I think what we are doing is giving gratuitously an advisory opinion to the Ohio Supreme Court. I would dismiss the writ as improvidently granted.

United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

Eulala SHUTE and Russel Shute,
Plaintiffs-Appellants,
v.
CARNIVAL CRUISE LINES, Defendant-Appellee.

No. 87-4063.

Argued and Submitted Oct. 5, 1988.
Decided Dec. 12, 1988.
Withdrawn April 27, 1989.
Amended and Refiled Feb. 22, 1990.

Cruise ship passenger brought suit against cruise line seeking damages for injuries sustained in slip and fall. The United States District Court for the Western District of Washington, Carolyn R. Dimmick, J., granted cruise line's motion for summary judgment on ground of lack of personal jurisdiction, and passenger appealed. The Court of Appeals, 863 F.2d 1437, reversed and remanded. Subsequently, the Court of Appeals, 872 F.2d 930, withdrew opinion and certified question to the Washington Supreme Court. The Washington Supreme Court, 113 Wash.2d 763, 783 P.2d 78, answered question. Thereafter, the Court of Appeals, Fletcher, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) exercise of jurisdiction in Washington was consistent with principles of due process, and (2) forum selection clause requiring suit to be brought in Florida was unenforceable.

Reversed and remanded.

Opinion, 863 F.2d 1437, superseded.

Federal law governs validity of forum selection clause.

378 Gregory J. Wall, Brousseau, Wall & Jankovich, Seattle, Wash., for plaintiffs-appellants.

Jonathan Rodriguez-Atkatz, Bogle & Gates, Seattle, Wash., for defendant- appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington.

Before FLETCHER, BOOCHEVER and TROTT, Circuit Judges.

379 FLETCHER, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs Eulala and Russell Shute appeal the district court's decision to grant the defendant's motion for summary judgment, dismissing their suit for damages. The district court granted the motion on the grounds that the defendant's forum-related activities were insufficient to support the exercise of personal jurisdiction in a manner consistent with due process. We reverse.

BACKGROUND

The defendant-appellee, Carnival Cruise Lines, is a Panamanian corporation with its principal place of business in Miami, Florida. It is undisputed that Carnival is not registered to do business in the State of Washington. It owns no property in Washington, maintains no office or bank account in Washington and pays no business taxes in Washington. It has never operated ships which have called at Washington ports. It has no exclusive agent in Washington. Carnival does, however, advertise its cruises in local Washington newspapers. It also provides brochures to travel agents in Washington, which in turn are distributed to potential customers. Carnival also periodically holds seminars for travel agents in the State of Washington to inform them about, and encourage them to sell, Carnival cruises. Carnival pays travel agencies a 10% commission on proceeds from tickets sold for Carnival cruises.

The plaintiff-appellants, who are Washington residents, purchased tickets through Smokey Point Travel in Arlington, Washington for a seven day cruise on a Carnival Cruise Lines ship, the TROPICALE. The appellants were to embark in

Los Angeles, California, sailing from there to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico. The tickets were purchased through the travel agent, who forwarded payment to Carnival in Miami. The tickets were issued in Florida, then forwarded to the appellants in Washington.

The passage contract ticket contained a forum selection clause that provided as follows:

> It is agreed by and between the passenger and the Carrier that all disputes and matters whatsoever arising under, in connection with or incident to this Contract shall be litigated, if at all, in and before a Court located in the State of Florida, U.S.A., to the exclusion of the courts of any other state or country.

The appellants' cause of action arises from injuries suffered by Mrs. Shute when she slipped on a deck mat while on a guided tour of the ship's galley. This incident occurred in international waters off the coast of Mexico. The Shutes allege that the fall was due to the negligence of Carnival and its employees, and request damages arising out of personal injuries to Mrs. Shute.

Carnival moved for summary judgment on two grounds: first, that the district court lacked personal jurisdiction over Carnival; and second, that the passenger ticket contract required the Shutes to bring all claims against Carnival in the Florida courts. In the alternative, Carnival requested a transfer of the case to the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Florida. The court addressed only the first issue, ruling that it lacked personal jurisdiction over Carnival. The Shutes timely appeal.

DISCUSSION

I. Burden of Proof/Standard of Review

[1] The plaintiff has the burden of establishing that the court has personal jurisdiction. Cubbage v. Merchent, 744 F.2d 665, 667 (9th Cir.1984), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1005, 105 S.Ct. 1359, 84 L.Ed.2d 380 (1985). Where the trial court's ruling is based solely upon a review of affidavits and discovery materials, dismissal is appropriate only if the plaintiff fails to make a prima facie showing of personal jurisdiction. Fields v. Sedgwick Associated Risks, Ltd., 796 F.2d 299, 301 (9th Cir.1986); Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Tech. Assocs., Inc., 557 F.2d 1280, 1285-86 (9th Cir.1977); cf. Haisten v. Grass Valley Med. Reimbursement Fund, 784 F.2d 1392, 1396, n. 1 (9th Cir.1986) (where defendant challenges judgment entered against it on the merits, the plaintiff bears the full burden of proof 380 of personal jurisdiction by the preponderance of the evidence).

A district court's determination that personal jurisdiction can properly be exercised is a question of law reviewable de novo when the underlying facts are undisputed. Haisten, 784 F.2d at 1396. For the purposes of this appeal, we treat the plaintiffs' allegations as correct. Fields, 796 F.2d at 301.

II. Personal Jurisdiction

This action was brought in admiralty in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Washington. In order to establish personal jurisdiction, the Shutes must demonstrate that the forum state's jurisdictional statute confers personal jurisdiction, and that the exercise of jurisdiction accords with federal constitutional principles of due process. Pacific Atlantic Trading Co. v. M/V Main Express, 758 F.2d 1325, 1327 (9th Cir.1985).

[2] Washington's jurisdictional statute provides, in relevant part, as follows:

> (1) Any person whether or not a citizen or resident of this state, who, in person or through an agent does any of the acts in this section enumerated, thereby submits said person, and if an individual, his personal representative, to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state as to any cause of action arising from the doing of said acts: (a) the transaction of any business within the state....

Wash.Rev.Code 4.28.185 (West 1988). This statute has been construed by the Supreme Court of Washington to permit the assertion of jurisdiction to the extent permitted by due process, except where limited by the terms of the statute. Deutsch v. West Coast Mach. Co., 80 Wash.2d 707, 497 P.2d 1311 (1972). [FN1] For our purposes, "the statutory and constitutional standards merge into a single due process test." Pedersen Fisheries, Inc. v. Patti Indus., 563 F.Supp. 72, 74 (W.D.Wash.1983). [FN2]

FN1. This opinion was withdrawn by order of the panel certifying to the Supreme Court of Washington the question of whether the Washington long-arm statute would confer personal jurisdiction over Carnival Cruise Lines for the claim asserted by the Shutes. The Supreme Court has now held "that the business activities of the cruise line in [the State of Washington] permits the assertion of jurisdiction." Shute v. Carnival Cruise Lines, 113 Wash.2d 763, 783 P.2d 78 (1989). The opinion is refiled as modified herein.

FN2. Where jurisdiction is asserted under § 4.28.185(1)(a), the "transaction of any business" provision, the Washington courts apply a three factor test that is virtually identical to the specific jurisdiction due process test employed by this circuit. Compare Deutsch, 497 P.2d at 1314 with Haisten, 784 F.2d at 1397. We therefore conclude that the Washington long-arm statute imposes no limitations beyond those imposed by due process.

Considerations of due process require that non-resident defendants have certain minimum contacts with the forum state, so that the exercise of jurisdiction does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. International Shoe v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 158, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945). However, the nature and quality of the necessary contacts required vary, depending upon the type of jurisdiction asserted.

[3] Courts may exercise either general or specific jurisdiction over non-resident defendants. General jurisdiction exists where the non-resident defendant has " 'substantial' or 'continuous and systematic' contacts with the forum state." Fields, 796 F.2d at 301 (quoting Haisten, 784 F.2d at 1396). A court exercising general jurisdiction over a defendant may hear cases unrelated to the defendant's forum-related activities. Id.

The level of contact with the forum state necessary to establish general jurisdiction is quite high. See, e.g., Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 414, 104 S.Ct. 1868, 1872, 80 L.Ed.2d 404 (1984) (no jurisdiction over foreign corporation that sent officers to forum for a negotiating session, accepted checks drawn from a forum bank, purchased equipment from the forum, and sent personnel to the forum to be trained); Cubbage, 744 F.2d at 667-68 (no general jurisdiction over non-resident doctors despite significant number of patients in forum, use of forum's state 381 medical insurance system and telephone directory listing that reached forum); Gates Learjet Corp. v. Jensen, 743 F.2d 1325, 1330-31 (9th Cir.1984) (no general jurisdiction over defendants despite several visits and purchases in forum, solicitation of contract in forum which included choice of law provision favoring forum, and extensive communication with forum), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1066, 105 S.Ct. 2143, 85 L.Ed.2d 500 (1985); Congoleum Corp. v. DLW Aktiengesellschaft, 729 F.2d 1240, 1242-43 (9th Cir.1984) (foreign corporation's sales and marketing efforts in forum state, including solicitation of orders, promotion of products to potential customers through the mail and through showroom displays, and attendance at trade shows and sales meetings, were insufficient contact to assert general jurisdiction).

[4] Carnival's contacts with the State of Washington are insufficient to support an exercise of general jurisdiction. Carnival has no offices and no exclusive agents in Washington, it is not registered to do business there, and it pays no taxes there. These factors militate against the exercise of general jurisdiction. See Fields, 796 F.2d at 302. Its contacts are limited to advertising in the local media, the mailing of brochures and the payment of commissions to travel agents, the conducting of promotional seminars, and the sale of its vacation cruises to residents of Washington. Only 1.29% and 1.06% of Carnival's cruise business was derived from residents of Washington in 1985 and 1986, respectively. This court has held under somewhat similar facts that the exercise of general jurisdiction would violate due process. See Congoleum, 729 F.2d at 1243.

[5] If the non-resident defendant's activities within the forum are not sufficiently pervasive to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction, a court may nevertheless assert jurisdiction for a cause of action arising out of the defendant's activities within the forum. The Ninth Circuit has devised a three-part test to determine whether the exercise of this "specific" jurisdiction comports with due process: (1) The defendant must have done some act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; (2) the claim must arise out of the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable. Haisten, 784 F.2d at 1397; Data Disc, 557 F.2d at 1287.

1. Purposeful Availment

Purposeful availment requires that the defendant engage in some form of affirmative conduct allowing or promoting the transaction of business within the forum state. Decker Coal Co. v. Commonwealth Edison Co., 805 F.2d 834, 840 (9th Cir.1986). This focus upon the affirmative conduct of the defendant is designed to ensure that the defendant is not haled into court as the result of random, fortuitous or attenuated contacts, or on account of the unilateral activities of third parties. See, e.g., World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 100 S.Ct. 559, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980) (purchaser's unilateral act of bringing defendant's product into the forum state provides an insufficient basis for the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendant).

This circuit has held that a non-resident defendant's act of soliciting business in the forum state will generally be considered purposeful availment if that solicitation results in contract negotiations or the transaction of business. Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc., 854 F.2d 1191, 1195 (9th Cir.1988); Decker Coal, 805 F.2d at 840 ("if the defendant directly solicits business in the forum state, the resulting transactions will probably constitute the deliberate transaction of business invoking the benefits of the forum state's laws").

In Sinatra, the plaintiff filed suit in California against Clinic La Prairie, a Swiss health clinic, for misappropriation of his name and likeness. The National Enquirer had done a full feature on the Clinic in exchange for Clinic officials' agreement to make false statements regarding Frank Sinatra's alleged stay at the Clinic. Sinatra had never visited the Clinic. The court ruled that the Clinic's advertisements in the 382 forum state, coupled with its misappropriation of Sinatra's name through the Enquirer article, were sufficiently directed toward the forum to satisfy the purposeful availment prong of the Data Disc test. 854 F.2d at 1195-98.

The Sinatra court's premise that solicitation of business in the forum state will support a finding of purposeful availment has substantial support in Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Court, 480 U.S. 102, 107 S.Ct. 1026, 94 L.Ed.2d 92 (1987). Justice O'Connor, writing for a four-Justice plurality, noted that conduct such as "designing the product for the market in the forum State, establishing channels for providing regular advice to customers in the forum State, advertising in the forum State, or marketing the product through a distributor who has agreed to serve as the sales agent in the forum State" may evidence purposeful availment. 480 U.S. at 112, 107 S.Ct. at 1033. The plurality relied upon the absence of these factors to conclude that Asahi did not purposefully avail itself of the California market. Id. [FN3]

> FN3. Justice Brennan, writing for four members of the Court, maintained that the absence of "additional conduct" such as advertisement in the forum state was irrelevant. In his view, placing the goods in the stream of commerce with the knowledge that they will reach the forum state, when considered in light of the economic benefit received from sales in the forum, is sufficient to establish purposeful availment. 480 U.S. at 117, 107 S.Ct. at 1035 (Brennan, J., concurring). Under this standard, it is possible that Carnival's knowledge that ticket sales were being made to Washington residents is, in itself, sufficient to establish that Carnival purposefully availed itself of the benefits and protections of Washington law. We need not reach that question, however, because Carnival engaged in three of the four types of conduct mentioned by Justice O'Connor. We view these actions to be sufficient to meet the purposeful availment test.

[6] In light of these cases, it is difficult to conclude that Carnival did not purposefully avail itself of the laws of Washington. It advertised in the local media, promoted its cruises through brochures sent to travel agents in that state, and paid a commission on sales of cruises in that state. In addition, Carnival conducted promotional seminars in Washington designed to increase its sales to residents of that state. Carnival's efforts to solicit business in Washington were more extensive than those of the defendant Clinic in Sinatra, which consisted of advertisements in a few periodicals circulated in California. Sinatra, 854 F.2d at 1196. [FN4]

> FN4. It should be noted, however, that in analyzing whether the defendant Clinic had directed its activities toward California, the court also considered the effects in the forum of the defendant's acts. Thus, the fact that California was the situs of the tortious injury was a factor which led the court to find purposeful availment. 854 F.2d at 1196-98. That factor is not present in this case.

Carnival maintains that the fact it has never "consummated" a transaction in Washington precludes a finding of purposeful availment. In Carnival's view, the fact that the ticket is issued in Florida after receipt of payment and the fact that the cruise takes place completely outside of Washington State are decisive. This misses the point. As the Supreme Court has explained, the reality of modern commercial life is that many transactions take place solely by mail or wire across state lines, obviating the need for physical presence in the state toward which the defendant's activities are directed. Thus, the Court has held that the physical absence of the defendant and the transaction from the forum cannot defeat the exercise of personal jurisdiction. Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 476, 105 S.Ct. 2174, 2184, 85 L.Ed.2d 528 (1985); see also Lanier v. American Bd. of Endodontics, 843 F.2d 901, 907 (6th Cir.), cert. denied 488 U.S. 926, 109 S.Ct. 310, 102 L.Ed.2d 329 (1988) ("Neither the presence of the defendant in the state, nor actual contract formation need take place in the forum state for defendant to do business in that state.").

The actions taken by Carnival to solicit business within the State of Washington were clearly purposefully directed toward residents of Washington. To that extent, it is irrelevant where the tickets are issued or where the cruise takes place. In addition, Carnival's argument ignores the fact that the promotional seminars actually took 383 place within the state. In short, Carnival's actions were more than sufficient to meet the purposeful availment test.

2. Arising Out Of

The second prong of the three-part Data Disc test requires that the claim must "arise out of" the defendant's forum-related activities. Carnival maintains that the Shutes' claim, which is based on allegations of negligence with respect to conditions on the TROPICALE, does not "arise out of" Carnival's business solicitation contacts with Washington.

Carnival points to several cases outside this circuit supporting its contention that, for purposes of personal jurisdiction, "slip and fall" claims do not arise out of the defendant's business solicitation activities in the forum. See Marino v. Hyatt Corp., 793 F.2d 427 (1st Cir.1986); Pearrow v. National Life & Accident Ins. Co., 703 F.2d 1067 (8th Cir.1983); see also Gelfland v. Tanner Motor Tours, Ltd., 339 F.2d 317, 321-22 (2d Cir.1964) (plaintiff's injuries sustained while on defendant's bus tour did not arise from defendant's forum activities, where those activities consisted of ticket sale through independent travel agent in the forum).

In Marino the plaintiff, a resident of Massachusetts, sued Hyatt, a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Illinois, for injuries incurred at one of the defendant's hotels. The plaintiff had made reservations through a Massachusetts travel agent to stay at the defendant's Hyatt Regency Hotel in Maui, Hawaii. The plaintiff slipped in the bathtub of her Hawaii hotel room, sustaining injuries. The court of appeals affirmed the district court's dismissal of her ensuing personal injury claim for lack of personal jurisdiction.

Basing its decision on an interpretation of the Massachusetts long-arm statute, the court acknowledged that Hyatt transacted business in Massachusetts. However, the court concluded that the claim, stemming from Mrs. Marino's fall in the bathtub in Hawaii, did not "arise from" the reservation contract entered into in Massachusetts. 793 F.2d at 430. [FN5]

> FN5. The court distinguished Hahn v. Vermont Law School, 698 F.2d 48 (1st Cir.1983) (a cause of action for breach of contract arose from law school's act of sending recruiters to Massachusetts). In the court's view, a cause of action for breach of contract was distinguishable from a cause of action alleging a negligent tort.

In Pearrow the plaintiff, an Arkansas resident, slipped and fell on the floor of the Hospitality Suite at Opryland USA in Nashville, Tennessee. He brought an action in Arkansas against the owner of Opryland, National Life. The district court dismissed the case for lack of jurisdiction, noting that the cause of action did not arise out of the defendant's activities in Arkansas, and that the Arkansas long-arm statute therefore provided no basis for the exercise of jurisdiction. The court of appeals affirmed.

Noting that National was registered to conduct insurance business in Arkansas, the court concluded that the plaintiff's Tennessee injury had nothing to do with that insurance business. More important, the court concluded that National's act of sending brochures into Arkansas soliciting visits to Opryland was "too tenuous" a connection to support jurisdiction. 703 F.2d at 1069.

Were this court to apply the "arising from" analysis of Marino and Pearrow to this case, we would conclude that Mrs. Shute's fall did not arise out of Carnival's solicitation of business in Washington. Rather, we would find that her injuries arose out of the negligent failure to maintain a safe passageway through the galley of the TROPICALE. However, Cubbage v. Merchent, 744 F.2d 665, suggests that this circuit has not adopted such a stringent standard of causation in evaluating whether a court has specific jurisdiction.

In Cubbage, this court was faced with a medical malpractice suit brought in a federal district court in California by a California resident against two doctors and a hospital located in and licensed in Arizona. Although the doctors were not licensed to practice in California, they applied for and were issued California Medi-Cal numbers. 384 Both doctors and the hospital were listed in a telephone directory which was distributed in the area of California lying adjacent to Arizona, and a significant number of the defendants' patients (including Cubbage) were California residents.

Applying the Data Disc test, the court held that the exercise of specific jurisdiction did not offend due process. Of particular relevance is the court's holding that the appellant's malpractice claim arose out of the defendant's solicitation of patients from California. 744 F.2d at 670. Had the Cubbage court applied reasoning similar to that utilized in the cases cited by Carnival, Cubbage's claim would have arisen out of the doctor's negligent treatment of Cubbage in Arizona, not out of the business solicitation activities in California. In our view, Cubbage must be read as a rejection by this circuit of the rigid causation standard advanced by Carnival.

Decisions by at least two other courts of appeal support the view that a tort can arise from prior business solicitation in the forum state. Lanier, 843 F.2d at 901; Prejean v. Sonatrach, Inc., 652 F.2d 1260 (5th Cir.1981). These courts apply a "but for" test of causality in this type of situation.

Lanier involved allegations of sex discrimination in the certification procedure employed by the defendant Board. The plaintiff, a licensed Michigan dentist, sought certification by the defendant through its Chicago, Illinois headquarters. Dr. Lanier twice failed the oral examination required for certification, once in Phoenix, once in Chicago. She then filed suit in Michigan. The district court ruled that it lacked personal jurisdiction over the defendant, but the appellate court reversed.

The Sixth Circuit court first determined that the Board's contacts with the State of Michigan, which consisted of the collection of application fees from Dr. Lanier, together with a series of telephone calls and written correspondence to Dr. Lanier in Michigan, were sufficient to constitute "the transaction of any business" within the meaning of the long-arm statute. The court then considered whether the "arising out of" requirement of the long-arm statute was fulfilled. The Board argued that the plaintiff's cause of action arose from the allegedly unfairly evaluated oral examinations given in Arizona and Illinois rather than from its contacts with Dr. Lanier in Michigan. The court rejected this argument, commenting that it was "unpersuaded that the plaintiff's relationship and contacts with the defendant Board can be logically or legally fragmented in that fashion." 843 F.2d at 908.

In the court's view, the entire course of events underlying Dr. Lanier's claim was an uninterrupted whole which began with, and was uniquely made possible by, the Board's contacts in Michigan. But for those contacts, the cause of action would never have come about.

> Whether the decision to discriminate occurred before, during, or after the oral examination administered to plaintiff is not controlling ...; it arose from, was occasioned by, and would not have occurred but for the totality of Dr. Lanier's efforts to obtain Board certification--efforts which derived, as we have held, from the defendant's limited business contacts with Dr. Lanier in Michigan.

Id. at 908-09.

The Fifth Circuit expressed similar sentiments in Prejean. In that case, survivors of employees allegedly under contract with Sonatrach, the Algerian national oil company, brought a wrongful death action in Texas against Sonatrach, Air Algeria and Beech Aircraft Corporation. The plaintiffs alleged that their spouses, while in Algeria performing duties pursuant to a contract with Sonatrach, died when a plane chartered by Sonatrach crashed.

Applying the Texas jurisdictional statute, the district court dismissed the action as to all three defendants for want of personal jurisdiction. The court of appeals affirmed as to Air Algeria and Beech, but reversed and remanded for further discovery as to jurisdiction over Sonatrach. [FN6]

> FN6. The defendant disputed the existence of the only contact to the forum, the alleged contract between Sonatrach and the decedents' Dallas engineering firm. Thus, the court required more information about the possible existence of that contract.

385 The key analysis for our purposes appears in footnote 21, where the court addressed Sonatrach's argument that the existence of the contract with the decedents' firm would be insufficient to satisfy the "arising from" requirement of the jurisdictional statute. Sonatrach argued that a tort suit cannot arise from a contractual contact with the forum. The court responded with the following observation:

> Logically, there is no reason why a tort cannot grow out of a contractual contact. In a case like this, a contractual contact is a "but for" causative factor for the tort since it brought the parties within tortious "striking distance" of one another. While the relationship between a tort suit and a contractual contact is certainly more tenuous than when a tort suit arises from a tort contact, that only goes to whether the contact is by itself sufficient for due process, not whether the suit arises from the contact.

652 F.2d at 1270, n. 21.

[7] Our circuit, in Cubbage v. Merchent, implicitly adopted the "but for" test in analyzing whether a cause of action arises from a defendant's continuing efforts to solicit business in the forum state. Today, we make its adoption explicit. [FN7] We agree with the Fifth and Sixth Circuits that the proximate cause approach of Marino and Pearrow unnecessarily limits the ordinary meaning of the "arising out of" language. Moreover, application of a "but for" standard is more consistent with cases finding jurisdiction over manufacturers of defective goods sent into a forum state. See, e.g., Hedrick v. Daiko Shoji Co., 715 F.2d 1355, 1358 (9th Cir.1983) (Oregon longshoreman's negligence claim against Japanese manufacturer of defective wire-rope splice held to arise from delivery of the splices into commerce). In contrast, application of the Marino standard would compel the conclusion that such claims arise from negligence in manufacture and design, rather than from forum-related activity.

> FN7. We note that where a defendant has only one contact with the forum state, a close nexus between its forum-related > activities and the cause of the plaintiffs' harm may be required. See Lake v. Lake, 817 F.2d 1416, 1421 (9th Cir.1987). The case before us in which defendant had engaged in significant and continuing efforts to solicit business in the forum state is more like Cubbage. See Cubbage, 744 F.2d at 665.

The "but for" test is consistent with the basic function of the "arising out of" requirement--it preserves the essential distinction between general and specific jurisdiction. Under this test, a defendant cannot be haled into court for activities unrelated to the cause of action in the absence of a showing of substantial and continuous contacts sufficient to establish general jurisdiction. See e.g., Scott v. Breeland, 792 F.2d 925, 928 (9th Cir.1986) (an assault on a flight attendant occurring in a plane on the ground in Reno does not arise out of a defendant's musical performances or sales of records or tapes in California); Thos. P. Gonzalez Corp. v. Consejo Nacional de Produccion, 614 F.2d 1247, 1254 (9th Cir.1980) (visits to California by a defendant's representatives to execute formal documents in prior transactions do not support the exercise of jurisdiction over a cause of action relating to subsequent, unrelated transactions). The "but for" test preserves the requirement that there be some nexus between the cause of action and the defendant's activities in the forum.

A restrictive reading of the "arising out of" requirement is not necessary in order to protect potential defendants from unreasonable assertions of jurisdiction. The third prong of the Data Disc test provides that protection. If the connection between the defendant's forum related activities is "too attenuated," the exercise of jurisdiction would be unreasonable, and therefore in violation of due process.

Finally, we note that adoption of the more restrictive view of the "arising out of" requirement would preclude the exercise of jurisdiction in some cases where the plaintiff has established purposeful availment through continuing efforts to solicit business, some nexus between the cause of action and the defendant's forum-related 386 activities, and the reasonableness of requiring the defendant to defend in the forum. Such an approach would represent an unwarranted departure from the core concepts of "fair play and substantial justice" which are central to due process analysis in the context of the exercise of personal jurisdiction.

Applying the Cubbage standard, we conclude that the Shutes' cause of action arose out of Carnival's contacts with Washington. The evidence is clear that Carnival's solicitation of business in Washington attracted the Shutes (through their travel agent) to the Carnival cruise. In the absence of Carnival's activity, the Shutes would not have taken the cruise, and Mrs. Shute's injury would not have occurred. It was Carnival's forum-related activities that put the parties within "tortious striking distance" of one another.

3. Reasonableness

[8] After the first two prongs of the Data Disc test have been met, the court still must determine whether the exercise of jurisdiction over Carnival would be reasonable. In determining reasonableness, this circuit examines seven factors: the extent of purposeful interjection, the burden on the defendant to defend the suit in the chosen forum, the extent of conflict with the sovereignty of the defendant's state, the forum state's interest in the dispute; the most efficient forum for judicial resolution of the dispute; the importance of the chosen forum to the plaintiff's interest in convenient and effective relief; and the existence of an alternative forum. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. British-American Ins. Co., Ltd., 828 F.2d 1439, 1442 (9th Cir.1987) The court must balance the seven factors to determine whether the exercise of jurisdiction would be reasonable. Id.

[9] Once purposeful availment has been established, the forum's exercise of jurisdiction is presumptively reasonable. To rebut that presumption, a defendant "must present a compelling case" that the exercise of jurisdiction would, in fact, be unreasonable. Burger King, 471 U.S. at 476; Corporate Inv. Business Brokers v. Melcher, 824 F.2d 786, 790 (9th Cir.1987).

Carnival does not attempt to rebut the reasonableness of the exercise of jurisdiction through an analysis of the seven factors. Rather, Carnival's main argument is that litigation in Washington was not reasonably forseeable because the passenger contract required suit to be brought in Florida, and because the contract for the cruise and the cruise itself were "consummated" outside of Washington. The latter argument is the same one raised and rejected in analyzing the purposeful availment requirement. The former ignores the fact that Carnival, by its business solicitation activities, has injected itself into the forum. Carnival has provided no authority for the view that a forum selection clause can be used to defeat jurisdiction of another state where exercise of that jurisdiction would otherwise be reasonable. An analysis of the seven factors used by this circuit suggests that jurisdiction over Carnival is reasonable in this case.

Extent of Purposeful Interjection

This factor is closely tied to the issue of purposeful availment analyzed above. Recent cases indicate that this factor is no longer given any weight once it is shown that the defendant purposefully directed its activities toward the forum state. Melcher, 824 F.2d at 790.

Burden on the Defendant

Although the defendant would prefer to litigate in Florida, in light of modern advances in transportation and communications, the burden of defending this suit in Washington would not be overwhelming. McGee v. International Life Ins. Co., 355 U.S. 220, 223, 78 S.Ct. 199, 201, 2 L.Ed.2d 223 (1957); Hirsch v. Blue Cross, Blue Shield, 800 F.2d 1474, 1481 (9th Cir.1986). Moreover, this court must "examine the burden on the defendant in light of the corresponding burden on the plaintiff." Sinatra, 854 F.2d at 1199; Brand v. Menlove Dodge, 796 F.2d 1070 at 1075 (9th Cir.1986). It would be at least as burdensome for the Shutes to pursue this action in Florida as it would for Carnival to defend it in Washington.

387 This circuit recognizes that once minimum contacts have been established, inconvenience to the defendant is more appropriately handled not as a challenge to jurisdiction, but as a factor supporting a change in venue. Sinatra, 854 F.2d at 1199; Hirsch, 800 F.2d at 1481. Any inconvenience suffered by Carnival surely would not be so great as to constitute a deprivation of due process. See, e.g., Sinatra, 854 F.2d at 1199 (inconvenience to Swiss Clinic with one representative in the U.S. of defending lawsuit in California not so great as to constitute due process violation). Thus, this factor does not strongly favor dismissal.

Conflict With Sovereignty of Defendant's State

This factor is not dispositive here. The Supreme Court has noted that litigation against an alien defendant creates a higher jurisdictional barrier due to additional sovereignty concerns. Asahi, 480 U.S. at 115. However, despite the fact that Carnival is a Panamanian corporation, its principal place of business is in Florida. It asserts that Florida is the proper forum for this dispute. Therefore it is the possible conflict with Florida's sovereignty which is of concern here. In this type of situation, this circuit has stated that choice-of-law rules, rather than jurisdictional rules, are more appropriate to accommodate conflicting sovereignty interests. Hirsch, 800 F.2d at 1482.

Forum State's Interest in Adjudicating the Dispute

A state is deemed to have a strong interest in protecting its citizens against the tortious acts of others. Cubbage, 744 F.2d at 671. This interest continues even where the injury occurs outside the forum state's territorial limits. Id. (California has a manifest interest in protecting its citizens from tortious injury from health care providers who solicit patients from the state).

Efficient Judicial Resolution

This factor appears to favor the exercise of jurisdiction. Although the injury occurred in international waters off the coast of Mexico, the Shutes, their health care provider, and at least one of the witnesses to the accident all reside in Washington. At least one other witness resides in California, and it is unclear where other possible witnesses reside. As between Washington and Florida, the two states which are capable of exercising jurisdiction, Washington is the more efficient forum.

Convenience and Effectiveness of Relief for Plaintiff

The record indicates that the physical and financial burdens placed upon the Shutes by being forced to pursue this suit in Florida would be substantial.

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Dismissal of this suit from Washington effectively may prevent the Shutes from obtaining relief. This factor weighs heavily in favor of the exercise of jurisdiction. Hirsch, 800 F.2d at 1481.

Existence of an Alternative Forum

Carnival suggests that Florida is an available alternative forum, and the Shutes do not dispute this. However, in light of the practical difficulties noted in the discussions of efficient forum and convenience to plaintiffs, this factor cannot be said to weigh heavily in favor of dismissal.

We conclude that, on balance, these factors favor the exercise of jurisdiction. Certainly, Carnival has not presented a compelling case that the exercise of jurisdiction would be unreasonable. We therefore find that the Shutes have established personal jurisdiction over Carnival in Washington.

III. The Effect of the Forum Selection Clause

[10] Carnival contends that even if it is subject to personal jurisdiction in Washington, the district court was required under 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) to dismiss this action, or to transfer this action to a court located in Florida pursuant to the forum selection provision of the passenger ticket contract. [FN8] 388 The Shutes argue that the forum selection provision is unreasonable, and should not be enforced in this case. Because of the parties' disparity in bargaining power and the impact of enforcing the forum selection provision on the Shutes' ability to pursue their case on the merits, we find that application of the forum selection provision would be unreasonable in this case.

> FN8. Although the district court did not reach this issue, both parties request that, in the interest of judicial economy, this court determine the applicability of the forum selection provision on appeal, rather than remanding to the district court. Because some of the factual issues are similar to those raised in the jurisdiction context, and because the record is sufficiently well-developed, we can decide the forum selection issue efficiently.

[11] Federal law governs the validity of the forum selection clause. Manetti-Farrow, Inc. v. Gucci Am., Inc., 858 F.2d 509, 513 (9th Cir.1988). Thus, the starting point for analysis is the Supreme Court's decision in The Bremen v. Zapata Off-Shore Co., 407 U.S. 1, 92 S.Ct. 1907, 32 L.Ed.2d 513 (1972). [FN9] The Bremen dealt with a contract between an American corporation, Zapata, and a German corporation, Unterweser, for Unterweser to tow a Zapata oil rig from Louisiana to a point in the Adriatic Sea off Ravenna, Italy. The contract provided that any dispute arising from the contract be brought before the London Court of Justice. The rig was damaged while in the Gulf of Mexico, and Zapata brought suit in a federal district court in Florida. The Fifth Circuit affirmed the district court's denial of Unterweser's motion to dismiss, but the Supreme Court reversed.

> FN9. In Stewart Org., Inc. v. Ricoh Corp., 487 U.S. 22, 108 S.Ct. 2239, 101 L.Ed.2d 22 (1988) the Court held that the enforceability of a forum selection clause is only one of the factors to consider in making a 28 U.S.C. § 1404 transfer decision. '[T]he immediate issue before the district court was whether to grant respondent's motion to transfer the action under § 1404(a).' 108 S.Ct. at 2243. Carnival made no such motion in this case.
> Rather, Carnival argued solely on the basis of its forum selection clause that venue was improper, and that the case should therefore be dismissed or transferred pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a) . As this circuit noted in Manetti-Farrow, Stewart is inapplicable to such motions, and the analysis of The Bremen is controlling. 858 F.2d at 512-12 n. 2.

The Court held that forum selection clauses are prima facie valid. 407 U.S. at 10, 92 S.Ct. at 1913, see also Manetti-Farrow, 858 F.2d at 514. Such a clause should not be set aside unless the party challenging it can "clearly show that enforcement would be unreasonable and unjust, or that the clause was invalid for such reasons as fraud or overreaching." The Bremen, 407 U.S. at 15, 92 S.Ct. at 1916; see also Pelleport Investors, Inc. v. Budco Quality Theatres, Inc., 741 F.2d 273, 280

(9th Cir.1984) (absent some evidence submitted by the party opposing enforcement of the clause indicating fraud, undue influence, overweening bargaining power, or such serious inconvenience in litigating in the selected forum so as to deprive that party of a meaningful day in court, the provision should be respected as the expressed intent of the parties). However, The Bremen involved a large, complex commercial contract between two sophisticated parties. There was no evidence in The Bremen that the parties were in an unequal bargaining position. 407 U.S. at 12-13, & n. 14, 92 S.Ct. at 1914, & n. 14 ("this was not simply a form contract with boilerplate language that Zapata had no power to alter").

Although some courts have upheld analogous provisions contained in passenger ticket contracts, [FN10] in our view the evidence in this case suggests the sort of disparity in bargaining power that justifies setting aside the forum selection provision. First, there is no evidence that the provision was freely bargained for. To the contrary, the provision is printed on the ticket, and presented to the purchaser on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. See Colonial Leasing Co. v. Pugh Bros. Garage, 735 F.2d 380, 382 (9th Cir.1984) (applying Oregon law, the court found that a take-it-or-leave-it clause in a form contract is the type of unfair or unreasonable clause that should be invalidated); Yoder v. Heinold Commodities, Inc., 630 F.Supp. 756, 759 (E.D.Va.1986) (inequality 389 of bargaining power and use of form contracts are important factors in determining whether to enforce a forum selection clause); Galli v. Travelhost, Inc., 603 F.Supp. 1260, 1263 (D.Nev.1985) (court refused to enforce forum selection clause where evidence indicated that the clause was not freely bargained for). Even if we assume that the Shutes had notice of the provision, [FN11] there is nothing in the record to suggest that the Shutes could have bargained over this language. Because this provision was not freely bargained for, we hold that it does not represent the expressed intent of the parties, and should not receive the deference generally accorded to such provisions. [FN12]

FN10. For example, in Carpenter v. Klosters Rederi A/S, 604 F.2d 11 (5th Cir.1979), the Fifth Circuit upheld a contractual time limitation for initiating suit that was included in a passenger contract ticket. The court focused entirely upon whether the passenger received adequate notice. The court did not address whether application of the time limitation was reasonable.

FN11. This itself is doubtful, as the Shutes apparently did not have an opportunity to review the terms and conditions printed on the ticket until after the ticket was printed in Florida and mailed to them in Washington. Thus, the transaction was completed before the Shutes ever saw the ticket's terms and conditions.

FN12. Plaintiff also suggested that enforcement of the forum selection clause was barred by 46 U.S.C.App. § 183c, which provides that it is unlawful for vessel owners "to insert in any ... contract, or agreement any provision or limitation ... purporting ... to lessen, weaken, or avoid the right of any claimant to a trial by a court of competent jurisdiction on the question of liability for such loss or injury, or the measure of damages therefor. All such agreements ... shall be null and void and of no effect." Because we find that the agreement is not enforceable as a matter of public policy, we express no opinion as to the effect of this statute on forum selection agreements. We do note, however, that this statute exemplifies congressional recognition of the unequal bargaining position of passengers and vessel owners, and the need for independent examination of the fairness of this type of contract.

The fact that enforcement of the clause in this case would "be so gravely difficult and inconvenient" that the plaintiffs would "for all practical purposes be deprived of [their] day in court," The Bremen, 407 U.S. at 18, 92 S.Ct. at 1917, provides an independent justification for refusal to enforce the forum selection clause. See Yoder, 630 F.Supp. at 759; Carefree Vacations, Inc. v. Brunner, 615

F.Supp. 211, 214 (W.D.Tenn.1985) (inconvenience and lack of relationship between chosen forum and transaction in dispute sufficient to establish that forum selection clause is unreasonable). As we noted in analyzing the reasonableness of subjecting Carnival to suit in Washington, enforcement of the forum selection clause would be greatly inconvenient to the plaintiffs and witnesses. There is evidence in the record to indicate that the Shutes are physically and financially incapable of pursuing this litigation in Florida. We therefore decline to hold that the forum selection clause requires that this action be dismissed or transferred pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1406(a).

IV. Conclusion

We find the exercise of jurisdiction in Washington to be consistent with principles of due process. We also find the forum selection clause requiring suit to be brought in Florida to be unenforceable in these circumstances. This case is therefore REVERSED and REMANDED.

EXHIBIT 9

United States Court of Appeals,
Ninth Circuit.

THOS. P. GONZALEZ CORPORATION, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
CONSEJO NACIONAL DE PRODUCCION DE COSTA RICA, and Sergio Quiros Maroto, Defendants-Appellees.

March 10, 1980.

Suit for breach of a grain purchase contract was brought by the seller, an international grain trader, against the buyer, an autonomous institution of the Republic of Costa Rica. Plaintiff appealed from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Central District of California, Malcolm M. Lucas, J., dismissing the action and setting aside a default judgment entered against the Costa Rican entity and its executive president. The Court of Appeals, East, Senior District Judge, held, inter alia, that the fact that defendant regularly entered into sale and purchase agreements with plaintiff, a California resident, for purchases of grain, made payment in California by confirmed letters of credit, and frequently contacted plaintiff did not subject defendant to long-arm jurisdiction in California with respect to a dispute arising out of one of the agreements; the economic reality was that defendant had not performed any act relating to the contract at issue by which it purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting business in California.

Affirmed.

Appeal from the United States District Court For the Central District of California.

Before TRASK and SNEED, Circuit Judges, and EAST,[FN*] District Judge.

FN* Honorable William G. East, Senior United States District Judge for the District of Oregon, sitting by designation.

EAST, District Judge:

Thos. P. Gonzalez Corp. (Gonzalez), a California corporation, appeals the District Court's judgment entered September 26, 1977, dismissing the action and setting aside the default judgment entered against the Consejo Nacional de Produccion de Costa Rica (the Consejo) and Sergio Quiros Maroto (Quiros), executive president of the Consejo, on February 26, 1976. We note jurisdiction and affirm.

ISSUES ON APPEAL

Gonzalez presents the following issues on appeal:

1. Did the Consejo and Quiros have sufficient contacts with California to justify a District Court in California exercising personal jurisdiction over them?

2. Did service of the summons and complaint to the Costa Rican Consul General in Los Angeles with the request that he forward them to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Costa Rica constitute effective service of process?

3. Did the Court abuse its discretion in granting relief from default for mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect?

FACTS

Gonzalez is an international grain trader with its principal place of business in California.

The Consejo is an autonomous institution of the Republic of Costa Rica charged with, inter alia, regulating the Costa Rican food supply by purchasing grain when needed from foreign sources and by selling surplus grain. Article 1 of the Consejo's organic law provides that the Consejo shall have its own legal capacity and shall be vested with functional and administrative autonomy as provided for in Article 188 of Costa Rica's Political Constitution. Its funds are appropriated by the Costa Rican government and any net profit from its operations belongs to the government.

During the period from May 1971 to December 1974, the Consejo transacted 15 purchases of grain from Gonzalez and two sales to Gonzalez. Each transaction originated in a bid by a representative of Gonzalez in Costa Rica in response to an invitation to bid circulated by the Consejo in Costa Rica. Each was entered into by an agent of Gonzalez residing in Costa Rica, although, on one occasion not involving the contract at issue in this case, three representatives of the Consejo visited Los Angeles to sign the formal contracts for two transactions. There was frequent communication by mail and telex between the Consejo and Gonzalez's Los Angeles office concerning the contracts. All the contracts specified delivery in Costa Rica. In none of the transactions, including the one in dispute, was California either the source or destination of the grain. The Consejo made payment by having its bank in Costa Rica issue letters of credit which Crocker National Bank in California confirmed, although the contracts specified only that payment be by letter of credit in United States or Costa Rican currency.

During this period, the Consejo had neither an office, a place of business, property nor an agent in California. It did not advertise in California nor actively solicit business there. It has never attempted to qualify for the transaction of business within California.

The contract involved in this case was entered into in Costa Rica by an exchange of letters between the Consejo and Gonzalez's representative in Costa Rica. Gonzalez agreed to sell the Consejo 10,000 metric tons of yellow corn, C.I.F. Costa Rica, with 1250 delivery in June and July, 1975. The Consejo cancelled the contract before delivery was made, first citing delays in shipments by Gonzalez as the reason and later referring to Gonzalez's noncompliance with its obligation to post a completion guarantee. Gonzalez filed its complaint for breach of contract on September 25, 1975. Jurisdiction in the District Court was based on diversity of citizenship under 28 U.S.C. s 1332(a)(2) .

On October 16, 1975, a U.S. Marshall, on instructions of counsel for Gonzalez and without court order, served process on the Consul General of Costa Rica in Los Angeles requesting that he "notify the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in San Jose, Costa Rica through normal diplomatic channels." The Consejo did receive notice of the suit on November 6, 1975. A copy of the summons and complaint was also delivered personally to Lic. Nelson Alvarado Forseca (Alvarado), legal advisor to the Consejo, who was in California to discuss performance under a different contract. Alvarado arranged for local counsel to represent the Consejo in the matter.

On November 20, 1975, counsel for Gonzalez wrote to the Costa Rican Consul General indicating that a default would be taken unless an answer was filed within two days. The same message was sent to Alvarado in Costa Rica. No response was made, and on January 15, 1976, a default entry was made. On February 26, judgment by default was entered.

On March 27, 1976, the Consejo received a letter from its California attorney stating that he had not been able to cash the fee check sent to him, that he would not continue with the case until he received a bearer's check or money order, and that unless immediate action was taken, judgment would be entered against the Consejo. The Consejo then consulted another attorney in the United States who discovered that a default judgment had already been entered. The Consejo then retained its present counsel who filed a motion to set aside the judgment and dismiss the action for lack of personal jurisdiction on January 11, 1977, and a motion for relief from default judgment for mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect on January 12, 1977. The jurisdictional motion was set for argument a month earlier than the other motion, because the latter would be moot if the former were granted. If the Court denied the jurisdictional motion, however, counsel wanted an opportunity to have the default set aside and to argue the case on the merits. By order of the Court, the hearings on the two motions were moved to the same day, and on March 10, the Court's order simultaneously granting both motions was entered.

DISCUSSION

1. Personal Jurisdiction.[FN1]

FN1. Gonzalez has not even attempted to show how Quiros has subjected himself, in his individual capacity, to the jurisdiction of the District Court in California. The record is devoid of any facts establishing contact between Quiros and the State. Our discussion will refer only to the Consejo, but our holdings are intended to apply to Quiros as well.

[1] A party's amenability to suit in a federal court based on diversity is determined by reference to the law of the state in which the federal court sits. Republic International Corp. v. Amco Engineers, Inc., 516 F.2d 161 (9th Cir. 1975). California's long-arm statute provides: "A court of this state may exercise jurisdiction on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States." California Code of Civil Procedure s 410.10 . In Threlkeld v. Tucker, 496 F.2d 1101, 1103 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1023, 95 S.Ct. 499, 42 L.Ed.2d 297 (1974), this Court described the reach of this statute:

"The jurisdiction of the California courts is therefore coextensive with the outer limits of due process under the state and federal constitutions, as those limits have been defined by the United States Supreme Court." (Footnote omitted.)

[2] The seminal case for the current law on personal jurisdiction is International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 158, 90 L.Ed. 95 (1945), in which the Supreme Court held that:

1251 "(D)ue process requires only that in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam, if he be not present within the territory of the forum, he have certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.' "

This restriction on the states is not merely a protection against inconvenient litigation; it is "a consequence of territorial limitations on the power of the respective States." Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 251, 78 S.Ct. 1228, 1238, 2 L.Ed.2d 1283 (1958).

"However minimal the burden of defending in a foreign tribunal, a defendant may not be called upon to do so unless he has had the 'minimal contacts' with that State that are a prerequisite to its exercise of power over him." Id.

Hanson also made clear that only the defendant's purposeful activities in the forum state, and not the plaintiff's actions, can justify the exercise of jurisdiction.

"The unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum State. The application of that rule will vary with the quality and nature of the defendant's activity, but it is essential in each case that there be some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws." Id. at 253, 78 S.Ct. at 1239-1240.

The International Shoe standard was recently reaffirmed in World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, --- U.S. ----, 100 S.Ct. 559, 62 L.Ed.2d 490 (1980).

[3] Whether a party's contacts are sufficient to permit the state to compel it to defend itself in the state's courts depends upon the facts of each case. This Court discussed the mode of analysis in Data Disc, Inc. v. Systems Tech. Assoc., Inc., 557 F.2d 1280, 1287 (9th Cir. 1977):

"If the nonresident defendant's activities within a state are 'substantial' or 'continuous and systematic,' there is a sufficient relationship between the defendant and the state to support jurisdiction even if the cause of action is unrelated to the defendant's forum activities. (Citations omitted.)

"If, however, the defendant's activities are not so pervasive as to subject him to general jurisdiction, the issue whether jurisdiction will lie turns on an evaluation of the nature and quality of the defendant's contacts in relation to the cause of action. In our circuit, we use the following approach in making this evaluation: (1) The nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. (2) The claim must be one which arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities. (3) Exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable. (Citations omitted.)"

In Data Disc, a California seller charged an out-of-state buyer with breach of contract. The place of negotiation and execution of the contract was in dispute. Nevertheless, the Court of Appeals reversed the District Court's dismissal for lack of personal jurisdiction. Although it found no "substantial" or "continuous and systematic" contacts with California, it did find actions by which the defendant "purposefully availed itself of the privilege of carrying out activities in that state" and which "were beneficial" to defendant. Id. at 1287-88. Specifically, defendant conducted at least some contract negotiations in California, sent one of its own engineers to work on the project at Data Disc's California office, and sent personnel to visit Data Disc on five occasions to discuss late and defective equipment supplied under the contract.

Similarly, in Republic International Corp., the Court of Appeals affirmed the District Court's finding of personal jurisdiction by California over defendant Ministry of Public Works, Republic of Uruguay. The significant contact in this case was the Ministry's 1252 dispatch of its own engineers to Amco's Los Angeles office for five to six months.

Gonzalez relies most heavily on American Continental Import Agency v. Superior Court, 216 Cal.App.2d 317, 30 Cal.Rptr. 654 (1963). In that case, a German import business negotiated with some United States suppliers in Germany, issued purchase orders in Germany, paid through German banks, and obtained delivery directly to its customers in Germany. It had no agents or office in the United States. The Court upheld jurisdiction, nonetheless, referring to the German corporation's activities as a systematic and continuous course of business in substantial amounts.

[4] Subsequent opinions of the California Supreme Court, however, distinguish American Continental and emphasize that the significant fact which led to its result was the four visits by a representative of the German corporation to California to expedite compliance with the sales contracts which gave rise to the litigation. Tiffany Records, Inc. v. M. B. Krupp Distributors, Inc., 276 Cal.App.2d 610, 81 Cal.Rptr. 320 (1969); Interdyne Co. v. SYS Computer Corp., 31 Cal.App.3d 508, 197 Cal.Rptr. 499 (1973). Moreover, it is clear from the later cases that it is not the quantity, but rather the "nature and quality" of the defendant's activities which determine whether extension of jurisdiction offends due process. Belmont Industries, Inc. v. Superior Court of Stanislaus County, 31 Cal.App.3d 281, 107 Cal.Rptr. 237, 241-42 n.4 (1973); Tiffany Records, 81 Cal.Rptr. at 324.

Likewise, the recent cases distinguish the oft-cited case of Henry P. Jahn & Son, Inc. v. Superior Court, 49 Cal.2d 855, 323 P.2d 437 (1958), because in that case the defendant made regular purchases of goods manufactured in California from plaintiff, its exclusive export agent, with title passing in California.

In Belmont Industries, a Pennsylvania purchaser of drafting services from a California corporation was held not subject to jurisdiction in California. The contract was negotiated by interstate communications; the purchase order was executed in Pennsylvania; performance by the seller was not required to be in California, though it was "undoubtedly contemplated"; and on four or five occasions, the purchaser sent an employee to the seller's office in California to discuss jobs in progress, but not the one which gave rise to the litigation. The court stated:

"Irrespective of the number of contracts, the substance of petitioner's activities within this state has been the same the purchase of services from residents by contracts executed outside of the state. The occasional act of sending an employee into the state to expedite the services adds nothing to the relationship between petitioner and the state. (Cf. American Continental Import Agency v. Superior Court, supra, 216 Cal.App.2d at p. 322, 30 Cal.Rptr. 654.) We note that petitioner sent no representatives into California in connection with the contract giving rise to the present litigation." 107 Cal.Rptr. at 242 n.4.

In Tiffany Records and Interdyne, California sellers solicited orders from foreign purchasers. The only contacts with California were letters and telephone calls. The court stated in Interdyne :

"When a California business seeks out purchasers in other states purchasers who are not 'present' in

Copr. © West 2004 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> California for general purposes deals with them only by out-of-state agents or by interstate mail and telephone, it is not entitled to force the customer to come to California to defend an action on the contract." 107 Cal.Rptr. at 501.

Floyd J. Harkness Co. v. Amezcua, 60 Cal.App.3d 687, 131 Cal.Rptr. 667 (1976), involved an agreement between a California corporation and a citizen and resident of Mexico. The agreement was negotiated and was to be performed in Arizona and Mexico, although there was frequent phone contact with the plaintiff in California. The agreement included advances of money by plaintiff and the execution of promissory notes payable in California by defendant. 1253 The court found the contacts too "tenuous" to support jurisdiction:

> "The acts of making notes executed elsewhere by a nonresident defendant payable to a California resident in California or the acts of making interstate telephone calls relative to the performance of a contract executed outside the state and performed outside the state does not invoke the benefits and protections of our laws." 131 Cal.Rptr. at 670.

This Court affirmed the Northern District of California District Court's dismissal for lack of personal jurisdiction in H. Ray Baker, Inc. v. Associated Banking Corp., 592 F.2d 550 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 100 S.Ct. 63, 62 L.Ed.2d 42 (1979). This was an action on a letter of credit issued by Associated Banking Corp., a Philippine corporation, to be advised and paid through a New York bank.[FN2] Despite the fact that the corporation maintained deposits with six California banks for the purpose of providing the same type of services at issue in the case, those banks had not confirmed the credit in that particular transaction. The court found neither substantial, systematic contacts with California which would justify general jurisdiction nor sufficient contacts relevant to the specific transaction.

> FN2. The court discussed the function and operation of a letter of credit in Baker, 592 F.2d at 552-53:
> "A letter of credit is an undertaking by the issuing bank, usually in the buyer's country, that it will pay a draft drawn on it by the seller upon presentation of specified documents, such as a bill of lading. This permits the seller to substitute the credit of a bank with an established international reputation for that of a foreign buyer whose credit worthiness may not be known in the seller's country. The bank's obligation under the letter of credit is independent of the underlying sales contract. If the presented documents comply with the terms of the letter of credit, the bank is obligated to pay regardless of whether the goods themselves conform to the contractual terms. The issuing bank instructs its correspondent in the seller's country to 'advise' the credit; that is, to notify the beneficiary of the existence and terms of the credit. The advising bank assumes no duty of payment unless it 'confirms' the credit at the issuing bank's request, thereby becoming independently liable to the beneficiary." (Footnote omitted.)

And in Sibley v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 16 Cal.3d 442, 546 P.2d 322, 128 Cal.Rptr. 34 (1976), the court held that it could not constitutionally assert jurisdiction over a non-resident individual solely because he executed a guarantee agreement regarding payment of money owing to a California corporation.

The facts in the present case which Gonzalez urges are sufficient grounds for jurisdiction are the Consejo's regular sale and purchase agreements with a California resident, payment in California by confirmed letters of credit from Crocker National Bank, frequent communications between the Consejo and Gonzalez concerning the transactions, execution of two contracts in California by representatives of the Consejo, and the visit by Alvarado to discuss performance under a prior contract.

[5] The Consejo correctly notes that only its activities in California, and not Gonzalez's, can supply the basis for jurisdiction. It is not sufficient that the plaintiff is a California resident, Hill v. Noble Drilling Corp., 61 Cal.App.3d 258, 132 Cal.Rptr. 154, 156 (1976), or that an act outside California imposes an economic burden on a California resident, Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport Board v. Superior Court, 63 Cal.App.3d 482, 133 Cal.Rptr. 720, 721 (1976). It denies that its transactions with Gonzalez constituted a systematic and continuous course of business within the forum and emphasizes that the transactions were the result of public bidding in Costa Rica. Furthermore, the number of transactions, which incidently is smaller than the number in Belmont Industries, and the amount of money involved do not reflect the quality or nature of the contacts and, therefore, should not be considered.

The Consejo points out that any contact resulting from the letters of credit was between its Costa Rican Bank and Crocker, not between the Consejo and Crocker. Moreover, no payment had yet been made 1254 under the contract in dispute, and the contract did not expressly require payment through a California bank.

[6] The Consejo validly argues that use of the mails, telephone, or other international communications simply do not qualify as purposeful activity invoking the benefits and protection of the state. E. g., Harkness, 131 Cal.Rptr. at 670.

The Consejo minimizes the significance of the visit to California by Consejo representatives to execute the formal documents on two prior transactions. The important event, in its view, was the prior award of the contract to Gonzalez's Costa Rican representative. We find the crucial fact to be that this visit pertained only to transactions not at issue in this case. This circumstance was the feature that distinguished Belmont Industries from American Continental, Data Disc, and Republic International.

[7] Likewise, Alvarado's visit also concerned a different contract. And, as the Consejo notes, this visit occurred after the filing of the complaint in this action so it cannot establish jurisdiction.

In Foster v. Mooney Aircraft Corp., 68 Cal.App.3d 887, 137 Cal.Rptr. 694, 697 (1977), the court stated:

> "In analyzing the defendant's activities we must focus upon 'economic reality' rather than a mechanical checklist. (Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court, supra at (71 Cal.2d 893,) 903, 80 Cal.Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57.) An enterprise obtains the benefits and protection of our laws if as a matter of commercial actuality it has engaged in economic activity within this state. (Id., at p. 901, 80 Cal.Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57.)"

[8] We agree that Gonzalez has not established a systematic and continuous course of business by the Consejo in California which would justify general jurisdiction. Moreover, the economic reality is that the Consejo has not performed any act relating to the contract at issue by which it purposefully availed itself of the privilege of conducting business in California. Its actions within the state were unrelated to Gonzalez's present claim. Requiring the Consejo to submit to the jurisdiction of the court in this case would thus be unreasonable and violative of due process. See Data Disc, 557 F.2d at 1287.

Gonzalez argues alternatively that the minimum contacts standard as applied to foreign states has been redefined by the federal long-arm statute contained in the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976, Pub.L. No. 94-583, 90 Stat. 2891 (1976) (codified at 28 U.S.C. ss 1330, 1602-1611). Gonzalez claims that under this new definition, the Consejo's contacts with the forum are sufficient to justify the District Court's exercise of jurisdiction. Although the Act did not become effective until after Gonzalez filed its complaint, the Act has been held to be retroactive by the District Court for the Southern District of New York. Yessenin-Volpin v. Novosti Press Agency, 443 F.Supp. 849, 851 n.1 (S.D.N.Y.1978).

28 U.S.C. s 1330(b) grants the district courts personal jurisdiction over foreign states in situations in which those states are not entitled to sovereign immunity, as determined in ss 1605-1607, and when service has been made pursuant to s 1608.[FN3] The Consejo probably fits within the broad definition of "foreign state." [FN4] The relevant 1255 language in s 1605(a)(2), cited by Gonzalez as the basis for jurisdiction over the Consejo, denies sovereign immunity when the action is based "upon an act outside the territory of the United States in connection with a commercial activity of the foreign state elsewhere and that act causes a direct effect in the United States."

FN3. 28 U.S.C. s 1330 reads:
"(a) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction without regard to amount in controversy of any nonjury civil action against a foreign state as defined in section 1603(a) of this title as to any claim for relief in personam with respect to which the foreign state is not entitled to immunity either under sections 1605-1607 of this title or under any applicable international agreement.

"(b) Personal jurisdiction over a foreign state shall exist as to every claim for relief over which the district courts have jurisdiction under subsection (a) where service has been made under section 1608 of this title."

FN4. 28 U.S.C. s 1603 provides:
"(a) A 'foreign state', except as used in section 1608 of this title, includes a political subdivision of a foreign state or an agency or instrumentality of a foreign state as defined in subsection (b).
"(b) An 'agency or instrumentality of a foreign state' means any entity
"(1) which is a separate legal person, corporate or otherwise, and
"(2) which is an organ of a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, or a majority of whose shares or other ownership interest is owned by a foreign state or political subdivision thereof, and
"(3) which is neither a citizen of a State of the United States as defined in section 1332(c) and (d) of this title, nor created under the laws of any third country."

The words "direct effect" in the clause cited by Gonzalez have been interpreted as embodying the minimum contacts standard of International Shoe Co., 326 U.S. at 316, 66 S.Ct. at 158, and the requirement of Hanson, 357 U.S. at 253, 78 S.Ct. at 1239, that the defendant purposely avail itself of the privilege of conducting business within the forum. Carey v. National Oil Corp., 592 F.2d 673, 676 (2d Cir. 1979). See East Europe Domestic International Sales Corp. v. Terra, 467 F.Supp. 383, 388-90 (S.D.N.Y.1979). The legislative history of the Act confirms that the reach of s 1330(b) does not extend beyond the limits set by the International Shoe line of cases.[FN5]

FN5. H.Rep. No. 54-1487, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 13-14 (1976), reprinted in 1976 U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News at pp. 6604, 6612, describes s 1330(b) as follows:
"(b) Personal Jurisdiction. Section 1330(b) provides, in effect, a Federal long-arm statute over foreign states (including political subdivisions, agencies, and instrumentalities of foreign states). It is patterned after the long-arm statute Congress enacted for the District of Columbia. Public Law 91-358, sec. 132(a), title I, 84 Stat. 549. The requirements of minimum jurisdictional contacts and adequate notice are embodied in the provision. Cf. International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310 (, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed. 95) (1945), and McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220, 223 (, 78 S.Ct. 199, 201, 2 L.Ed.2d 223) (1957). For personal jurisdiction to exist under section 1330(b), the claim must first of all be one over which the district courts have original jurisdiction under section 1330(a), meaning a claim for which the foreign state is not entitled to immunity. Significantly, each of the immunity provisions in the bill, sections 1605-1607, requires some connection between the lawsuit and the United States, or an express or implied waiver by the foreign state of its immunity from jurisdiction. These immunity provisions, therefore, prescribe the necessary contacts which must exist before our courts can exercise personal jurisdiction. Besides incorporating these jurisdictional contacts by reference, section 1330(b) also satisfies the due process requirement of adequate notice by prescribing that proper service be made under section 1608 of the bill. Thus, sections 1330(b), 1608, and 1605-1607 are all carefully interconnected." (Footnotes omitted.)

[9] Personal jurisdiction under the Act requires satisfaction of the traditional minimum contacts standard. Because we have already determined that Consejo did not have the requisite minimum contacts, we need not decide and, therefore, decline to consider whether this action is governed by the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act.[FN6]

FN6. Gonzalez relies on National

American Corp. v. Federal Republic of Nigeria, 448 F.Supp. 622, 639 (S.D.N.Y.1978), aff'd, 597 F.2d 314 (2d Cir. 1979), which stated in dictum that the breach of a letter of credit having a beneficiary within the forum and advised by and payable through banks in the forum "would appear to satisfy" the above-cited language in s 1605(a)(2). Not only are we unconvinced that such a breach alone would fulfill the minimum contacts requirement, but we find the case distinguishable since there was no breach of a letter of credit by the Consejo. Indeed, there was not even a letter of credit in existence since the Consejo is alleged to have breached the contract by not issuing its letter of credit.

2. Service of Process.

Although we do not approve the method of service attempted here, our holding that the District Court did not have personal jurisdiction over the Consejo because the required minimum contacts were lacking makes it unnecessary for us to actually decide whether service was valid.

3. Relief from Default.

[10] It is well-established that a judgment entered without personal jurisdiction over the parties is void. 1256Veeck v. Commodity Enterprises, Inc., 487 F.2d 423, 426 (9th Cir. 1973); Marshall v. Board of Education, Bergerfield, N. J., 575 F.2d 417, 422 (3d Cir. 1978); Taft v. Donellan Jerome, Inc., 407 F.2d 807, 808 (7th Cir. 1969). The Consejo made a proper request, pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 60(b)(4),[FN7] to be relieved of the default judgment on the ground that it was void for lack of personal jurisdiction.

FN7. Rule 60(b) reads:
"On motion and upon such terms as are just, the court may relieve a party or his legal representative from a final judgment, order, or proceeding for the following reasons: . . . (4) the judgment is void; . . . ."

"Necessarily a motion under this part of the rule differs markedly from motions under the other clauses of Rule 60(b). There is no question of discretion on the part of the court when a motion is under Rule 60(b)(4). Nor is there any requirement, as there usually is when default judgments are attacked under Rule 60(b), that the moving party show that he has a meritorious defense. Either a judgment is void or it is valid. Determining which it is may well present a difficult question, but when that question is resolved, the court must act accordingly." (Footnotes omitted.) Wright & Miller, Federal Practice & Procedure: Civil s 2862, at 197.

We have been asked to review the District Court's exercise of discretion in granting relief from default for mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, under Rule 60(b)(1). The District Court did not need to and should not have reached that question. The motion filed by the Consejo on January 11, 1977 was adequate to warrant both dismissal of the action and complaint and relief from the default judgment. If the Court had ruled properly on that motion, the Rule 60(b)(1) argument would have been moot.

Nevertheless, as this Court said in Davis v. United States, 589 F.2d 446, 448 n.3 (9th Cir. 1979):

"Even if we disagree with the district judge's reasoning, we may nevertheless affirm his disposition 'on any ground squarely presented on the record.' Grosz v. Andrus, 556 F.2d 972, 974 n.3 (9th Cir. 1977); M.O.S. Corp. v. John I. Haas Co., 375 F.2d 614, 617 (9th Cir. 1967); see Jaffke v. Dunham, 352 U.S. 280, 281, 77 S.Ct. 307, 1 L.Ed.2d 314 (1957) (per curiam)."

[11] Not only "may" we affirm, we "must" in fact affirm. "In the review of judicial proceedings the rule is settled that, if the decision below is correct, it must be affirmed, although the lower court relied upon a wrong ground or gave a wrong reason." Helvering v. Gowran, 302 U.S. 238, 245, 58 S.Ct. 154, 158, 82 L.Ed. 224 (1937). This axiom is echoed in numerous cases of this Circuit. See, e. g., United States v. Crain, 589 F.2d 996, 1001-02 n.9 (9th Cir. 1979); United States v. Best, 573 F.2d 1095, 1100-01 (9th Cir. 1978); Moore v. Jas. H. Matthews & Co., 550 F.2d 1207, 1219 (9th Cir. 1977); James v. Reese, 546 F.2d 325, 327 (9th Cir. 1976).

[12] Because it is clear from the record that the District Court did not have personal jurisdiction over the Consejo and the judgment was, therefore, void, the District Court had a nondiscretionary duty to grant relief from the default judgment. We affirm that decision of the District Court and offer no opinion on whether the result would have been justified pursuant to Rule 60(b)(1)'s provision for relief for mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. The judgment and order setting aside the default judgment and dismissing the action and complaint are, therefore, affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

[1] Defendant Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ("Watch Tower Pennsylvania") earlier filed a motion to quash service of summons and complaint based on lack of personal jurisdiction in California. That motion is still pending in this Court. Therefore, Defendant Watch Tower Pennsylvania specially appears with respect to the instant demurrers.

the five causes of action alleged in Plaintiffs' amended complaint under California Code of Civil Procedure ("CCP") §§ 430.10(e) and 430.30(a), on the grounds that plaintiffs' pleading does not allege facts sufficient to constitute the causes of action alleged. Plaintiffs' causes of action as pled each fail to allege the requisite element of a special, confidential, or fiduciary relationship between each Plaintiff and each of the Church Defendants. (By filing these demurrers to Plaintiffs' amended complaint, the Church Defendants expressly do not waive any of the arguments and contentions raised in their original demurrers.)

These demurrers are based on this notice, the supporting memorandum of points and authorities, all papers and records on file in this action, and such other oral and documentary information and evidence as may be properly considered by the Court.

CERTIFICATE OF CONFERENCE

Defense counsel for the Church Defendants hereby certifies that he has conferred by letter with plaintiffs' attorney William Brelsford concerning these demurrers before filing these demurrers with the court.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF CHURCH DEFENDANTS' DEMURRERS AGAINST AMENDED COMPLAINT

DATE: February 19, 2004
TIME: 8:30 a.m.
DEPT: B
TRIAL DATE: Not yet set

Defendants, Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania,[1] Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Napa Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, and Oak Knoll Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses (collectively hereinafter "Church Defendants"), by and through their attorneys of record, submit this Memorandum of Points and Authorities in support of the Church Defendants' Demurrers to Charissa W. and Nicole D.'s (collectively hereinafter "Plaintiffs") Amended Complaint.

[1] Defendant Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania ("Watch Tower Pennsylvania") earlier filed a motion to quash service of summons and complaint based on lack of personal jurisdiction in California. That motion is still pending in this Court. Therefore, Defendant Watch Tower Pennsylvania specially appears with respect to the instant demurrers.

INTRODUCTION

After the Court ruled on the Church Defendants' original demurrers, which were largely based on First Amendment and related California constitutional law issues, Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint in which they reduced their stated causes of action from twelve to five. The amended complaint also limited the number of defendants in this matter to now include two local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in Napa, California, and three other Jehovah's Witnesses religious corporations based in New York. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 3-7; see also fn. 1, supra. Each of the now five causes of action alleged against the Church Defendants is based on the alleged underlying sexual abuse by Edward Villegas (hereinafter "Villegas") of Plaintiffs when they were minors. That alleged sexual abuse occurred from approximately 1972 to 1985. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 27-29. Plaintiffs have not pled any causes of action against Villegas himself, but instead claim that each of the Church Defendants is civilly liable for the sexual abuse allegedly perpetrated by Villegas.

Significantly, Plaintiffs do not allege that any sexual abuse committed by Villegas occurred on church property, at church-sponsored activities or functions, or at a church-operated daycare. Instead, the sexual abuse by Villegas allegedly occurred at a "daycare center run out of the Villegas home[.]" Amended Complaint, ¶24.

Additionally, as discussed infra, an essential element of each of the causes of action alleged in the amended complaint requires that Plaintiffs have been in a confidential, special, or fiduciary relationship with each of the Church Defendants. However, the amended complaint alleges such relationships only in conclusory terms. See, e.g., Amended Complaint, ¶2 ("child entrusted to the Watchtower Defendants' care"); ¶13 ("minor children entrusted to their care); ¶17 ("the Watchtower Defendants assume responsibility for the . . . protection . . . of its membership, especially the children of members"); ¶29 ("child under the care of the Watchtower Defendants' organization"); ¶35 ("the Watchtower Defendants assumed a duty to protect Plaintiffs from sexual predators"); ¶44 ("children in the custody and care of Watchtower Defendants"); ¶48 ("the Watchtower Defendants created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiffs"); ¶54 ("as fiduciaries to Plaintiffs").

However, Plaintiffs do not allege any facts in the amended complaint to support such conclusory statements. Plaintiffs also do not make any specific factual allegations about how each separate corporate defendant allegedly was in such a special, confidential, or fiduciary relationship with each of the Plaintiffs. Thus, as set forth more fully below, the Church Defendants' demurrers against the five remaining causes of action should be sustained because Plaintiffs have not alleged (and the Church Defendants believe that Plaintiffs, in good faith, cannot allege) any facts that would establish the requisite special, confidential or fiduciary relationships between Plaintiffs and each of the Church Defendants necessary to support such claims.

STANDARD OF REVIEW

For the purposes of a demurrer, "the rule is that we accept as true all the material allegations of the complaint." Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal.3d 1, 7. The Court thus treats the demurrer as admitting all material facts properly pleaded, but not contentions, deductions, or conclusions of fact or law. Demurrers do not test the truth of a plaintiff's allegations or the accuracy with which they describe a defendant's alleged conduct. E.g., Baltins v. James (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 1193, 1196-97.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Plaintiffs' amended complaint states causes of action for common law negligence and gross negligence. As with all negligence claims, an essential element of both causes of action is the establishment of a legal duty owed to Plaintiffs. Here, Plaintiffs allege that each of the Church Defendants had some general common law "duty to protect" their health, safety and welfare. However, the common law does not impose a "duty to protect" in the absence of a special relationship between two parties. Indeed, the California courts have adhered to the "no duty to aid rule" absent such a special relationship. In this case, Plaintiffs have not alleged any particular facts that would establish a "special relationship" between themselves and any of the Church Defendants. Thus, without such a special relationship, Plaintiffs' two causes of action for negligence should be dismissed.

Plaintiffs have also alleged a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty based on an alleged "fiduciary relationship" with the Church Defendants. However, California case law holds that fiduciary relationships are recognized legal relationships that are statutorily defined with considerable precision. The church/parishioner relationship is not one of those canonically defined fiduciary relationships. Additionally, Plaintiffs have not alleged any particular facts that, under California law, would establish a "confidential relationship" between themselves and any of the Church Defendants. Because the Plaintiffs have not and indeed, cannot as a matter of law, allege any facts that would establish a "fiduciary relationship" with the corporate entities that make up the Church Defendants, this cause of action also should be dismissed.

Plaintiffs' cause of action for fraud, fraudulent deceit, and conspiracy similarly depends on the essential element of a "special relationship" or "fiduciary relationship" to impose a "duty to warn" on the Church Defendants. The facts constituting every element of a fraud claim must be alleged with particularity. Here, however, because Plaintiffs have not, and again cannot, allege any particular facts that they had either a special or fiduciary relationship with the Church Defendants, this cause of action also should be dismissed. The same arguments apply to the cause of action entitled negligent appointment, retention, and supervision, i.e., absent allegations of specific facts that establish a legal duty owed to Plaintiffs (as children of Church members) by each of the Church Defendants, the cause of action should be dismissed.

ARGUMENT

1. Plaintiffs Have Not Alleged Facts That Establish A "Special Relationship" Between Themselves And Any of The Church Defendants Necessary To Support Their Negligence Claims.

A tort involves the violation of a legal duty, imposed by statute, contract or otherwise, owed by the defendant to the person injured. Romero v. Superior Court (2001) 89 Cal.App.4th 1068, 1078, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d 801. If a legal duty does not exist, any injury is "damnum absque injuria," an injury without a wrong. 5 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 1988) Torts, § 6, p. 61; Romero, supra. Because the existence of a duty is an essential element of a tort claim and thus a necessary precondition for liability, the first determination a court must make when examining a negligence claim is whether a legal duty exists. Hooks v. Southern Ca. Permanente

Medical Group (1980) 107 Cal.App.3d 435, 443, 165 Cal.Rptr. 741.

It is axiomatic that a person does not have a legal duty to come to the aid of another. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS (1965) § 314. This is true irrespective of the gravity of the danger to which the other is subjected and the insignificance of the trouble, effort or expense of giving aid or protection. Id., § 314 comment c. However, this general "no duty" rule is subject to an exception in certain situations where a "special relationship" exists between the parties. Id., § 314A.

California courts have long adhered to these "no duty to aid" principles. As the Court of Appeal recently noted, "'[a] person is ordinarily not liable for the actions of another and is under no duty to protect another from harm, in the absence of a special relationship of custody or control.' [Citations omitted.]" Romero, 89 Cal.App.4th at 1078-79 (emphasis in original); see also Garcia v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal.3d 728, 734, 268 Cal.Rptr. 779 ("A special relationship is a prerequisite for liability based on a defendant's failure to act.").

In California, this basic concept is known as the "no duty to aid rule" and is a "fundamental and longstanding rule of tort law." Eric J. v. Betty M. (1999) 76 Cal.App.4th 715, 727, 90 Cal.Rptr.2d 549; see id., 76 Cal.App.4th at 729-30; Romero, 89 Cal.App.4th at 1079. Furthermore, "[a]bsent a 'special relationship,' one cannot be held liable for mere nonfeasance, such as not protecting another from a criminal attack by a third party." Eric J., supra; see also Totten v. More Oakland Residential Housing, Inc. (1976) 63 Cal.App.3d 538, 541, 134 Cal.Rptr. 29 ("As a basic general principle, in the absence of a special relationship or circumstance, a private person has no duty to protect another from a criminal attack by a third person").

What are some examples of such special relationships? According to the Court of Appeal, "'the common law concept of special relationships covers: landowner or possessor and person coming on the land; manufacturer or supplier of goods and buyer or user; vendor, lessor, or contractor and purchaser, lessee or owner of real property.' [Citations omitted.]" Seo v. All-Makes Overhead Doors (2002) 97 Cal.App.4th 1193, 1203, 119 Cal.Rptr.2d 160. Additionally, affirmative duties may arise in relationships such as those of a "common carrier and passenger,"

"innkeeper and guest," possessor of land and invitee, and a "person who is required by law to take, or who voluntarily takes, custody of another under circumstances that deprive the other of his normal opportunities for protection." Id.; see also RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS (1965) § 314A(1)-(4).

Then, the question becomes whether a church has a "special relationship" with its parishioners by virtue of the priest/parishioner relationship. The Court of Appeal directly addressed this question last year in Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, 130 Cal.Rptr.2d 601. In Richelle L., the plaintiff sued a Catholic priest and the Archdiocese of San Francisco, seeking damages for injuries she allegedly sustained as a result of a sexual relationship initiated by the priest. Id., 106 Cal.App.4th at 264. The complaint in Richelle L. contained seven causes of action, including one for "general negligence" made against both the priest and the Archdiocese. Id. at 265.

In order to establish the duty element of her negligence claim, the plaintiff in Richelle L. argued that the priest and/or Archdiocese's nonfeasance, or failure to act to protect her, was actionable because of her "special relationship" with the priest. Id. at 268. As proof of this special relationship, the plaintiff pointed to the long established special relationships between physicians and their patients and between attorneys and their clients. Id.

However, the Court of Appeal firmly and expressly rejected the plaintiff's argument and held that a minister "cannot be liable to appellant for breach of a duty arising out of a special relationship" with a parishioner because this would be equivalent to a prohibited clerical malpractice claim. Id. at 270. In other words, the Court of Appeal held, as a matter of law, that no "special relationship" exists between ministers and their parishioners for the purposes of a negligence claim. This conclusion, of course, foreclosed the plaintiff's general negligence claim against the Archdiocese as well.

In this case, Plaintiffs have asserted a cause of action against the Church Defendants for common law negligence based on the conclusory allegation that they had a "duty to protect" the Plaintiffs. Amended Complaint, ¶ 35. Plaintiffs have also asserted a cause of action for gross negligence against the Church Defendants premised upon the Church Defendants' alleged "fail[ure] to act to protect the health, safety and welfare" of Plaintiffs. Amended Complaint, ¶ 44. As alleged, both of these causes of action are for the Church Defendants' (local churches and national organizations) alleged nonfeasance, or failure to act to protect the Plaintiffs.

As demonstrated above, there is a strong common law presumption under California law against these two causes of action for negligence. This presumption, known as the "no duty to aid rule," can only be overcome allegations of specific facts by showing that a "special relationship" existed between the two parties. See Eric J., 76 Cal.App.4th at 727. However, the Richelle L. court held that a "special relationship" does not exist in a priest/parishioner setting and thus did not allow a general negligence claim to proceed against a priest or his Archdiocese. Id., 106 Cal.App.4th at 270. If this Court were to find that a special relationship exists between churches and parishioners, purely on the basis of a priest/parishioner or church/parishioner relationship, it would be a cause of action not previously recognized in California.[2]

Because Plaintiffs have not pled, and cannot plead, as a matter of law, any specific "facts" that would create a "special relationship" with the Church Defendants, this Court should sustain the demurrers to Plaintiffs' first and third causes of action for negligence and gross negligence, as well as Plaintiffs' cause of action for negligent appointment, retention, and supervision.

2. Plaintiffs' Breach of Fiduciary Duty Claim Should Be Dismissed; Plaintiffs Have Not Alleged Particular Facts That Establish The Existence Of A Fiduciary Relationship With the Church Defendants.

The essential elements of a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty are the existence

[2] In response to all of these demurrers, Plaintiffs likely will contend that the Jehovah's Witnesses "hierarchical structure" created the special, confidential or fiduciary relationship necessary to support the causes of action alleged in the amended complaint. See Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 15, 17, 18. Plaintiffs thus will contend that they were vulnerable to being abused because of the way that the Jehovah's Witnesses organize their church and because of the power the Jehovah's Witnesses church held over them. Id. However, Richelle L., supra, expressly rejected such claims as constitutionally improper. Id., 106 Cal.App.4th at 280-82 (rejecting on constitutional grounds the plaintiff's claims that she was vulnerable to sex abuse because of her religious faith and trust in the clergy and because of the power the clergy held over her). Any inquiry by the courts into a church's organizational structure and how the church members practice their faith necessarily requires an inquiry that violates the First Amendment and its analog in the California constitution. Thus, Plaintiffs cannot rely on the Jehovah's Witnesses' alleged "hierarchical structure" and the alleged power the church held over them or their families to support the requisite element of a special, confidential, or fiduciary relationship on any of the causes of action alleged in the amended complaint.

of a fiduciary relationship, its breach, and damage proximately caused by that breach. If the allegations of a pleading do not support the existence of a fiduciary relationship, any cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty must be dismissed. Plaintiffs here have not alleged any specific facts to support the existence of a fiduciary relationship.

According to the Court of Appeal, "[t]here are two kinds of fiduciary duties -- those imposed by law and those undertaken by agreement." GAB Business Serv., Inc. v. Lindsey & Newsom Claim Serv., Inc. (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 409, 416, 99 Cal.Rptr.2d 665 (emphasis in original). Fiduciary relationships imposed by law include "certain technical, legal relationships such as those between partners or joint venturers, [citations omitted,] guardians and wards, trustees and beneficiaries, principals and agents, and attorneys and clients. [Citations omitted]." Id. Fiduciary relationships imposed by law have been termed "'legally recognized fiduciary relationship[s].' [Citations omitted.]" Id.

The second type of fiduciary duty, one "undertaken by agreement," occurs when "one person enters into a confidential relationship with another." Id. at 417. This type of confidential relationship arises "'where a confidence is reposed by one person in the integrity of another, and ... the party in whom the confidence is reposed, ... voluntarily accepts or assumes to accept the confidence [.]' [Citations omitted.]" Id.; Committee on Children's Television, Inc. v. General Foods Corp. et al. (1983) 35 Cal.3d 197, 221, 197 Cal.Rptr. 783 ("before a person can be charged with a fiduciary obligation, he must [] knowingly undertake to act on behalf and for the benefit of another ...."). Thus, the existence of a confidential relationship with fiduciary obligations requires the knowing and voluntary conduct of two persons, one to "repose" and the other to "accept" the confidence.

In Richelle L., the Court of Appeal went to great lengths to explain the nature of a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty brought against a priest and the Archdiocese. Id., 106 Cal.App.4th at 265. The Court of Appeal explained: "[T]echnically, a fiduciary relationship is a recognized legal relationship such as guardian and ward, trustee and beneficiary, principal and agent, or attorney and client ...." Id. at 271. The Richelle L. court also noted that "fiduciary relations arise out of certain canonical relationships that are legally defined and regulated." Id.

The law of trusts, "a great deal of which is statutory, defines the nature of the fiduciary duties arising out of that particular fiduciary relationship with considerable precision." Id. at 272.

The Court of Appeal then explained that, on the other hand, a confidential relationship "may be founded on a moral, social, domestic, or merely personal relationship as well as on a legal relationship." Id. at 271. A confidential relationship "refers to an unequal relationship between parties in which one surrenders to the other some degree of control because of the trust and confidence which he reposes in the other." Id. at 272 n.6. However, the Court of Appeal cautioned that "[a] confidential relationship cannot be imposed on an individual, but must be voluntarily accepted." Id. (emphasis added).

The Richelle L. court then noted that the California Supreme Court, without discussing constitutional considerations, had stated that a "'priest and a penitent' may have a confidential relationship giving rise to tort liability for the breach of a fiduciary duty." Id. at 275; see also Vai v. Bank of America (1961) 56 Cal.2d 329, 338, 15 Cal.Rptr. 71 (confidential relationship may exist between "priest and penitent"). Therefore, the Court of Appeal held that the priest in Richelle L. had formed a confidential (as opposed to fiduciary) relationship with his parishioner that gave rise to fiduciary obligations. Id. at 279. (The court never addressed the question of whether the Archdiocese, i.e., the church, had formed a fiduciary or confidential relationship with the plaintiff. Id. at 282.)

In the instant case, Plaintiffs' fourth cause of action in the amended complaint for breach of fiduciary duty is alleged against the Church Defendants, i.e., several in-state and out-of-state church corporations, but not against the individual, Mr. Villegas. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 47-50. As a basis for this cause of action, Plaintiffs allege that they had a "fiduciary relationship" with the Church Defendants because: (1) the Church Defendants allegedly held Villegas out as a "qualified Elder and leader" and/or because of (2) the Church Defendants' "undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling of Plaintiffs." Id., ¶ 48.

First, it is important to note that the Plaintiffs, as parishioners, do not have a "legally recognized fiduciary relationship" with any of the various non-profit church corporations that make up the Church Defendants. GAB Business Serv., 83 Cal.App.4th at 416. Fiduciary relationships are typically statutorily created and defined with "considerable precision." Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 272. As noted, several examples of the "technical, legal relationships" given by the courts include the guardian/ward, trustee/beneficiary, and principal/agent relationships. GAB Business Serv., 83 Cal.App.4th at 416. However, neither the California legislature nor the California courts have ever defined the church/parishioner relationship as one of those traditional fiduciary relationships.

Second, the definition of a confidential relationship giving rise to fiduciary obligations forecloses any potential argument that Plaintiffs were in a confidential relationship with the Church Defendants. For example, Plaintiffs would have to show that they "reposed" their confidence in each of the Church corporations and, more importantly, that each of these same Church corporations "voluntarily accepted" their confidence. Id. at 417; Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 271. While the existence of a confidential relationship is normally an issue of fact, how can a parishioner "repose" or "surrender[] ... some degree of control" to a church? Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 272 n.6. Additionally, how can it be determined that a church corporation, or any corporation for that matter, has "voluntarily accepted" a confidential relationship with its parishioners or members?

As explained in the cases discussed above, a confidential relationship is one that may be formed between two individuals, not between an individual and a corporation. Committee on Children's Television, Inc., 35 Cal.3d at 221; GAB Business Serv., Inc, 83 Cal.App.4th at 417; Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 272 n.6. Arguably, if Plaintiffs had asserted a confidential relationship with Villegas, as opposed to a "fiduciary relationship" with the Church corporations, this could have presented a question of fact with respect to claims against Villegas. However, no California statute or case law supports the proposition that a parishioner can form a confidential relationship with a church entity or, even more broadly, that an individual can form a confidential relationship with a corporation.

Finally, Plaintiffs' two alleged bases for a "fiduciary relationship" are wholly inadequate as a matter of law. First, Plaintiffs allege that the Church Defendants' actions of allegedly holding out Villegas as a minister support the creation of a "fiduciary relationship." Amended Complaint, ¶48. Even assuming, arguendo, that allegation is true, the allegation does not advance Plaintiffs' argument that the church/parishioner relationship is one of the "canonical" fiduciary relationships recognized by California law. Also, the amended complaint does not show or allege how any of the Church Defendants, as corporations, supposedly voluntarily accepted confidential relationships with any of its parishioners, including Plaintiffs.

Second, the allegation that the Church Defendants provided "religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling" does not support a fiduciary relationship. See Amended Complaint, ¶ 48. If this were the case, then every church, synagogue, and mosque would by law have fiduciary relationships with each and all of its members – an obviously untenable result. Also, the attempt to hold a religious organization or entity liable for "ecclesiastical teachings" and "spiritual counseling" is the classic fact pattern for prohibited and unconstitutional clergy malpractice claims. Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, 299, 253 Cal.Rptr. 97 (California law does not recognize clergy malpractice claims, hold that it is unconstitutional to impose a duty of care on a church for counseling).

Again, if this Court were to recognize the existence of a fiduciary relationship between a church and its parishioners on the basis of the priest/parishioner or church/parishioner relationship, it would be a novel cause of action in California. Because Plaintiffs have not alleged, and indeed, as a matter of law cannot allege, any facts that would support a fiduciary relationship between themselves and any of the Church Defendants, this Court should sustain the Church Defendants' demurrer against Plaintiffs' cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty.

3. Plaintiffs' Claim For Fraud, Fraudulent Concealment, And Conspiracy Similarly Should Be Dismissed For Failure To State A Claim.

Plaintiffs' amended cause of action for fraud, fraudulent concealment, and conspiracy should be dismissed, because it requires the establishment of a "special" or "fiduciary" relationship between themselves and the Church Defendants. Peterson Dev. Co., Inc. v. Torrey Pines Bank (1991) 233 Cal.App.3d 103, 116, 284 Cal.Rptr. 367.[3]

[3] The facts constituting every element of a cause of action for fraud must be alleged with particularity. Stansfield v. Starkey (1990) 220 Cal.App.3d 59, 72-76, 269 Cal.Rptr. 337 (affirming trial court ruling that sustained demurrer against fraud and conspiracy claims without leave to replead). As discussed infra, Plaintiffs have not done so here.

The common law does not impose a "duty to warn" on an individual or a corporation. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS (1965) § 314. The California Supreme Court has stated, "[a]s a general rule one has no duty to control the conduct of another, and no duty to warn those who may be endangered by such conduct." Peterson v. San Francisco Cmty. College Dist. (1984) 36 Cal.3d 799, 806, 205 Cal.Rptr. 842 (emphasis added). A "duty to warn" may only arise only when a "a special relation exists between the actor and the other which gives the other a right to protection." Id.; see also RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS (1965) § 315(b).[4] Furthermore, as shown above, no special relationship exists as a matter of law between priest and parishioner or, as is significant here, between a church entity and parishioner. Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 270.

Furthermore, and as discussed above, fiduciary relationships are defined as those that "arise out of certain canonical relationships that are legally defined and regulated." Id. at 271. Such relationships include "certain technical, legal relationships such as those between partners or joint venturers, [citations] guardians and wards, trustees and beneficiaries, principals and agents, and attorneys and clients [citations]." GAB Business Serv., Inc., 83 Cal.App.4th at 416. Confidential relationships arise by agreement and only arise when one party "voluntarily accepts or assumes to accept the confidence" of the other. Id. at 417.

Plaintiffs' fifth cause of action alleges that the Church Defendants "willfully and intentionally kept material information from Plaintiffs" and "failed to disclose" information about Villegas to themselves, the congregation, and the "community-at-large." Amended Complaint, ¶ 52. In other words, Plaintiffs allege that each of the Church Defendants had a common law "duty to warn" everyone, including themselves, about Villegas. However, under California law, an essential element to this cause of action is the existence of a "special" or "fiduciary" relationship between Plaintiffs and each of the Church Defendants.

[4] Whether or not there is a "duty to control" the conduct of a third person is a separate question. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS (1965) § 315(a). The Plaintiffs have alleged that the Church Defendants had a "duty to control" Villegas in their constitutionally dubious second cause of action for negligent appointment, retention, and supervision. Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 39, 41 (allegation that Church Defendants failed to "adequately investigate, evaluate, monitor and supervise the conduct of their agent, Edward Villegas").

As demonstrated above, absent a special or fiduciary relationship, the common law does not impose a "duty to warn" on an individual or corporation. Peterson, 36 Cal.3d at 806. Plaintiffs have not alleged and cannot allege any particular facts that would support the existence of a special relationship with any of the Church Defendants. Richelle L., 106 Cal.App.4th at 270. Furthermore, Plaintiffs have not alleged and cannot allege any particular facts that would support the existence of a fiduciary relationship between themselves and the church corporations as a matter of law. GAB Business Serv., 83 Cal.App.4th at 416.

Because Plaintiffs' cause of action for fraud, fraudulent concealment, and conspiracy depends on their having a "special relationship" or a "fiduciary relationship" with the religious corporations that constitute the Church Defendants, this Court should sustain the Church Defendants' demurrer on the Plaintiffs' fifth cause of action.

4. Plaintiffs' Allegations of Respondeat Superior Liability For Sexual Abuse Should be Stricken From The Amended Complaint.

Plaintiffs allege in various paragraphs of the amended complaint that Villegas sexually abused Plaintiffs by using his position as an Elder in the church. E.g., Amended Complaint, ¶¶ 22, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 41, 52. For example, Plaintiffs allege that "Villegas used his appointed position as an Elder and leader in the Watchtower Defendants' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff[.]" Id., ¶29.

However, claims like those detailed above cannot, as a matter of law, be alleged against church entities. California law is well settled that childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by clergy is not actionable against the church on a respondeat superior basis, "because the abuse is committed outside the scope of the cleric's employment[.]" Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609, 79 Cal.Rptr.2d 73.

Thus, Plaintiffs cannot rely on such allegations to support their causes of action here. Accordingly, such allegations should be dismissed and/or stricken from the amended complaint.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, this Court should grant Church Defendants' demurrers against Plaintiffs' amended complaint.

This case arises from repeated acts of sexual abuse against the minor plaintiffs. Plaintiffs claim damages for personal injuries, emotional distress, wage loss and medical expenses in an unknown amount. An order for punitive damages will be sought in the future.

Daniel West, et al., Plaintiffs, vs. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc., et al., Defendants	Case No.: No. CV 03-1439 ORDER AFTER HEARING Date: December 4, 2003 Time: 8:30 Dept: 11

The motion to quash of defendants Kingdom Support Services, Religious Order of Jehovah's Witnesses and Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania and the demurrer of defendants Watchtower Bible Tract Society of New York, Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Kingdom Support Services, Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, Religious Order of Jehovah's Witnesses, Woodland Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses and Quincy Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses were heard at the above-noted place and time. Rudy Nolen and William L. Brelsford, Jr., Attorneys at Law, appeared for the plaintiffs. Robert J. Schnack, Attorney at Law, appeared for the defendants.

Having considered all matters submitted in the pleadings and on oral argument, all admissible evidence, the file in this case and the applicable law, the court now rules as follows:

1. The motion of defendants Kingdom Support Services and Religious Order of Jehovah's Witnesses to quash service of the summons and complaint is GRANTED;

2. The motion of defendant Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania to quash service of the summons and complaint is DENIED WITHOUT PREJUDICE. The plaintiffs are authorized to conduct limited written discovery regarding the entity's contacts with California. The plaintiffs are not authorized to depose Richard E. Abrahamson;

3. The demurrer to the first cause of action for respondeat superior is SUSTAINED without leave to amend. The complaint does not allege that defendant Silva was acting within the scope of his employment when he abused the plaintiffs. (Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609.) The plaintiffs argue that a respondeat superior theory is available to them because the entity defendants ratified Silva's acts. However, as discussed below, the plaintiffs have not properly pleaded ratification or shown a reasonable possibility of amending to cure the defect. The cause of action for sexual battery remains pending as to defendant Silva;

4. The demurrer to the second cause of action for negligence, third cause of action for negligent appointment, retention and supervision, fourth cause of action for gross negligence with willful misconduct, fifth cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty and seventh cause of action for fraud, fraudulent concealment and conspiracy is OVERRULED. Although the complaint does contain some allegations about the practices of the Jehovah's Witness church (see e.g. Paragraph 25), the plaintiffs do not allege that they were vulnerable to Silva because of their religious piety. Such an allegation would bar their complaint under the First Amendment and the opinion in Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of San Francisco (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257. It is clear from the complaint that the plaintiffs were vulnerable to Silva because of their youth;

5. The demurrer to the sixth cause of action for negligence per se and common law negligence for failure to report is SUSTAINED with leave to amend. The plaintiffs may amend the complaint to either (1) clearly allege that the defendants acquired knowledge or a reasonable suspicion of child abuse after January 1, 1997; or (2) delete the allegations concerning Penal Code §11164;

6. The demurrer to the eighth cause of action for ratification is SUSTAINED without leave to amend. "Ratification is the voluntary election by a person to adopt in some manner as his own an act which was purportedly done on his behalf by another person, the effect of which, as to some or all persons, is to treat the act as if originally authorized by him. A purported agent's act may be adopted expressly or it may be adopted by implication based on conduct of the purported principal from which an intention to consent to or adopt the act may be fairly inferred, including conduct which is 'inconsistent with any reasonable intention on his part, other than that he intended approving and adopting it." (Fretland v. City of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 1478, 1490-1491.) The plaintiffs have not shown, and have not shown a reasonable possibility of alleging, that Silva acted "on behalf of" the entity defendants when he molested the plaintiffs;

7. The demurrer to the ninth cause of action for alter ego and single business enterprise is SUSTAINED without leave to amend. The plaintiffs have conceded that this is not a separate cause of action;

8. The demurrer to the tenth cause of action for negligent usurpation of investigatory function is SUSTAINED without leave to amend. The plaintiffs have not cited any authority supporting this cause of action;

01/08/04 13:08 FAX 916 564 9991

9. The demurrer to the eleventh and twelfth causes of action for violations of the Penal Code is SUSTAINED with leave to amend. The cited code sections do not create private rights of action. However, there is a reasonable possibility that the plaintiffs could amend to allege negligence per se based on violations of the Penal Code sections.

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, vs. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., Defendants.	CASE NO: 26-22191 ORDER ON DEMURRER AND MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS Date: November 21, 2003 Time: 8:30 a.m. Dept: B

TO: ALL PARTIES AND THEIR ATTORNEYS OF RECORD:

The Church Defendants Demur to each cause of action in Plaintiffs' amended complaint and Motion to Quash Service of Summons was regularly scheduled for hearing on November 21, 2003 in the Napa County Superior Court. None of the parties to the action requested a hearing and the tentative ruling was recorded as stated below.

1) CHURCH DEFENDANTS' DEMURRER TO AMENDED COMPLAINT
TENTATIVE RULING: The Church defendants demur to each cause of action in plaintiffs' amended complaint. The court will overrule the demurrers to causes of action 2 through 5 and 7 will sustain with leave to amend causes of action 1, 6, 8 and 9, and will sustain without leave to amend causes of action 10 through 12.

Tort Causes of action for Sexual Battery and Respondeat Superior (1st), Common Law Negligence (2nd), Negligent Appointment, Retention and Supervision (3rd), Gross Negligence/Wilful Misconduct (4th), Breach of Fiduciary Duty (5th), Fraud, Fraudulent Concealment and Conspiracy (7th), and Ratification (8th)

First Amendment

The defendants seek to characterize plaintiffs' action as one for clergy malpractice arising out of a counseling relationship, and as such contend that, under the First Amendment, this court may not interject itself into the inner workings of the church. They assert that the plaintiffs' claims are barred because they seek to impermissibly entangle the court in ecclesiastical affairs and in the interpretation of religious doctrine, practices and beliefs. Put plainly, this is simply not so.

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges, generally, that the plaintiffs and other minors were regularly sexually abused by church leaders, that the Church defendants were notified of the abuse, and that they failed to take steps to protect the children entrusted to their care and to take steps to prevent future acts of molestation. The complaint further alleges that "rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the Watchtower defendants acted in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the [defendants'] organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children." The complaint alleges that leaders who molested children were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing and were given continued access to children in the organization, and that the organization prohibited the victims and accusers from speaking to anyone about the alleged abuse under threat of suffering sever sanctions. The complaint also contains specific allegations about the abuse allegedly suffered by the two individual plaintiffs at the hands of a Church Elder and about the defendants' failure to take steps to protect the plaintiffs or to prevent future abuse, when it was in their power to do so.

Defendants cannot use the First Amendment to shield them from these allegations, and none of the cases cited by defendants say otherwise. As made clear from plaintiffs' thorough review of the relevant case law, this court may hear plaintiffs' claims without treading on the Constitution's free exercise clause. Accordingly, defendants' demurrer to plaintiffs' tort claims on the ground that they are barred by the First Amendment is OVERRULED.

Respondeat Superior (1st) and Ratification (8th)

As currently drafted the complaint fails to state facts to support claims against the church defendants on respondeat superior and ratification theories. (Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609; Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 1478, 1490.) The demurrer to these claims is sustained with leave to amend.

Cause of action for Negligence Per Se and Common Law Negligence (6th) and for Negligent Usurpation of Investigatory Function (10th)

The demurrer to the 6th cause of action is sustained as to the allegations of negligence per se premised upon the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, Penal Code § 11164, et seq. This statute did not apply to the clergy during the time period in question. Accordingly, it cannot support a negligence per se cause of action. The demurrer to the 6th cause of action is sustained with leave to amend to delete the allegations concerning Penal Code section 11164.

The 10th cause of action is premised entirely on Penal Code § 11164. Accordingly, the demurrer to that cause of action is sustained without leave to amend.

Cause of action for Alter Ego and Single Business Enterprise (9th)

"Alter ego" is not a separately cognizable cause of action, rather it is a contract law theory concerning business structures which allows a separate entity to be disregarded and another to be held responsible for the disregarded entities liabilities. Plaintiffs may amend their complaint to state their alter ego allegations generally, but not as a separate cause of action.

Violation of Penal Code sections 182 and 32 (11th and 12th causes of action)

Plaintiffs have presented no authority that allows them to state a private cause of action for asserted Penal Code violations. The demurrers to these causes of action are sustained without leave to amend.

Plaintiffs shall have 20 days to amend their complaint as specified herein. Defendants shall have 20 days thereafter to respond.

2) WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, INC.'S MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS TENTATIVE RULING: Plaintiffs request for leave to conduct discovery is granted. Plaintiff shall be permitted to conduct limited discovery concerning Watch Tower Pennsylvania's contacts in California during the relevant time period. This motion shall be continued to January 21, 2004 at 8:30 in Dept. B.

IT IS ORDERED as follows:

The Court overrules the Defendants' demurrers to causes of action 2 through 5 and 7 will sustain with leave to amend causes of action 1, 6, 8 and 9, and will sustain without leave to amend causes of action 10 through 12. Plaintiffs shall have 20 days to amend their complaint as specified herein. Defendants shall have 20 days thereafter to respond.

The Court grants Plaintiffs' request for leave to conduct discovery. Plaintiffs are permitted to conduct limited discovery concerning Watch Tower Pennsylvania's contacts in California during the relevant time period. The motion is continued to January 21, 2004 at 8:30 in Dept. B.

III.

FACTS COMMON TO ALL CAUSES OF ACTION

13. In the past, certain Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers, agents, volunteers and other leaders and representatives of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, including Edward Villegas, have used their appointed positions of authority within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization to sexually abuse minors, including Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS were notified of the abuse of these minors by their appointed elder, Edward Villegas, and others, but intentionally concealed this information and continued to place Edward Villegas in positions of authority where he could abuse children while pursuing activities within the scope of his appointment. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to take reasonable steps to ensure the safety of Plaintiffs and other minor children entrusted to their care and to prevent future acts of molestation. This suit seeks compensation for Plaintiffs who were victims of this sexual abuse.

14. All paragraphs of this Complaint are based on information and belief, except for those allegations, which pertain to the Plaintiffs and their counsel. Plaintiffs' information and belief are based upon, inter alia, the investigation conducted to date by Plaintiffs and their counsel. Each allegation in this Complaint either has, or is likely to have, evidentiary support upon further investigation and discovery.

15. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization has a hierarchical structure in which the GOVERNING BODY, consisting of a small group of men who operate out of various entities within the hierarchical structure, sits at the top of a chain of command that extends over each individual and Defendant entity in the organization including its worldwide operations. These individuals and entities act as agents, servants and alter egos of each other. Authority for actions by the organization and its members derive from the GOVERNING BODY.

16. All of the Defendants are the agents and servants of each other and are vicariously liable for each other's acts. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS are so organized and controlled and their affairs are so conducted that they are alter egos of each other and operate as a single business enterprise.

17. Through its hierarchical structure, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assume responsibility for the development, protection and discipline of its membership, especially the children of members. Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers and other leaders are appointed and empowered by the GOVERNING BODY to carry out this responsibility.

18. To further their goals, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS authorize male Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers and other appointed male leaders to develop relationships of trust with women, children and families and to assume a role of counselor and advocate for problems that might arise, including claims of child abuse. It is the responsibility of the Elders and those higher in the chain of command, including the GOVERNING BODY, to decide if abuse has occurred and how it should be handled.

19. Despite knowledge of a problem with sexual abuse of minors by appointed leaders in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS acted to continue to appoint these sexual offenders to positions of authority with the opportunity to abuse children through activities within the scope of their appointment. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS demonstrated willful indifference and/or reckless and/or intentional disregard for the interest and safety of the children entrusted to their care. Rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS engaged in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect the WATCHTOWER

DEFENDANTS' reputation as well as those within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children.

20. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS have likewise engaged in the routine practice of maintaining secret archival files regarding sexual abuse by Elders, Ministerial Servants, Pioneers and other appointed leaders in the organization. The existence of these files and the contents thereof were not disclosed or made available to law enforcement authorities or others in order for law enforcement to investigate the crimes of these leaders in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS furthered this conspiracy of concealment by, among other things, failing to properly report complaints of sexual misconduct to law enforcement authorities, failing to remove molesting leaders or prevent their access to children. Known molesting leaders were reaffirmed as leaders in good standing in the organization and were given authority that permitted continued frequent and unsupervised access to children in the organization.

21. At all material times, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS prohibited the victim and/or accuser from warning others or speaking about the matter to anyone under penalty of discipline. Victim/accusers were not permitted to report suspected abuse to outside authorities or to other Publishers within the organization, despite secular laws and duties regarding the reporting of sexual Abuse. Violation of this policy would lead to severe sanctions.

22. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS also failed to provide Plaintiffs and their families with any notice or warning regarding the past misconduct of, and abuse by, Edward Villegas. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS represented to Plaintiffs, members and the public that Edward Villegas and other leaders were fit to lead, when in fact they were predator pedophiles. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or had reason to know that Edward Villegas and other leader molesters would continue to sexually molest children, using their leadership positions to gain access to and control over their victims.

23. Beginning in at least 1970, if not earlier, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS appointed Edward Villegas to the leadership position of Elder with authority over women and children in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization.

24. In approximately 1970, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. and her mother, Betty Hopkins, came under the instruction and care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization through their agent, Edward Villegas, and his wife, Marsha Villegas. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS used the daycare center run out of the Villegas home to attract new converts. Plaintiff CHARISSA W. was approximately 1 year old at the time. Betty Hopkins became one of those new converts and entrusted her daughter, Plaintiff CHARISSA W. to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care.

25. In approximately 1971, Plaintiff Nicole D. and her family came under the care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization and entrusted Nicole D. to the leadership of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas. Through his position of leadership with the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, Edward Villegas developed a relationship of trust and confidence with Plaintiff Nicole D. and her family, working with them at WATCHTOWER DEFENDANT events and inviting them into his home.

26. Beginning by at least 1972, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, used his position as an Elder to gain access to children under the care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS organization and to sexually abuse them.

27. In about 1972, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas began sexually molesting Plaintiff, CHARISSA W. by, among other things, fondling her genitals, digitally penetrating her vagina and forcing her to have oral sex. She was approximately three (3) or four (4) years old at the time. For the next twelve (12) to thirteen (13) years, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas continued to use his leadership position as an Elder to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, CHARISSA W., who was under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care. Plaintiff's position as a minor in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, as well Edward Villegas' position as a spiritual leader and authority figure in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization allowed him to maintain control and influence over Plaintiff and others. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS enabled Edward Villegas to abuse Plaintiff and others by appointing him to positions of authority to engage in activities that gave him access to children, and then actively concealing his ongoing sexual abuse. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, each of them, used their positions in the organization to aid and abet Edward Villegas and other leaders in the sexual abuse and exploitation of minors in the organization and in furtherance of the conspiracy to conceal the sexual molestation occurring within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization.

28. During this time period, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent, Edward Villegas, was also using his appointed position of authority as an Elder to sexually abuse other children under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care.

29. In approximately 1978, Edward Villegas used his appointed position as an Elder and leader in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiff, NICOLE D., a child under the care of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. Plaintiff, NICOLE D. was approximately seven (7) years old when the abuse occurred. Using his delegated authority as a leader in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, Edward Villegas forced Plaintiff, NICOLE D. to have oral sex with him.

30. When Plaintiff, NICOLE D. told her parents about the abuse, her father immediately reported it to the Elders of Defendant, NAPA KINGDOM HALL pursuant to instructions by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS. In response, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS privately reproved their agent for his conduct, but took no other steps to hold him accountable or to otherwise notify members and the families of the children whom they had placed under the authority of their agent, Edward Villegas to sexually abuse minor children. Instead, they intentionally concealed this information. Therefore, Edward Villegas was able to continue to use his position of authority.

31. For over two decades, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known that their appointed agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority in the organization to gain access to and sexually molest and physically abuse adolescents under the care of the organization. Nevertheless, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS continued to appoint Edward Villegas to leadership positions in their local congregations, entrusting him with the welfare of numerous adolescents in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' local congregations. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' agent then used his position of authority in the organization to gain access to and sexually molest Plaintiffs and others. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to notify anyone that their agent, Edward Villegas was molesting or had sexually molested adolescents under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care. They further failed to take any steps to protect these young victims from his abuse. Instead, they knowingly concealed this information from Plaintiffs and others, thereby aiding and abetting the abuse.

32. When the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS received reports of their agent's acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to their care, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed the exclusive responsibility for dealing with the problem. They instructed families of victims that they should leave the matter to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS to handle. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS chose not to report the abuse to law enforcement authorities nor did they warn any other members of the organization that they had appointed a dangerous pedophile to positions of leadership with authority over children. They did not act to help Plaintiffs or their families deal with the trauma of abuse and actively prevented them from obtaining help from trained professionals and other available sources. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to take appropriate steps to hold their agent, Edward Villegas, accountable for his conduct or to assist him in addressing his propensities.

33. Edward Villegas used the authority of his position in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization to gain access to and sexually abuse Plaintiffs and others. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS directly and vicariously caused foreseeable harm to Plaintiffs by, among other things:

a. aiding and abetting the abuse of children by their appointed agents;

b. blaming, humiliating, sanctioning and/or disciplining victims/accusers of sexual abuse instead of the perpetrator;

c. intentionally failing to report such sexual abuse, including the abuse by Edward Villegas to law enforcement and governmental child welfare agencies and requiring that members not make such reports;

d. intentionally refusing to warn Plaintiffs, their families, and others of the risk of abuse by Edward Villegas after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his positions of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse against children entrusted to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care;

e. negligently failing to train its Elders, Overseers, Ministerial Servants and other appointed leaders to identify, investigate, prevent and respond to or report child abuse;

f. negligently failing to adopt adequate policies and procedures for the protection of children and other members and/or to implement and comply with such procedures that did exist;

g. failing to properly investigate matters brought to the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' attention involving child sexual abuse and/or suspicions of child sexual abuse;

h. negligently failing to provide child abuse victims and their families with assistance in coping with the trauma of abuse and preventing Plaintiffs and their families from reporting the abuse to outside authorities and obtaining outside help to deal with the trauma of abuse;

i. intentionally concealing from Plaintiffs and their families that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS had information that their agent, Edward Villegas was using his position of authority to abuse young children entrusted to their care by the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS;

j. negligently retaining and failing to properly supervise Edward Villegas as a leader in the organization or to monitor his activities after they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his position of leadership to engage in acts of sexual abuse.

FIRST CAUSE OF ACTION
COMMON-LAW NEGLIGENCE

34. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 33 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

35. Plaintiffs allege, at all times herein mentioned, that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS assumed a duty to protect Plaintiffs from sexual predators within the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS further knew or should have known that Plaintiffs were at risk of foreseeable harm by their agent, Edward Villegas, but failed to act to protect them from said harm. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS breached their duty to Plaintiffs, thereby causing great harm to Plaintiffs.

36. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

SECOND CAUSE OF ACTION
NEGLIGENT APPOINTMENT, RETENTION AND SUPERVISION

37. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 36 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

38. Plaintiffs allege, at all times herein mentioned, that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS knew or should have known of their agents, Edward Villegas', propensities to use his position as a leader in the local congregation to engage in acts of sexual abuse.

The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to adequately investigate, evaluate, and otherwise research the background of their agent, Edward Villegas, prior to appointing him to leadership positions and entrusting children to his care.

39. Plaintiffs further allege that after Edward Villegas was appointed by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS acting on behalf of and under the supervision of the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to adequately investigate, evaluate, monitor and supervise the conduct of their agent, Edward Villegas, during his interactions with children entrusted to his care by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS.

40. Plaintiff's further allege that WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to provide adequate warning to Plaintiffs and their families of their agent's dangerous propensities and unfitness to lead.

41. Plaintiffs further allege the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS negligently investigated, appointed, retained and supervised Edward Villegas in the organization at a time when they knew or should have known of his propensities to use his appointed position to engage in acts of sexual abuse against Plaintiffs and other young children under the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' care.

42. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

THIRD CAUSE OF ACTION
GROSS NEGLIGENCE/WILFUL MISCONDUCT

43. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 42 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

44. Plaintiffs allege, at all times herein mentioned, that the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS demonstrated a conscious indifference to the safety and welfare of Plaintiffs, who knew or should have known of the dangerous propensities of their agent, Edward Villegas, yet failed to act to protect the health, safety and welfare of children in the custody and care of WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, thereby allowing Plaintiffs to be sexually abused. But for the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' wilful misconduct and gross negligence in failing to implement safeguards to protect Plaintiffs, in violation of WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' duty to protect the children entrusted to their and Edward Villegas' care and custody, the sexual abuse would have been prevented.

45. Plaintiffs further allege that WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' actions, constituting wilful misconduct and gross negligence described hereinabove, caused significant mental, emotional, and physical injuries as a result of the acts of sexual abuse described hereinabove.

46. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

FOURTH CAUSE OF ACTION
BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY

47. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 46 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

48. Plaintiffs allege, at all times herein mentioned, that by holding Edward Villegas out as a qualified Elder and leader in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS' organization, and by undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling of Plaintiffs, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, created a fiduciary relationship with Plaintiffs. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS were in positions of trust and confidence with Plaintiffs and such relationship imposed on them a duty to act to protect Plaintiffs' best interests.

49. Plaintiffs further allege that because of this special relationship, Plaintiffs and their families placed their trust and confidence in the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS to protect them from harm and to warn Plaintiffs of potential harm. This conduct was a breach of the fiduciary duty owed to Plaintiffs by WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS.

50. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

FIFTH CAUSE OF ACTION
FRAUD, FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT AND CONSPIRACY

51. Plaintiffs incorporate herein by this reference and re-allege paragraphs 1 through 50 of this Complaint as if fully set forth herein.

52. Plaintiffs allege, at all times herein mentioned, that after receiving reports that their appointed agents, Edward Villegas and others were using their positions of authority in the organization to abuse adolescents, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS willfully and intentionally kept material information from Plaintiffs and other victims similarly situated and the community-at-large. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS intentionally misrepresented to Plaintiffs, their families, and others that Edward Villegas and other appointed agents were leaders in good standing with authority to instruct Plaintiffs and other children in spiritual, ethical and moral matters and that these agents were to be obeyed. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS further intentionally misrepresented that they would act in the best interests of Plaintiffs and other children entrusted to their care. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to disclose that they knew of Edward Villegas' propensity to use his leadership positions to sexually abuse Plaintiffs and others and that they were doing nothing to protect the children under their care. Plaintiffs did not know the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS had concealed this information and relied upon them, causing each of them serious injury and harm.

53. Plaintiffs further allege that by holding out Edward Villegas as an Elder and appointed leader, qualified to provide religious instruction and counsel, and by undertaking the religious instruction and spiritual and emotional counseling and training of plaintiff, and by accepting, through their agents Edward Villegas and other Elders, the control and responsibility of the Plaintiffs as minors, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS and each of them entered into a fiduciary relationship with the minor Plaintiffs.

54. Plaintiffs further allege that as fiduciaries to Plaintiffs, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, and each of them, had a duty to obtain and disclose information relating to sexual misconduct by their agent Edward Villegas and other agents. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS failed to disclose and later conspired to intentionally conceal such information from Plaintiffs.

55. The WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS, in concert with each other and with the intent to conceal and defraud, conspired to conceal information relating to the sexual misconduct of their agent, Edward Villegas, as well as other agents. By concealing such information, the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS and each of them committed at least one act in furtherance of the conspiracy.

56. As a legal result of Defendants' conduct as described hereinabove, Plaintiffs have suffered, and will continue to suffer great pain of mind, body, shock, emotional distress, physical manifestations of emotional distress, embarrassment, loss of self-esteem, disgrace, humiliation, and loss of enjoyment of life. Further, Plaintiffs were prevented and will continue to be prevented from performing daily activities and obtaining the full enjoyment of life. Each Plaintiff has sustained loss of earnings and earning capacity. Each Plaintiff has incurred and will incur expenses for medical and psychological treatment, therapy, and counseling.

PRAYER

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs demand judgment against the WATCHTOWER DEFENDANTS individually, jointly and severally as follows:

1. For general damages according to proof;
2. For past and future medical expenses according to proof;
3. For past and future loss of earnings according to proof;
4. For prejudgment interest;
5. For costs of suit incurred herein; and
6. For such other and further relief as the Court deems just and proper.

Appearances:

No appearance by either party

By order of the Court, the Tentative Ruling is adopted and incorporated in the minutes as follows:

1) CHURCH DEFENDANTS' DEMURRER TO AMENDED COMPLAINT

TENTATIVE RULING: The Church defendants demur to each cause of action in plaintiffs' amended complaint. The court will overrule the demurrers to causes of action 2 through 5 and 7 will sustain with leave to amend causes of action 1, 6, 8 and 9, and will sustain without leave to amend causes of action 10 through 12.

Tort Causes of action for Sexual Battery and Respondeat Superior (1st), Common Law Negligence (2nd), Negligent Appointment, Retention and Supervision (3rd), Gross Negligence/Wilful Misconduct (4th), Breach of Fiduciary Duty (5th), Fraud, Fraudulent Concealment and Conspiracy (7th), and Ratification (8th)

First Amendment

The defendants seek to characterize plaintiffs' action as one for clergy malpractice arising out of a counseling relationship, and as such contend that, under the First Amendment, this court may not interject itself into the inner workings of the church. They assert that the plaintiffs' claims are barred because they seek to impermissibly entangle the court in ecclesiastical affairs and in the interpretation of religious doctrine, practices and beliefs. Put plainly, this is simply not so.

Plaintiffs' complaint alleges, generally, that the plaintiffs and other minors were regularly sexually abused by church leaders, that the Church defendants were notified of the abuse, and that they failed to take steps to protect the children entrusted to their care and to take steps to prevent future acts of molestation. The complaint further alleges that "rather than implement measures to redress and prevent the sexual molestation of these children, the Watchtower defendants acted in a systematic pattern and practice of suppression of information to cover-up and hide incidents of child molestation from law enforcement and their membership in order to protect those within the [defendants'] organization who committed acts of sexual molestation against children." The complaint alleges that leaders who molested children were allowed to remain as leaders in good standing and were given continued access to children in the organization, and that the organization prohibited the victims and accusers from speaking to anyone about the alleged abuse under threat of suffering sever sanctions. The complaint also contains specific allegations about the abuse allegedly suffered by the two individual plaintiffs at the hands of a Church Elder and about the defendants' failure to take steps to protect the plaintiffs or to prevent future abuse, when it was in their power to do so.

Defendants cannot use the First Amendment to shield them from these allegations, and none of the cases cited by defendants say otherwise. As made clear from plaintiffs' thorough review of the relevant case law, this court may hear plaintiffs' claims without treading on the Constitution's free exercise clause. Accordingly, defendants' demurrer to plaintiffs' tort claims on the ground that they are barred by the First Amendment is OVERRULED.

Respondeat Superior (1st) and Ratification (8th)

As currently drafted the complaint fails to state facts to support claims against the church defendants on respondeat superior and ratification theories. (Mark K. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 603, 609; Fretland v. County of Humboldt (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 1478, 1490.) The demurrer to these claims is sustained with leave to amend.

Cause of action for Negligence Per Se and Common Law Negligence (6th) and for Negligent Usurpation of Investigatory Function (10th)

The demurrer to the 6th cause of action is sustained as to the allegations of negligence per se premised upon the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, Penal Code § 11164, et seq. This statute did not apply to the clergy during the time period in question. Accordingly, it cannot support a negligence per se cause of action. The demurrer to the 6th cause of action is sustained with leave to amend to delete the allegations concerning Penal Code section 11164.

The 10th cause of action is premised entirely on Penal Code § 11164. Accordingly, the demurrer to that cause of action is sustained without leave to amend.

Cause of action for Alter Ego and Single Business Enterprise (9th)

"Alter ego" is not a separately cognizable cause of action, rather it is a contract law theory concerning business structures which allows a separate entity to be disregarded and another to be held responsible for the disregarded entities liabilities. Plaintiffs may amend their complaint to state their alter ego allegations generally, but not as a separate cause of action.

Violation of Penal Code sections 182 and 32 (11th and 12th causes of action)

Plaintiffs have presented no authority that allows them to state a private cause of action for asserted Penal Code violations. The demurrers to these causes of action are sustained without leave to amend.

Plaintiffs shall have 20 days to amend their complaint as specified herein. Defendants shall have 20 days thereafter to respond.

2) WATCH TOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF PENNSYLVANIA, INC.'S MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS

TENTATIVE RULING: Plaintiffs' request for leave to conduct discovery is granted. Plaintiff shall be permitted to conduct limited discovery concerning Watch Tower Pennsylvania's contacts in California during the relevant time period. This motion shall be continued to January 21, 2004 at 8:30 in Dept B.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA

COUNTY OF NAPA

CHARISSA W. and NICOLE D., Plaintiffs, v. WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF NEW YORK, INC., et al., Defendants.	Case No.: 26-22191 CHURCH DEFENDANTS' REPLY MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF DEMURRERS DATE: November 14, 2003 TIME: 8:30 a.m. DEPT.: B TRIAL DATE: Not yet set

INTRODUCTION

At the outset, it is noteworthy that Plaintiffs have not presented any meaningful arguments to support several of the twelve separate causes of action alleged in the "shotgun" amended complaint. See International Billing Services, Inc. v. Emigh (2000) 84 Cal.App.4th 1175, 1179, 101 Cal.Rptr.2d 532, 534 (courts "disfavor shotgun (or 'chain letter') style of pleading"). Specifically, Plaintiffs have not presented any meaningful arguments to either support their pleading or counter the Church Defendants' arguments on demurrer regarding the following causes of action: respondeat superior for sexual assault (first cause of action); failure to report under CANRA (sixth cause of action); ratification (eighth cause of action); alter ego/single business enterprise (ninth cause of action); negligent usurpation of investigatory function (tenth cause of action); violation of Penal Code § 182 (eleventh cause of action); and violation of Penal Code § 32 (twelfth cause of action). Plaintiffs also did not defend or even mention the "negligent appointment" allegations in the third cause of action, thereby effectively conceding that the claim also should be dismissed. Accordingly, the Court should grant the Church Defendants' demurrers on each of those causes of action. Plaintiffs' remaining causes of action are without legal merit and the Church Defendants' demurrers should be granted on them as well.

In their opposition, Plaintiffs' counsel improperly employs the tactic of citing to and relying on alleged evidence that lies wholly outside of the specific allegations of the amended complaint. As Plaintiffs' counsel and the Court certainly are aware, that tactic is indisputably improper, because demurrers challenge only the sufficiency of the pleading. Thus, the Court must ignore Plaintiffs' counsel's improper tactics here.

Finally, Plaintiffs' opposition to the demurrers often engages in inflammatory rhetoric and relies on conclusory statements without any analysis, and the opposition also does not cite at all to Plaintiffs' pleading. Plaintiffs' counsel often seeks to blur the line between viable claims against the alleged individual abuser, which are not at issue here, as opposed to the causes of action alleged against the Church Defendants, which are at issue here.

I. ARGUMENT

1. Plaintiffs' sexual assault cause of action against the Church Defendants based on alleged respondeat superior liability fails as a matter of law.

As previously briefed by the Church Defendants, California law is well settled that an employee who commits sexual assault or sexual abuse acts outside of the scope of his employment as a matter of law (the only exception being police officers in certain situations). Thus, with regard to an action like this one against a religious institution based on allegations of childhood sexual abuse perpetrated by one of its clergy, the courts have held that "because the abuse is committed outside the scope of the cleric's employment, the doctrine of respondeat superior is not available." Mark K. v Roman Catholic Archbishop (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 603, 609, 79 Cal.Rptr. 2d 73, 77.

Because those are precisely the allegations made here by Plaintiffs (i.e., that the alleged sex abuse was conducted within the course and scope of church duties), the first cause of action alleging respondeat superior liability for sexual assault against the Church Defendants fails as a matter of law. The demurrer on Plaintiffs' first cause of action should be sustained without leave to amend.

2. Plaintiffs' CANRA allegations do not allege any cognizable causes of action against the Church Defendants.

Plaintiffs have not presented any cogent arguments or cited any legal authority to support their causes of action based on reporting obligations or investigatory functions under the California Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, or CANRA. Because no private right of action exists under CANRA and, in any event, because the Church Defendants were not required to report under CANRA during the relevant time period at issue here, the demurrers to Plaintiffs' sixth and tenth causes of action should each be sustained without leave to amend.

3. Plaintiffs' ratification cause of action fails as a matter of law.

Plaintiffs do not even remotely allege in the complaint (or suggest in the opposition brief) the requisite elements of a "cause of action" for ratification, i.e., that the acts of child sexual abuse allegedly perpetrated on them were done for the benefit of the Church Defendants or that those acts were of a nature or kind to benefit the Church Defendants. (Indeed, any such allegation or suggestion would be patently absurd.)

Therefore, Plaintiffs' purported cause of action alleging "ratification" fails as a matter of law, and the demurrer against the eighth cause of action should be sustained without leave to replead.

4. Plaintiffs now belatedly admit that the alter ego/single business enterprise claim does not constitute a cognizable cause of action.

In the amended complaint, Plaintiffs' counsel specifically alleged a "NINTH CAUSE OF ACTION" denominated as "ALTER EGO AND SINGLE BUSINESS ENTERPRISE." Now, however, after the Church Defendants demurrer against that purported "cause of action," Plaintiffs' counsel disingenuously writes in the opposition that Plaintiffs pled those allegations only as "theories" and do "not assert these theories as causes of action[.]" Plaintiffs' opposition at p.32.

The Church Defendants accept Plaintiffs' concession that the alter ego/single business enterprise allegations do not state a viable cause of action, and the Court should accept the concession as well. Accordingly, the demurrer to Plaintiffs' ninth cause of action should be sustained without leave to amend.

5. Plaintiffs' allegations of Penal Code violations do not constitute cognizable causes of action.

Plaintiffs make a one-sentence conclusory statement (Plaintiffs' opposition at p.31) that "the criminal statutes set a standard by which their [the Church Defendants] conduct may be judged." However, Plaintiffs provide no analysis or case citations. The bottom line is that no California case has held that a violation of Penal Code § 32 or Penal Code § 182 will support a civil cause of action or creates a private right of action. The demurrers to Plaintiffs' eleventh and twelfth causes of action should be sustained without leave to amend.

6. Plaintiffs do not allege the unique circumstances necessary to support a breach of fiduciary duty claim against the Church Defendants.

While California law acknowledges that a priest can have a fiduciary relationship with a parishioner under certain limited circumstances, Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (2003) 106 Cal.App.4th 257, 279, 130 Cal.Rptr.2d. 601, 616, Plaintiffs have not alleged the unique circumstances required to allege a breach of fiduciary cause of action against the Church Defendants. (Plaintiffs' argument in this regard in the opposition addresses the issue of the minister's or cleric's fiduciary duty under Richelle L., not a breach of fiduciary cause of action against the Church Defendants.)

Accordingly, Plaintiffs' fifth cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty against the Church Defendants fails as a matter of law and should be dismissed without leave to replead.

7. Plaintiffs cannot state a cause of action against the Church Defendants for negligence, gross negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, or fraud.

Plaintiffs do not contest the fact that the judicial sanctioning of recovery in tort constitutes state action sufficient to invoke constitutional protections. Instead, without any reference or citation to the complaint, Plaintiffs argue that their claims do not allege a prohibited clergy malpractice claim and otherwise do not implicate the constitutional protections afforded under the First Amendment to churches and religious institutions like the Church Defendants. However, Plaintiffs' own pleading refutes those arguments.

Nomenclature aside, the gravamen of all of Plaintiffs' claims is that Plaintiffs were vulnerable because of the way that the Jehovah's Witnesses organize their church and practice their faith. See Plaintiffs' amended complaint at ¶¶ 19, 21, and 22. Plaintiffs essentially allege that because of the hierarchical structure of the Jehovah's Witnesses church, persons like Plaintiff were vulnerable to being abused. Id. Those allegations are nothing other than a prohibited clergy malpractice claim.[1] For example, Plaintiffs allege that "all male members [of the church] are appointed and empowered to carry out this responsibility [for the development, protection and discipline of its membership, especially the children of members]." Plaintiffs' amended complaint at ¶21. Plaintiffs further allege that male members of the church are "authorize[d] . . . to develop relationships of trust with women, children and families and to assume a role of counselor and advocate [within the church] for any problems that might arise, including claims of child abuse." Plaintiffs' complaint at ¶22.

[1] Nally v. Grace Community Church (1988) 47 Cal.3d 278, 298, 253 Cal.Rptr. 97, 763 P.2d 948 (clergy malpractice claims cannot be reconciled with the First Amendment and are thus prohibited under California law).

Plaintiffs thus ground their claims in the organizational structure of the church and how church members practice their faith. However, the California courts have rejected such claims as constitutionally improper. Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop, 106 Cal.App.4th at 280-82 (rejecting the plaintiff's claims alleging that she was vulnerable to sex abuse because of her religious faith and trust in the clergy and because of the power the clergy held over her, on the basis that such claims are constitutionally impermissible). Any inquiry by the courts into a church's organizational structure and how the church members practice their faith necessarily requires an inquiry that violates the First Amendment, as already briefed. Thus, Plaintiffs' causes of action fail as a matter of law.

Plaintiffs also appear to suggest in the above-cited allegations from the amended complaint that the Jehovah's Witnesses' church assumed some legal duty to Plaintiffs, based on church organization and practices, and then negligently performed that duty. Again, however, any inquiry into those allegations would necessarily require inquiry into the Jehovah's Witnesses' hierarchical structure and their religious beliefs, policies, and practices. Because any such inquiry is barred by the free exercise of religion clause of the U.S. Constitution, that claim would also fail as a matter of law.

It follows that the demurrers to all of Plaintiffs' other causes of action should be sustained without leave to replead.

II. CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above and in the Church Defendants' original briefing, this Court should sustain the Church Defendants' demurrers on each of the twelve causes of action set forth in Plaintiffs' amended complaint.

Case No.: 26-22191

MOVING CHURCH DEFENDANTS' REPLY IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS

DATE: November 14, 2003
TIME: 8:30 a.m.
DEPT.: B
TRIAL DATE: Not yet set

I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs have conceded the motions of two of the Moving Church Defendants, Kingdom Support Services, Inc. ("KSS") and Religious Order of Jehovah's Witnesses ("ROJW"). Accordingly, the Court should grant the motions of KSS and ROJW and award each the costs they have incurred.

With respect to the third Moving Church Defendant, Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, Inc. ("Watch Tower"), plaintiffs do not present any evidence to support the Court's exercise of "specific jurisdiction" over Watch Tower (i.e., personal jurisdiction with respect to plaintiff's particular claims alleged in this action). In addition, plaintiffs do not submit any evidence, properly authenticated or otherwise, that defendant Watch Tower has the continuous and systematic contacts with California necessary to subject Watch Tower to "general jurisdiction" in California. Accordingly, the Court should also grant Watch Tower's motion to quash service of summons based on the personal jurisdiction defense.[1]

II. DISCUSSION

A. Plaintiffs improperly focus on the "Governing Body," apparently presenting an alter ego or veil piercing theory to support personal jurisdiction over defendant Watch Tower.

Plaintiffs repeatedly refer to the Governing Body and its authority within the Jehovah's Witnesses organization, stating, for example, that "some members" of the Governing Body also serve as members of the board of directors and as officers of defendant Watch Tower. E.g., plaintiffs' opposition at p.8. Plaintiffs also refer to the Governing Body's use of defendant Watch Tower to help carry out activities of Jehovah's Witnesses "worldwide" (although plaintiffs provide no specifics with respect to any such alleged activities in California). Id. [2]

Plaintiffs thus appear to argue that because defendant Watch Tower is the alter ego of the Governing Body (or that the Court should pierce the veil, so to speak, of the Governing Body), the Court therefore should rule that defendant Watch Tower is subject to personal jurisdiction in California. However, such veil piercing arguments simply are inappropriate with respect to the personal jurisdiction issue. What authority the Governing Body has and what the Governing Body does, or does not do, have no bearing on whether defendant Watch Tower is subject to personal jurisdiction in California. See Northern Natural Gas Co. of Omaha, Neb. V. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 991 134 Cal. Rptr. 850, 855 (mere relationships between entities insufficient to establish jurisdiction over the entities, in that exercise of jurisdiction over wholly owned subsidiary does not automatically give courts jurisdiction over parent corporation).

[1] At least two other state courts have granted similar motions to dismiss defendant Watch Tower for lack of personal jurisdiction. Beal v. Broadard, et al., Suffolk (Massachusetts) Superior Court, Civil Action No. 02-5765-C (order issued August 12, 2003) (granting defendant Watch Tower's motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction); Albright v. District Court (real party in interest Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania) (2000) 116 Nev. 1352, 62 P.3d 1135 (Table) (Nevada Supreme Court denied writ of mandamus challenging trial court order granting motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction). Those rulings are attached as Exhibits A and B. See Rule 313(f) of the California Rules of Court.

[2] Plaintiffs' citation to the defendants' answer in the Rodriguez v. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, et al., U.S. District Court (E.D. Wash.) No. CS-02-0190-EFS, does not assist plaintiffs here. The answer does not in any way reference California, but instead uses the term "worldwide." It simply does not refer to the moving defendant in this case as having any contacts with California. (In an unrelated development, earlier this month (on October 3, 2003) U.S. District Judge Edward F. Shea granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment in Rodriguez, dismissing the case in its entirety.)

Thus, plaintiffs' repeated discussions about, and focus on, the Governing Body are a red herring with respect to the question of personal jurisdiction over defendant Watch Tower and should be ignored.

B. Plaintiffs do not present any evidence that plaintiffs' claims arise out of defendant Watch Tower's alleged contacts with California.

Again, plaintiffs argue here that the Governing Body "exercises control, oversight and policy-making for the Jehovah's Witnesses organization." Plaintiffs' opposition at p.18. Plaintiffs then state in conclusory fashion, without any evidentiary support, that defendant Watch Tower was, in essence, an agent for the Governing Body in California. Id. Plaintiffs fail to present any evidence linking alleged activity of defendant Watch Tower in California to plaintiffs' claims alleged in this action. Accordingly, defendant Watch Tower is not subject to "specific jurisdiction" in California in this action.

C. Defendant Watch Tower also is not subject to general jurisdiction in California.

As previously briefed, the standard for establishing "general jurisdiction" is fairly high and requires that a defendant's contacts with the forum state approximate a physical presence there. Bancroft and Masters, Inc. v. Augusta Nat. Inc. (9th Cir. 2000) 223 F.3d 1082, 1086 (citations omitted). [A copy of the Augusta Nat. Inc. case was submitted to the Court with the Moving Church Defendants' original motion.]

In support of this motion, defendant Watch Tower earlier submitted a sworn declaration from the Secretary and Treasurer of defendant Watch Tower that negates any contacts of defendant Watch Tower with California that approximate the sort of physical presence in California necessary to exercise general jurisdiction over Watch Tower. Significantly, plaintiffs have not refuted the factual averments contained in that declaration.

Moreover, plaintiffs have not presented any evidence, much less authenticated and admissible evidence, that defendant Watch Tower has the continuous and systematic contacts with California required to support the exercise of general jurisdiction in this state. The statements about defendant Watch Tower by plaintiffs' counsel are conclusory and in any event sufficiently vague such that they do not suffice to establish general jurisdiction over Watch Tower. Those conclusory statements also do not shift the burden of proof to the moving defendant. Similarly, alleged acts of the Governing Body cannot be used to support general jurisdiction over defendant Watch Tower. Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 901, 150 Cal.Rptr. 615, 619 (acts of other parties cannot be imputed to a defendant for purpose of assuming personal jurisdiction; instead, assertion of personal jurisdiction must be based on a defendant's own forum-related acts) (citations omitted).

Accordingly, the Court should grant defendant Watch Tower's motion to quash service of summons based on Watch Tower's lack of continuous and systematic contacts with this state. California lacks personal jurisdiction over Watch Tower, and it should not be required to further participate in this action.

III. CONCLUSION

Plaintiffs have conceded that the California courts cannot properly exercise personal jurisdiction over defendants KSS and ROJW. Plaintiffs also have not met their burden of establishing that defendant Watch Tower has the requisite continuous and systematic contacts with California to approximate a physical presence here. Accordingly, the California courts also cannot properly exercise personal jurisdiction over defendant Watch Tower. The Court should grant each of the Moving Church Defendants' motions.

ORDER DENYING PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDAMUS

This is an original petition for writ of mandamus challenging a district court order granting a motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction in a wrongful death action.

Petitioner contends that the district court erred in granting the motion of the real party in interest, Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. He contends that he presented a prima facie showing of both general and specific jurisdiction. We disagree. We note first, however, that a considerable portion of the argument advanced by the real party in interest focuses on conflicting evidence, particularly the affidavits of Richard E. Abrahamson and L. C. Colton. Were this a case of conflicting evidence alone, petitioner would be entitled to a writ of mandamus ordering the district court to vacate its order of dismissal, because all factual conflicts would have to be resolved in petitioner's favor for the purpose of deciding the motion to dismiss. See Trump v. District Court, 109 Nev. 687, 693, 857 P.2d 740, 744 (1993). Only at a full evidentiary hearing or trial would the conflicting evidence come into play, because only then would the district court act as fact-finder and make a determination as to whether there existed a preponderance of evidence in support of jurisdiction, rather than accepting as true petitioner's proffers of proof. Id.

Nevertheless, we conclude that petitioner failed to make a prima facie showing of jurisdiction, even without The considering the affidavits of Abrahamson and Colton. information from the internet site operated by the real party in interest was sufficiently vague concerning whether the real party in interest, a Pennsylvania corporation, or Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, a New York Corporation, supervised the religious organization within the United States, and it failed to show that the real party in interest had minimum contacts with Nevada through local congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses. William Scott's deposition testimony, by the very fact that it was retracted as misinformation, cannot contribute to petitioner's prima facie case. The remaining evidence did not connect the real party in interest with either the hospital liaison committee or any congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in Nevada. The district court correctly concluded that petitioner failed to make a showing of general or specific jurisdiction. Accordingly, the district court did not err in granting the motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and we deny the petition for writ of mandamus.

We also conclude that the district court did not err in denying petitioner's motion for jurisdictional discovery, because petitioner has failed to demonstrate that the district court abused its "wide discretion" over pretrial discovery. Hahn v. Yackley, 84 Nev. 49, 54, 436 P.2d 215, 218 (1968).

It is so ORDERED.

v.
Donald T. DEVINE et al. [FN1]

FN1. Edward G. Carroll and John E. Barclay.

Argued Oct. 5, 1984.
Decided June 4, 1985.

Church minister brought action against his psychiatrist and two of his clerical superiors alleging that superiors had induced psychiatrist to disclose confidential information and had used that information to cause minister not to be reappointed. The Superior Court, Norfolk County, Elizabeth J. Dolan, J., reported questions of law to the Appeals Court. The Supreme Judicial Court transferred the case on its own initiative, and O'Connor, J., held that: (1) exception to rule of confidentiality when aspects of employee's health could affect employee's ability effectively to perform job duties is not so broad as to permit physician to disclose to patient's employer whatever information might bear on employee's ability effectively to perform job duties; (2) civil action will lie against anyone who, with requisite state of mind, induces violation of physician's duty of confidentiality and thereby causes injury or loss to patient; (3) even if it were assumed, without inquiry, that book of discipline or other rule of church provided that clerical superiors of minister had right, or even duty, to seek medical information about minister from minister's psychiatrist, First Amendment did not preclude imposition of liability on minister's superiors; and (4) First Amendment did not bar judicial inquiry into church's proceedings culminating in minister's failure to gain reappointment.

So ordered.

In this action, brought by William E. Alberts, a minister of the United Methodist Church, against Donald T. Devine, a psychiatrist, and Edward G. Carroll and John E. duty of confidentiality and thereby causes injury or loss to the patient; and (3) in the circumstances of this case, the religion clauses of the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, [FN2] made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment, Everson v. Board of Educ., 330 U.S. 1, 15, 67 S.Ct. 504, 511, 91 L.Ed. 711 (1947); Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940), do not preclude 116 inquiry by the courts of the Commonwealth into church processes regarding the appointment and the discharge of ministers, nor do those clauses preclude the imposition of liability on the clerical defendants. [FN3]

FN2. "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof...."

FN3. No contention has been made that the Constitution of the Commonwealth provides to any of the defendants greater protection than does the Constitution of the United States. Therefore, we do not consider any question of State constitutional law.

Alberts's amended complaint alleges that in April, 1973, and for some period of time before that, he was a minister with the Southern New England Conference of the United Methodist Church (conference), that he and the defendant Devine had entered into a contract for the provision of psychiatric services, and that implicit in their relationship was a warranty that Devine would keep confidential "all information, observations and opinions relating to the diagnosis, condition, behavior, and treatment" of Alberts that Devine might gain in his professional capacity. The complaint further alleges that on or about April 9, 1973, in violation of that warranty and in violation of Devine's explicit promise, made during the course of treatment, to "respect the confidential nature of the relationship between doctor and patient," Devine disclosed to the defendant Carroll, Resident Bishop of the Boston Area of the United Methodist Church and President of the conference, or to Carroll's representative, information about Alberts's "diagnosis, condition, behavior or treatment." The complaint alleges that Carroll and the defendant Barclay, District Superintendent of the Greater Boston District of the conference, intentionally induced the disclosure, and that Carroll and Barclay "informed numerous individual members of the [conference], *62 as well as the various boards, committees and subcommittees of that Conference concerned with the appointment of its ministers to local churches, of their opinions of [Alberts's] mental health." Furthermore, it is averred that Carroll expressed to the public and to news reporters his belief that Alberts "was mentally ill and therefore unappointable," and that his "belief was based on 'competent consultation.' " The complaint alleges that Carroll used the information he obtained from Devine to cause Alberts not to be reappointed as minister of the Old West Church in Boston, and that the unauthorized disclosures caused Alberts considerable loss of earning capacity and other financial losses, damage to his reputation, and great mental anguish requiring medical treatment.

The three defendants filed answers, and Carroll's and Barclay's answer, as amended, included the following defense: "The alleged actions by [Carroll and Barclay], if taken at all, were taken pursuant to their duties and authority as [Alberts's] superiors in the hierarchy of the United Methodist Church and as such are privileged and immune from inquiry by this Court under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution."

The three defendants filed motions for summary judgment, and Devine filed a motion to dismiss. The judge allowed Carroll's and Barclay's motion for summary judgment, and she allowed their motions for entry of judgment pursuant to Mass.R.Civ.P. 54(b), 365 Mass. 820 (1974). She denied both of Devine's motions. The judge also denied a motion filed by Alberts to amend his complaint by adding a count for tortious interference with privacy rights. Carroll and Barclay filed a motion for a protective order quashing any subpoena that might be served on them in connection with a trial of the case or on "any other person who was a member of the United Methodist Church in 1972 or 1973." The motion further requested that the judge limit further disclosure of, and exclude from evidence at trial, deposition testimony previously given, and documents previously identified, by Carroll and Barclay or other named individuals associated with the United Methodist Church. Lastly, the motion requested that the judge rule inadmissible *63 at trial "any evidence relating in any way to the conduct, words and thoughts of defendants Barclay and Carroll and of any other members of the United 117 Methodist Church in 1972 or 1973." As grounds for their motion, Carroll and Barclay asserted a "constitutional prohibition of inquiry by the civil courts into matters of church doctrine and administration." The judge allowed the motion in its entirety.

At the same time that she made those rulings, the judge reported the following questions to the Appeals Court: (1) "[W]hether disclosures [of confidential medical information] by a psychiatrist of a former patient constitutes a cognizable cause of action within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts"; (2) "[W]hether a cause of action for invasion of privacy existed within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts prior to July 1, 1974"; (3) "[W]hether the actions of the defendants Barclay and Carroll are within the ambit of the privileges and immunities granted by the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution"; and (4) "[W]hether [the judge] properly invoked the First Amendment in entering the protective order for defendants Barclay and Carroll." We transferred the case to this court on our own initiative.

Before reaching the reported questions, we must consider a procedural matter: In light of the judgments entered for Carroll and Barclay, do our answers to the reported questions have any significance with respect to Alberts's claims against them? "[A]fter verdict or after a finding of facts under Rule 52 ... [i]f [the judge] is of opinion that an interlocutory finding or order made by [her] so affects the merits of the controversy that the matter ought to be determined by the Appeals Court before any further proceedings in the trial court, [the judge] may report such matter, and may stay all further proceedings except such as are necessary to preserve the rights of the parties." Mass.R.Civ.P. 64 , 365 Mass. 831 (1974). Under the rule, a trial judge may report a matter that ought to be determined at the appellate level before judgment is entered or before further proceedings take place. "In essence, the word 'report' connotes a suspension of the trial court's function pending decision by an appellate court." J.W. Smith & H.B. *64 Zobel, Rules Practice § 64.1 (1981). Rule 64 does not authorize a report after judgment.

[1] It is not clear from the report nor from the judge's memorandum explaining the reasons for the report whether the judge intended that the answers to the reported questions would apply only to the claims against Devine or whether she also intended them to apply to the claims against Carroll and Barclay. In the memorandum, the judge discusses the relevancy of the questions to the claims against Devine, suggesting that, in keeping with rule 64, the judge reported the case solely to expedite the disposition of the claims against Devine. For example, the judge explained that the questions involving the religion clauses are important to the claims against Devine because, in order to establish damages as to Devine, particularly with respect to loss of earnings, Alberts would have to show that the information allegedly disclosed by Devine contributed to Alberts's loss of employment. The judge also observed that, in order to present that proof, inquiry will be necessary into "the processes of appointment or nonappointment by the governing body of the church together with consideration by a civil court of the interpretation and application of certain codes or canons of [the] church as embodied within its 'Book of Discipline.' " Other language in the memorandum, however, suggests that the judge intended that the Appeals Court's answers to the reported questions would also affect the claims against Carroll and Barclay. For example, the memorandum's concluding paragraph states: "The issues raised on the summary judgments are reported after decision and entry of final judgments as to Barclay and Carroll and the issues raised on interlocutory matters of the plaintiff's motion to amend to add a count of invasion of privacy and the denial of the defendant Devine's motion to dismiss for failure to state a cause of action cognizable by this court are further reported due to the nature of the complaint as filed and the 118 status of the pleadings." Without arguing the procedural point, counsel for Carroll and Barclay have assumed that our answers to the questions will apply to Alberts's claims against them. In his brief, Alberts urges us to reverse the grant of summary judgment in favor of Carroll and Barclay, and, in *65 their briefs, Carroll and Barclay request that we affirm that grant. Carroll and Barclay also ask us to affirm the judge's denial of Albert's motion to add to his complaint a common law claim for invasion of privacy. Although Alberts filed a timely claim of appeal from the entry of judgments in favor of Carroll and Barclay, he has not further perfected the appeal, apparently in reliance on the judge's report as a vehicle for review. See Mass.R.A.P. 5, as amended, 378 Mass. 930 (1979). In light of that reliance, fairness requires that we treat the claims against Carroll and Barclay as if they were here on appeal, with Alberts assigning as error the unfavorable rulings by the trial judge on the reported questions. Therefore, our answers to the questions affect Alberts's claims against Devine, Carroll, and Barclay.

Reported Question 1. A physician's duty not to disclose confidential information. Until this case, we have not confronted the question whether a patient has a nonstatutory, civil remedy against a physician if the physician, without the patient's consent, makes an out-of-court disclosure of confidential information obtained in the course of the physician-patient relationship. In Bratt v. International Business Machs. Corp., 392 Mass. 508, 467 N.E.2d 126 (1984), although we focused our attention on a different issue--whether the disclosure of medical information concerning an employee to an employer by a company physician violated the employee's statutory right of privacy granted by G.L. c. 214, § 1B--we "recognize[d] a patient's valid interest in preserving the confidentiality of medical facts relayed to a physician." Id. at 522, 467 N.E.2d 126. We also quoted with approval in Bratt the New Jersey Supreme Court's statement that "[a] patient should be entitled to freely disclose his symptoms and condition to his doctor in order to receive proper treatment without fear that those facts may become public property. Only thus can the purpose of the relationship be fulfilled." Bratt v. International Business Machs. Corp., supra at 522-523, 467 N.E.2d 126, quoting Hague v. Williams, 37 N.J. 328, 336, 181 A.2d 345 (1962).

Few cases consider the out-of-court physician-patient privilege. "That is undoubtedly *119 due to the fact that the confidentiality of the relationship is a cardinal rule of the medical profession, faithfully adhered to in most instances, and thus has come to be justifiably relied upon by patients seeking advice and treatment." MacDonald v. Clinger, 84 A.D.2d 482, 483, 446 N.Y.S.2d 801 (N.Y.1982). Of the courts that have considered the question, most have held that a patient can recover damages if the physician violates the duty of confidentiality that plays such a vital role in the physician-patient relationship. See Humphers v. First Interstate Bank, supra; Horne v. Patton, 291 Ala. 701, 708-709, 287 So.2d 824 (1974); Simonsen v. Swenson, 104 Neb. 224, 227, 177 N.W. 831 (1920); Hague v. Williams, supra 37 N.J. at 336, 181 A.2d 345; MacDonald v. Clinger, supra 84 A.D.2d at 482, 446 N.Y.S.2d 801; 67 Hammonds v. Aetna Casualty & Sur. Co., supra at 802 (Ohio law). Only three decisions have come to our attention in which courts have declined to recognize such a cause of action, and we do not find their reasoning persuasive. See Logan v. District of Columbia, 447 F.Supp. 1328, 1335 (D.D.C.1978) (D.C. law); Collins v. Howard, 156 F.Supp. 322, 324 (S.D.Ga.1957) (Georgia law); Quarles v. Sutherland, 215 Tenn. 651, 657, 389 S.W.2d 249 (1965).

131 (1929). Kaufmann v. Sheehan, 707 F.2d 355, 358-359 (8th Cir.1983). However, this case does not involve the propriety of the United Methodist Church's refusal to reappoint Alberts as minister of the Old West Church. Nor does this case involve Alberts's qualifications to serve as a minister. A controversy concerning whether a church rule grants religious superiors the civil right to induce a psychiatrist to violate the duty of silence that he owes to a patient, who happens to be a minister, is not a dispute about religious faith or doctrine nor about church discipline or internal organization. Nor is a controversy concerning the causal connection between a psychiatrist's disclosure of confidential information and a minister's failure to gain reappointment such a dispute.

[15][16] Even if the First Amendment precludes judicial inquiry as to whether a church rule provided that Carroll and Barclay had the right to seek medical information from Alberts's psychiatrist, so that the court must assume in Carroll's and Barclay's favor the existence of a church rule granting that right, it does not follow that the religion clauses preclude the imposition of liability on Carroll and Barclay. Although the freedom to believe "is absolute," the freedom to act "cannot be. Conduct remains subject to regulation for the 123 protection of society. The freedom to act must have appropriate definition to preserve the enforcement of that protection." Attorney Gen. v. Bailey, 386 Mass. 367, 375, 436 N.E.2d 139 (1982), quoting Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303-304, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940). See Braunfeld v. Brown, 366 U.S. 599, 603, 81 S.Ct. 1144, 1146, 6 L.Ed.2d 563 (1961); Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. (8 Otto) 145, 164, 25 L.Ed. 244 (1878).

[17] A law, legislatively or judicially created, that would regulate or prevent religiously motivated conduct does not violate the First Amendment if the State's interest in the law's enforcement outweighs the burden that the law imposes on the free exercise of religion. A determination of constitutionality requires a balancing of the competing interests. See Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215-229, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 1533-1540, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972). *74 Prince v. Massachusetts, 321 U.S. 158, 164-170, 64 S.Ct. 438, 441-444, 88 L.Ed. 645 (1944). Cantwell v. Connecticut, supra 310 U.S. at 307, 60 S.Ct. at 905. Catholic High School Ass'n of the Archdiocese of N.Y. v. Culvert, 753 F.2d 1161, 1169 (2d Cir.1985). Obviously, the imposition of liability on Carroll and Barclay for inducing a violation of Devine's duty to Alberts would inhibit such conduct. We must determine whether such inhibition burdens the free exercise of religion by Carroll, Barclay, or the United Methodist Church, and if it does, we must then determine whether the Commonwealth possesses an interest sufficiently compelling to justify the burden. See Wisconsin v. Yoder, supra. Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 403-409, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 1793-1796, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963). Catholic High School Ass'n of the Archdiocese of N.Y. v. Culvert, supra at 1171. Attorney Gen. v. Bailey, supra 386 Mass. at 375, 436 N.E.2d 139.

[18][19] As we have observed, churches have a significant interest in assessing the qualifications of their ministers, and in appointing and retiring them. But, in view of the freedom that ecclesiastical authorities and church members have to determine who the church's ministers will be, and in view of the numerous sources of relevant information available to assist those making such determinations--other than information available only from a minister's physician--a rule that prevents interference with physician-patient relationships will have little impact on the free exercise of religion. On the other hand, as we have discussed earlier in this opinion, public policy strongly favors judicial recognition of a physician's duty to honor the confidentiality of information gained through the physician-patient relationship. We conclude, therefore, that even if it be assumed, without inquiry, that the Book of Discipline or other rule of the United Methodist Church provides that Carroll and Barclay had a right, or even a duty, to seek medical information about Alberts from Devine, the First Amendment does not preclude the imposition of liability on those defendants. We also conclude that the First Amendment does not bar judicial inquiry into the church's proceedings culminating in Alberts's failure to gain reappointment.

[20] Reported Question 4. Protective order. The final reported question asks: "[w]hether the [judge] properly invoked the First Amendment in entering the protective order for defendants *75 Barclay and Carroll." We answer that question "no." As we have stated, the First Amendment does not preclude civil courts from examining the proceedings that resulted in Alberts's failure to gain reappointment as

Nos. 1-94-2763, 1-95-0350.

April 16, 1997.

Plaintiff sued pastor, bishop, and institutional hierarchy of church, alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress, breach of fiduciary duty, common- law fraud, and psychotherapy malpractice. The Circuit Court, Cook County, Kenneth Gillis, J., dismissed all counts but fraud for failure to state claim. Plaintiff appealed. The Appellate Court, Leavitt, J., held that: (1) complaint did not state justiciable claim for psychotherapy malpractice against pastor; (2) contentions that pastor and bishop breached duties as fiduciaries were not actionable; (3) plaintiff stated claim against pastor for intentional infliction of emotional distress; and (4) plaintiff could not establish church defendants' liability under respondeat superior theory.

Affirmed in part, vacated in part, and remanded.

Plaintiff adequately stated claim against pastor for intentional infliction of emotional distress; plaintiff alleged that he sought counselling concerning his failing marriage, that pastor intentionally acted in extreme and outrageous manner by counselling plaintiff while pastor was involved with plaintiff's wife and by counselling in manner designed to covertly undermine couple's marriage, and that as result of pastor's actions he had suffered depression, despair, insomnia, anxiety, nervousness and emotional trauma.

Pastor Greenquist and that Greenquist held himself out as a professional counsellor. Yet, the complaint also states that Greenquist "encouraged [congregants] to seek counselling from the church and its clergy before seeking secular professionals in order 'to promote unity, closeness and interdependence within members of the congregation' (in accordance with stated church doctrine)." Furthermore, Greenquist "was acting * * * in furtherance of stated church doctrine when he counselled" the plaintiff. The plaintiff then lodges six specific charges against Pastor Greenquist, all premised on the allegation that the Pastor "failed to exercise ordinary care" and "wilfully defrauded and deceived" the plaintiff. According to the complaint the Pastor (1) coconspired with the plaintiff's wife to undermine the marriage; (2) did not divulge his conflict of interest; (3) failed to refer the plaintiff to a neutral counsellor; (4) rendered bad advice to further his own goals and sexual gratification; (5) divulged confidences to Linda; and (6) disregarded "all indicia of the transference and counter transference phenomena which normally occurs in the course of psychotherapy."

[6][7] We note, initially, that each of these allegations are based, in part, on an underlying allegation of fraud. The trial judge has permitted the plaintiff to replead a separate fraud count, the allegations of which essentially duplicate the ones above. Fraud is a distinct cause of action in Illinois. To that extent, we do not believe the allegations of fraud are germane to a count alleging professional negligence, be it that of a psychotherapist or a cleric. Cf. Williams v. Chicago Osteopathic Health Systems, 274 Ill.App.3d 1039, 1048, 211 Ill.Dec. 151, 654 N.E.2d 613 (1995) (recognizing differing elements and standard of proof between medical malpractice and fraud.) Therefore, we address the count for malpractice solely to the extent it alleges that the Pastor breached a duty of care owed to the plaintiff. Furthermore, the allegation regarding the Pastor's conspiracy with Linda also has nothing to do 452 267 with the Pastor's counselling relationship with the plaintiff, and, hence, we find that it fails to state a claim for professional negligence.

As to the remaining allegations, were this case to involve directly the sexual relationship between cleric and counsellee, we might be inclined to consider the reasoning of the court in MacDonell, 677 A.2d. at 263, which, as noted, permitted a claim of clergy malpractice, stressing the "bright line between counselling culminating in a sexual relationship with a counsellee *929 and other types of harm allegedly resulting from a failed counselling relationship." As in Bivin, the MacDonell court considered that when sexual misconduct is involved, the fear of treading on doctrinal matters is minimal, and to establish a standard of care involved "no impenetrable barrier." MacDonell, 677 A.2d at 264.

However, unlike in Bivin and MacDonell, the sexual liaison here, while impacting upon the plaintiff, involved his wife, who is not a plaintiff. Furthermore, to the extent the plaintiff alleges mishandling of the transference phenomenon, the Pastor did so with regard to Linda. Indeed, the plaintiff concedes in his brief that the Pastor's sexual liaison with Linda is not the focal point of his claim of negligent counselling.

In essence, the plaintiff's complaint alleges that Pastor Greenquist, while counselling him in accordance with duties established by church doctrine, breached his duty as a professional marriage counsellor. We believe there is an inherent contradiction in this core allegation which exposes the problem with claims of malpractice against members of the clergy, even when couched in terms of professional or psychotherapy malpractice.

Nonetheless, the plaintiff urges, relying on the allegations of his complaint in conjunction with the decision in Horak v. Biris, 130 Ill.App.3d 140, 85 Ill.Dec. 599, 474 N.E.2d 13 (1985), that Pastor Greenquist was required "to exercise the same professional care expected of other professionals in the field of psychotherapy." In Horak, a licensed social worker counselled the plaintiff on marital matters while he was engaged in a sexual relationship with the plaintiff's wife. The court recognized an action for social worker malpractice. However, central to the decision in that case was that the defendant held himself out as a social worker licensed by the State of Illinois. As such, he was required to exercise the degree of skill possessed by members of that profession.

The plaintiff's complaint does not allege that Greenquist is either a licensed social worker, licensed psychotherapist or a licensed marriage counsellor or that he held himself out as one.

Indeed, during the time when the plaintiff's claims accrued, the statutes in force authorizing the licensing of and the establishment of standards for practitioners of these professions specifically exempted religious practitioners from their ambit, so long as they do not hold themselves out as qualified under the acts. E.g. 225 ILCS 55/15(d) (West 1994) (Marriage and Family Therapy Licensing Act); 225 ILCS 20/4(2) (West 1994) (Clinical Social Work and Social Work Practice Act). Furthermore, to the extent Illinois has, subsequent to the alleged actions 930 involved in this case, statutorily recognized an action for sexual exploitation within the confines of a psychotherapeutic relationship, it has limited recovery under that act to the victims of the exploitation and, in addition, excluded "counselling of a religious nature" from the definition of "psychotherapy." 740 ILCS 140/1(e) (West 1992) (Sexual Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act).

Finally, although the plaintiff does allege that Greenquist mishandled psychotherapeutic principles, such as the transference phenomenon, he does not allege that Pastor Greenquist had either formal training in and knowledge of these principles or any counselling training outside of his training by the defendant ELCA. Indeed, the plaintiff's allegations presuppose that a Pastor is under the same ethical obligations the State imposes upon therapists it licenses. We cannot impose such obligations on a church within the constricts of the first amendment. That is the holding of Baumgartner, in which the court refused to impose the standards of the licensed medical professional upon a Christian Science practitioner. Accordingly, we will not uphold the plaintiff's complaint based upon the Horak decision.

*453 268 The plaintiff also urges that our supreme court's decision in Corgan v. Muehling, 143 Ill.2d 296, 158 Ill.Dec. 489, 574 N.E.2d 602 (1991), permits his claims. The plaintiff contends that, as in Corgan, because he alleged that Greenquist held himself out as a "professional counsellor," Greenquist may be held accountable for his negligent counselling, generally. Corgan involved the allegations of a plaintiff involved in a sexual relationship with the defendant psychologist. Even accepting Corgan for the broad proposition advanced by the plaintiff, we note again that the allegations of the complaint indicate that Pastor Greenquist's training as a counsellor was solely under the aegis of ELCA and was, thus, religious in nature.

The complaint does allege that the Pastor held himself out as a "skilled professional" in matters of counselling, but it also admits that the Pastor counselled in accordance with stated church doctrine and encouraged members to seek counselling within the church "before seeking secular professionals." The plaintiff alleged that Pastor Greenquist provided marriage counselling to him in accordance with church doctrine. That is not the same as a situation in which a plaintiff alleges that "a particular church * * * also offer[s] purely secular counselling as a service to members of its congregation or to a broader segment of the population in need of such services." Dausch v. Rykse, 52 F.3d 1425, 1433 (7th Cir. 1994). We believe that given the particular facts alleged by the plaintiff, a trial court would be required to investigate the nature of counselling, as well as the training 931 of counsellors, within this particular church. That is not permitted in Illinois (Baumgartner v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, 141 Ill.App.3d 898, 96 Ill.Dec. 114, 490 N.E.2d 1319 (1986)), or in any other jurisdiction. See Dausch, 52 F.3d at 1432 n. 2.

This area requires, as the MacDonell court recognized, that a bright line be drawn between those claims actionable and those which impinge on first amendment guarantees. In the factual context of this case, we believe that "line" requires us to uphold the trial judge's ruling. At core, the plaintiff has alleged that Pastor Greenquist is a very bad counsellor who tried during counselling sessions to hide an illicit affair with the plaintiff's wife. Yet, according to the complaint, he was performing the counselling itself in the context of duties imposed upon him as a cleric by church doctrine. And, as the plaintiff concedes, this case is about the counselling. We believe that to permit the plaintiff's claims would effectively erase the bright line espoused by the MacDonell court, a line we agree must be drawn. Accordingly, the trial judge did not err in dismissing the count for psychotherapy malpractice against Pastor Greenquist.

[8] As to the plaintiff's allegations of malpractice against Bishop Hicks, we hold that the plaintiff has not properly alleged a counselling relationship, let alone an actionable duty. In response to the plaintiff's request that Bishop Hicks render counselling services to him as a result of Pastor Greenquist's activities, the Bishop responded that the plaintiff should seek professional counselling. The plaintiff fails to allege any facts that support a conclusion that this was a "counselling" session. Rather, his complaint centers on the Bishop's refusal to counsel him. First, we believe that the allegations clearly indicate that the plaintiff approached the Bishop within the context of his duties as the head of the church. As such, the claim is clearly non-justiciable. Furthermore, we fail to perceive how the Bishop's response is actionable, even if he was acting in order to effect damage control, as the plaintiff alleges. We also conclude that the disciplinary action that Bishop Hicks subsequently did or did not take with regard to Pastor Greenquist is, as regards this case, outside any relationship he had with the plaintiff. The trial judge properly dismissed the psychotherapy malpractice claim against Bishop Hicks.

The plaintiff also alleges that both Pastor Greenquist and Bishop Hicks breached a fiduciary duty owed to the plaintiff. In the count against the Pastor, the plaintiff assigns, as breaches of the duty, the same allegations, save the mishandling of the transference phenomenon, as he did in his count for malpractice. That is, that the Pastor "wilfully defrauded" him by undermining the marital relationship; divulging confidences to Linda; not revealing his conflict of 454 269 interest; and rendering advice against the plaintiff's best interest.

[9][10] *932 Under Illinois law, a fiduciary relationship is recognized to exist when "a special confidence [is] reposed in one who, by reason of such confidence, must act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the person reposing such confidence." Estate of Osborn, 128 Ill.App.3d 453, 455, 83 Ill.Dec. 694, 470 N.E.2d 1114 (1984). Such a relationship may exist as a matter of law, "or it may be the result of a more informal relationship--moral, social, domestic or even personal in its origin." Estate of Osborn, 128 Ill.App.3d at 455, 83 Ill.Dec. 694, 470 N.E.2d 1114.

Applying this definition in Dausch v. Rykse, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that Illinois law, in conjunction with the first amendment, prohibited the recognition of an action for breach of fiduciary duty premised upon the counselling relationship between a cleric and a church member with whom the cleric had been sexually involved. Dausch, 52 F.3d at 1438.

The Dausch court reasoned that in order to determine such a duty would require the court

> "to define a reasonable duty standard and to evaluate [the cleric's] conduct against that standard, an inquiry identical to that which Illinois has declined to undertake in the context of a clergy malpractice claim and one that is of doubtful validity under the Free Exercise Clause. It is clear that Illinois would not entertain a claim for breach of fiduciary obligation under the circumstances alleged here." Dausch, 52 F.3d at 1438.

However, other jurisdictions which have faced this question have had "no difficulty" in concluding that a cleric's sexual activity with a counsellee or the spouse of a counsellee may be used by the counsellee as the basis to state a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty. Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275, 289 (Colo.1988). See also MacDonell, 677 A.2d at 264-65; Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church, 898 F.Supp. 1169 (N.D.Tex.1995).

[11] Although we agree with the courts in these jurisdictions that the relationship between a cleric and parishioner reflects many aspects of a fiduciary one, we hold that under Illinois law, a contention that a cleric has breached his duty as a fiduciary is not actionable. We believe that when a parishioner lodges such a claim, religion is not "merely incidental" to a plaintiff's relationship with a defendant, "it [is] the foundation for it." H.R.B. v. J.L.G., 913 S.W.2d 92, 99 (Mo.App.1995). The fiduciary relationship is inescapably premised upon the cleric's status as an expert in theological and spiritual matters. The plaintiff's complaint confirms this.

In lodging his claim for breach of fiduciary duty, the plaintiff alleged that in divulging confidences to the Pastor, he relied on the Pastor's "representations concerning his professionalism, training, *933 skill, and experience, as well as [his] commitment to God and religion." We consider it imprudent for a court to attempt to dissect the secular from the sectarian in this equation. While we would consider unlikely the Pastor's ability to establish that his behavior in this case was religiously motivated (cf. H.R.B., 913 S.W.2d at 98-99), the plaintiff's relief lies in other well- recognized causes of action, such as the count alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress, which we reinstate, as well as the fraud count which the trial judge permitted the plaintiff to replead and which repeatedly finds its way into every allegation of both malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty raised by the plaintiff. Thus, we affirm the dismissal of the counts for breach of fiduciary duty as against both Pastor Greenquist and Bishop Hicks. Furthermore, in light of our holding in this regard, we affirm the dismissal of counts seven, nine, twelve and thirteen of the plaintiff's complaint in that they are all claims of respondeat superior against the church defendants arising out of the alleged breaches of fiduciary duty by Pastor Greenquist and Bishop Hicks.

[12] The trial judge also dismissed the plaintiff's count alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress against Pastor Greenquist. In order to plead such a claim, the plaintiff must allege facts establishing that the defendant's conduct was "extreme and 455 270 outrageous and that the defendant either intended his conduct to inflict severe emotional distress or knew that there was a high probability that the conduct would cause such distress." The plaintiff also must allege that the conduct, in fact, caused severe emotional distress. McGrath v. Fahey, 126 Ill.2d 78, 86, 127 Ill.Dec. 724, 533 N.E.2d 806 (1988).

[13][14] A complaint for intentional infliction of emotional distress may stand "only where the conduct complained of [is] so outrageous 'as to go beyond all bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civil community.' " Pavilon v. Kaferly, 204 Ill.App.3d 235, 245, 149 Ill.Dec. 549, 561 N.E.2d 1245 (1990) . We may assess the outrageousness of a defendant's actions based, in part, upon a "defendant's improper use of a position of power which gives him the ability to adversely affect the plaintiff's interests." Kolegas v. Heftel Broadcasting Corp., 154 Ill.2d 1, 22, 180 Ill.Dec. 307, 607 N.E.2d 201 (1992).

[15] The plaintiff alleged that he sought counselling "concerning his failing marriage." Pastor Greenquist acted in an extreme and outrageous manner by counselling the plaintiff while the Pastor was involved with Linda Amato and by counselling in a manner designed to "covertly undermine" the couple's marriage. The plaintiff discovered the relationship between Greenquist and Linda when he found correspondences the two had been exchanging, including *934 Christmas and Valentine's Day cards, as well as "enclosed love letters." Greenquist told the plaintiff that his relationship with Linda was " God's will." The plaintiff concludes that as a result of the Pastor's actions, he has suffered "depression, despair, insomnia, anxiety, nervousness and emotional trauma."

We believe these allegations satisfy the plaintiff's pleading burden. The defendant allegedly used his position to learn confidential information, which he divulged to Linda in an effort to destroy the plaintiff's marriage. The plaintiff has alleged that the Pastor's actions were intentional and that he has suffered various and severe emotional distresses as a result. Cf. Kolegas, 154 Ill.2d at 21-25, 180 Ill.Dec. 307, 607 N.E.2d 201. Therefore, we vacate the portion of the trial judge's order dismissing count II of the plaintiff's complaint.

[16] The remaining counts are against the church defendants and sound in respondeat superior based upon the intentional infliction of emotional distress by Greenquist, as well as emotional distress occasioned by Bishop Hicks. Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer may be liable for the torts of his servant when such acts are committed in the course of employment and in furtherance of the employer's business; however, the employer is not liable if the employee commits the acts solely for his own benefit. Giraldi v. Lamson, 205 Ill.App.3d 1025, 1030, 150 Ill.Dec. 829, 563 N.E.2d 956 (1990).

[17] As to the church defendants' liability for Pastor Greenquist's actions (counts VIII, X and XIV), we hold that the complaint fails to allege that the Pastor's actions in deceiving and otherwise counselling the plaintiff were for anything other than his own benefit. For instance, paragraph 25 of the common allegations states, "PASTOR did not reject DUANE'S requests for counselling or refer said request to an independent third party* * *, but rather welcomed the opportunity to counsel DUANE in order to further his own personal goals." Furthermore, paragraph 26 of the common allegations states that "PASTOR * * * counselled DUANE against DUANE'S best interests in order to particularly persuasive in light of the analysis by federal courts on this issue. [FN1]

> FN1. Likewise, the Court is not inclined to place any emphasis on any of the many other state court cases cited by the parties.

Furthermore, while Smith 's neutral principles exception is valid, it is not very helpful under the facts as alleged in this case. Plaintiff's claims rely on general tort liability theories, which do not fit the *1249 description of "valid and neutral law[s] of general applicability." Smith, 494 U.S. at 879, 110 S.Ct. 1595. The law at issue in Smith was a straightforward prohibition on the possession of certain specified controlled substances. Consequently, the law in that case does not translate well to a situation in which the Defendants are charged with outrageous conduct and negligent hiring and/or supervision. [FN2] Those claims, by definition, require much more subjective judgment on the appropriateness of the conduct than the across-the-board prohibition in Smith.

> FN2. The Court notes that Defendant Gourley has not made an argument based on the First Amendment. Consequently, Plaintiff's argument that the First Amendment does not shield claims based on the neutral law providing for the protection of children against sexual abuse is more tenuous when applied to hiring/supervision claims than it would be claims against an individual who is actually accused of perpetrating the abuse.

Consequently, the Court must focus its analysis on the claims against these Defendants and move directly to the issue of whether considering those claims would violate either the Free Exercise clause or the Establishment clause.

[1][2] "It is well-settled that when a court is required to interpret Canon Law or internal church policies and practices, the First Amendment is violated because such judicial inquiry would constitute excessive government entanglement with religion." Isely v. Capuchin Province, 880 F.Supp. 1138, 1150 (E.D.Mich.1995), citing Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 96 S.Ct. 2372, 49 L.Ed.2d 151 (1976) and numerous other cases. "The foregoing cases make clear that any inquiry into the decision of who should be permitted to become or remain a priest necessarily would involve prohibited excessive entanglement with religion." Id.

"[A]ny inquiry into the policies and practices of the Church Defendants in hiring or supervising their clergy raises the same kind of First Amendment problems discussed above, which might involve the Court in making sensitive judgments about the propriety of the Church Defendants' supervision in light of their religious beliefs." Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F.Supp. 321, 332 (S.D.N.Y.1991). The Court has also considered Doe v. Hartz, 970 F.Supp. 1375, 1431 (N.D.Iowa 1997) which found that "who may become or remain a priest must, almost inevitably involve an inquiry into church doctrine or policies, barring a negligent hiring or retention claim on First Amendment grounds." That court also held that it was premature to dismiss the negligent supervision claim prior to the summary judgment stage because the pleadings were inadequate to establish excessive entanglement.

In addition to the Colorado caselaw with which the Court has already dealt, Plaintiff relies on Smith v. O'Connell, 986 F.Supp. 73 (D.R.I.1997). That court held that it had jurisdiction over the negligent supervision claim as it could be decided based on neutral tort law principles of general application without the need to interpret religious doctrine. It also held that the Free Exercise Clause was not violated by the exercise of such jurisdiction.

The Court notes that the Smith v. O'Connell opinion dealt with motions to dismiss which were not directed at specific counts in the voluminous complaints. Consequently, the court dealt with what it perceived to be the plaintiffs "core claims." Id. at 75. With regard to the Free Exercise Clause, the Court found that the defendants had not established that religious doctrine would have prevented them from exercising reasonable care to preclude the sexual abuse of children. In dealing with the Establishment Clause, the court again reiterated that the motions were not directed at particular claims but found that it was "unlikely" that exercising jurisdiction over the case would cause excessive entanglement because no interpretation of religious doctrine appeared Consequently, Plaintiff's claim against the Archdiocese Defendants for breach of fiduciary duty is dismissed for failure to state a claim.

Motions for Summary Judgment

Statute of Limitations

All Defendants have moved for summary judgment on the basis of the statute of limitations. Granting summary judgment is appropriate when the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, admissions, or affidavits show that there is no genuine issue of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c); Redmon v. United States, 934 F.2d 1151, 1155 (10th Cir.1991); Devery Implement Company v. J.I. Case Company, 944 F.2d 724, 726 (10th Cir.1991); Ash Creek Mining Co. v. Lujan, 934 F.2d 240, 242 (10th Cir.1991); Continental Casualty Co. v. P.D.C., Inc., 931 F.2d 1429, 1430 (10th Cir.1991).

Summary judgment may be granted if the court concludes that no "rational trier of fact" could find for the nonmoving party based on the showing made in the motion and response. Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587, 106 S.Ct. 1348, 89 L.Ed.2d 538 (1986). After the moving party has come forward with the motion showing no issue of fact for trial, the party resisting a summary judgment motion must "come forward with specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Id. The finding of no factual issue must be based upon the record as a whole. Id.

It is the nonmoving party's burden to show that there are genuine issues of material fact to be determined. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 320, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986). The court must view the evidence and its reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the party who opposes the motion for summary judgment. Palermo v. First National Bank and Trust Co., 894 F.2d 363, 365 (10th Cir.1990). Evidence that is merely colorable or not significantly probative is inadequate to withstand a summary judgment motion. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249, 106 S.Ct. 2505, 91 L.Ed.2d 202 (1986); Redmon, 934 F.2d at 1155. Immaterial factual disputes will not defeat a motion for summary judgment. Palermo, 894 F.2d at 366; Anderson, 477 U.S. at 247-48, 106 S.Ct. 2505.

[7] The arguments regarding the summary judgment issue have been clarified somewhat by oral argument on the motions. Plaintiff has conceded that the two year statute of limitations set forth in C.R.S. § 13-80-102 applies to the claims against the Archdiocese Defendants. Defendant Gourley appears to have conceded that the six year statute of limitations in C.R.S. § 13-80-103.7 would apply if it is found that Plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue until after that statute took effect in July 1993. It also appears that the parties have agreed that the real issue on the statute of limitations is when the cause of action accrued. If the cause of action accrued at the time of the alleged events at issue, the statute will have run on all of Plaintiff's claims. If the cause of action did not accrue until July 1997, when Plaintiff started treatment with his current treating psychologist, Dr. James Shenk, 1253 the statute had not yet run when this action was filed in September 1997.

The statute that defines the accrual of causes of actions is C.R.S. § 13-80-108(1). It provides that "a cause of action for injury to person ... shall be considered to accrue on the date, both the injury and its cause are known or should have been known by the exercise of reasonable diligence." The parties' arguments on this issue are not complicated. Defendants argue that Plaintiff has made admissions which establish conclusively that he knew or should have known of the injury and its cause at the time of the alleged abuse. Plaintiff argues that there is a genuine issue of material fact on whether he understood the injury and its cause at the time of the alleged incidents or only after he started treatment with Dr. Shenk.

The parties agree that the case which is most informative on the issue of accrual of this type of cause of action is Cassidy v. Smith, 817 P.2d 555 (Colo.App.1991). That case involved sisters who brought an action against a former friend of the family for claims based on his alleged sexual abuse of the sisters. The defendant moved to dismiss based on the statute of limitations but the plaintiffs argued that "they were unaware of the wrongful nature of the acts, the resulting damage from the acts, and the causal relationship between the two." Id. at 557. While defendant argued that the causes accrued at the time the plaintiffs reached the age of 18, the plaintiffs contended that they did not discover the essential elements until at least 10 years later when they were confronted by their mother.

The court in Cassidy considered C.R.S. § 13-80-108 in light of the affidavits filed by the plaintiffs and at least one treating psychologist. Those affidavits revealed that "from the time the incidents began, there was a negative impact upon their emotional well-being which indicated psychological problems and guilt were being caused by this relationship." Id. One plaintiff admitted experiencing "pain and despair, alienation from her peers, parents and sisters" and leading a "divided and compartmentalized life." Id. Both knew that the activity was improper, inappropriate and illegal at the time it occurred and both admitted feeling bewilderment, shame, anger and/or confusion at the time of the activity. The court also remarked on the fact that both plaintiffs were college educated and had spent a significant period of time away from the defendant.

The court's conclusion was that there was no genuine issue of material fact regarding the timing of the plaintiffs' knowledge of the injury and its cause. "[W]e conclude, as a matter of law, that plaintiffs were aware of the wrongful nature of defendant's acts and that they had sufficient knowledge concerning the existence of resulting psychological harm that the statute of limitations began to run when they achieved their majority." Id. at 558.

Plaintiff's argument on this subject is basically that he repressed knowledge of the injury and its cause until he established a therapy relationship with Dr. Shenk. The affidavit of Dr. Shenk, attached to Plaintiff's response to Defendants' motions as Exhibit 2, states that there were several reasons for this repression. One was the threats made to Plaintiff by Gourley. Another was Gourley's status as a "high-profile community leader" and "spiritual authority." Dr. Shenk states that the repression caused Plaintiff to be unable to acknowledge and address the reality that he had been sexually abused and harmed by that abuse. Dr. Shenk further states that these circumstances led Plaintiff to blame himself rather than attribute blame to Gourley and that only psychological treatment in June or July of 1997 allowed him to acknowledge the connection between his psychological problems and the abuse by Gourley.

Defendants' argument on this subject is based on references to specific evidence which they contend meets the standard set forth in Cassidy. They argue that this evidence shows that Plaintiff did acknowledge the assaults and resulting harm prior 1254 to June or July 1997. This evidence includes:

1. A statement on page 4 of the original complaint which says that Plaintiff has been continually subject to coercion, duress, religious duress, mental infirmity, disability and unsound mind "from the dates of the abuse to the present, and largely because of his abuse." [FN4]

> FN4. Although the Court's Order dated July 10, 1998 allowed Plaintiff to amend his complaint, that Order also stated that the factual statements in the original complaint would be considered judicial admissions.

2. A statement in paragraph 13 of Plaintiff's affidavit that he "was embarrassed, humiliated, ashamed and fearful about what happened."

3. A statement in paragraph 12 of Plaintiff's affidavit that said Gourley threatened to kill Plaintiff and his mother if Plaintiff told anyone what happened.

4. A statement in the report of Plaintiff's treating psychologist, Dr. Shenk, dated August 4, 1997, that Plaintiff "had been" reluctant to pursue the issues regarding Gourley "because his grandmother likes the priest, as does his aunt." [FN5]

> FN5. This report is attached to Gourley's reply brief in support of his motion for summary judgment as Exhibit B.

5. A statement on page 2 of the statement from Plaintiff's Press Release which stated that while he was "unable to acknowledge the sexual assault and abuse by Gourley as such," he was always "cognizant of [those] actions."

6. A statement on page 7 of the original complaint that Gourley's actions resulted in the infliction of

BEAR VALLEY CHURCH OF CHRIST, a Colorado corporation, Petitioner/Cross-Respondent,
v.
Denise DeBOSE, and J.D.B., a minor child, by and through his parent and next friend, Denise DeBose, Respondents/Cross-Petitioners,
and
Homer Wolfe, Respondent/Cross-Petitioner.

No. 95SC42.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 13, 1997.

Child brought action against church and minister, alleging that minister engaged in pattern of inappropriate touching during child's counseling sessions. The District Court, City and County of Denver, Herbert L. Stern, III, J., entered judgment in favor of child, and appeal was taken. The Court of Appeals, 890 P.2d 214, reversed and remanded, and certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Lohr, J., held that: (1) free exercise clause of First Amendment did not provide defense to minister; (2) free exercise clause of First Amendment did not protect church from liability; (3) expert testimony concerning minister's alleged examination of another young counselee's genitals was relevant; (4) testimony concerning minister's use of therapeutic massage with young counselees was not directed toward establishing impermissible claim for clergy malpractice; and (5) whether jury verdicts were inconsistent or duplicative was not preserved for review.

Reversed and remanded with instructions.

Justice LOHR delivered the Opinion of the Court.

This case presents constitutional, evidentiary, and jury instruction issues arising from the trial of tort claims brought against a religious institution and one of its former pastors. The plaintiffs, a mother and her son, filed suit against their former church and the pastor, alleging a variety of tortious offenses stemming from the pastor's conduct during counseling sessions with the son. The trial court allowed a jury to consider the claims, and the jury returned several verdicts for the plaintiffs. In a divided opinion, the Colorado Court of Appeals reversed the judgment entered on the verdicts and remanded the case for a new trial. DeBose v. Bear Valley Church of Christ, 890 P.2d 214, 218, 231 (Colo.App.1994). We granted certiorari and now reverse the judgment of the court of appeals and remand with directions to reinstate the trial court's judgment.

FN4. Sanderson so testified despite admitting that he was aware of Mrs. Wygal's express concern that her son might be the victim of sexual molestation.

The initial meeting in May of 1987 resulted in a meeting in June or July of 1987, where Wygal and his wife, Mary Wygal, met with Wolfe and the Bear Valley elders. The Wygals testified that the June or July of 1987 meeting served as a forum for the Wygals to express their concerns about Wolfe's counseling methods with their son, including Wolfe's questions regarding circumcision. [FN5] Mrs. Wygal testified that Wolfe explained at the June or July of 1987 meeting that there must be a "misunderstanding" because "he was just going to take [the Wygals' child] to a book and show him what his private parts would look like if he was properly circumcised."

FN5. The record reflects that the Wygals also brought the complaints of either one or two other children to the attention of the elders during the meeting in June or July of 1987. Mrs. Wygal testified that her son appeared at the meeting to confront Wolfe with the claims of a friend who asserted that Wolfe asked "to examine him" and "rubbed his back or stroked his back." Mr. Wygal testified that he told Wolfe and the elders that a young male counselee had complained to one of the Wygals' children that "Homer [Wolfe] was rubbing on him all the time." The record is unclear whether the same child made both complaints.

Mr. Wygal testified that the elders asked the Wygals in the June or July of 1987 meeting to allow the elders to investigate the *1319 situation, "[a]nd they assured us that they would take care of it." The elders had already spoken to Wolfe in April of 1986 about the need to focus on "biblical" counseling, as opposed to "professional and medical" counseling. Although Sanderson thought that the Wygals' concerns were a "family issue" and expressed that view to the other elders, Wolfe agreed in testimony that the elders instructed him on August 13, 1987, that "they wanted it clearly to be pastoral counseling and not anything in the clinical area." [FN6]

FN6. The minutes from the elders' August 13, 1987, meeting also include a notation that the "[e]lders postponed the class taught by [Wolfe] to a later date as a result of the recent Wygal situation."

Still, the elders allowed Wolfe to continue counseling those persons who were, in Wolfe's words, "sensitive" or in need of "emotional stability," including the DeBose child. Wolfe asked permission from the elders to continue his counseling in this limited fashion, and remained "open about the amount of counseling that he was doing." Wolfe testified that the elders never asked him about his counseling techniques, even after the Wygals complained, and that he would have been forthright with the elders about his methods if they had.

The Wygals were not satisfied when the elders concluded after the meeting in June or July of 1987 that the Wygals' complaint was simply the product of a "misunderstanding." The Wygals were also concerned that they had never heard back from the elders regarding any resolution of the complaints voiced at the meeting in June or July of 1987. As a result, Mr. Wygal shared his concerns with his teacher at the Bear Valley School of Preaching, Jack Carter, who testified that he in turn spoke with the elders about the Wygals' complaints. Mr. Carter agreed in testimony that the elders responded that they had already placed restrictions on Wolfe "in the areas of sexual activity or sexual counseling."

The Wygals remained dissatisfied with the elders' handling of their complaints. Approximately nine months after the first meeting in June or July of 1987, the Wygals met with the elders and Wolfe again in March of 1988, and discussed, according to one of the elders, "the matter of touching," "[Wolfe's] manner of hugging the [Wygal] boy," and "massaging on the [Wygal boy's] back." Mr. Wygal testified that Wolfe explained to the elders during the March 1988 meeting that it was necessary to examine the genitals of the Wygals' son because if the boy was not properly circumcised, it could cause the boy to be "easily FN8. The judgment, as amended, awarded Denise DeBose $11,487.73 against Wolfe and $30,502.39 against Bear Valley. Wolfe was jointly and severally liable for $9,168.73 of DeBose's award against Bear Valley. The DeBose child was awarded $157,835.76 against Wolfe and $458,098.07 against Bear Valley. Wolfe was jointly and severally liable for $75,516.68 of the DeBose child's award against Bear Valley.

On appeal, the Colorado Court of Appeals, with one of the three panel members specially concurring and one dissenting, reversed the judgment and remanded the case for a new trial. DeBose v. Bear Valley Church of Christ, 890 P.2d 214, 218, 231 (Colo.App.1994). The court of appeals held that (1) Wolfe was entitled to a jury instruction reflecting his theory that his counseling activities were protected by the First Amendment, id. at 221-222, (2) the trial court erred in permitting expert witnesses to testify regarding a professional standard for pastoral counseling, id. at 224-28, and (3) the jury awards were either inconsistent or duplicative, id. at 222- 24. We then granted certiorari to review the case. [FN9]

FN9. We granted certiorari on the following issues, as reframed by the court:
1. Whether the First Amendment provides a defense to tort claims if the alleged tortious conduct is motivated by a sincerely held religious belief.
2. Whether the court of appeals erred in holding that expert testimony regarding conduct appropriate in counseling a minor was admitted in error.
3. Whether the court of appeals departed from accepted precedent in reversing verdicts where the defendants did not object to the instructions or verdict forms at trial and on appeal.
4. Whether the court of appeals erred in reversing the jury verdicts based on their form.

II. First Amendment Issues
A. First Amendment Defense of Homer Wolfe

[1] In Destefano v. Grabrian, we held that when a defendant raises the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment as a defense, "the threshold question is whether the conduct of the defendant is religious." 763 P.2d 275, 283 (Colo.1988) (citing 1321 Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215- 16, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 1533-34, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972); Note, Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress by Spiritual Counselors: Can Outrageous Conduct be "Free Exercise"?, 84 Mich.L.Rev. 1269, 1302 (1986)). Destefano involved a Catholic priest who engaged in an adulterous relationship with a woman to whom the priest was providing marital counseling. 763 P.2d at 279. The woman and her husband asserted tort claims against the priest and his diocese. Id. at 277-79. We recognized that the Catholic Church requires its priests to take a vow of celibacy, a principle the defendants acknowledged in their brief by agreeing that "sexual activity by a priest is fundamentally antithetical to Catholic doctrine." Id. at 284. Noting that the defendants did not claim that the priest was motivated by a sincerely held religious belief to engage in an adulterous relationship with his counselee, we concluded that "[w]hen the alleged wrongdoing of a cleric clearly falls outside the beliefs and doctrine of his religion, he cannot avail himself of the protection afforded by the first amendment." Id. We foresaw, however, that "[i]f the alleged conduct of Grabrian was dictated by his sincerely held religious beliefs or was consistent with the practice of his religion, we would have to resolve a difficult first amendment issue." Id.

In Destefano, we reversed the summary judgment against the plaintiff on her breach of fiduciary duty claim after determining that neither the priest nor the diocese had argued that the priest's adulterous relationship with the counselee plaintiff was motivated by a sincerely held religious belief. Id. at 284. Similarly, we must determine as a threshold matter whether Wolfe or Bear Valley asserted a sincere religious basis for Wolfe's use of therapeutic massage with counselees.

The court of appeals concluded that Wolfe summarized his massaging of counselees as "a technique based upon his desire to facilitate through denim jeans and hard fabrics you don't get contact, and the whole thing here is--the purpose of [massage] is to assist in communication."

Evidenced by the testimony presented at trial, Wolfe never asserted a religious belief for his utilization of massage techniques with counselees. [FN11] As noted in the dissent to the court of appeals' decision:

> FN11. Wolfe's attorney, in the course of opening statements, explained Wolfe's use of therapeutic massage techniques in counseling in terms of wholly secular reasons:
> And Homer [Wolfe] did learn in his counseling that sometimes if a person was having trouble communicating with him, he couldn't break through the inhibitions or impediments to be able to communicate or receive communications from the counselee, he also found that hugging or massaging would sometimes be of assistance in helping people to relax and communicate. In fact, I think Homer's testimony will be that he had first discovered the success of massaging as a means of helping people to communicate when his own sons were growing up, and at times, as all adolescents or preadolescents do, go through a period of time when they may feel rebellious or dissatisfied with the acceptance of authority. And there would be times when his sons were not able to respond to efforts to discuss things and bring them out into the open, and he found that if he would massage them, it helped them to relax, and then they were able to communicate in many things that might have otherwise become problems that we hear about so much of teenagers, who not only become rebellious but would act on their rebellion.
> Those circumstances were averted in Homer's family, and he had a very happy married life, and his sons were happy and grew up to be happy men, who now have happy families of their own, because Homer had the wisdom to help them to communicate.
> According to the record, even though he claimed that he could not remember using *1323 massage on the minor plaintiff, Wolfe explained that he used massage to assist his counselees in communicating their problems to him so he could help them. Since he believed human touch to be one of the best methods of communication between people, he chose this type of massage to help counselees relax and, consequently, communicate more freely with him.
> Thus, although his ultimate goal in spiritual counseling was for counselees to receive help from God in resolving their problems, by Wolfe's own testimony, his choice to use massage with children had no biblical, doctrinal, or spiritual basis, justification, or underpinning. Despite the religious setting, the described massage technique simply reflects Wolfe's choice of a relaxation and communication method between himself and his counselees.

Id. at 236 (Davidson, J., dissenting) (emphasis in original). [FN12] We agree with those observations and conclusions.

> FN12. In view of our determination that Wolfe never asserted a religious belief for his utilization of massage techniques with young counselees, we will not address several arguments of the parties, including whether (1) Wolfe engaged in religious "conduct" or "belief," compare DeBose v. Bear Valley Church of Christ, 890 P.2d 214, 220 (Colo.App.1994) with DeBose, 890 P.2d at 236-38 (Davidson, J., dissenting), and any resulting implications; (2) the trial court was obligated to provide the jury with a First Amendment instruction that was not tendered by the defendants; (3) the torts of breach of fiduciary duty and outrageous conduct are religion-neutral laws according to Employment Division, Department of Human Resources of Oregon v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 876-82, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 1598-1602, 108 L.Ed.2d 876 (1990), and *Church of the Lukumi Babalu Aye v. required by the Religious Freedom Restoration Act of 1993 (RFRA), 42 U.S.C. § 2000bb (1993), is constitutional and supersedes Smith, and if so, whether we could apply RFRA to this case retroactively, but see Van Osdol v. Vogt, 908 P.2d 1122, 1130 n. 12 (Colo.1996) (RFRA inapplicable to events preceding its passage).

B. First Amendment Defense of Bear Valley

[2] Regardless of any alleged religious basis for Wolfe's decision to treat young counselees with therapeutic massage, Bear Valley contends that it is entitled to First Amendment protection for its actions in hiring, supervising, disciplining and ultimately discharging Wolfe. We disagree, as did the court of appeals. See DeBose, 890 P.2d at 221. In Van Osdol v. Vogt, 908 P.2d 1122, 1128 (Colo.1996), we held that "[t]he decision to hire or discharge a minister is itself inextricable from religious doctrine." However, we took care to distinguish internal hiring disputes within religious organizations from general negligence claims filed by injured third parties:

> While claims for illegal hiring or discharge of a minister inevitably involve religious doctrine, that is not the case for a claim of negligent hiring of a minister. The claim of negligent hiring is brought after an employee has harmed a third party through his or her office of employment. An employer is found liable for negligent hiring if, at the time of hiring, the employer had reason to believe that hiring this person would create an undue risk of harm to others. Connes v. Molalla Transp. System, Inc., 831 P.2d 1316, 1321 (Colo.1992); Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213 cmt. d (1958). Hence, the court does not inquire into the employer's broad reasons for choosing this particular employee for the position, but instead looks to whether the specific danger which ultimately manifested itself could have reasonably been foreseen at the time of hiring. This inquiry, even when applied to a minister employee, is so limited and factually based that it can be accomplished with no inquiry into religious beliefs. See Moses v. Diocese of Colo., 863 P.2d 310, 320-21 (Colo.1993) (holding that although courts must not become embroiled in interpreting or weighing church doctrine, a claim of negligent hiring of a minister is actionable because it does not require such interpretation or weighing of religious belief but instead is merely application of a secular *1324 standard to secular conduct), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1137, 114 S.Ct. 2153, 128 L.Ed.2d 880 (1994).

Van Osdol, 908 P.2d at 1132-33 n. 17. As we noted in Van Osdol, id., courts may review an injured third party's claim that a religious institution negligently hired, supervised, or failed to discharge one of its employees without implicating or running afoul of the First Amendment. See, e.g., Moses, 863 P.2d at 321, 329-31 ("Tenantry's claims in this case do not involve disputes within the church....").

III. Expert Testimony Issues

The court of appeals held that the trial court erred in admitting certain expert testimony, and concluded that the admission of such testimony constituted prejudicial error. DeBose, 890 P.2d at 224, 228. The court determined that the tendered expert testimony was prejudicial for three reasons. Id. at 227-28. First, the court held that a portion of the testimony was irrelevant. Id. at 227. "[T]here was no evidence that Wolfe asked the minor to compare his genitals to photographs in any book.... At best, it related to incidents allegedly occurring during sessions with other counselees." Id. Second, the court determined that some of the testimony presented the jury with an inquiry prohibited by the First Amendment, i.e., "whether Wolfe's techniques were, in fact, valid from a Biblical standpoint." Id. Third, the court held that some of the testimony provided the jurors with professional standards for both secular and pastoral therapeutic counseling. Id. The court concluded that a secular standard was irrelevant in the pastoral counseling context, and that a pastoral standard impermissibly allowed the jurors to render a decision based on "clergy malpractice." Id. The court also noted that the prejudicial impact of the expert testimony was "exacerbated" by the trial court's failure to instruct the jury that Wolfe might be insulated from liability pursuant to the First Amendment. Id. We do not agree that the trial court erred in admitting the expert testimony, and will address each of the court of appeals' concerns in turn. [FN13]

FN13. In view of our resolution of this issue, we will not address the impact that the defendants' legal strategy otherwise might have on our analysis. In his disclosure certificate, Wolfe affirmatively placed the plaintiffs on notice that "[d]efendant Wolfe may call one or more experts to testify about the appropriateness of his counseling practices." Furthermore, Bear Valley's attorney specifically asked one of the witnesses in question about "standards" for "pastoral counselors."

A.

[3] First, the court of appeals incorrectly concluded that the expert testimony concerning Wolfe's alleged examination of a young counselee's genitals was "irrelevant." Id. at 227. The testimony at issue focused on the accusations of the Wygals' son. The appropriateness of the therapy techniques Wolfe used on the Wygals' son directly related to questions of (1) whether Bear Valley was on notice of alleged improprieties in Wolfe's practice but continued to allow Wolfe to see other counselees, including the DeBose child, and (2) whether Bear Valley could have prevented reasonably foreseeable harm to DeBose. See Destefano, 763 P.2d at 288 ("a person who knows or should have known that an employee's conduct would subject third parties to an unreasonable risk of harm may be directly liable to third parties for harm proximately caused by his conduct") (footnote omitted). The DeBoses' attorney offered the expert in part as one qualified to render opinions on "responsibility of supervision in church settings and avoiding reasonable foreseeable injury." The trial court took care to preface the introduction of this testimony with extensive and repeated cautionary instructions, limiting the evidentiary use of the testimony to the relevant issue of notice as it relates to prevention of reasonably foreseeable harm:

> [DeBoses' attorney, in sidebar discussion with court]: The testimony you're about to hear may be used for the purpose of showing notice
> ....
>
> The Court: Okay. I'll make an instruction, but you can make further record if you need to.
>
> *1325 Jurors, you have already heard some references to statements or testimony of two individuals, Mr. and Mrs. Gary Wygal, W-y-g-a-l, and this witness is about to refer to statements that they allegedly made involving themselves or their children, as the case may be. This is one of those situations where evidence can be admitted for one purpose, but not for another purpose, and is an appropriate time for me to caution you about this particular type of testimony. I mentioned this yesterday as a possibility.
>
> We have two defendants in this case. We have Homer Wolfe, and we have the Bear Valley Church of Christ. There may be a time when evidence would be allowed as against one of the Defendants,. but not the other Defendant. There may be a time when the evidence is allowed as against both Defendants, but only for a specific purpose.
>
> The Defendants dispute these so-called--using [Wolfe's counsel's] language-- other acts that are alleged to have occurred or taken piace by Homer Wolfe. Other acts meaning, other reportedly improper acts, which are of a nature--a similar nature as what Plaintiffs in this case assert happened. We are not here to determine whether these other acts, in fact, occurred or not. They are disputed. That is not what this case is about.
>
> I am permitting this testimony with respect to what the Wygals informed the church about--or at least about their concerns, for the limited purpose of allowing Plaintiff to present evidence, and whether you accept or reject it is your choice, but allow the Plaintiff to present evidence that the church was aware of possible problems involving Homer Wolfe's counseling. So it is being admitted for the purpose of what the church knew and when.
>
> It's what we call--we lawyers call a notice issue. The fact that there's testimony that these things occurred does not mean that they did, in fact, occur, because that is essentially hearsay. We don't have, for instance, I think, the son coming into court to say what did or did not happen to him. So it's important that you understand the fine evidentiary line that we are drawing here.
>
> ... Again, jurors, I want to emphasize that these allegations are not being presented to you for the truth of the matter asserted. It is simply information which was available to the church and it goes to the issue of notice, which you'll hear more about in the instructions. It is disputed whether these actions actually occurred regarding the Wygal child or children.

[DeBoses' attorney]: Could you explain to the jury, without using any names, with the exception of Mr. Wolfe's name, how he applied [a book entitled "The Gift of Sex"] to therapy?
[Wolfe's attorney]: I object. I object on the grounds that it has to apply to [the Debose child] or Denise DeBose in order to have any relevance to this case.
[DeBoses' attorney]: Your Honor, we're talking about the reasonableness or unreasonableness of his counseling and whether or not the Elders should have known. Your Honor, if you'll allow me to make a little bit more of a foundation.
[The Court initially sustained the objection but, after additional foundation evidence and argument, permitted Debose's attorney to proceed.]
[Mr. Schoener]: Could you restate your question? I'm sorry.
[DeBoses' attorney]: Is there anything about the way that Homer Wolfe used The Gift of Sex in therapy that was dangerous?
[Mr. Schoener]: Yes.
[DeBoses' attorney]: Describe that to the jury.
[Mr. Schoener]: The notion of having people compare their genitals to those in the book to see if they've been properly *1326 circumcised, I think, is not something that's legitimate counseling or likely to be helpful. It's quite likely to be confusing and harmful, particularly in the pastoral counseling context.

The trial court took the additional step of instructing the jurors in writing at the conclusion of the case that "[e]vidence from or regarding [the Wygals' son] ... may be considered only as evidence for the purpose of showing notice to the Church, but you should not consider it as evidence for any other purpose." Jury Instruction No. 12.

We hold that the court of appeals erred in determining that the expert witness testimony was "irrelevant" and "prejudicial" in applicable part. DeBose, 890 P.2d at 224-28. The notice and foreseeability issues directly related to the DeBoses' theories of the case, embodied in the court's instructions to the jury regarding the DeBoses' claim of negligent hiring or supervision:

Negligence as to negligent hiring or supervision means a failure to do an act which a reasonably careful Church employer would do, or the doing of an act which a reasonably careful Church employer would not do, under the same or similar circumstances, to protect others from harm.
The negligence, if any, of the defendant Bear Valley is not a cause of any injuries to either plaintiff, unless injury to a person in the plaintiff's situation was a reasonably foreseeable consequence of that negligence. The exact precise injury need not have been foreseeable, but it is sufficient if a reasonably careful person, under the same or similar circumstances, would have anticipated that injury to a person in the plaintiff's situation might result from the defendant's conduct.

Jury Instructions Nos. 18, 23. We conclude that the expert testimony concerning the Wygals' accusations was relevant and properly admitted on the question of whether Bear Valley had the requisite notice to prevent reasonably foreseeable harm to the DeBose child. [FN14]

FN14. Indeed, Bear Valley highlights in a brief the limited purpose, i.e., notice and foreseeability, that this testimony served in summarizing the testimony under a heading entitled "The Setting of Secular Standards for Pastoral Counseling of Minors is Barred by the First Amendment:"
The trial court permitted the DeBoses to put on the following evidence involving the church's clergy handling activity by the Elders:
Wolfe was hired by the church without adequate investigation; Wolfe was not qualified to counsel; Wolfe's methods were improper; Wolfe was not equipped to counsel emotional matters; Wolfe improperly touched people; Wolfe required a qualified supervisor; no one at the church was qualified to supervise Wolfe; the Elders' supervision resulted in harm by Wolfe; the Elders acted improperly in processing the Wygal complaint; the Elders did not investigate the Wygal complaint properly; the Elders improperly defined Wolfe's job duties; the church improperly defined the counseling > service of Wolfe; the church failed to inform the congregation of Wygals' complaint; and the church failed to properly advise the congregation upon terminating Wolfe.

> Answer/Reply Brief of Bear Valley at 27-28, Bear Valley v. DeBose, (Jan. 26, 1996) (No. 95SC42) (citations to record omitted).

B.

[4] Second, the court of appeals incorrectly determined that some of the testimony presented the jury with an inquiry prohibited by the First Amendment. DeBose, 890 P.2d at 227. The court of appeals held:

> [S]ome of this testimony called into question the validity of Wolfe's beliefs concerning the efficacy of touching, which he claimed to be grounded in his religious principles. To the extent that such testimony was intended to present a jury question as to whether Wolfe's techniques were, in fact, valid from a Biblical standpoint, the First amendment prohibited its consideration for this purpose.

Id. (citation omitted). The court of appeals premised its criticism on the conclusion that Wolfe claimed a religious basis for his use of therapeutic massage with young counselees. Id. However, as previously noted, supra part II(A)(2), Wolfe never presented the jury *1327 with a religious basis for his use of massage techniques with counselees but rather explained his use of massage in terms of secular rationale. We disagree with the court of appeals because the jury never had to consider whether Wolfe's beliefs concerning the efficacy of touching were grounded in his religious principles. See DeBose, 890 P.2d at 227.

C.

[5] Third, the court of appeals incorrectly held that some of the testimony provided the jurors with professional standards for both secular and pastoral therapeutic counseling, in effect subjecting Wolfe to a claim for clergy malpractice. Id. The court explained:

> [T]his testimony sought to establish a professional standard for pastoral counseling, i.e., that a minor counselee should never be touched by any counselor. And, unless the proffering of such testimony was intended to allow the jurors to determine that Wolfe violated this professional standard, it was irrelevant to any issue that they were to decide. But, to allow the jurors to assess liability against Wolfe for violating this standard was tantamount to imposing liability for "malpractice," i.e., for the violation of a professional standard of conduct.

DeBose, 890 P.2d at 227. The court then noted that the trial court "exacerbated" the prejudicial impact of the expert testimony by failing to instruct the jury that the First Amendment might insulate Wolfe from liability. Id. Again, we disagree.

The testimony concerning Wolfe's use of therapeutic massage with young counselees was not directed toward establishing an impermissible claim for clergy malpractice. See Moses, 863 P.2d at 321 n. 13 ("In Colorado, breach of fiduciary duty is actionable, clergy malpractice is not.") (citation omitted). Instead, the testimony potentially supported the DeBoses' claim that Bear Valley should have been aware that Wolfe was utilizing counseling techniques with young boys that did not conform with Bear Valley's own counseling expectations. According to one of the plaintiffs' theories of the case, if Bear Valley had notice that Wolfe employed counseling techniques with the Wygal youth that were allegedly inappropriate, the Bear Valley elders could have prevented any harm that the DeBose child experienced subsequent to the initial complaint by the Wygals. See supra part III(A). The trial court appropriately allowed expert testimony relating to the propriety of Wolfe's therapeutic massage technique for this limited purpose. [FN15]

> FN15. In any case, we do not believe that the alleged error was "exacerbated" in any way by the trial court's refusal to provide the jury with an instruction regarding Wolfe's First Amendment defense. Neither Wolfe nor Bear Valley contended that the counseling techniques to which the DeBoses objected were grounded in religious belief. See supra part II(A)(2).

[6] The court of appeals also erred in analyzing the testimony of another expert witness, Reverend Marie Fortune, with regard to the incident concerning the Wygals' son. The court of appeals characterized the testimony as evidence impermissibly directed toward a professional standard of care for pastoral counselors:

> [O]ver objection, this witness was also allowed to testify that "nudity or partial nudity" is "inappropriate in the pastoral relationship." This witness said that, while such might be appropriate in either a "medical setting" or in a "situation with a licensed massage therapist," such activity is "unnecessary" and "inappropriate" in either a therapeutic or a pastoral relationship.

DeBose, 890 P.2d at 226. In fact, the relevant testimony was directly applicable to the questions of notice and reasonably foreseeable harm. The relevant testimony reads:

> [DeBoses' attorney]: Do you have an opinion within a reasonable degree of certainty as to whether or not the Bear Valley Church of Christ failed in its supervision of Homer Wolfe in preventing reasonable foreseeable harm?
> [Reverend Fortune]: Yes. I think that was inadequate.
> *1328 [DeBoses' attorney]: Explain to the jury in what way they failed?
> [Reverend Fortune]: As best I can. I could tell, again, from the depositions there was no supervision of Mr. Wolfe by anyone qualified to supervise the work that he was doing. There seemed to be confusion about the nature of the work that he was doing and some concern expressed by the Elders as to whether he was overstepping his--the bounds of his job. But it seemed to me that that concern was not pursued in terms of--particularly the allegations--but it was not pursued in any way that was effectively supervising him regarding that.
> My other concern that has to do with both the hiring and supervision and the lack of qualifications for the job that he was asked to do. As I recall, the only reference to qualifications had to do with the fact that he had been a preacher for a number of years and that he was a former director of education at the churches he served previously. In my opinion, neither of these things qualified him for the position that he was being asked to serve in. So that, combined with lack of oversight and supervision, seemed to me inadequate.
> [DeBoses' attorney]: When the allegations of [the Wygals' son] were brought to the Elders in either May or June of 1987, what should they have done?
> [Reverend Fortune]: In my opinion, they should have investigated further beyond those allegations. It would have been advisable, it seems to me, for them to have suspended Mr. Wolfe's counseling work that he was doing until an investigation could have been completed, so that there would not have been any chance for further access to persons who might possibly have been harmed.
> [DeBoses' attorney]: ... Reverend Fortune, where a minister admits to employing nudity and partial nudity in the counseling setting, is injury to the counselee reasonably foreseeable?
> [Reverend Fortune]: It seems to me that it is, because that is inappropriate in the pastoral relationship.
> [DeBoses' attorney]: Why is that?
> [Wolfe's attorney]: Your honor, I object to the testimony about the standard of care in the pastoral relationship on the same grounds.
> [DeBoses' attorney]: Your honor--
> The Court: Objection overruled.
> [DeBoses' attorney]: Why is that inappropriate?
> [Reverend Fortune]: In my opinion there are two situations, it seems to me, in which disrobing is appropriate, and there may be others, but it seems to me, two. In particular, in a helping relationship where we are seeking out a professional to assist us with a particular problem. One would be a medical setting, and the other would be a situation with a licensed massage therapist.
> [DeBoses' attorney]: Beyond that, in any counseling--therapeutic, pastoral-- relationship, disrobing is inappropriate?
> [Reverend Fortune]: It's unnecessary and it's inappropriate.

The plaintiffs specifically presented this witness "as an expert in theology relative to procedures and practices reasonably necessary in a church setting to prevent foreseeable harm." (Emphasis added.) But cf. DeBose, 890 P.2d at 225 (incorrectly stating that expert "was tendered as an 'expert in theology' and upon 'procedures and practices in church settings necessary to prevent reasonably foreseeable harm.'

") (emphasis added). Again, neither Wolfe nor Bear Valley contended that the use of nudity as a counseling technique had roots in religious belief. We do not view Reverend Fortune's testimony as directed toward a standard of care for pastoral counselors. Rather, it was properly received as relevant to notice and reasonably foreseeable harm.

IV. Inconsistent or Duplicative Jury Awards

[7] Finally, Wolfe and Bear Valley contend that the jury verdicts were either inconsistent 1329 or duplicative. In reviewing this claim, the court of appeals acknowledged that "[t]he record here does not contain a transcript of any discussion with respect to the instructions or verdict forms. Hence, it does not reflect any objection interposed by defendants to the verdict forms." DeBose, 890 P.2d at 223. Nevertheless, the court of appeals addressed the defendants' claims for the following reason:

> However, after the verdicts were received, defendants sought to have them set aside, claiming that they resulted in the award of duplicate damages. Plaintiffs have not asserted, either in the trial court or here, that defendants' failure to object to the form of the verdicts prevented them from raising this issue, and the trial court addressed the merits of defendants' assertion. We shall do likewise....

Id. We disagree with the court of appeals' analysis of the record, id., and conclude that the defendants did not preserve their contention adequately for appellate review.

We agree with the court of appeals that the record does not contain any evidence that the defendants entered objections to the verdict forms or instructions, prior to submission to the jury, on the basis that the instructions allowed the jury to assess inconsistent or duplicative damages. Id. Our review of the record indicates that the defendants raised the issue of duplicative or inconsistent verdicts for the first time in the course of post-verdict motions. However, the DeBoses responded to the defendants' post- trial contention by asserting that the defendants never raised the issue at trial, and the trial court summarily rejected the defendants' claim of inconsistent and duplicative damages in part because of the DeBoses' assertion that the defendants did not adequately preserve the issue.

In a memorandum in support of its post-trial motions, [FN16] Bear Valley asserted that the jury verdict forms resulted in conflicting and duplicative verdicts. Bear Valley did not assert in the memorandum that either defendant objected to the jury instructions or verdict forms prior to submission to the jury. Similarly, Wolfe filed a post-trial motion for an amendment of the judgment, claiming that the jury verdicts were duplicative. Again, Wolfe did not contend that either defendant objected to the verdict forms or instructions prior to judgment, even though his post-trial motion contained an entire section devoted to a motion for new trial based on "Defendant Wolfe's Tendered and Refused Jury Instructions." Defendant Wolfe's Post-Trial Motions at 18- 19, 31-34, DeBose v. Wolfe, (Denver District Court, Sept. 10, 1992) (No. 91CV4346).

> FN16. Bear Valley filed a post-trial motion seeking, either in conjunction or in the alternative, a new trial, judgment notwithstanding the verdict, amendment of the judgment, and remittitur. In its post-trial motion, Bear Valley also adopted all of the claims that Wolfe asserted in his own post-trial motion.

The defendants never argued in the district court that they objected to the verdict forms and instructions on the basis that they were inconsistent or duplicative prior to submission to the jury, and the court of appeals correctly concluded that the record does not contain any evidence of such objections. DeBose, 890 P.2d at 223. However, the court of appeals misconstrued the procedural history of the case in determining that "[p]laintiffs have not asserted, either in the trial court or here, that defendants' failure to object to the form of the verdicts prevented them from raising this issue, and the trial court addressed the merits of defendants' assertion." Id. Indeed, the DeBoses responded to Bear Valley's post-trial assertion that the jury instructions and forms resulted in duplicative or inconsistent verdicts by arguing, in relevant part:

> [Bear Valley] did not argue that the verdict forms were insufficient prior to tendering them to the jury. In fact, [Bear Valley] asserted a position which required that simple verdict forms originally tendered by [the DeBoses] be revised into multiple forms with multiple sets of damage figures. [Bear Valley] then agreed to the forms as revised.

*1330 Plaintiff DeBoses' Response to Defendant Bear Valley Church of Christ's Motion for New Trial, and/or Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict and/or Amendment of Judgment and/or for Remittitur at 8, DeBose v. Wolfe, (Denver District Court, Sept. 15, 1992) (No. 91CV4346) (parenthetical reference to attached exhibits omitted). The DeBoses incorporated this argument into their response to Wolfe's post-trial assertion that the verdicts were duplicative or inconsistent. The trial court, having presided over the trial and having heard any objections by counsel to the jury verdict forms and instructions, agreed with the DeBoses' response to Wolfe's post-trial argument that the verdict forms allowed for duplicative or inconsistent verdicts, and refused to address Wolfe's substantive contention in summarily denying Wolfe's post-trial motions:

> Defendant Wolfe's Post-Trial Motions are denied for the reasons previously articulated by the Court during the trial of the within action, as well as for the reasons articulated by [the DeBoses] in their Response to Defendant Wolfe's Post-Trial Motions.

In short, contrary to the court of appeals' conclusions, the DeBoses did argue "that defendants' failure to object [prior to judgment] to the form of the verdicts prevented them from raising this issue," see DeBose, 890 P.2d at 223, and the trial court accepted that argument in denying the defendants' post-trial motions. [FN17]

> FN17. The court of appeals also erred in concluding that the "[p]laintiffs have not asserted, either in the trial court or here, that defendants' failure to object to the form of the verdicts prevented them from raising this issue," because the plaintiffs did raise this objection in their briefs to the court of appeals. DeBose v. Bear Valley Church of Christ, 890 P.2d 214, 223 (Colo.App.1994). In two separate documents filed with the court of appeals prior to its decision, the plaintiffs responded to the defendants' duplicative damages claim by arguing that "[n]one of the instructions concerning damages or the verdict forms were objected to by either Defendant." [Plaintiff DeBoses] Answer Brief to Defendant-Appellant Homer Wolfe at 37, DeBose v. Wolfe, (Colorado Court of Appeals, June 4, 1993) (No. 92CA001929); [Plaintiff DeBoses'] Answer Brief to Defendant-Appellant Bear Valley and Opening Brief on Cross Appeal at 44, DeBose v. Wolfe, (Colorado Court of Appeals, May 14, 1993) (No. 92CA001929).

[8] Based on the foregoing procedural history, culled from the record before this court, we conclude that the defendants did not preserve any objections to the jury verdict instructions or forms for the purposes of appellate review. According to our rules of civil procedure, a party cannot seek appellate review of the propriety of a jury instruction unless counsel tenders such an objection prior to the court's presentation of the instructions to the jury:

> All instructions shall be submitted to the parties, who shall make all objections thereto before they are given to the jury. Only the grounds so specified shall be considered on motion for a new trial or on appeal or certiorari.

C.R.C.P. 51 (emphasis added). Relying on C.R.C.P. 51, we have stated that "[c]ounsel has the duty to examine the instructions, and his failure to detect errors and call the trial court's attention to them ordinarily operates as a waiver of the objection." Scheer v. Cromwell, 158 Colo. 427, 429, 407 P.2d 344, 345 (1965) (citing Gilligan v. Blakesley, 93 Colo. 370, 380, 26 P.2d 808, 812 (1933)); accord, e.g., Blakesley, 93 Colo. at 380, 26 P.2d at 812 ("[I]t is the duty of counsel to examine--or at least to listen to the reading of--the instructions at the time they are given; and, by not detecting errors promptly and not calling the trial court's attention thereto, so as to enable the appropriate correction to be made, the point must ordinarily be deemed waived."). As we noted in Cromwell, "[t]he 'contemporaneous objection' rule has a salutary purpose in the orderly administration of justice. Its principle is to enable trial judges to clarify or correct misleading or erroneous instructions before they are given to a jury, and thereby prevent costly retrials necessitated by Illinois, Defendants-Appellees.

No. 5-93-0770.

Oct. 18, 1995.

Husband and wife brought action for damages against church, alleging that church was negligent in supervision of minister who initiated and continued sexual relationship with wife, during course of marital counseling with husband and wife. The Circuit Court, Williamson County, C. David Nelson, J., dismissed action for failure to state cause of action based on constitutional guarantee of right to freely exercise one's religion. The Appellate Court, Welch, J., held that action would not require court to inquire into, or attempt to adjudicate, determine, or interpret church's religious policies, practices, doctrines, or tenets, and so was not barred by church's right to freely exercise its religion.

Reversed and remanded.

known of Reverend Wright's emotional and physical attraction to Germaine, as well as previous such attractions; failing to warn members of the congregation, including plaintiffs, of Reverend Wright's previous attachments, creating an unreasonable risk of marital discord among members of the congregation; and failing to dismiss or reassign Reverend Wright as minister and counselor notwithstanding the fact that it knew or should have known that his attractions to female congregation 902 members created an unreasonable risk that his religious and marital counseling would be ineffective and potentially detrimental to those being counseled, including plaintiffs.

The complaint alleges that, as a direct and proximate result of the church's negligence, Germaine contracted two venereal diseases, plaintiffs have suffered irreparable deterioration in their marital relationship, plaintiffs have been and will be forced to pay and become liable for various sums for psychological expenses and other forms of emotional treatment, and plaintiffs have incurred various sums for medical and hospital expenses for treatment of the venereal diseases. The trial court dismissed this count for failure to state a cause of action based upon the constitutional guarantee of the right of free exercise of religion.

[1][2][3][4] The decision whether to grant a motion to dismiss is within the sound discretion of the trial court. (Faulkner v. Gilmore (1993), 251 Ill.App.3d 34, 190 Ill.Dec. 455, 458, 621 N.E.2d 908, 911.) In reviewing the propriety of a dismissal for failure to state a cause of action, this court must determine whether the complaint, when viewed in the light most favorable to plaintiff, alleges sufficient facts to establish a cause of action upon which relief can be granted. (Faulkner, 251 Ill.App.3d 34, 190 Ill.Dec. at 457, 621 N.E.2d at 910.) A cause of action will not be dismissed on the pleadings unless it clearly appears that no set of facts can be proved which will entitle plaintiff to recover. (Faulkner, 251 Ill.App.3d 34, 190 Ill.Dec. at 457, 621 N.E.2d at 910.) All well-pleaded facts and inferences drawn therefrom must be accepted as true, and a reviewing court should interpret the facts alleged in the complaint in the light most favorable to plaintiff. Paskarnis v. Darien-Woodridge Fire Protection District (1993), 251 Ill.App.3d 585, 191 Ill.Dec. 138, 139, 623 N.E.2d 383, 384.

[5] Viewing the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint in the light most favorable to them, we conclude that the trial court abused its discretion in dismissing the complaint for failure to state a cause of action based on the constitutional guarantee of the right of free 1124 290 exercise of religion. It simply does not appear from plaintiffs' complaint that no set of facts can be proved which would entitle plaintiffs to recover without violating the church defendant's right to freely exercise its religion.

We begin our analysis by pointing out that the church defendant does not claim that the alleged sexual misconduct of its minister was part of its religious beliefs or practices or was in any way sanctioned or condoned by the church. The minister's alleged sexual misconduct was not rooted in his religious beliefs or those of his church. We note also that the church defendant does not argue that plaintiffs have *903 failed to state a cause of action for negligence against the church. The church defendant argues only that plaintiffs' cause of action is barred by the constitutional guarantee of the right of free exercise of religion.

A court's authority to resolve disputes involving a church is narrowly circumscribed by the first amendment's guarantee that the right to the free exercise of religion will not be abridged. (Hines v. Turley (1993), 246 Ill.App.3d 405, 186 Ill.Dec. 194, 203, 615 N.E.2d 1251, 1259.) Illinois courts have generally refused to decide cases that require a judicial interpretation of religious doctrine or church law. (Hines, 246 Ill.App.3d 405, 186 Ill.Dec. at 203, 615 N.E.2d at 1259.) However, where doctrinal controversy is not involved in a church dispute, mandatory deference to religious authority is not required by the first amendment, and the court may choose from a variety of approaches in resolving the dispute. (Hines, 246 Ill.App.3d 405, 186 Ill.Dec. at 203, 615 N.E.2d at 1259.) Thus, in disputes over church property, Illinois courts have applied a "neutral principles of law" approach, objectively examining pertinent church characteristics, constitutions and bylaws, deeds, State statutes, and other evidence to resolve the matter the same as it would a secular dispute. (Hines, 246 Ill.App.3d 405, 186 Ill.Dec. at 203-04, 615 N.E.2d at 1259-60.) Using such an approach, the dispute must be resolved applying neutral legal principles, using purely secular analysis without relying on religious precepts. Hines, 246 Ill.App.3d

[6] Although the neutral principles of law approach is usually applied to disputes over church property, we cannot conclude from plaintiffs' complaint that the instant cause cannot be decided using neutral principles of negligence law, developed for use in all negligence disputes, without interpretation of religious doctrine or church law, just as would be a secular dispute in a negligence case. Resolution of the instant dispute may not involve any searching inquiry into religious matters in violation of the first amendment. The first amendment prohibits civil courts from resolving church disputes on the basis of religious doctrine and practice. (Jones v. Wolf (1979), 443 U.S. 595, 602, 99 S.Ct. 3020, 3025, 61 L.Ed.2d 775, 784.) We cannot conclude from plaintiffs' complaint that the instant case cannot be decided on the basis of neutral principles of law and without reference to religious doctrine and practice.

We cannot conclude from plaintiffs' complaint that their cause of action against First Baptist Church of Energy will infringe upon, or place a burden upon, the church's freedom to exercise its religion. Inquiring into whether the church was negligent in its failure to protect plaintiffs from the sexual misconduct of its minister may not call into question the church's religious beliefs or practices or subject 904 them to analysis or scrutiny. As we have pointed out, the minister's sexual misconduct was not rooted in the church's religious beliefs and was outside the boundaries of the church's ecclesiastical beliefs and practices. Thus, resolving this dispute may not require any interpretation of church doctrine or any regulation of ecclesiastical activity. We cannot conclude from plaintiffs' complaint that resolution of this dispute will require the court to inquire into, or attempt to adjudicate, determine, or interpret the church's religious policies, practices, doctrines, or tenets.

We are careful to express no view as to the final outcome of this controversy, whether by further motion to dismiss, motion for summary judgment, or trial. We now find only that the trial court abused its discretion in dismissing plaintiffs' complaint for failure to state a cause of action based on the constitutional *1125 291 guarantee of the right to freely exercise one's religion.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the circuit court of Williamson County is reversed, and this cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed and remanded.

Supreme Court of the United States

BOB JONES UNIVERSITY, Petitioner
v.
UNITED STATES.
GOLDSBORO CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS, INC., Petitioner
v.
UNITED STATES.

Nos. 81-3, 81-1.

Argued Oct. 12, 1982.
Decided May 24, 1983.

University, denied tax-exempt status because of its racially discriminatory admissions policy, sought refund of federal unemployment tax payments, and Government counterclaimed for unpaid taxes. The United States District Court for the District of South Carolina entered judgment in favor of university, and the IRS appealed. The Court of Appeals, 639 F.2d 147, reversed, and certiorari was granted. In a second case, another school sought refund of social security and unemployment taxes paid, and the IRS counterclaimed for unpaid taxes. The United States District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina entered summary judgment for the Government, the Court of Appeals, 644 F.2d 879, affirmed, and certiorari was granted. The Supreme Court, Chief Justice Burger, held that nonprofit private schools that prescribe and enforce racially discriminatory admission standards on the basis of religious doctrine do not qualify as tax-exempt organizations under the Internal Revenue Code, nor are contributions to such schools deductible as charitable contributions.

Affirmed.

Justice Powell filed an opinion concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

Justice Rehnquist filed a dissenting opinion.

Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (IRC) provides that "[c]orporations ... organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable ... or educational purposes" are entitled to tax exemption. Until 1970, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) granted tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3) to private schools, *2020 independent of racial admissions policies, and granted charitable deductions for contributions to such schools under § 170 of the IRC. But in 1970, the IRS concluded that it could no longer justify allowing tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3) to private schools that practiced racial discrimination, and in 1971 issued Revenue Ruling 71-447 providing that a private school not having a racially nondiscriminatory policy as to students is not "charitable" within the common- law concepts reflected in §§ 170 and 501(c)(3). In No. 81-3, petitioner Bob Jones University, while permitting unmarried Negroes to enroll as students, denies admission to applicants engaged in an interracial marriage or known to advocate interracial marriage or dating. Because of this admissions policy, the IRS revoked the University's tax-exempt status. After paying a portion of the federal unemployment taxes for a certain taxable year, the University filed a refund action in Federal District Court, and the Government counterclaimed for unpaid taxes for that and other taxable years. Holding that the IRS exceeded its powers in revoking the University's tax-exempt status and violated the University's rights under the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment, the District Court ordered the IRS to refund the taxes paid and rejected the counterclaim. The Court of Appeals reversed. In No. 81-1, petitioner Goldsboro Christian Schools maintains a racially discriminatory admissions policy based upon its interpretation of the Bible, accepting for the most part only Caucasian students. The IRS determined that Goldsboro was not an organization described in § 501(c)(3) and hence was required to pay federal social security and unemployment taxes. After paying a portion of such taxes for certain years, Goldsboro filed a refund suit in Federal District Court, and the IRS counterclaimed for unpaid taxes. The District Court entered summary judgment for 575 the Government, rejecting Goldsboro's claim to tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3) and also its claim that the denial of such status violated the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment. The Court of Appeals affirmed.

Held: Neither petitioner qualifies as a tax-exempt organization under § 501(c)(3). Pp. 2025-2035.

(a) An examination of the IRC's framework and the background of congressional purposes reveals unmistakable evidence that underlying all relevant parts of the IRC is the intent that entitlement to tax exemption depends on meeting certain common-law standards of charity--namely, that an institution seeking tax-exempt status must serve a public purpose and not be contrary to established public policy. Thus, to warrant exemption under § 501(c)(3), an institution must fall within a category specified in that section and must demonstrably serve and be in harmony with the public interest, and the institution's purpose must not be so at odds with the common community conscience as to undermine any public benefit that might otherwise be conferred. Pp. 2025-2028.

(b) The IRS's 1970 interpretation of § 501(c)(3) was correct. It would be wholly incompatible with the concepts underlying tax exemption to grant tax-exempt status to racially discriminatory private educational entities. Whatever may be the rationale for such private schools' policies, racial discrimination in education is contrary to public policy. Racially discriminatory educational institutions cannot be viewed as conferring a public benefit within the above "charitable" concept or within the congressional intent underlying § 501(c)(3). Pp. 2028-2030.

(c) The IRS did not exceed its authority when it announced its interpretation of § 501(c)(3) in 1970 and 1971. Such interpretation is wholly consistent with what Congress, the Executive, and the courts had previously declared. And the actions of Congress since 1970 leave no doubt that the IRS reached the correct conclusion in exercising its authority. Pp. 2030-2033.

(d) The Government's fundamental, overriding interest in eradicating racial discrimination in education substantially outweighs whatever burden denial of tax benefits 2021 places on petitioners' exercise of their religious beliefs. Petitioners' asserted interests cannot be accommodated with that compelling governmental interest, and no less restrictive means are available to achieve the governmental interest. Pp. 2033-2034.

(e) The IRS properly applied its policy to both petitioners. Goldsboro admits that it maintains racially discriminatory policies, and, contrary to Bob Jones University's contention that it is not racially discriminatory, discrimination on the basis of racial affiliation and association is a form of racial discrimination. Pp. 2034-2035.

Until 1970, the Internal Revenue Service granted tax-exempt status to private schools, without regard to their racial admissions policies, under § 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3), [FN1] and granted charitable 578 deductions for contributions to such schools under § 170 of the Code, 26 U.S.C. § 170. [FN2]

FN1. Section 501(c)(3) lists the following organizations, which, pursuant to § 501(a), are exempt from taxation unless denied tax exemptions under other specified sections of the Code:
"Corporations, and any community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or to foster national or international amateur sports competition (but only if no part of its activities involve the provision of athletic facilities or equipment), or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation ..., and which does not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office." (Emphasis added).

FN2. Section 170(a) allows deductions for certain "charitable contributions." Section 170(c)(2)(B) includes within the definition of "charitable contribution" a contribution or gift to or for the use of a corporation "organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes...."

On January 12, 1970, a three-judge District Court for the District of Columbia issued a preliminary injunction prohibiting the IRS from according tax-exempt status to private schools in Mississippi that discriminated as to admissions on the basis of race. Green v. Kennedy, 309 F.Supp. 1127 (D.D.C.), app. dismissed sub nom. Cannon v. Green, 398 U.S. 956, 90 S.Ct. 2169, 26 L.Ed.2d 539 (1970). Thereafter, in July 1970, the IRS concluded that it could "no longer legally justify allowing tax-exempt status [under § 501(c)(3)] to private schools which practice racial discrimination." IRS News Release (7/10/70), reprinted in App. in No. 81-3, p. A235. At the same time, the IRS announced that it could not "treat gifts to such schools as charitable deductions for income tax purposes [under § 170]." Ibid. By letter dated November 30, 1970, the IRS formally notified private schools, including those involved in this case, of this change in policy, "applicable to all private *2022 schools in the United States at all levels of education." See id., at A232.

On June 30, 1971, the three-judge District Court issued its opinion on the merits of the Mississippi challenge. Green v. Connally, 330 F.Supp. 1150 (D.D.C.), aff'd sub nom. Coit v. Green, 404 U.S. 997, 92 S.Ct. 564, 30 L.Ed.2d 550 (1971) (per curiam). That court approved the IRS' amended construction of the Tax Code. The court also held that racially discriminatory private schools were not entitled to exemption under § 501(c)(3) and that donors were not entitled to deductions for contributions to such schools under § 170. The court permanently enjoined the Commissioner of 579 Internal Revenue from approving tax-exempt status for any school in Mississippi that did not publicly maintain a policy of nondiscrimination.

The revised policy on discrimination was formalized in Revenue Ruling 71- 447, 1971-2 Cum.Bull. 230:

"Both the courts and the Internal Revenue Service have long recognized that the statutory requirement of being 'organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, ... or educational purposes' was intended to express the basic common law concept [of 'charity']... All charitable trusts, educational or otherwise, are subject to the requirement that the purpose of the trust may not be illegal or contrary to public policy." Id., at 230.

Based on the "national policy to discourage racial discrimination in education," the IRS ruled that "a private school not having a racially nondiscriminatory policy as to students is not 'charitable' within the common law concepts reflected in sections 170 and 501(c)(3) of the Code." Id., at 231. [FN3]

FN3. Revenue Ruling 71-447, 1971-2 Cum.Bull. 230, defined "racially nondiscriminatory policy as to students" as meaning that:
"[T]he school admits the students of any race to all the rights, privileges, programs, and activities generally accorded or made available to students at that school and that the school does not discriminate on the basis of race in administration of its educational policies, admissions policies, scholarship and loan programs, and athletic and other school- administered programs."

The application of the IRS construction of these provisions to petitioners, two private schools with racially discriminatory admissions policies, is now before us.

No. 81-3, Bob Jones University v. United States

Bob Jones University is a nonprofit corporation located in Greenville, South Carolina. [FN4] Its purpose is "to conduct an institution 580 of learning ..., giving special emphasis to the Christian religion and the ethics revealed in the Holy Scriptures." Certificate of Incorporation, Bob Jones University, Inc., of Greenville, S.C., reprinted in App. in No. 81-3, pp. A118- A119. The corporation operates a school with an enrollment of approximately 5,000 students, from kindergarten through college and graduate school. Bob Jones University is not affiliated with any religious denomination, but is dedicated to the teaching and propagation of its fundamentalist Christian religious beliefs. It is both a religious and educational institution. Its teachers are required to be devout Christians, and all courses at the University are taught according to the Bible. Entering students are screened as to their religious beliefs, and their public and private conduct is strictly regulated by standards promulgated by University authorities.

FN4. Bob Jones University was founded in Florida in 1927. It moved to Greenville, South Carolina, in 1940, and has been incorporated as an eleemosynary institution in South Carolina since 1952.

The sponsors of the University genuinely believe that the Bible forbids interracial dating and marriage. To effectuate these views, Negroes were completely excluded until 1971. From 1971 to May 1975, the University accepted no applications from unmarried Negroes, [FN5] but did accept applications *2023 from Negroes married within their race.

FN5. Beginning in 1973, Bob Jones University instituted an exception to this rule, allowing applications from unmarried Negroes who had been members of the University staff for four years or more.

Following the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in McCrary v. Runyon, 515 F.2d 1082 (CA4 1975), aff'd 427 U.S. 160, 96 S.Ct. 2586, 49 L.Ed.2d 415 (1976), prohibiting racial exclusion from private schools, the University revised its policy. Since May 29, 1975, the University has permitted unmarried Negroes to enroll; but a disciplinary rule prohibits interracial dating and marriage. That rule reads:

There is to be no interracial dating

1. Students who are partners in an interracial marriage will be expelled.

581 2. Students who are members of or affiliated with any group or organization which holds as one of its goals or advocates interracial marriage will be expelled.

3. Students who date outside their own race will be expelled.

4. Students who espouse, promote, or encourage others to violate the University's dating rules and regulations will be expelled. App. in No. 81-3, p. A197.

The University continues to deny admission to applicants engaged in an interracial marriage or known to advocate interracial marriage or dating. Id., at A277.

Until 1970, the IRS extended tax-exempt status to Bob Jones University under § 501(c)(3). By the letter of November 30, 1970, that followed the injunction issued in Green v. Kennedy, supra, the IRS formally notified the University of the change in IRS policy, and announced its intention to challenge the tax-exempt status of private schools practicing racial discrimination in their admissions policies.

After failing to obtain an assurance of tax exemption through administrative means, the University instituted an action in 1971 seeking to enjoin the IRS from revoking the school's tax-exempt status. That suit culminated in Bob Jones University v. Simon, 416 U.S. 725, 94 S.Ct. 2038, 40 L.Ed.2d 496 (1974), in which this Court held that the Anti-Injunction Act of the Internal Revenue Code, 26 U.S.C. § 7421(a), prohibited the University from obtaining judicial review by way of injunctive action before the assessment or collection of any tax.

Thereafter, on April 16, 1975, the IRS notified the University of the proposed revocation of its tax-exempt status. On January 19, 1976, the IRS officially revoked the University's tax-exempt status, effective as of December 1, 1970, the day after the University was formally notified of the change in IRS policy. The University subsequently filed returns under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act for the period from December 1, 1970, to December 31, 1975, and paid a tax 582 totalling $21.00 on one employee for the calendar year of 1975. After its request for a refund was denied, the University instituted the present action, seeking to recover the $21.00 it had paid to the IRS. The Government counterclaimed for unpaid federal unemployment taxes for the taxable years 1971 through 1975, in the amount of $489,675.59, plus interest.

The United States District Court for the District of South Carolina held that revocation of the University's tax-exempt status exceeded the delegated powers of the IRS, was improper under the IRS rulings and procedures, and violated the University's rights under the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment. 468 F.Supp. 890, 907 (D.S.C.1978). The court accordingly ordered the IRS to pay the University the $21.00 refund it claimed and rejected the IRS counterclaim.

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, in a divided opinion, reversed. 639 F.2d 147 (CA4 1980). Citing Green v. Connally, supra, with approval, the Court of Appeals concluded that § 501(c)(3) must be read against the background of charitable trust law. To be eligible for an exemption under that section, an institution must be "charitable" in the common law sense, and therefore must not be contrary to public policy. In the court's *2024 view, Bob Jones University did not meet this requirement, since its "racial policies violated the clearly defined public policy, rooted in our Constitution, condemning racial discrimination and, more specifically, the government policy against subsidizing racial discrimination in education, public or private." Id., at 151. The court held that the IRS acted within its statutory authority in revoking the University's tax-exempt status. Finally, the Court of Appeals rejected petitioner's arguments that the revocation of the tax exemption violated the Free Exercise and Establishment Clauses of the First Amendment. The case was remanded to the District Court with instructions to dismiss the University's claim for a refund and to reinstate the Government's counterclaim.

No. 81-1, Goldsboro Christian Schools, Inc. v. United States

Goldsboro Christian Schools is a nonprofit corporation located in Goldsboro, North Carolina. Like Bob Jones University, it was established "to conduct an institution of learning ..., giving special emphasis to the Christian religion and the ethics revealed in the Holy scriptures." Articles of Incorporation, ¶ 3(a); see Complaint, ¶ 6, reprinted in App. in No. 81-1, pp. 5-6. The school offers classes from kindergarten through high school, and since at least 1969 has satisfied the State of North Carolina's requirements for secular education in private schools. The school requires its high school students to take Bible-related courses, and begins each class with prayer.

Since its incorporation in 1963, Goldsboro Christian Schools has maintained a racially discriminatory admissions policy based upon its interpretation of the Bible. [FN6] Goldsboro has for the most part accepted only Caucasians. On occasion, however, the school has accepted children from racially mixed marriages in which one of the parents is Caucasian.

FN6. According to the interpretation espoused by Goldsboro, race is determined by descendance from one of Noah's three sons--Ham, Shem and Japheth. Based on this interpretation, Orientals and Negroes are Hamitic, Hebrews are Shemitic, and Caucasians are Japhethitic. Cultural or biological mixing of the races is regarded as a violation of God's command. App. in No. 81-1, pp. 40-41.

Goldsboro never received a determination by the IRS that it was an organization entitled to tax exemption under § 501(c)(3). Upon audit of Goldsboro's records for the years 1969 through 1972, the IRS determined that Goldsboro was not an organization described in § 501(c)(3), and therefore was required to pay taxes under the Federal Insurance Contribution Act and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act.

*584 Goldsboro paid the IRS $3,459.93 in withholding, social security, and unemployment taxes with respect to one employee for the years 1969 through 1972. Thereafter, Goldsboro filed a suit seeking refund of that payment, claiming that the school had been improperly denied § 501(c)(3) exempt status. [FN7] The IRS counterclaimed for $160,073.96 in unpaid social security and unemployment taxes for the years 1969 through 1972, including interest and penalties. [FN8]

FN7. Goldsboro also asserted that it was not obliged to pay taxes on lodging furnished to its teachers. Petitioner does not ask this Court to review the rejection of that claim.

FN8. By stipulation, the IRS agreed to abate its assessment for 1969 and most of 1970 to reflect the fact that the IRS did not begin enforcing its policy of denying tax-exempt status to racially discriminatory private schools until November 30, 1970. As a result, the amount of the counterclaim was reduced to $116,190.99. App. in No. 81-1, pp. 104, 110.

The District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina decided the action on cross-motions for summary judgment. 436 F.Supp. 1314 (E.D.N.C.1977). In addressing the motions for summary judgment, the court assumed that Goldsboro's racially discriminatory admissions policy was based upon a sincerely held religious belief. The court nevertheless rejected Goldsboro's claim to tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3), finding that "private schools maintaining racially 2025 discriminatory admissions policies violate clearly declared federal policy and, therefore, must be denied the federal tax benefits flowing from qualification under Section 501(c)(3)." Id., at 1318 . The court also rejected Goldsboro's arguments that denial of tax-exempt status violated the Free Exercise and Establishment Clauses of the First Amendment. Accordingly, the court entered summary judgment for the Government on its counterclaim.

The Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit affirmed, 644 F.2d 879 (CA4 1981) (per curiam). That court found an "identity for present purposes" between the Goldsboro case and the Bob Jones University case, which had been decided shortly *585 before by another panel of that court, and affirmed for the reasons set forth in Bob Jones University.

We granted certiorari in both cases, 454 U.S. 892, 102 S.Ct. 386, 70 L.Ed.2d 205 (1981), [FN9] and we affirm in each.

FN9. After the Court granted certiorari, the Government filed a motion to dismiss, informing the Court that the Department of Treasury intended to revoke Revenue Ruling 71-447 and other pertinent rulings and to recognize § 501(c)(3) exemptions for petitioners. The Government suggested that these actions were therefore moot. Before this Court ruled on that motion, however, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit enjoined the Government from granting § 501(c)(3) tax-exempt status to any school that discriminates on the basis of race. Wright v. Regan, No. 80-1124 (CADC Feb. 18, 1982) (per curiam order). Thereafter, the Government informed the Court that it would not revoke the revenue rulings and withdrew its request that the actions be dismissed as moot. The Government continues to assert that the IRS lacked authority to promulgate Revenue Ruling 71-447, and does not defend that aspect of the rulings below.

In Revenue Ruling 71-447, the IRS formalized the policy first announced in 1970, that § 170 and § 501(c)(3) embrace the common law "charity" concept. Under that view, to qualify for a tax exemption pursuant to § 501(c)(3), an institution must show, first, that it falls within one of the eight categories expressly set forth in that section, and second, that its activity is not contrary to settled public policy.

Section 501(c)(3) provides that "[c]orporations ... organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable ... or educational purposes" are entitled to tax exemption. Petitioners argue that the plain language of the statute guarantees them tax-exempt status. They emphasize the absence of any language in the statute expressly requiring all exempt organizations to be "charitable" in the common law sense, and they contend that the disjunctive "or" separating the categories in § 501(c)(3) precludes such a reading. Instead, they argue that if an institution falls within one or more of 586 the specified categories it is automatically entitled to exemption, without regard to whether it also qualifies as "charitable." The Court of Appeals rejected that contention and concluded that petitioners' interpretation of the statute "tears section 501(c)(3) from its roots." United States v. Bob Jones University, supra, 639 F.2d, at 151.

[2] It is a well-established canon of statutory construction that a court should go beyond the literal language of a statute if reliance on that language would defeat the plain purpose of the statute:

"The general words used in the clause ..., taken by themselves, and literally construed, without regard to the object in view, would seem to sanction the claim of the plaintiff. But this mode of expounding a statute has never been adopted by any enlightened tribunal--because it is evident that in many cases it would defeat the object which the Legislature intended to accomplish. And it is well settled that, in interpreting a statute, the court will not look merely to a particular clause in which general words may be used, but will take in connection with it the whole statute ... and the objects and policy of the law...." Brown v. Duchesne, 19 How. 183, 194, 15 L.Ed. 595 (1857) (emphasis added).

*2026 [3] Section 501(c)(3) therefore must be analyzed and construed within the framework of the Internal Revenue Code and against the background of the Congressional purposes. Such an examination reveals unmistakable evidence that, underlying all relevant parts of the Code, is the intent that entitlement to tax exemption depends on meeting certain common law standards of charity--namely, that an institution seeking tax-exempt status must serve a public purpose and not be contrary to established public policy.

[4] This "charitable" concept appears explicitly in § 170 of the Code. That section contains a list of organizations virtually identical to that contained in § 501(c)(3). It is apparent that Congress intended that list to have the same meaning in both 587 sections. [FN10] In § 170, Congress used the list of organizations in defining the term "charitable contributions." On its face, therefore, § 170 reveals that Congress' intention was to provide tax benefits to organizations serving charitable purposes. [FN11] The form of § 170 simply makes plain what common sense and history tell us: in enacting both § 170 and 588 § 501(c)(3), Congress sought to provide tax benefits to charitable organizations, to encourage the development of private institutions that serve a useful public purpose or supplement or take the place of public institutions of the same kind.

FN10. The predecessor of § 170 originally was enacted in 1917, as part of the War Revenue Act of 1917, ch. 63, § 1201(2), 40 Stat. 300, 330 (1917), whereas the predecessor of § 501(c)(3) dates back to the income tax law of 1894, Act of August 27, 1894, ch. 349, 28 Stat. 509, see n. 14, infra. There are minor differences between the lists of organizations in the two sections, see generally Liles & Blum, Development of the Federal Tax Treatment of Charities, 39 L. & Contemp. Prob. 6, 24-25 (No. 4, 1975) (hereinafter Liles & Blum). Nevertheless, the two sections are closely related; both seek to achieve the same basic goal of encouraging the development of certain organizations through the grant of tax benefits. The language of the two sections is in most respects identical, and the Commissioner and the courts consistently have applied many of the same standards in interpreting those sections. See 5 J. Mertens, The Law of Federal Income Taxation § 31.12 (1980); 6 id. §§ 34.01-34.13 (1975); B. Bittker & L. Stone, Federal Income Taxation 220-222 (5th ed. 1980). To the extent that § 170 "aids in ascertaining the meaning" of § 501(c)(3), therefore, it is "entitled to great weight," United States v. Stewart, 311 U.S. 60, 64-65, 61 S.Ct. 102, 105-106, 85 L.Ed. 40 (1940). See Harris v. Commissioner, 340 U.S. 106, 107, 71 S.Ct. 181, 182, 95 L.Ed. 111 (1950).

FN11. The dissent suggests that the Court "quite adeptly avoids the statute it is construing," post, at 2039, and "seeks refuge ... by turning to § 170," post, at 2040. This assertion dissolves when one sees that § 501(c)(3) and § 170 are construed together, as they must be. The dissent acknowledges that the two sections are "mirror" provisions; surely there can be no doubt that the Court properly looks to § 170 to determine the meaning of § 501(c)(3). It is also suggested that § 170 is "at best of little usefulness in finding the meaning of § 501(c)(3)," since "§ 170(c) simply tracks the requirements set forth in § 501(c)(3)," post, at 2040. That reading loses sight of the fact that § 170(c) defines the term "charitable contribution." The plain language of § 170 reveals that Congress' objective was to employ tax exemptions and deductions to promote certain charitable purposes. While the eight categories of institutions specified in the statute are indeed presumptively charitable in nature, the IRS properly considered principles of charitable trust law in determining whether the institutions in question may truly be considered "charitable," for purposes of entitlement to the tax benefits conferred by § 170 and § 501(c)(3).

Tax exemptions for certain institutions thought beneficial to the social order of the country as a whole, or to a particular community, are deeply rooted in our history, as in that of England. The origins of such exemptions lie in the special privileges that have long been extended to charitable trusts. [FN12]

FN12. The form and history of the charitable exemption and deduction sections of the various income tax acts reveal that Congress was guided by the common law of charitable trusts. See Simon, The Tax-Exempt Status of Racially Discriminatory Religious Schools, 36 Tax L.Rev. 477, 485-489 (1981) (hereinafter Simon). Congress acknowledged as much in 1969. The House Report on the Tax Reform Act of 1969, Pub.L. 91-172, 83 Stat. 487, stated that the § 501(c)(3) exemption was available only to institutions that served "the specified charitable purposes," H.R.Rep. No. 413 (Part 1), 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 35 (1969), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1969, p. 1645, and described "charitable" as "a term that has been used in the law of trusts for hundreds of years." Id., at 43, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1969, p. 1688. We need not consider whether Congress intended to incorporate into the Internal Revenue Code any aspects of charitable trust law other than the requirements of public benefit and a valid public purpose.

2027 More than a century ago, this Court announced the caveat that is critical in this case:

"[I]t has now become an established principle of

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

American law, that courts of chancery will sustain and protect ... a gift ... to public charitable uses, provided the same is consistent with local laws and public policy...." Perin v. Carey, 24 How. 465, 501, 16 L.Ed. 701 (1861) (emphasis added).

Soon after that, in 1878, the Court commented:

"A charitable use, where neither law nor public policy forbids, may be applied to almost any thing that tends to promote the well-doing and well-being of social man." Ould v. Washington Hospital for Foundlings, 95 U.S. 303, 311, 24 L.Ed. 450 (1878) (emphasis added). 589 See also, e.g., Jackson v. Phillips, 96 Mass. 539, 556 (1867).

In 1891, in a restatement of the English law of charity [FN13] which has long been recognized as a leading authority in this country, Lord MacNaghten stated:

FN13. The draftsmen of the 1894 income tax law, which included the first charitable exemption provision, relied heavily on English concepts of taxation; and the list of exempt organizations appears to have been patterned upon English income tax statutes. See 26 Cong.Rec. 584-588, 6612-6615 (1894).

" 'Charity' in its legal sense comprises four principal divisions: trusts for the relief of poverty; trusts for the advancement of education; trusts for the advancement of religion; and trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community, not falling under any of the preceding heads." Commissioners v. Pemsel, [1891] A.C. 531, 583 (emphasis added). See, e.g., 4 A. Scott, The Law of Trusts § 368, at 2853-2854 (3d ed. 1967) (hereinafter Scott).

These statements clearly reveal the legal background against which Congress enacted the first charitable exemption statute in 1894: [FN14] charities were to be given preferential treatment because they provide a benefit to society.

FN14. Act of August 27, 1894, ch. 349, § 32, 28 Stat. 509, 556-557 (1894). The income tax system contained in the 1894 Act was declared unconstitutional, Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912, 39 L.Ed. 1108 (1895), for reasons unrelated to the charitable exemption provision. The terms of that exemption were in substance included in the corporate income tax contained in the Payne Aldrich Tariff Act of 1909, ch. 6, § 38, 36 Stat. 11, 112 (1909). A similar exemption has been included in every income tax act since the adoption of the Sixteenth Amendment, beginning with the Revenue Act of 1913, ch. 16, § II(G), 38 Stat. 114, 172 (1913). See generally Reiling, Federal Taxation: What Is a Charitable Organization?, 44 ABA J. 525 (1958); Liles & Blum.

What little floor debate occurred on the charitable exemption provision of the 1894 Act and similar sections of later statutes leaves no doubt that Congress deemed the specified organizations entitled to tax benefits because they served desirable public purposes. See, e.g., 26 Cong.Rec. 585-586 590 (1894); id., at 1727. In floor debate on a similar provision in 1917, for example, Senator Hollis articulated the rationale:

"For every dollar that a man contributes to these public charities, educational, scientific, or otherwise, the public gets 100 percent." 55 id., at 6728 (1917). See also, e.g., 44 id., at 4150 (1909); 50 id., at 1305-1306 (1913).

In 1924, this Court restated the common understanding of the charitable exemption provision:

"Evidently the exemption is made in recognition of the benefit which the public derives from corporate activities of the class named, and is intended to aid them when not conducted for private gain." Trinidad v. Sagrada Orden, 263 U.S. 578, 581, 44 S.Ct. 204, 205, 68 L.Ed. 458 (1924). [FN15] FN15. That same year, the Bureau of Internal Revenue expressed a similar view of the charitable deduction section of the estate tax contained in the Revenue Act of 1918, ch. 18, § 403(a)(3), 40 Stat. 1057, 1098 (1919). The Solicitor of Internal Revenue looked to the common law of charitable trusts in construing that provision, and noted that "generally bequests for the benefit and advantage of the general public are valid as charities." Sol.Op. 159, III-1 C.B. 480 (1924).

2028 In enacting the Revenue Act of 1938, ch. 289, 52 Stat. 447 (1938), Congress expressly reconfirmed this view with respect to the charitable deduction provision:

"The exemption from taxation of money and property devoted to charitable and other purposes is based on the theory that the Government is compensated for the loss of revenue by its relief from financial burdens which would otherwise have to be met by appropriations from other public funds, and by the benefits resulting from the promotion of the general welfare." H.R.Rep. No. 1860, 75th Cong., 3d Sess. 19 (1938). [FN16]

FN16. The common law requirement of public benefit is universally recognized by commentators on the law of trusts. For example, Bogert states:

"In return for the favorable treatment accorded charitable gifts which imply some disadvantage to the community, the courts must find in the trust which is to be deemed 'charitable' some real advantages to the public which more than offset the disadvantages arising out of special privileges accorded charitable trusts." G. Bogert & G. Bogert, The Law of Trusts and Trustees § 361, at 3 (rev. 2d ed. 1977) (hereinafter Bogert).

For other statements of this principle, see, e.g., 4 Scott § 348, at 2770; Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 368, comment b (1959); E. Fisch, D. Freed & E. Schachter, Charities and Charitable Foundations § 256 (1974).

[5] *591 A corollary to the public benefit principle is the requirement, long recognized in the law of trusts, that the purpose of a charitable trust may not be illegal or violate established public policy. In 1861, this Court stated that a public charitable use must be "consistent with local laws and public policy," Perin v. Carey, supra, 24 How., at 501. Modern commentators and courts have echoed that view. See, e.g., Restatement (Second) of Trusts, § 377, comment c (1959); 4 Scott § 377, and cases cited therein; Bogert § 378, at 191-192. [FN17]

FN17. Cf. Tank Truck Rentals, Inc. v. Commissioner, 356 U.S. 30, 35, 78 S.Ct. 507, 510, 2 L.Ed.2d 562 (1958), in which this Court referred to "the presumption against congressional intent to encourage violation of declared public policy" in upholding the Commissioner's disallowance of deductions claimed by a trucking company for fines it paid for violations of state maximum weight laws.

[6][7][8] When the Government grants exemptions or allows deductions all taxpayers are affected; the very fact of the exemption or deduction for the donor means that other taxpayers can be said to be indirect and vicarious "donors." Charitable exemptions are justified on the basis that the exempt entity confers a public benefit--a benefit which the society or the community may not itself choose or be able to provide, or which supplements and advances the work of public institutions already supported by tax revenues. [FN18] History buttresses *592 logic to make clear that, to warrant exemption under § 501(c)(3), an institution must fall within a category specified in that section and must demonstrably serve and be in harmony with the public 2029 interest. [FN19] The institution's purpose must not be so at odds with the common community conscience as to undermine any public benefit that might otherwise be conferred.

FN18. The dissent acknowledges that "Congress intended ... to offer a tax benefit to organizations ... providing a public benefit," post, at 2040, but suggests that Congress itself fully defined what organizations provide a public benefit, through the list of eight categories of exempt organizations contained in § 170 and § 501(c)(3). Under that view, any nonprofit organization that falls within one of the specified categories is automatically entitled to the tax benefits, provided it does not engage in expressly prohibited lobbying or political activities. Post, at 2042. The dissent thus would have us conclude, for example, that any nonprofit organization that does not engage in prohibited lobbying activities is entitled to tax exemption as an "educational" institution if it is organized for the "instruction or training of the individual for the purpose of improving or developing his capabilities," 26 CFR § 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(3). See post, at 2045. As Judge Leventhal noted in Green v. Connally, 330 F.Supp. 1150, 1160 (D.D.C.), aff'd sub nom. Coit v. Green, 404 U.S. 997, 92 S.Ct. 564, 30 L.Ed.2d 550 (1971) (per curiam), Fagin's school for educating English boys in the art of picking pockets would be an "educational" institution under that definition. Similarly, a band of former military personnel might well set up a school for intensive training of subversives for guerrilla warfare and terrorism in other countries; in the abstract, that "school" would qualify as an "educational" institution. Surely Congress had no thought of affording such an unthinking, wooden meaning to § 170 and § 501(c)(3) as to provide tax benefits to "educational" organizations that do not serve a public, charitable purpose.

FN19. The Court's reading of § 501(c)(3) does not render meaningless Congress' action in specifying the eight categories of presumptively exempt organizations, as petitioners suggest. See Brief of Petitioner Goldsboro Christian Schools 18-24. To be entitled to tax- exempt status under § 501(c)(3), an organization must first fall within one of the categories specified by Congress, and in addition must serve a valid charitable purpose.

[9][10] We are bound to approach these questions with full awareness that determinations of public benefit and public policy are sensitive matters with serious implications for the institutions affected; a declaration that a given institution is not "charitable" should be made only where there can be no doubt that the activity involved is contrary to a fundamental public policy. But there can no longer be any doubt that racial discrimination in education violates deeply and widely accepted views of elementary justice. Prior to 1954, public education in many places still was conducted under the pall of 593 Plessy v. Ferguson,* 163 U.S. 537, 16 S.Ct. 1138, 41 L.Ed. 256 (1896); racial segregation in primary and secondary education prevailed in many parts of the country. See, e.g., Segregation and the Fourteenth Amendment in the States (B. Reams & P. Wilson, eds. 1975). [FN20] This Court's decision in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483, 74 S.Ct. 686, 98 L.Ed. 873 (1954), signalled an end to that era. Over the past quarter of a century, every pronouncement of this Court and myriad Acts of Congress and Executive Orders attest a firm national policy to prohibit racial segregation and discrimination in public education.

FN20. In 1894, when the first charitable exemption provision was enacted, racially segregated educational institutions would not have been regarded as against public policy. Yet contemporary standards must be considered in determining whether given activities provide a public benefit and are entitled to the charitable tax exemption. In Walz v. Tax Comm'n, 397 U.S. 664, 672-673, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 1413, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970), we observed:
"Qualification for tax exemption is not perpetual or immutable; some tax- exempt groups lose that status when their activities take them outside the classification and new entities can come into being and qualify for the exemption."
Charitable trust law also makes clear that the definition of "charity" depends upon contemporary standards. See, e.g., Restatement (Second) of Trusts, § 374, comment a (1959); Bogert § 369, at 65-67; 4 Scott § 368, at 2855-2856.

[11] An unbroken line of cases following Brown v. Board of Education establishes beyond doubt this Court's view that racial discrimination in education violates a most fundamental national public policy, as well as rights of individuals.

"The right of a student not to be segregated on racial grounds in schools ... is indeed so fundamental and pervasive that it is embraced in the concept of due process of law." Cooper v. Aaron, 358 U.S. 1, 19, 78 S.Ct. 1401, 1410, 3 L.Ed.2d 19 (1958).

In Norwood v. Harrison, 413 U.S. 455, 468-469, 93 S.Ct. 2804, 2812, 37 L.Ed.2d 723 (1973), we dealt with a non-public institution:

"[A] private school--even one that discriminates--fulfills an important educational function; however, ... [that] legitimate educational function cannot be isolated from *594 discriminatory practices ... [D]iscriminatory treatment exerts a pervasive influence on the entire educational process." (Emphasis added). See also Runyon v. McCrary, 427 U.S. 160, 96 S.Ct. 2586, 49 L.Ed.2d 415 (1976); Griffin v. County School Board, 377 U.S. 218, 84 S.Ct. 1226, 12 L.Ed.2d 256 (1964).

Congress, in Titles IV and VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Pub.L. 88- 352, 78 Stat. 241, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000c et seq., 2000c-6, 2000-d et seq., clearly expressed its agreement that racial discrimination in education violates a fundamental public policy. Other sections of that Act, and numerous enactments since then, testify to the public 2030 policy against racial discrimination. See, e.g., the Voting Rights Act of 1965, Pub.L. 89-110, 79 Stat. 437, 42 U.S.C. §§ 1971 et seq.; Title VIII of the Civil Rights Act of 1968, Pub.L. 90-284, 82 Stat. 81, 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601 et seq.; the Emergency School Aid Act of 1972, Pub.L. 92-318, 86 Stat. 354 (repealed effective Sept. 30, 1979; replaced by similar provisions in the Emergency School Aid Act of 1978, Pub.L. 95-561, 92 Stat. 2252, 20 U.S.C. §§ 3191-3207 (1980 Supp.)).

The Executive Branch has consistently placed its support behind eradication of racial discrimination. Several years before this Court's decision in Brown v. Board of Education, supra, President Truman issued Executive Orders prohibiting racial discrimination in federal employment decisions, Exec. Order No. 9980, 3 CFR 720 (1943-1948 Comp.), and in classifications for the Selective Service, Exec. Order No. 9988, id. 726, 729. In 1957, President Eisenhower employed military forces to ensure compliance with federal standards in school desegregation programs. Exec. Order No. 10730, 3 CFR 389 (1954-1958 Comp.). And in 1962, President Kennedy announced:

"[T]he granting of federal assistance for ... housing and related facilities from which Americans are excluded because of their race, color, creed, or national origin is unfair, unjust, and inconsistent with the public policy of *595 the United States as manifested in its Constitution and laws." Exec. Order No. 11063, 3 CFR 652 (1959-1963 Comp.).

These are but a few of numerous Executive Orders over the past three decades demonstrating the commitment of the Executive Branch to the fundamental policy of eliminating racial discrimination. See, e.g., Exec. Order No. 11197, 3 CFR 278 (1964-1965 Comp.); Exec. Order No. 11478, 3 CFR 803 (1966- 1970 Comp.); Exec. Order No. 11764, 3 CFR 849 (1971-1975 Comp.); Exec. Order No. 12250, 3 CFR 298 (1981).

[12] Few social or political issues in our history have been more vigorously debated and more extensively ventilated than the issue of racial discrimination, particularly in education. Given the stress and anguish of the history of efforts to escape from the shackles of the "separate but equal" doctrine of Plessy v. Ferguson, supra, it cannot be said that educational institutions that, for whatever reasons, practice racial discrimination, are institutions exercising "beneficial and stabilizing influences in community life," Walz v. Tax Comm'n, 397 U.S. 664, 673, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 1413, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970), or should be encouraged by having all taxpayers share in their support by way of special tax status.

[13][14] There can thus be no question that the interpretation of § 170 and § 501(c)(3) announced by the IRS in 1970 was correct. That it may be seen as belated does not undermine its soundness. It would be wholly incompatible with the concepts underlying tax exemption to grant the benefit of tax-exempt status to racially discriminatory educational entities, which "exer [t] a pervasive influence on the entire educational process." Norwood v. Harrison, supra, 413 U.S., at 469, 93 S.Ct., at 2812. Whatever may be the rationale for such private schools' policies, and however sincere the rationale may be, racial discrimination in education is contrary to public policy. Racially discriminatory educational institutions cannot be viewed as conferring a public benefit within the "charitable" concept discussed earlier, *596 or within the Congressional intent underlying § 170 and § 501(c)(3). [FN21]

FN21. In view of our conclusion that racially discriminatory private schools violate fundamental public policy and cannot be deemed to confer a benefit on the public, we need not decide whether an organization providing a public benefit and otherwise meeting the requirements of § 501(c)(3) could nevertheless be denied tax-exempt status if certain of its activities violated a law or public policy.

[15] Petitioners contend that, regardless of whether the IRS properly concluded 2031 that racially discriminatory private schools violate public policy, only Congress can alter the scope of § 170 and § 501(c)(3). Petitioners accordingly argue that the IRS overstepped its lawful bounds in issuing its 1970 and 1971 rulings.

[16] Yet ever since the inception of the tax code, Congress has seen fit to vest in those administering the tax laws very broad authority to interpret those laws. In an area as complex as the tax system, the agency Congress vests with administrative responsibility must be able to exercise its authority to meet changing conditions and new problems. Indeed as early as 1918, Congress expressly authorized the Commissioner "to make all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement" of the tax laws. Revenue Act of 1918, ch. 18, § 1309, 40 Stat. 1057, 1143 (1919). The same provision, so essential to efficient and fair administration of the tax laws, has appeared in tax codes ever since, see 26 U.S.C. § 7805(a) (1976); and this Court has long recognized the primary authority of the IRS and its predecessors in construing the Internal Revenue Code, see, e.g., Commissioner v. Portland Cement Co., 450 U.S. 156, 169, 101 S.Ct. 1037, 1045, 67 L.Ed.2d 140 (1981); United States v. Correll, 389 U.S. 299, 306-307, 88 S.Ct. 445, 449, 19 L.Ed.2d 537 (1967); Boske v. Comingore, 177 U.S. 459, 469-470, 20 S.Ct. 701, 705, 44 L.Ed. 846 (1900).

Congress, the source of IRS authority, can modify IRS rulings it considers improper; and courts exercise review over IRS actions. In the first instance, however, the responsibility *597 for construing the Code falls to the IRS. Since Congress cannot be expected to anticipate every conceivable problem that can arise or to carry out day-to-day oversight, it relies on the administrators and on the courts to implement the legislative will. Administrators, like judges, are under oath to do so.

In § 170 and § 501(c)(3), Congress has identified categories of traditionally exempt institutions and has specified certain additional requirements for tax exemption. Yet the need for continuing interpretation of those statutes is unavoidable. For more than 60 years, the IRS and its predecessors have constantly been called upon to interpret these and comparable provisions, and in doing so have referred consistently to principles of charitable trust law. In Treas.Reg. 45, art. 517(1) (1921), for example, the IRS denied charitable exemptions on the basis of proscribed political activity before the Congress itself added such conduct as a disqualifying element. In other instances, the IRS has denied charitable exemptions to otherwise qualified entities because they served too limited a class of people and thus did not provide a truly "public" benefit under the common law test. See, e.g., Crellin v. Commissioner, 46 B.T.A. 1152, 1155-1156 (1942); James Sprunt Benevolent Trust v. Commissioner, 20 B.T.A. 19, 24-25 (1930). See also Treas.Reg. § 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(1)(ii) (1959). Some years before the issuance of the rulings challenged in these cases, the IRS also ruled that contributions to community recreational facilities would not be deductible and that the facilities themselves would not be entitled to tax-exempt status, unless those facilities were open to all on a racially nondiscriminatory basis. See Rev.Rul. 67-325, 1967-2 Cum.Bull. 113. These rulings reflect the Commissioner's continuing duty to interpret and apply the Internal Revenue Code. See also Textile Mills Securities Corp. v. Commissioner, 314 U.S. 326, 337-338, 62 S.Ct. 272, 279, 86 L.Ed. 249 (1941).

[17] Guided, of course, by the Code, the IRS has the responsibility, in the first instance, to determine whether a particular *598 entity is "charitable" for purposes of § 170 and § 501(c)(3). [FN22] This in turn may necessitate later determinations of whether given activities so violate public policy that the entities involved cannot be deemed to provide 2032 a public benefit worthy of "charitable" status. We emphasize, however, that these sensitive determinations should be made only where there is no doubt that the organization's activities violate fundamental public policy.

> FN22. In the present case, the IRS issued its rulings denying exemptions to racially discriminatory schools only after a three-judge District Court had issued a preliminary injunction. See supra, at 2021-2022.

On the record before us, there can be no doubt as to the national policy. In 1970, when the IRS first issued the ruling challenged here, the position of all three branches of the Federal Government was unmistakably clear. The correctness of the Commissioner's conclusion that a racially discriminatory private school "is not 'charitable' within the common law concepts reflected in ... the Code," Rev.Rul. 71-447, 1972-2 Cum.Bull., at 231, is wholly consistent with what Congress, the Executive and the courts had repeatedly declared before 1970. Indeed, it would be anomalous for the Executive, Legislative and Judicial Branches to reach conclusions that add up to a firm public policy on racial discrimination, and at the same time have the IRS blissfully ignore what all three branches of the Federal Government had declared. [FN23] Clearly an educational institution engaging in 599 practices affirmatively at odds with this declared position of the whole government cannot be seen as exercising a "beneficial and stabilizing influenc[e] in community life," Walz v. Tax Comm'n, supra, 397 U.S., at 673, 90 S.Ct., at 1413, and is not "charitable," within the meaning of § 170 and § 501(c)(3). We therefore hold that the IRS did not exceed its authority when it announced its interpretation of § 170 and § 501(c)(3) in 1970 and 1971. [FN24]

> FN23. Justice POWELL misreads the Court's opinion when he suggests that the Court implies that "the Internal Revenue Service is invested with authority to decide which public policies are sufficiently 'fundamental' to require denial of tax exemptions," post, at 2039. The Court's opinion does not warrant that interpretation. Justice POWELL concedes that "if any national policy is sufficiently fundamental to constitute such an overriding limitation on the availability of tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3), it is the policy against racial discrimination in education." Post, at 2037. Since that policy is sufficiently clear to warrant Justice POWELL's concession and for him to support our finding of longstanding Congressional acquiescence, it should be apparent that his concerns about the Court's opinion are unfounded.

> FN24. Many of the amici curiae, including Amicus William T. Coleman, Jr. (appointed by the Court), argue that denial of tax-exempt status to racially discriminatory schools is independently required by the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment. In light of our resolution of this case, we do not reach that issue. See, e.g., United States v. Clark, 445 U.S. 23, 27, 100 S.Ct. 895, 899, 63 L.Ed.2d 171 (1980); NLRB v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 440 U.S. 490, 504, 99 S.Ct. 1313, 1320, 59 L.Ed.2d 533 (1979).

D

The actions of Congress since 1970 leave no doubt that the IRS reached the correct conclusion in exercising its authority. It is, of course, not unknown for independent agencies or the Executive Branch to misconstrue the intent of a statute; Congress can and often does correct such misconceptions, if the courts have not done so. Yet for a dozen years Congress has been made aware--acutely aware--of the IRS rulings of 1970 and 1971. As we noted earlier, few issues have been the subject of more vigorous and widespread debate and discussion in and out of Congress than those related to racial segregation in education. Sincere adherents advocating contrary views have ventilated the subject for well over three decades. Failure of Congress to modify the IRS rulings of 1970 and 1971, of which Congress was, by its own studies and by public discourse, constantly reminded; and Congress' awareness of the denial of tax-exempt status for racially discriminatory schools when enacting other and related legislation make out an unusually strong case of legislative acquiescence in and ratification by implication of the 1970 and 1971 rulings.

[18] 600 Ordinarily, and quite appropriately, courts are slow to attribute significance to the failure of Congress to act on particular legislation. See, e.g., Aaron v. SEC, 446 U.S. 680, 694 n. 11, 100 S.Ct. 1945, 1954 n. 11, 64 L.Ed.2d 611 (1980). We have observed that "unsuccessful attempts at legislation are not the best of guides to legislative *2033 intent," Red Lion Broadcasting Co. v. FCC, 395 U.S. 367, 381-382 n. 11, 89 S.Ct. 1794, 1801-1802 n. 11, 23 L.Ed.2d 371 (1969). Here, however, we do not have an ordinary claim of legislative acquiescence. Only one month after the IRS announced its position in 1970, Congress held its first hearings on this precise issue. Equal Educational Opportunity: Hearings Before the Senate Select Comm. on Equal Educational Opportunity, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. 1991 (1970). Exhaustive hearings have been held on the issue at various times since then. These include hearings in February 1982, after we granted review in this case. Administration's Change in Federal Policy Regarding the Tax Status of Racially Discriminatory Private Schools: Hearing Before the House Comm. on Ways and Means, 97th Cong., 2d Sess. (1982).

Non-action by Congress is not often a useful guide, but the non-action here is significant. During the past 12 years there have been no fewer than 13 bills introduced to overturn the IRS interpretation of § 501(c)(3). [FN25] Not one of these bills has emerged from any committee, although Congress has enacted numerous other amendments to § 501 during this same period, including an amendment to § 501(c)(3) itself. Tax Reform Act of 1976, Pub.L. 94-455, § 1313(a), 90 Stat. 1520, 1730 (1976). It is hardly conceivable that Congress--and in this setting, any Member of Congress--was not abundantly 601 aware of what was going on. In view of its prolonged and acute awareness of so important an issue, Congress' failure to act on the bills proposed on this subject provides added support for concluding that Congress acquiesced in the IRS rulings of 1970 and 1971. See, e.g., Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Curran, 456 U.S. 353, 379-382, 102 S.Ct. 1825, 1839-1841, 72 L.Ed.2d 182 (1982); Haig v. Agee, 453 U.S. 280, 300-301, 101 S.Ct. 2766, 2778-2779, 69 L.Ed.2d 640 (1981); Herman & MacLean v. Huddleston, --- U.S. ----, ----, 103 S.Ct. 683, 689, 74 L.Ed.2d 548 (1983); United States v. Rutherford, 442 U.S. 544, 554 n. 10, 99 S.Ct. 2470, 2476 n. 10, 61 L.Ed.2d 68 (1979).

The evidence of Congressional approval of the policy embodied in Revenue Ruling 71-447 goes well beyond the failure of Congress to act on legislative proposals. Congress affirmatively manifested its acquiescence in the IRS policy when it enacted the present § 501(i) of the Code, Act of October 20, 1976, Pub.L. 94-568, 90 Stat. 2697 (1976). That provision denies tax- exempt status to social clubs whose charters or policy statements provide for "discrimination against any person on the basis of race, color, or religion." [FN26] Both the House and Senate committee reports on that bill articulated the national policy against granting tax exemptions to racially discriminatory private clubs. S.Rep. No. 1318, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., 8 (1976); H.R.Rep. No. 1353, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., 8 (1976), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1976, p. 6051.

FN26. Prior to the introduction of this legislation, a three-judge district court had held that segregated social clubs were entitled to tax exemptions. McGlotten v. Connally, 338 F.Supp. 448 (D.D.C.1972). Section 501(i) was enacted primarily in response to that decision. See S.Rep. No. 1318, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., 7-8 (1976); H.R.Rep. No. 1353, 94th Cong., 2d Sess., 8 (1976), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News

Even more significant is the fact that both reports focus on this Court's affirmance of Green v. Connally, supra, as having established that "discrimination on account of race is inconsistent with an educational institution's tax exempt status." S.Rep. No. 1318, supra, at 7-8 and n. 5; H.R.Rep. No. 1353, supra, at 8 and n. 5 (emphasis added), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News, p. 6058. These references in Congressional committee reports on an enactment denying 2034 tax exemptions to racially discriminatory private social clubs cannot be read *602 other than as indicating approval of the standards applied to racially discriminatory private schools by the IRS subsequent to 1970, and specifically of Revenue Ruling 71-447. [FN27]

FN27. Reliance is placed on scattered statements in floor debate by Congressmen critical of the IRS' adoption of Revenue Ruling 71-447. See, e.g., Brief of Petitioner Goldsboro Christian Schools 27-28. Those views did not prevail. That several Congressmen, expressing their individual views, argued that the IRS had no authority to take the action in question, is hardly a balance for the overwhelming evidence of Congressional awareness of and acquiescence in the IRS rulings of 1970 and 1971. Petitioners also argue that the Ashbrook and Dornan Amendments to the Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Appropriations Act of 1980; Pub.L. 96-74 ; §§ 103, 614, 615; 93 Stat. 559, 562, 576-577 (1979), reflect Congressional opposition to the IRS policy formalized in Revenue Ruling 71-447. Those amendments, however, are directly concerned only with limiting more aggressive enforcement procedures proposed by the IRS in 1978 and 1979 and preventing the adoption of more stringent substantive standards. The Ashbrook Amendment, § 103 of the Act, applies only to procedures, guidelines or measures adopted after August 22, 1978, and thus in no way affects the status of Revenue Ruling 71-447. In fact, both Congressman Dornan and Congressman Ashbrook explicitly stated that their amendments would have no effect on prior IRS policy, including Revenue Ruling 71-447, see 125 Cong.Rec. H5982 (daily ed. July 16, 1979) (Cong. Dornan: "[M]y amendment will not affect existing IRS rules which IRS has used to revoke tax exemptions of white segregated academies under Revenue Ruling 71-447...."); 125 Cong.Rec. H5882 (daily ed. July 13, 1979) (Cong. Ashbrook: "My amendment very clearly indicates on its face that all the regulations in existence as of August 22, 1978, would not be touched."). These amendments therefore do not indicate Congressional rejection of Revenue Ruling 71-447 and the standards contained therein.

Petitioners contend that, even if the Commissioner's policy is valid as to nonreligious private schools, that policy cannot constitutionally be applied to schools that engage in racial discrimination on the basis of sincerely held religious beliefs. [FN28] *603 As to such schools, it is argued that the IRS construction of § 170 and § 501(c)(3) violates their free exercise rights under the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment. This contention presents claims not heretofore considered by this Court in precisely this context.

FN28. The District Court found, on the basis of a full evidentiary record, that the challenged practices of petitioner Bob Jones University were based on a genuine belief that the Bible forbids interracial dating and marriage. 468 F.Supp., at 894. We assume, as did the District Court, that the same is true with respect to petitioner Goldsboro Christian Schools. See 436 F.Supp., at 1317.

[19][20][21] This Court has long held the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment an absolute prohibition against governmental regulation of religious beliefs, Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 219, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 1535, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972); generally U.S. Comm'n on Civil Rights, Discriminatory Religious Schools and Tax Exempt Status 10-17 (1982). In addition, as the Court of Appeals noted, "the uniform application of the rule to all religiously operated schools avoids the necessity for a potentially entangling inquiry into whether a racially restrictive practice is the result of sincere religious belief." United States v. Bob Jones Univ., 639 F.2d 147, 155 (CA4 1980) (emphasis in original). Cf. NLRB v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 440 U.S. 490, 99 S.Ct. 1313, 59 L.Ed.2d 533 (1979). But see generally Note, 90 Yale L.J. 350 (1980).

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

*605 IV

[25] The remaining issue is whether the IRS properly applied its policy to these petitioners. Petitioner Goldsboro Christian Schools admits that it "maintain[s] racially discriminatory policies," Brief of Petitioner, Goldsboro Christian Schools, No. 81-1, at 10, but seeks to justify those policies on grounds we have fully discussed. The IRS properly denied tax- exempt status to Goldsboro Christian Schools.

Petitioner Bob Jones University, however, contends that it is not racially discriminatory. It emphasizes that it now allows all races to enroll, subject only to its restrictions on the conduct of all students, including its prohibitions of association between men and women of different races, and of interracial marriage. [FN31] Although a 2036 ban on intermarriage or interracial dating applies to all races, decisions of this Court firmly establish that discrimination on the basis of racial affiliation and association is a form of racial discrimination, see, e.g., Loving v. Virginia, 388 U.S. 1, 87 S.Ct. 1817, 18 L.Ed.2d 1010 (1967); McLaughlin v. Florida, 379 U.S. 184, 85 S.Ct. 283, 13 L.Ed.2d 222 (1964); Tillman v. Wheaton-Haven Recreation Ass'n, 410 U.S. 431, 93 S.Ct. 1090, 35 L.Ed.2d 403 (1973). We therefore find that the IRS properly applied Revenue Ruling 71- 447 to Bob Jones University. [FN32]

FN31. This argument would in any event apply only to the final eight months of the five tax years at issue in this case. Prior to May 1975, Bob Jones University's admissions policy was racially discriminatory on its face, since the University excluded unmarried Negro students while admitting unmarried Caucasians.

FN32. Bob Jones University also argues that the IRS policy should not apply to it because it is entitled to exemption under § 501(c)(3) as a "religious" organization, rather than as an "educational" institution. The record in this case leaves no doubt, however, that Bob Jones University is both an educational institution and a religious institution. As discussed previously, the IRS policy properly extends to all private schools, including religious schools. See n. 29, supra. The IRS policy thus was properly applied to Bob Jones University.

The judgments of the Court of Appeals are, accordingly,

Affirmed.

*606 Justice POWELL, concurring in part and concurring in the judgment.

I join the Court's judgment, along with part III of its opinion holding that the denial of tax exemptions to petitioners does not violate the First Amendment. I write separately because I am troubled by the broader implications of the Court's opinion with respect to the authority of the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and its construction of §§ 170(c) and 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

Federal taxes are not imposed on organizations "operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes ...." 26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3). The Code also permits a tax deduction for contributions made to these organizations. § 170(c) . It is clear that petitioners, organizations incorporated for educational purposes, fall within the language of the statute. It also is clear that the language itself does not mandate refusal of tax-exempt status to any private school that maintains a racially discriminatory admissions policy. Accordingly, there is force in Justice REHNQUIST's argument that §§ 170(c) and 501(c)(3) should be construed as setting forth the only criteria Congress has established for qualification as a tax-exempt organization. See post, at 2039-2041 (REHNQUIST, J., dissenting). Indeed, were we writing prior to the history detailed in the Court's opinion, this could well be the construction I would adopt. But there has been a decade of acceptance that is persuasive in the circumstances of this case, and I conclude that there are now sufficient reasons for accepting the IRS's construction of the Code as proscribing 607 tax exemptions for schools that discriminate on the basis of race as a matter of policy.

I cannot say that this construction of the Code, adopted by the IRS in 1970 and upheld by the Court of Appeals below, is without logical support. The statutory terms are not self-defining, and it is plausible that in some instances an organization seeking a tax exemption might act in a manner so clearly contrary to the purposes of our laws that it could not be deemed to serve the enumerated statutory purposes. [FN1] And, as the Court notes, if any national policy is sufficiently fundamental to constitute such an overriding limitation on the availability of tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3), it is the policy against racial discrimination in education. See ante, at 2030-2031. Finally, and of critical importance for me, the subsequent actions of Congress present "an unusually strong case of legislative acquiescence in and ratification *2037 by implication of the [IRS'] 1970 and 1971 rulings" with respect to racially discriminatory schools. Ante, at 2033. In particular, Congress' enactment of § 501(i) in 1976 is strong evidence of agreement with these particular IRS rulings. [FN2]

FN1. I note that the Court has construed other provisions of the Code as containing narrowly defined public-policy exceptions. See Commissioner v. Tellier, 383 U.S. 687, 693-694, 86 S.Ct. 1118, 1121- 1122, 16 L.Ed.2d 185 (1966); Tank Truck Rentals, Inc. v. Commissioner, 356 U.S. 30, 35, 78 S.Ct. 507, 510, 2 L.Ed.2d 562 (1958).

FN2. The District Court for the District of Columbia in Green v. Connally, 330 F.Supp. 1150 (three-judge court), aff'd sub nom. Coit v. Green, 404 U.S. 997, 92 S.Ct. 564, 30 L.Ed.2d 550 (1971) (per curiam), held that racially discriminatory private schools were not entitled to tax- exempt status. The same District Court, however, later ruled that racially segregated social clubs could receive tax exemptions under § 501(c)(7) of the Code. See McGlotten v. Connally, 338 F.Supp. 448 (D.D.C.1972) (three-judge court). Faced with these two important three- judge court rulings, Congress expressly overturned the relevant portion of McGlotten by enacting § 501(i), thus conforming the policy with respect to social clubs to the prevailing policy with respect to private schools. This affirmative step is a persuasive indication that Congress has not just silently acquiesced in the result of Green. Cf. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith v. Curran, 456 U.S. 353, 402, 102 S.Ct. 1825, 1852, 72 L.Ed.2d 182 (1982) (POWELL, J., dissenting) (rejecting theory "that congressional intent can be inferred from silence, and that legislative inaction should achieve the force of law").

I therefore concur in the Court's judgment that tax-exempt status under §§ 170(c) and 501(c)(3) is not available to private schools that concededly are racially discriminatory. I do not agree, however, with the Court's more general explanation of the justifications for the tax exemptions provided to charitable organizations. The Court states:

"Charitable exemptions are justified on the basis that the exempt entity confers a public benefit--a benefit which the society or the community may not itself choose or be able to provide, or which supplements and advances the work of public institutions already supported by tax revenues. History buttresses logic to make clear that, to warrant exemption under § 501(c)(3), an institution must fall within a category specified in that section and must demonstrably serve and be in harmony with the public interest. The institution's purpose must not be so at odds with the common community conscience as to undermine any public benefit that might otherwise be conferred." Ante, at 2028-2029 (footnote omitted).

Applying this test to petitioners, the Court concludes that "[c]learly an educational institution engaging in practices affirmatively at odds with [the] declared position of the whole government cannot be seen as exercising a 'beneficial and stabilizing influenc[e] in community life,' ... and is not 'charitable,' within the meaning of § 170 and § 501(c)(3)." Ante, at 2032 (quoting Walz v. Tax Comm'n, 397 U.S. 664, 673, 90 S.Ct. 1409, 1413, 25 L.Ed.2d 697 (1970)).

With all respect, I am unconvinced that the critical question in determining tax-exempt status is whether an individual organization provides a clear "public benefit" as defined by the Court. Over 106,000 organizations filed § 501(c)(3) returns in 1981. Internal Revenue Service, 1982 Exempt 609 Organization/Business Master File. I find it impossible to believe that all or even most of those organizations could prove that they "demonstrably serve and [are] in harmony with the public interest" or that they are "beneficial and stabilizing influences in community life." Nor I am prepared to say that petitioners, because of their racially discriminatory policies, necessarily contribute nothing of benefit to the community. It is clear from the substantially secular character of the curricula and degrees offered that petitioners provide educational benefits.

Even more troubling to me is the element of conformity that appears to inform the Court's analysis. The Court asserts that an exempt organization must "demonstrably serve and be in harmony with the public interest," must have a purpose that comports with "the common community conscience," and must not act in a manner "affirmatively at odds with [the] declared position of the whole government." Taken together, these passages suggest that the primary function of a tax-exempt organization *2038 is to act on behalf of the Government in carrying out governmentally approved policies. In my opinion, such a view of § 501(c)(3) ignores the important role played by tax exemptions in encouraging diverse, indeed often sharply conflicting, activities and viewpoints. As Justice BRENNAN has observed, private, nonprofit groups receive tax exemptions because "each group contributes to the diversity of association, viewpoint, and enterprise essential to a vigorous, pluralistic society." Walz, supra, at 689, 90 S.Ct., at 1421 (BRENNAN, J., concurring). Far from representing an effort to reinforce any perceived "common community conscience," the provision of tax exemptions to nonprofit groups is one indispensable means of limiting the influence of governmental orthodoxy on important areas of community life. [FN3] 610 Given the importance of our tradition of pluralism, [FN4] "[t]he interest in preserving an area of untrammeled choice for private philanthropy is very great." Jackson v. Statler Foundation, 496 F.2d 623, 639 (CA2 1974) (Friendly, J., dissenting from denial of reconsideration en banc).

FN3. Certainly § 501(c)(3) has not been applied in the manner suggested by the Court's analysis. The 1,100-page list of exempt organizations includes--among countless examples--such organizations as American Friends Service Committee, Inc., Committee on the Present Danger, Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States, Moral Majority Foundation, Inc., Friends of the Earth Foundation, Inc., Mountain States Legal Foundation, National Right to Life Educational Foundation, Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Scientists and Engineers for Secure Energy, Inc., and Union of Concerned Scientists Fund, Inc. See Internal Revenue Service, Cumulative List of Organizations Described in Section 170(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, at 31, 221, 376, 518, 670, 677, 694, 795, 880, 1001, 1073 (Rev'd Oct. 1981). It would be difficult indeed to argue that each of these organizations reflects the views of the "common community conscience" or "demonstrably ... [is] in harmony with the public interest." In identifying these organizations, largely taken at random from the tens of thousands on the list, I of course do not imply disapproval of their being exempt from taxation. Rather, they illustrate the commendable tolerance by our Government of even the most strongly held divergent views, including views that at least from time to time are "at odds" with the position of our Government. We have consistently recognized that such disparate groups are entitled to share the privilege of tax exemption.

FN4. "A distinctive feature of America's tradition has been respect for diversity. This has been characteristic of the peoples from numerous lands who have built our country. It is the essence of our democratic system." Mississippi University for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. ----, ----, 102 S.Ct. 3331, 3347, 73 L.Ed.2d 1090 (1982) (POWELL, J., dissenting). Sectarian schools make an important contribution to this tradition, for they "have provided an educational alternative for millions of young Americans" and "often afford wholesome competition with our public schools." Wolman v. Walter, 433 U.S. 229, 262, 97 S.Ct. 2593, 2613, 53 L.Ed.2d 714 (1977) (POWELL, J., concurring in part, concurring in the judgment in part, and dissenting in part).

I do not suggest that these considerations always are or should be dispositive. Congress, of course, may find that some organizations do not warrant tax-exempt status. In this case I agree with the Court that Congress has determined that the policy against racial discrimination in education should override the countervailing interest in permitting unorthodox private behavior.

*611 I would emphasize, however, that the balancing of these substantial interests is for Congress to perform. I am unwilling to join any suggestion that the Internal Revenue Service is invested with authority to decide which public policies are sufficiently "fundamental" to require denial of tax exemptions. Its business is to administer laws designed to produce revenue for the Government, not to promote "public policy." As former IRS Commissioner Kurtz has noted, questions concerning religion and civil rights "are far afield from the more typical tasks of tax administrators--determining taxable income." Kurtz, Difficult Definitional Problems in Tax Administration: Religion and Race, 23 Catholic Lawyer 301, 301 (1978). This Court often has expressed concern that the scope of an agency's authorization be limited to those areas in which the agency fairly may be 2039 said to have expertise, [FN5] and this concern applies with special force when the asserted administrative power is one to determine the scope of public policy. As Justice BLACKMUN has noted, FN5. See, e.g., Community Television of Southern California v. Gottfried, 459 U.S. ----, ----, n. 17, 103 S.Ct. 885, 893, n. 17, 74 L.Ed.2d 705 (1983) ("[A]n agency's general duty to enforce the public interest does not require it to assume responsibility for enforcing legislation that is not directed at the agency"); Hampton v. Mow Sun Wong, 426 U.S. 88, 114, 96 S.Ct. 1895, 1910, 48 L.Ed.2d 495 (1976) ("It is the business of the Civil Service Commission to adopt and enforce regulations which will best promote the efficiency of the federal civil service. That agency has no responsibility for foreign affairs, for treaty negotiations, for establishing immigration quotas or conditions of entry, or for naturalization policies"); NAACP v. FPC, 425 U.S. 662, 670, 96 S.Ct. 1806, 1811, 48 L.Ed.2d 284 (1976) ("The use of the words 'public interest' in the Gas and Power Acts is not a directive to the [Federal Power] Commission to seek to eradicate discrimination, but, rather, is a charge to promote the orderly production of supplies of electric energy and natural gas at just and reasonable rates").

"where the philanthropic organization is concerned, there appears to be little to circumscribe the almost unfettered power of the Commissioner. This may be very well so long as one subscribes to the particular brand of social policy the Commissioner happens to be advocating *612 at the time ..., but application of our tax laws should not operate in so fickle a fashion. Surely, social policy in the first instance is a matter for legislative concern."

Commissioner v. "Americans United" Inc., 416 U.S. 752, 774-775, 94 S.Ct. 2053, 2065, 40 L.Ed.2d 518 (1974) (BLACKMUN, J., dissenting).

III

The Court's decision upholds IRS Revenue Ruling 71-447, and thus resolves the question whether tax-exempt status is available to private schools that openly maintain racially discriminatory admissions policies. There no longer is any justification for Congress to hesitate--as it apparently has--in articulating and codifying its desired policy as to tax exemptions for discriminatory organizations. Many questions remain, such as whether organizations that violate other policies should receive tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3). These should be legislative policy choices. It is not appropriate to leave the IRS "on the cutting edge of developing national policy." Kurtz, supra, at 308. The contours of public policy should be determined by Congress, not by judges or the IRS.

Justice REHNQUIST, dissenting.

The Court points out that there is a strong national policy in this country against racial discrimination. To the extent that the Court states that Congress in furtherance of this policy could deny tax-exempt status to educational institutions that promote racial discrimination, I readily agree. But, unlike the Court, I am convinced that Congress simply has failed to take this action and, as this Court has said over and over again, regardless of our view on the propriety of Congress' failure to legislate we are not constitutionally empowered to act for them.

In approaching this statutory construction question the Court quite adeptly avoids the statute it is construing. This I am sure is no accident, for there is nothing in the language *613 of § 501(c)(3) that supports the result obtained by the Court. Section 501(c)(3) provides tax-exempt status for:

> "Corporations, and any community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, testing for public safety, literary, or educational purposes, or to foster national or international amateur sports competition (but only if no part of its activities involve the provision of athletic facilities or equipment), or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation (except as otherwise2040 provided in subsection (h)), and which does not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office." 26 U.S.C. § 501(c)(3).

With undeniable clarity, Congress has explicitly defined the requirements for § 501(c)(3) status. An entity must be (1) a corporation, or community chest, fund, or foundation, (2) organized for one of the eight enumerated purposes, (3) operated on a nonprofit basis, and (4) free from involvement in lobbying activities and political campaigns. Nowhere is there to be found some additional, undefined public policy requirement.

The Court first seeks refuge from the obvious reading of § 501(c)(3) by turning to § 170 of the Internal Revenue Code which provides a tax deduction for contributions made to § 501(c)(3) organizations. In setting forth the general rule, § 170 states:

> "There shall be allowed as a deduction any charitable contribution (as defined in subsection (c)) payment of which is made within the taxable year. A charitable contribution shall be allowable as a deduction only if verified *614 under regulations prescribed by the Secretary." 26 U.S.C. § 170(a)(1).

The Court seizes the words "charitable contribution" and with little discussion concludes that "[o]n its face, therefore, § 170 reveals that Congress' intention was to provide tax benefits to organizations serving charitable purposes," intimating that this implies some unspecified common law charitable trust requirement. Ante, at 2026.

The Court would have been well advised to look to subsection (c) where, as § 170(a)(1) indicates, Congress has defined a "charitable contribution":

> "For purposes of this section, the term 'charitable contribution' means a contribution or gift to or for the use of ... [a] corporation, trust, or community chest, fund, or foundation ... organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or to foster national or international amateur sports competition (but only if no part of its activities involve the provision of athletic facilities or equipment), or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals; ... no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual; and ... which is not disqualified for tax exemption under section 501(c)(3) by reason of attempting to influence legislation, and which does not participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office." 26 U.S.C. § 170(c).

Plainly, § 170(c) simply tracks the requirements set forth in § 501(c)(3). Since § 170 is no more than a mirror of § 501(c)(3) and, as the Court points out, § 170 followed § 501(c)(3) by more than two decades, ante, at 2026, n. 10, it is at best of little usefulness in finding the meaning of § 501(c)(3).

Making a more fruitful inquiry, the Court next turns to the legislative history of § 501(c)(3) and finds that Congress intended 615 in that statute to offer a tax benefit to organizations that Congress believed were providing a public benefit. I certainly agree. But then the Court leaps to the conclusion that this history is proof Congress intended that an organization seeking § 501(c)(3) status "must fall within a category specified in that section and must demonstrably serve and be in harmony with the public interest." Ante, at 2029 (emphasis added). To the contrary, I think that the legislative history of § 501(c)(3) unmistakably makes clear that Congress has decided what organizations are serving a public purpose and providing a public benefit within the meaning of § 501(c)(3) and has clearly set forth in § 501(c)(3) the characteristics of such organizations. In fact, there are few examples which better illustrate Congress' effort to define and redefine the requirements of a legislative act.

The first general income tax law was passed by Congress in the form of the Tariff Act of 1894. A provision of that Act *2041 provided an exemption for "corporations, companies, or associations organized and conducted solely for charitable, religious, or educational purposes." Ch. 349, § 32, 28 Stat. 509, 556 (1894). The income tax portion of the 1894 Act was held unconstitutional by this Court, see Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601, 15 S.Ct. 912, 39 L.Ed. 1108 (1895), but a similar exemption appeared in the Tariff Act of 1909 which imposed a tax on corporate income. The 1909 Act provided an exemption for "any corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, or educational purposes, no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual." Ch. 6, § 38, 36 Stat. 11, 113 (1909).

With the ratification of the Sixteenth Amendment, Congress again turned its attention to an individual income tax with the Tariff Act of 1913. And again, in the direct predecessor of § 501(c)(3), a tax exemption was provided for "any corporation or association organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, 616 no part of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual." Ch. 16, § II(G)(a), 38 Stat. 114, 172 (1913). In subsequent acts Congress continued to broaden the list of exempt purposes. The Revenue Act of 1918 added an exemption for corporations or associations organized "for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals." Ch. 18, § 231(6), 40 Stat. 1057, 1076 (1918). The Revenue Act of 1921 expanded the groups to which the exemption applied to include "any community chest, fund, or foundation" and added "literary" endeavors to the list of exempt purposes. Ch. 136, § 231(6), 42 Stat. 227, 253 (1921). The exemption remained unchanged in the Revenue Acts of 1924, 1926, 1928, and 1932. [FN1] In the Revenue Act of 1934 Congress added the requirement that no substantial part of the activities of any exempt organization can involve the carrying on of "propaganda" or "attempting to influence legislation." Ch. 277, § 101(6), 48 Stat. 680, 700 (1934). Again, the exemption was left unchanged by the Revenue Acts of 1936 and 1938. [FN2]

FN2. See Revenue Act of 1936, ch. 690, § 101(6), 49 Stat. 1648, 1674; Revenue Act of 1938, ch. 289, § 101(6), 52 Stat. 447, 481.

The tax laws were overhauled by the Internal Revenue Code of 1939, but this exemption was left unchanged. Ch. 1, § 101(6), 53 Stat. 1, 33 (1939). When the 1939 Code was replaced with the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the exemption was adopted in full in the present § 501(c)(3) with the addition of "testing for public safety" as an exempt purpose and an additional restriction that tax-exempt organizations could not "participate in, or intervene in (including the publishing or distributing of statements), any political campaign on behalf of any candidate for public office." Ch. 1, § 501(c)(3), 68A Stat. 1, 163 (1954). Then in 1976 the statute was again amended adding to the purposes for which an exemption would be authorized, "to foster national or international amateur *617 sports competition," provided the activities did not involve the provision of athletic facilities or equipment. Tax Reform Act of 1976, Pub.L. No. 94-455, § 1313(a), 90 Stat. 1520, 1730 (1976).

One way to read the opinion handed down by the Court today leads to the conclusion that this long and arduous refining process of § 501(c)(3) was certainly a waste of time, for when enacting the original 1894 statute Congress intended to adopt a common law term of art, and intended that this term of art carry with it all of the common law baggage which defines it. Such a view, however, leads also to the unsupportable idea that Congress has spent almost a century adding illustrations simply to clarify an already defined common law term.

2042 Another way to read the Court's opinion leads to the conclusion that even though Congress has set forth some of the requirements of a § 501(c)(3) organization, it intended that the IRS additionally require that organizations meet a higher standard of public interest, not stated by Congress, but to be determined and defined by the IRS and the courts. This view I find equally unsupportable. Almost a century of statutory history proves that Congress itself intended to decide what § 501(c)(3) requires. Congress has expressed its decision in the plainest of terms in § 501(c)(3) by providing that tax-exempt status is to be given to any corporation, or community chest, fund, or foundation that is organized for one of the eight enumerated purposes, operated on a nonprofit basis, and uninvolved in lobbying activities or political campaigns. The IRS certainly is empowered to adopt regulations for the enforcement of these specified requirements, and the courts have authority to resolve challenges to the IRS's exercise of this power, but Congress has left it to neither the IRS nor the courts to select or add to the requirements of § 501(c)(3).

The Court suggests that unless its new requirement be added to § 501(c)(3), nonprofit organizations formed to teach pickpockets and terrorists would necessarily acquire tax exempt *618 status. Ante, at 2028 n. 18. Since the Court does not challenge the characterization of petitioners as "educational" institutions within the meaning of § 501(c)(3), and in fact states several times in the course of its opinion that petitioners are educational institutions, see, e.g., ante, at 2022, 2024, 2035 n. 29, 2036 n. 32, it is difficult to see how this argument advances the Court's reasoning for disposing of petitioners' cases.

But simply because I reject the Court's heavy-handed creation of the requirement that an organization seeking § 501(c)(3) status must "serve and be in harmony with the public interest," ante, at 2029, does not mean that I would deny to the IRS the usual authority to adopt regulations further explaining what Congress meant by the term "educational." The IRS has fully exercised that authority in 26 CFR § 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(3), which provides:

"(3) Educational defined --(i) In general. The term "educational", as used in section 501(c)(3), relates to--

"(a) The instruction or training of the individual for the purpose of improving or developing his capabilities; or

"(b) The instruction of the public on subjects useful to the individual and beneficial to the community.

"An organization may be educational even though it advocates a particular position or viewpoint so long as it presents a sufficiently full and fair exposition of the pertinent facts as to permit an individual or the public to form an independent opinion or conclusion. On the other hand, an organization is not educational if its principal function is the mere presentation of unsupported opinion.

"(ii) Examples of educational organizations. The following are examples of organizations which, if they otherwise meet the requirements of this section, are educational:

619 "Example (1). An organization, such as a primary or secondary school, a college, or a professional or trade school, which has a regularly scheduled curriculum, a regular faculty, and a regularly enrolled body of students in attendance at a place where the educational activities are regularly carried on.

"Example (2). An organization whose activities consist of presenting public discussion groups, forums, panels, lectures, or other similar programs. Such programs may be on radio or television.

"Example (3). An organization which presents a course of instruction by means of correspondence or through the utilization of television or radio.

"Example (4). Museums, zoos, planetariums, symphony orchestras, and other similar organizations."

Prior to 1970, when the charted course was abruptly changed, the IRS had continuously interpreted § 501(c)(3) and its predecessors in accordance with the view I have expressed above. This, of course, is of considerable significance in determining the intended meaning of the statute. NLRB v. Boeing Co., 412 U.S. 67, 75, 93 S.Ct. 1952, 1957, 36 L.Ed.2d 752 (1973); Power Reactor Development Co. v. Electricians, 367 U.S. 396, 408, 81 S.Ct. 1529, 1535, 6 L.Ed.2d 924 (1961).

In 1970 the IRS was sued by parents of black public school children seeking to enjoin the IRS from according tax-exempt status under § 501(c)(3) to private schools in Mississippi that discriminated against blacks. The IRS answered, consistent with its long standing position, by maintaining a lack of authority to deny the tax-exemption if the schools met the specified requirements of § 501(c)(3). Then "[i]n the midst of this litigation", Green v. Connally, 330 F.Supp. 1150, 1156 (D.D.C.), aff'd per curiam sub nom. Coit v. Green, 404 U.S. 997, 92 S.Ct. 564, 30 L.Ed.2d 550 (1971), and in the face of a preliminary injunction, *620 the IRS changed its position and adopted the view of the plaintiffs.

Following the close of the litigation, the IRS published its new position in Revenue Ruling 71-447, stating that "a school asserting a right to the benefits provided for in section 501(c)(3) of the Code as being organized and operated exclusively for educational purposes must be a common law charity in order to be exempt under that section." Rev.Rul. 71-447, 1971-2 Cum.Bull. 230. The IRS then concluded that a school that promotes racial discrimination violates public policy and therefore cannot qualify as a common law charity. The circumstances under which this change in interpretation was made suggest that it is entitled to very little deference. But even if the circumstances were different, the latter-day wisdom of the IRS has no basis in § 501(c)(3).

Perhaps recognizing the lack of support in the statute itself, or in its history, for the 1970 IRS change in interpretation, the Court finds that "[t]he actions of Congress since 1970 leave no doubt that the IRS reached the correct conclusion in exercising its authority," concluding that there is "an unusually strong case of legislative acquiescence in and ratification by implication of the 1970 and 1971 rulings." Ante, at 2033. The Court relies first on several bills introduced to overturn the IRS interpretation of § 501(c)(3). Ante, at 2033 and n. 25. But we have said before, and it is equally applicable here, that this type of congressional inaction is of virtually no weight in determining legislative intent. See United States v. Wise, 370 U.S. 405, 411, 82 S.Ct. 1354, 1358, 8 L.Ed.2d 590 (1962); Waterman Steamship Corp. v. United States, 381 U.S. 252, 269, 85 S.Ct. 1389, 1398, 14 L.Ed.2d 370 (1965). These bills and related hearings indicate little more than that a vigorous debate has existed in Congress concerning the new IRS position.

The Court next asserts that "Congress affirmatively manifested its acquiescence in the IRS policy when it enacted the present § 501(i) of the Code," a provision that "denies tax exempt status to social clubs whose charters or policy statements *621 provide for" racial discrimination. Ante, at 2033.

Quite to the contrary, it seems to me that in § 501(i) Congress showed that when it wants to add a requirement prohibiting racial discrimination to one of the tax-benefit provisions, it is fully aware of how to do it. Cf. Commissioner v. Tellier, 383 U.S. 687, 693 n. 10, 86 S.Ct. 1118, 1121 n. 10, 16 L.Ed.2d 185 (1966).

The Court intimates that the Ashbrook and Dornan Amendments also reflect an intent by Congress to acquiesce in the new IRS position. Ante, at 2034 n. 27. The amendments were passed to limit certain enforcement procedures proposed by the IRS in 1978 and 1979 for determining whether a school operated in a racially *2044 nondiscriminatory fashion. The Court points out that in proposing his amendment, Congressman Ashbrook stated: " 'My amendment very clearly indicates on its face that all the regulations in existence as of August 22, 1978, would not be touched.' " Ante, at 2034 n. 27. The Court fails to note that Congressman Ashbrook also said:

> "The IRS has no authority to create public policy.... So long as the Congress has not acted to set forth a national policy respecting denial of tax exemptions to private schools, it is improper for the IRS or any other branch of the Federal Government to seek denial of tax-exempt status.... There exists but a single responsibility which is proper for the Internal Revenue Service: To serve as tax collector." 125 Cong.Rec. H5879-80 (daily ed. July 13, 1979).

In the same debate, Congressman Grassley asserted: "Nobody argues that racial discrimination should receive preferred tax status in the United States. However, the IRS should not be making these decisions on the agency's own discretion. Congress should make these decisions." Id., at 5884. The same debates are filled with other similar statements. While on the whole these debates do not show conclusively that Congress believed the IRS had exceeded its authority with the 1970 change in position, they likewise are 622 far less than a showing of acquiescence in and ratification of the new position.

This Court continuously has been hesitant to find ratification through inaction. See United States v. Wise, supra. This is especially true where such a finding "would result in a construction of the statute which not only is at odds with the language of the section in question and the pattern of the statute taken as a whole, but also is extremely far reaching in terms of the virtually untrammeled and unreviewable power it would vest in a regulatory agency." SEC v. Sloan, 436 U.S. 103, 121, 98 S.Ct. 1702, 1713, 56 L.Ed.2d 148 (1978). Few cases would call for more caution in finding ratification by acquiescence than the present one. The new IRS interpretation is not only far less than a long standing administrative policy, it is at odds with a position maintained by the IRS, and unquestioned by Congress, for several decades prior to 1970. The interpretation is unsupported by the statutory language, it is unsupported by legislative history, the interpretation has lead to considerable controversy in and out of Congress, and the interpretation gives to the IRS a broad power which until now Congress had kept for itself. Where in addition to these circumstances Congress has shown time and time again that it is ready to enact positive legislation to change the tax code when it desires, this Court has no business finding that Congress has adopted the new IRS position by failing to enact legislation to reverse it.

I have no disagreement with the Court's finding that there is a strong national policy in this country opposed to racial discrimination. I agree with the Court that Congress has the power to further this policy by denying § 501(c)(3) status to organizations that practice racial discrimination. [FN3] But as of yet Congress has failed to do so. Whatever the reasons for the failure, this Court should not legislate for Congress. [FN4]

> FN3. I agree with the Court that such a requirement would not infringe on petitioners' First Amendment rights.

> FN4. Because of its holding, the Court does not have to decide whether it would violate the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment for Congress to grant § 501(c)(3) status to organizations that practice racial discrimination. Ante, at 2032 n. 24. I would decide that it does not. The statute is facially neutral; absent a showing of a discriminatory purpose, no equal protection violation is established. Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 241-244, 96 S.Ct. 2040, 2048-2049, 48

*623 Petitioners are each organized for the "instruction or training of the individual for the purpose of improving or developing his capabilities," 26 CFR § 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(3), and thus are organized for "educational purposes" within the meaning of § 501(c)(3). Petitioners' nonprofit status 2045 is uncontested. There is no indication that either petitioner has been involved in lobbying activities or political campaigns. Therefore, it is my view that unless and until Congress affirmatively amends § 501(c)(3) to require more, the IRS is without authority to deny petitioners § 501(c)(3) status. For this reason, I would reverse the Court of Appeals.

John BOLLARD, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
THE CALIFORNIA PROVINCE OF THE SOCIETY OF JESUS; The Maryland Province of the Society of Jesus; The Oregon Province of the Society of Jesus; The Jesuit Conference; Father John Privett, S.J.; Father Andrew Sotelo, S.J.; Father Thomas Gleeson, S.J.; Father Anton Harris, S.J., Defendants-Appellees.

No. 98-16194.

Argued and Submitted June 17, 1999
Filed Dec. 1, 1999

Former novice brought Title VII claim against order of priests and individual priests alleging that he was sexually harassed while training to become a priest. Defendants responded that they were protected by Title VII's ministerial exception. The United States District Court for the Northern District of California, Susan Yvonne Illston, J., 1998 WL 273011, dismissed for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. Former novice appealed. The Court of Appeals, William A. Fletcher, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) allowing Title VII claim to proceed did not violate free exercise clause, and (2) allowing Title VII claim to proceed did not violate establishment clause.

Reversed and remanded.

William A. FLETCHER, Circuit Judge:

[1][2] We must decide in this case whether the so-called "ministerial exception" to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 bars plaintiff John Bollard's claim of sexual harassment against the Jesuit order. Simply stated, the ministerial exception insulates a religious organization's employment decisions regarding its ministers from judicial scrutiny under Title VII. The Free Exercise and Establishment Clauses of the First Amendment compel this exception to the otherwise fully applicable commands of Title VII when the disputed employment practices involve a church's freedom to choose its ministers or to practice its beliefs. Because Title VII applies without a constitutionally compelled exception where, as here, the defendant church is neither exercising its constitutionally protected prerogative to choose its ministers nor embracing the behavior at issue as a constitutionally protected religious practice, we find that plaintiff Bollard has stated a claim sufficient to overcome a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).

I. Background

In August 1988, plaintiff John Bollard became a novice of the Society of Jesus, an order of Roman Catholic priests more commonly known as the Jesuits. As a novice, Bollard began the process of formation, during which men train and study to be ordained. Bollard alleges that, between 1990 and 1996, he was sexually harassed by his Jesuit superiors at the St. Ignatius College Preparatory School in San Francisco and at the Jesuit School of Theology in Berkeley, California. He claims that various superiors at these two institutions sent him pornographic material, made unwelcome sexual advances, and engaged him in inappropriate and unwelcome sexual discussions. Between mid-1995 and 1996, Bollard reported the harassment to superiors within the Jesuit order, but, so far as he knows, his reports prompted no corrective action. He alleges that the harassing conduct was so severe that he was forced to leave the Jesuit order in December 1996 before taking vows to become a priest.

Bollard filed a timely complaint of sexual harassment with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing, which automatically cross-filed his complaint with the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. He received a right-to-sue letter in January 1997 and filed a complaint in federal district court for the Northern District of California the following August. His complaint asserts a federal cause of action for sexual harassment in violation of section 703(a) of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a), as well as state law claims for failure to investigate, for constructive wrongful discharge, and for breach of contract.

[3][4] The district court found the ministerial exception applicable and held that Bollard had no valid claim under Title VII. It dismissed Bollard's Title VII claim for want of subject matter jurisdiction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over his state law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3). We review de novo a dismissal for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under Rule 12(b)(1), see Crist v. Leippe, 138 F.3d 801, 803 (9th Cir.1998), which is the same standard under which we review a dismissal for failure to state a 945 claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), see Steckman v. Hart Brewing, Inc., 143 F.3d 1293, 1295 (9th Cir.1998). At this stage in the proceedings, we take the allegations in Bollard's complaint as true. See Big Bear Lodging Ass'n v. Snow Summit, Inc., 182 F.3d 1096, 1099 (9th Cir.1999).

II. The Ministerial Exception to Title VII

[5] The ministerial exception to Title VII "precludes civil courts from adjudicating employment discrimination suits by ministers against the church or religious institution employing them." EEOC v. Catholic Univ. of Am., 83 F.3d 455, 461 (D.C.Cir.1996). We have previously acknowledged the existence of such an exception in other circuits, but we have never been asked to define its scope or to apply it. See EEOC v. Fremont Christian Sch., 781 F.2d 1362, 1369-70 (9th Cir.1986); EEOC v. Pacific Press Publ'g Ass'n, 676 F.2d 1272, 1278 (9th Cir.1982).

[6] The source of the ministerial exception is the Constitution rather than the statute. See, e.g., Fremont Christian Sch., 781 F.2d at 1365; Pacific Press, 676 F.2d at 1276; Rayburn v. General Conf. of Seventh-Day Adventists, 772 F.2d 1164, 1167 (4th Cir.1985). Insofar as race, sex, and national origin are concerned, the text of Title VII treats an employment dispute between a minister and his or her church like any other employment dispute. The statute does provide two exemptions from its non-discrimination mandate for religious groups. One permits a religious entity to restrict employment "connected with the carrying on ... of its activities" to members of its own faith, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-1(a); the other permits parochial schools to do the same, id. § 2000e-2(e). But neither of these statutory exceptions removes race, sex, or national origin as an impermissible basis of discrimination against employees of religious institutions. Nor do they single out ministerial employees for lesser protections than those enjoyed by other church employees.

Despite the lack of a statutory basis for the ministerial exception, and despite Congress' apparent intent to apply Title VII to religious organizations as to any other employer, courts have uniformly concluded that the Free Exercise and Establishment Clauses of the First Amendment require a narrowing construction of Title VII in order to insulate the relationship between a religious organization and its ministers from constitutionally impermissible interference by the government. See, e.g., Combs v. Central Texas Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church, 173 F.3d 343 (5th Cir.1999); Catholic Univ., 83 F.3d 455; Young v. Northern Ill. Conf. of United Methodist Church, 21 F.3d 184 (7th Cir.1994); Scharon v. St. Luke's Episcopal Presbyterian Hosps., 929 F.2d 360 (8th Cir.1991); Rayburn, 772 F.2d 1164; McClure v. Salvation Army, 460 F.2d 553 (5th Cir.1972). These First Amendment restrictions on Title VII provide important protections to churches that seek to choose their representatives free from government interference and according to the dictates of faith and conscience.

A. The Free Exercise Clause

[7][8] The Free Exercise Clause of the United States Constitution provides that "Congress shall make no law ... prohibiting the free exercise [of religion]." U.S. Const. amend. I. The Free Exercise Clause restricts the government's ability to intrude into ecclesiastical matters or to interfere with a church's governance of its own affairs. See, e.g., Kedroff v. St. Nicholas Cathedral of the Russian Orthodox Church in North America, 344 U.S. 94, 116, 73 S.Ct. 143, 97 L.Ed. 120 (1952) (explaining that the Free Exercise Clause protects the power of religious organizations "to decide for themselves, free from state interference, matters of church government as well as those of faith and doctrine"); see also 946Kreshik v. Saint Nicholas Cathedral,* 363 U.S. 190, 191, 80 S.Ct. 1037, 4 L.Ed.2d 1140 (1960) (per curiam) (forbidding the courts as well as the legislature from interfering with Free Exercise rights). In determining whether the proposed application of a statute would violate the Free Exercise Clause, courts must weigh three factors: "(1) the magnitude of the statute's impact upon the exercise of the religious belief, (2) the existence of a compelling state interest justifying the burden imposed upon the exercise of the religious belief, and (3) the extent to which recognition of an exemption from the statute would impede the objectives sought to be advanced by the state." Pacific Press, 676 F.2d at 1279; see also Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 403-07, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963).

[9][10] Some religious interests under the Free Exercise Clause are so strong that no compelling state interest justifies government intrusion into the ecclesiastical sphere. A secular court may not, for example, adjudicate matters that necessarily require it to decide among competing interpretations of church doctrine, or other matters of an essentially ecclesiastical nature, even if they also touch upon secular rights. See, e.g., Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 713, 96 S.Ct. 2372, 49 L.Ed.2d 151 (1976) (reversing the Illinois Supreme Court's determinations regarding several matters of internal church governance, because "religious controversies are not the proper subject of civil court inquiry"); Presbyterian Church v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Memorial Presbyterian Church, 393 U.S. 440, 449, 89 S.Ct. 601, 21 L.Ed.2d 658 (1969) (explaining that "First Amendment values are plainly jeopardized when church property litigation is made to turn on the resolution by civil courts of controversies over religious doctrine and practice"); Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 115, 73 S.Ct. 143 (prohibiting judicial resolution of the question of which church patriarch was entitled to use St. Nicholas Cathedral because it is "strictly a matter of ecclesiastical government"); Gonzalez v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Manila, 280 U.S. 1, 16, 50 S.Ct. 5, 74 L.Ed. 131 (1929) (holding that a secular court may not decide competing claims to a chaplaincy, because "the appointment is a canonical act, [and] it is the function of the church authorities to determine what the essential qualifications of a chaplain are and whether the candidate possesses them"); Watson v. Jones, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 679, 729, 20 L.Ed. 666 (1871) ("It is of the essence of these religious unions, and of their right to establish tribunals for the decision of questions arising among themselves, that those decisions should be binding in all cases of ecclesiastical cognizance, subject only to such appeals as the organism itself provides for.").

[11][12][13] A church's selection of its own clergy is one such core matter of ecclesiastical self-governance with which the state may not constitutionally interfere. See, e.g., Milivojevich, 426 U.S. at 717, 96 S.Ct. 2372; Kedroff, 344 U.S. at 116, 73 S.Ct. 143; Gonzalez, 280 U.S. at 16, 50 S.Ct. 5. A church must retain unfettered freedom in its choice of ministers because ministers represent the church to the people. As the Fifth Circuit has written, they act as the church's "lifeblood." McClure, 460 F.2d at 558. Indeed, the ministerial relationship lies so close to the heart of the church that it would offend the Free Exercise Clause simply to require the church to articulate a religious justification for its personnel decisions. See Rayburn, 772 F.2d at 1169 ("[T]he free exercise clause of the First Amendment protects the act of a decision rather than a motivation behind it."); see also Young, 21 F.3d at 186; Scharon, 929 F.2d at 363. In the words of the Fifth Circuit, > [W]e cannot conceive how the federal judiciary could determine whether an employment decision concerning a minister was based on legitimate or illegitimate grounds without inserting ourselves into a realm where the Constitution forbids us to tread, the internal management of a church.

Combs, 173 F.3d at 350.

[14][15] Because the plain language of Title VII purports to reach a church's *947 employment decisions regarding its ministers, courts have had to carve a ministerial exception out of Title VII in order to reconcile the statute with the Constitution. But the scope of the ministerial exception to Title VII is limited to what is necessary to comply with the First Amendment. For example, it does not apply to lay employees of a religious institution if they are not serving the function of ministers. See Fremont Christian Sch., 781 F.2d 1362; Pacific Press, 676 F.2d 1272. In the case of lay employees, the particularly strong religious interests surrounding a church's choice of its representative are missing, and we have concluded that applying Title VII is constitutionally permissible.

[16] In this case, as in the case of lay employees, the Free Exercise rationales supporting an exception to Title VII are missing. The Jesuits do not offer a religious justification for the harassment Bollard alleges; indeed, they condemn it as inconsistent with their values and beliefs. There is thus no danger that, by allowing this suit to proceed, we will thrust the secular courts into the constitutionally untenable position of passing judgment on questions of religious faith or doctrine. The Jesuits' disavowal of the harassment also reassures us that application of Title VII in this context will have no significant impact on their religious beliefs or doctrines. See Fremont Christian Sch., 781 F.2d at 1368; Pacific Press, 676 F.2d at 1279.

Moreover, this is not a case about the Jesuit order's choice of representative, a decision to which we would simply defer without further inquiry. Bollard does not complain that the Jesuits refused to ordain him or engaged in any other adverse personnel action. Cf. McClure, 460 F.2d at 559 ("Just as the initial function of selecting a minister is a matter of church administration and government, so are the functions which accompany such a selection. It is unavoidably true that these include the determination of a minister's salary, his place of assignment, and the duty he is to perform in the furtherance of the religious mission of the church."). On the contrary, according to the allegations in Bollard's complaint, the Jesuit order has enthusiastically encouraged Bollard's pursuit of the priesthood. It is true that Bollard alleges constructive discharge, but unlike actual discharge, constructive discharge does not refer to a decision by the Jesuits to terminate Bollard's employment. Instead, constructive discharge in the context of Bollard's Title VII sexual harassment claim functions only to signal his estimation of the severity of the harassment and to lay the foundation for including lost wages in a calculation of damages.

[17] The only relevant decision that we can reasonably attribute to the Jesuits on the facts alleged here is the decision not to intervene to stop or curtail the sexual harassment Bollard reported. See Black v. Snyder, 471 N.W.2d 715, 723 (Minn.Ct.App.1991) (Randall, J., dissenting). But, in our view, it strays too far from the rationale of the Free Exercise Clause to extend constitutional protection to this sort of disciplinary inaction simply because a minister is the target as well as the agent of the harassing activity. That Bollard has sued under an employment discrimination statute does not mean that the aspect of the church-minister employment relationship that warrants heightened constitutional protection--a church's freedom to choose its representatives--is present. The Free Exercise Clause rationale for protecting a church's personnel decisions concerning its ministers is the necessity of allowing the church to choose its representatives using whatever criteria it deems relevant. That rationale does not apply here, for the Jesuits most certainly do not claim that allowing harassment to continue unrectified is a method of choosing their clergy. Because there is no protected-choice rationale at issue, we intrude no further on church autonomy in allowing this case to proceed than we do, for example, in allowing parishioners' civil suits against a church for the negligent supervision 948 of ministers who have subjected them to inappropriate sexual behavior. See Martinelli v. Bridgeport Roman Catholic Diocesan Corp., 10 F.Supp.2d 138 (D.Conn.1998); Nutt v. Norwich Roman Catholic Diocese, 921 F.Supp. 66 (D.Conn.1995); Moses v. Diocese of Colorado, 863 P.2d 310 (Colo.1993).

Thus, we believe that we must apply the Sherbert balancing test in roughly the same manner as in cases involving lay employees in order to determine whether the application of Title VII in this case would violate the Free Exercise Clause. We conclude that it would not. Because the Jesuit order doctrinally disavows the harassment, the danger that the application of Title VII in this case will interfere with its religious faith or doctrine is particularly low. And while we recognize that applying any laws to religious institutions necessarily interferes with the unfettered autonomy churches would otherwise enjoy, this sort of generalized and diffuse concern for church autonomy, without more, does not exempt them from the operation of secular laws. Otherwise, churches would be free from all of the secular legal obligations that currently and routinely apply to them. For these reasons, we do not think that applying Title VII in the circumstances of this case will have an unconstitutional impact on the free exercise of the Jesuits' religious beliefs. At the same time, the strength of the government's interest, expressed in the text of Title VII, in protecting employees against sexual harassment is difficult to overstate. As we have said previously, it is a matter of the "highest priority." Pacific Press, 676 F.2d at 1280. Further, we know from the text of Title VII that Congress intended it to apply to churches. Where the church provides no doctrinal nor protected-choice based rationale for its alleged actions, and indeed expressly disapproves of the alleged actions, a balancing of interests strongly favors application of the statute. We therefore conclude that Bollard's sexual harassment claim does not run afoul of the Free Exercise Clause.

B. The Establishment Clause

[18] The Establishment Clause serves as a separate constitutional basis for the ministerial exception to Title VII. It provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion ..." U.S. Const. amend. I. In Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971), the Supreme Court articulated a three-part test to determine whether a statute violates the Establishment Clause: "First, the statute must have a secular legislative purpose; second, its principal or primary effect must be one that neither advances nor inhibits religion; finally, the statute must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion." Id. at 612-13, 91 S.Ct. 2105 (internal citations and quotations omitted). [FN2] This court has already held that Title VII has an obvious secular legislative purpose, and that its principal effect neither advances nor inhibits religion. Pacific Press, 676 F.2d at 1281-82. The only open question is whether applying Title VII in the circumstances of this case would foster an impermissible government entanglement with religion.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN2. We realize that dissatisfaction with the Lemon test has led several Justices to advocate alternative analytical frameworks, see, e.g., Lee v. Weisman, 505 U.S. 577, 112 S.Ct. 2649, 120 L.Ed.2d 467 (1992) (Kennedy, J.) (advocating and applying a coercion test); Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 688-94, 104 S.Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604 (1984) (O'Connor, J., concurring) (advocating adoption of an endorsement test). A new Establishment Clause test may well be on the horizon. See generally Kent Greenawalt, Quo Vadis: The Status and Prospects of "Tests" Under the Religion Clauses, 1995 Sup.Ct. Rev. 323, 359-60. Still, because the Court has not yet reached consensus on Lemon 's successor, we continue to apply its test.

[19][20][21] Entanglement has both substantive and procedural dimensions. On a substantive level, applying the statute to the clergy-church employment relationship *949 creates a constitutionally impermissible entanglement with religion if the church's freedom to choose its ministers is at stake. A religious organization's decision to employ or to terminate employment of a minister is at the heart of its religious mission. The "determination of 'whose voice speaks for the church' is per se a religious matter.... We cannot imagine an area of inquiry less suited to a temporal court for decision; evaluation of the 'gifts and graces' of a minister must be left to ecclesiastical institutions." Minker v. Baltimore Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church, 894 F.2d 1354, 1356-57 (D.C.Cir.1990) (holding that the First Amendment prevented a claim under the federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act). "The application of Title VII to employment decisions of this nature would result in an intolerably close relationship between church and state...." Rayburn, 772 F.2d at 1170. Nor may a court be in the "impermissible position of having 'to evaluate ... competing opinions on religious subjects.' " Catholic Univ., 83 F.3d at 465 (applying the ministerial exception to Title VII in a case involving the denial of tenure to a professor of canon law). But as we have explained above in discussing the Free Exercise Clause, such substantive concerns are absent from this case.

[22][23] As a procedural matter, "entanglement might also result from a protracted legal process pitting church and state as adversaries...." Rayburn, 772 F.2d at 1171; see also NLRB v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 440 U.S. 490, 502, 99 S.Ct. 1313, 59 L.Ed.2d 533 (1979) ("It is not only the conclusions that may be reached by the Board which may impinge on rights guaranteed by the Religion Clauses, but also the very process of inquiry leading to findings and conclusions."). As the Fourth Circuit explained in Rayburn,

> A Title VII action is potentially a lengthy proceeding, involving state agencies and commissions, the EEOC, the federal trial courts and courts of appeal. Church personnel and records would inevitably become subject to subpoena, discovery, cross-examination, the full panoply of legal process designed to probe the mind of the church in the selection of its ministers. The remedies that a district court may impose, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e- 5(g) (1982), may be far-reaching in their impact upon religious organizations. Even after entry of judgment, questions of compliance may result in continued court surveillance of the church's policies and decisions.

772 F.2d at 1171. Of this list of concerns, we believe that the potential for protracted government surveillance of church activities poses the gravest concern under the Establishment Clause. See, e.g., Aguilar v. Felton, 473 U.S. 402, 413, 105 S.Ct. 3232, 87 L.Ed.2d 290 (1985), overruled on other grounds by Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 117 S.Ct. 1997, 138 L.Ed.2d 391 (1997) ("[P]ervasive monitoring by public authorities ... infringes precisely those Establishment Clause values at the root of the prohibition of excessive entanglement.").

[24] In a Title VII case, the dangers of procedural entanglement are most acute where there is also a substantive entanglement at issue. See Catholic Univ., 83 F.3d at 467; Scharon, 929 F.2d at 363; Rayburn, 772 F.2d at 1171. Where such a concern is absent, procedural entanglement considerations are reduced to the constitutional propriety of subjecting a church to the expense and indignity of the civil legal process. In this case, we believe that the entanglement between church and state that would result if Bollard pursued his sexual harassment claim is not sufficiently significant to violate the Establishment Clause.

The issue in the case is whether Bollard was subjected to sex-based harassment by his superiors that was sufficiently severe or pervasive as to be actionable under Title VII. See Burlington Indus., Inc. v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 118 S.Ct. 2257, 2264, 2270, 141 L.Ed.2d 633 (1998). The Jesuit order may assert as an affirmative defense 950 that it exercised reasonable care to prevent and correct the harassment, and that Bollard failed to take advantage of these opportunities to avoid or limit harm. Id. at 2270. This is a restricted inquiry. Nothing in the character of this defense will require a jury to evaluate religious doctrine or the "reasonableness" of the religious practices followed within the Jesuit order. Instead, the jury must make secular judgments about the nature and severity of the harassment and what measures, if any, were taken by the Jesuits to prevent or correct it. The limited nature of the inquiry, combined with the ability of the district court to control discovery, can prevent a wide-ranging intrusion into sensitive religious matters.

Further, Bollard seeks damages as his sole remedy. He seeks neither reinstatement nor any other equitable relief that might require continuing court surveillance. Nor, beyond filing his initial claim, awaiting receipt of the standard right-to-sue letter, and filing his complaint in district court, has Bollard involved any government entity. Given the limited and retrospective nature of the damages remedy Bollard seeks, it is clear that none of these entities will be involved in future or ongoing monitoring of church activities.

Taken as a whole, we conclude that the procedural entanglement between church and state that will result from allowing Bollard to pursue his claim is no greater than that attendant on any other civil suit a private litigant might pursue against a church. Accordingly, we fail to see an Establishment Clause violation in applying the commands of Title VII to this case.

III. State Law Claims

Bollard included in his complaint claims under California law for failure to investigate, for constructive discharge, and for breach of contract. When the district court dismissed Bollard's claim under Title VII, it dismissed those claims under the federal supplemental jurisdiction statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c). Because we hold that Bollard has stated a claim under Title VII, the dismissal of his state law claims is no longer warranted. Assuming the district court reaches the merits of Bollard's state law claims on remand, it will have to perform the same First Amendment analysis with respect to those claims as the analysis we have performed with respect to Bollard's claim under Title VII. We do not mean inappropriately to anticipate the legal analysis of the district court by stating here what is already obvious: The fact that Bollard's Title VII claim for sexual harassment may go forward despite the First Amendment does not necessarily mean that his state law claims may also go forward.

[25] As the analysis earlier in this opinion makes clear, the ministerial exception to Title VII is based not on Title VII but, rather, on the First Amendment. Just as there is a ministerial exception to Title VII, there must also be a ministerial exception to any state law cause of action that would otherwise impinge on the church's prerogative to choose its ministers or to exercise its religious beliefs in the context of employing its ministers. To take a clear example, had Bollard brought a state law claim for breach of contract with an associated remedy of reinstatement, that would run afoul of the Free Exercise Clause because the remedy would require the church to employ Bollard, thereby interfering with the church's constitutionally protected choice of its ministers. Whether the exception applies in a particular instance will depend on the nature of the state law claim and its associated remedy, and the district court will be in a position to undertake that analysis on remand.

IV. Nature of the District Court's Dismissal

[26][27][28] Upon finding that the ministerial exception applied to Bollard's claim under Title VII, the district court dismissed his complaint under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) for want of 951 subject matter jurisdiction. We reverse that dismissal, but we also wish to make clear that, had Bollard's claim indeed been barred, it should have been dismissed for failure to state a claim under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Failure to state a claim under federal law is not the same thing as failure to establish federal question jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1331. Any non-frivolous assertion of a federal claim suffices to establish federal question jurisdiction, even if that claim is later dismissed on the merits under Rule 12(b)(6). As the Supreme Court wrote in Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682, 66 S.Ct. 773, 90 L.Ed. 939 (1946), > Jurisdiction ... is not defeated ... by the possibility that the averments might fail to state a cause of action on which petitioners could actually recover.... If the court ... exercise[s] its jurisdiction to determine that the allegations in the complaint do not state a ground for relief, then dismissal of the case would be on the merits, not for want of jurisdiction.

See also Wheeldin v. Wheeler, 373 U.S. 647, 649, 83 S.Ct. 1441, 10 L.Ed.2d 605 (1963) ("We agree ... that on the face of the complaint the federal court had jurisdiction.... But on the undisputed facts, ... no federal cause of action can be made out."). Bollard asserted a non-frivolous federal claim, and even if the district court had been correct in dismissing it, that dismissal should have been on the merits under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim for which relief can be granted.

We REVERSE and REMAND for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Supreme Court of Ohio.

BYRD et al., Appellees,
v.
FABER;
Ohio Conference of Seventh-day Adventists et al., Appellants.

No. 89-1722.

Submitted Oct. 24, 1990.
Decided Jan. 16, 1991.

In parishioners' suit arising out of pastor's alleged nonconsensual sexual conduct with parishioner wife, the Court of Common Pleas, Knox County, granted church's motion for judgment on the pleadings on respondeat superior and negligent hiring claims, and parishioners appealed. The Court of Appeals for Knox County reversed, and motion to certify the record was allowed. The Supreme Court, Alice Robie Resnick, J., held that: (1) parishioners could not maintain separate cause of action for clergy malpractice; (2) church could not be held liable under doctrine of respondeat superior for nonconsensual sexual conduct between pastor and parishioner; and (3) parishioners failed to state claim against church for negligent hiring.

*585 Syllabus by the Court

A plaintiff bringing a negligent hiring claim against a religious institution must plead operative facts with particularity in order to survive a Civ.R. 12(B)(6) motion to dismiss.

Appellees, Leroy and Garnet Byrd, and their children, Jennifer and Heather, are Seventh-day Adventists who attended the Hill Church in Knox County, Ohio during the period relevant to this case. While the Byrds attended the Hill Church they were under the guidance of Reverend Richard P. Faber, who was assigned to the church as pastor by the Seventh-day Adventist organization. In 1984, the Byrds requested that Faber provide them with counseling for their marital and personal problems. Faber agreed and provided counseling for the appellees from 1984 until 1987.

During the course of the counseling, Faber allegedly forced Garnet Byrd to engage in sexual activity with him. As a result, the Byrds filed suit against Faber in the Knox County Court of Common Pleas, alleging professional malpractice, fraud, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and nonconsensual sexual conduct. The Byrds also filed suit against the Ohio Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, Columbia Union Conference of Seventh-day Adventists and the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists, appellants herein. The Byrds' complaint alleges liability for Faber's actions under the doctrine of respondeat superior and the negligent hiring of Faber.

The appellants subsequently filed a Civ.R. 12(C) motion for judgment on the pleadings on the respondeat superior and *586 negligent hiring claims. [FN1] The trial court granted the motion and the Byrds appealed. On appeal, the appellate court reversed, holding that the allegations of the complaint, when taken as true, do state a cause of action against the appellants.

> FN1. Even though the trial court characterized the motion as a Civ.R. 12(C) motion for judgment on the pleadings, on appeal the parties acknowledged that the motion should be treated as a Civ.R. 12(B)(6) motion for failure to state a claim. Thus, both the court of appeals' opinion and this opinion treat the appellants' motion as a Civ.R. 12(B)(6) motion for failure to state a claim.

The cause is now before this court pursuant to the allowance of a motion to certify the record.

This appeal is concerned solely with the liability of the appellants, the Ohio Conference of Seventh-day Adventists et al. The claims against Faber are still pending in the trial court, and consequently, are not before us at this time. However, as the appellants' liability is in several respects dependent upon the liability of their employee, Faber, it is necessary for us to discuss certain aspects of the appellees' case against Faber. Initially, we must determine whether it is possible for the appellees to bring a claim against Faber for clergy malpractice. If such a cause of action is viable, then it is conceivable that recovery might also be available against the appellants through application of the doctrine of respondeat superior.

In their complaint, appellees allege that Faber "did not exercise the degree of care and skill ordinarily exercised by others of his profession * * *." This allegation is advanced as a claim separate and distinct from their claims of fraud, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and nonconsensual sexual conduct. In its opinion, the court of appeals assumed that through this allegation, the appellees had stated a valid claim for clergy malpractice. However, our holding in Strock v. Pressnell (1988), 38 Ohio St.3d 207, 527 N.E.2d 1235, prevents the appellees, based upon the facts as presented in their complaint, from maintaining a separate cause of action for clergy malpractice.

[1] As we noted in Strock, supra, the doctrine of charitable immunity no longer protects religious institutions and other nonprofit organizations from tort liability. Albritton v. Neighborhood Centers Assn. (1984), 12 Ohio St.3d 210, 12 OBR 295, 466 N.E.2d 867. Consequently, a church may be held liable both for the negligence of its employees who are acting within the scope of their employment as well as for its own negligence. For example, it has been held that if a church hires an individual despite knowledge of prior improper behavior in his former church-related employment, the church may be liable in tort for negligent hiring. Bender v. First Church of the Nazarene (Sept. 7, 1989), Licking App. No. CA-3448, unreported, 1989 WL 104765; see, also, Matthews v. Wittenberg College (1960), 113 Ohio App. 387, 17 O.O.2d 431, 178 N.E.2d 526 .

However, there is considerable disagreement regarding the potential liability of a member of the clergy for "clergy malpractice." "Clergy malpractice" has been defined as the failure to exercise the degree of care and skill normally exercised by members of the clergy in carrying out their professional duties. In Strock v. Pressnell, supra, we held that in order to generate a cause of action for "clergy malpractice," the cleric's behavior must "fall outside the scope of other recognized torts." Id. 38 Ohio St.3d at 212, 527 N.E.2d at 1239. If the cleric's behavior fits within an established category of liability, such as *587 fraud, duress, assault, or battery, it would be redundant to simultaneously hold the cleric liable for "clergy malpractice": " '[t]o avoid a redundant remedy, * * * any functional theory of clergy malpractice needs [to] address incidents of the clergy-communicant relationship 58 not already actionable.' " Id., citing Hester v. Barnett (Mo.App.1987), 723 S.W.2d 544, 551.

[2] The appellees' claim for clergy malpractice does not address any aspect of the clergy-communicant relationship not already actionable. The gravamen of their complaint is that Faber forced Garnet Byrd to engage in sexual conduct with him. For this activity, Faber may be found liable not only for nonconsensual sexual conduct, i.e., battery, but also for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress. In essence, through the creative use of tort law, appellees may recover several times for the same injury. To then allow recovery for clergy malpractice on the basis of this same conduct would be to grant a redundant remedy. Appellees have not named any activity engaged in by Faber for which recovery in tort is not available. Hence, under Strock, supra, there is no basis for recognizing their claim for clergy malpractice, either against Faber, or, through application of the doctrine of respondeat superior, against the appellants.

We move now to the appellees' claims for nonconsensual sexual conduct, fraud, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. If the appellees are able to prove any of these claims as against Faber, then they may be able to recover against the appellants through application of the doctrine of respondeat superior. This case differs from Strock, supra, where the plaintiff was unable to recover from the employer because he had no underlying claim against the employee. As we stated in Strock, "[i]t is axiomatic that for the doctrine of respondeat superior to apply, an employee must be liable for a tort committed in the scope of his employment." Id., 38 Ohio St.3d at 217, 527 N.E.2d at 1244. Here, the possibility exists that Faber is liable in tort to the Byrds for nonconsensual sexual conduct, fraud, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Thus, theoretically, the appellants may be liable to the appellees under the doctrine of respondeat superior.

However, close examination of the appellees' complaint and of the principles of respondeat superior liability reveals that the appellees have failed to state a viable claim against the appellants. As noted above, the gravamen of the appellees' complaint is that Faber engaged in nonconsensual sexual conduct with Garnet Byrd. Without this allegation, the appellees would have no basis for claiming that Faber engaged in fraud or the intentional infliction of emotional distress; without it, their complaint would have no factual basis. Consequently, in order to determine whether the appellants may be liable for the alleged wrongs of Faber, we must decide whether a church may be held liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for nonconsensual sexual conduct between a pastor and a parishioner.

[3] It is well-established that in order for an employer to be liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior, the tort of the employee must be committed within the scope of employment. Moreover, where the tort is intentional, as in the case at bar, the behavior giving rise to the tort must be "calculated to facilitate or promote the business for which the servant was employed * * *." Little Miami RR. Co. v. Wetmore (1869), 19 Ohio St. 110, 132; Taylor v. Doctor's Hosp. (1985), 21 Ohio App.3d 154, 21 OBR 165, 486 N.E.2d 1249. For example, an employer might be liable for an intentional tort if an employee injures a patron when removing her from the employer's business premises or blocking her entry. The removal of patrons, who 59 may be unruly, underage, or otherwise ineligible to enter, is calculated to facilitate the peaceful and lawful operation of the business. Consequently, an employer might be liable for an injury inflicted by an employee in the course of removal of a patron. See, e.g., Stewart v. Napuche (1952), 334 Mich. 76, 53 N.W.2d 676; Kent v. Bradley (Tex.Civ.App.1972), 480 S.W.2d 55.

*588 [4] However, the employer would not be liable if an employee physically assaulted a patron without provocation. As we held in Vrabel v. Acri (1952), 156 Ohio St. 467, 474, 46 O.O. 387, 390, 103 N.E.2d 564, 568, "an intentional and wilful attack committed by an agent or employee, to vent his own spleen or malevolence against the injured person, is a clear departure from his employment and his principal or employer is not responsible therefor." See, also, Schulman v. Cleveland (1972), 30 Ohio St.2d 196, 59 O.O.2d 196, 283 N.E.2d 175. In other words, an employer is not liable for independent self-serving acts of his employees which in no way facilitate or promote his business.

These general principles have been specifically applied when analyzing the liability of religious organizations for the activities of individual clerics whom they employ. In Milla v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles (1986), 187 Cal.App.3d 1453, 232 Cal.Rptr. 685, the plaintiff, a sixteen-year- old girl, was allegedly seduced by seven priests of the Archdiocese of Los Angeles. The priests purportedly used their positions to entice the girl to remain silent while they had sexual intercourse with her, impregnated her, and sent her to the Phillipine Islands to give birth. The California appellate court stated that in order for the Archdiocese to be liable under the theory of respondeat superior for the priests' actions, their conduct must be characteristic of the activities of the church or otherwise reasonably foreseeable. Applying that principle to the facts before it the court concluded:

"It would defy every notion of logic and fairness to say that sexual activity between a priest and a parishioner is characteristic of the Archbishop of the Roman Catholic Church. * * * Similarly, appellant has not pointed out any fact which could lead this court to the conclusion that the Archbishop 'ratified' the concupiscent acts of the priests." Id. at 1461, 232 Cal.Rptr. at 690.

Another district of the California Court of Appeals reached a similar conclusion in Scott v. Central Baptist Church (1988), 197 Cal.App.3d 718, 243 Cal.Rptr. 128. In Scott, the court was asked to decide whether a church should be held liable for repeated acts of sexual assault on a minor perpetrated by a Sunday school teacher. Applying the standard enunciated in Milla, supra, the court noted that the church could only be held liable if the teacher's acts were required or incident to his duties or, if not, could have been reasonably foreseen by the church. Id. at 721, 243 Cal.Rptr. at 130. All the evidence suggested that the teacher's acts were independent self-serving pursuits unrelated to church activities. Id. at 722, 243 Cal.Rptr. at 130. Moreover, the teacher's acts of sexual molestation were not foreseeable in light of the duties he was hired to perform. Id. Consequently, the Scott court concluded that the church could not be held liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the teacher's activities.

[5] The doctrine of respondeat superior is similarly inapplicable in the case at bar. The Seventh-day Adventist organization in no way promotes or advocates nonconsensual sexual conduct 60 between pastors and parishioners. The appellants did not hire Faber to rape, seduce, or otherwise physically assault members of his congregation. Furthermore, appellees have alleged no fact indicating that the appellants should reasonably have foreseen that Faber would behave in this manner toward his parishioners. Consequently, appellees have failed to state a claim of respondeat superior liability on the part of the church, and the trial court was correct in dismissing that portion of their complaint.

[6] The appellees have similarly failed to state a claim for negligent hiring on the part of the appellants. Count Five of their complaint states in pertinent part: "The Defendant employees [sic] knew, or should have known of the inclination for Defendant Faber to commit such actions and was reckless or negligent in allowing said Defendant to assume the position of pastor in Knox County, Ohio * * *." The trial court held that this language failed to state a claim against the appellants. The court of appeals reversed, but did not engage in a separate discussion of the negligent hiring *589 claim, choosing instead to conflate this issue with the issue of respondeat superior liability.

Under Ohio law, when a party files a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, all the factual allegations of the complaint must be taken as true and all reasonable inferences must be drawn in favor of the nonmoving party. Mitchell v. Lawson Milk Co. (1988), 40 Ohio St.3d 190, 192, 532 N.E.2d 753, 756. In order for a judge to grant a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, it must appear " 'beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.' " O'Brien v. University Community Tenants Union (1975), 42 Ohio St.2d 242, 245, 71 O.O.2d 223, 224, 327 N.E.2d 753, 755, citing Conley v. Gibson (1957), 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 101-02, 2 L.Ed.2d 80. While there is no question regarding this standard, there is considerable debate about how much specificity is required in order for a plaintiff to survive a motion to dismiss. A survey of Ohio law reveals, however, that where important public policies warrant a limitation on the number of claims, this court has refused to allow a plaintiff to survive a motion to dismiss through the mere incantation of an abstract legal standard.

In Mitchell, supra, the plaintiff filed an intentional tort claim against an employer after an employee was fatally shot while working alone in the employer's store at night. The plaintiff claimed that the employer knew or should have known that its employees were subject to armed robberies and other violent acts and that the employer had wilfully and intentionally failed to provide protection. Although the plaintiff advanced this allegation in his complaint, he included no facts to support it. In granting the defendant's Civ.R. 12(B)(6) motion to dismiss, this court stated, "[u]nsupported conclusions that appellant committed an intentional tort are not taken as admitted by a motion to dismiss and are not sufficient to withstand such a motion." (Emphasis sic.) Id., 40 Ohio St.3d at 193, 532 N.E.2d at 756. We then proceeded to carve out a heightened standard of review for Civ.R. 12(B)(6) motions in the intentional tort context. Citing the need to deter the number of baseless claims against employers, the importance of preventing every workplace injury from being converted into an intentional tort claim, and the goal of facilitating the efficient administration of justice, we held that in order to survive a Civ.R. 12(B)(6) motion to dismiss, a plaintiff bringing an intentional tort claim against an 61 employer must allege certain facts with particularity. [FN2]

> FN2. Specifically, we held in Mitchell, supra, in the syllabus, that "claim of intentional tort against an employer will be dismissed as failing to establish that the pleader is entitled to relief unless the complaint alleges facts showing that the employer: (1) specifically desired to injure the employee; or (2) knew that injury to > an employee was certain or substantially certain to result from the employer's act and despite this knowledge, still proceeded. * * * "

A heightened standard of pleading is also required when a plaintiff brings a claim for fraud. Civ.R. 9(B) states that "[i]n all averments of fraud or mistake, the circumstances constituting fraud or mistake shall be stated with particularity." The chief purpose of this rule is to protect defendants from unfounded charges of wrongdoing which may injure their reputations. See In re Commonwealth Oil/Tesoro Petroleum Corp. Securities Litigation (W.D.Tex.1979), 467 F.Supp. 227; Haddon View Investment Co. v. Coopers & Lybrand (1982), 70 Ohio St.2d 154, 24 O.O.3d 268, 436 N.E.2d 212. While a complete reversion to fact pleading is to be avoided, the goal of protecting the reputations of upstanding members of the community is important enough to require that facts be pled with particularity in order for a plaintiff to survive a motion to dismiss.

[7][8] We hold today that as with fraud claims and intentional tort claims against employers, greater specificity in pleading is required when a claim is brought against a religious institution for negligent hiring due to the myriad First Amendment problems which accompany such a claim. In order to survive a Civ.R. 12(B)(6) motion to dismiss, a plaintiff bringing a negligent hiring claim against a religious institution 590 must plead operative facts with particularity. See Mitchell, supra, at, 40 Ohio St.3d 194, 532 N.E.2d at 757 (Douglas, J., concurring). Specifically, the plaintiff must plead facts which indicate that the individual hired had a past history of criminal, tortious, or otherwise dangerous conduct about which the religious institution knew or could have discovered through reasonable investigation. The mere incantation of the elements of a negligent hiring claim, i.e., the abstract statement that the religious institution knew or should have known about the employee's criminal or tortious propensities, without more, is not enough to enable a plaintiff to survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

As with fraud claims and intentional tort claims against employers, an important principle underlies our decision to require that the plaintiff plead operative facts with particularity. In order to determine whether a religious organization has exercised due care in hiring, it is necessary to examine its employment policies and practices. In all probability, these policies will be infused with the religious tenets of the particular sect involved. If the state becomes involved in assessing the adequacy of these standards, serious entanglement problems may arise under the First Amendment. See, e.g., Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971), 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745. While even the most liberal construction of the First Amendment will not protect a religious organization's decision to hire someone who it knows is likely to commit criminal or tortious acts, the mere incantation of an abstract legal standard should not subject a religious organization's employment policies to state scrutiny. Consequently, in order to survive a motion to dismiss, a plaintiff *62 bringing a negligent hiring claim must allege some fact indicating that the religious institution knew or should have known of the employee's criminal or tortious propensities.

Applying this standard to the case at bar, we hold that the trial court was correct in dismissing the appellees' complaint for failure to state a claim. The appellees alleged no fact indicating that Faber had a past history of criminal or tortious conduct about which the appellants knew or should have known. In fact, beyond discussing Faber's conduct toward Mrs. Byrd, the appellees do not discuss any of his activities either before or after he was hired. They do not refer to any fact within the knowledge of the appellants which should have prevented them from employing Faber. Appellees' complaint merely recites the elements of a negligent hiring claim and then seeks recovery. As the appellees have alleged no fact suggesting that the appellants were negligent in hiring Faber, the trial court was correct in dismissing their complaint as to the appellants for failure to state a claim.

For reason of the foregoing, the judgment of the court of appeals is reversed.

Judgment reversed.

Decided July 29, 1999.
As Amended Sept. 8, 1999.

Adult victim of alleged sexual abuse by priests brought suit against priests and diocese. The Superior Court, King County, John Darrah, J., dismissed the lawsuits as barred by statute of limitations. The Court of Appeals, 88 Wash.App. 70, 943 P.2d 1150, affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded. Similar claims were brought against church and church officials by adults who were allegedly molested as children by deacon. Claims were dismissed on summary judgment by the Superior Court, King County, Sharon Armstrong, J., and the Court of Appeals, 89 Wash.App. 644, 950 P.2d 501, reversed and remanded. In another case, claims were brought by both victim and his parents against church, officials, and church's state office. The Superior Court, Pierce County, Karen Strombom, J., granted summary judgment to defendants on statute of limitations grounds, and the Court of Appeals, 89 Wash.App. 670, 950 P.2d 29, affirmed. Cases were consolidated for review. The Supreme Court, Johnson, J., held that: (1) statute of limitations encompassed causes of action sounding in negligence against parties who did not themselves directly perpetrate acts of childhood sexual abuse, but who allegedly failed to protect child victims, overruling Jamerson v. Vandiver, 85 Wash.App. 564, 934 P.2d 1199. West's RCWA 4.16.340; (2) priest's conduct constituted "childhood sexual abuse" under statute; (3) diocese could not be held liable on respondeat superior or strict liability theory; (4) on issue of first impression, church owed duty of reasonable care to affirmatively act to prevent foreseeable harm to children; (5) church was not shielded from imposition of duty by constitutional principles; and (6) claims of parents begin to run at same time as those of their children.

Affirmed in part and reversed in part; remanded.

Madsen, J., filed opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part.

Durham, J., filed dissenting opinion, in which Guy, C.J., and Dolliver, J. Pro Tem., joined.

Sanders, J., concurred in dissents of both Madsen and Durham, JJ.

In these consolidated cases we are asked to determine the scope of RCW 4.16.340, the statute of limitations applicable to civil claims "based on" intentional childhood sexual abuse. Specifically, we must decide whether negligence claims brought against church entities and individual church officials who did not themselves directly perpetrate intentional acts of childhood sexual abuse, but who allegedly failed to protect the child victims or otherwise prevent the abuse, fall within the broad limitations period allowed under the statute.

*705 We answer in the affirmative. [FN1] Each case also raises questions specific to the individual case. These questions are answered after the common question is addressed.

FN1. As a result, we do not reach plaintiffs' alternative theory that claims were timely filed under the common law discovery rule.

FACTS [FN2]

FN2. The facts are described in the light most favorable to plaintiffs whose claims were dismissed on summary judgment. For a more detailed recounting of the facts in each case, see Funkhouser v. Wilson, 89 Wash.App. 644, 950 P.2d 501 (1998); E.R.B. v. Church of God, 89 Wash.App. 670, 950 P.2d 29 (1998); C.J.C. v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop, 88 Wash.App. 70, 943 P.2d 1150 (1997).

Plaintiff C.J.C. was an altar boy at St. Paul's Parish of the Corporation of the Catholic Bishop of Yakima (Diocese). C.J.C. alleges that two priests, Fathers Scully and Calhoun, sexually molested him on separate occasions during the years 1980 through 1981, when he was 15 and 16 years old, respectively. The abuse consisted of fondling and masturbatory acts performed on C.J.C. by the priests. C.J.C. claims the Diocese was aware of the risk Fathers Scully and Calhoun presented before the abuse occurred, but did nothing to prevent it.

Plaintiffs Juanita Funkhouser, Sheri Lewis, and Janelle Larson are sisters whose father was a pastor at the Calvary Baptist Church of Twisp (Church) between 1969 and 1973, and again between 1978 and 1989. Orin Wilson was a prominent member and one-time deacon of the Church. The sisters claim they were sexually molested on multiple occasions by Wilson when they were children. (Wilson has since died and his estate has been substituted). Sheri and Janelle, the older sisters, allege they were molested between the years 1969 and 1973. Juanita claims she was molested on four occasions, the first occurring between 1970 and 1971, and on three other occasions between 1978 and 1980. In written letters before his death, Wilson admitted to the abuse. The sisters claim the Church and its governing body, the Calvary Baptist Conference, had prior knowledge of Wilson's alleged abuse of other young girls *706 but negligently failed to 266 prevent their subsequent abuse, or to otherwise warn or protect them against Wilson.

Plaintiffs E.R.B. and his parents were members of the New Life Fellowship Church of God (Local Church) in Longview. The Local Church is governed by the New Life Church of God State Offices and Parsonages. Rick Shaw became an associate pastor at the Local Church in 1985. Shaw began sexually abusing E.R.B. in 1985, when E.R.B. was 14 years old. The abuse continued until July 1990, and consisted mainly of fondling E.R.B. and performing oral sex on him. E.R.B. and his parents claim the Local Church failed to properly investigate Shaw's conduct after numerous allegations were made against him. They allege the Local Church negligently supervised Shaw, and the Local Church failed to protect E.R.B. from Shaw's sexual misconduct.

All three trial courts held RCW 4.16.340 applied only to claims against the actual perpetrator of the abuse. In all cases, the trial courts dismissed (on various grounds) all claims against church entities and members who had not themselves directly perpetrated the abuse.

In each case, the Court of Appeals affirmed the trial courts on the applicability of RCW 4.16.340, holding the statute applied only to claims against the actual abusers. [FN3] We address this common issue first.

FN3. Divisions I and II of the Court of Appeals split on the applicability of the common law discovery rule. In C.J.C. and Funkhouser, Division I applied the discovery rule and reversed summary judgment; under similar facts, Division II in E.R.B. refused to apply the discovery rule and affirmed summary judgment. Compare C.J.C., 88 Wash.App. 70, 943 P.2d 1150, and Funkhouser, 89 Wash.App. at 669, 950 P.2d 501, with E.R.B., 89 Wash.App. at 683-84, 950 P.2d 29. Because we find the claims against nonabusers and church entities fall under RCW 4.16.340, we do not decide whether the common law discovery rule would otherwise apply.

RCW 4.16.340 [FN4] reads in pertinent part:

FN4. In Tyson v. Tyson, 107 Wash.2d 72, 79, 727 P.2d 226 (1986), this court, in a plurality decision, held the discovery rule did not apply to intentional tort claims where the plaintiff has suppressed the memory of the abuse during the period of the statute of limitations. RCW 4.16.340 was enacted in 1988 in response to our decision in Tyson. Laws of 1988, ch. 144, § 1.

(1) All claims or causes of action based on intentional *707 conduct brought by any person for recovery of damages for injury suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse shall be commenced within the later of the following periods:
(a) Within three years of the act alleged to have caused the injury or condition;
(b) Within three years of the time the victim discovered or reasonably should have discovered that the injury or condition was caused by said act; or

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(c) Within three years of the time the victim discovered that the act caused the injury for which the claim is brought:
PROVIDED, That the time limit for commencement of an action under this section is tolled for a child until the child reaches the age of eighteen years.
(5) As used in this section, "childhood sexual abuse" means any act committed by the defendant against a complainant who was less than eighteen years of age at the time of the act and which act would have been a violation of chapter 9A.44 RCW or RCW 9.68A.040 or prior laws of similar effect at the time the act was committed.

In addition, as part of the same act, the Legislature amended RCW 4.16.350, the statute of limitations for professional negligence by health care providers. That amendment reads:

This section [RCW 4.16.350(3)] does not apply to a civil action based on intentional conduct brought against those individuals or entities specified in this section by a person for recovery of damages for injury occurring as a result of childhood sexual abuse as defined in [RCW 4.16.340(5)]....

Laws of 1988, ch. 144, § 2 (emphasis added).

In Jamerson v. Vandiver, 85 Wash.App. 564, 934 P.2d 1199, review denied, 133 Wash.2d 1005, 943 P.2d 663 (1997), the Court of Appeals restricted the scope of RCW 4.16.340 to claims against 708 the actual *267 perpetrator of the alleged childhood sexual abuse. The court reasoned the statutory definition of "childhood sexual abuse," which limits the predicate conduct to acts in violation of the criminal code, precludes negligence claims against those who have not themselves committed intentional acts of sexual abuse. Jamerson, 85 Wash.App. at 567, 934 P.2d 1199. In each of the cases before us now, relying on Jamerson, the trial courts and the Court of Appeals refused to apply RCW 4.16.340 to claims brought against persons other than the actual abusers. Plaintiffs argue Jamerson was wrongly decided and should be overturned. Plaintiffs argue the language contained in RCW 4.16.340 encompasses claims of negligence against individuals and entities secondarily liable for failing to prevent the alleged abuse. We agree.

[1][2][3][4] We give words in a statute their plain and ordinary meaning unless a contrary intent is evidenced in the statute. Erection Co. v. Department Labor & Indus., 121 Wash.2d 513, 518, 852 P.2d 288 (1993). Where the statutory language is clear and unambiguous, the statute's meaning is determined from its language alone; we may not look beyond the language nor consider the legislative history. Multicare Med. Ctr. v. Department of Soc. & Health Servs., 114 Wash.2d 572, 582, 790 P.2d 124 (1990). We construe an act as a whole, giving effect to all the language used. State v. S.P., 110 Wash.2d 886, 890, 756 P.2d 1315 (1988). Related statutory provisions are interpreted in relation to each other and all provisions harmonized. S.P., 110 Wash.2d at 890, 756 P.2d 1315.

We are primarily concerned with the language contained in subsection (1) and subsection (5) of RCW 4.16.340, as well as the related amendment to RCW 4.16.350. Specifically, we must decide whether the act contemplates causes of action sounding in negligence. If it does, we must then decide whether the definition of "childhood sexual abuse" contained in subsection (5) nevertheless limits the act's applicability only to claims brought by a victim against the actual perpetrator of the abuse.

Subsection (1) of RCW 4.16.340 controls the scope of the 709 statute's applicability. The relevant language is expansive. It permits "[a]ll claims or causes of action" brought by "any person" provided only that claims be "based on intentional conduct" involving "childhood sexual abuse." RCW 4.16.340(1).

[5] By its plain terms, the statute encompasses all causes of action "based on intentional conduct." The question is whether "based on intentional conduct" includes negligence causes of action. "Based on" is undefined in the statute. We, therefore, turn to the ordinary dictionary meaning. American Legion Post No. 32 v. City of Walla Walla, 116 Wash.2d 1, 8, 802 P.2d 784 (1991). Webster's dictionary defines "base" as "that on which something rests or stands: FOUNDATION ... the point or line from which a start is made in an action or undertaking...." Webster's Third New International Dictionary 180 (1986). Accordingly, under the plain meaning of the statute, an action is "based on intentional conduct" if intentional sexual abuse is the starting point or foundation of the claim.

We have already reached a similar conclusion regarding the meaning and effect of RCW 4.16.340. See DeYoung v. Providence Med. Ctr., 136 Wash.2d 136, 960 P.2d 919 (1998). In DeYoung, although not engaging in statutory construction per se, we recognized the statute contemplates professional negligence causes of action where "the gravamen of the action is [childhood sexual] abuse...." DeYoung, 136 Wash.2d at 147, 960 P.2d 919 (emphasis added). We noted the statute applies to medical malpractice actions where the underlying "child sexual abuse forms the grounds for the action...." DeYoung, 136 Wash.2d at 147, 960 P.2d 919 (emphasis added).

[6] Similarly, under the facts presented here, intentional sexual abuse is the predicate conduct upon which all claims are based, including the negligence claims. The alleged sexual abuse is essentially an element of the plaintiffs' negligence claims. Absent the abuse, plaintiffs would not have suffered any injury and their negligence claims could not stand. Thus, the "gravamen" of plaintiffs' claims is that defendants are liable for injuries resulting from acts of 710 intentional sexual *268 abuse. See DeYoung, 136 Wash.2d at 147, 960 P.2d 919. Equal to any other element of the negligence causes of action, the injury resulting from the abuse "forms the grounds" for the claims. As such, the negligence claims are "based on intentional conduct" within the meaning of the statute because they stem from injuries suffered as a result of intentional childhood sexual abuse. [FN5] See DeYoung, 136 Wash.2d at 146-47, 960 P.2d 919.

> FN5. In addition to conforming to the language of the statute, our interpretation is entirely consistent with traditional tort principles. See, e.g., McLeod v. Grant County Sch. Dist. No. 128, 42 Wash.2d 316, 321, 255 P.2d 360 (1953) ("[b]ut intervening criminal acts may be found to be foreseeable, and if so found, actionable negligence may be predicated thereon").

At least one other state court has reached the same conclusion when interpreting identical statutory language. Werre v. David, 275 Mont. 376, 386, 913 P.2d 625 (1996) (holding that negligence claim against party who herself did not engage in intentional abuse is "based on intentional conduct," because intentional sexual abuse provided the "starting point or foundation for the [negligence] claim").

We find further support to conclude RCW 4.16.340 encompasses negligence causes of action in the simultaneously enacted amendment to RCW 4.16.350. That amendment expressly provides that RCW 4.16.340 applies to the negligence of a health care provider where the claim is based on injuries suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse. Taken as a whole, therefore, the statute is not limited in scope to intentional torts, but specifically includes negligence causes of action.

[7] Defendants argue that RCW 4.16.340's definition of "childhood sexual abuse" necessarily limits its application to only those claims brought by "a" victim against "the" perpetrator of the abuse. RCW 4.16.340(5) (defining "childhood sexual abuse" as "any act committed by the defendant against a complainant ... and which act would have been a violation of [the applicable criminal code]").

Defendants draw our attention to two cases in which the courts of California and Rhode Island reached the result 711 defendants argue for here. See Debbie Reynolds Prof'l Rehearsal Studios v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.App.4th 222, 231, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 514 (1994) (holding that statute of limitations, which defined "childhood sexual abuse" as any act "proscribed" under the applicable penal code, necessarily limited the statute's applicability to causes of action against defendants who had themselves perpetrated "certain intentional criminal acts prohibited by law"); Kelly v. Marcantonio, 678 A.2d 873, 875-76 (R.I.1996) (holding that statute of limitations, which defined "childhood sexual abuse" as any act by "the defendant against a complainant," and which act would have been a violation of the applicable criminal code, necessarily limited the statute's applicability to causes of action against "the" defendant who had himself engaged in the criminal conduct).

We decline to adopt the reasoning of these cases. Initially, we note the statutory definition of "childhood sexual abuse" does not on its face specifically include or exclude those persons who may bring claims, or against whom claims may be brought. Ultimately, however, we find that to read the definition of "childhood sexual abuse" as necessarily implying that claims may be brought only by the victim against the alleged abuser would deny other words contained in the statute their ordinary meaning, deprive them of meaningful effect, and create discord between related provisions of the act.

The act plainly provides that "any person" may bring claims under its provisions, not just the victim. RCW 4.16.340(1). More significantly, the act expressly includes within its scope suits against negligent entities. RCW 4.16.350. By definition, a negligent actor does not act intentionally. Furthermore, entities, ipso facto, cannot directly perpetrate sexual abuse. Entity liability is, in all circumstances, derived from the acts of its agents, whether it be under theories of respondeat superior, negligence, or other imputed conduct (civil or criminal).

Rather than a limitation on the parties who may sue or be sued under the act, we read the statutory definition of 712 "childhood sexual abuse" as limiting only the specific 269 predicate sexual conduct upon which all claims or causes of action must be based. Thus, the alleged sexual abuse must amount to a violation of the criminal code. If it does not, no claim of any type, against any person, lies.

We find this interpretation best preserves express language contained within the act, harmonizes related provisions, and leaves intact the primary meaning of the definition of "childhood sexual abuse"--that claims must be based on serious sexual misconduct of criminal proportions.

The defendants contend the definitional language creates ambiguity in the meaning of the statute and argue the legislative history supports their position. Even were we to agree that the statute is ambiguous, which we do not, the defendants' interpretation is contrary to the legislative intent. See Marquis v. City of Spokane, 130 Wash.2d 97, 108, 922 P.2d 43 (1996) (where language creates ambiguity in the overall meaning or purpose of the statute, this court must attempt to fulfill the legislative intent).

[8] As noted earlier, RCW 4.16.340 was enacted in response to our decision in Tyson v. Tyson, 107 Wash.2d 72, 727 P.2d 226. In doing so, the Legislature specifically provided for a broad and generous application of the discovery rule to civil actions for injuries caused by childhood sexual abuse. See Laws of 1991, ch. 212, § 1(6), amending RCW 4.16.340 in part to clarify the Legislature's original intent in enacting the statute ("[t]he legislature enacted RCW 4.16.340 to clarify the application of the discovery rule to childhood sexual abuse cases"). The Legislature adopted "findings and intent," which make clear that its primary concern was to provide a broad avenue of redress for victims of childhood sexual abuse who too often were left without a remedy under previous statutes of limitation. See Laws of 1991, ch. 212, § 1 (finding that childhood sexual abuse is a pervasive problem and causes long lasting damage; that victims of childhood sexual abuse may repress the memory of the abuse or be unable to connect the abuse to any injury *713 until the statute of limitations has run; that victims may be unable to understand or make the connection between the abuse and the emotional damages it causes; that even though victims may be aware of injuries related to the abuse, more serious injuries may be discovered many years later.).

Significantly, in 1991, the statute was broadened in order to make clear that the discovery of less serious injuries did not commence the period of limitations. In addition, the Legislature specifically superseded a line of cases that had strictly applied the discovery rule in cases involving childhood sexual abuse. Laws of 1991, ch. 212. At least one of the superseded cases, Raymond v. Ingram, 47 Wash.App. 781, 737 P.2d 314 (1987), involved negligence claims against nonabusers which had been dismissed by the court. Given this context, we conclude the Legislature intended a broad reading and application of the statute.

Nowhere in RCW 4.16.340 does the Legislature articulate concern for defendants who might be sued. If the Legislature had intended the act to apply exclusively to the perpetrators of the abuse, the statute would have included specific limitations to that effect. It does not do so. [FN6]

FN6. Legislative history which purportedly shows the statute was intended to apply only to actions against the abusers themselves is inconclusive. The Senate

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Bill Report states, in summary, that the new legislation would allow "an action against the abuser...." Senate Comm. on Law & Justice, S.B. Rep. 6305, at 1 (Jan. 19, 1988). The House Bill Report summarizes, by stating, a "cause of action for intentional childhood sexual abuse" must be commenced within the time allowed by the discovery rule. H.B. Rep. E.S.S.B. 6305 at 2 (Mar. 3, 1988). The legislative history also contains a report by the Northwest Women's Law Center, a major proponent of the act, which states, the purpose of the legislation is to apply the discovery rule "to civil suits alleging negligent and/or intentional torts...." See "Proposed Legislation Regarding the Statute of Limitations for Civil Suits Brought by Adult Survivors of Incest or Childhood Sexual Abuse," S.B. Rep. 6305, at 1 (1988). Finally, the "Summary of Legislation Regarding the Statute of Limitations in Civil Childhood Sexual Abuse Cases," S.B. Rep. 6305 (1988) (prepared by Jana Mohr, representing Patti Barton), states, the "proposed legislation will apply the discovery rule to civil actions based on intentional torts ... for injuries suffered as a result of that abuse." The language in these brief summaries is in sharp contrast to the adopted statutory language which allows "[a]ll claims or causes of action based on intentional conduct...." RCW 4.16.340(1).

We also reject defendants' argument regarding the effect of the words "or omission" stricken from § 1 of the original act (requiring the claim be brought within three years of "the act (or omission) alleged to have caused the injury," (now § (1)(a)). First, this section does not control the scope of the statute. It is, therefore, irrelevant to determining whether the statute encompasses negligence claims "based on" intentional conduct. Furthermore, the section ties the running of the limitations period exclusively to the actual commission of the intentional abuse, without reference to any omissions that may have facilitated such abuse. Thus, inclusion of the word "omission" was grammatically and logically incorrect. Accordingly, the deletion of these words has no impact on our analysis.

270 [9] In giving effect to all the words used in the statute, and *714 from our determination of legislative intent, we conclude RCW 4.16.340 encompasses causes of action sounding in negligence against parties who did not themselves directly perpetrate acts of childhood sexual abuse, but who allegedly failed to protect child victims or to otherwise prevent the abuse.

The trial courts and Court of Appeals are reversed on this issue. Jamerson v. Vandiver, 85 Wash.App. 564, 934 P.2d 1199, is overruled.

Issues Specific to Each Case
C.J.C. v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop

First, we must decide whether the alleged sexual misconduct of Fathers Scully and Calhoun (the Priests) constitutes "childhood sexual abuse" within the meaning of the statute. See RCW 4.16.340 (defining "childhood sexual abuse" as an act that would have been a violation of RCW 9A.44, RCW 9.68A.040, or prior laws of similar effect at the time the act was committed).

C.J.C. argues the Priests communicated with him for an immoral purpose as proscribed under former RCW 9A.44.110 (1981) ("Any person who communicates with a child under the age of seventeen years of age for immoral purposes shall be guilty of a gross misdemeanor...."). The Priests, who allegedly masturbated C.J.C., argue that RCW 4.16.340 does not apply to claims against them because their conduct was not proscribed under the then applicable criminal code.

At the time in question, 1980 through 1981, RCW 9A.44 was the applicable statute then in effect. Finding the alleged conduct did not fall under any of the definitional sections *715 of the statute, the trial court dismissed all claims against the Priests. See RCW 9A.44.010 (defining "sexual intercourse" as penetration or contact between sexual organs of one person and vagina, mouth, or anus of another).

Relying on State v. McNallie, 120 Wash.2d 925, 846 P.2d 1358 (1993), the Court of Appeals reversed and reinstated the claims. Under McNallie, the Court of Appeals reasoned a jury could find that an act not specifically proscribed by statute could nevertheless constitute communication with a child for immoral purposes, so long as the communication was "for the predatory purpose of promoting their exposure to and involvement in sexual misconduct." C.J.C. v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop, 88 Wash.App. 70, 75, 943 P.2d 1150 (1997) (quoting McNallie, 120 Wash.2d at 933, 846 P.2d 1358).

[10] The Priests now argue that the Court of Appeals should not have applied the reasoning of McNallie because that case interpreted RCW 9.68A, a later enacted statute. In essence, the Priests would have this court ignore McNallie and reverse the Court of Appeals on the basis that their conduct was not then a crime and, therefore, they could not have engaged in communications for an immoral purpose. See, e.g., State v. Luther, 65 Wash.App. 424, 428, 830 P.2d 674 (1992) (no communication for immoral purpose if underlying sexual conduct not illegal).

The Priests' argument is not well taken. In 1979, we construed the very statute at issue here and concluded it applied to misconduct of a sexual nature whether or not precisely defined within the statute itself. See State v. Schimmelpfennig, 92 Wash.2d 95, 101-04, 594 P.2d 442 (1979) (construing RCW 9A.88.020). [FN7] We gave the phrase 271 "communication with a minor for immoral purposes" a "commonsense understanding," holding that "any spoken word *716 or course of conduct with a minor for purpose of sexual misconduct is prohibited." Schimmelpfennig, 92 Wash.2d at 103-04, 594 P.2d 442 (emphasis added). We upheld the conviction of a man who had merely attempted to entice young girls into the back of his van for sexual purposes. Here, defendants allegedly engaged in actual sexual misconduct.

> FN7. Former RCW 9A.44.110 (repealed by Laws of 1984, ch. 262 and recodified at RCW 9.68A.090), was formerly codified at RCW 9A.88.020. The language of the two statutes is identical; both statutes were enacted by the same source. Laws of 1975, 1st Ex.Sess., ch. 260. Thus, although later moved to a different part of the criminal code, the two statutes are one and the same. Schimmelpfennig, therefore, controls.

We find the Priests' conduct meets the definition of "childhood sexual abuse" as defined in RCW 4.16.340. We affirm the Court of Appeals on this issue.

Second, we must decide whether two communications sent from the Priests' mental health providers to the Diocese are privileged and undiscoverable.

C.J.C. moved the trial court to compel discovery of certain communications between mental health counselors and the Diocese regarding the treatment of Fathers Calhoun and Scully. The trial court denied the motion. The Court of Appeals affirmed in part and reversed in part. C.J.C. v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop, No. 37632-2-I, slip op. at 20-22 (Wash.Ct.App. Sept. 22, 1997). In reversing in part, the court reasoned that two reports sent from the Priests' mental health counselors to the Diocese were discoverable because they were not confidential communications between patient and counselor. See C.J.C., No. 37632-2-I, slip op. at 21.

The fact that the Priests participated in counseling at the insistence of the Diocese and consented to the Diocese receiving reports of their progress is undisputed. Nevertheless, they argue the client-psychologist privilege was not waived because of their unique relationship with their church. The Priests liken this relationship to a husband and wife attending joint counseling. Alternatively, they argue this court should fashion a rule similar to the "joint defense" or "common interest" rule under which communications exchanged between multiple parties engaged in a common defense remain privileged under the attorney-client privilege.

[11] Defendants' argument does not persuade us to amalgamate various evidentiary privileges in order to create *717 the protection they seek. Legislative grants of testimonial privilege conflict with the inherent power of the courts to compel the production of relevant evidence and are, therefore, strictly construed. See, e.g., State v. Latta, 92 Wash.2d 812, 819, 601 P.2d 520 (1979); Phipps v. Sasser, 74 Wash.2d 439, 444, 445 P.2d 624 (1968); Cook v. King County, 9 Wash.App. 50, 52, 510 P.2d 659 (1973).

[12] Even were we inclined to recognize a unity of interest between a cleric and his or her church and protect communications made in furtherance of that interest against compulsory disclosure, this is not the case in which to do so. Where childhood sexual abuse is at issue, even long established privileges do not apply. See, e.g., State v. Fagalde, 85 Wash.2d 730, 735- 37, 539 P.2d 86 (1975) (client-psychologist privilege does not apply to any judicial proceeding regarding a child's injury, neglect, or sexual abuse); Dike v. Dike, 75 Wash.2d 1, 11, 448 P.2d 490 (1968) (attorney-client privilege is not absolute and exceptions to the privilege may result from a balancing of the privilege against the public interest in full disclosure of all the facts). See also State v. Waleczek, 90 Wash.2d 746, 751, 585 P.2d 797 (1978) (husband-wife privilege may be "subordinated to the overriding and paramount legislative intent to protect children from physical and sexual abuse"). Accordingly, we limit our discussion to the specific parameters of the client-psychologist privilege. [FN8]

FN8. Notwithstanding Fagalde, the Court of Appeals determined that the privilege applied in part. C.J.C., No. 37632-2-I, slip op. at 22. C.J.C. does not cross-appeal that holding. Accordingly, our discussion is limited to the scope of the privilege and not whether it should have been applied in the first place.

RCW 18.83.110 governs the client-psychologist privilege. [FN9] It prohibits compulsory disclosure 272 of confidential communications only. The privilege is strictly construed. *718*In re Welfare of Henderson,* 29 Wash.App. 748, 752, 630 P.2d 944 (1981).

FN9. Father Calhoun's mental health counselor held a masters of education and was not a licensed psychologist. The Court of Appeals applied RCW 18.19.180, the client-counselor statute, to find a privilege. C.J.C., No. 37632-2-I, slip op. at 22. C.J.C. does not appeal this ruling. Thus, for purposes of this review we assume, without deciding, that RCW 18.19.180 provides a privilege coextensive with that of the client-psychologist privilege.

[13] A person "may not claim a privilege as to communications that do not originate in the confidence that they will not be disclosed." State v. Post, 118 Wash.2d 596, 612, 826 P.2d 172, 837 P.2d 599 (1992). A patient's intent that the communication be confidential must be reasonable in light of the circumstances surrounding the communication. Post, 118 Wash.2d at 612, 826 P.2d 172. The patient's subjective expectations of confidence, while relevant, should not be given more weight than the objective evidence of the situation and circumstances in which the communication was made. Post, 118 Wash.2d at 612, 826 P.2d 172.

[14] Here, the Court of Appeals limited discovery to only those reports actually communicated to the Diocese; it did not require disclosure of actual treatment records. While the Priests may have believed their communications would remain confidential, they clearly intended that a third party, the Diocese, would be kept informed. The courts of this state have long held that communications intended for the purpose of providing a third party with the results thereof are not confidential. See, e.g., In re Henderson, 29 Wash.App. at 752-53, 630 P.2d 944; J.N. v. Bellingham Sch. Dist. No. 501, 74 Wash.App. 49, 63, 871 P.2d 1106 (1994). As a result, we find the communications at issue are not protected under RCW 18.83.110.

We affirm the Court of Appeals and permit discovery of the two reports sent to the Diocese because they were not confidential patient-psychologist communications.

Third, C.J.C. appeals the dismissal of his respondeat superior and strict liability claims. Under the facts alleged here, these claims are governed by our recent decision in Niece v. Elmview Group Home 131 Wash.2d 39, 48, 52- 58, 929 P.2d 420 (1997).

[15] Following an extended discussion, we concluded in Niece that neither current Washington case law nor considerations of public policy favor the imposition of respondeat superior or strict liability for an employee's *719 intentional sexual misconduct. We specifically stated, "[v]icarious liability for intentional or criminal actions of employees would be incompatible with recent Washington cases rejecting vicarious liability for sexual assault, even in cases involving recognized protective special relationships." Niece, 131 Wash.2d at 55, 929 P.2d 420 (emphasis added). C.J.C.'s argument that the Priests were, from his perspective, acting within the scope of their authority does not persuade us to establish a contrary rule. Our courts have never before adopted such an approach in the present context and we decline to do so now. Compare, e.g., Thompson v. Everett Clinic, 71 Wash.App. 548, 860 P.2d 1054 (1993) (doctor was not acting within scope of employment or apparent authority when he misled patient into believing sperm sample was required and normally obtained by manually stimulating the patient to ejaculation). See also Taylor v. Smith, 13 Wash.App. 171, 177, 534 P.2d 39 (1975) (apparent authority is determined by objective test and the authority of an agent is not " 'apparent' in contemplation of law, merely because it looks so to the person with whom [the agent] deals").

[16] For these same reasons we decline to impose strict liability on a theory of quid pro quo sexual harassment. See Thompson v. Berta Enters., Inc., 72 Wash.App. 531, 538, 864 P.2d 983 (1994) (employer strictly liable for supervisor's quid pro quo sexual harassment because such harassment is impossible absent the actual or apparent authority to make employment decisions), superseded by statute on other grounds by Schonauer v. DCR Entertainment, Inc., 79 Wash.App. 808, 905 P.2d 392 (1995). On this point, we simply disagree with C.J.C.'s contention that there is no basis for distinguishing "between supervising an employee who wants to keep her job and supervising an altar boy who wants to get into heaven." C.J.C. Answer to 273 Pet. for Review at 19. Unlike the former, the latter relationship is formed entirely by religious doctrine and, in this case, by C.J.C.'s personal religious beliefs. While C.J.C. may have sincerely believed Fathers Calhoun and Scully had the power to gain *720 him entry into heaven, and while he may have exchanged sexual favors believing it would help him get into heaven, the notion that legal liability may be premised on such beliefs is unprecedented.

We affirm the dismissal of C.J.C.'s respondeat superior and strict liability claims.

Funkhouser v. Wilson

We must first decide whether a church and its officials have a special relationship with either its workers or the children of its congregation which gives rise to a duty to take reasonable measures to prevent harm intentionally inflicted on the children by a church worker.

The alleged facts pertaining to this issue are as follows: In 1968, David Schulz, a church elder, received a telephone call while he was doing volunteer work at the Church. The exact content of the conversation is disputed. However, Schulz admits the caller identified herself, asked to speak with a person of authority within the Church, and asserted inappropriate sexual conduct by Orin Wilson (the alleged molester of the plaintiffs) toward a young girl. At the time of the call, plaintiffs were living out-of-state. By 1969, one year later, plaintiffs had moved to Washington, their father had begun his pastorship at the Church and Schulz had become the first chairman of the Church's deacon board. At the time, Schulz did nothing to warn plaintiffs or their father of the accusation, or to prevent or discourage Wilson from being involved with the youth of the church. Schulz was, however, concerned enough that he "watched, listened, and observed" Wilson. Nevertheless, Wilson was subsequently made a deacon and was entrusted with various leadership positions within the Church that allegedly provided extensive contact with and authority over children. [FN10]

FN10. The fact that both Schulz and Wilson were volunteers does not impact our analysis. A charitable entity may be held liable for the negligence of volunteers acting in an agency capacity. Abel v. Firs Bible & Missionary Conf., 57 Wash.2d 853, 855, 360 P.2d 356 (1961). Furthermore, one who assumes to act, even though gratuitously, may be held liable for his or her negligence in carrying out the act. See Roth v. Kay, 35 Wash.App. 1, 4, 664 P.2d 1299 (1983). See also Curran v. City of Marysville, 53 Wash.App. 358, 365, 766 P.2d 1141 (1989) (one who voluntarily assumes responsibility for the care of a child has a duty to exercise reasonable care to protect that child).

[17][18][19] *721 We begin with the now well established principle that where a "special relationship" exists, a duty to protect against the intentional or criminal acts of third parties may arise. See, e.g., Nivens v. 7-11 Hoagy's Corner, 133 Wash.2d 192, 200, 943 P.2d 286 (1997); Niece, 131 Wash.2d at 43, 929 P.2d 420. A special relationship between the defendant and the intentional tortfeasor may give rise to a duty to control the tortfeasor's conduct for the benefit of third persons. See Niece, 131 Wash.2d at 43, 929 P.2d 420. A special relationship between the defendant and the victim may give rise to a duty to protect the victim against foreseeable harms, including harms intentionally caused. "Many special relationships give rise to a duty to prevent harms caused by the intentional or criminal conduct of third parties." Niece, 131 Wash.2d at 44, 929 P.2d 420. Thus, for instance, a school has a duty to protect students within its custody from reasonably anticipated dangers, an innkeeper has a duty to protect its guests, and a hospital its patients. See Niece, 131 Wash.2d at 44-45, 929 P.2d 420 (citing cases). Similarly, even where an employee "is acting outside the scope of employment, the relationship between employer and employee gives rise to a limited duty, owed by an employer to foreseeable victims, to prevent the tasks, premises, or instrumentalities entrusted to an employee from endangering others." Niece, 131 Wash.2d at 48, 929 P.2d 420.

[20] Whether there is a special relationship between a church and the children of its congregation that gives rise to a duty to protect the children against foreseeable harms is an issue of first impression. In important aspects, however, the activities of a church generate the kind of relationships where we have, in other contexts, imposed a 274 duty of reasonable care. The children of a congregation may be delivered into the custody and care of a church and its workers, whether it be on the premises for services and Sunday school, or off the premises at church sponsored *722 activities or youth camps. As in other agency relationships, a church chooses its officials, directs their activities, and may restrict and control their conduct. In many respects, the activities of a church, and the corresponding duties legitimately imposed upon it, are similar to those of a school. As a matter of public policy, the protection of children is a high priority. In general, therefore, we find churches (and other religious organizations) subject to the same duties of reasonable care as would be imposed on any person or entity in selecting and supervising their workers, or protecting vulnerable persons within their custody, so as to prevent reasonably foreseeable harm.

Under the facts of this case, the more difficult question is whether the harm sought to be prevented fell within the scope of any duty. Here, plaintiffs do not allege the molestation perpetrated by Wilson occurred on Church premises or during Church activities. Nor do plaintiffs claim the victims were, at the time of the molestation, specifically within the protective custody of the Church. Nevertheless, plaintiffs assert the Church had a duty to protect the children of its congregation against foreseeable harms perpetrated by a Church official whom the Church "placed in authority and in close relationship to church children, knowing of the danger." Funkhouser Supp. Br. at 7.

On these facts, the trial court found no duty existed and dismissed the claims of Janelle Larson and Sheri Lewis (the Church had only moved for summary judgment on this issue against these two plaintiffs). The Court of Appeals reversed, reasoning "churches and the adult church workers who assume responsibility for the spiritual well-being of children of the congregation, whether as paid clergy or as volunteers, have a special relationship with those children that gives rise to a duty to protect them from reasonably foreseeable risk of harm from those members of the congregation whom the church places in positions of responsibility and authority over them." Funkhouser v. Wilson, 89 Wash.App. 644, 660, 950 P.2d 501 (1998). *723 We agree with the Court of Appeals that the Church and Schulz owed a duty of reasonable care, but do so on slightly different grounds.

Although we have not previously addressed the issue, we find the reasoning of the New Hampshire Supreme Court, in an analogous context, persuasive. In Marquay v. Eno, 139 N.H. 708, 662 A.2d 272 (1995), former school students who allegedly had been sexually abused by school employees filed suit against the school on theories of negligent supervision and failure to protect. None of the complaints alleged the abuse took place on school premises or during school hours. Marquay, 139 N.H. at 711, 662 A.2d 272.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Nevertheless, the New Hampshire Supreme Court did not reject the existence of a duty as a matter of law. The court recognized that a principal's negligent failure to control an agent is not necessarily limited to conduct performed within the scope of employment or during work hours, so long as there is a causal connection between the plaintiff's injury and the fact of the agency relationship. Marquay, 139 N.H. at 719-21, 662 A.2d 272. The court reasoned that, under such circumstances, liability exists not because of when (or where) the injury occurs, but because "the actor has brought into contact or association with the [victim] a person whom the actor knows or should know to be peculiarly likely to commit intentional misconduct...." Marquay, 139 N.H. at 719, 662 A.2d 272 (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 302B cmt. e(D)). [FN11] Accordingly, employers have been found liable for criminal conduct by off duty or former employees where such conduct was consistent with a propensity of which the employer knew or should have known, and the association between the victim and the employee was occasioned 275 by the employee's job. Marquay, 139 N.H. at 719-20, 662 A.2d 272 (citing cases).

> FN11. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 302B recognizes liability where a special protective relationship exists, or " [w]here the actor has brought into contact or association with the [victim] a person whom the actor knows or should know to be peculiarly likely to commit intentional misconduct, under circumstances which afford a peculiar opportunity or temptation for such misconduct." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 302B cmt. e(D) (1965).

[21] *724 We find the rationale adopted in Marquay persuasive when analogized to the circumstances presented here. In particular, we find the conjunction of four factors present in the case before us decisive to finding the existence of a duty is not foreclosed as a matter of law: (1) the special relationship between the Church and deacon Wilson; (2) the special relationship between the Church and the plaintiffs; (3) the alleged knowledge of the risk of harm possessed by the Church; and (4) the alleged causal connection between Wilson's position in the Church and the resulting harm. Under these circumstances, we simply do not agree with the Church that its duty to take protective action was arbitrarily relieved at the church door. Where a protective special relationship exists, a principal is not free to ignore the risk posed by its agents, place such agents into association with vulnerable persons it would otherwise be required to protect, and then escape liability simply because the harm was accomplished off premises or after-hours. Under these facts, the focus is not on where or when the harm occurred, but on whether the Church or its individual officials negligently caused the harm by placing its agent into association with the plaintiffs when the risk was, or should have been, known. [FN12]

> FN12. The concurrence/dissent accuses the majority of "toss[ing] into the mix" principal and agent language without discussing the legal principles involved. Concurrence/dissent at 279. First, the defendants do not argue an agency relationship did not exist, only that their duty of control did not extend into Wilson's private affairs. Furthermore, under the Restatement of Torts § 302B, an agency relationship is not required in order to establish a duty of care. Finally, under our own precedent, a duty of control or protection also does not depend on a showing of agency. Taggart v. State, 118 Wash.2d 195, 223-24, 822 P.2d 243 (1992) (duty to control does not require agency relationship but arises where ability to control is present); Nivens, 133 Wash.2d at 205, 943 P.2d 286 (duty to protect adult store patrons against reasonably foreseeable harm does not depend on agency relationship with tortfeasor). We use the words "principal" and "agent" in the present context both for simplicity and because we limit liability to harm proximately resulting from the fact of Wilson's position in the Church.

This approach is consistent with our cases recognizing a duty to prevent intentionally inflicted harm where the defendant is in a special relationship with either the tortfeasor or the victim, and where the defendant is or should be aware of the risk. *See, e.g., 725LaLone v. Smith, 39 Wash.2d 167, 172, 234 P.2d 893 (1951) (employer liable for employee's criminal assault on third person "because the employer antecedently had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm would exist because of the employment"); Taggart v. State, 118 Wash.2d 195, 223-24, 822 P.2d 243 (1992) (special relationship giving rise to a duty to prevent intentional harm need not be "custodial or continuous," but arises where ability to supervise is present and necessity for such supervision is or should be known); Petersen v. State, 100 Wash.2d 421, 428-29, 671 P.2d 230 (1983) (psychiatrist-patient relationship gives rise to duty to take reasonable precautions to protect all persons foreseeably endangered by mental patient's release into community). Compare Carlsen v. Wackenhut Corp., 73 Wash.App. 247, 256, 868 P.2d 882 (1994) (employer liable for security guard's attempted rape if employer knew of or should have known of guard's violent propensities and nevertheless conferred position of authority and responsibility), with Peck v. Siau, 65 Wash.App. 285, 289, 292-94, 827 P.2d 1108 (1992) (school not liable for teacher's off campus sexual assault of student where it did not know, nor reasonably should have known, of the risk posed by teacher). [FN13]

> FN13. Hutchins v. 1001 Fourth Ave. Assocs., 116 Wash.2d 217, 802 P.2d 1360 (1991), upon which the concurrence/dissent relies, is simply not on point. In Hutchins, no special relationship existed. We stated, in the absence of a special relationship, a duty would nevertheless attach if the defendant had brought about an "especial temptation and opportunity for criminal misconduct." Hutchins, 116 Wash.2d at 230, 802 P.2d 1360. In short, Hutchins dealt with landowner liability where no special relationships existed. It is not at all relevant to this case.

Viewing the facts in the light most favorable to the plaintiffs, a jury could reasonably find Wilson's position in the Church was a causal factor in the resulting harm. Wilson was a prominent member of the Church, placed into positions of trust over children. 276 This position not only brought him into close connection with the children of the congregation, it allegedly inspired confidence to place the plaintiffs into his care. In addition, there is evidence that Wilson baby-sat the victims in order that their father could travel on Church business and that the Church was aware of this arrangement. Given the Church's specific and *726 superior knowledge of the facts, a jury could reasonably find the Church knew or should have known the children of its congregation, and specifically these particular plaintiffs, were exposed to an unreasonable risk of harm at the hands of Wilson. [FN14]

> FN14. The Church's argument that it could not, without written complaint, take disciplinary action against Wilson and, therefore, was under no duty to control him, is unpersuasive. The Court of Appeals reasoning is flawed, as well. See Funkhouser, 89 Wash.App. at 657, 950 P.2d 501 (declining to impose liability under a duty to control because the Church constitution and bylaws required complaints be in writing before disciplinary action could be taken). Importantly, the Church had prior warning of Wilson's alleged propensity to molest children. The Church, therefore, was in a position to refrain from developing a special relationship with Wilson and from placing him in positions of trust within the Church in the first place.

Our decision not to foreclose the imposition of a duty as a matter of law under these facts is supported by the strong public policy in favor of protecting children against acts of sexual abuse. Current law makes it a criminal offense for certain professionals to fail to notify the proper authorities when there is reason to suspect childhood sexual abuse. See RCW 26.44.030 (medical practitioners, law enforcement personnel, school personnel, nurses, social service workers, licensed child care providers and their employees, among others, are required to report suspected child sexual abuse to the proper authorities); see also RCW 26.44.080 (failure to report is a gross misdemeanor). We note that at the time of the alleged abuse in this case, certain church officials were also required by law to report suspected abuse. See former RCW 26.44.030 (1969) (requiring any "clergyman," as defined, to report suspected child sexual abuse). [FN15] While the reporting requirement is permissive as to "other persons" not specifically defined, see *727RCW 26.44.030(3), the Legislature has made clear that the prevention of child abuse is of "the highest priority, and all instances of child abuse must be reported to the proper authorities who should diligently and expeditiously take appropriate action...." Laws of 1985, ch. 259 (legislative findings appended to RCW 26.44.030). Any person who makes a good faith report of suspected abuse is absolutely immune from civil or criminal liability arising from the reporting. RCW 26.44.060(1)(a). [FN16]

FN15. In 1975, the requirement as to clergymen was repealed. Laws of 1975, 1st Ex.Sess., ch. 217, § 3. Nevertheless, the reporting requirement continues to apply to those church officials who are engaged in "encouraging or promoting the health, welfare, support or education of children, or providing social services to adults or families, whether in an individual capacity, or as an employee or agent of any public or private organization or institution." State v. Motherwell, 114 Wash.2d 353, 357, 788 P.2d 1066 (1990) (citing former RCW 26.44.020(8)). Thus, the newly implied exemption is triggered only when the official is actually acting in the capacity of a regularly licensed or ordained minister, priest, or rabbi. Motherwell, 114 Wash.2d at 359, 788 P.2d 1066.

FN16. We need not determine whether the Church specifically violated the statute. We find merely that the statute reflects a strong public policy in favor of protecting children against reasonably suspected sexual abuse through report to the proper persons. See, e.g., Bernethy v. Walt Failor's, Inc., 97 Wash.2d 929, 932-33, 653 P.2d 280 (1982) (where duty is based on common law principles, an analogous statute, even when not specifically violated, reflects strong public policy in favor of imposing a duty).

[22] We, therefore, conclude the Church and Schulz owed a duty of reasonable care to affirmatively act to prevent the harm, in view of their relationship to the plaintiffs, their relationship to Wilson, and given the knowledge they allegedly possessed. Whether there was a causal connection between the harm and the fact of Wilson's position in the Church, or whether the risk of harm was or should have been reasonably foreseen at the time the harm occurred, are questions of fact to be determined by the jury.

[23] We caution that our holding is limited. We do not suggest that a principal is an insurer against all harm occasioned by its agents simply because the work situation fortuitously provides an opportunity to 277 perpetrate the harm. Nor do we decide that knowledge of potential harm alone is sufficient to give rise to a duty to warn in all cases. We do hold that where a special protective relationship exists a principal may not turn a blind eye to a known or reasonably foreseeable risk of harm posed by its agents toward those it would otherwise be required to protect simply because the injury is arbitrarily perpetrated off premises or after-hours. [FN17]

FN17. Accordingly, we do not find the issue of duty in this case distinctly separable into either one of "control" or "protection," since elements of both are present. Nor need we adopt wholesale the duty described in § 302B of the Restatement (Second) of Torts (1965).

[24][25] Finally, we reject the Church's argument that the *728 First Amendment or article I, section 11 of the state constitution prevent this court from imposing a duty on the Church. [FN18] The First Amendment does not provide churches with absolute immunity to engage in tortious conduct. So long as liability is predicated on secular conduct and does not involve the interpretation of church doctrine or religious beliefs, it does not offend constitutional principles. See, e.g., Sanders v. Casa View Baptist Church, 134 F.3d 331, 336 (5th Cir.) ("the constitutional guarantee of religious freedom cannot be construed to protect secular beliefs and behavior, even when they comprise part of an otherwise religious relationship between a minister and a member of his or her congregation. To hold otherwise would impermissibly place a religious leader in a preferred position in our society.") (second emphasis added), cert. denied, 525 U.S. 868, 119 S.Ct. 161, 142 L.Ed.2d 132 (1998).

> FN18. Plaintiffs' (C.J.C.'s and Funkhouser's) motion to strike the supplemental brief of the Corporation of the Catholic Bishop of Yakima (Diocese) is granted. The Diocese is a defendant in the C.J.C. case. Its brief addresses the First Amendment rights of the defendants in the Funkhouser case. The Diocese admits it did not preserve these issues in its own case. RAP 10.1(g) is intended to facilitate shared briefing related to shared issues. The rule does not allow what essentially amounts to amicus argument relating to another party's case on an issue not shared in common.

Similarly, while art. I, § 11 of our state constitution protects "[a]bsolute freedom of conscience in all matters of religious sentiment," that protection "shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state." Thus, the specific language of art. I, § 11 defeats the Church's state constitutional claims.

We affirm the Court of Appeals in Funkhouser and reverse the trial court on the issue of duty.

E.R.B v. Church of God

We must decide whether the claims of E.R.B.'s parents are untimely. E.R.B.'s parents brought claims against Shaw 729 the alleged abuser), the Local Church, and the New Life Church of God State Offices and Parsonages. The trial court dismissed. The Court of Appeals, Division II, affirmed. E.R.B. v. Church of God, 89 Wash.App. 670, 686, 950 P.2d 29 (1998).

[26] We reverse. We find the claims brought by E.R.B.'s parents fall within the ambit of RCW 4.16.340(1). The statute allows "any person" to bring a claim based on childhood sexual abuse. Commencement of the limitations period is not determined by reference to knowledge possessed by the parents. Rather, it is determined according to knowledge possessed by the child "victim." See RCW 4.16.340(1)(b)-(c). The fact that E.R.B.'s parents allegedly had prior knowledge of the abuse is, therefore, irrelevant to the timeliness of their claims. Under the statute, the claims of parents begin to run at the same time as the underlying claims of their child(ren).

Although this result may seem unusual, the plain language of the statute controls. Therefore, we reverse the trial court and the Court of Appeals on the timeliness of claims asserted by E.R.B.'s parents.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, the decisions of the Court of Appeals in Funkhouser v. Wilson, 89 Wash.App. 644, 950 P.2d 501, and C.J.C. v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop, 88 Wash.App. 70, 943 P.2d 1150, are affirmed, *278 partially on different grounds; the decision of the Court of Appeals in E.R.B. v. Church of God, 89 Wash.App. 670, 950 P.2d 29, is reversed. The cases are remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

ALEXANDER, SMITH, and TALMADGE, JJ., concur.

MADSEN, J. (concurring/dissenting).

While I agree with the majority in most respects, I would hold as a matter of law that the defendants in Funkhouser v. Wilson, No. 66580-0, did not owe a duty to Sheri Lewis and Janelle 730 Larson to control Orin Wilson, to protect Sheri and Janelle from his criminal acts, or to warn their parents that he was a child molester. I disagree with the majority's holding that defendants owed a duty of reasonable care to affirmatively act to prevent the harm that occurred as a result of a private, nonchurch-related child care arrangement between members of a church congregation. The majority fails to recognize the First Amendment implications of its decision, and it expands the special custodial relationship theory of liability past rational limits. I must respectfully dissent.

Facts

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

The negligence claims at issue are those of Ms. Lewis and Ms. Larson against Cavalry Baptist Church of Twisp and David Schulz, arising out of Wilson's molestation of them when they were children. Wilson held unpaid positions of leadership in the church. The acts of molestation occurred at Wilson's home when he and his wife were taking care of plaintiffs at their parents' request. The molestation of these plaintiffs did not occur on church property nor during church sponsored activities. Defendants did not recommend Wilson as a babysitter.

Plaintiffs contend that Schulz, also a church leader, learned through a telephone call in 1968 that Wilson was a child molester, but failed to warn anyone of danger posed by Wilson to children or to prevent Wilson from being involved with children through church activities. They urge that defendants had a duty to control Wilson and to protect plaintiffs from him. Defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that they owed no duty of care as a matter of law. The trial court granted summary judgment of dismissal, ruling that as a matter of law defendants owed no duty.

The Court of Appeals reversed. That court held that defendants did not have a special relationship with Wilson giving rise to a duty to control him so as to prevent him from harming plaintiffs, but did have a duty arising out of *731 a special relationship between defendants and Ms. Lewis and Ms. Larson. The court reasoned "that churches and the adult church workers who assume responsibility for the spiritual well-being of children of the congregation, whether as paid clergy or as volunteers, have a special relationship with those children that gives rise to a duty to protect them from reasonably foreseeable risk of harm from those members of the congregation whom the church places in positions of responsibility and authority over them." Funkhouser v. Wilson, 89 Wash.App. 644, 660, 950 P.2d 501, review granted, E.R.B. v. Church of God, 135 Wash.2d 1001, 959 P.2d 126 (1998). In light of this holding, the Court of Appeals did not reach plaintiffs' argument that a duty was owed pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Torts § 302B (1965).

The majority affirms, but does so on rather nebulous grounds. The majority does not address plaintiffs' independent theories of special relationships and § 302B, saying the issues are not distinctly severable. Majority at 277 n. 17. Instead, the majority says that the combination of four factors is decisive in finding duty is not foreclosed as a matter of law, i.e., a special relationship between the church and Wilson, a special relationship between the church and plaintiffs, alleged knowledge possessed by the church, and an alleged causal connection between Wilson's position in the church and resulting harm. Majority at 275. The first two of these factors are legal conclusions drawn without legal analysis. The majority also says it does not "adopt wholesale" the duty described in § 302B. Majority at 277 n. 17. Nevertheless, the majority uses some of the theory associated with that section, again without sufficient analysis. The majority also tosses into 279 the mix language of principal and agent, without discussing the legal principles involved and without explaining how liability in this case may be found premised upon a principal-agent (or master-servant) relationship. Majority at 275. In addition to these concerns, there are very significant First Amendment issues which must be addressed in light of plaintiffs' theories.

Unfortunately, in the end, the majority's analysis is so *732 vague that defining the limits of the duty announced is virtually impossible. The majority's lack of precision is particularly troubling given the settled common law rule that one is generally not liable for the criminal acts of third parties. Moreover, this court quite recently disapproved of this kind of intermingling of distinct theories. Niece v. Elmview Group Home, 131 Wash.2d 39, 48-49, 929 P.2d 420 (1997) (rejecting argument which combined theory of liability for negligent supervision based on special relationship between group home and resident and theory of liability for breach of duty arising out of special relationship between group home and resident; first theory does not serve to define the duty owed under second theory). Regrettably, as a result of its unclear analysis, the majority concludes that a church's duty extends to a private, nonchurch-related, off-church-premises child care arrangement between church members. The court should address the separate theories actually advanced by plaintiffs, and hold that as a matter of law no duty is owed as the trial court correctly ruled.

appellate court makes the same inquiry as the trial court, i.e., summary judgment is proper where there are no genuine issues of material fact and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Taggart v. State, 118 Wash.2d 195, 199, 822 P.2d 243 (1992); CR 56(c). The facts, and reasonable inferences from the facts, are considered in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Taggart, 118 Wash.2d at 199, 822 P.2d 243. Questions of law are reviewed de novo. Sherman v. State, 128 Wash.2d 164, 183, 905 P.2d 355 (1995). Existence of a duty is a question of law. Schooley v. Pinch's Deli Market, Inc., 134 Wash.2d 468, 474, 951 P.2d 749 (1998).

Plaintiffs contend the Court of Appeals erred in holding that there was no special relationship between defendants and Wilson giving rise to a duty to control Wilson, but that the Court of Appeals correctly held that a special protective relationship existed between defendants and children of *733 the church giving rise to a duty. Plaintiffs also maintain that a duty was also owed because defendants had knowledge that Wilson was an accused child molester and knowingly installed him in a position where he could gain the trust of parents. Thus, according to plaintiffs, defendants created the framework for abuse and it does not matter that the abuse of Ms. Lewis and Ms. Larson occurred at Wilson's home.

The Court of Appeals correctly held that no special relationship existed between defendants and Wilson giving rise to a duty on defendants' part to control Wilson. Generally there is no duty to protect another from the criminal acts of third persons. Hutchins v. 1001 Fourth Ave. Assocs., 116 Wash.2d 217, 223, 802 P.2d 1360 (1991). A duty to control the conduct of a third party so as to prevent physical harm to another may arise; however, where a special relationship exists between the actor and the third person giving rise to such a duty, or where a special protective relationship exists between the actor and the other. Hutchins, 116 Wash.2d at 227, 802 P.2d 1360; Restatement (Second) of Torts § 315 (1965). Relations between the actor and the third party (who causes the harm) which give rise to a duty are described in Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 316 through 319. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 315 cmt. c. Thus, under certain specified circumstances, a parent may have a duty to control the conduct of a minor child, id. § 316, a master may have a duty to control a servant acting outside the scope of employment, id. § 317, a possessor of property may have a duty to control a licensee, id. § 318, and an actor who has taken charge of a third party having dangerous propensities may have a duty to control the actions of that third party, id. § 319.

280 As to § 319, this court has recognized that a special relationship giving rise to a duty to control a party with known dangerous propensities may exist where there is a " 'definite, established and continuing relationship between the defendant and the third party.' " Taggart, 118 Wash.2d at 219, 822 P.2d 243 (quoting *734*Honcoop v. State,* 111 Wash.2d 182, 193, 759 P.2d 1188 (1988)). Such a duty exists, however, only where the actor has authority to control the third party's conduct. The Court of Appeals recognized this principle. Funkhouser, 89 Wash.App. at 654, 950 P.2d 501 (though stating that the authority must be legal authority). Thus, in Petersen v. State, 100 Wash.2d 421, 671 P.2d 230 (1983), a state employed psychiatrist was found to have a duty to control the conduct of a recently released state hospital psychiatric patient where the psychiatrist had treated the patient while institutionalized, knew of the patient's dangerous propensities, and had authority to seek an additional civil commitment. In Taggart v. State, supra, parole officers were found to have a duty to control parolees where the officers had the obligation and authority to guide and supervise the parolees. A duty to control should only be imposed where the actor could conceivably satisfy that duty; in other words, the authority to actually control the third party's conduct must exist.

Plaintiffs urge that under the Church Constitution and Covenant, to which both Wilson and defendant Schulz submitted, Wilson was subject to the church's "comprehensive disciplinary authority in all areas of his public and private life including matters of conscience as well as behavior." Resp'ts' Supplemental Br. at 11. In their brief to the Court of Appeals they cited that church document for its standards applicable to church members and leaders, including obligations to nurture those in their care, to live exemplary lifestyles, and to be committed to defined spiritual standards, beliefs and standards of behavior. Appellants' Br. on Appeal at 24-25. According to plaintiffs, the Church Constitution and Covenant provided defendants the authority to control Wilson, at all times and in all circumstances.

The difficulty with plaintiffs' argument is twofold. First, as the Court of Appeals noted, the church document gives authority to discipline members only where there has been a written allegation of misconduct, which did not occur in this case.

*735 Second, plaintiffs' argument is that the religious standards held by the church and submitted to by its members give rise to authority to control Wilson, leading to a tort duty on defendants' part to control his conduct. First Amendment concerns are clearly at issue. In addressing these concerns, it is important to keep in mind that the issue addressed here is whether a special relationship existed between defendants and Wilson, for purposes of § 315(b) of the Restatement (Second) of Torts. Plaintiffs rely upon the religious obligations defined by the Constitution and Covenants for the proposition that a special relationship does exist.

In order to decide whether defendants had authority to control Wilson, not only on church premises and during church-related activities, but also in his private life during nonchurch activities, a court would necessarily have to interpret church doctrine and religious principles set forth in the church document in order to determine whether the expansive authority asserted by plaintiffs existed under church law. Such an inquiry is forbidden under the First Amendment. See generally, e.g., Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679, 80 U.S. 679, 20 L.Ed. 666 (1871); Kedroff v. Saint Nicholas Cathedral, 344 U.S. 94, 73 S.Ct. 143, 97 L.Ed. 120 (1952); Presbyterian Church in U.S. v. Mary Elizabeth Blue Hull Mem'l Presbyterian Church, 393 U.S. 440, 89 S.Ct. 601, 21 L.Ed.2d 658 (1969); Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese for U.S. & Canada v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 96 S.Ct. 2372, 49 L.Ed.2d 151 (1976). While there is no bar to examining a church constitution in purely secular terms, a civil court may not resolve ecclesiastical questions. Jones v. Wolf, 443 U.S. 595, 604, 99 S.Ct. 3020, 61 L.Ed.2d 775 (1979). The provisions relied upon by plaintiffs clearly involve spiritual standards, which are not for a civil court to determine.

The majority mistakenly concludes, however, that constitutional inquiry is not required * *281 because religious organizations do not have immunity to engage in tortious conduct as determined under secular standards (which the majority apparently believes is the case here). Majority at *736 277. [FN1] However, to agree with plaintiffs' claim that the Church Constitution and Covenant defines the church's authority, and thus control, over Wilson during all facets and all times of his life would require a court to engage in constitutionally forbidden interpretation of church doctrine and religious principles. [FN2] Because the majority fails to identify the needed authority and control defendants could exert over Wilson, it misses the constitutional dilemma.

FN1. The issue is not one of immunity. It is a matter of the constitutional right to religious freedom.

FN2. This case is unlike some cases where claims of negligent hiring, retention and supervision of ministers, priests and the like have been allowed. First, the record does not indicate that an employment-like situation existed in this case at all. Second, while some courts hold that such claims may be allowed if questions of church law and policy need not be determined, e.g., Isely v. Capuchin Province, 880 F.Supp. 1138, 1151 (E.D.Mich.1995) (negligent supervision claim), here the church document must be interpreted in order to glean directives for personal conduct based upon religious principles and doctrine.

This court should decline to find a special relationship between defendants and Wilson giving rise to a duty on defendants' part to control Wilson during nonchurch-related activities and prevent the harm that occurred.

Plaintiffs next claim that a special protective relationship existed between defendants and the children of the congregation, giving rise to a duty to control Wilson and protect plaintiffs from him. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 315(a)(1965). The majority analogizes to schoolchildren placed in the custody of school. Majority at 274. In the school situation, "the protective custody of teachers is ... substituted for that of the parent." McLeod v. Grant County School Dist. No. 128, 42 Wash.2d 316, 319, 255 P.2d 360 (1953). A school accordingly has a duty to protect pupils in its custody from reasonably anticipated dangers. Id. at 319-20, 255 P.2d 360. The duty of a school to protect children in its custody falls within the broader definition of duty set forth by Restatement (Second) of Torts § 320 (1965):

> One who is required by law to take or who voluntarily takes the custody of another under circumstances such as to deprive the other of his normal power of self-protection or to subject him to association with persons likely to harm him, is under a *737 duty of exercising reasonable care so as to control the conduct of third persons as to prevent them from intentionally harming the other or so conducting themselves as to create an unreasonable risk of harm to him, if the actor
> (a) knows or has reason to know that he has the ability to control the conduct of the third persons, and
> (b) knows or should know of the necessity and opportunity for exercising such control.

(McLeod, 42 Wash.2d at 320, 255 P.2d 360 (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 320)). In the school situation, the child "is deprived of the protection of his parents or guardian. Therefore, the actor ... is properly required to give him the protection which the custody or the manner in which it is taken has deprived him." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 320 cmt. b.

A church which has custody of children during religious classes and services, for example, may have a special protective relationship with the child giving rise to a duty of protection during those times, as the majority indicates. However, as the majority acknowledges, this case does not involve children left in the protective custody of the church during the times when the acts of molestation occurred. Nor were any church-related activities involved. Instead, through a private arrangement between their parents and Wilson, plaintiffs were at Wilson's home when the acts occurred. Plaintiffs were not deprived of the protection of their parents; defendants were not substituted for plaintiffs' parents. To conclude under these circumstances, as the majority does, that a special custodial relationship existed between defendants and plaintiffs requiring them to protect plaintiffs from Wilson is to expand this theory of liability beyond recognition.

282 Nor is the Court of Appeals view on this issue sound. That court reasoned, as noted earlier, "that churches and the adult church workers who assume responsibility for the spiritual well-being of children of the congregation ... have a special relationship with those children" giving rise to a duty to protect the children under facts like those in *738 this case. Funkhouser v. Wilson, 89 Wash.App. 644, 660, 950 P.2d 501, review granted, E.R.B. v. Church of God, 135 Wash.2d 1001, 959 P.2d 126 (1998). The problem with this reasoning is obvious. The Court of Appeals' determination is based upon interpretation of church doctrine and religious principles; duty is found because church members assumed spiritual responsibility for children of the congregation. Such a determination plainly runs afoul of the First Amendment. The majority correctly declines to rest its decision on this ground. Majority at 274.

Plaintiffs also argue that duty should be found based upon Restatement (Second) of Torts § 302B (1965). Section 302B provides that "[a]n act or an omission may be negligent if the actor realizes or should realize that it involves an unreasonable risk of harm to another through the conduct of the other or a third person which is intended to cause harm, even though such conduct is criminal." Plaintiffs urge that defendants had knowledge that Wilson was an accused child molester and knowingly installed him in a position where he could gain the trust of parents.

Initially, plaintiffs argue that knowledge of the likelihood of a criminal act, alone, gives rise to a duty to safeguard others from the risk of harm. Appellants Br. on Appeal at 16-17. The legal duty to act for the protection of others requires more than knowledge of a risk of harm:

> The fact that the actor realizes or should realize that action on his part is necessary for another's aid or protection does not of itself impose upon him a duty to take such action.

Restatement (Second) of Torts § 314 (1965) (emphasis added). Section 302B does not state a rule to the contrary. That section defines what constitutes a negligent act or omission where third party conduct is concerned. As the comments to the section explain, generally the actor may proceed on the basis that third persons will not act to cause harm to others, particularly where intentional criminal conduct is involved. Id. § 302B, cmt. d.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

However, certain situations may give rise to a duty to guard against such *739 conduct: where a special responsibility toward the one suffering the harm gives rise to such a duty, or "where the actor's own affirmative act has created or exposed the other to a recognizable high degree of risk of harm through such misconduct, which a reasonable [person] would take into account." Id. cmt. e. Plaintiffs urge that the situation in this case is described in cmt. e, para. D which states that a duty may exist "[w]here the actor has brought into contact or association with the other a person whom the actor knows or should know to be peculiarly likely to commit intentional misconduct, under such circumstances which afford a peculiar opportunity or temptation for such misconduct." Id. cmt. e, para. D.

A duty as described in cmt. e, para. D might be found in this case if, for example, defendants knew Wilson was likely to molest children, yet allowed him association with children during church activities under circumstances where a peculiar temptation or opportunity for molestation existed. However, the duty claimed here is not for such periods. Plaintiffs were not molested during any church activities or on church premises. Defendants did not bring Wilson and plaintiffs into contact or association under the circumstances when the misconduct occurred - they did not bring Wilson and plaintiffs together at Wilson's home. There is no allegation or evidence in the record that defendants recommended Wilson or his wife as child care providers, or that they had anything to do with the child care arrangements. [FN3]

> FN3. This case is thus unlike Golden Spread Council, Inc. v. Akins, 926 S.W.2d 287 (Tex.1996), where the court held that under cmt. e, para. D, the Golden Spread Council of the Boy Scouts of America had a duty not to recommend an individual as a scoutmaster if the council knew or should have known that the individual was peculiarly likely to molest boys. Because defendants in this case made no comparable recommendation, reliance upon that case by plaintiffs and the Court of Appeals is misplaced.

> FN4. The majority's reliance on Marquay v. Eno, 139 N.H. 708, 662 A.2d 272 (1995) is misplaced since liability there concerned an employer- employee relationship, while here the majority never adequately addresses the relationship between defendants and Wilson.

However, this court has held that "exceptional circumstances" are required before imposition of the duty described in cmt. e, para. D to protect others from third party criminal conduct. Hutchins v. 1001 Fourth Ave. Assocs., 116 Wash.2d 217, 230, 802 P.2d 1360 (1991). Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 302B cmt. e, para. D refers to bringing about an association between the third party causing the harm and the victim under circumstances affording a "peculiar opportunity or temptation for ... misconduct." (Emphasis added). I simply cannot agree that the voluntary association of individuals in a religious organization gives rise to a duty on the part of the church concerning private nonchurch-related child care arrangements between members of the congregation. These are not the "exceptional circumstances" envisioned by our case law nor has the church or its leaders brought about an association under the circumstances where the misconduct occurs, as envisioned by the Restatement.

Rather than limiting application of § 302B cmt. e, para. D to "exceptional circumstances," the majority's analysis is far reaching, encompassing a variety of organizations where families associate, such as day care centers, youth groups, civic organizations, sports clubs and activities, music groups, parent-teacher associations and volunteer activities in public and private schools. Virtually any organization providing services or activities for children falls under the majority's analysis because in any such organization a parent might come to trust those involved in the activity, even those in voluntary capacities. I do not believe that an organization extending membership to families *741 with children should become the guarantor of the other members' private conduct. [FN5]

FN5. This is of particular concern in the case of religious organizations, many of which welcome all, even the flawed.

Sexual abuse of children is a tragedy. Hard questions are presented because the court is faced with strong public policy favoring the protection of children from sexual abuse. At the same time, payment for that harm is sought not from the tortfeasor, but from others. Ultimately, the court is determining potential liability of a third party for another person's intentional criminal conduct. As difficult as it may be to conclude that a cause of action should not exist, there is no principled basis for finding liability on the part of defendants in this case.

I agree with the trial court and would hold that as a matter of law defendants had no duty to control Wilson or to protect plaintiffs from his criminal conduct at his home under the facts asserted by plaintiffs.

Finally, although I otherwise generally agree with the majority, I think it places too much reliance on DeYoung v. Providence Med. Ctr., 136 Wash.2d 136, 960 P.2d 919 (1998) in analyzing RCW 4.16.340. The meaning of the statute was not at issue in that case, as the majority itself acknowledges. Majority at 267.

DURHAM, J. (dissenting).

In a misguided attempt to afford relief to the injured Plaintiffs in this case, the majority misconstrues the childhood sexual abuse statute and eviscerates statute of repose protections for religious, community and other organizations. The majority's rule tolls the statute of limitation under RCW 4.16.340 not just for suits against the abuser, but for suits against an organization that negligently failed to prevent the abuse. It further tolls the statute of limitation for claims against a 284 church brought by the parents of a victim, even if the parents were aware of the abuse at the time it occurred. The majority's approach exposes organizations to a perpetual *742 threat of liability for negligent omissions that occurred ten, twenty or thirty years ago. Because this broad reading is contrary to the clear statutory language, I respectfully dissent.

I

Abusive relationships, by their very nature, often depend on concealment, emotional blackmail, threats, and an imbalance of power. See Note, The Discovery Rule: Allowing Adult Survivors of Childhood Sexual Abuse the Opportunity for Redress, 61 Brook. L.Rev. 199, 205-07 (1995). Even if victims recognize that they have been abused, the unique character of the relationship between the victim and the abuser may prevent victims from connecting the abuse to the resulting emotional harm within the statute of limitation. In enacting RCW 4.16.340, the Washington Legislature recognized that the abuser/victim relationship often prevents a victim from acknowledging the abuse or making a connection between the abuse and resulting injuries. See Laws of 1991, ch. 212 (finding that victims may be unable to understand or make the connection between the abuse and the emotional damage it causes).

RCW 4.16.340 extends the statute of limitation, thereby allowing victims of childhood sexual abuse to sue their abusers within three years of the discovery of an injury caused by the abuse, even if that discovery should occur decades later. It provides, in part:

(1) All claims or causes of action based on intentional conduct brought by any person for recovery of damages for injury suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse shall be commenced within the later of the following periods:
(a) Within three years of the act alleged to have caused the injury or condition;
(b) Within three years of the time the victim discovered or reasonably should have discovered that the injury or condition was caused by said act; or
*743 ....

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

(5) As used in this section, "childhood sexual abuse" means any act committed by the defendant against a complainant who was less than eighteen years of age at the time of the act and which act would have been a violation of chapter 9A.44 RCW or RCW 9.68A040 or prior laws of similar effect at the time the act was committed.

RCW 4.16.340 (emphasis added).

Recognizing both the unambiguous statutory language and the underlying rationale for the statute, the Courts of Appeals have repeatedly and consistently held that RCW 4.16.340 covers only those suits brought by the victim against an abuser. See Jamerson v. Vandiver, 85 Wash.App. 564, 934 P.2d 1199, review denied, 133 Wash.2d 1005, 943 P.2d 663 (1997); Funkhouser v. Wilson, 89 Wash.App. 644, 950 P.2d 501 (1998); E.R.B. v. Church of God, 89 Wash.App. 670, 950 P.2d 29 (1998); C.J.C. v. Corporation of the Catholic Bishop, 88 Wash.App. 70, 943 P.2d 1150 (1997).

Nonetheless, the majority overturns this precedent and applies the statute to a claim brought by the parents of a victim against a religious organization that employed the abuser. To support its position, the majority argues that the phrase "based on intentional conduct" in subsection (1) was inserted by the Legislature in order to extend the statute's coverage to claims sounding in negligence. According to the majority, "based on" means that the intentional conduct serves as a "foundation" for the lawsuit. Under the majority's interpretation, a negligence claim is based on intentional conduct where the intentional conduct serves as the "gravamen" of the complaint. Majority at 267.

After concluding that the statute applies to negligence claims, the majority uses this conclusion to extend the statute's application to suits against non- abusers. Although subsection (5) defines childhood sexual abuse as "any act committed by the defendant against a complainant," the majority overlooks this language in order to "harmonize" subsection 285 (5) with subsection (1). Majority at 269. The majority argues that because negligence claims are allowed under subsection (1), the statute must apply to suits against non- abusers who negligently failed to prevent the abuse. This is true because the claims against an abuser would necessarily be grounded only on the abuser's intentional conduct. The majority thus concludes that the limitations of *744 subsection (5) do not affect the scope of the statute. However, disregarding language in a section of a statute in order to reconcile it with the previous analysis of a different section does not "harmonize" the two sections.

In fact, it is only when all of the sections of the statute are read in conjunction that we gain a complete picture of RCW 4.16.340. When one replaces the term "childhood sexual abuse" in subsection (1) with its definition in subsection (5), the statute would read as follows: "All claims or causes of action based on intentional conduct brought by any person for recovery of damages for injury suffered as a result of" "any act committed by the defendant against a complainant who was less than eighteen years of age at the time of the act and which act would have been a violation of chapter 9A.44 RCW." RCW 4.16.340(1), RCW 4.16.340(5).

Applying the statutory definition of "childhood sexual abuse" unambiguously shows that the statute covers only suits based on unlawful abuse perpetrated by the defendant. The plain language of the statute states that it encompasses "claims ... brought ... for injury suffered as a result of ... [a sex offense] committed by the defendant against a complainant." RCW 4.16.340(1), (5). Nothing in the statute's language indicates that it extends to suits brought against a defendant whose agent committed the unlawful acts. Similarly, the plain language of the statute precludes the inference that the statute applies to suits brought by the parents of the victim. For a cause of action to be brought under RCW 4.16.340, the defendant of the lawsuit must have abused the complainant.

Contrary to the majority's strained interpretation, the purpose of the "based on" language is to ensure that the *745 statute of limitation will be tolled for all causes of action brought by the victim against the abuser for the abuser's intentional conduct. The Legislature recognized that a victim may bring several different types of claims against her abuser, i.e., assault, battery, intentional infliction of emotional distress). The statutory language operates to extend coverage to all of these varied claims.

Legislative history bolsters this reading. The Legislature repeatedly describes RCW 4.16.340 as tolling the statute of limitation for suits brought against the abuser. The Final Bill Report, which tallies votes and summarizes the Bill as enacted into law states that:

> The statute of limitations is changed to allow victims of childhood sexual abuse an additional three years from the date of discovery of the abuse to bring an action for civil damages against the abuser for intentional sexual abuse.

Final Legislative Report, 50th Legis., Reg. Sess. 146 (Wash.1988) (emphasis added). The exact same language is used in the Senate Bill Report 6305, which states that the act tolls the statute of limitation for suits "against the abuser." Senate Comm. On Law and Justice, S.B. Rep. 6305, at 1 (emphasis added). Likewise, the House Bill Report states that:

> A cause of action for intentional childhood sexual abuse must be commenced within three years....

H.B. Rep. ESSB 6305, at 2 (1988). Where a cause of action is for intentional abuse as described in the House Bill Report, the intentional abuse must serve as an element of the claim. Finally, the "Fact Sheet on Legislation" that was circulated with the bill explains:

> No public benefit supports a rule that shields childhood sexual abusers from the consequences of their conduct.... The hope is that this legislation, along with providing victims of childhood sexual abuse with a remedy, will have a chilling effect on potential abusers.

Bellingham Police Dep't,* 119 Wash.2d 178, 185, 829 P.2d 1061 (1992) (referring to a quotation from the Final Legislative Report as "the express legislative intent" of the act). See also Buchanan v. Simplot Feeders Ltd. Partnership, 134 Wash.2d 673, 680, 952 P.2d 610 (1998); Noble Manor Co. v. Pierce County, 133 Wash.2d 269, 277-78, 943 P.2d 1378 (1997); Brown v. City of Yakima, 116 Wash.2d 556, 562, 807 P.2d 353 (1991).

The legislative intent is clear and comports with the explicit statutory language. RCW 4.16.340(5) defines childhood sexual abuse as an act "committed by the defendant against a complainant" because the Legislature intended to limit the act's scope to suits brought by a victim against the abuser.

Despite this clear statement of intent, the majority inexplicably finds this legislative history to be "inconclusive." Majority at 269 n. 6. As support for this assertion, it points to a report by the Northwest Women's Law Center recommending that the Act apply "to civil suits alleging negligent and/or intentional torts." See "Proposed Legislation Regarding the Statute of Limitations for Civil Suits Brought by Adult Survivors of Incest or Childhood Sexual Abuse," S.B. Rep. 6305 (1988). However, an interest group's recommendation regarding how the final bill should read does not render an uncontroverted statement of legislative intent inconclusive.

Other states have interpreted similarly worded statutes as allowing only claims against the abuser. Rhode Island's *747 statute is identical to ours in all relevant respects. It tolls the statute of limitation for "[a]ll claims or causes of action based on intentional conduct ..." and defines sexual abuse as any illegal sexual act "committed by the defendant against a complainant." R.I. Gen. Laws § 9-1-51(a),(e) (1997). In Kelly v. Marcantonio, 678 A.2d 873, 875-76 (R.I.1996), a woman who was abused by her father brought a negligence claim against her mother for failing to prevent the abuse. The Rhode Island Supreme Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim, limiting the application of the statute to causes of action against the perpetrator of the abuse. It held that the statute, by definition, applies only where the defendant of the tort suit committed the sex offense. Kelly, 678 A.2d at 877.

Likewise, California has held that an analogous law tolls the statute of limitation for only those claims brought against the abuser. In Debbie Reynolds Prof'l Rehearsal Studios v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.App.4th 222, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 514, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 514 (1994), the court held that the California Civil Proceeding Code's definition of childhood sexual abuse as "any act committed by a defendant against a plaintiff" clearly limits application of the statute to suits brought by the victim against her abuser. Reynolds, 25 Cal.App.4th at 231, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 514.

The majority declines to adopt the reasoning of these courts and instead follows the analysis of the Montana Supreme Court. In Werre v. David, 275 Mont. 376, 913 P.2d 625 (1996), the Montana Supreme Court allowed a negligence claim against the employer of an abuser to be brought under Montana's statute tolling the limitation period for claims relating to childhood sexual abuse. However, Montana should not serve as a role model for this court's interpretation of RCW 4.16.340 because the Montana law defines childhood sexual abuse differently. Montana's statute defines childhood sexual abuse as "any act committed against a plaintiff." Mont.Code Ann. § 27-2- 216(3) (1997). In contrast, the Rhode Island and California cases are instructive because, like Washington, Rhode Island and 748 California define childhood sexual abuse as any act committed by the defendant against the complainant. The very language that is dispositive in determining the scope of RCW 4.16.340 is missing from the Montana statute.

RCW 4.16.340 allows victims of abuse to sue their abusers within three years of the discovery of the injury, even if that discovery *287 is made decades after the illegal acts occurred. The statute's tolling provision is expansive, but is warranted given the unique nature of the abuser/victim relationship, and the emotional trauma the abuse inflicts. However, the Legislature never intended to extend the statute to claims brought by the parents of the victim against an organization for its negligent failure to prevent the abuse. Incorporating the statutory definition of childhood sexual abuse into subsection (1) shows that the statute applies only to "claims ... brought ... for injury suffered as a result of ... [a sex offense] committed by the defendant against a complainant." RCW 4.16.340(1), (5). Legislative history supports this plain language by specifying that the act tolls the statute of limitation in suits "against the abuser." This reading is also consistent with other states' interpretation of analogous statutory language. The majority's decision to apply the tolling provisions of RCW 4.16.340 to suits against non-abusers cannot be reconciled with the Legislature's unequivocal mandate.

Given the fact that RCW 4.16.340 does not toll the statute of limitation, the court must determine whether the common law discovery rule applies to toll the statute of limitation and allow the Plaintiffs' claims. I believe that the discovery rule does not apply. Accordingly, the Plaintiffs' claims are time barred.

Generally, in suits for negligent injury, the cause of action accrues at the time the act or omission occurs. In re Estates of Hibbard, 118 Wash.2d 737, 744-45, 826 P.2d 690 (1992). This rule reflects a balancing of the remedial goals of the justice system with the "recognition that compelling 749 one to answer a stale claim is in itself a substantial wrong." Id. at 745, 826 P.2d 690. However, where a plaintiff lacks the means or ability to ascertain that a wrong has been committed, Washington courts have created an exception known as the common law discovery rule. Metropolitan Servs., Inc. v. City of Spokane, 32 Wash.App. 714, 721, 649 P.2d 642, review denied, 98 Wash.2d 1008 (1982). The discovery rule tolls the statute of limitation until the time the plaintiff knew, or in the exercise of due diligence should have known, of the injury that the negligence has caused. Hibbard, 118 Wash.2d at 752, 826 P.2d 690. Because the rule compels a defendant to answer stale claims, this court has applied it only in limited circumstances in which the plaintiff lacked the means to ascertain that a wrong had been committed. This court has previously applied the rule in cases of professional malpractice, occupational diseases and fraudulent concealment. Bowles v. Department of Retirement Sys., 121 Wash.2d 52, 80, 847 P.2d 440 (1993).

Whether or not to extend the discovery rule to the circumstances of any case is fundamentally a "judicial policy determination." Gazija v. Nicholas Jerns Co., 86 Wash.2d 215, 221, 543 P.2d 338 (1975). This court decided in Tyson v. Tyson, 107 Wash.2d 72, 727 P.2d 226 (1986) that the injustice of forcing defendants to face stale claims outweighed the plaintiffs' right to have the statute of limitation tolled until discovery of the injury. Tyson rejected the application of the common law discovery rule in childhood sexual abuse cases, stating that:

> If we applied the discovery rule to such actions, the statute of limitations would be effectively > eliminated and its purpose ignored. A person would have an unlimited time to bring an action, while the facts became increasingly difficult to determine. The potential for spurious claims would be great and the probability of the court's determining the truth would be unreasonably low.

107 Wash.2d at 79, 727 P.2d 226. Tyson thus mandated that claims by victims of sexual assault must be brought within the applicable statute of limitation.

*750 RCW 4.16.340 specifically overruled Tyson regarding suits between a victim and an abuser by tolling the statute of limitation until the victim discovers an injury, regardless of when the abuse occurred. As explained above, RCW 4.16.340 does not encompass negligence claims brought by the parents of a victim against the abuser's employer. We must assume by this exclusion that the Legislature intended to change the statute of limitation only as it applies to 288 claims brought for intentional sexual abuse. See, e.g., State ex rel. Port of Seattle v. Department of Pub. Serv., 1 Wash.2d 102, 112, 95 P.2d 1007 (1939) ("expressio unius est esclusio alterius "--the mention of one thing implies the exclusion of another thing). See also State v. Williams, 94 Wash.2d 531, 537, 617 P.2d 1012 (1980) (when a statute specifically designates the things or classes of things upon which it operates, it is inferred that the Legislature intended to exclude any omitted matters). Now the Plaintiffs ask this court, as a matter of judicial policy, to augment the scope of RCW 4.16.340 by extending the common law discovery rule to negligence suits against the abuser's employer.

Given the Legislature's decision not to extend the statute of limitation for negligence suits, there is no justification for this court to independently adopt what the Legislature has rejected. "[I]t is in areas of legislative inactivity that the judiciary may safely perform a creative role." Burkhart v. Harrod, 110 Wash.2d 381, 389, 755 P.2d 759 (1988) (quoting Cornelius J. Peck, Comments on Judicial Creativity, 69 Iowa L.Rev. 1, 9 (1983-84)). In Burkhart, the plaintiff asked this court to adopt a rule of social host liability. We declined to do so, explaining that the Legislature had already acted in the area by imposing penalties on those who sell alcohol to intoxicated persons. The Legislature did not impose similar penalties on those who give alcohol away, and this distinction implied that the Legislature intended to treat commercial hosts differently than social hosts. Burkhart, 110 Wash.2d at 388, 755 P.2d 759. Because the Legislature is in a superior position to weigh competing societal interests, we should defer when the Legislature *751 takes a constructive role in shaping tort law. Burkhart, 110 Wash.2d at 385, 755 P.2d 759.

In regard to the statute of limitation in childhood sexual abuse cases, the Legislature has evinced its commitment to shaping policy by enacting RCW 4.16.340 and repeatedly amending it to define its scope. See Laws of 1989, ch. 317 § 1 (clarifying the accrual provision for a person under the age of 18); Laws of 1991, ch. 212, § 1 (explaining that the discovery of less serious injuries does not commence the period of limitations). This court should not intrude on the Legislature's decision to extend the statute of limitation in suits against the abuser, but not in suits against negligent entities. To act where the Legislature has chosen not to act by applying the discovery rule to negligence suits would usurp legislative policy decisions through judicial activism.

Even without the Legislature's actions in this area, extending the common law discovery rule to the Plaintiffs' claims would be unwise. The harm caused by indefinitely extending the statute of limitation for suits against organizations that negligently fail to prevent abuse outweighs the harm to the individual plaintiff who may be precluded from bringing a claim. Without the discovery rule, a plaintiff must bring a negligence claim within three years of the sexual abuse, or within three years of the plaintiff's 18th birthday. If a plaintiff exceeds this time, a claim against the organization will be lost. However, a plaintiff will retain a cause of action against an abuser under RCW 4.16.340.

Any harm to a plaintiff who loses a cause of action by failing to bring it within the statute of limitation is outweighed by the harm to the defendants faced with stale claims. Defendants' ability to present a meaningful defense is compromised over time. Important evidence may be lost or forgotten. In intentional tort cases against an abuser, the issue at trial will be whether the abuse occurred. Testimony of the victim and family members regarding this traumatic event will play a crucial role in determining the facts. In contrast, negligence suits against an organization *752 rest on who in management knew about the abuser's propensity, when they knew it, and what they could reasonably have done to prevent the abuse from occurring. Evidence (testimonial or documentary) of the mental state of the managers of an organization is particularly susceptible to loss and mistake with the passage of time. Accordingly, requiring defendants to answer allegations of negligence so long after it occurred may limit their opportunity to produce exculpatory evidence. For example, just in the cases before us, at least 289 one witness has died, Diocese files are missing and several other witnesses' memories have faded.

Furthermore, allowing stale claims against religious and community groups would have serious social repercussions. Employers and other organizations will face a perpetual threat of liability for negligent omissions that occurred decades earlier. Churches, synagogues, boy and girl scouts, youth sports leagues, and other groups will all be hindered in their financial planning and insurance decisions for the future, because they will never be free from the threat of suit.

Extending the common law discovery rule to these cases would result in profound unfairness to the defendants. This court should be loathe to impinge on the legislative decision to extend the statute of limitation only in claims brought by a victim against her abuser. This is true especially in light of the negative societal impact of applying the common law discovery rule to negligence claims against organizations that fail to prevent abuse.

CONCLUSION

Contrary to the majority, the childhood sexual abuse statute does not provide the Plaintiffs in this case with a means to end run the statute of limitation. By its plain language, RCW 4.16.340 does not apply to claims brought against the employer of the abuser. Further, in light of both Washington case law and RCW 4.16.340, we should decline to extend the common law discovery rule to childhood sexual abuse *753 suits alleging negligence. The majority's holding not only undermines the Legislature's efforts to shape the law in this area, but also exposes religious and community groups to liability and accusations against which they will have no meaningful opportunity to defend. Because I believe the Plaintiffs' claims against the churches were time barred under the statute of limitation, I respectfully dissent. [FN1]

FN1. I dissent only as to the application of RCW 4.16.340 and the common law discovery rule to negligence claims against non-perpetrators. Although I would not reach the issue, I agree with the majority's analysis regarding the existence of a duty in Funkhouser v. Wilson.

I concur in Justice Durham's dissent on the statute of limitation issue and concur in Justice Madsen's dissent on the merits.

One who in soliciting contributions from two Catholics for publication of religious pamphlets, played a phonograph record which attacked the Catholic Church and religion, but who though he offended the listeners and aroused their animosity was guilty of no assault or threatening of bodily harm, or truculent bearing, or intentional discourtesy, or personal abuse, was not, considered in light of constitutional guaranties, liable to conviction of common law offense of "breach of the peace". Newton Cantwell and his two sons, Jesse and Russell, members of a group known as Jehovah's witnesses, and claiming to be ordained ministers, were arrested in New Haven, Connecticut, and each was charged by information in five counts, with statutory and common law offenses. After trial in the Court of Common Pleas of New Haven County each of them was convicted on the third count, which charged a violation of s 6294 of the General Statutes of *902 Connecticut, [FN1] and on the fifth count, which charged commission of the common law offense of inciting a breach of the peace. On appeal to the Supreme Court the conviction of all three on the third count was affirmed. The conviction of Jesse Cantwell, on the fifth count, was also affirmed, but the conviction of Newton and Russell on that count was reversed and a new trial ordered as to them. [FN2] of error in the State Supreme Court, the appellants pressed the contention that the statute under which the third count was drawn was offensive to the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment because, on its face and as construed and applied, it denied them freedom of speech and prohibited their free exercise of religion. In like manner *301 they made the point that they could not be found guilty on the fifth count, without violation of the Amendment.

We have jurisdiction on appeal from the judgments on the third count, as there was drawn in question the validity of a state statute under the federal Constitution, and the decision was in favor of validity. Since the conviction on the fifth count was not based upon a statute, but presents a substantial question under the federal Constitution, we granted the writ of certiorari in respect of it.

The facts adduced to sustain the convictions on the third count follow. On the day of their arrest the appellants were engaged in going singly from house to house on Cassius Street in New Haven. They were individually equipped with a bag containing books and pamphlets on religious subjects, a portable phonograph and a set of records, each of which, when played, introduced, and was a description of, one of the books. Each appellant asked the person who responded to his call for permission to play one of the records. If permission was granted he asked the person to buy the book described and, upon refusal, he solicited such contribution towards the publication of the pamphlets as the listener was willing to make. If a contribution was received a pamphlet was delivered upon condition that it would be read.

Cassius Street is in a thickly populated neighborhood, where about ninety per cent of the residents are Roman Catholics. A phonograph record, describing a book entitled 'Enemies', included an attack on the Catholic religion. None of the persons interviewed were members of Jehovah's witnesses.

The statute under which the appellants were charged provides:

'No person shall solicit money, services, subscriptions or any valuable thing for any alleged religious, charitable *302 or philanthropic cause, from other than a member of the organization for whose benefit such person is soliciting or within the county in which such person or organization is located unless such cause shall have been approved by the secretary of the public welfare council. Upon application of any person in behalf of such cause, the secretary shall determine whether such cause is a religious one or is a bona fide object of charity or philanthropy and conforms to reasonable standards of efficiency and integrity, and, if he shall so find, shall approve the same and issue to the authority in charge a certificate to that effect. Such certificate may be revoked at any time. Any person violating any provision of this section shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than thirty days or both.'

The appellants claimed that their activities were not within the statute but consisted only of distribution of books, pamphlets, and periodicals. The State Supreme Court construed the finding of the trial court to be that 'in addition to the sale of the books and the distribution of the pamphlets the defendants were also soliciting contributions or donations of money for an alleged religious cause, and thereby came within the purview of the statute.' (126 Conn. 1, 8 A.2d 535.) It overruled the contention that the Act, as applied to the appellants, offends the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, because 903 it abridges or denies religious freedom and liberty of speech and press. The court stated that it was the solicitation that brought the appellants within the sweep of the Act and not their other activities in the dissemination of literature. It declared the legislation constitutional as an effort by the State to protect the public against fraud and imposition in the solicitation of funds for what purported to be religious, charitable, or philanthropic causes.

The facts which were held to support the conviction of Jesse Cantwell on the fifth count were that he stopped *303 two men in the street, asked, and received, permission to play a phonograph record, and played the record 'Enemies', which attacked the religion and church of the two men, who were Catholics. Both were incensed by the contents of the record and were tempted to strike Cantwell unless he went away. On being told to be on his way he left their presence. There was no evidence that he was personally offensive or entered into any argument with those he interviewed.

The court held that the charge was not assault or breach of the peace or threats on Cantwell's part, but invoking or inciting others to breach of the peace, and that the facts supported the conviction of that offense.

[1][2][3][4][5][6][7][8] First. We hold that the statute, as construed and applied to the appellants, deprives them of their liberty without due process of law in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment. The fundamental concept of liberty embodied in that Amendment embraces the liberties guaranteed by the First Amendment. [FN3] The First Amendment declares that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The Fourteenth Amendment has rendered the legislatures of the states as incompetent as Congress to enact such laws. The constitutional inhibition of legislation on the subject of religion has a double aspect. On the one hand, it forestalls compulsion by law of the acceptance of any creed or the practice of any form of worship. Freedom of conscience and freedom to adhere to such religious organization or form of worship as the individual may choose cannot be restricted by law. On the other hand, it safeguards the free exercise of the chosen form of religion. Thus the Amendment embraces two concepts,--freedom to believe and freedom to act. The first is absolute but, in the nature of things, the *304 second cannot be. Conduct remains subject to regulation for the protection of society. [FN4] The freedom to act must have appropriate definition to preserve the enforcement of that protection. In every case the power to regulate must be so exercised as not, in attaining a permissible end, unduly to infringe the protected freedom. No one would contest the proposition that a state may not, be statute, wholly deny the right to preach or to disseminate religious views. Plainly such a previous and absolute restraint would violate the terms of the guarantee. [FN5] It is equally clear that a state may by general and non- discriminatory legislation regulate the times, the places, and the manner of soliciting upon its streets, and of holding meetings thereon; and may in other respects safeguard the peace, good order and comfort of the community, without unconstitutionally invading the liberties protected by the Fourteenth Amendment. The appellants are right in their insistence that the Act in question is not such a regulation. If a certificate is procured, solicitation is permitted without restraint but, in the absence of a certificate, solicitation is altogether prohibited.

FN5 Compare Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 713, 51 S.Ct. 625, 630, 75 L.Ed. 1357.

The appellants urge that to require them to obtain a certificate as a condition of soliciting support for their views amounts to a prior restraint on the exercise of their religion within the meaning of the Constitution. The State insists that the Act, as construed by the Supreme Court of Connecticut, imposes no previous restraint upon the dissemination of religious views or teaching but merely safeguards against the perpetration of frauds under the cloak of 904 religion. Conceding that this is so, the question remains whether the method adopted by Connecticut to *305 that end transgresses the liberty safeguarded by the Constitution.

[9] The general regulation, in the public interest, of solicitation, which does not involve any religious test and does not unreasonably obstruct or delay the collection of funds, is not open to any constitutional objection, even though the collection be for a religious purpose. Such regulation would not constitute a prohibited previous restraint on the free exercise of religion or interpose an inadmissible obstacle to its exercise.

[10] It will be noted, However, that the Act requires an application to the secretary of the public welfare council of the State; that he is empowered to determine whether the cause is a religious one, and that the issue of a certificate depends upon his affirmative action. If he finds that the cause is not that of religion, to solicit for it becomes a crime. He is not to issue a certificate as a matter of course. His decision to issue or refuse it involves appraisal of facts, the exercise of judgment, and the formation of an opinion. He is authorized to withhold his approval if he determines that the cause is not a religious one. Such a censorship of religion as the means of determining its right to survive is a denial of liberty protected by the First Amendment and included in the liberty which is within the protection of the Fourteenth.

[11][12] The State asserts that if the licensing officer acts arbitrarily, capriciously, or corruptly, his action is subject to judicial correction. Counsel refer to the rule prevailing in Connecticut that the decision of a commission or an administrative official will be reviewed upon a claim that 'it works material damage to individual or corporate rights, or invades or threatens such rights, or is so unreasonable as to justify judicial intervention, or is not consonant with justice, or that a legal duty has not *306 been performed.' [FN6] It is suggested that the statute is to be read as requiring the officer to issue a certificate unless the cause in question is clearly not a religious one; and that if he violates his duty his action will be corrected by a court.

FN6 Woodmont Ass'n v. Milford, 85 Conn. 517, 522, 84 A. 307, 310; see also Connecticut Co. v. Norwalk, 89 Conn. 528, 531, 94 A. 992.

To this suggestion there are several sufficient answers. The line between a discretionary and a ministerial act is not always easy to mark and the statute has not been construed by the State court to impose a mere ministerial duty on the secretary of the welfare council. Upon his decision as to the nature of the cause, the right to solicit depends. Moreover, the availability of a judicial remedy for abuses in the system of licensing still leaves that system one of previous restraint which, in the field of free speech and press, we have held inadmissible. A statute authorizing previous restraint upon the exercise of the guaranteed freedom by judicial decision after trial is as obnoxious to the Constitution as one providing for like restraint by administrative action. [FN7]

FN7 Near v. Minnesota, 283 U.S. 697, 51 S.Ct. 625, 75 L.Ed. 1357.

[13] Nothing we have said is intended even remotely to imply that, under the cloak of religion, persons may, with impunity, commit frauds upon the public. Certainly penal laws are available to punish such conduct. Even the exercise of religion may be at some slight inconvenience in order that the state may protect its citizens from injury. Without doubt a state may protect its citizens from fraudulent solicitation by requiring a stranger in the community, before permitting him publicly to solicit funds for any purpose, to establish his identity and his authority to act for the cause which he purports to represent. [FN8] The state is likewise free to regulate the time *307 and manner of solicitation generally, in the interest of public safety, peace, comfort or convenience. But to condition the solicitation of aid for the perpetuation of religious views or systems upon a license, the grant of which rests in the exercise of a determination 905 by state authority as to what is a religious cause, is to lay a forbidden burden upon the exercise of liberty protected by the Constitution.

[14][15] Second. We hold that, in the circumstances disclosed, the conviction of Jesse Cantwell on the fifth count must be set aside. Decision as to the lawfulness of the conviction demands the weighing of two conflicting interests. The fundamental law declares the interest of the United States that the free exercise of religion be not prohibited and that freedom to communicate information and opinion be not abridged. The state of Connecticut has an obvious interest in the preservation and protection of peace and good order within her borders. We must determine whether the alleged protection of the State's interest, means to which end would, in the absence of limitation by the federal Constitution, lie wholly within the State's discretion, has been pressed, in this instance, to a point where it has come into fatal collision with the overriding interest protected by the federal compact.

Conviction on the fifth count was not pursuant to a statute evincing a legislative judgment that street discussion of religious affairs, because of its tendency to provoke disorder, should be regulated, or a judgment that the playing of a phonograph on the streets should in the interest of comfort or privacy be limited or prevented. Violation of an Act exhibiting such a legislative judgment and narrowly drawn to prevent the supposed evil, would pose a question differing from that we must here answer. [FN9] Such a declaration of the State's policy 308 would weigh heavily in any challenge of the law as infringing constitutional limitations. Here, however, the judgment is based on a common law concept of the most general and undefined nature. The court below has held that the petitioner's conduct constituted the commission of an offense under the State law, and we accept its decision as binding upon us to that extent.

> FN9 Compare Gitlow v. New York, 268 U.S. 652, 670, 671, 45 S.Ct. 625, 631, 69 L.Ed. 1138; Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 742--746, 84 L.Ed. ---.

The offense known as breach of the peace embraces a great variety of conduct destroying or menacing public order and tranquility. It includes not only violent acts but acts and words likely to produce violence in others. No one would have the hardihood to suggest that the principle of freedom of speech sanctions incitement to riot or that religious liberty connotes the privilege to exhort others to physical attack upon those belonging to another sect. When clear and present danger of riot, disorder, interference with traffic upon the public streets, or other immediate threat to public safety, peace, or order, appears, the power of the state to prevent or punish is obvious. Equally obvious is it that a state may not unduly suppress free communication of views, religious or other, under the guise of conserving desirable conditions. Here we have a situation analogous to a conviction under a statute sweeping in a great variety of conduct under a general and indefinite characterization, and leaving to the executive and judicial branches too wide a discretion in its application.

Having these considerations in mind, we note that Jesse Cantwell, on April 26, 1938, was upon a public street, where he had a right to be, and where he had a right peacefully to impart his views to others. There is no showing that his deportment was noisy, truculent, overbearing or offensive. He requested of two pedestrians permission to play to them a phonograph record. The permission was granted. It is not claimed that he 309 intended to insult or affront the hearers by playing the record. It is plain that he wished only to interest them in his propaganda. The sound of the phonograph is not shown to have disturbed residents of the street, to have drawn a crowd, or to have impeded traffic. Thus far he had invaded no right or interest of the public or of the men accosted.

The record played by Cantwell embodies a general attack on all organized religious systems as instruments of Satan and injurious to man; it then singles out the Roman Catholic Church for strictures couched in terms which naturally would offend not only persons of that persuasion, *906 but all others who respect the honestly held religious faith of their fellows. The hearers were in fact highly offended. One of them said he felt like hitting Cantwell and the other that he was tempted to throw Cantwell off the street. The one who testified he felt like hitting Cantwell said, in answer to the question 'Did you do anything else or have any other reaction?' 'No, sir, because he said he would take the victrola and he went.' The other witness testified that he told Cantwell he had better get off the street before something happened to him and that was the end of the matter as Cantwell picked up his books and walked up the street.

[16] Cantwell's conduct, in the view of the court below, considered apart from the effect of his communication upon his hearers, did not amount to a breach of the peace. One may, however, be guilty of the offense if he commit acts or make statements likely to provoke violence and disturbance of good order, even though no such eventuality be intended. Decisions to this effect are many, but examination discloses that, in practically all, the provocative language which was held to amount to a breach of the peace consisted of profane, indecent, or abusive remarks directed to the person of the hearer. Resort to epithets or 310 personal abuse is not in any proper sense communication of information or opinion safeguarded by the Constitution, and its punishment as a criminal act would raise no question under that instrument.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

[17] We find in the instant case no assault or threatening of bodily harm, no truculent bearing, no intentional discourtesy, no personal abuse. On the contrary, we find only an effort to persuade a willing listener to buy a book or to contribute money in the interest of what Cantwell, however misguided others may think him, conceived to be true religion.

In the realm of religious faith, and in that of political belief, sharp differences arise. In both fields the tenets of one man may seem the rankest error to his neighbor. To persuade others to his own point of view, the pleader, as we know, at times, resorts to exaggeration, to vilification of men who have been, or are, prominent in church or state, and even to false statement. But the people of this nation have ordained in the light of history, that, in spite of the probability of excesses and abuses, these liberties are, in the long view, essential to enlightened opinion and right conduct on the part of the citizens of a democracy.

The essential characteristic of these liberties is, that under their shield many types of life, character, opinion and belief can develop unmolested and unobstructed. Nowhere is this shield more necessary than in our own country for a people composed of many races and of many creeds. There are limits to the exercise of these liberties. The danger in these times from the coercive activities of those who in the delusion of racial or religious conceit would incite violence and breaches of the peace in order to deprive others of their equal right to the exercise of their liberties, is emphasized by events familiar to all. These and other transgressions of those limits the states appropriately may punish.

*311 Although the contents of the record not unnaturally aroused animosity, we think that, in the absence of a statute narrowly drawn to define and punish specific conduct as constituting a clear and present danger to a substantial interest of the State, the petitioner's communication, considered in the light of the constitutional guarantees, raised no such clear and present menace to public peace and order as to render him liable to conviction of the common law offense in question. [FN10]

FN10 Compare Schenck v. United States, 249 U.S. 47, 52, 39 S.Ct. 247, 249, 63 L.Ed. 470; Herndon v. Lowry, 301 U.S. 242, 256, 57 S.Ct. 732, 738, 81 L.Ed. 1066; Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 60 S.Ct. 736, 84 L.Ed. 1093.

The judgment affirming the convictions on the third and fifth counts is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. So ordered.

Court of Appeals of Oregon.

Christine E. ERICKSON, Appellant,
v.
Bryan W. CHRISTENSON; Luther Memorial Church, Portland, Oregon; American Lutheran Church, North Pacific District, Respondents, and American Lutheran Church, Defendant.

A8710-06662; CA A49695.

Argued and Submitted April 14, 1989.
Decided Oct. 25, 1989.

Church parishioner sued pastor, her church, and the district office of the church's denomination, seeking recovery for intentional infliction of emotional harm allegedly caused by pastor's mentally manipulating her and seducing her through counseling relationship. The Circuit Court, Multnomah County, Lee Johnson, J., dismissed complaint for failure to state claims, and parishioner appealed. The Court of Appeals, Rossman, J., held that: (1) claim of intentional infliction of emotional harm was not invalid as being essentially restatement of abolished claim of seduction; (2) claim was not barred on First Amendment grounds, as being essentially claim of clerical malpractice which would require for proof impermissible government examination of validity of religious beliefs and interference with access to clerical counseling; (3) complaint stated claim against church for liability for torts of pastor under respondeat superior doctrine; (4) complaint stated cause of action against church for negligent supervision of pastor; and (5) complaint stated cause of action against district office of denomination for negligence in requiring parishioner to seek removal of pastor through confrontational process involving rest of church, causing her emotional harm.

Reversed and remanded.

106 ROSSMAN, Judge.

Plaintiff brought this action against her pastor (Christenson), the church that employed him (Luther Memorial) and the American Lutheran Church, North Pacific District (ALC-NPD), [FN1] alleging four claims for injuries sustained after Christenson allegedly manipulated her and seduced her through a counseling relationship. The trial court granted defendants' motions under ORCP 21 A to dismiss for failure to state ultimate facts sufficient to state claims, *385 and plaintiff appeals. We reverse and remand.

> FN1. Pursuant to the stipulation of plaintiff and A merican Lutheran Church (ALC), the trial court entered an order dismissing claims against ALC without prejudice. The court incorporated that order into its judgment dismissing plaintiff's claims against all defendants.

In reviewing a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, we are limited to the facts stated in the complaint. Richards v. Dahl, 289 Or. 747, 752, 618 P.2d 418 (1980). We accept as true the allegations and all reasonable inferences that may be drawn from them. See Overbay v. Ledridge, 97 Or.App. 292, 294, 776 P.2d 29, on reconsideration 98 Or.App. 148, 778 P.2d 981 (1989). A pleading that contains an allegation of material fact as to each element of the claim for relief, even if vague, is sufficient to survive a motion to dismiss. Mazurek v. Rajnus, 253 Or. 555, 557-58, 456 P.2d 83 (1969). We discuss plaintiff's claims against each defendant in turn.

Plaintiff's claims against Christenson are for "breach of fiduciary duty" (which we treat as a claim for breach of a confidential relationship) and intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. [FN2] Her allegations may be summarized: (1) In 1970, when plaintiff was age 13, Christenson established a confidential relationship with her, acting as her pastor, counselor, confessor, advisor, friend, teacher and surrogate father. (2) Christenson abused that relationship by "mentally manipulating" her to become dependent upon him and by "coercing and manipulating" her to have close contact and sexual relations with him for his own purposes; he continued to exercise dominion and control over plaintiff until the fall or winter of 1986, and attempted to manipulate the relationship until *107 May, 1987. (3) Defendants' failure to advise plaintiff of the improper relationship prevented her from obtaining professional help. (4) As a result of Christenson's misuse of his position, plaintiff suffered sexual abuse, extreme emotional distress, physical illness, loss of sleep and memory, clinical depression and loss in her "ability to trust other adults, to trust authority, and * * * in her ability to deal with religion and her faith in God."

> FN2. Although plaintiff has characterized her claim as one for "outrageous conduct," it is actually for intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. Patton v. J.C. Penney Co., 301 Or. 117, 119 n. 1, 719 P.2d 854 (1986).

[1] Christenson argues that those allegations actually state a claim for seduction, a cause of action that was abolished in 1973. Or.Laws 1973, ch. 640. We disagree. In Spiess v. Johnson, 89 Or.App. 289, 748 P.2d 1020, aff'd by equally divided court 307 Or. 242, 765 P.2d 811 (1988), we considered the sufficiency of a complaint alleging that a psychiatrist from whom a couple had sought psychiatric counseling for the wife had become sexually intimate with her during the course of treatment. The defendant argued that the husband's claim for intentional infliction of severe emotional distress was actually for the abolished torts of criminal conversation and alienation of affections. We rejected that argument, noting that the different claims were distinguishable by the nature of the loss that they alleged. 89 Or.App. at 294, 748 P.2d 1020.

The tort of seduction provided recovery for damage to character and reputation, as well as for mental anguish and pecuniary losses. See Breon v. Hinkle, 14 Or. 494, 500, 13 P. 289 (1887). By contrast, plaintiff's claim alleges that Christenson misused his position as pastor and counselor to abuse her sexually, causing her not only emotional distress but also "loss of ability to trust other adults, to trust authority, and * * * in her ability to deal with religion and her faith in God." Accepting the allegations as true, the harm to plaintiff stemmed from Christenson's misuse of his position of trust, not from the seduction as such. Plaintiff has stated a claim.

In her second claim against Christenson, plaintiff has claimed losses due to intentionally inflicted severe emotional distress, as opposed to losses related to character or reputation. The mere fact that sexual intimacy was the means of inflicting that distress does not convert her claim into one for seduction. See Spiess v. Johnson, supra, 89 Or.App. at 294, 748 P.2d 1020. Moreover, the character of Christenson's relationship with plaintiff is relevant both to the degree of culpability required 108 to impose liability and to whether his conduct 386 was so offensive as to be outrageous. Hall v. The May Dept. Stores, 292 Or. 131, 137, 637 P.2d 126 (1981); Torgeson v. Connor, 86 Or.App. 179, 181, 738 P.2d 994 (1987). Because plaintiff has alleged a confidential relationship, proof of her other allegations would permit the jury to infer that Christenson's actions exceeded the limits of social toleration, that they were done with the knowledge that they would cause her grave distress and that they in fact caused her severe emotional distress. That is sufficient to state a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. See Torgeson v. Connor, supra.

[2] Christenson argues that plaintiff's claims are barred by the First Amendment. According to him, her claim for "breach of a fiduciary duty" actually is a claim for clerical malpractice, a cause of action that requires developing a community standard of care. Because imposing such a standard would involve examining the validity of religious beliefs and could interfere with access to clerical counseling, he argues, it violates both the Free Exercise and Establishment Clauses of the First Amendment. Similarly, he contends, because plaintiff's seduction could not be considered "outrageous" were it not for the fact that he is a pastor, plaintiff's claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress penalizes him for exercising his religion.

Christenson's arguments misconstrue the nature of plaintiff's claims. First, regardless of how plaintiff designated her claims, a claim for breach of a confidential relationship is different from a claim for clerical malpractice. Plaintiff's complaint alleged the existence and breach of a confidential relationship; it did not allege the elements of malpractice. Moreover, plaintiff's claim for outrageous conduct is not premised on the mere fact that Christenson is a pastor, but on the fact that, because he was plaintiff's pastor and counselor, a special relationship of trust and confidence developed.

[3] Plaintiff's claims against Luther Memorial are that it is vicariously liable for the torts allegedly committed by Christenson and that it was negligent in supervising him. "Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is liable for an employee's torts when the employee acts within the scope of employment." Chesterman v. Barmon, 305 Or. 439, 442, 753 P.2d 404 (1988). An employe's act is within the scope of the 109 employment if it occurs substantially within the time and space limits authorized by the employment, the employe is at least partially motivated by a purpose to serve the employer and the act is of a kind which the employe was hired to perform. Chesterman v. Barmon, supra, 305 Or. at 442, 753 P.2d 404. Plaintiff has alleged that, in the exercise of his duties as a pastor, Christenson established a confidential relationship with her and caused her harm by abusing that relationship. Confining our analysis to the four corners of the complaint, we conclude that it alleges that she sustained harm from acts performed within Christenson's scope of employment. [FN3]

> FN3. Luther Memorial argues that it cannot be held liable under a theory of respondeat superior, because Christenson's seduction of plaintiff is neither the kind of act that he was hired to perform nor motivated by a desire to serve the employer. As previously noted, however, the gravamen of plaintiff's complaint is not simply that Christenson seduced her but that he abused his position as her pastor to do so. Because the alleged wrongful act was improper performance of pastoral counseling duties, whether it occurred within the scope of employment is a factual issue.

[4] With respect to her claim for negligence in supervision, Luther Memorial argues that plaintiff has failed to allege facts showing that its "conduct unreasonably created a foreseeable risk to a protected interest of the kind of harm that befell the plaintiff," as required by Fazzolari v. Portland School Dist. No. 1J, 303 Or. 1, 17, 734 P.2d 1326 (1987). However, in her amended complaint, plaintiff has alleged that Luther Memorial knew or should have known that Christenson was not adequately trained as a counselor and that it knew or should have known that he had misused his position in the past to take advantage of parishioners and counseled persons. These allegations, if proven, would make it *387 reasonable for a trier of fact to infer that the risk of harm to plaintiff was reasonably foreseeable to Luther Memorial. Similarly, her allegations, if proven, that Luther Memorial employed and directed Christenson to counsel parishioners, failed to investigate claims of his sexual misconduct, failed to remove him or to warn parishioners of his misuse of his position and failed to supervise him adequately following his nervous breakdown or to direct him to seek expert advice to deal with his abusive behavior would make it reasonable for the jury to infer that it created the risk of harm to plaintiff. The complaint states a claim for negligent supervision. It follows that plaintiff's 110 claims against Luther Memorial should not have been dismissed. [FN4]

> FN4. Relying on Norwest v. Presbyterian Intercommunity Hosp., 293 Or. 543, 652 P.2d 318 (1982), Luther Memorial asserts that plaintiff has alleged only emotional injury, an insufficient basis for a claim for ordinary negligence. In alleging sexual abuse, physical illness, lost sleep and losses in memory and concentration, however, plaintiff has alleged more than emotional injury.

[5] Plaintiff repeated her claim of negligent supervision against ALC-NPD, alleging the same facts and adding that ALC-NPD supervised Luther Memorial and that the agents and employes of ALC-NPD supervised Christenson. ALC-NPD responds that, because it is merely an administrative department of ALC, it lacks the capacity to be sued, that plaintiff's claim is barred by the two-year Statute of Limitations in ORS 12.110(1) and that, because it was not Christenson's employer, but simply an unincorporated division of ALC with only a tenuous connection to Luther Memorial and Christenson, it could neither have created nor foreseen the risk of harm to plaintiff.

ALC-NPD's contentions are premature. Nothing on the face of the complaint permits a determination that ALC-NPD is not a proper party or that, as a matter of law, plaintiff's alleged injuries occurred more than two years before the commencement of her action. See ORCP 21 A(9). Plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts to withstand a motion to dismiss.

[6] Plaintiff's last claim is that ALC-NPD was negligent in its performance of pastoral duties. In essence, she alleges that, after she initiated a church complaint against Christenson, ALC-NPD undertook the role of her advocate and counselor; that, in that role, it required her to "proceed through a confrontational process * * * in order to have Bryan Christenson removed from his pastor position"; and that, despite Christenson's voluntary admission to a sexual dependency unit, it continued to require her to "confront and oppose the church congregation," causing her extreme emotional distress. Those allegations, taken as true, would permit a trier of fact to make the inference that ALC-NPD's conduct unreasonably created a foreseeable risk of harm to plaintiff. Under 111 Fazzolari v. Portland School Dist. No. 1J, supra, plaintiff's allegations are sufficient to state a claim for negligence. [FN5]

FN5. Characterizing plaintiff's claim as one for "clerical malpractice," ALC-NPD argues that recognizing such a cause of action would require the court to develop a standard of care for pastoral counseling, an undertaking which inevitably would violate the First Amendment and Article I, sections 2, 3, and 5 of the Oregon Constitution. However, plaintiff's complaint alleges simple negligence. Although the First Amendment or Oregon Constitution may provide ALC-NPD with an affirmative defense at some later stage of the proceeding, which we need not and do not decide here, it does not provide a basis for dismissal at this stage.

Reversed and remanded.

United States Court of Appeals,
Seventh Circuit.

Linda E. DAUSCH, Plaintiff-Appellant,
v.
Reverend Greg RYKSE, Knox Presbyterian Church, Chicago Presbytery, also known as Presbytery of Chicago, et al., Defendants-Appellees.

No. 93-1459.

Argued Nov. 10, 1993.
Decided Dec. 16, 1994.

Church member brought action against church and pastor alleging that pastor had engaged in improper counseling conduct. Church and pastor moved to dismiss complaint, and the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, Ann Claire Williams, J., granted motion. Church member appealed, and the Court of Appeals, in opinion by Coffey, Circuit Judge, held that: (1) complaint failed to state claim for negligence or negligent infliction of emotional distress against church; (2) dismissal of count of complaint alleging negligent infliction of emotional distress on part of pastor which was not assigned as error was not properly before court and would not be considered; and in opinions by Coffey, Circuit Judge, and Ripple, Circuit Judge, held that: (3) complaint stated claim for professional negligence against pastor; (4) claim for breach of fiduciary duty by pastor and church would not be recognized under Illinois law; and (5) complaint stated claim against pastor for violation of Illinois Sexual Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded.

Coffey, Circuit Judge, concurred and filed opinion. Ripple, Circuit Judge, concurred in part and dissented in part in judgment and filed opinion.

1427 Before GIBSON [FN], COFFEY and RIPPLE, Circuit Judges.

FN* The Honorable Floyd R. Gibson, of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, is sitting by designation.

PER CURIAM.

Linda E. Dausch, a member of the congregation of the Knox Presbyterian Church ("Knox Church"), sought counseling from her church's pastor, Reverend Greg Rykse. She alleged in her complaint that it was one of the duties of Rykse and of the Knox Church and the Chicago Presbytery ("the church defendants") to provide psychological counseling to members of the congregation. However, according to Mrs. Dausch's complaint, Rykse "engaged in dangerous and improper counseling relations with plaintiff," which included "engaging in sexual contact during the course of psychotherapy with the plaintiff, an emotionally dependent patient."

The case before us, brought under diversity jurisdiction [FN1] and controlled by Illinois law, is an appeal from the dismissal of Mrs. Dausch's first amended complaint pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6). Against the individual defendant Rykse, the complaint sets forth claims for professional negligence (Count I), breach of fiduciary duty (Count III), negligent infliction of emotional distress (Count V), and violation of the Sexual Exploitation of Psychotherapy Act, 740 ILCS 140/1 et seq. (Count IX). Knox Church and Chicago Presbytery were also charged with professional negligence (Count II), breach of fiduciary duty (Count VI), and negligent infliction of emotional distress (Count VIII). [FN2]

FN1. The initial jurisdictional statement indicated that the requirement of complete diversity of citizenship may be lacking. Strawbridge v. Curtiss, 7 U.S. (3 Cranch) 267, 2 L.Ed. 435 (1806). However, pursuant to the order of this court, Mrs. Dausch filed an affidavit showing that complete diversity of citizenship exists. At the time the complaint was filed, Mrs. Dausch was a citizen of Pennsylvania; Rev. Ryske was a citizen of Illinois; the Knox Presbyterian Church and the Chicago Presbytery were citizens of Illinois with their principal places of business in Illinois. The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) is no longer a party to this action. On motion of the appellant Linda Dausch, the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) was dismissed from this appeal without prejudice by order of this court on August 13, 1993. Both complaints allege that the amount in controversy exceeds $50,000.

FN2. Mrs. Dausch's first amended complaint, filed August 6, 1992, is misnumbered and therefore does not include Counts IV or VII. All references to the "complaint" before this court are to this first amended version found at R.33.

[1][2][3] Because our review of this case is limited to the sufficiency of Mrs. Dausch's complaint, we must accept all well-pled facts as true and must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the appellant Mrs. Dausch. Dowlatshahi v. Motorola, Inc., 970 F.2d 289, 290 (7th Cir.1992).

Applying this standard, the complaint presented these facts: [FN3] During the period between *1428 January 1988 and June 1990, Rykse held himself out, and was held out by the church defendants, to be a duly qualified person engaged in providing psychological counseling to members of his congregation. Complaint ¶ 12, R.33 at 5. Such counseling was "in furtherance of the business and purpose" of the church defendants, and was within the scope of his employment. Id. Linda Dausch sought psychological counseling from Rykse between January 1988 and June 1990 in order to assist her in coping with certain emotional conditions she was experiencing, particularly depression. ¶¶ 14-15, R.33 at 5-6. Rev. Rykse accepted her for professional psychological treatment. ¶ 16, R.33 at 6. Operating within the framework of this counseling relationship, Rykse "compelled, encouraged, fostered and engaged in dangerous and improper counseling relations with plaintiff." ¶ 17, R.33 at 6- 7. The relations included sexual contact during the course of the psychotherapy. ¶ 51, R.33 at 19. The church defendants knew or should have known of these improper counseling relations. ¶ 18, R.33 at 7.

FN3. In her memorandum in response to the motions to dismiss, Mrs. Dausch explained further the basis for the complaint. The district court referred to this document extensively in its memorandum order. As we have noted in the text, in determining whether a complaint ought to be dismissed, the district court considers the allegations that are contained in it and all reasonable inferences drawn from it in favor of the nonmovant. The facts asserted in the memorandum in opposition to the motion to dismiss, but not contained in the complaint, are relevant to the extent that they "could be proved consistent with the allegations." Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S.Ct. 2229, 2232, 81 L.Ed.2d 59 (1984); Hrubec v. National R.R. Passenger Corp., 981 F.2d 962, 964 (7th Cir.1992). Because a plaintiff may point to "facts consistent with the existing language of the complaint to establish entitlement to prevail," American Inter-Fidelity Exch. v. American Re-Insurance Co., 17 F.3d 1018, 1022 (7th Cir.1994), we set forth, for the sake of completeness, the factual allegations made in the memorandum in opposition. According to the memorandum, a coordinator at Knox Presbyterian Church called Mrs. Dausch to inquire why she was not attending church, and recommended that she seek counseling from Rev. Greg Rykse, one of the pastors at the church. According to the complaint, Rykse contacted her soon thereafter and offered his services as a psychological counselor. Dausch stated that Rykse told her that she needed secular psychological, not religious, counseling, and that he was qualified to provide it. According to Dausch, Rykse stated that such treatment was included in his job description at Knox Presbyterian Church. Dausch attended counseling sessions with Rykse at his office in the church from January 1988 until May 1990. Over time Rykse increased the frequency and length of the sessions. Mrs. Dausch claimed that he told her that "religion does not apply here. Your problems are so deep you need more psychological treatment from me." She stated that she became very involved in the therapy and attached to Rykse. Rykse allegedly represented to her that he was a capable, trained professional on whom she could rely to assist her with her personal problems. However, on June 14, 1988, Rykse allegedly gave Mrs. Dausch an ultimatum: "I have been giving to you, and I need something back for my services. You must give back to me or I will not work with you anymore." From that date through May 1990 Mrs. Dausch's therapy sessions began with sexual relations with Rykse.

On February 9, 1993, the district court granted the defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). Mem.Op. at 17.

The court turned first to Mrs. Dausch's allegations of professional negligence against the church defendants. In the court's view, these allegations were most accurately characterized as a claim for clergy malpractice. The court held that such a cause of action was not recognized in Illinois and therefore could not be the basis for holding the church defendants vicariously liable. It also determined, in the alternative, that, even if such a cause of action existed, the church defendants could not be held vicariously liable for actions done by

Rykse solely for his own benefit and not as part of his ministerial duties. Nor, according to the district court, could the church defendants be held liable for failing to exercise reasonable care over Rykse when acting outside the scope of his employment because there was no allegation that the church defendants knew or should have known of Rykse's improper relations or of the need to exercise control over him. Under such circumstances, the fact that Rykse was the church defendants' employee was not a sufficient basis for vicarious liability.

The district court next addressed the professional negligence allegation against Rykse. The court reiterated that Illinois does not recognize a cause of action for clergy malpractice. It noted that courts that have considered but rejected such a claim have recognized the free exercise implications of any such recognition. The district court also recognized, however, that such free exercise considerations would not be relevant if Rykse's conduct was not part of the belief and practices of his church. Repeating its earlier view with respect to the church defendants, the district court concluded that Mrs. Dausch had failed to allege adequately that Rykse's psychological counseling was not part of the church's religious beliefs and practices. As a result, concluded the court, the free exercise clause of the First Amendment was implicated and Mrs. Dausch failed to state a valid claim.

The district court next turned to the allegations that the defendants had breached a fiduciary duty to Mrs. Dausch. At the outset, the district court concluded that, even though the church defendants might be characterized as her "spiritual and religious advisors," Mem.Op. at 14, that relationship was not, under the law of Illinois, that of a fiduciary. With respect to Rykse, the court concluded that he did not have a fiduciary duty, *1429 but rather a general duty to refrain from violating the law. More fundamentally, the court determined that the allegation of a fiduciary duty was simply an elliptical way to state a clergy malpractice claim, a cause of action that it had already held to be not recognized in Illinois.

The district court dismissed, on the same rationale, Mrs. Dausch's allegations of negligent infliction of emotional distress. Because Illinois does not recognize clergy malpractice claims, it would also not recognize claims for negligent infliction of emotional distress in these circumstances. Finally, the court dismissed Mrs. Dausch's counts concerning the church defendants' negligent hiring, training, and supervision of Rykse because adjudication of such claims would foster excessive state entanglement with religion.

For the reasons that follow, we affirm the district court's dismissal of counts against the church defendants, Counts II, VI, and VIII. Concerning the counts against Rykse, we affirm the district court's dismissal of Count III, breach of fiduciary duty. We also affirm the dismissal of Count V, alleging negligent infliction of emotional distress against Rykse; because there was no assignment of error, this count is not properly before the court. We reverse the dismissal of the remaining counts, Counts I and IX, and remand for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

AFFIRMED IN PART AND REVERSED AND REMANDED IN PART

COFFEY, Circuit Judge, concurring.

[4][5] I agree with Section A.1. (Professional Negligence and Negligent Infliction of Emotional Harm--Defendant Ryske) subsections a. and b. and Section B. (Sexual Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act) of Judge Ripple's opinion, but wish to make it clear that this is in no way to be interpreted as expanding the liability of the clergy and thus spiritual counseling, or some combination of spiritual and secular counseling, remains shielded by the First Amendment. Thus Dausch's claims for professional negligence (Count I) and violation of the Illinois psychotherapy statute (Count IX) are the only claims against Rev. Ryske that survive on remand. This position is also consistent with Section C. (Breach of Fiduciary Duty) of Judge Ripple's concurrence which affirms the dismissal of Dausch's breach of fiduciary duty claim against Rev. Ryske (Count III), but it is at odds with Section A.1. (Professional Negligence and Negligent Infliction of Emotional Harm--Defendant Ryske) subsection c. of Judge Ripple's analysis as it unfortunately combines the reversal of the trial judge's dismissal of Dausch's professional negligence claim with the reversal of the trial judge's dismissal of her claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress (Count V). I also wish to point out that Dausch's brief on appeal fails to assign error to the court's dismissal of that claim, thus it is not before the court. Further, Dausch's complaint in my opinion fails to allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action against the church defendants sounding in professional negligence (Count II), breach of fiduciary duty (Count VI), and negligent infliction of emotional distress (Count VIII). I agree with the trial court's action and Section C. (Breach of Fiduciary Duty) of Judge Ripple's analysis, affirming the dismissal of Dausch's breach of fiduciary duty claim. However, I disagree with Section A.2 (Professional Negligence and Negligent Infliction of Emotional Harm--Church defendants) of Judge Ripple's analysis for Dausch's complaint fails to adequately allege that the church defendants knew or should have known of the improper counselling conduct of Rev. Ryske. I further note that Dausch's complaint fails to allege any basis for a claim under the doctrine of respondeat superior because her complaint fails to state that the church defendants ever hired or authorized Rev. Ryske to engage in secular psychological counselling. Rev. Ryske's sexual contact with Dausch was obviously a deviation from the terms of the contract of his employment with the church and was certainly not in furtherance of the church defendants' business. Finally, Dausch's complaint fails to allege that the church defendants incurred any supervisory liability for it is devoid of any allegation that the church defendants were aware or had any knowledge that Rev. Ryske made improper sexual advances 1430 either before or during the time in question.

RIPPLE, Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part in the judgment.

This case was dismissed by the district court because, in its view, the complaint failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. This procedural posture is central to the adjudication of this present appeal. Accordingly, I set forth, at the beginning of the analysis, a discussion of the settled principles of law that must guide the inquiry when a case is presented in this procedural posture.

Review of the district court's grant of a motion to dismiss the amended complaint is de novo. Vicom, Inc. v. Harbridge Merchant Servs., Inc., 20 F.3d 771, 775 (7th Cir.1994); *Uni*Quality, Inc. v. Infotronx, Inc.*, 974 F.2d 918, 920 (7th Cir.1992). All the facts alleged in the complaint, plus any reasonable inferences from those facts, are viewed in the light most favorable to the nonmovant Mrs. Dausch. Vicom, 20 F.3d at 775; Dowlatshahi v. Motorola, Inc., 970 F.2d 289, 290 (7th Cir.1992). Complaints are to be read liberally, as required by the notice pleading theory underlying the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47-48, 78 S.Ct. 99, 103, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957). The district court, viewing all facts in a light most favorable to the non-moving party, may grant the motion only if "it is beyond doubt that the nonmovant can plead no facts that would support his claim for relief." Id. at 45-46, 78 S.Ct. at 102. Rule 8 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure requires clarity but not detail:

> Rule 8(a)(2) requires a "short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." In addition, Rule 8(e)(1) states that "[e]ach averment of a pleading be simple, concise and direct." The primary purpose of these provisions is rooted in fair notice: Under Rule 8, a complaint " 'must be presented with intelligibility sufficient for a court or opposing party to understand whether a valid claim is alleged and if so what it is.' "

Vicom, 20 F.3d at 775 (citations omitted). Thus, although the complainant must show that she is entitled to relief, she need not set out in detail the facts upon which her claim is based. Redfield v. Continental Cas. Corp., 818 F.2d 596, 605 (7th Cir.1987). Nevertheless, despite Rule 8(a)'s allowance that the complaint's statement of the claim be "short and plain," a plaintiff may not "fumble around searching for a meritorious claim within the elastic boundaries of a barebones complaint." Chaveriat v. Williams Pipe Line Co., 11 F.3d 1420, 1430 (7th Cir.1993). With these principles in mind, I now examine the sufficiency of the complaint.

A. Professional Negligence and Negligent Infliction of Emotional Harm

1. Defendant Rykse

a.

Central to the district court's disposition of this case was its determination that, with respect to the individual defendant Rykse, the complaint alleged a claim for clergy malpractice rather than a claim for professional negligence on the part of a psychological counselor. [FN1] I therefore turn first to this allegation.

> FN1. Although the district court first addressed the claims against the church defendants, its disposition of those claims anticipated its decision that the claims against the individual defendant were claims for clergy malpractice and not for professionally negligent psychological counseling.

The first count of the complaint alleges that Rykse had a "duty to possess and apply the skill and knowledge of a reasonably well qualified person providing psychological counseling," and that he was professionally negligent in counseling plaintiff. [FN2] In the district *1431 court's view, Mrs. Dausch's allegations failed to raise a claim for malpractice by a psychological counselor because Mrs. Dausch did not allege specifically that Rykse was independently trained as a psychological counselor, that Rykse did not receive his counseling training through his church or affiliated institution, that the counseling was not conducted as part of Rykse's employment with the church, or that the sessions were not conducted at the church. In the district court's view, although allegations that Mrs. Dausch obtained counseling from Rykse independent of his role as her clergyman would have been consistent with a claim for malpractice of a psychological counselor, here she had alleged that "it was within the scope of the Rev. Greg Rykse's employment to offer psychological counseling to members of the Knox Church congregation." Complaint ¶ 12, R.33 at 5. Without adequate allegation that Rykse's counseling was purely secular, the district court concluded that Mrs. Dausch's claim was therefore for clergy malpractice, a cause of action not recognized in Illinois.

> FN2. Dausch's specific allegations of Rykse's professional negligence include the following: (1) he failed to establish and maintain an appropriate counseling milieu; (2) he engaged in improper relations with plaintiff under the auspices of the counselor-counselee relationship; (3) he failed to refer her to a separate counselor when he knew or should have known that his emotional involvement with plaintiff jeopardized and harmed her well-being; (4) he failed to seek the supervision of his superiors when he knew or should have known that his emotional involvement with plaintiff jeopardized and harmed her well-being; (5) he failed to terminate the counseling relationship with plaintiff when he knew or should have known that his emotional involvement with her jeopardized and harmed her well-being; (6) he failed to diagnose or properly control plaintiff's symptoms of transference; and (7) he failed to act in a manner appropriate within the ambit of his pastoral obligations. Complaint ¶ 21, R.33 at 7-8.

On appeal, Mrs. Dausch maintains that her claims are based on psychotherapy malpractice, which is recognized in Illinois, see Corgan v. Muehling, 143 Ill.2d 296, 158 Ill.Dec. 489, 574 N.E.2d 602 (1991), and not on clergy malpractice, which she never alleged. The defendant in Corgan was an unregistered psychologist who was held to the same standard of care as if he were a psychologist. Mrs. Dausch asserts that Rykse should also be held to that standard. According to Mrs. Dausch, Rykse held himself out as qualified to perform secular psychological counseling and the church supported his counseling endeavors. Therefore, she maintains, he should be required to exercise the skill normally possessed by members of that profession, regardless of his actual qualifications. She submits that she has offered sufficiently well-pleaded facts to establish a valid claim for psychotherapy malpractice. Her allegation that the service that Rykse offered to provide was secular psychological counseling must be taken as true at the pleading stage; only at a later stage of the proceeding will it be her obligation to substantiate the allegation by the sort of factual proof that the district court required in disposing of this motion for judgment on the pleading. She insists the court erred by characterizing her claim as one for clergy malpractice, thereby allowing the individual defendant and the church to escape liability for his wrongdoing.

In reply, Rykse argues that it is undisputed that at least part of Rykse's interaction with Mrs. Dausch consisted of religious counseling. Because the foundation of their relationship was as member and pastor of the church, the district court properly determined, in Rykse's view, that Mrs. Dausch "failed to adequately allege that Rykse's counseling was purely secular." Mem.Op. at 12. Rykse submits that Mrs. Dausch sought pastoral counseling for depression from Rykse, her pastor, rather than through the services of a psychotherapist, presumably because she expected counseling that would be spiritual in nature. Like the plaintiff in Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F.Supp. 321 (S.D.N.Y.1991), [FN3] states Rykse, Mrs. Dausch *1432 deliberately avoided asserting clergy malpractice but was in fact making such a claim. Rykse asserts that the alleged negligent actions arose within the confines of a clergyman/parishioner relationship.

> FN3. The district court in this case follows closely the analysis and decision in Schmidt, a New York case applying New York law. Schmidt analyzed a long-term relationship between a girl and a Presbyterian pastor, beginning when her parents brought the girl, at age twelve, to the minister for "emotional, spiritual and familial counseling." Schmidt, 779 F.Supp. at 324 (emphasis added). The court found that the action should have been a battery or intentional tort (but the statute of limitations had run). It rejected plaintiff's attempt to treat an intentional tort as a negligence claim, and found that the real issue was clergy malpractice. Once it stated that counseling was part of the religious duties of clergy, it then refused to attempt to establish a standard of reasonable care for pastoral counselors on the ground that the state must not "foster excessive government entanglement with religion." Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 614-15, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 2112, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (1971).
> It may be argued that it requires no excessive entanglement with religion to decide that reasonably prudent clergy of any sect do not molest children. The difficulty is that this Court, and the New York courts whose authority we exercise here, must consider not only this case, but the next case to follow, and the ones after that, before we embrace the newly invented tort of clergy malpractice. This places us clearly on the slippery slope and is an unnecessary venture, since existing laws against battery, and the criminal statute against sexual abuse if timely invoked, provide adequate protection for society's interests. Where could we stop? Schmidt, 779 F.Supp. at 328.

[6][7] I begin my analysis of this issue by noting my complete agreement with our colleague in the district court with respect to the viability of a claim for clergy malpractice. This cause of action has been soundly rejected by the courts of Illinois. In Baumgartner v. First Church of Christ, Scientist, 141 Ill.App.3d 898, 96 Ill.Dec. 114, 490 N.E.2d 1319 appeal denied, (Ill.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 915, 107 S.Ct. 317, 93 L.Ed.2d 290 (1986), the Illinois Appellate Court determined that an action for clergy malpractice could not be maintained because it was not a "justiciable controversy," id. 141 Ill.App.3d at 904, 96 Ill.Dec. at 120, 490 N.E.2d at 1325, and because the evaluation of such a complaint "would require the court to extensively investigate and evaluate religious tenets and doctrines," id. at 903, 96 Ill.Dec. at 119, 490 N.E.2d at 1324. Moreover, the Illinois legislature explicitly excluded liability for "counseling of the spiritual or religious nature" in the Sexual Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act, 740 ILCS 140/1.

Indeed, a cause of action for clergy malpractice has been rejected uniformly by the states that have considered it. [FN4] As the Illinois court pointed out in Baumgartner, this unanimity is based on the difficulty that would be encountered in evaluating such a claim without entangling the civil courts in extensive investigation and evaluation of religious tenets. Cf. Thomas v. Review Bd., 450 U.S. 707, 716, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 1431, 67 L.Ed.2d 624 (1981) (noting that "it is not within the judicial function and judicial competence" to determine whether the adherent of a particular faith has properly interpreted the tenets of that faith); Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 724-25, 96 S.Ct. 2372, 2387-88, 49 L.Ed.2d 151 (1976) (holding that the court improperly inquired into the propriety of the removal of a bishop and the reorganization of the church).

FN4. The following state supreme courts have held that there is no cause of action for clergy malpractice: Handley v. Richards, 518 So.2d 682 (Ala.1987); Moses v. Diocese, 863 P.2d 310 (Colo.1993), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1137, 114 S.Ct. 2153, 128 L.Ed.2d 880 (1994); Destefano v. Grabrian, 763 P.2d 275 (Colo.1988); Byrd v. Faber, 57 Ohio St.3d 56, 565 N.E.2d 584 (1991); Strock v. Pressnell, 38 Ohio St.3d 207, 527 N.E.2d 1235 (1988); Schieffer v. Catholic Archdiocese, 244 Neb. 715, 508 N.W.2d 907 (1993). Two other state supreme courts have defeated clergy malpractice actions on other grounds without determining the propriety of causes of action for clergy malpractice: Doe v. Roman Catholic Diocese, 862 S.W.2d 338 (Mo.1993), and Bladen v. First Presbyterian Church, 857 P.2d 789 (Okla.1993). Other state courts refusing to recognize clergy malpractice claims include Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley, 240 Cal.Rptr. 215 (Cal.App.1987), rev'd on other grounds, 47 Cal.3d 278, 253 Cal.Rptr. 97, 763 P.2d 948 (1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1007, 109 S.Ct. 1644, 104 L.Ed.2d 159 (1989); Fontaine v. Roman Catholic Church, 625 So.2d 548 (La.Ct.App.1993); Jones by Jones v. Trane, 153 Misc.2d 822, 591 N.Y.S.2d 927 (Sup.Ct.1992); and E.J.M. v. Archdiocese, 424 Pa.Super. 449, 622 A.2d 1388 (1993).

[8][9] This judicial refusal to examine the pastoral activity of members of the clergy, when such a judicial inquiry would require examination and evaluation of the clergy's adherence to the tenets of his or her faith or of internal decisions and organization of the church, has not been extended to situations in which the conduct in question does not bear such a direct relationship to the doctrinal or organizational aspects of religious practice. Cf. Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 1533, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972) ("A way of life, however virtuous and admirable, may not be interposed as a barrier to a reasonable state regulation ... if it is based on purely secular considerations; to have the protection of the Religion Clauses, the claims must be rooted in religious belief."). Such activity can be proscribed by a legitimate regulation of general applicability designed to protect the health, safety or good morals of the community. *See 1433Baumgartner, 96 Ill.Dec. at 120, 490 N.E.2d at 1325; cf. Employment Div., Dep't of Human Resources v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 876-82, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 1598-1602, 108 L.Ed.2d 876 (1990) (reviewing Supreme Court precedent interpreting the Free Exercise Clause). As the Illinois court pointed out in Baumgartner, despite its nonrecognition of clergy malpractice claims, Illinois allows judicial scrutiny in this latter type of conduct because it does not implicate judicial assessment of the tenets of a particular religion or a determination of whether a particular litigant has adhered to those tenets. 96 Ill.Dec. at 120, 490 N.E.2d at 1325. Rather, the sole inquiry is whether the individual has engaged in conduct that the state has deemed harmful. Indeed, a great deal of the activity of religious institutions falls within this category. Although such activity is motivated by the tenets of the religion, evaluation of that activity does not require that those religious tenets be assessed by the civil courts. For instance, many religions maintain hospitals and schools. The motivation for maintaining those institutions is clearly rooted in the faith commitment of the sponsoring church. However, whether a school adheres to safety standards or a hospital to medically acceptable standards of care hardly requires that the court examine and adjudicate matters of religious doctrine. Indeed, today, religious groups offer their adherents, and sometimes the entire community, services that were not offered by ecclesiastical sources in the past. Few would doubt, however, that a lawyer practicing in a legal clinic operated by a church or a physician practicing in a clinic under church auspices would have to comply with the same standards of professional care and responsibility as any other law firm or medical facility.

[10] Characterizing psychological counseling services in terms of this distinction between pastoral work, which can be assessed only by reference to theological beliefs, and the provision of secular services, which can be assessed independently of such religious considerations, presents a particularly difficult issue. In most, if not all, religious traditions, pastoral counseling--advice on matters of spiritual growth or moral responsibility--requires a great deal of knowledge and skill with respect to human psychology. Yet, as Illinois and, indeed, every state that has confronted the issue have noted, such pastoral counseling is clearly and directly centered on matters of religion, and claims of negligence are not cognizable in the civil courts. Indeed, an intermediate appellate court in Illinois has rejected the argument that > the duties of a priest to his parishioner or of a minister to his congregation should be equated with the duties of a psychologist to his patient. A priest or minister is not required to possess and apply the knowledge and use the skill and care ordinarily used by a reasonably well- qualified psychologist.

Hertel v. Sullivan, 261 Ill.App.3d 156, 198 Ill.Dec. 574, 577, 633 N.E.2d 36, 39 (1994). On the other hand, it is entirely possible that, in an age when many ecclesiastical organizations have assumed the task of providing a variety of medical and social services, a particular church might also offer purely secular counseling as a service to the members of its congregation or to a broader segment of the population in need of such services. If a church were to undertake such a project, Baumgartner suggests rather firmly that those who provided such professional services on behalf of the church would indeed be subject to the same legal strictures as those imposed upon individuals who undertake to provide such services in another setting. Baumgartner, 96 Ill.Dec. at 120, 490 N.E.2d at 1325. Therefore, if a complaint alleges that the psychological services that were provided were "secular" in nature, or that the provider held himself out to be providing the services of a psychological counselor, the negligence claim cannot be characterized as one for clergy malpractice. Tort claims for behavior by a cleric that does not require the examination of religious doctrine are cognizable. See Schmidt, 779 F.Supp. at 327 (offering negligent operation of church van as example of tort claim unrelated to religious effort of a cleric). See generally Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303-04, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940) (stating First Amendment's protection of freedom to act "remains subject to regulation for the protection 1434 of society"). Under these circumstances, the claim is for professional malpractice by a psychological counselor, not clergy malpractice.

If the complaint can be appropriately characterized as stating a claim for professional malpractice as opposed to clergy malpractice, "professionals" may be held to "an elevated and objective standard of care." Eaves v. Hyster Co., 244 Ill.App.3d 260, 185 Ill.Dec. 80, 84, 614 N.E.2d 214, 218 (1993). Illinois's Pattern Jury Instructions for use in "professional negligence" cases require professionals to apply the same degree of knowledge, skill, and ability as an ordinarily careful professional would exercise under similar circumstances. Id. 185 Ill.Dec. at 83, 614 N.E.2d at 217. "The elements of a malpractice action are the same elements required of any negligence action." St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Downs, 247 Ill.App.3d 382, 187 Ill.Dec. 130, 137, 617 N.E.2d 338, 345 (1993).

In Corgan v. Muehling, 143 Ill.2d 296, 158 Ill.Dec. 489, 574 N.E.2d 602 (1991), the Supreme Court of Illinois reviewed a complaint very similar to the one before this court, and determined "that the plaintiff can allege a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress as a direct victim of defendant's psychological malpractice." Id. 158 Ill.Dec. at 494, 574 N.E.2d at 607. The Corgan defendant had held himself out as a registered psychologist and had engaged in sexual relations with the plaintiff "under the guise of therapy." Id. 158 Ill.Dec. at 490, 574 N.E.2d at 603. Discussing the duty of a therapist, the state supreme court cited with approval the decisions of Horak v. Biris, 130 Ill.App.3d 140, 85 Ill.Dec. 599, 474 N.E.2d 13 (1985) (holding that allegations of a social worker's mishandling of the transference phenomenon [FN5] were sufficient to show a breach of a duty of care) and Omer v. Edgren, 38 Wash.App. 376, 685 P.2d 635 (1984) (holding that sexual involvement between a psychotherapist and patient raises a jury question concerning malpractice). Id. 685 P.2d at 636-37. The court also noted the legislature's recognition of such a duty in the Sexual Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act. It finally concluded that a plaintiff need not allege physical symptoms of emotional distress in the complaint. Id. 685 P.2d at 638.

> FN5. The Illinois appellate court explained transference thus:
> The "transference phenomenon" ... has been defined in psychiatric practice as "a phenomenon * * * by which the patient > transfers feelings towards everyone else to the doctor, who then must react with a proper response, the counter transference, in order to avoid emotional involvement and assist the patient in overcoming problems." The mishandling of this phenomenon, which generally results in sexual relations or involvement between the psychiatrist or therapist and the patient, has uniformly been considered as malpractice or gross negligence in other jurisdictions, whether the sexual relations were prescribed by the doctor as part of the therapy, or occurred outside the scope of treatment.

[11] Upon examining the complaint in the case before us, I conclude that some of Mrs. Dausch's allegations must be permitted to survive a motion for judgment on the pleading. The complaint sufficiently alleges a cause of action against Rykse as a counselor, not pastor, in Counts I (professional negligence) and V (negligent infliction of emotional distress). [FN6] In these counts, Mrs. Dausch maintains that the defendants rendered a psychological counseling service that was completely different from pastoral counseling. She submits that her complaint, fairly read, sets forth a claim that Rykse undertook to provide psychological counseling of a nature different from pastoral counseling and that, with respect to that undertaking, he can be held to the standards required by the civil *1435 law of all who undertake this delicate and sophisticated task.

> FN6. Even though in her appellate brief the plaintiff focuses on the professional malpractice claim when arguing that Ryske's actions ought not be characterized as clergy malpractice, it is clear that the same arguments apply to the negligent infliction of emotional distress claim. The district court treated the latter claim in this manner and, under these circumstances, it would exalt form over substance to expect the plaintiff to repeat the same argument twice here. While a reviewing court should not reach arguments that are not made in the appellate brief, it ought to use a rule of reason and not of hypertechnicality in applying the rule to the litigants before it.

The district court was of the view that the complaint did not adequately allege that the undertaking of Rykse was a purely secular one. As noted earlier, the district court placed great weight on the failure of Mrs. Dausch to allege that the counseling was not part of Rykse's employment with the church, that the sessions were not conducted off the premises of the church, and that Rykse did not receive training as a psychological counselor from a source other than the church. I agree with our colleague in the district court that these factors are indeed relevant to a determination of the nature of the counseling. I cannot accept, however, the proposition that the omission of these assertions from the complaint is fatal to the plaintiff's case. Indeed, the district court appears to have been of the view that, unless all of these factors were resolved in favor of the plaintiff, it would be necessary to characterize this action as one for clergy malpractice. Such a requirement is not realistic. A cleric does not immunize his or her actions simply because they are performed on the grounds of the church. A legal clinic on church grounds would, for instance, clearly be subject to state regulation. The source of the clergy's training is also not outcome- determinative. A church certainly can decide to maintain a fully accredited educational institution for the education of its clergy in secular pursuits.

Given the standards that govern the adequacy of a complaint, I believe it was sufficient for Mrs. Dausch to allege that Rykse held himself out as a trained psychological counselor and that he undertook, as a function apart from pastoral counseling, to provide such a professional service that did not implicate in its rendition the beliefs or practices of the Presbyterian faith. Mrs. Dausch wants the court to examine her allegation that Rykse held himself out as a trained and qualified psychological counselor and then used that representation to have sexual relations with her. Neither Illinois law nor the Free Exercise Clause relieves an individual of the obligation to comply with neutral laws of general applicability, Employment Div., Dep't of Human Resources v. Smith, 494 U.S. 872, 879, 110 S.Ct. 1595, 1600, 108 L.Ed.2d 876 (1990), and does not shield clergy from all liability for their wrongs. It is of course appropriate for a district court to be demanding of the plaintiff's efforts to establish the factual allegations of a complaint such as this one at a later stage of the litigation. However, I believe that it is premature to dismiss this case at the pleading stage on the ground that it fails to state a cause of action.

2. Church defendants

The district court dismissed the professional negligence claim against the churches primarily on the basis that neither the courts nor the legislature had recognized a cause of action for clergy malpractice. [FN7] It further held that, even if such a cause existed, Mrs. Dausch had failed to state a valid claim against the churches. The district court first pointed out that the church defendants could not be held vicariously liable for Rykse's actions because the alleged sexual acts had to be deemed done solely for his own benefit *1436 and not as part of his ministerial duties. Mem.Op. at 9. The district court was correct in its conclusion that sexual misconduct by a member of the clergy is, by the weight of authority, beyond the scope of employment of the cleric. Here, however, the complaint alleges that Rykse had held himself out as rendering not a pastoral service but a secular psychological counseling service. In this circumstance as well, Illinois generally has held that sexual activity of an employee is insufficient to state a cause of action under the law of respondeat superior. See Hoover v. University of Chicago Hosps., 51 Ill.App.3d 263, 9 Ill.Dec. 414, 417-18, 366 N.E.2d 925, 928-29 (1977) (stating that an employee physician who sexually assaulted a patient could not be found to be acting within the scope of his employment). Nevertheless, the Illinois courts have recognized that the mishandling of the transference phenomenon in psychological counseling does give rise to an action in negligence. Corgan, 158 Ill.Dec. at 489, 574 N.E.2d at 602; see also Horak v. Biris, 130 Ill.App.3d 140, 85 Ill.Dec. 599, 603, 474 N.E.2d 13, 17 (1985). More recently, an Illinois court has suggested strongly that such negligence must be considered within the scope of employment. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Downs, 247 Ill.App.3d 382, 187 Ill.Dec. 130, 136, 617 N.E.2d 338, 344 (1993). Mrs. Dausch does allege, in paragraphs 21(f), 25(f), 32(f), 38(e), 42(f), and 46(e), that Rykse "failed to diagnose or properly control plaintiff's symptom's [sic] of transference."

> FN7. Mrs. Dausch alleged that the church defendants were professionally negligent because they: (1) failed to establish and maintain an appropriate counseling milieu; (2) engaged in improper relations with plaintiff under the auspices of the counselor-counselee relationship; (3) failed to refer plaintiff to a separate counselor when they knew or should have known that Rykse's emotional involvement with plaintiff jeopardized her well-being; (4) failed to terminate the counseling relationship with plaintiff when they knew or should have known that Rykse's emotional involvement with plaintiff jeopardized and harmed plaintiff's well-being; (5) failed to diagnose or properly control plaintiff's symptoms of transference; (6) failed to act in a manner appropriate within the ambit of pastoral obligations; (7) failed to adequately supervise its counseling personnel; (8) failed to employ personnel with the skill, knowledge, and expertise which would have been exercised by a reasonably well-qualified person providing counseling to members of a congregation; (9) failed to adequately train its personnel who engage in counseling; (10) failed to adequately monitor counseling techniques and counseling results of its personnel; and (11) failed to clearly and adequately communicate policies regarding emotional involvement between counselors and counselees to counselors, employees or agents. Complaint ¶ 25, at 9-10. Identical allegations were made in that count of the complaint that alleged that the church defendants had engaged in the negligent infliction of emotional harm.

The district court next held that the church defendants were not obligated to exercise reasonable care over Rykse when he was acting outside the scope of his employment. In this regard, the district court followed the general rules of master-servant tort liability found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts at § 317. It held that the complaint lacked the allegation that the church defendants knew or should have known that it should exercise control over Rykse. More precisely, continued the district court, the complaint failed to allege that: (1) the church defendants knew or should have known of the necessity and opportunity to exercise control over Rykse; (2) there were any indications that Mrs. Dausch and Rykse were having sexual relations during the counseling sessions; and (3) Rykse was encouraging improper relations with her or other parishioners. The district court determined that, at best, the complaint alleged that vicarious liability was established because Rykse was the church defendants' employee and such an allegation was not sufficient. Mem.Op. at 11.

[12] I respectfully disagree with the conclusion of the district court that the complaint fails to allege adequately that the church defendants knew or should have known of the allegedly improper counseling conduct of Rykse. In paragraph 18 of the complaint, Mrs. Dausch alleged that "[d]uring and prior to the period between January, 1988 and June 1990, the [church defendants] knew or should have known that Rev. GREG RYKSE was compelling, encouraging, fostering and engaging in dangerous and improper counseling relations with Plaintiff. " (emphasis added). Again, in paragraph 46, there are allegations that the defendant churches knew or should have known of the improper acts allegedly committed by Rykse during the counseling sessions. These allegations are sufficient to state that, with respect to the claimed secular activities of Rykse, the church defendants were negligent in permitting Rykse to engage in such activities. It is, of course, well established that a civil court cannot inquire into "matters of discipline, faith, internal organization, or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law," without offending the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment. Serbian E. Orthodox Diocese, 426 U.S. at 713, 96 S.Ct. at 2382. As Judge Selya wrote for the First Circuit, this "principle is an important one, steeped in our tradition as well as in our jurisprudence." Natal v. Christian & Missionary Alliance, 878 F.2d 1575, 1577 (1st Cir.1989). As our colleagues in the Fifth Circuit have stated:

> The relationship between an organized church and its ministers is its lifeblood. The minister is the chief instrument by which the church seeks to fulfill its purpose. Matters touching this relationship must necessarily be recognized as of prime ecclesiastical concern.

*1437 McClure v. Salvation Army, 460 F.2d 553, 558-59 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 896, 93 S.Ct. 132, 34 L.Ed.2d 153 (1972). [FN8] These values are not implicated, however, when the inquiry is limited, as it is here, to an examination of the church's decision to employ Rykse in a purely secular capacity and of its alleged failure to supervise his purely secular activities undertaken under its auspices. The necessary inquiry would be limited to an examination of the church defendants' employment of Rykse to perform the purely secular service of psychological counseling. It would not entail--nor could it entail--an inquiry into the decision of the church defendants to retain Rykse to perform services in any way religious in nature.

> FN8. See also Hutchison v. Thomas, 789 F.2d 392, 396 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 885, 107 S.Ct. 277, 93 L.Ed.2d 253 (1986); Kaufmann v. Sheehan, 707 F.2d 355, 358-59 (8th Cir.1983); Simpson v. Wells Lamont Corp., 494 F.2d 490, 493 (5th Cir.1974); Minker v. Baltimore Annual Conf. of United Methodist Church, 699 F.Supp. 954, 955 (D.D.C.1988), aff'd in part, remanded, 894 F.2d 1354 (D.C.Cir.1990); cf. Dowd v. Society of St. Columbans, 861 F.2d 761, 764 (1st Cir.1988) (per curiam) (involving priest's "membership rights" claim against missionary society).

Indeed, this case, as it comes to us on the pleading, [FN9] presents a stark contrast to the situation before the Illinois court in Baumgartner. There, the court was asked to determine whether a Christian Science practitioner had rendered Christian Science healing. The Illinois court held that it could not measure the standard of care of that treatment under medical malpractice criteria. Nor would it interpret the religious doctrine of the Christian Science faith to decide whether defendants deviated from the standard of care of an ordinary Christian Science practitioner and nurse. Baumgartner, 96 Ill.Dec. at 118, 490 N.E.2d at 1323. By contrast, the case before us would not necessitate such an intrusive inquiry into religious matters. The wrongful conduct alleged can be analyzed without evaluating the tenets of the Presbyterian religion. It would not be necessary to inquire whether Rykse or the church defendants deviated from the standard of care of an ordinary Presbyterian.

> FN9. It is important to remember that this claim is not here on summary judgment. We must adjudicate the matter before us in the procedural posture in which it is presented and express no view on the appropriate disposition at some other stage of the litigation. As Chief Judge Posner has written in a similar context:
> This suit may in the end fail, but we think the district judge jumped the gun in dismissing it on the pleadings. The federal rules do not require a plaintiff to allege sufficient facts to establish his right to a judgment. All it requires, with certain exceptions enumerated in Rule 9, none of which is applicable to this case, is a "short and plain"--which is to say, nonlegalistic, nonjargonistic--statement of what his claim is.
> Trevino v. Union Pac. R.R., 916 F.2d 1230, 1234 (7th Cir.1990).
> My brothers justify their votes to affirm the district court's dismissal of the counts against the church defendants on the ground that the pleadings do not allege with sufficient specificity that the church had permitted the individual defendant to engage in a secular pursuit under their aegis. My colleagues avoid mention of the fact that the allegations of the complaint with respect to the church defendants are no more vague than the allegations against the individual defendant that they permit to stand. Indeed, the district court did not determine that the complaint suffered from such an infirmity and, if the usual rules that govern our modern notice pleading are applied, such a result would not be permissible.
> My colleagues' position can survive only if there are special rules of pleading for cases that involve ecclesiastical entities. In my view, such a rule cannot be justified on several grounds. First, although the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do make exceptions to the usual pleading rules in the case of fraud, they make no such exceptions for cases dealing with church-related matters. As the Supreme Court's recent decision in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 122 L.Ed.2d 517 (1993), has made clear, we are not free to develop exceptions to what the Supreme Court and the Congress, acting under the Rules Enabling Act, have chosen to make. Second, absent a sufficiently important reason to do so, such a rule, if it did exist, would tread on thin ice with respect to the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment. It is basic Establishment Clause jurisprudence that the law cannot treat a church-related entity more favorably than it treats non-church-related entities that are similarly situated.

B. Sexual Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act

The same considerations that require the reinstatement of the counts alleging professional negligence and the negligent infliction of emotional harm require the reinstatement of Count IX alleging a violation of the Sexual *1438 Exploitation in Psychotherapy Act. Section (e) excludes "counseling of a spiritual or religious nature." 740 ILCS 140/1(e). [FN10] However, Mrs. Dausch's complaint on its face alleges that she was subjected to the abuse proscribed by the Act. At this stage of the litigation, it must be assumed that Rykse's counseling was secular. If the defendant was acting in a pastoral rather than a secular capacity, that defense can be raised by him and evaluated in due course. [FN11]

> FN10. Although the statute does not encompass religious counseling in "psychotherapy," the definition of "psychotherapist" in the statute is very broad:
> "Psychotherapist" means a physician, psychologist, nurse, chemical dependency counselor, social worker, or other person, whether or not licensed by the State, who performs or purports to perform psychotherapy.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

740 ILCS 140/1(d).

FN11. This statute applies only to "causes of action arising on, or after, its Jan. 1, 1989, effective date." See Corgan, 158 Ill.Dec. at 489, 574 N.E.2d at 602. It therefore cannot apply to Mrs. Dausch's allegations prior to January 1, 1989.

C. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

I turn now to Mrs. Dausch's allegations that Rykse and the defendant churches breached a fiduciary obligation to her. At the outset, I note that, by contrast to the other counts of the complaint that I have already reviewed, these counts allege that the breach of fiduciary duty occurred in the context of a pastor-parishioner relationship. Mrs. Dausch claimed a special relationship existed between herself, as a member of the congregation of Knox church seeking counseling, and Rykse as its pastor and counselor; it also existed between herself and the church defendants, who were guiding and controlling Rykse.

The district court rejected plaintiff's claim that the defendants breached a fiduciary duty to her. Under Illinois law, for a fiduciary duty to exist, there must be "a special confidence reposed in one who, by reason of such confidence, must act in good faith and with due regard to the interests of the person reposing such confidence." Estate of Osborn, 128 Ill.App.3d 453, 83 Ill.Dec. 694, 697, 470 N.E.2d 1114, 1117 (1984). Relying upon Osborn, the district court found no such fiduciary relationship as a matter of law. Nor, in the view of the district court, did the allegations of the complaint set forth sufficient facts to allege the existence of such a relationship. The district court also was of the view that alleging a breach of fiduciary obligation under these circumstances was simply an elliptical way of alleging clergy malpractice. Indeed, the court pointed out, because it would require the court to define the scope of a fiduciary duty owed persons by their clergy, a matter clearly rooted in the tenets and internal organization of a religion, it raises the same constitutional difficulties encountered when defining the standard of care under negligence.

[13][14] I believe that the decision of the district court is correct. At the outset, I note that Mrs. Dausch cited no Illinois authority establishing that Illinois recognizes such a fiduciary duty. As we have said on other occasions, federal courts sitting in diversity ought to be circumspect in expanding the law of a state beyond the boundaries established in the jurisprudence of the state. See Affiliated FM Ins. Co. v. Trane Co., 831 F.2d 153, 155 (7th Cir.1987); Twin Disc, Inc. v. Big Bud Tractor, Inc., 772 F.2d 1329, 1333 (7th Cir.1985). Moreover, given the constitutional difficulties that would be encountered if a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty were permitted under these circumstances, we ought to be particularly cautious in assuming that Illinois has taken such a step. Cf. NLRB v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 440 U.S. 490, 507, 99 S.Ct. 1313, 1322, 59 L.Ed.2d 533 (1979) (stating that, as a prudential matter, a law ought to be construed to avoid results of doubtful constitutionality). If the court were to recognize such a breach of fiduciary duty, it would be required to define a reasonable duty standard and to evaluate Rykse's conduct against that standard, an inquiry identical to that which Illinois has declined to undertake in the context of a clergy malpractice claim and one that is of doubtful validity under the Free Exercise Clause. It is clear that Illinois would not 1439 entertain a claim for breach of fiduciary obligation under the circumstances alleged here.

I believe that the counts of the complaint, with the exception of those that allege a breach of fiduciary duty, state a cause of action and must be reinstated by the district court. As I did at the beginning of the analysis, however, I stress that this case comes to us on the pleading. My assessment of the case must be circumscribed by that procedural posture. I intimate no opinion with respect to the merits of the case.

v.
BEASON, Sheriff.

February 3, 1890.

Appeal from the third judicial district of the territory of Idaho.

In April, 1889, the appellant, Samuel D. Davis, was indicted in the district court of the third judicial district of the territory of Idaho, in the county of Oneida, in connection with divers persons named, and divers other persons whose names were unknown to the grand jury, for a conspiracy to unlawfully pervert and obstruct the due administration of the laws of the territory, in this: That they would unlawfully procure themselves to be admitted to registration as electors of said county of Oneida, for the general election then next to occurin that county, when they were not entitled to be admitted to such registration, by appearing before the respective registrars of the election precincts in which they resided, and taking the oath prescribed by the statute of the state, in substance as follows: 'I do swear (or affirm) that I am a male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, (or will be on the 6th day of November, 1888;) that I have (or will have) actually resided in this territory four months, and in this county for thirty days, next preceding the day of the next ensuing election; that I have never been convicted of treason, felony, or bribery; that I am not registered or entitled to vote at any other place in this territory; and I do further swear that I am not a bigamist or polygamist; that I am not a member of any order, organization, or association which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages its members, devotees, or any other person, to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, as a duty arising or resulting from membership in such order, organization, or association, or which practices bigamy, polygamy, or plural or celestial marriage as a doctrinal rite of such organization; that I do not and will not, publicly or privately, or in any manner whatever, teach, advise, counsel, or encourage any person to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a religious duty or otherwise; that I do regard the constitution of the United States, and the laws thereof, and the laws of this territory, as interpreted by the courts, as the supreme laws of the land, the teachings of any order, organization, or association to the contrary notwithstanding, so help me God,'--when, in truth, each of the defendants was a member of an order, organization, and association, namely, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, commonly known as the 'Mormon Church,' which they knew taught, advised, counseled, and encouraged its members and devotees to commit the crimes of bigamy and polygamy as duties arising and resulting from membership in said order, organization, and association, and which order, organization, and association, as they all knew, practiced bigamy and polygamy, and plural and celestial marriage as doctrinal rites of said organization; and that, in pursuance of said conspiracy, the said defendants went before the registrars of different precincts of the county, (which are designated,) and took and had administered to them respectively the oath aforesaid. The defendants demurred to the indictment, and, the demurrer being overruled, they pleaded separately not guilty. On the trial which followed, on the 12th of September, 1889, the jury found the defendant Samuel D. Davis guilty, as charged in the indictment. The defendant was thereupon sentenced to pay a fine of $500, and, in default of its payment, to be confined in the county jail of Oneida county for a term not exceeding 250 days, and was remanded to the custody of the sheriff untill the judgment should be satisfied. Soon afterwards, on the same day, the defendant applied to the court before which the trial was had, and obtained a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he was imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of the county; that his imprisonment was by virtue of his conviction, and the judgment mentioned, and the warrant issued thereon; that such imprisonment was illegal; and that such illegality consisted in this: (1) That the facts in the indictment and record did not constitute a public offense, and the acts charged were not criminal or punishable under any statute or law of the territory; and (2) that so much of the statute of the territory which provides that no person is entitled to register or vote at any election who is 'a member of any order, organization, or association which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages its members, devotees, or any other person, to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, as a duty arising or resulting from membership in such order, organization, or association, or which practices bigamy or polygamy, or plural or celestial marriage as a doctrinal rite of such organization,' is a 'law respecting an establishment of religion,' in violation of the first amendment of the constitution, and void. The court ordered the writ to issue, directed to the sheriff, returnable before it at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, commanding the sheriff to have the body of the defendant before the court at the hour designated, with the time and cause of his imprisonment, and to do and receive what should then be considered concerning him. On the return of the writ, the sheriff produced the body of the defendant, and also the warrant of commitment under which he was held, and the record of the case showing his conviction for the conspiracy mentioned and the judgment thereon. To this return, the defendant, admitting the facts stated therein, excepted to their sufficiency to justify his detention. The court, holding that sufficient cause was not shown for the discharge of the defendant, ordered him to be remanded to the custody of the sheriff. From this judgment the defendant appealed to this court. Rev. St. § 1909.

Mr. Justice FIELD, after stating the facts as above, delivered the opinion of the court.

On this appeal our only inquiry is whether the district court of the territory had jurisdiction of the offense charged in the indictment, of which the defendant was found guilty. If it had jurisdiction, we can go no further. We cannot look into any alleged errors in its rulings, on the trial of the defendant. The writ of habeas corpus cannot be turned into a writ of error to review the action of that court. Nor can we inquire whether the evidence established the fact alleged, that the defendant was a member of an order or organization known as the 'Mormon Church,' called the 'Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints,' or the fact that the order of organization taught and counseled its members and devotees to commit the crimes of bigamy and polygamy, as duties arising from membership therein. On this hearing we can only consider whether, these allegations being taken as true, an offense was committed of which the territorial court had jurisdiction to try the defendant. And on this point there can be no serious discussion or difference of opinion. Bigamy and polygamy are crimes by the laws of all civilized and Christian countries. They are crimes by the laws of the United States, and they are crimes by the laws of Idaho. They tend to destroy the purity of the marriage relation, to disturb the peace of families, to degrade woman, and to debase man. Few crimes are more pernicious to the best interests of society, and receive more general or more deserved punishment. To extend exemption from punishment for such crimes would be to shock the moral judgment of the community. To call their *342 advocacy a tenet of religion is to offend the common sense of mankind. If they are crimes, then to teach, advise, and counsel their practice is to aid in their commission, and such teaching and counseling are themselves criminal, and proper subjects of punishment, as aiding and abetting crime are in all other cases. The term 'religion' has reference to one's views of his relations to his Creator, and to the obligations they impose of reverence for his being and character, and of obedience to his will. It is often confounded with the cultus or form of worship of a particular sect, but is distinguishable from the latter. The first amendment to the constitution, in declaring that congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or forbidding the free exercise thereof, was intended to allow every one under the jurisdiction of the United States to entertain such notions respecting his relations to his Maker and the duties they impose as may be approved by his judgment and conscience, and to exhibit his sentiments in such form of worship as he may think proper, not injurious to the equal rights of others, and to prohibit legislation for the support of any religious tenets, or the modes of worship of any sect. The oppressive measures adopted, and the cruelties and punishments inflicted, by the governments of Europe for many ages, to compel parties to conform, in their religious beliefs and modes of worship, to the views of the most numerous sect, and the folly of attempting in that way to control the mental operations of persons, and enforce an outward conformity to a prescribed standard, led to the adoption of the amendment in question. It was never intended or supposed that the amendment could be invoked as a protection against legislation for the punishment of acts inimical to the peace, good order, and morals of society. With man's relations to his Maker and the obligations he may think they impose, and the manner in which an expression shall be made by him of his belief on those subjects, no interference can be permitted, provided always the laws of society, designed to secure its peace and prosperity, and the morals of its people, are not interfered with. However free the 301 exercise of religion may *343 be, it must be subordinate to the criminal laws of the country, passed with reference to actions regarded by general consent as properly the subjects of punitive legislantion. There have been sects which denied as a part of their religious tenets that there should be any marriage tie, and advocated promiscuous intercourse of the sexes, as prompted by the passions of its members. And history discloses the fact that the necessity of human sacrifices, on special occasions, has been a tenet of many sects. Should a sect of either of these kinds ever find its way into this country, swift punishment would follow the carrying into effect of its doctrines, and no heed would be given to the pretense that, as religious beliefs, their supporters could be protected in their exercise by the constitution of the United States. Probably never before in the history of this country has it been seriously contended that the whole punitive power of the government for acts, recognized by the general consent of the Christian world in modern times as proper matters for prohibitory legislation, must be suspended in order that the tenets of a religious sect encouraging crime may be carried out without hindrance.

On this subject the observations of this court through the late Chief Justice WAITE, in Reynolds v. U. S., are pertinent. 98 U. S. 145, 165, 166. In that case the defendant was indicted and convicted under section 5352 of the Revised Statutes, which declared that 'every person having a husband or wife living, who marries another whether married or single, in a territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, is guilty of bigamy, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, and by imprisonment for a term not more than five years.' The case being brought here, the court, after referring to a law passed in December, 1788, by the state of Virginia, punishing bigamy and polygamy with death, said that from that day there never had been a time in any state of the Union when polygamy had not been an offense against society, cognizable by the civil courts, and punished with more or less severity; and added: 'Marriage, while from its very nature a sacred obligation, is, nevertheless, in most civilized nations a *344 civil contract, and usually regulated by law. Upon it society may be said to be built, and out of its fruits spring social relations and social obligations and duties, with which government is necessarily required to deal. In fact, according as monogamous or polygamous marriages are allowed, do we find the principles on which the government of the people, to a greater or less extent, rests.' And, referring to the statute cited, he said: 'It is constitutional and valid, as prescribing a rule of action for all those residing in the territories, and in places over which the United States have exclusive control. This being so, the only question which remains is whether those who make polygamy a part of their religion are excepted from the operation of the statute. If they are, then those who do not make polygamy a part of their religious belief may be found guilty and punished, while those who do must be acquitted and go free. This would be introducing a new element into criminal law. Laws are made for the government of actions, and while they cannot interfere with mere religious belief and opinions, they may with practices. Suppose one believed that human sacrifices were a necessary part of religious worship, would it be seriously contended that the civil government under which he lived could not interfere to prevent a sacrifice? Or, if a wife religiously believed it was her duty to burn herself upon the funeral pile of her dead husband, would it be deyond the power of the civil government to prevent her carrying her belief into practice? So here, as a law of the organization of society under the exclusive dominion of the United States, it is provided that plural marriages shall not be allowed. Can a man excuse his practices to the contrary, because of his religious belief? To permit this would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and in effect to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself. Government could exist only in name under such circumstances.' And in Murphy v. Ramsey, 114 U. S. 15, 45, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747, referring to the act of congress excluding polygamists and bigamists from voting or holding office, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice MATTHEWS, said: 'Certainly no legislation can be supposed more wholesome and necessary in the founding of a *345 free, self-governing commonwealth, fit to take rank as one of the co-ordinate states of the Union, than that which seeks to establish it on the basis of the idea of the family, as consisting in and springing from the union for life of one man and one woman in the holy estate of matrimony; the sure foundation of all that is stable and noble in our civilization; the best guaranty of that reverent morality which is the source of all beneficent progress in social and political improvement. And to this end no means are more directly and immediately suitable than those provided by this act, which endeavors to withdraw all political influence from those who are practically hostile to its attainment.' It is assumed by counsel of the petitioner that, because no mode of worship can be established, or religious tenets enforced, in this country, therefore any form of worship may be followed, and any tenets, however destructive of society, may be held and advocated, if asserted to be a part of the religious doctrines of those advocating and practicing them. But nothing is further from the truth. While legislation for the establishment of a religion is forbidden, and its free exercise permitted, it does not follow that everything which may be so called can be tolerated. Crime is not the less odious because sanctioned by what any particular sect may designate as 'religion.'

It only remains to refer to the laws which authorized the legislature of the territory of Idaho to prescribe the qualifiations of voters, and the oath they were required to take. The Revised Statutes provide that 'the legislative power of every territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the constitution 302 and laws of the United States. But no law shall be passed interfering with the primary disposal of the soil; no tax shall be imposed upon the property of the United States; nor shall the lands or other property of non-residents be taxed higher than the lands or other property of residents.' Rev. St. § 1851. Under this general authority it would seem that the territorial legislature was authorized to prescribe any qualifications for voters, calculated to secure obedience to its laws. But, in addition to the above law, section 1859 of the Revised Statutes *346 provides that 'every male citizen above the age of twenty-one, including persons who have legally declared their intention to become citizens in any territory hereafter organized, and who are actual residents of such territory at the time of the organization thereof, shall be entitled to vote at the first election in such territory, and to hold any office therein; subject, nevertheless, to the limitations specified in the next section,' namely, that at all elections in any territory subsequently organized by congress, as well as at all elections in territories already organized, the qualifications of voters and for holding office shall be such as may be prescribed by the legislative assembly of each territory, subject, nevertheless, to the following restrictions: First, that the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States above the age of 21, or persons above that age who have declared their intention to become such citizens; second, that the elective franchise or the right of holding office shall not be denied to any citizen on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; third, that no soldier or sailor, or other person in the army or navy, or attached to troops in the service of the United States, shall be allowed to vote unless he has made his permanent domicile in the territory for six months; and, fourth, that no person belonging to the army or navy shall be elected to or hold a civil office or appointment in the territory. These limitations are the only ones placed upon the authority of territorial legislatures against granting the right of suffrage or of holding office. They have the power, therefore, to prescribe any reasonable qualifications of voters and for holding office, not inconsistent with the above limitations. In our judgment, section 501 of the Revised Statutes of Idaho territory, which provides that 'no person under guardianship, non compos mentis, or insane, nor any person convicted of treason, felony, or bribery in this territory, or in any other state or territory in the Union, unless restored to civil rights; nor any person who is a bigamist or polygamist, or who teaches, advises, *347 counsels, or encourages any person or persons to become bigamists or polygamists, or to commit any other crime defined by law, or to enter into what is known as plural or celestial marriage, or who is a member of any order, organization, or association which teaches, advises, counsels, or encourages its members or devotees, or any other persons, to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a rite or ceremony of such order, organization, or association, or otherwise, is permitted to vote at any election, or to hold any position or office of honor, trust, or profit within this territory,'--is not open to any constitutional or legal objection. With the exception of persons under guardianship or of unsound mind, it simply excludes from the privilege of voting, or of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit, those who have been convicted of certain offenses, and those who advocate a practical resistance to the laws of the territory, and justify and approve the commission of crimes forbidden by it. The second subdivision of section 504 of the Revised Statutes of Idaho, requiring every person desiring to have his name registered as a voter to take an oath that he does not belong to an order that advises a disregard of the criminal law of the territory, is not open to any valid legal objection to which out attention has been called.

The position that congress has, by its statute, covered the whole subject of punitive legislation against bigamy and polygamy, leaving nothing for territorial action on the subject, does not impress us as entitled to much weight. The statute of congress of March 22, 1882, amending a previous section of the Revised Statutes in reference to bigamy, declares 'that no polygamist, bigamist, or any person cohabiting with more than one woman, and no woman cohabiting with any of the persons described as aforesaid in this section, in any territory or other place over which the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, shall be entitled to vote at any election held in any such territory or other place, or be eligible for election or appointment to, or be entitled to hold any office or place of public trust, honor, or emolument in, under, or for any such territory or place, or under the United States.' 22 St. 31. *348 This is a general law applicable to all territories and other places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. It does not purport to restrict the legislation of the territories over kindred offenses, or over the means for their ascertainment and prevention. The cases in which the legislation of congress will supersede the legislation of a state or territory, without specific provisions to that effect, are those in which the same matter is the subject of legislation by both. There the action of congress may well be considered as covering the entire ground. But here there is nothing of this kind. The act of congress does not touch upon teaching, advising, and counseling the practice of bigamy and polygamy, that is, upon aiding and abetting in the commission of those crimes, nor upon the mode adopted, by means of the oath required for registration, to prevent persons from being enabled by their votes to defeat the criminal laws of the country. The judgment of the court below is therefore affirmed.

NOTE.--The constitutions of several states, in providing for religious freedom, have declared expressly that such freedom shall not be construed to excuse acts of licentiousness, or to justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state Thus, the constitution of New York of 1777 provided as follows: 'The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without *303 discrimination or preference, shall forever hereafter be allowed, within this state, to all mankind: provided, that the liberty of conscience hereby granted shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this state.' Article 38. The same declaration is repeated in the constitution of 1821, (article 7, § 3,) and in that of 1846, (article 1, § 3,) except that for the words 'hereby granted,' the words 'hereby secured' are substituted. The constitutions of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Maryland, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, and South Carolina contain a similar declaration.

Petitioners,

Dennis GRABRIAN and Diocese of Colorado Springs, Respondents.

No. 86SC336.

Oct. 17, 1988.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 7, 1988.

Divorced husband brought action against priest and diocese, alleging that priest engaged in actions during marriage counseling which he knew or should have known would lead to additional marital problems. Divorced wife, originally defendant in action, but against whom husband dismissed claims, filed cross claims against priest and diocese. The District Court of El Paso County, Joe A. Cannon, J., dismissed claims, and husband and wife appealed. The Court of Appeals, Van Cise, J., 729 P.2d 1018, affirmed. On certiorari, the Supreme Court, Erickson, J., held that: (1) wife's claims against Catholic clergyman with whom she and husband consulted for marriage counseling, for his alleged fiduciary breach and extreme and outrageous conduct in inducing wife to engage in sexual relations with him, were not barred by heart balm statute; (2) clergyman was not insulated from liability by First Amendment; (3) clergyman was under fiduciary obligation not to do anything that might harm plaintiffs' marital relationship, such as engaging in sexual relationship with wife; (4) no claim for clergy malpractice would lie based on clergyman's conduct; (5) allegations in wife's complaint were sufficient to state claim for outrageous conduct causing severe emotional distress; (6) archdiocese was not vicariously liable for clergyman's conduct; (7) allegations in wife's complaint were sufficient to state cause of action against archdiocese for negligent supervision; and (8) husband's claim for breach of fiduciary duty was not barred by heart balm statute.

Plaintiff-petitioner Robert Destefano (Robert) and crossclaimant- petitioner Edna Destefano (Edna) sought review of the court of appeals decision which affirmed the dismissal of their claims against respondents Dennis Grabrian (Grabrian), a Catholic priest, and the Diocese of Colorado Springs (diocese), and granted summary judgment. Destefano v. Grabrian, 729 P.2d 1018 (Colo.App.1986) (Sternberg, J., dissenting). We granted certiorari on two issues: (1) whether section 13-20-202, 6A C.R.S. (1987) (heart balm statute), bars an action against a person who assumes the role of marriage counselor when the counseling relationship results in consensual sexual relations between a counselor and a counselee; and (2) whether the free exercise clause of the first amendment to the United States Constitution prohibits tort liability for conduct which arose in the context of a counseling relationship between a clergyman and members of his congregation. The court of appeals reached the right result in affirming the dismissal of Edna's fifth crossclaim and Robert's first and second claims for relief. Based upon the record, the defendants' motions should not have been considered to be motions for summary judgment. Accordingly, we affirm the result in part, reverse in part, and return the case to the court of appeals with directions to remand to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Robert filed a complaint naming as defendants his wife Edna; Grabrian; a Catholic priest for the diocese; and the diocese. Robert later filed an amended complaint which named only Grabrian and the diocese as defendants and sought no relief against Edna. Subsequently, Edna filed an answer and crossclaim [FN1] which was directed to the original complaint.

FN1. As the pleadings are now structured, Robert is not asserting a claim against Edna. Robert did not file a motion pursuant to C.R.C.P. 21 to drop Edna as a defendant. Consequently, no court order was entered to drop Edna as a defendant, and she remains a party. See United States v. Wyoming Nat. Bank, 505 F.2d 1064 (10th Cir.1974); Zarate v. State Dep't of Health & Rehabilitation Servs., 347 F.Supp. 1004 (S.D.Fla.1971); Kennan v. Warren, 328 F.Supp. 525 (W.D.Wis.1971). Edna's answer and crossclaim respond to the allegations in the original complaint. We have grave concerns about the procedural irregularities that appear in the skeletal record in this case but we consider Edna's crossclaims on certiorari since the issue was addressed by both the district court and the court of appeals.

278 Grabrian and the diocese filed motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. C.R.C.P. 12(b)(5). [FN2] In considering such a motion, we are required to construe the allegations of the pleadings in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and we must assume that the allegations contained in Robert's complaint and in Edna's cross-complaint are true. See Abts v. Board of Educ., 622 P.2d 518, 521 (Colo.1980); Bell v. Arnold, 175 Colo. 277, 281, 487 P.2d 545, 547 (1971). Whether any of Robert's and Edna's claims are true can only be resolved by a trial on the merits. Accordingly, we agree with the dissent in the court of appeals and hold that summary judgment should not have been granted. Destefano v. Grabrian, 729 P.2d 1018. The issue is whether the district court erred in dismissing Robert's claims and Edna's crossclaims for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted.

FN2. The court of appeals treated Grabrian's and the diocese's C.R.C.P. 12(b) motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment under C.R.C.P. 56. The trial court dismissed the claims of Robert and Edna under C.R.C.P. 12(b). No affidavits or other materials were submitted to support Grabrian's and the diocese's motion and the factual issues are not undisputed. A motion to dismiss can only be considered as a motion for summary judgment when affidavits or other matters apart from the pleadings are presented and not excluded by the court. Travelers Ins. Co. v. Savio, 706 P.2d 1258, 1276 (Colo.1985); Enger v. Walker Field, Colo. Pub. Airport Auth., 181 Colo. 253, 256-57, 508 P.2d 1245, 1247 (1973).
Here, the trial court admitted the truth of the factual allegations and determined that the claims asserted by both Robert and Edna did not state a legally cognizable claim upon which relief can be granted. See Churchey v. Adolph Coors Co., 759 P.2d 1336 (Colo.1988), for an analysis of summary judgment and the disputed fact issue.

The complaint alleges that in 1979, Robert and Edna were having marital problems which led them to seek marriage counseling from Grabrian. The Destefanos were both Catholics who had "faith and confidence in their parish priest." Grabrian's supervisors knew or should have known that he was unsuited for marriage counseling and "would cause harm to a jeopardized marital relationship." To comply with church doctrine regarding marriage and divorce, the diocese encouraged its parishioners to participate in marriage counseling.

During the course of the counseling relationship, Grabrian developed a relationship with Edna, which "Grabrian knew or should have known would lead to additional marital problems between [Robert] and Edna." Grabrian knew that his intimate relationship with Edna probably would cause the dissolution of the Destefano marriage. Robert and Edna were told by Grabrian that he would act as their marriage counselor and that they could trust him. Grabrian's continued involvement in this relationship was occasioned by a reckless disregard for Robert's rights and feelings. The diocese owed a continuing duty to Robert and others similarly situated to reasonably train, interview, and supervise priests engaged in counseling married couples. With actual or constructive knowledge of Grabrian's prior indiscretions, the diocese willfully and recklessly breached its duty. Grabrian's conduct resulted in an intimate relationship between Grabrian and Edna that contributed to the dissolution of the Destefano marriage.

Based upon these allegations, Robert sought compensatory and exemplary damages for: (1) negligence against Grabrian for the manner in which he conducted the counseling and against the diocese on the theory of respondeat superior for failing to train, monitor, and supervise Grabrian adequately; (2) intentional infliction of emotional distress and outrageous conduct of both Grabrian and the diocese; and (3) Grabrian's breach of fiduciary duty. Due to the alleged willful and reckless nature of Grabrian's and the diocese's actions, Robert requested exemplary damages under each claim for relief.

In her crossclaim, Edna alleged the following facts that we will assume to be true in considering the motions to dismiss. Abts v. Board of Educ., 622 P.2d 518. Marital difficulties prompted the Destefanos to seek the assistance of a professional marriage counselor through St. Mary's 279 Catholic Church, which was under the jurisdiction of the diocese. The Destefanos met on two occasions with Grabrian, who represented himself to be a professional with the necessary skills to assist people in need of professional marriage counseling. Grabrian agreed to assist them as a couple. Thereafter, Grabrian informed Robert that he should seek his own counselor. Grabrian represented to Edna that he was a capable, trained professional who could be relied upon to assist her with the serious marital and personal problems she was experiencing, and that she could trust him to act in her best interests. She in fact trusted him and followed his advice. Grabrian knew that his conduct with Edna would result in the collapse and dissolution of her marriage, and would cause the Destefanos extreme and permanent emotional suffering.

Knowing that Edna was "extremely vulnerable emotionally," Grabrian began a relationship with Edna which turned adulterous due to the actions of Grabrian. Grabrian had repeatedly engaged in sexual relations with other women similarly situated. Grabrian's past conduct was known or should have been known to the diocese. The actions of Grabrian and the diocese entitled Edna to compensatory and exemplary damages for their breach of fiduciary duty, negligence, and outrageous conduct.

The trial court granted the motions of Grabrian and the diocese to dismiss, finding that the issues raised by the Destefanos "are inextricably linked to questions of doctrine, theology, the usage and customs of the [Catholic] Church, written laws, and the fundamental organization of the Church." The trial court concluded that no compelling state interest warranted intrusion by the courts into the internal standards of the church. The trial court also stated that the Destefanos' claims are prohibited by section 13-20-201, 6 C.R.S. (1987). A divided panel of the court of appeals affirmed the trial court and concluded that both Robert's and Edna's claims were barred by the heart balm statute.

II.

[1][2] Robert and Edna contend that their claims are not barred by section 13-20-202, 6 C.R.S. (1987) (heart balm statute), which provides: "All civil causes of action for breach of promise to marry, alienation of affections, criminal conversation, and seduction are hereby abolished." [FN3] In Goldberg v. Musim, 162 Colo. 461, 427 P.2d 698 (1967), we addressed the issue of whether a complaint framed as an impairment of contract action was in fact a claim for alienation of affections prohibited by the predecessor to section 13-20-202, section 41-3-1, C.R.S. (1963). We said:

> FN3. Professor Prosser has noted that:
> Criminal conversation, enticement, and alienation of affections still are often treated as separate torts, but there is no good reason for distinguishing them. They represent three forms of interference with aspects of the same relational interest, and of course all three may be present in the same case. When the action is for criminal conversation, proof of enticement or alienation will go to increase the

>
> There is now a decided tendency to confuse the three, or to lump them together, usually under the name "alienation of affections," without any attempt to distinguish the possible elements of the tort.

> While we agree that there may well be no good reason to distinguish alienation of affections, criminal conversation, and seduction from each other, we think it necessary to do so here because the heart balm statute enumerates each separately.

We agree with the trial court when it concluded that this complaint sets forth what in law is a claim for alienation of affections. The injury in such an action is one of loss of affection and consortium, including loss of society, companionship and aid. The action required on the part of a defendant in such a case is simply inducing the spouse of the plaintiff to leave, or, once having left, to remain separated from the plaintiff. The action necessarily involves intent to induce the spouse to separate.... [T]he facts alleged in ... the complaint place them squarely within the abolished action, for all that is alleged rises out of a relationship, i.e. an inducement to separate 280 and resulting loss of society, loss of services, pain, suffering and humiliation.

Id. at 467, 427 P.2d at 701 (citations omitted). Goldberg, however, did not state that all cases that include elements of the abolished actions must be dismissed. In Goldberg we noted that the plaintiff's claim for fraudulent transfer of her husband's property was more appropriately heard in plaintiff's parallel action for separate maintenance. We did not state that the property claim fell within the statutory ban.

Here, the court of appeals relied upon Nicholson v. Han, 12 Mich.App. 35, 162 N.W.2d 313 (1968), a case in which a husband sued the family doctor who had been functioning as a marriage counselor and who had warranted an improvement in marital relations. After the plaintiff and his wife were divorced, the plaintiff learned that his wife and the defendant had commenced a sexual relationship during the course of counseling. Although the complaint was drafted in the language of fraud and breach of contract, the case was dismissed as falling within the prohibited actions of seduction, alienation of affections, and criminal conversation.

The Michigan Court of Appeals later held, in Cotton v. Kambly, 101 Mich.App. 537, 300 N.W.2d 627 (1980), that the abolition of claims for seduction did not bar plaintiff's malpractice claim against her psychiatrist who had induced her to engage in sexual activities under the guise of therapy. The court distinguished Nicholson, stating that the issue of malpractice was never raised in that case since the appeal from the trial court was dismissed on the breach of contract and fraud counts only. Id. at 539, 300 N.W.2d at 628. The court held that although the elements of seduction were present, the essence of the action was not for seduction but rather for breach of professional standards of care. In so holding, the court stated:

> Part of plaintiff's claim is for medical malpractice, which has been defined as the failure of a member of the medical profession, employed to treat a case professionally, to fulfill the duty to exercise that degree of skill, care and diligence exercised by members of the same profession, practicing in the same or similar locality, in light of the present state of medical science. Plaintiff alleges that defendant induced her to engage in sexual relations with him as part of her prescribed therapy. We see no reason for distinguishing between this type of malpractice and others, such as improper administration of a drug or a defective operation. In each situation, the essence of the claim is the doctor's departure from proper standards of medical practice.

Id. at 540-41, 300 N.W.2d at 628-29.

Other courts have also focused on the critical elements of the complaint and have permitted recovery despite the presence of claims which have been abolished. In Gasper v. Lighthouse, Inc., 73 Md.App. 367, 533 A.2d 1358 (1987), cert. denied, 311 Md. 718, 537 A.2d 272 (1988), a husband sued a marriage counselor and the counselor's employer, asserting breach of contract and tort claims as a result of the sexual relationship between his wife and the counselor that occurred while he and his wife were undergoing counseling. The court stated that the:

> [A]bolition of the actions for alienation of affections and criminal conversation does not preclude a person from maintaining a traditional > breach of contract action or a recognized tort action merely because the breach arose from an improper liaison with the plaintiff's spouse or because one effect of the alleged breach or tortious conduct was a disruption or breakup of his or her marriage. What is precluded, however, is the refitting of the abolished actions into other forms. One cannot sue to recover for injuries arising from "defilement of the marriage bed" or from an interference with the marriage by simply casting the defendant's conduct as a breach of contract, or negligence, or some other intentional tort. It is that kind of sham that the case law prevents.

Id. at 372, 533 A.2d at 1360 (citations omitted). The court concluded that all counts were essentially claims for alienation of 281 affections and criminal conversation, and upheld the dismissal of the complaint. [FN4]

> FN4. See also Richard H. v. Larry D., 198 Cal.App.3d 591, 596, 243 Cal.Rptr. 807, 810 (1988) ("We do not think the [heart balm] statute was intended to lower the standard of care which psychiatrists owe their patients, nor to permit them to avoid liability for breach of their professional and fiduciary responsibilities or commit fraud."); Barbara A. v. John G., 145 Cal.App.3d 369, 193 Cal.Rptr. 422 (1983) (abolition of seduction did not bar action against attorney for sexual intercourse with client where action was based on battery and misrepresentation); Van Meter v. Van Meter, 328 N.W.2d 497 (Iowa 1983) (elements and policy considerations of intentional infliction of emotional distress were different from alienation of affections claim so that claim was not subject to dismissal merely because it arose from a failed marital relationship); Roy v. Hartogs, 85 Misc.2d 891, 381 N.Y.S.2d 587 (1976) (abolition of seduction as a cause of action does not preclude recovery for harm caused by a psychiatrist who had sexual intercourse with a patient as part of therapy).

In Lund v. Caple, 100 Wash.2d 739, 675 P.2d 226 (1984), the Washington Supreme Court rejected a husband's claim for loss of consortium and outrageous conduct resulting from the defendant clergyman's sexual misconduct with the plaintiff's wife, who had consulted the defendant for marital and personal counseling. [FN5] The court affirmed the trial court's entry of summary judgment based on the holding in Wyman v. Wallace, 94 Wash.2d 99, 615 P.2d 452 (1980), reasoning that the wife's refusal to join in the lawsuit indicated the possibility of a vengeful motive on the part of the husband and that the policy considerations of abolishing actions for alienation of affection applied. The outrageous conduct claim was also dismissed, not on the basis of the "heart balm" rationale, but because the plaintiff, who was not present when the alleged conduct occurred, did not establish the necessary elements of the tort of outrageous conduct. The Lund opinion, however, did not preclude:

> FN5. Washington does not have a heart balm statute. The Washington Supreme Court, however, abolished alienation of affections as a viable claim in Wyman v. Wallace, 94 Wash.2d 99, 615 P.2d 452 (1980).

> [A]n action against a counselor, pastoral or otherwise, in which a counselor is negligent in treating either a husband or wife. It is conceivable that a malpractice action would be appropriate where a counselor fails to conform to an appropriate standard of care, injures the patient/spouse which in turn results in loss of consortium to the other spouse.

Lund, 675 P.2d at 231. The court then stated that the action was essentially a suit for alienation of affections because although the underlying tort was based on the "impaired" spouse's extramarital relationship, the "impaired" spouse did not assert a claim. "Absent the 'impaired' spouse's claims, remaining allegations amount to an alienation of affections actions [sic]...." Id.

In determining the scope of Colorado's heart balm statute, we are guided by section 13-20-201, 6A C.R.S. (1987), which provides:

> Legislative declaration. The remedies provided by law on or before April 27, 1937, for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction, and breach of contract to marry have > been subjected to grave abuses, caused extreme annoyance, embarrassment, humiliation, and pecuniary damage to many persons wholly innocent and free of any wrongdoing who were merely the victims of circumstances, and have been exercised by unscrupulous persons for their unjust enrichment, and have furnished vehicles for the commission or attempted commission of crime and in many cases have resulted in the perpetration of frauds, it is hereby declared as the public policy of the state that the best interests of the people of the state will be served by the abolition thereof. Consequently, in the public interest, the necessity for the enactment of this part 2 is hereby declared as a matter of legislative determination.

In interpreting section 13-20-202, we must give effect to the policy considerations enumerated in section 13-20-201, but should not read the statute so broadly as to preclude any cause of action involving extramarital affairs, regardless of whether a 282 claim for relief which is not included in section 13-20-202 is enumerated. In our view, the heart balm statute only precludes those causes of action specifically listed in the statute. As we held in Goldberg, a plaintiff will not be able to mask one of the abolished actions behind a common law label. However, if the essence of the complaint is directed to a cause of action other than one which has been abolished, that claim is legally cognizable. Accordingly, we must review the legal sufficiency of the claims made by both Robert and Edna to determine whether any claim, admitting the truth of the factual allegations states, as a matter of law, a claim upon which relief may be granted. Because Edna has asserted claims that are more inclusive than those asserted by Robert, we will address the sufficiency of her claims first.

III.
Edna's Claims

[3] Grabrian and the diocese assert that the court of appeals properly upheld the trial court's dismissal of Edna's crossclaims because her claims were for seduction which were abolished by section 13-20-202. We disagree.

Seduction is "the act of a man in enticing a woman to have unlawful intercourse with him by means of persuasion, solicitation, promise, bribes, or other means without the employment of force." Weinlich v. Coffee, 67 Colo. 382, 176 P. 210 (1919) (citation omitted). In Weinlich, the court concluded that because the plaintiff was married at the time of the seduction and no statute permitted a seduction action by a married woman, she could not sue her seducer. Id. at 385, 176 P. 211. The court stated:

> At common law a seduced female has no cause of action against her seducer, not only because she is a party to the wrongful act, but also because loss of service is indispensable to a right of recovery, and no one except those entitled to the services of the female can maintain an action for the seduction, the right of action being based solely upon the relation of master and servant. In many states, however, a right of action has been expressly given by statute to the female seduced.
> The statutes require that the female must be unmarried at the time of her seduction, in order to maintain an action therefor.

Id. at 384-85, 176 P. at 211 (citation omitted). The statute relating to the crime of seduction that was in effect when the General Assembly enacted the heart balm statute in 1937 was also limited to unmarried females. [FN6] Because Edna was married, we conclude that her crossclaim did not set forth a claim based on seduction.

> FN6. Section 207, C.S.A. ch. 48 (1935) states:
> Any man who shall, under promise of marriage, seduce, and have illicit connection with any unmarried female, of previous chaste character, or who shall, without such promise of marriage, seduce and have illicit connection with any unmarried female, of previous chaste character, under the age of sixteen years, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary, not exceeding ten years; provided, that no conviction shall be had under this section on the testimony of the female seduced, unsupported by other evidence, nor unless the indictment shall be found, or the information laid, within two years after the commission of the offense; and, provided, further, that the subsequent marriage of the parties, prior to judgment upon the > indictment, or information, shall be a bar to the further prosecution of the offense.

Edna's allegations also do not set forth a claim for alienation of affections. As we previously stated, an element of a claim for alienation of affections is that the defendant must intend to induce the plaintiff's spouse to separate. For purposes of Edna's crossclaims, Edna is the plaintiff. Edna did not allege that Grabrian's acts were intended to cause Robert to separate from her. Nor, in our view, do the allegations, in essence, support such an interpretation. The crossclaim does not include a claim for alienation of affections.

Edna's crossclaim also fails to set forth a claim for criminal conversation. "A recovery for criminal conversation requires proof that there was a valid marriage and that the defendant had adulterous relations *283 with the plaintiff's spouse." 1 H. Clark, The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States, § 12.3, at 662 (2d ed. 1987). [FN7] Since Edna does not allege that Grabrian's adulterous conduct involved her husband, her crossclaim is not an action for criminal conversation.

> FN7. Colorado criminal conversation cases, while not specifically defining the elements of the claim, appear to agree with this definition. See, e.g., Bradbury v. Brooks, 82 Colo. 133, 257 P. 359 (1927); Sullivan v. Valiquette, 66 Colo. 170, 180 P. 91 (1919); Stark v. Johnson, 43 Colo. 243, 95 P. 930 (1908).

Accordingly, we hold that Edna's crossclaim is not barred by section 13-20- 202.

Edna set forth five claims for relief in her crossclaim: (1) Grabrian breached his fiduciary duty to Edna; (2) Grabrian negligently performed his duty as a marital counselor; (3) Grabrian engaged in outrageous conduct with regard to Edna; (4) the diocese knew or should have known of Grabrian's negligence, breach of fiduciary duty, and outrageous conduct, and as such breached its duty to supervise Grabrian; (5) because the diocese had jurisdiction over and control of Grabrian, the acts and negligence of Grabrian are imputed to the diocese. We examine each of these claims in turn to determine whether they were properly dismissed by the trial court.

A.

[4] The threshold issue that we must first resolve is whether a member of the clergy, who holds himself out as being trained and capable of conducting marital counseling, [FN8] is immune from any liability for harm caused by his counseling by virtue of the first amendment.

> FN8. Grabrian and the diocese take issue with characterizing Grabrian as a "person who had assumed the role of marriage counselor." In her crossclaim, Edna alleged that "the Defendant represented himself to be a professional with the necessary skills to assist people in need of counseling" and that "the Defendant represented to Edna Destefano that he was a capable, trained professional who could be relied upon to assist her with the serious marital and personal problems she was having." For purposes of this appeal, we must assume the truth of these allegations, and therefore conclude that the characterization of Grabrian is proper. The nature of the counseling relationship between Grabrian and Edna, beyond what is alleged in the pleadings, is an issue of fact to be determined at trial.

Grabrian and the diocese assert that Robert's and Edna's claims are "violative of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution in that the performance of pastoral duties by a Catholic priest, including sacramental counseling of parishioners, is a matter of ecclesiastical cognizance and policy with which a civil court cannot interfere." The first amendment to the United States Constitution prohibits any "law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." U.S. Const. amend. 1. Marital counseling by a cleric presents difficult questions because it often incorporates both religious counseling and secular counseling. While we agree that spiritual counseling, including marital counseling by a priest, may implicate first amendment rights, we are not convinced that the allegations in Edna's crossclaim permit Grabrian to assert a free exercise clause defense.

The United States Supreme Court has distinguished the absolute freedom of religious belief from the limited freedom to act upon those beliefs. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 303-04, 60 S.Ct. 900, 903-04, 84 L.Ed. 1213 (1940). In Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 223, 83 S.Ct. 1560, 1572, 10 L.Ed.2d 844 (1963), the Court stated that a party challenging governmental action as an infringement of his free exercise rights must show that there is a coercive effect against his practice of religion. When the free exercise clause is raised as a defense, the threshold question is whether the conduct of the defendant is religious. Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 215-16, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 1533-34, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972) ("to have the protection of the [r]eligious [c]lauses the claims must be rooted in religious belief"); see Note, Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress by Spiritual Counselors: Can Outrageous Conduct be "Free Exercise"?, 84 Mich.L.Rev. 1269, 1302 (1986). "In the spiritual counseling context, the free exercise clause is relevant only if the 284 defendant can show that the conduct that allegedly caused plaintiff's distress was in fact 'part of the belief and practices' of the religious group." Id. (citing Christofferson v. Church of Scientology, 57 Or.App. 203, 245, 644 P.2d 577, 604 (1982). The alleged misconduct of Grabrian that is at the very heart of Edna's crossclaim is that he induced Edna to engage in a sexual relationship during the course, and as a result, of marital counseling. Edna alleged that her damages were a direct result of the sexual relationship. If the alleged conduct of Grabrian was dictated by his sincerely held religious beliefs or was consistent with the practice of his religion, we would have to resolve a difficult first amendment issue. This, however, is not the case. It has not been asserted that Grabrian's conduct falls within the practices or beliefs of the Catholic church. Grabrian's and the diocese's brief states that "every Catholic is well aware of the vow of celibacy required of a priest at the time of his ordination." The brief also points out that "sexual involvement by a priest has been held to be per se outside the scope of his employment." The brief recognizes and admits that sexual activity by a priest is fundamentally antithetical to Catholic doctrine. As such, the conduct upon which Edna's crossclaim is premised is, by definition, not an expression of a sincerely held religious belief.

Members of the clergy cannot, in all circumstances, use the shield of the first amendment as protection and as a basis for immunity from civil suit. [FN9] When the alleged wrongdoing of a cleric clearly falls outside the beliefs and doctrine of his religion, he cannot avail himself of the protection afforded by the first amendment.

> FN9. It is well-established that religious institutions are not immune from tort liability. See, e.g., Heath v. First Baptist Church, 341 So.2d 265 (Fla.App.) (church may be held liable for slip and fall on the premises under negligence claim), cert. denied, 348 So.2d 946 (Fla.1977); Fintak v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 51 Ill.App.3d 391, 9 Ill.Dec. 223, 366 N.E.2d 480 (1977) (same); Bass v. Aetna Ins. Co., 370 So.2d 511 (La.1979) (church responsible for negligence of pastor who created an unreasonable risk of injury by not clearing aisles to make way for the "running in the spirit," a common form of religious expression at that church).

[5][6][7] Edna's first claim for relief alleges that Grabrian, in his position as a priest and as one who holds himself out to the community as a professional or trained marriage counselor, breached his fiduciary duty to her. A fiduciary is a person having a duty, created by his undertaking, to act primarily for the benefit of another in matters connected with the undertaking. A fiduciary has a duty to deal "with utmost good faith and solely for the benefit" of the beneficiary. See CJI-Civ. 31:16 (1980). A fiduciary's obligations to the beneficiary include, among other things, a duty of loyalty, see Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 170 (1959), a duty to exercise reasonable care and skill, see Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 174 (1959), and a duty to deal impartially with beneficiaries, see Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 183 (1959).

harm resulting from a breach of the duty imposed by the relationship. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 874 (1979). We have no difficulty in finding that Grabrian, as a marriage counselor to Robert and Edna, owed a fiduciary duty to Edna. His duty to Edna was "created by his undertaking" to counsel her. Grabrian had a duty, given the nature of the counseling relationship, to engage in conduct designed to improve the Destefanos' marital relationship. As a fiduciary, he was obligated not to engage in conduct which might harm the Destefanos' relationship. If the allegations are true, it is clear to us that Grabrian breached his duty and obligation when he had sexual intercourse with Edna. See Horak v. Biris, 130 Ill.App.3d 140, 85 Ill.Dec. 599, 474 N.E.2d 13 (1985); see also Watts v. Cumberland County Hosp. Sys., Inc., 75 N.C.App. 1, 330 S.E.2d 242 (1985), rev'd on other grounds, 317 N.C. 321, 345 S.E.2d 201 (1986).

[9] Edna's second claim for relief alleges that Grabrian "negligently performed his duty as a marital counselor" and that a member of the clergy who represents himself as a competent marital counselor, has a duty to employ the degree of knowledge, skill, and judgment ordinarily possessed by members of that profession in the community. This claim of professional negligence is a claim for malpractice. See Artist v. Butterweck, 162 Colo. 365, 426 P.2d 559 (1967); Dixon v. Norberg, 113 Colo. 352, 157 P.2d 131 (1945). Malpractice consists of any professional misconduct, unreasonable lack of skill or fidelity in professional or fiduciary duties, evil practice, or illegal or immoral conduct. See Black's Law Dictionary 864 (5th ed. 1979). Since Grabrian is a Catholic priest, the malpractice claim alleged by Edna falls within the realm of "clergy malpractice." [FN10] To date, no court has acknowledged the existence of such a tort. [FN11] Since the claim for clergy malpractice is not supported by precedent and raises serious first amendment issues, we have concluded that Edna's second claim for relief was properly dismissed. We do not recognize the claim of "clergy malpractice."

FN10. Grabrian and the diocese agree with this conclusion. In their brief they assert: "If this Court chooses to identify the claims of the petitioners as anything other than alienation of affections, seduction and adultery, it must, on the basis of self-description in the pleadings, recognize them as claims of 'clergy malpractice' against a Catholic priest and the Catholic Church."

At least one commentator has argued that the cause of action should be labeled "spiritual counseling malpractice." The dispute, in such an action, "focuses on counseling rendered by a member of the clergy in meeting the spiritual, emotional, and religious needs of the counselee." Ericsson, Clergymen Malpractice: Ramifications of a New Theory, 16 Val.U.L.Rev. 163, 166 (1981). We decline to use this terminology because counseling by members of the clergy is frequently directed to matters that are essentially secular in nature. "Family counseling and psychological counseling are two notable areas in which there is substantial overlap between the secular and religious aspects of a spiritual counselor's activities." Note, Clergy Malpractice: Taking Spiritual Counseling Conflicts Beyond Intentional Tort Analysis, 19 Rutgers L.J. 419, 437 (1988). But see Comment, Made Out of Whole Cloth? A Constitutional Analysis of the Clergy Malpractice Concept, 19 Cal.W.L.Rev. 507, 516 (1983) (pastoral counseling is a religious, not secular, activity in which "[i]t is impossible to separate the 'cure of the minds' from the 'cure of the souls' "); Comment, Clergy Malpractice: Making Clergy Accountable to a Lower Power, 14 Pepperdine L.Rev. 137, 139 (1986) ("While some degree of overlap and similarity may exist, the religious counselor remains distinct and unique from his secular counterpart, approaching therapy from an entirely different perspective.").

FN11. The only case, to date, that has involved the viability of a clergy malpractice claim is Nally v. Grace Community Church of the Valley, 157 Cal.App.3d 912, 204 Cal.Rptr. 302, (1984)

. In Nally, the parents of a young man who committed suicide brought a wrongful death action against the pastors who had been counseling him. In their claim entitled "Clergymen Malpractice," the parents alleged that the pastor had failed to exercise "the standard of care that a clergyman of his sect and training in the community" would exercise because he did not tell the young man to seek the counseling of a trained psychiatrist for his mental and emotional problems. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant but the court of appeals reversed. The court of appeals, however, did not address the viability of the clergy malpractice claim, but focused on the claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress. Id. 204 Cal.Rptr. at 308-09. The California Supreme Court refused to hear the appeal and ordered that the case be decertified on August 30, 1984, eliminating its precedential effect.

The issue of clergy malpractice also arose in Hester v. Barnett, 723 S.W.2d 544 (Mo.App.1987), but that court did not address the viability of such a tort. See also Handley v. Richards, 518 So.2d 682 (Ala.1987) (Maddox, J., concurring) (quoting extensively from Hester and concluding that plaintiff failed to state a claim for clergy malpractice or "outrageous conduct.").

Courts have generally recognized that when a professional counselor engages in sexual relations with a patient, client, or counselee, he may be held liable for damages. See Roy v. Hartogs, 85 Misc.2d 891, 381 N.Y.S.2d 587 (1976); Cotton v. Kambly, 101 Mich.App. 537, 300 N.W.2d 627 (1980). The General Assembly has enacted legislation which imposes penalties against psychologists who are engaged in sexual intimacies with their patients or clients. Section 12-43-111(1)(l), 5 C.R.S. (1985), provides:

> 286 The [Colorado state board of psychologist examiners] has the power to deny, revoke, suspend, or refuse to renew any license, or to place on probation a licensee, upon proof that such person ... (l) Has maintained relationships with clients that are likely to impair his professional judgment or increase the risk of client exploitation, such as treating employees, supervisees, close colleagues, or relatives, or having sexual intimacies with clients....

However, the legislature has expressly evinced an intent to exclude religious ministers, priests, and rabbis from the statutory scheme which imposes liability upon psychologists for malpractice. Section 12-43-114(10), 5 C.R.S. (1985), states that:

> Nothing in this article shall restrict a duly ordained minister, priest, or rabbi from carrying out his ministerial responsibilities while functioning in his ministerial capacity within a recognized religious organization and serving the spiritual needs of its constituency, provided he does not hold himself out to the public by any title or description incorporating the words "psychologist," "psychological," "psychology," or other term implying training, experience, or expertise in psychology.

The legislative intent of the General Assembly is even more pronounced in the 1988 enactment relating to penalties against mental health professionals and marriage and family therapists who engage in sexual intimacies with their clients or patients. The 1988 statute states that: "[a]ny person engaged in the practice of religious ministry shall not be required to comply with the provisions of this article," so long as such person does not hold himself out to the public by such titles as "psychologist," "licensed marriage and family therapist," or "licensed professional counselor," unless the person has been licensed pursuant to the state regulatory scheme. Chapter 88, section 1, § 12-43-215(1), 1988 Colo.Sess.Laws 535, 543-44.

Since the General Assembly has shown an intent to exclude religious counselors from the liability provisions of the statute creating liability for mental health professionals, we conclude that Edna's second claim for relief was properly dismissed.

D.

[10] The crossclaim of Edna also asserts that Grabrian engaged in outrageous conduct. The test for outrageous conduct in Colorado is:

> Outrageous Conduct Causing Severe Emotional Distress
>
> (1) One who by extreme and outrageous conduct

> intentionally or recklessly causes severe emotional distress to another is subject to liability for such emotional distress to another, and if bodily harm to the other results from it, for such bodily harm.

Churchey v. Adolph Coors Co., 759 P.2d 1336, 1350 (Colo.1988) (quoting Rugg v. McCarty, 173 Colo. 170, 177, 476 P.2d 753, 756 (1970) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 46 comment d (1965))). Outrageous conduct must be "so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community." Id. (citations omitted). Viewing the crossclaim in the light most favorable to Edna, as we must, we conclude that the allegations in the complaint are sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss. We note that on remand it is for the trial court, in the first instance, to determine whether the conduct at issue is "outrageous." Id.

E.

[11][12] Edna, in her fourth and fifth claims for relief, alleges that the diocese breached its duty to supervise Grabrian, and that the actions of Grabrian should be imputed to the diocese. An employer may be held responsible for tortious conduct by an employee only if the tort is committed within the course and scope of employment. McDonald v. Lakewood Country Club, 170 Colo. 355, 461 P.2d 437 (1969); see also National Cash Register Co. v. Lightner, 154 Colo. 98, 111, 388 P.2d 781, 788 (1964) (The principal is ordinarily not 287 liable for the independent acts of the agent done in his own name outside the scope of his employment.). An employee is acting within the scope of his employment if he is engaged in the work which has been assigned to him by his employer or he is doing what is necessarily incidental to the work which has been assigned to him or which is customary within the business in which the employee is engaged. Russell v. First Am. Mortgage Co., 39 Colo.App. 360, 565 P.2d 972 (1977). A priest's violation of his vow of celibacy is contrary to the instructions and doctrines of the Catholic church. When a priest has sexual intercourse with a parishioner it is not part of the priest's duties nor customary within the business of the church. Such conduct is contrary to the principles of Catholicism and is not incidental to the tasks assigned a priest by the diocese. Under the facts of this case there is no basis for imputing vicarious liability to the diocese for the alleged conduct of Grabrian.

[13][14] Even though Grabrian's acts do not create a basis for holding the diocese vicariously liable, the diocese may be directly liable for negligently supervising Grabrian. The Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213 (1958) states:

>
> ....
>
> (c) in the supervision of the activity....

Comment d states:

> The principal may be negligent because he has reason to know that the servant or other agent, because of his qualities, is likely to harm others in view of the work or instrumentalities entrusted to him. If the dangerous quality of the agent causes harm, the principal may be liable under the rule that one initiating conduct having an undue tendency to cause harm is liable therefor. [See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 317 (1965)].
>
>
> One who employs another to act for him is not liable under the rule stated in this Section merely because the one employed is incompetent, vicious, or careless. If liability results it is because, under the circumstances, the employer has not taken the care which a prudent man would take in selecting the person for the business in hand. What precautions must be taken depend upon the situation. One can normally assume that another who offers to perform simple work is competent. If, however, the work is likely to subject third persons to serious risk of great harm, there is a special duty of investigation.
> Liability results under the rule stated in this Section, not because of the relation of the parties, but because the employer antecedently had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm would exist because of the employment. The employer is subject to liability only for such harm as is within the risk. If, therefore, the risk exists because of the quality of the employee, there is liability only to the extent that the harm is caused by the quality of the employee which the employer had reason to suppose would be likely to cause harm.

department may be directly liable for negligence in selection, supervision or retention of police officers); Rosane v. Senger, 112 Colo. 363, 366, 149 P.2d 372, 374 (1944) (hospital may be directly liable for negligent acts of doctors); Western Ins. Co. v. Brochner, 682 P.2d 1213 (Colo.App.1983) (hospital may be directly liable for needless surgery of staff doctors), rev'd on other grounds, 724 P.2d 1293 (Colo.1986); [FN12] Restatement (Second) of Torts § 317 comment c (1965) ("[T]he master *288 may subject himself to liability ... by retaining in his employment servants who, to his knowledge, are in the habit of misconducting themselves in a manner dangerous to others."). Accordingly, we hold that a person who knows or should have known that an employee's conduct would subject third parties to an unreasonable risk of harm may be directly liable to third parties for harm proximately caused by his conduct. [FN13]

FN12. Other jurisdictions have recognized the tort of negligent supervision. See International Distrib. Corp. v. American Dist. Tel. Co., 569 F.2d 136 (D.C.Cir.1977); Murphy v. Army Distaff Found., Inc., 458 A.2d 61 (D.C.App.1983); F & T Co. v. Woods, 92 N.M. 697, 594 P.2d 745 (1979); Dempsey v. Walso Bureau, Inc., 431 Pa. 562, 246 A.2d 418 (1968); Welsh Mfg. Div. of Textron v. Pinkerton's, 474 A.2d 436 (R.I.1984).

FN13. If, on remand, Edna asserts that the diocese should have known of Grabrian's propensity to commit negligent or intentional acts, then she must show the diocese "antecedently had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm would exist because of the employment." Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213 comment d (1965).

Edna's fourth claim for relief states:

> Defendant Diocese of Colorado Springs knew or should have known that Defendant Grabrian was engaging in conduct which was outrageous, negligent, and a breach of his fiduciary duty, and Defendant Diocese owed a duty of supervision of said Defendant Grabrian to the public and breached said duty, causing the injuries and damages set forth above.

Accepting these allegations as true, Edna has stated a viable claim for relief against the diocese for negligent supervision.

We conclude that the trial court erred in dismissing Edna's fourth claim, but properly dismissed her fifth claim for relief.

IV.
Robert's Claims

[15] The court of appeals determined that Robert's claims, however denominated, "are based on alienation of affections and criminal conversation, both of which are barred by the 'heart balm statute.' " To determine the nature of the action, an examination of the substance of the complaint is required. Erickson v. Publix Cab Co., 134 Colo. 203, 206, 301 P.2d 349, 351 (1956); see Great Western Sugar Co. v. Jackson Lake Reservoir & Irrigation Co., 681 P.2d 484, 494 (Colo.1984). In Goldberg v. Musim, 162 Colo. 461, 467, 427 P.2d 698, 701 (1967), we stated that an action for alienation of affections requires the following: (1) the defendant must intend to induce the spouse to separate; (2) the defendant must induce the spouse of the plaintiff to leave or to remain separated from the plaintiff; and (3) such an action must result in loss of affection and consortium, including loss of society, companionship, and aid. Criminal conversation is essentially adultery and the action may be brought by the "innocent" spouse. See W. Keeton, D. Dobbs, R. Keeton & D. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 124, at 917 (5th ed. 1984). Robert alleged that while counseling Edna, Grabrian engaged in conduct he "knew or should have known would lead to additional marital problems between the plaintiff and Edna and would cause the probable dissolution of their marriage." Robert further alleged that Grabrian and Edna "entered into an intimate relationship which contributed to the ultimate dissolution of the marriage between the plaintiff and Edna." The complaint asserts that the conduct of Grabrian affected the plaintiff and his marriage in the following manner:

> There are minor children of that former marriage, and upon learning of the relationship between the Defendant Grabrian and Edna, the Plaintiff's ability to maintain a working parental relationship with Edna has been rendered impossible, any chance of salvaging the marriage was rendered impossible, and the Plaintiff has suffered and endured excruciating mental pain and suffering.

The substance of the first two claims in the complaint relates to the adulterous conduct of Grabrian that resulted in the destruction of the marriage and the injuries allegedly arising from that conduct. See Gasper v. Lighthouse, Inc., 73 Md.App. 367, 373, 533 A.2d 1358, 1361 (1987). In our view, these allegations plainly set forth claims for alienation of affections and criminal conversation. We choose not to recognize any of Robert's common law claims apart from the third claim for relief because they are plainly claims for alienation of affections and criminal conversation. Accordingly, 289 we hold that the trial court properly dismissed Robert's first and second claims in the complaint under section 13-20-202, 6A C.R.S. (1987).

[16][17] Robert's third claim is one for breach of fiduciary duty. One standing in a position of trust is liable for harm resulting from a breach of the duty imposed by that position. Restatement (Second) of Torts § 874 (1979). The third claim alleges that the fiduciary duty breached by Grabrian and the diocese arose as a result of the counseling relationship entered into by Robert and Edna with Grabrian. As we concluded in reviewing Edna's first claim for relief, we believe that the nature of the counseling relationship alleged here gives rise to a clear duty on Grabrian's part to engage only in activity or conduct calculated to improve the Destefanos' marriage. This duty to refrain from any conduct which carries with it a risk of harm to the marital couple extends to both Robert and Edna. See Horak v. Biris, 130 Ill.App.3d 140, 85 Ill.Dec. 599, 474 N.E.2d 13 (1985). We have no difficulty in finding that Grabrian's intimacies with Edna falls within "conduct which carries with it a risk of harm" to Edna and Robert. As such, Robert's third claim for relief is sufficient to withstand the C.R.C.P. 12(b) motion to dismiss.

Accordingly, we reverse the summary judgment granted by the court of appeals, but affirm the resulting dismissal of Edna's second and fifth claims for relief and Robert's first and second claims for relief. We return the case to the court of appeals with directions to remand to the trial court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

QUINN, C.J., specially concurs, and MULLARKEY, J., joins in the special concurrence.

MULLARKEY, J., specially concurs, and QUINN, C.J., and LOHR and KIRSHBAUM, JJ., join in the special concurrence.

QUINN, Chief Justice, specially concurring:

I join Justice Mullarkey's special concurrence and specially concur in the result reached by the majority. I write separately to state my view that recognizing the so-called tort of "clergy malpractice" would not only contravene the legislative decision to exempt religious ministers from compliance with the provisions of the statutory scheme dealing with psychologists and other mental health practitioners, § 12-43-114(10), 5 C.R.S. (1985); see also ch. 88, sec. 1, § 12-43-215(1), 1988 Colo.Sess.Laws 535, 543-44, but also would derogate the constitutionally protected interest of ministers, priests, and rabbis to conduct bona fide marriage counseling as guaranteed by the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment. U.S. Const. amend. I.

I agree with the majority that Edna and Robert Destefano have stated cognizable claims for breach of fiduciary duty, and that Edna also has stated a claim for outrageous conduct. A fiduciary relation "exists between two persons when one of them is under a duty to act for or to give advice for the benefit of another upon matters within the scope of the relation." Restatement (Second) of Torts § 874 comment a (1977). Liability for breach of fiduciary duty is not dependent solely upon agreement or contract between the fiduciary and the beneficiary but results from the relation itself. Id. No one can reasonably dispute the fact that the relation between a Catholic priest and a person of the same faith who is receiving marriage counseling from the priest is a fiduciary relation founded on utmost trust and confidence. When, as here alleged, the priest abuses his position of trust by engaging in sexual relations with the counselee, the torts of breach of fiduciary duty and outrageous conduct are adequate to the task of providing the counselee with an effective remedy for this type of egregious misconduct.

I also agree that the obvious legislative intent behind the statutory scheme regulating psychologists and other mental health practitioners is to exempt duly ordained 290 ministers, priests, and rabbis from the licensing and regulatory scheme when they pursue their ministerial responsibilities in serving the spiritual needs of their constituencies. See § 12-43-114(10), 5 C.R.S. (1985); see also ch. 88, sec. 1, § 12-43-215(1), 1988 Colo.Sess.Laws 535, 543-44. This exemption proceeds from an obvious recognition of the fact that married persons experiencing marital difficulties frequently choose to obtain marriage counseling from their minister, priest, or rabbi precisely because they desire to resolve their difficulties in accordance with their religious beliefs. A rule that would subject the religious minister to the standard of practice applicable to licensed psychologists or marriage counselors in the community would endanger the very distinctions which make religious counseling desirable and which the General Assembly intended to protect against state regulation.

Moreover, the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment protects not only against the governmental prohibition of bona fide religious practices but also against the governmental secularization of such practices. See, e.g., Hobbie v. Unemployment Appeals Commission, 480 U.S. 136, 107 S.Ct. 1046, 94 L.Ed.2d 190 (1987); Thomas v. Review Board, 450 U.S. 707, 101 S.Ct. 1425, 67 L.Ed.2d 624 (1981); Wisconsin v. Yoder, 406 U.S. 205, 92 S.Ct. 1526, 32 L.Ed.2d 15 (1972); Sherbert v. Verner, 374 U.S. 398, 83 S.Ct. 1790, 10 L.Ed.2d 965 (1963). Legislative or judicial recognition of the so-called tort of "clergy malpractice" would be fundamentally flawed on two counts. First, it would result in secularizing various forms of sectarian religious counseling that are entitled to constitutional protection. Second, it would undoubtedly result in deterring some ministers, priests, and rabbis from engaging in marriage counseling in order to avoid any potential liability for not conforming to standards applicable to licensed psychologists or licensed marriage therapists, or, at the very least, incline them to adjust their counseling method to standards applicable to secular licensed counselors. The resulting effect on the religious counselor's right to engage in bona fide religious marriage counseling, independently of secular standards applicable to licensed professionals, would be all too clear. Such a formidable obstacle to bona fide religious marriage counseling would fly directly in the face of the Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment.

I am authorized to say that Justice MULLARKEY joins me in this special concurrence.

MULLARKEY, Justice, specially concurring:

I agree with Justice Erickson's opinion that both Destefanos should be permitted to try their claims for breach of fiduciary duty and that Edna should be permitted to try her claim for outrageous conduct. I write separately to express my views on the construction of the heart balm statute, now codified at sections 13-20-201 to -208, 6A C.R.S. (1987).

We construed the heart balm statute in two relatively recent cases: In re Marriage of Heinzman, 198 Colo. 36, 596 P.2d 61 (1979) and Goldberg v. Musim, 162 Colo. 461, 427 P.2d 698 (1967). In both cases, we emphasized the purposes of the heart balm statute and avoided the temptation to rely on a technical analysis of the elements of the abolished causes of action. The principal purpose of the heart balm statute, as expressed in section 13-20- 201, is to eliminate meritless lawsuits brought by "unscrupulous persons for their unjust enrichment" after a failed romance or marriage. See also Note, Heartbalm Statutes and Deceit Actions, 83 Mich.L.Rev. 1770, 1776 n. 27 (1985). An equally important reason supporting the heart balm statute is "the increasing recognition that each spouse is an autonomous human being, that neither is the property of the other, and that a home so easily broken is not worth maintaining." W. Keeton, D. Dobbs, R. Keeton, and D. Owen, Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 124, at 930 (5th ed. 1984).

In Heinzman, we held that the heart balm statute does not bar a suit for return of an engagement gift after the engagement is broken. In the context of a broken engagement, we emphasized that the statute 291 only barred "actions for damages suffered from the breach of promise to marry and other direct consequences of the breach, such as humiliation." 198 Colo. at 40, 596 P.2d at 64.

In Goldberg, we held that the heart balm statute barred a lawsuit brought by a woman who claimed that her marriage had been destroyed by a woman whom she named as the defendant. We noted that the plaintiff's claim in Goldberg was not a claim for alienation of affections within the common law definition as used in Colorado because "a wife had no right of action for alienation of the affections of her husband." 162 Colo. at 471, 427 P.2d at 703. Nevertheless, we held that the allegations of the complaint fell "squarely within the abolished action [alienation of affections], for all that is alleged arises out of a relationship, i.e., an inducement to separate and resulting loss of society, loss of services, pain, suffering and humiliation." Id. at 467, 427 P.2d at 701.

That is the approach we should apply to the case now before us. Attempting to establish the elements of the abolished causes of action can only lead to absurd results which have no application to contemporary society. Justice Erickson's approach would require us to take a snapshot in time as of 1937 when the heart balm statute was enacted and define the elements of the torts abolished by that act. This is an impossible analytical task because, as Prosser states, "there is no good reason" for distinguishing among the four torts and the torts usually are lumped together "under the general name of 'alienation of affections,' without any attempt to distinguish the possible elements of the tort." W. Prosser, Handbook of the Law of Torts § 124, at 876-77 (4th ed. 1971).

Justice Erickson at footnote 3, at 279, acknowledges the difficulty caused by attempting to analyze the elements of each tort, but states that we are compelled to do so because the heart balm statute lists four separate torts. In my opinion, the legislature listed the four torts (criminal conversation, alienation of affections, seduction, and breach of promise to marry) to make plain the sweeping nature of the law it passed because those four constituted all of the recognized heart balm actions. See Note, Cannon v. Miller: The Brief Death of Alienation of Affections and Criminal Conversation in North Carolina, 63 N.C.L.Rev. 1317, 1318 (1985). I would be more persuaded of the appropriateness of an element-by-element analysis if the Colorado legislature, like some of its contemporaries in other states, had selected only certain heart balm actions to abolish. See Note, Heartbalm Statutes and Deceit Actions, 83 Mich.L.Rev. at 1770-71. Since that is not the case, I would not adopt the form of analysis used by Justice Erickson.

Here, Justice Erickson concludes that Edna Destefano's claim is not barred by the heart balm statute because she was married and a married woman could not bring a claim for seduction. At 282-283. To support that conclusion, he must reach back to a 1918 case, Weinlich v. Coffee, 67 Colo. 382, 176 P. 210 (1918). The language of that case, embodying outmoded property and master/servant concepts in the context of marriage, has no relevance today. Weinlich should be allowed to rest in obscurity, not resurrected and given new currency in a modern opinion. The logical corollary of Justice Erickson's approach is that if Edna Destefano had consulted a priest for premarital counseling and the same course of events had occurred, her claim against the priest would be barred because she was an unmarried woman who could have brought a seduction claim at common law. Such a distinction could not be upheld under the married women's property act, section 14-2-202, 6B C.R.S. (1987), the equal protection guarantees of the state and federal constitutions, and the equal rights amendment of our state constitution. [FN1]

> FN1. On a similar basis, states which have retained the claims abolished by our heart balm law permit both men and women to bring the claims. Identical rules apply to both. W. Prosser, Handbook of the Law of Torts § 124 at 882. See also 1 H. Clark, The Law of Domestic Relations in the United States § 12.2, at 653 (alienation of affections), § 12.3, at 662 (criminal conversation) (2d ed. 1987).

292 If we look to the purposes of the heart balm statute, it is clear that the statute was not intended to bar claims based on breach of fiduciary duty and outrageous conduct against a priest who counseled both parties to the marriage. When such a special relationship is present, I would hold that the heart balm statute does not apply. See Prosser and Keeton on the Law of Torts § 124, at 930

(suggesting that heart balm statute should not bar relief "when the interference with family relations is accomplished by means of some independent tort"). *See also O'Neil v. John DOE, Appellant,
v.
Norbert DORSEY, as Bishop of the Diocese of Orlando, etc., et al., Appellees.

No. 95-2601.

Nov. 22, 1996.

Former altar boy sued church and its bishop based on alleged negligent hiring or retention of priest who committed sexual misconduct with altar boy both before and after boy reached age of majority. The Circuit Court, Orange County, Rom W. Powell, J., 1995 WL 608281, dismissed complaint. Altar boy appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Harris, J., held that: (1) four-year negligence statute of limitations applicable to negligent hiring claim began to run when altar boy turned 18, and (2) sexual acts between altar boy and priest after altar boy reached majority did not constitute sexual battery.

Affirmed.

HARRIS, Judge.

The issue in this case is whether the statute of limitations and/or the First Amendment provision requiring separation of church and state bars this action against the church and its bishop based on the alleged negligent "hiring" or retention of a priest who commits sexual misconduct. We affirm.

For the purpose of this appeal, it is admitted that the parish priest committed improper acts with an altar boy starting when the boy was thirteen and continuing long after he reached majority. As a matter of fact, this "relationship" continued for over seven years after the young man reached majority. At some point, for some reason, the young man finally realized that the priest had indeed committed horrible wrongs against him and that the church, either directly or through the appropriate bishop, might be civilly responsible for these wrongs.

Therefore, plaintiff sued the priest (who is not a party to this appeal) alleging the intentional tort of sexual abuse of a minor; he also sued the church and the bishop alleging the tort of negligence based on the improper hiring or retention of one they knew or 616 should have known was unsuitable to have contact with children. Even though the trial court held that the allegations of acts relating to a minor were time barred, it nevertheless sustained the allegations of sexual battery after plaintiff became an adult as against a claim of the statute of limitations but held that an action on even these allegations was barred by the provisions of the First Amendment. That issue will be discussed later.

[1][2] There are two possible hurdles in the path of this action. First, plaintiff waited until he was twenty-seven years old to bring the action founded upon the abuse inflicted on him when he was a minor. The trial court, based on the statute of limitations, dismissed these allegations. Second, since the action against the church and the bishop is based on allegations of negligence of the church, appellees strongly urge that the First Amendment of the United States Constitution prevents the court from intruding into the church's selection, training, supervision, and assignment of priests. [FN1] We agree with the trial court that plaintiff's action resulting from injuries caused by abuse inflicted on him while he was a minor and based on the negligent retention policies of the church is barred by the statute of limitations. Section 95.11(3)(a), Florida Statutes, limits an action for negligence to four years. This period is tolled until a minor plaintiff reaches majority. Section 95.051(1)(h). Although plaintiff urges that section 95.11(7) is the appropriate statute of limitations to apply in this case, we find that such section applies only to causes of action for "intentional torts based on abuse." Even though the priest's abusive conduct prompted this action against the church and the bishop, the alleged cause of action against them is a negligence action based on the alleged improper selection or retention policies and practices of the church in relation to its priests, not any active abuse by the appellees. We, therefore, find that section 95.11(3)(a), and not 95.11(7), is the applicable statute of limitations in this case, and that it started running when plaintiff turned eighteen.

> FN1. On this issue, the First Baptist Church of Hialeah and the Temple Shir Ami appeared as amicus on behalf of appellees; the Academy of Florida Trial Lawyers appeared as amicus on behalf of appellant.

Even if section 95.11(3)(a) is the applicable statute, urges appellant, since the improper conduct of the priest continued until plaintiff was twenty-six, the statute should not start running until that time. The problem with this argument is that appellant ceased being a minor subject to child abuse when he became "of age". Would the State be able to prosecute a Lothario who seduced a maiden below the age of consent but was able to continue the relationship with the young woman after she became an adult solely for the acts which occurred after she became an adult on the basis that her consent was obtained only because she remained "under his spell?" We think not. Further, we do not believe that the fact that religion is implicated in "the spell," has any significance at law.

Appellant also urges that the statute does not begin to run until the young man is aware of his injuries, and since this young man did not become aware of his injuries and their probable connection to the improper acts of the priest until 1992, the statute did not start running until that time. We simply cannot accept this argument. This young man knew the identity of the tortfeasor (the priest) and the improper conduct engaged in by the tortfeasor (child abuse) long before he reached the age of majority. This was sufficient knowledge to file an action against the priest for the wrongful sexual battery committed against him and, again assuming such cause of action is available, against the church and bishop for making such conduct possible because of the negligent retention of the priest.

The court was involved in a similar action, albeit involving a young girl instead of a young boy, in Pritzlaff v. Archdiocese of Milwaukee, 194 Wis.2d 302, 533 N.W.2d 780, 785 (1995), and held that plaintiff's action was barred by the statute of limitations:

> It is well settled that a cause of action accrues when there exists a claim capable of enforcement, a suitable party against 617 whom it may be entered, and a party with a present right to enforce it. (Citations omitted). A party has a present right to enforce a claim when the plaintiff has suffered actual damage, defined as harm that has already occurred or is reasonably certain to occur in the future. (Citation omitted).

In the case at bar, the negligent retention of a priest who would commit child abuse, at least insofar as this young man is concerned, must have occurred while he was still a child. Therefore, when Plaintiff turned eighteen, he was aware that a priest had sexually abused him and that the church had permitted the priest to serve in the parish which made the abuse possible. Sexual abuse of a child in and of itself causes sufficient actual damages, as a matter of law, to support both the intentional tort action against the priest and the negligence action, if one exists, against the church and the bishop. See Harris v. B & M Groceries, 1983 WL 5611 (Ohio App.1983): "In awards based on assault and battery, damages are 'presumed' or the wrong is said to be damages in and of itself." See also, Walje v. the City of Winchester, Kentucky, 773 F.2d 729, 731 (6th Cir.1985): "We joined two other circuits in finding such an unreasonable seizure to be closely analogous to the common law tort of assault and battery, for which general damages were presumed from the violation of the victim's right to bodily integrity."

The fact that Plaintiff in this case was not immediately aware of all of his resulting emotional problems might create uncertainty as to the amount of his damages but it does not toll the period of limitations. To hold that such tolling occurred would be the same as saying that one injured in an automobile accident who has a broken leg but elects not to sue within the statute of limitations may nevertheless later bring an action when, because of the injury, the leg has to be amputated. See Cristiani v. City of Sarasota, 65 So.2d 878, 879 (Fla.1953): "The general rule seems to be that actions for personal injury based on the wrongful or negligent act of another accrue at the time of the injury and that the statute of limitations begins to run at the same time. The running of the statute is not postponed even though the injury may not materialize or be discovered till later." See also Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company v. Ford, 92 So.2d 160, 164 (Fla.1955): "Generally, in actions for personal injuries resulting from the wrongful act or negligence of another, the cause of action accrues and the statute begins to run from the time when the injury was first inflicted, and not from the time when the full extent of the damages sustained has been ascertained." While there are exceptions to this general rule--for example, occupational diseases--these exceptions do not apply when an injury is apparent or presumed.

[3] Although the Academy of Florida Trial Lawyers makes a convincing case that the First Amendment does not protect the church when the acts of the clergy involve children and are criminal in nature, because we hold that the action against the church and the bishop in this case for the negligent retention of the priest, insofar as the abuse of plaintiff which occurred while he was a minor is concerned, is time-barred, the issue of whether the First Amendment protects the church when its clergy commits criminal acts is not before us. In any event, we are persuaded that just as the State may prevent a church from offering human sacrifices, it may protect its children against injuries caused by pedophiles by authorizing civil damages against a church that knowingly (including should know) creates a situation in which such injuries are likely to occur. We recognize that the State's interest must be compelling indeed in order to interfere in the church's selection, training and assignment of its clerics. We would draw the line at criminal conduct.

But because of the application of the statute of limitations in this case and because of the facts alleged, we are not here faced with criminal conduct. The surviving allegations do not involve pedophilia nor illegal adult sexual behavior.

[4] Insofar as the adult acts are concerned, we conclude that the sexual acts between the adult participants herein were not criminal. Plaintiff does not contend that he did not consent to the continued relationship. It is his position that his consent should be 618 considered invalid because the priest "deliberately and calculatingly caused a relationship whereby [he] was able to exert undue influence, dominion and control over the Plaintiff." We do not believe that a sexual battery has been committed when a person of normal intelligence submits to a sexual relationship due to the "emotional attachment" to another person.

Although consent is not absolute, section 794.011 makes it clear that the legislature intended that if it is present, consent will bar criminal prosecution. In that regard, the legislature determined that consent is invalid if it is coerced. But the legislature tells us what it means by coercion: threat of force or violence or threat of retaliation against the victim or others. This type coercion is not alleged in this case. Consent is invalid if the victim is under the influence of any "narcotic, anesthetic, or other intoxicating substance" but only if such intoxicating substance is administered without the knowledge or consent of the victim. This is not alleged in this case. Consent is invalid if the victim is "mentally defective" or "mentally incapacitated." But mental defectiveness requires that the victim be suffering from some mental disease or defect. And mental incapacitation, as indicated above, means involuntarily being under the influence of some intoxicating substance or that the mental incapacitation is due to some "other act committed upon that person without his or her consent." We do not believe that the allegations of this complaint meet that standard.

1380 Violence against women prompted Congress to pass the civil remedies provision of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), 42 U.S.C. § 13981, on September 13, 1994, as a new, federal weapon to combat gender-based violence. Yet, whatever the need for or merits of the VAWA, was its passage a constitutional exercise of congressional power? The only two courts to consider the question have split on the answer. [FN1] The defendants here, a parish priest accused by a parishioner of sexually exploiting her, as well as the church, bishop, and diocese also called to account for the priest's allegedly wrongful conduct, assert that the VAWA cannot be sustained on the basis of either the Congress' Commerce Clause or Fourteenth Amendment enforcement powers. The plaintiff, the United States as a plaintiff/intervenor, and various amici curiae have rallied to defend the constitutionality of the VAWA.

FN1. The court finds that only two decisions have considered the constitutionality of the civil remedies provision of the VAWA. They are Brzonkala v. Virginia Polytechnic & State Univ., 935 F.Supp. 779 (W.D.Va.1996), which found the statute unconstitutional, and Doe v. Doe, 929 F.Supp. 608 (D.Conn.1996), which upheld it. Very recently, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals considered the constitutionality of the criminal provisions of the VAWA prohibiting interstate domestic violence, 18 U.S.C. § 2261, in United States v. Bailey, 112 F.3d 758 (4th Cir.1997), and upheld the statute as within the Congress's Commerce Clause powers. Similarly, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York has upheld the portion of the VAWA prohibiting interstate domestic violence as a valid exercise of Commerce Clause power. United States v. Gluzman, 953 F.Supp. 84 (S.D.N.Y.1997).

However much the parties and interested persons press their arguments concerning the constitutionality of the enactment of the VAWA, the court must heed the directive of the Supreme Court, and first consider nonconstitutional challenges to the plaintiff's VAWA claim, and must only reach the constitutional issue if it is "unavoidable." [FN2] A nonconstitutional challenge is not lacking here, because the defendants also contend that the plaintiff's VAWA claim, the only federal claim in the complaint, is inadequately pleaded. Furthermore, if the VAWA claim is dismissed, on constitutional or nonconstitutional grounds, the court may be deprived of subject matter jurisdiction over any of the plaintiff's thirteen state-law claims, and the 1381 defendants contend that the court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over those claims in any event. Finally, the defendants also challenge the plaintiff's many state-law claims, again on constitutional grounds--this time, pursuant to the religion clauses of the First Amendment--as well as a plethora of nonconstitutional grounds.

This tangle of constitutional and nonconstitutional issues, federal and state claims, a federal claim dependent upon a predicate offense defined by state law, and supplemental jurisdiction questions, creates a veritable Gordian Knot. [FN3] Alexander the Great could only loosen the Gordian Knot by slicing through it with his sword, an approach that is appealing, but unavailable here. [FN4] This court's resolution of defendants' motion must be more patient and reasoned.

FN3. Gordius, King of Phrygia, tied his chariot to a hitching post before the temple of an oracle with an intricate knot, which, it was prophesied, none but the future ruler of all Asia could untie. See, e.g., Funk and Wagnalls Standard Dictionary of Folklore, Mythology, and Legend 460 (Maria Leach, ed., Funk & Wagnalls, 1972); Bulfinch's Mythology 44 (Richard P. FN4. In the course of his conquests, Alexander the Great came to Phrygia, and, frustrated with his inability to untangle the "Gordian Knot," simply sliced through it with his sword. His subsequent success in his Asian campaign has been taken to mean that his solution to the "Gordian knot" fulfilled the prophesy. See, e.g., Funk and Wagnalls Standard Dictionary of Folklore, Mythology, and Legend 460 (Maria Leach, ed., Funk & Wagnalls, 1972); Bulfinch's Mythology 44 (Richard P. I. INTRODUCTION AND BACKGROUND

A. The Parties And The Central Incidents

Plaintiff Jane Doe [FN5] filed her complaint in this action on August 29, 1996, naming as defendants Father Gerald A. Hartz, who is a priest at St. Lawrence Church, in Carroll, Iowa, St. Lawrence Church itself, the Roman Catholic Diocese of Sioux City, Iowa, and Bishop Lawrence Soens, the bishop of the defendant Diocese. The gravamen of Doe's complaint is that, on December 3, 1994, when she arrived at the Church to sing during evening mass, Father Hartz "came up behind her, grabbed her with both of his hands and pulled her back into his body, held her tightly and kissed her neck." Complaint, ¶ 11. Later that same evening, after mass, "Defendant Hartz rubbed Plaintiff's back up and down with his hand." Id. at ¶ 14. Plaintiff alleges thirteen claims, based on state and federal law, as a result of these incidents or related events.

FN5. This court considered extensively the standards for prosecution of a claim under a pseudonym in Heather K. v. City of Mallard, IA, 887 F.Supp. 1249, 1255-56 (N.D.Iowa 1995). Although plaintiff Jane Doe has not specifically moved for leave to prosecute this action under a pseudonym, no other party has challenged that procedure. Furthermore, Doe appears to meet the requirements for prosecution of a lawsuit under a pseudonym. See id. (citing Doe v. Frank, 951 F.2d 320, 323 (11th Cir.1992), and Doe v. Stegall, 653 F.2d 180, 186 (5th Cir.1981), as recognizing that a substantial privacy right may outweigh the customary and constitutionally-embedded presumption of openness in judicial proceedings where the plaintiff may be required to disclose information of the utmost intimacy, thus making prosecution under a pseudonym appropriate).

B. The Complaint

Count 1 of Doe's complaint is the only one stating a federal claim, and thus is the count upon which federal jurisdiction depends. [FN6] In Count 1, Doe asserts a civil claim against Father Hartz for violation of the civil remedies provision of the VAWA, 42 U.S.C. § 13981. Doe alleges that Father Hartz's conduct constituted sexual exploitation by a counselor or therapist within the meaning of Iowa Code § 709.15, establishing a predicate felony crime of violence under the federal statute. As relief, she seeks a declaration that Father Hartz's conduct violated the VAWA; an injunction, apparently against all defendants, enjoining any conduct violating the rights of the plaintiff and others secured by the VAWA; [FN7] an order that Father Hartz *1382 receive psychological evaluation and treatment; an injunction against Father Hartz from performing his duties and responsibilities until such time as a neutral professional certifies that he can do so without sexually exploiting females; compensatory and punitive damages; attorneys fees; costs; and such other relief as the court deems just and proper.

FN6. Doe asserts jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (federal question) and 28 U.S.C. § 1343(a)(3) (civil rights), on the basis of a claim arising under the civil remedies provision of the federal Violence Against Women Act, 42 U.S.C. § 13981. Doe invokes the court's supplemental jurisdiction over her state-law claims pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a).

FN7. Indeed, in almost the entirety of Count 1, the allegations stated and relief sought are against only Father Hartz. See, e.g., Complaint, ¶ 37 (detailing claimed injuries as the result of Father Hartz's conduct); Complaint ¶ 38 (asserting that Father Hartz "acted willfully and recklessly and with intentional and willful disregard for the rights of Plaintiff," thus entitling Doe to punitive damages). However, in subsection (b) of the prayer for relief on this claim, Doe asks that the court "permanently enjoin Defendants from any conduct violating Plaintiff's rights or the rights of other women and girls as secured by the [VAWA]." Complaint, Prayer of Count 1, subsection (b) (emphasis added). Although this claim is not a model of "short and plain" pleading, Fed.R.Civ.P. 8(a), it appears to the court that the claim, or at least the relief sought, is against all defendants, not just Father Hartz. The uncertainty about the proper defendant or defendants on this claim has serious repercussions: It raises questions about whether a civil claim under the VAWA can be asserted against anyone but the individual actor, whether respondeat superior liability attaches to an employer for an employee's violation of the VAWA, and whether the defendants other than Father Hartz have standing to challenge the constitutionality of the VAWA if no claim under that Act is or can be asserted against them. The court assumes that the VAWA claim has been asserted against all of the defendants. However, because Father Hartz has joined in the motion to dismiss this claim, at least one of the movants has standing to challenge the constitutionality of the VAWA.

The remaining counts assert state-law claims against the various defendants. Count 2 alleges sexual abuse by Father Hartz. As relief on this count, Doe seeks an order requiring Father Hartz to receive professional counseling within the meaning of Iowa Code § 611.23, and compensatory and punitive damages. Count 3 alleges fraud by Father Hartz arising from a special relationship of trust, and confidence between the plaintiff and Father Hartz and Father Hartz's misrepresentation, based on his holding himself out as celibate and as a personal fiduciary, that he could be trusted not to fondle or kiss the plaintiff in a sexual manner. This fraud count is apparently also directed at the other defendants as well, because Doe asserts that the other defendants had knowledge of the falsity of Father Hartz's representations and that they intended to deceive the plaintiff to "save themselves, the church, and the congregation the embarrassment of admitting there was a priest in St. Lawrence Church that had a problem with sexual abuse." Complaint, ¶¶ 50-51. This count also asserts that the fraudulent acts of the defendants constituted part of the pattern, practice, or scheme of conduct by a counselor or therapist within the meaning of Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(1), which appears to be intended to bolster the VAWA claim as well. As relief on the fraud count, Doe seeks compensatory and punitive damages, interest, and costs.

Count 4 alleges breach of fiduciary duty by the defendant Diocese and Bishop Soens. Specifically, it alleges a fiduciary duty on the part of these defendants to Doe, and breach of that duty by failure to notify Doe that she was in danger of being a victim of sexual abuse at Father Hartz's hands and by failure to provide Father Hartz with professional counseling services to protect Doe from being sexually abused by Father Hartz. On this count, Doe seeks compensatory and punitive damages, as well as interest, and costs. Count 5 is a companion claim of breach of fiduciary duty against Father Hartz. It alleges Father Hartz had a fiduciary duty to Doe and breached it by fondling and kissing her for the purposes of arousing and/or satisfying his sexual desires. On this count, Doe seeks compensatory and punitive damages against Father Hartz, as well as interest and costs.

Counts 6, 7, 8, and 9 are against only Father Hartz. Count 6 alleges assault by Father Hartz by placing Doe in fear of offensive physical contact after the incident in which Father Hartz is alleged to have actually engaged in such conduct. The relief sought on this count is, again, compensatory and punitive damages, interest, and costs. [FN8] Count 7 is a claim of tortious infliction of emotional distress based on the alleged outrageousness*1383 of Father Hartz's conduct on December 3, 1994. The relief sought on this count is also compensatory and punitive damages, interest, and costs. Counts 8 and 9 are negligence claims as alternatives to the intentional torts alleged in the prior counts. Count 8 alleges that Father Hartz suffers from a mental disease or defect that renders him unable to control his conduct in connection with sexual behavior toward females and that Father Hartz's conduct as a result of his disease or defect, although not intentional, was negligent. Count 9 alleges that Father Hartz negligently breached his duty to restrain himself from sexually abusing the plaintiff as a result of his mental disease or defect and also breached his duty to obtain professional help to treat his mental disease or defect so that he could refrain from sexually abusing the plaintiff. Doe seeks compensatory and punitive damages, interest, and costs as relief on both of her negligence claims against Father Hartz.

> FN8. Although the relief sought on this count was against "Defendants, and all of them," Complaint, prayer to Count 6, in her response to the defendants' motion to dismiss, Doe agrees to dismiss Count 6 as to Bishop Soens, the Church, and the Diocese. Therefore, this count is now asserted against only defendant Hartz.

Counts 10, 11, 12, and 13 seek to hold the other defendants liable for Father Hartz's conduct on various theories. Count 10 is denominated a negligent hiring, training, and supervision claim and is directed against defendants Church, Diocese, and Bishop. [FN9] The specific failings alleged are failure to provide professional help to an agent or employee known or suspected to have tendencies toward sexual abuse and exploitation; failure to prevent Father Hartz from engaging in sexual abuse; failure to reprimand or take punitive action against Father Hartz; failure to supervise and/or control Father Hartz to ensure that sexual abuse did not occur; and failure to respond to previous allegations of inappropriate behavior by Father Hartz. On this claim, Doe seeks from the Church, Diocese, and Bishop compensatory and punitive damages, interest, and costs. Count 11 is a negligence claim directed at defendants Church and Diocese. It alleges breach of a duty on the part of these defendants to protect the plaintiff from abuse imposed on her by Father Hartz. As relief on this claim, Doe seeks only compensatory damages, interest, and costs. Count 12 alleges a claim of premises liability against only the defendant Church, based on the Church's knowledge that Father Hartz was present on the premises and posed an unreasonable risk of injury to a person in Doe's position against which Doe would be unable to protect herself. Doe alleges that the Church failed to protect Doe from her abuser, with consequent injuries to Doe. Doe seeks against the Church compensatory damages, interest, and costs. Finally, in Count 13, Doe asserts a claim of respondeat superior liability of the defendant Church for Father Hartz's conduct while acting within the scope of his employment. Furthermore, the count alleges that the Church [FN10] requires Father Hartz to dispose of all worldly goods, thereby rendering him judgment proof and unable personally to respond in damages for his intentional and negligent conduct. Doe therefore seeks compensatory damages, interest, and costs against the Church for Father Hartz's conduct.

> FN9. Incidentally, this count alleges that defendants caused the alleged injuries to "the Decedent" by failing properly to hire, retain, and supervise Father Hartz. Complaint, ¶ 84. Nowhere else in the complaint is it suggested that plaintiff Doe has died.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

FN10. The complaint actually makes this specific allegation against "Defendants," but the relief sought on this count is "against Defendant St. Lawrence Church." Complaint, ¶ 100. Therefore, the court construes this claim to have been brought only against the Church.

Doe has demanded a jury trial on all of the counts of her complaint.

C. The Response

Defendants Church, Diocese, and Bishop waived service of the complaint on September 13, 1996, and, on September 30, 1996, moved to dismiss the complaint in whole or in part, or, in the alternative, for an order of abstention and certification of issues to the Iowa Supreme Court. After various extensions, these defendants filed a brief in support of their motion to dismiss, abstain, or certify questions on October 22, 1996. Doe resisted the motion, also after various extensions, on February 21, 1997. [FN11] Father Hartz answered the complaint on January 21, 1997, also demanded a jury trial, and, on February 1384 3, 1997, joined in the motion to dismiss, abstain, or certify questions filed by the other defendants. [FN12] Defendants filed a reply to Doe's resistance on March 14, 1997.

FN11. In the interim between the filing of the motion to dismiss, abstain, or certify questions, a magistrate judge of this district suspended discovery in this action.

FN12. Because Father Hartz has only joined in the motion to dismiss filed by the other defendants, but has not filed his own motion to dismiss nor an independent brief, there is no motion before the court to dismiss the counts pleaded only against Father Hartz.

On February 24, 1997, the court certified the fact of the defendants' challenge to the constitutionality of 42 U.S.C. § 13981 to the attorney general of the United States and granted the United States forty-five days from the date of the order to intervene pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2403 and Fed.R.Civ.P. 24(c). On February 28, 1997, the court also directed that amici curiae interested in participating in the proceedings seek leave to present briefs and arguments by April 11, 1997, and directed that any amicus curiae brief be filed by April 25, 1997. On April 10, 1997, the United States sought leave to intervene as a party plaintiff to defend the constitutionality of the VAWA, which leave was granted on April 14, 1997. On April 11, 1997, the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund sought leave to file an amicus curiae brief and, on April 23, 1997, that organization also sought leave to participate in oral arguments. [FN13] Also on April 11, 1997, a group consisting of more than sixty eminent law professors in the fields of constitutional law and civil rights, known herein as the "Law Professors," sought leave to file a brief as amici curiae. [FN14] On April 24, 1997, the court granted the requests of amici to file briefs and present arguments, extended their deadline to file briefs to April 30, 1997, and gave defendants permission to file a brief in reply to arguments of amici and the intervenor post-hearing. However, because the hearing was subsequently rescheduled, the court then set a deadline of May 14, 1997, for the briefs of intervenor and amici, and a deadline of May 28, 1997, for defendants to reply. Amici Law Professors filed their brief on April 28, 1997. The plaintiff/intervenor United States filed its brief on May 13, 1997, and amicus NOW filed its brief on May 14, 1997. Defendants filed a reply to amici curiae on May 29, 1997.

FN13. NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund is actually appearing on behalf of several organizations, but, for the sake of simplicity, this group of interested persons or organizations will be treated as singular and identified as "amicus NOW." The organizations on whose behalf NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund is appearing are listed in the appendix to this opinion.

FN14. The members of the "Law Professors" group are listed in the appendix to this opinion.

The court has found the briefing of all of the parties and amici to be of remarkable thoroughness and informativeness, and, consequently, to be of unusual assistance to the court in addressing the serious and complicated issues presented. The court believes that the advocacy demonstrated has served the interests of justice well and the court will strive to meet the high standards of the interested parties with comparably cogent and conscientious consideration of all essential issues.

The court heard oral arguments on June 9, 1997. As the court expected from the briefing, the arguments were spirited and informative, but also conducted with the highest degree of professionalism. Plaintiff Jane Doe was represented at oral arguments by counsel Roxanne Barton Conlin of Roxanne Conlin and Associates, P.C., in Des Moines, Iowa. Defendant Father Hartz was represented by counsel Joseph L. Fitzgibbons of Fitzgibbons Brothers Attorneys at Law in Estherville, Iowa. Defendants Bishop Soens, St. Lawrence Church, and the Roman Catholic Diocese of Sioux City, Iowa, were represented by counsel James W. Radig of Shull, Cosgrove, Hellige & Lundberg in Sioux City, Iowa. Plaintiff/intervenor United States of America was represented by counsel Anjali A. Ashley of the Department of Justice, Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch in Washington, D.C., and Willis A. Buell, Assistant United States Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa. Amicus curiae NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund was represented by counsel Andrea Williams of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund in New York, New York. FN15. Amici curiae Law Professors, who did not participate in oral arguments, were represented by counsel Victoria L. Herring of Des Moines, Iowa. 1385 After the oral arguments, the government was granted leave to supplement the record with the briefs from the appeal of the Brzonkala decision to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Those briefs were received by the court on June 13, 1997. Also, prior to and during oral arguments, the parties supplemented the citations of authority found in their briefs, particularly with reference to the First Amendment barriers to a negligent hiring or supervision claim against a religious institution.

The court will detail the pertinent arguments of the interested parties as it considers each of the essential issues the court finds must (or can) be resolved in disposition of defendants' motion.

II. LEGAL ANALYSIS

The defendants assert that various portions of Doe's complaint must be dismissed, because she fails to state claims upon which relief can be granted. They contend further that the complaint must be dismissed in its entirety, because the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over Doe's federal claim, and hence lacks supplemental jurisdiction over her state-law claims. The standards for dismissal on each of these grounds are similar, to some extent interrelated, but not identical.

A. Standards For Defendants' Motion To Dismiss

1. Failure to state a claim

[1] A motion to dismiss may be made, inter alia, for "failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted." Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). A motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) requires the court to review only the pleadings to determine whether the pleadings state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b). [FN16] Such motions "can serve a useful purpose in disposing of legal issues with the minimum of time and expense to the interested parties." Hiland Dairy, Inc. v. Kroger Co., 402 F.2d 968, 973 (8th Cir.1968), cert. denied, 395 U.S. 961, 89 S.Ct. 2096, 23 L.Ed.2d 748 (1969). The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail, but rather whether the plaintiff is entitled to offer evidence in support of the plaintiff's claims. Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (1974); United States v. Aceto Agric. Chem. Corp., 872 F.2d 1373, 1376 (8th Cir.1989).

> FN16. However, where on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss "matters outside the pleading are presented to and not excluded by the court, the motion shall be treated as one for summary judgment and disposed of as provided in Rule 56." Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6); see also Buck v. FDIC, 75 F.3d 1285, 1288 & n. 3 (8th Cir.1996) (because the district court relied on matters outside the complaint in ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, "the district court had to treat the [defendant's] motion to dismiss as a motion for summary judgment and apply the relevant standards for summary judgment," and further noting that "[t]he standards for dismissing a complaint under Rule 12(b)(6) are substantially different" from those applicable to a Rule 56 summary judgment motion; therefore it was inappropriate for the district court to fail to specify whether it was disposing of an issue according to summary judgment or Rule 12(b)(6) standards). Even where matters outside of the pleadings are presented to the court, however, a motion to dismiss is not converted into a motion for summary judgment "where the district court's order makes clear that the judge ruled only on the motion to dismiss." Skyberg v. United Food and Commercial Workers Int'l Union, AFL-CIO, 5 F.3d 297, 302 n. 2 (8th Cir.1993). Where the district court has made the posture of its disposition clear, the appellate court will "treat the case as being in that posture." Id. The only materials outside of the pleadings offered here in support of or resistance to the motion to dismiss are documentation of hearings and reports before Congress on the VAWA and authorities not readily available to the court, rather than documentary or other evidence. Therefore, the motion to dismiss will not be disposed of as provided in Rule 56, but only according to the standards stated herein.

In considering a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the court must assume that all 1386 facts alleged in the plaintiff's complaint are true, and must liberally construe those allegations. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 78 S.Ct. 99, 101-02, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957); Doe v. Norwest Bank Minn., N.A., 107 F.3d 1297, 1303-04 (8th Cir.1997) ("In considering a motion to dismiss, we assume all facts in the complaint are true, construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, and affirm the dismissal only if 'it appears beyond a doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle the plaintiff to relief,' " quoting Coleman v. Watt, 40 F.3d 255, 258 (8th Cir.1994)); WMX Techs., Inc. v. Gasconade County, Mo., 105 F.3d 1195, 1198 (8th Cir.1997) ("In considering a motion to dismiss, the court must construe the complaint liberally and assume all factual allegations to be true."); First Commercial Trust v. Colt's Mfg. Co., 77 F.3d 1081, 1083 (8th Cir.1996) (same).

The court is mindful that in treating the factual allegations of a complaint as true pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the court must "reject conclusory allegations of law and unwarranted inferences." Silver v. H & R Block, Inc., 105 F.3d 394, 397 (8th Cir.1997) (citing In re Syntex Corp. Securities Lit., 95 F.3d 922, 926 (9th Cir.1996)); Westcott v. City of Omaha, 901 F.2d 1486, 1488 (8th Cir.1990) (the court "do[es] not, however, blindly accept the legal conclusions drawn by the pleader from the facts," citing Morgan v. Church's Fried Chicken, 829 F.2d 10, 12 (6th Cir.1987), and 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 1357, at 595-97 (1969)); see also LRL Properties v. Portage Metro Hous. Auth., 55 F.3d 1097, 1103 (6th Cir.1995) (the court "need not accept as true legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences," quoting Morgan, 829 F.2d at 12). Conclusory allegations need not and will not be taken as true; rather, the court will consider whether the facts alleged in the complaint, accepted as true, are sufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Silver, 105 F.3d at 397; Westcott, 901 F.2d at 1488.

[2] The United States Supreme Court and the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals have both observed that "a court should grant the motion and dismiss the action 'only if it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations.' " Handeen v. Lemaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1347-48 (8th Cir.1997) (quoting Hishon v. King & Spalding, 467 U.S. 69, 73, 104 S.Ct. 2229, 2232-33, 81 L.Ed.2d 59 (1984) ); accord Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46, 78 S.Ct. at 101-02 ("A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his [or her] claim which would entitle him [or her] to relief."); Doe, 107 F.3d at 1304 (dismissal is appropriate only if " 'it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts which would entitle the plaintiff to relief,' " quoting Coleman, 40 F.3d at 258); WMX Techs., Inc., 105 F.3d at 1198 ("Dismissal should not be granted unless it appears beyond a reasonable doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts that would entitle relief," citing Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46, 78 S.Ct. at 101-02). The Rule does not countenance dismissals based on a judge's disbelief of a complaint's factual allegations. Neitzke v. Williams, 490 U.S. 319, 327, 109 S.Ct. 1827, 1832- 33, 104 L.Ed.2d 338 (1989). Thus, "[a] motion to dismiss should be granted as a practical matter only in the unusual case in which a plaintiff includes allegations that show on the face of the complaint that there is some insuperable bar to relief." Frey v. City of Herculaneum, 44 F.3d 667, 671 (8th Cir.1995) (internal quotation marks and ellipses omitted).

2. Lack of subject matter jurisdiction

Interwoven with defendants' challenge to Doe's complaint on the ground that it fails to state claims upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) is defendants' challenge, on another Rule 12 ground, this time Rule 12(b)(1), to the subject matter jurisdiction of the court. Defendants contend that Doe cannot state a federal claim upon which to assert federal jurisdiction, first, because Doe's federal claim under the VAWA is based on an unconstitutional statute, and, second, because Doe has not alleged a predicate offense upon which a VAWA claim would depend on either the face of the complaint or as a matter of fact.

1387 The federal district courts have always been courts of limited jurisdiction. See U.S. Const., Art. III, § 1. [FN17] Because jurisdiction is a threshold issue for the court, the district court has "broader power to decide its own right to hear the case than it has when the merits of the case are reached." Bellecourt v. United States, 994 F.2d 427, 430 (8th Cir.1993) (quoting Osborn v. United States, 918 F.2d 724, 729 (8th Cir.1990), which in turn quotes *Williamson v. If the court considers matters outside of the pleadings, however, it may not, without notice to the parties, convert a motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1) into a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6), which is subject to summary judgment disposition, because to do so would not allow the parties to respond to the issue the court is weighing for summary judgment. Layton v. United States, 919 F.2d 1333, 1334-35 (8th Cir.1990).

In Layton, the court noted that a Rule 12(b)(1) motion is distinguishable from a 12(b)(6) motion on the ground that the Rules expressly provide that the latter is subject to conversion into a summary judgment motion, while no such provision exists for a Rule 12(b)(1) motion. Layton, 919 F.2d at 1335. However, courts have approved such a conversion of a Rule 12(b)(1) motion when appropriate. Id. (citing Less v. Lurie, 789 F.2d 624, 625 n. 1 (8th Cir.1986)). There is, however, an exception to the notice requirement before the court makes a conversion into a summary judgment motion articulated in Van Leeuwen v. United States Postal Serv., 628 F.2d 1093, 1095 (8th Cir.1980), which requires that if both parties have submitted affidavits and exhibits outside the pleadings which they understand the district court has accepted for consideration, then the non-moving party has notice of the court's intention to treat the motion to dismiss as one for summary judgment. Id. (concluding that the court could not invoke the Van Leeuwen exception on the basis of a unilateral submission of exhibits by the moving party). The court will explain in the body of this ruling which standards are applicable to the motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) in this case.

In Osborn v. United States, 918 F.2d 724 (8th Cir.1990), the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals presented its most exhaustive discussion of the procedures and requirements for determination of a 12(b)(1) motion to dismiss.

The district court was correct in recognizing the critical differences between Rule 12(b)(1), which governs challenges to subject matter jurisdiction, and Rule 56, which governs summary judgment. Rule 12 requires that Rule 56 standards be applied to motions to dismiss for failure to state a claim under Rule 12(b)(6) when the court considers matters outside the pleadings. [Citations omitted.] Rule 12 does not prescribe, however, summary judgment treatment for challenges under 12(b)(1) to subject matter jurisdiction where a factual record is developed. Nonetheless, some courts have held that Rule 56 governs a 12(b)(1) motion when the court looks beyond the complaint. We agree, however, with the majority of circuits that have held to the contrary.... [Citations omitted.]

The reason for treating a 12(b)(1) motion differently than a 12(b)(6) motion, which is governed by Rule 56 when matters outside the pleadings are considered, "is rooted in the unique nature of the jurisdictional question." Williamson [v. Tucker], 645 F.2d [404,] 413 [(5th Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 897, 102 S.Ct. 396, 70 L.Ed.2d 212 (1981)]. It is "elementary," the Fourth [sic] Circuit stated, that a district court has "broader power to decide its own right to hear the case than it has when the merits of the case are reached." Id. Jurisdictional issues, whether they involve questions of law or of fact, are for the court to decide. Id. Moreover, because jurisdiction is a threshold question, judicial economy demands that the issue be decided at the outset rather than deferring it until trial, as would occur with denial of a summary judgment motion.

Osborn, 918 F.2d at 729.

The Osborn court found the distinction between facial and factual attacks on the complaint under 12(b)(1) to be critical. Id. (citing Menchaca v. Chrysler Credit Corp., 613 F.2d 507, 511 (5th Cir.) , cert. denied, *1389449 U.S. 953, 101 S.Ct. 358, 66 L.Ed.2d 217 (1980), and Mortensen v. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 549 F.2d 884, 891 (3d Cir.1977)). The court stated that [i]n the first instance, the court restricts itself to the face of the pleadings, and the non-moving party receives the same protections as it would defending against a motion brought under Rule 12(b)(6). The general rule is that a complaint should not be dismissed " 'unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.' " In a factual attack, the court considers matters outside the pleadings, and the nonmoving party does not have the benefit of 12(b)(6) safeguards.

Id. at 729 n. 6 (citations omitted). [FN19] A factual challenge to jurisdiction under 12(b)(1) is unique:

FN19. The standards for dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) are, of course, described in some detail in the preceding section.

> [H]ere the trial court may proceed as it never could under 12(b)(6) or Fed.R.Civ.P. 56. Because at issue in a factual motion is the trial court's jurisdiction--its very power to hear the case--there is substantial authority that the trial court is free to weigh the evidence and satisfy itself as to the existence of its power to hear the case. In short, no presumptive truthfulness attaches to the plaintiff's allegations, and the existence of disputed material facts will not preclude the trial court from evaluating for itself the merits of jurisdictional claims. Moreover, the plaintiff will have the burden of proof that jurisdiction does in fact exist.

Id. at 730 (quoting Mortensen, 549 F.2d at 891). The Osborn court stated that the proper course is for the defendant to request an evidentiary hearing on the issue, and, since no statute or rule prescribes the format of such a hearing, "any rational mode of inquiry will do." Id. (quoting Crawford, 796 F.2d at 929).

> Once the evidence is submitted, the district court must decide the jurisdictional issue, not simply rule that there is or is not enough evidence to have a trial on the issue. [Crawford, 796 F.2d at 929.] The only exception is in instances when the jurisdictional issue is "so bound up with the merits that a full trial on the merits may be necessary to resolve the issue." Id.

Id.

Defendants here originally asserted only a facial challenge to subject matter jurisdiction, contending that Doe had failed to allege essential elements of the predicate offense, an alleged violation of Iowa Code § 709.15. However, while their motion to dismiss was pending, the defendants apparently recognized that their challenge to subject matter jurisdiction was or could also be factual. They sought and initially obtained from plaintiff a factual stipulation concerning whether Doe received mental health services from Father Hartz, but plaintiff has now withdrawn her consent to that stipulation. The defendants then, belatedly, requested an evidentiary hearing on June 4, 1997, just days before the oral arguments, in support of a factual challenge to subject matter jurisdiction. [FN20] By order dated June 5, 1997, the court denied defendants' request for an evidentiary hearing as both untimely and impractical under the circumstances. See Titus, 4 F.3d at 593.

> FN20. The oral arguments had been scheduled for months and for this specific date for several weeks.

Thus, the challenge to subject matter jurisdiction mounted here is construed to be only a facial one, subject to the same protections afforded the non-moving party as that party would have in defending against a motion brought under Rule 12(b)(6). Osborn, 918 F.2d at 729 n. 6; see also Titus, 4 F.3d at 593 ("In a facial challenge to jurisdiction, all of the factual allegations concerning jurisdiction are presumed to be true and the motion is successful if the plaintiff fails to allege an element necessary for subject matter jurisdiction."). To the extent that the defendants assert a factual challenge to subject matter jurisdiction, the court finds that their factual issue--whether or not Doe received mental health services from Father Hartz as required by one element of the predicate offense Doe has alleged in her VAWA claim--*1390 is inextricably "bound up with the merits" of the VAWA claim, such that a full trial, or at least a complete summary judgment record, on the merits of the claim is necessary to resolve the issue. Osborn, 918 F.2d at 730. For now, therefore, in resolving defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, the court will assess the adequacy of Doe's facial pleading or prima facie factual showing of elements necessary to sustain her federal claim, but will not "decide the jurisdictional issue." Id. Instead, the court will rule only on whether there is or is not enough evidence for the question of subject matter jurisdiction to await resolution at a later stage in these proceedings. Id.

With these standards in mind, the court turns to the defendants' specific challenges to the adequacy of Doe's claims as alleged.

B. The Challenges To The VAWA Claim

Defendants assert that there are two insuperable bars to Doe's claim under the civil remedies provision of the VAWA, 42 U.S.C. § 13981. First, they contend that the civil remedies provision of the VAWA is unconstitutional, because it is not a proper exercise of congressional power under either the Commerce Clause or section five of the Fourteenth Amendment. Second, they contend that Doe has failed to state a claim that comes within the scope of the Act, because Doe has failed to allege satisfactorily each element of such a claim. Furthermore, defendants argue that the court lacks subject matter jurisdiction over the complaint, because this sole federal claim is based on an unconstitutional statute, and/or Doe has failed to allege an element necessary for subject matter jurisdiction. [FN21]

> FN21. Again, the court will not reach the question pertinent to a factual challenge to subject matter jurisdiction, which is whether all essential elements necessary for subject matter jurisdiction can be proved.

[8] The court will consider these questions in reverse order, however, only reaching the argument that the statute is unconstitutional if that part of defendants' motion to dismiss based on failure to allege the necessary elements of the claim is defeated. Such a procedure is mandated by the United States Supreme Court:

> "Prior to reaching any constitutional questions, federal courts must consider nonconstitutional grounds for decision." Gulf Oil Co. v. Bernard, 452 U.S. 89, 99, 101 S.Ct. 2193, 2199, 68 L.Ed.2d 693 (1981); Mobile v. Bolden, 446 U.S. 55, 60, 100 S.Ct. 1490, 1495-96, 64 L.Ed.2d 47 (1980); Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352, 361, n. 10, 103 S.Ct. 1855, 1860, n. 10, 75 L.Ed.2d 903 (1983), citing Ashwander v. TVA, 297 U.S. 288, 347, 56 S.Ct. 466, 483, 80 L.Ed. 688 (1936) (Brandeis, J., concurring). This is a "fundamental rule of judicial restraint." Three Affiliated Tribes of Fort Berthold Reservation v. Wold Engineering, 467 U.S. 138, 104 S.Ct. 2267, 81 L.Ed.2d 113 (1984). Of course, the fact that courts should not decide constitutional issues unnecessarily does not permit a court to press statutory construction "to the point of disingenuous evasion" to avoid a constitutional question. United States v. Locke, 471 U.S. 84, 96, 105 S.Ct. 1785, 1793, 85 L.Ed.2d 64 (1985). As the Court stressed in Spector Motor Service v. McLaughlin, 323 U.S. 101, 105, 65 S.Ct. 152, 154, 89 L.Ed. 101 (1944), "[i]f there is one doctrine more deeply rooted than any other in the process of constitutional adjudication, it is that we ought not to pass on questions of constitutionality ... unless such adjudication is unavoidable." See also United States v. Gerlach Live Stock Co., 339 U.S. 725, 737, 70 S.Ct. 955, 961-62, 94 L.Ed. 1231 (1950); Larson v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228, 257, 102 S.Ct. 1673, 1690, 72 L.Ed.2d 33 (1982) (Stevens, J., concurring).

Jean v. Nelson, 472 U.S. 846, 854, 105 S.Ct. 2992, 2997, 86 L.Ed.2d 664 (1985). The Court in Jean found that the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, en banc, had failed to follow this rule, because that court first examined the constitutionality of parole considerations employed by the INS that were established in former statutes and regulations instead of examining whether current statutes provided nondiscriminatory considerations. Id. Because current statutes and regulations provided the petitioners with nondiscriminatory parole considerations, 1391 which was all petitioners sought to obtain by virtue of their constitutional arguments, "there was no need to address the constitutional issue" as to the former statutes and regulations. Id. at 854-55, 105 S.Ct. at 2997.

Here, the situation is somewhat different, but this "fundamental rule of judicial restraint" is nonetheless applicable: If Doe has not stated a claim under the VAWA, a nonconstitutional ground for dismissal of the claim, [FN22] this court certainly need not consider whether the VAWA is constitutional. Id. at 854, 105 S.Ct. at 2997. If the court can render defendants all they seek, dismissal of the VAWA claim, because the allegations are simply insufficient, without addressing the constitutionality of the VAWA, it must consider that assertion first, before considering constitutionality of the statute. Id. at 854-55, 105 S.Ct. at 2996-97; see also Schanou v. Lancaster County Sch. Dist. No. 160, 62 F.3d 1040, 1046 n. 4 (8th Cir.1995) (noting that the court would express no opinion on the constitutionality of a policy of a school district, because the court had disposed of the case without reaching the merits of the constitutional challenge). To put it another way, only if Doe has adequately pleaded a claim within the scope of the VAWA will adjudication of the constitutionality of the Act be "unavoidable." Id. at 854, 105 S.Ct. at 2997.

> FN22. Such a conclusion might also require dismissal of the entire complaint, which depends upon a viable federal question for this court to exercise jurisdiction, because the challenge to the only federal claim comes so early in the proceedings. See 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3).

1. Has Doe stated a claim under the VAWA? [FN23]

FN23. Plaintiff/intervenor the United States and amici necessarily took no part in the arguments concerning this part of defendants' motion to dismiss, being concerned solely with the constitutionality of the VAWA.

The defendants contend that Count 1 of Doe's complaint simply does not allege, or does not allege adequately, each essential element of a § 13981 claim. After setting forth the language of § 13981 and the Iowa statute establishing the predicate offense Doe asserts Father Hartz committed, Iowa Code § 709.15, the defendants contend that the essential elements of Doe's VAWA claim are the following:

(1) Father Hartz provided or purported to provide "mental health services";
(2) at the time of the events in question, Doe had a relationship with Father Hartz in which she was receiving from him "mental health services," or she had terminated such a relationship within the previous year;
(3) Father Hartz's acts constituted
(a) a pattern or practice or scheme of conduct
(b) to engage in sexual conduct of the kind prohibited by § 709.15(1)(f)(2) or (3), and
(c) that conduct was for the purpose of arousing or satisfying his sexual desires;
(4) Father Hartz's conduct constituted a "crime of violence" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16;
(5) the acts were committed because of Doe's gender;
(6) Father Hartz committed the acts because of an animus on his part against women; and
(7) Doe suffered damage.

The defendants assert that Doe's § 13981 claim is deficiently pleaded as to each of these elements. Although Doe does not appear to challenge the defendants' statement of the elements of her VAWA claim, she resists this part of the defendants' motion to dismiss on the ground that she has adequately alleged every essential element of that claim. In their reply brief, the defendants focus on the adequacy of the pleading that Doe received "mental health services" from Father Hartz.

The court's task, therefore, is to determine, in the first instance, the elements of Doe's VAWA claim, and then to assess whether she has pleaded, in more than conclusory fashion, facts that, accepted as true, are sufficient to state a claim under the VAWA upon which relief can be granted. Silver, 105 F.3d at 397; Westcott, 901 F.2d at 1488. "[O]nly if it is clear that no relief could 1392 be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations" will the court grant the defendants' motion to dismiss the VAWA claim on this nonconstitutional ground. Handeen, 112 F.3d at 1347-48 (internal quotation marks omitted).

a. Elements of Doe's § 13981 claim

[9] i. Rules of statutory interpretation. Identifying or determining the elements of a statutory cause of action is essentially a matter of statutory interpretation. "The task of resolving the dispute over the meaning of [a statute] begins where all such inquiries must begin: with the language of the statute itself." United States v. Ron Pair Enters., Inc., 489 U.S. 235, 241, 109 S.Ct. 1026, 1030, 103 L.Ed.2d 290 (1989); Chevron U.S.A. v. Natural Res. Germain, 503 U.S. 249, 253, 112 S.Ct. 1146, 1149, 117 L.Ed.2d 391 (1992). Thus, "courts must presume that a legislature says in a statute what it means and means in a statute what it says there." Id. (citing Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 241-42, 109 S.Ct. at 1030-31; *United States v. [10] When the language of the statute is plain, the inquiry also ends with the language of the statute, for in such instances "the sole function of the courts is to enforce [the statute] according to its terms." Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 241, 109 S.Ct. at 1030 (quoting Caminetti v. Pennock Ins., Inc., 965 F.2d 1497, 1502 (8th Cir.1992) (plain meaning of a statute governs over ambiguous legislative history, citing Ron Pair Enterprises). The plain meaning of a statute is decisive, "except in the rare cases [in which] the literal application of a statute will produce a result demonstrably at odds with the intentions of its drafters." Ron Pair, 489 U.S. at 242, 109 S.Ct. at 1031 (quoting *Griffin v. [11] However, "[p]lain meaning, like beauty, is sometimes in the eye of the beholder," Florida Power & Light Co. v. Lorion, 470 U.S. 729, 737, 105 S.Ct. 1598, 1603-04, 84 L.Ed.2d 643 (1985). Thus, the court must not reach its decision about the meaning of a statute > by a strict construction of the words of the Act, nor by application of artificial canons of construction. On the contrary, we are to read the statutory language in its ordinary and natural sense, and if doubts remain, resolve them in the light, not only of the policy intended to be served by the enactment, but, as well, by all other available aids to construction. But it is not our function to engraft on a statute additions which we think the legislature logically might or should have made.

Bacon, 21 F.3d at 210-11 (quoting United States v. Cooper Corp., 312 U.S. 600, 605, 61 S.Ct. 742, 743-44, 85 L.Ed. 1071 (1941)). Thus, the court must assume that the words of a statute, construed in their ordinary meaning, accurately express the legislative purpose, and the court should decline to frustrate the plain meaning of the words chosen 1393 by the legislature. United States v. Talley, 16 F.3d 972, 976 (8th Cir.1994).

ii. The plain meaning of the VAWA civil remedies statute. The civil remedies provision of the VAWA is codified at 42 U.S.C. § 13981. Subsection (b) of § 13981 establishes the right upon which a civil claim can be founded:

> All persons within the United States shall have the right to be free from crimes of violence motivated by gender (as defined in subsection (d) of this section).

42 U.S.C. § 13981(b). Subsection (c) authorizes a cause of action for violation of this right as follows:

> A person (including a person who acts under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage of any State) who commits a crime of violence motivated by gender and thus deprives another of the right declared in subsection (b) of this section shall be liable to the party injured, in an action for the recovery of compensatory and punitive damages, injunctive and declaratory relief, and such other relief as a court may deem appropriate.

42 U.S.C. § 13981(c). The essential elements of a VAWA claim are readily apparent from the subsection authorizing the cause of action. Those elements are as follows: (1) the defendant committed a "crime of violence"; (2) that crime of violence was "motivated by gender"; and (3) commission of the crime deprived the victim of the right to be free from crimes of violence motivated by gender. Id. Although these elements may be readily apparent, determining the constituent prongs of these elements requires further analysis.

[12][13] The court finds that it must consider first the meaning of the third element extracted from the language of subsection (c). At first reading, this element appears tautologous: If one commits a crime of violence, element one, that is motivated by gender, the second element, one has necessarily deprived another of the right to be free of crimes of violence motivated by gender, the third element. However, it is precisely this statement that rebuts defendants' argument that an essential element of Doe's case is that she prove she suffered damage. Instead, the statute plainly states that deprivation of the right is sufficient injury to sustain the cause of action; no further physical, emotional, economic, or non-economic injury is required. [FN24]

FN24. Consequently, as in actions pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 for violations of constitutional rights, if the plaintiff shows a violation of the right established by the statute, but has no damages of any monetary value, it would follow that the plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages, which can support a punitive damages award. See Muhammad v. Lockhart, 104 F.3d 1069, 1070 (8th Cir.1997) (an award of nominal damages to a person deprived of the right recognizes the importance of the civil right in an organized society); Williams v. Soligo, 104 F.3d 1060, 1062 (8th Cir.1997) (a plaintiff deprived of a civil right, such as procedural due process, is entitled to nominal damages); Pulla v. Amoco Oil Co., 72 F.3d 648, 658-61 (8th Cir.1995) (holding that punitive damages were available where the plaintiff was awarded only nominal damages on his claim of invasion of privacy, but that the amount of punitive damages awarded violated due process); Cowans v. Wyrick, 862 F.2d 697 (8th Cir.1988) (nominal damages were appropriate in a § 1983 civil rights action where the jury was unable to place a monetary value on the plaintiff's harm from deprivation of civil rights); Goodwin v. Circuit Court of St. Louis County, 729 F.2d 541, 548 (8th Cir.1984) (holding that an award of nominal damages in a § 1983 action will support an award of punitive damages).

One practical effect of this interpretation is that the trier of fact is not required to make any additional finding to satisfy the third element drawn from the statute. Proof of the first two elements necessarily establishes the third element, and the plaintiff's entitlement to the relief stated in the statute, which is "compensatory and punitive damages, injunctive and declaratory relief, and such other relief as a court may deem appropriate." 42 U.S.C. § 13981(c) . Another practical effect of this interpretation is that the court need not consider further here the third statutory element identified above in its efforts to determine what elements must be adequately alleged to establish Doe's right to pursue a VAWA claim. [FN25]

FN25. Doe has specifically alleged that she has the right established by § 13981(b), and that Father Hartz's conduct deprived her of that right and caused various specific kinds of emotional and other injuries. Complaint, Count 1, ¶¶ 35, 37.

1394 [14] Subsection (d) of the statute, to which the court will return below, contains essential definitions, but for now, the court will focus on some limitations or clarifications of the elements of a civil claim under the VAWA found in subsection (e). Subdivisions (e)(1) and (e)(2) clarify the reach of the civil cause of action. Subdivision (e)(1) clarifies or narrows the second element of the offense by excluding from the definition of "crimes of violence motivated by gender" those crimes that are merely "random acts of violence unrelated to gender or ... acts that cannot be demonstrated, by a preponderance of the evidence, to be motivated by gender." 42 U.S.C. § 13981(e)(1). The civil cause of action under the VAWA is therefore plainly aimed at conduct motivated by the victim's gender, not merely crimes in which the victim is a woman. See S.Rep. No. 103-195, at 49-50 (1993) ("The committee is not asserting that all crimes against women are gender- motivated. As discussed below, title III requires subjective proof on a case-by-case basis that the criminal conduct was motivated by a bias against the victim's gender."); S.Rep. No. 103-138, at 49-50 (1993) (same). Furthermore, although the Act was entitled the Violence Against Women Act, the statute is cast in gender-neutral terms, and thus would also be applicable to a crime against a man that was gender motivated.

[15] While subdivision (e)(1) narrows the scope of the civil remedy, subdivision (e)(2) explains the breadth of the civil cause of action. It specifies that "[n]othing in this section requires a prior criminal complaint, prosecution, or conviction to establish the elements of a cause of action under subsection (c) of this section." 42 U.S.C. § 13981(e)(2). Thus, although there must be a predicate "crime of violence," the first element of the civil cause of action under the VAWA, the civil remedy stands alone, without the necessity of a prior criminal complaint, prosecution, or conviction to address or establish the predicate offense. Id.; see also Doe v. Doe, 929 F.Supp. 608, 611-12 (D.Conn.1996) (also observing that "[t]he statute does not require a prior criminal complaint, prosecution, or conviction to establish the elements of the cause of action," citing § 13981(e)(2)). Thus far, the statute is clear enough.

But what kinds of crimes of violence motivated by gender can constitute the necessary predicate offenses? To answer this question, the court turns to the definitions found in subsection (d) of the statute. The meaning of this subsection, the court finds, is not immediately apparent. Subsection (d) provides as follows:

For purposes of this section--
(1) the term "crime of violence motivated by gender" means a crime of violence committed because of gender or on the basis of gender, and due, at least in part, to an animus based on the victim's gender; and
(2) the term "crime of violence" means--
(A) an act or series of acts that would constitute a felony against the person or that would constitute a felony against property if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another, and that would come within the meaning of State or Federal offenses described in section 16 of Title 18, whether or not those acts have actually resulted in criminal charges, prosecution, or conviction and whether or not those acts were committed in the special maritime, territorial, or prison jurisdiction of the United States; and
(B) includes an act or series of acts that would constitute a felony described in subparagraphs (A) but for the relationship between the person who takes such action and the individual against whom such action is taken.

42 U.S.C. § 13981(d). Subdivision (d)(1) explains that, to satisfy the second element of the claim, which requires that the predicate crime be one "motivated by gender," a two-prong test must be satisfied: First, the predicate crime must be "because of" or "on the basis of" the victim's gender, and, second, the predicate crime must be "due, at least in part, to an animus based on the victim's gender." 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(1) (emphasis added). The court will return to the meaning of "animus" in this context below.

*1395 Subdivision (d)(2) in turn explains the specific requirements of, or prongs of inquiry under, the first element of the civil claim, the requirement of a predicate "crime of violence." 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2). Subdivision (d)(2) states the intention of Congress, subsequently reiterated in subdivision (e)(2), that the predicate offense need not have resulted in criminal charges, prosecution, or conviction, and further eliminates certain territorial limitations. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2)(A). However, it is other portions of subdivision (d)(2) that the court finds establish the significant prongs of inquiry. Unfortunately, the court finds the drafting of those particular portions somewhat opaque.

Paragraph (A) of subdivision (d)(2) appears to establish requirements for a predicate "crime of violence," although the relationship among those requirements is, at first blush, rather obscure. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2)(A). What the court finds to be uncertain is the relationship among the phrases "an act or series of acts," "that would constitute a felony against the person," "that would constitute a felony against property," "if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another," and "that would come within the meaning of State or Federal offenses described in section 16 of Title 18," coupled with the placement of the conjunctions "and" and "or," as well as the presence or absence of commas. [FN26]

FN26. Perhaps the simplest way to explain the court's quandary in deciphering the meaning of this subdivision is to list some alternative readings. For example, the paragraph can be read to create, first, two alternative requirements, then another, mandatory requirement, as follows:
The term "crime of violence" means an act or series of acts (1)(a) that would constitute a felony against the person or (b) that would constitute a felony against property if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another, and (2) that would come within the meaning of State or Federal Offenses described in section 16 of Title 18....
However, it might seem just as reasonable to read the statute as follows:
[T]he term "crime of violence" means an act or series of acts (1)(a) that would constitute a felony against the person if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another or (b) that would constitute a felony against property if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical > injury to another, and (2) that would come within the meaning of State or Federal Offenses described in section 16 of Title 18 .... This reading relates the condition that the conduct present a serious risk of physical injury to another to both the felony against the person and the felony against property. A third alternative, dramatically changing the relationship among the phrases, and hence the requirements of the statute, without doing violence to the original word order would be the following:

>
> [T]he term "crime of violence" means an act or series of acts (1) that would constitute a felony against the person or (2) that would constitute a felony against property if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another, and that would come within the meaning of State or Federal Offenses described in section 16 of Title 18....
> This reading creates two alternative requirements, rather than two alternatives for a first requirement coupled with a second, mandatory requirement. Furthermore, it couples the requirement that the crime come within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16 only to the alternative of a felony against property. In short, under this reading, any felony against the person (that also satisfies the gender motivation tests of subdivision (d)(1)) would constitute a predicate offense for a VAWA civil action, but only a felony against property (again, that satisfies the gender motivation tests of subdivision (d)(1)) that both presents a serious risk of physical injury to another and that comes within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16 would constitute the necessary predicate offense.

Nonetheless, to clarify the meaning of the statute, the court need only resort to ordinary meanings. Bacon, 21 F.3d at 210; Talley, 16 F.3d at 976. Attachment of the condition that "the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another" to a felony against the person is largely superfluous, whereas attachment of that condition to crimes against property significantly narrows the range of property crimes that would come within the scope of the statute. Furthermore, the phrases pertaining to "felony against the person" and "felony against property" each begin with "that would constitute," and they are separated by the word "or." This construction of the paragraph plainly suggests that the phrase before the "or," that is, "that would constitute a felony against the person," is one alternative for a predicate crime of violence, while the phrase after the "or," that is, "that would constitute a felony against property if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another," is a second alternative for this prong of the inquiry.

1396 [16] Resort to ordinary meanings also establishes that the requirement that the predicate felony come within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16 is a mandatory requirement conjoined to either alternative, a felony against the person or a felony against property. This requirement is set off from the phrase pertaining to a felony against property by a comma, whereas no such comma would be required if this requirement were conjoined only to a felony against property, but not against the person. Furthermore, this requirement also shares with the first two alternatives the restrictive phrase "that would," suggesting it is a further, mandatory requirement for the predicate crime of violence consisting of an act or series of acts meeting certain requirements. Thus, the court concludes that the plain meaning of paragraph (A) of subdivision (d)(2) is that the predicate offense must meet the following requirements:

> The term "crime of violence" means an act or series of acts
> (1)(a) that would constitute a felony against the person
>
> or
>
> (b) that would constitute a felony against property if the conduct presents a serious risk of physical injury to another, and
>
> (2) that would come within the meaning of State or Federal Offenses described in section 16 of Title 18....

This reading conforms most nearly to the word order and punctuation of the paragraph, and hence to the ordinary and natural sense of the paragraph. Bacon, 21 F.3d at 210; Talley, 16 F.3d at 976. [FN27]

> FN27. The court notes that the second alternative for the first prong requires a felony against property to "present[ ] a serious risk of physical injury," while 18 U.S.C. § 16 defines a crime of violence as either involving the "use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another" or "a substantial risk that physical force" may be used. See, e.g., United States v. Shannon, 110 F.3d 382, 384-85 (7th Cir.1997) (en banc) (distinguishing between a risk of injury and a risk of use of physical force). However, the court need not be concerned here with this difference, because the court is not presented in this case with any allegation of a predicate offense that is a felony against property.

The plain meaning of paragraph (B) of subdivision (d)(2) is that it adds to the available predicate offenses those acts fitting the requirements of paragraph (A), but which are not defined as felonies under applicable state or federal law only because of the relationship between the actor and the victim. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2)(B). The effect of this section is that it prevents certain crimes from falling outside the scope of the VAWA simply because the crime is not defined as a felony under state or federal law, because, for example, the crime is committed by one domestic partner against another.

[17][18] The court concluded above that the elements of a civil VAWA claim requiring proof to the satisfaction of a trier of fact are as follows: (1) the defendant committed a "crime of violence"; and (2) that crime of violence was "motivated by gender." Engrafting the requirements from definitional portions of § 13981 into the elements of a civil VAWA cause of action stated in subsection (b) of the statute, the court finds that the elements of such a claim are as follows:

(1) The defendant committed a "crime of violence" within the meaning of the VAWA.
An offense is a "crime of violence" within the meaning of the VAWA if it is, or would be but for the relationship between the defendant and the victim,
(a) either--
(i) a felony against the person of the victim, or
(ii) a felony against property that presents a serious risk of physical injury to another; and
(b) comes within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16.
(2) The defendant's offense was "motivated by gender."
An offense is "motivated by gender" within the meaning of the VAWA if it is both
(a) committed "because of" or "on the basis of" the victim's gender, and *1397 (b) due, at least in part, to an animus based on the victim's gender.

See 42 U.S.C. § 13981(c), (d), and (e).

[19] Before moving on to the elements of the predicate offense, however, the court must also consider what is meant by a "felony" within the meaning of § 13981. The civil action portion of the VAWA does not identify the applicable definition of "felony" as a felony under state law, federal law, or either state or federal law. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d). Instead, it merely defines a predicate offense, in pertinent part, as "an act or series of acts that would constitute a felony." Id. Hence, the court concludes that the act or acts must constitute a felony under either state or federal law. Furthermore, a crime classified only as some degree of misdemeanor under state law is nonetheless a felony under federal law if it is punishable by a term of imprisonment exceeding one year. See, e.g., United States v. Haggerty, 85 F.3d 403, 406 (8th Cir.1996) ("Under federal law, an offense is a felony if the maximum term authorized for the offense is 'more than one year,' " citing 18 U.S.C. § 3559(a)). Under Iowa law, an aggravated misdemeanor is punishable by "imprisonment not to exceed two years." Iowa Code § 903.1(2). Thus, aggravated misdemeanors under Iowa law would qualify as felonies under federal law. See 18 U.S.C. § 3559(a); Haggerty, 85 F.3d at 406.

b. Elements of the predicate offense

Because a civil claim under the VAWA is dependent upon a predicate offense, the court's task of determining the elements of Doe's VAWA claim is not yet finished. The court must still determine the elements of the predicate offense Doe alleges Father Hartz has committed, a violation of Iowa Code § 709.15, then determine whether the predicate offense alleged is a qualifying predicate offense under the VAWA. Only then, and only if the offense alleged qualifies as a predicate offense under the VAWA, can the court turn to the question of whether Doe has adequately alleged the elements of that predicate offense, as well as the other essential elements of a VAWA claim.

offense. The predicate felony offense that Doe alleges Father Hartz committed is defined by Iowa Code § 709.15. [FN28] That statute states, in pertinent part, as follows:

> FN28. Although neither the parties nor the court has found any decision of Iowa state courts interpreting Iowa Code § 709.15, the rules of statutory interpretation employed by the Iowa Supreme Court are not significantly different from those employed by the federal courts in interpreting federal statutes. In Olympus Aluminum Prods., Inc. v. Kehm Enters., Ltd., 930 F.Supp. 1295 (N.D.Iowa 1996), this court reviewed extensively the rules of statutory interpretation applied by the Iowa Supreme Court. Suffice it to say here that the touchstone of statutory interpretation under Iowa law, as under federal law, is legislative intent. City of West Branch v. Miller, 546 N.W.2d 598, 602 (Iowa 1996) ("In interpreting statutes, our ultimate goal is to determine legislative intent," citing Peffers v. City of Des Moines, 299 N.W.2d 675, 678 (Iowa 1980)). When the language of a statute is plain and its meaning is clear, Iowa courts "should not reach for meaning beyond [the statute's] express terms.... Nor should we resort to statutory rules of construction to determine legislative intent." Id. (internal citation omitted). Where reasonable minds differ as to the meaning of a statute,
>
> [o]ne ... rule [of construction] provides that we are bound by what the legislature said, rather than what it should or might have said. State v. Jones, 464 N.W.2d 241, 242 (Iowa 1990); Iowa R.App. P. 14(f)(13). We may not, under the guise of statutory construction, enlarge or otherwise change the terms of a statute. Jones, 464 N.W.2d at 242. Finally, "[w]e may consider the language used in the statute, the objects sought to be accomplished, the evils and mischiefs sought to be remedied and place a reasonable construction on the statute which will best effect its purpose rather than one which will defeat it." Peffers, 299 N.W.2d at 678.
>
> Miller, 546 N.W.2d at 602. Legislative intent is " 'expressed by omission as well as by inclusion.' " Wiebenga v. Iowa Dep't of Transp., 530 N.W.2d 732, 735 (Iowa 1995) (quoting Barnes v. Iowa Dept. of Transp., 385 N.W.2d 260, 263 (Iowa 1986)). Thus, if the legislature had intended a statute to include a prohibition on certain conduct, the Iowa Supreme Court believes the legislature would have specifically mentioned that conduct, but where it did not, the statutory provision is deemed not to apply to that conduct. Id. The court finds that the meaning of the Iowa statute Doe asserts defines a predicate offense is plain and unambiguous. Therefore, the court need look no further than the plain meaning of the statute. Miller, 546 N.W.2d at 602.

*1398 709.15. Sexual exploitation by a counselor or therapist

1. As used in this section:

* * * * * *

f. "Sexual exploitation by a counselor or therapist" occurs when any of the following are found:

(1) A pattern or practice or scheme of conduct to engage in any of the conduct described in subparagraph (2) or (3).

(2) Any sexual conduct, with an emotionally dependent patient or client or emotionally dependent former patient or client for the purpose of arousing or satisfying the sexual desires of the counselor or therapist or the emotionally dependent patient or client or emotionally dependent former patient or client, which includes but is not limited to the following: kissing; touching of the clothed or unclothed inner thigh, breast, groin, buttock, anus, pubes, or genitals; or a sex act as defined in section 702.17.

(3) Any sexual conduct with a patient or client or former patient or client within one year of the termination of the provision of mental health services by the counselor or therapist for the purpose of arousing or satisfying the sexual desires of the counselor or therapist or the patient or client or former patient or client which includes but is not limited to the following: kissing; touching of the clothed or unclothed inner thigh, breast, groin, buttock, anus, pubes, or genitals; or a sex act as defined in section 702.17.

"Sexual exploitation by a counselor or therapist" does not include touching which is part of a necessary examination or treatment provided a patient or client by a counselor or therapist acting within the scope of the practice or employment in which the counselor or therapist is engaged.

2. A counselor or therapist who commits sexual exploitation in violation of subsection 1, paragraph "f", subparagraph (1), commits a class "D" felony.

3. A counselor or therapist who commits sexual exploitation in violation of subsection 1, paragraph "f", subparagraph (2) commits an aggravated misdemeanor.

Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f). [FN29]

FN29. The reference to Iowa Code § 702.17 incorporates into the definition of prohibited sexual conduct by a counselor or therapist with a patient or client the following acts: "sexual contact between two or more persons by: penetration of the penis into the vagina or anus; contact between the mouth and genitalia or by contact between the genitalia of one person and the genitalia or anus of another person; contact between the finger or hand of one person and the genitalia or anus of another person, except in the course of examination or treatment by a person licensed pursuant to [specified chapters of the Iowa Code]; or by use of artificial sexual organs or substitutes therefor in contact with the genitalia or anus." Iowa Code § 702.17.

The differences between the offenses described in subdivisions (f)(2) and (f)(3) of § 709.15(1) involve the status of the victim and the time within which sexual conduct between the defendant and the victim is defined as an offense. Subdivision (f)(2) defines an offense with an "emotionally dependent" patient or client or "emotionally dependent" former patient or client, Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(2), while subdivision (f)(3) refers only to a "patient or client or former patient or client." Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(3). Under subdivision (f)(2), there is no time limit placed on when the offense occurs, except that, by implication, the victim must have been emotionally dependent at the time of the offense. Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(2). Under subdivision (f)(3), however, when emotional dependency is not involved, the offense must occur either during or within one year after the conclusion of the provision of mental health services. Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(3). "Emotionally dependent" is thus a critical term, because it distinguishes between kinds of offenses. That term is defined in § 709.15(1)(b) as follows:

b. "Emotionally dependent" means that the nature of the patient's or client's or former patient's or client's emotional condition or the nature of the treatment provided by the counselor or therapist is such that the counselor or therapist knows or has reason to know that the patient or client or former patient or client is significantly impaired in the ability to withhold *1399 consent to sexual conduct, as described in paragraph "f", by the counselor or therapist.

For the purposes of paragraph "f", a former patient or client is presumed to be emotionally dependent for one year following the termination of the provision of mental health services.

Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(b). Although, under this definition, any patient or client who has received mental health services is presumed to be emotionally dependent for one year after the termination of services, the plain meaning of the statute is that, if the victim is proved to be emotionally dependent outside of the time period specified, the defendant could be charged under § 709.15(1)(f)(2), whereas if the victim is proved never to have been emotionally dependent, the defendant could still be charged under § 709.15(1)(f)(3) for sexual conduct that occurred up to one year after the termination of mental health services to the victim.

Other provisions of subsection (1) of § 709.15 provide definitions of other essential terms. Thus, subdivision (1)(a) defines "counselor or therapist" as "a physician, psychologist, nurse, professional counselor, social worker, marriage or family therapist, alcohol or drug counselor, member of the clergy, or any other person, whether or not licensed or registered by the state who provides or purports to provide mental health services." Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(a). "Mental health services" are defined as "the treatment, assessment, or counseling of another person for a cognitive, behavioral, emotional, mental, or social dysfunction, including an intrapersonal or interpersonal dysfunction." Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(d). "Patient or client" and "former patient or client" are defined as a person who receives or received mental health services from the counselor or therapist. Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(c) & (e).

ii. Predicate "felonies". Forms of the offense not involving the pattern, practice, or scheme identified in subdivision (f)(1) are classified as misdemeanors under Iowa law. Iowa Code § 709.15(3) & (4). The offense defined in § 709.15(1)(f)(2) is classified in § 709.15(4) as only a serious misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment of less than one year, and hence cannot stand as predicate offense for a VAWA civil action. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2) (defining predicate offenses as including only felonies or offenses that would be felonies but for the relationship of the parties). However, the offense defined in § 709.15(1)(f)(2) is classified in § 709.15(3) as an aggravated misdemeanor, which is punishable by imprisonment of up to two years, and consequently is a "felony" under federal law. 18 U.S.C. § 3559; Haggerty, 85 F.3d at 406. [FN30]

> FN30. The court has perused other provisions of the Iowa Code defining sexual offenses, Iowa Code Ch. 709, and does not find that the conduct defined as a misdemeanor, when between a counselor or therapist and a patient, client, former patient, or former client, would be a felony (or aggravated misdemeanor under Iowa law) but for the relationship between the parties. See 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2)(B).

From the statutory definitions of offenses and key terms, the court finds that the statute describes two distinct offenses, with slightly different elements, that are classified as felonies by the statute itself. The offense described in § 709.15(1)(f)(1) and (2), an offense classified as a felony in § 709.15(2), has the following elements: (1) the defendant provides or purports to provide mental health services, § 709.15(1)(a), as "mental health service" is defined in § 709.15(1)(d); (2) the victim receives or received mental health services from the defendant, as "mental health service" is defined in § 709.15(1)(d); (3) the victim was emotionally dependent, as "emotionally dependent" is defined in § 709.15(1)(b); and (4) the defendant engaged in a pattern, practice, or scheme of conduct to engage in sexual conduct with the victim, as sexual conduct is defined in § 709.15(1)(f)(2), or a sex act as defined in Iowa Code § 702.17.

The offense described in subdivisions § 709.15(1)(f)(1) and (3), and offense classified as a felony in § 709.15(2), has the following elements: (1) the defendant provides or purports to provide mental health services, § 709.15(1)(a), as "mental health service" is defined in § 709.15(1)(d); (2) the victim receives or received mental health services from the defendant, as "mental health service" *1400 is defined in § 709.15(1)(d); and (3) within one year of the termination of the provision of mental health services by the defendant, the defendant engaged in a pattern, practice, or scheme of conduct to engage in sexual conduct with the victim, as sexual conduct is defined in § 709.15(1)(f)(2), or a sex act as defined in Iowa Code § 702.17. This offense has no emotional dependence element, but does require that the offense have been committed within one year of the termination of the provision of mental health services.

The offense defined in § 709.15(1)(f)(2), which is classified in § 709.15(3) as an aggravated misdemeanor, but which is a felony under federal law, 18 U.S.C. § 3559, has the following elements: (1) the defendant provides or purports to provide mental health services, § 709.15(1)(a), as "mental health service" is defined in § 709.15(1)(d); (2) the victim receives or received mental health services from the defendant, as "mental health service" is defined in § 709.15(1)(d); (3) the victim was emotionally dependent, as "emotionally dependent" is defined in § 709.15(1)(b); and (4) the defendant engaged in sexual conduct with the victim, as sexual conduct is defined in § 709.15(1)(f)(2), or a sex act as defined in Iowa Code § 702.17. This predicate offense has no "pattern or practice or scheme" element.

c. Predicate "crime of violence" under the VAWA

The next question before the court is whether the predicate offense Doe has alleged is a qualifying "crime of violence" under the VAWA. Putting aside for a moment the question of which of the three forms of the offense defined by Iowa Code § 709.15 described above Doe has actually alleged as her predicate offense, the court notes that all three constitute "felonies" under federal law. However, whether an offense is a "felony," the court finds, is only one part of one prong of the inquiry into what is a "crime of violence" under the VAWA.

[22][23] i. "Categorical" determination. Although the court lacks the guidance of other interpretations of the VAWA, by analogy with other situations in which a predicate offense is required to establish a claim or offense, the court concludes that it must decide as a matter of law whether the asserted predicate offense is a crime of violence within the meaning of the VAWA. Furthermore, that determination, the court finds, must be made on the basis of how the offense is defined by applicable law and not on the basis of how the offense was allegedly committed, thus taking a so-called "categorical approach" to the definition of the crime. The jury, on the other hand, will decide as a matter of fact whether the offense has been committed, and whether it was motivated by gender as required by the VAWA.

For example, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, applying a definition of "crime of violence" under 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) that is nearly identical to the definition in 18 U.S.C. § 16, observed that "the question is not whether the particular facts constitute a crime of violence, but whether the crime ... as defined by [state law] is a crime of violence." United States v. Moore, 38 F.3d 977, 980 (8th Cir.1994). Quoting from a prior decision specifically considering § 16, the court reiterated the "categorical approach" the court is to take to determine whether a crime is a "crime of violence" within the meaning of § 16:

> "All crimes which by their nature involve a substantial risk of physical force share the risk of harm. It matters not one whit whether the risk ultimately causes actual harm. Our scrutiny ends upon a finding that the risk of violence is present." [United States v.] Rodriguez, 979 F.2d [138,] 141 [(8th Cir.1992)]; accord United States v. Reyes-Castro, 13 F.3d 377, 379 (10th Cir.1993); see United States v. Bauer, 990 F.2d 373 (8th Cir.1993) (per curiam) (holding that statutory rape is a crime of violence for sentence enhancement purposes).

Moore, 38 F.3d at 980-81 (emphasis in the original). In the earlier decision from which the court in Moore drew this quotation, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals addressed the determination of whether an offense was a "crime of violence" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16, for purposes of U.S.S.G. § 2L1.2(b)(2). Rodriguez, 979 F.2d at 140. The application notes to that sentencing 1401 guideline define an "aggravated felony" as any "crime of violence" as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 16. Id. The court observed that "[a] sentencing court is not required to consider the underlying circumstances at the time of the crime in determining that a defendant has been convicted of a 'crime of violence.' ... Indeed, the term 'by its nature' would be rendered superfluous if the sentencing courts were saddled with the task of examining each individual offense committed to determine whether it actually involved substantial risk of physical force." Id. at 140-41 (citation omitted). The court went one step further, holding that, whatever the requirements of 18 U.S.C. § 16(a), > the elements of the underlying offense need not include use, attempted use, or threatened use of force to be considered a "crime of violence" for purposes of 18 U.S.C. § 16(b). Again, it is the nature of the crime upon which we must focus our attention.... [T]he statutory language "may" and "substantial risk" must not be ignored.

Rodriguez, 979 F.2d at 141 (citation omitted).

Similarly, in United States v. Aragon, 983 F.2d 1306 (4th Cir.1993), the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals rejected a defendant's argument that the jury, rather than the court, should decide whether an offense is a "crime of violence" under 18 U.S.C. § 1952(a)(2) and 18 U.S.C. § 16. Aragon, 983 F.2d at 1311-12. Instead, the court held that whether an offense is a "crime of violence" "is a question of law for the court to decide." Id. at 1311. The court noted that the definition in § 16 frames the question in terms of whether the crime "by its nature" presents a substantial risk of use of physical force, not in terms of the "facts," "circumstances," or "conduct." Id. at 1312-13. The court in Aragon determined whether the crime of attempting to instigate or assist in the escape or rescue of a federal prisoner was a crime of violence in terms of whether the offense "intrinsically" involved the risk identified in § 16, not whether the facts of the case before it indicated such a risk had actually existed. Aragon, 983 F.2d at 1313. Such a risk, the court found, would intrinsically arise, even if the particular escape was intended to be effected by stealth, because of the risk of physical force being used if the crime was discovered in progress. Id. Although the court noted that it had "cautioned against looking to the facts of a case in determining whether a crime qualifies as a 'crime of violence,' "

the court found that the case before it demonstrated the potential for an escalation into violence of a crime of the kind in question, even though the defendants had planned to effect the escape by stealth, because of the weapons the defendants had brought along. Id. at 1313 & n. 5.

Another analogy is the determination under deportation statutes of whether a predicate crime, as defined, is a crime involving "moral turpitude" or an "aggravated felony" under 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(2)(A)(i) or (iii), thus justifying deportation. In such a case, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals observed that "we look to state law to determine the elements of the crime ... [, but] we do not examine the factual circumstances surrounding [the defendant's] crime." Franklin v. INS, 72 F.3d 571, 572 (8th Cir.1995) (citing Cabral v. INS, 15 F.3d 193, 196 n. 5 (1st Cir.1994), and Castle v. INS, 541 F.2d 1064, 1066 (4th Cir.1976) (per curiam)), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 834, 117 S.Ct. 105, 136 L.Ed.2d 59 (1996); see also Ramsey v. INS, 55 F.3d 580, 583 (11th Cir.1995) (under 8 U.S.C. § 1251(a)(2)(A)(iii), to determine if a crime is an "aggravated felony," the court looks only at the definition of the crime under state law, and not at the underlying facts and circumstances of the alien's particular offense); Rodriguez-Herrera v. INS, 52 F.3d 238, 239-40 (9th Cir.1995) (interpreting "moral turpitude"); Gonzalez-Alvarado v. INS, 39 F.3d 245, 246 (9th Cir.1994) (interpreting "moral turpitude"); United States v. Lomas, 30 F.3d 1191, 1193 (9th Cir.1994) ("To determine whether [the defendant's] 1990 conviction for the sale or transportation of cocaine constitutes an aggravated felony, we look only at the statutory definition of section 11352(a) of the California Health and Safety Code, not the underlying factual circumstances of his crime."), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1176, 115 S.Ct. 1158, 130 L.Ed.2d 1114 (1995); United States v. Reyes-Castro, 13 F.3d 377, 379 (10th Cir.1993) (interpreting "aggravated felony"); *1402*Goldeshtein v. INS,* 8 F.3d 645, 647 (9th Cir.1993) (interpreting "moral turpitude"). In such cases, courts look only at the record of conviction, which includes the crime as described in the indictment or information, the plea, the verdict or judgment, and the sentence, but not any evidence offered in the case or other facts or circumstances involved. Cabral, 15 F.3d at 196 & n. 6.

The VAWA definition of a "crime of violence," as construed above, incorporates as one prong of the definition found in 18 U.S.C. § 16. See 42 U.S.C. § 13981(c)(2)(A). Therefore, that element must certainly be determined as a matter of law. Aragon, 983 F.2d at 1311. Nor does the other element of the VAWA definition of a "crime of violence" make the question one for a jury or one that turns on the particular facts of the case. That element states that the offense must be "an act or series of acts that would constitute a felony against the person." 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2)(A). [FN31] A factual element is the usual distinction between a felony and a misdemeanor offense--the amount of cocaine, the age of the victim of sexual abuse, for example. However, the question of whether a crime is a "crime of violence" under the VAWA turns on whether a felony, defined in terms of certain elements, the first prong of the inquiry, by its nature possesses the requisite risk of use of physical force under 18 U.S.C. § 16, the second prong of the inquiry. Id. If the court finds as a matter of law that the crime thus defined constitutes a "crime of violence" within the meaning of the VAWA, then the jury will decide as a matter of fact whether the elements constituting a felony have in fact been proved in the particular case. [FN32]

FN31. The court may safely disregard the alternative of a felony against property that presents a serious risk of physical injury to another, first, because no such felony is alleged here as the predicate offense, and second, because the incorporation of the language "risk of physical injury" suggests, as does 18 U.S.C. § 16, that the question is whether the crime intrinsically, and not as actually alleged to have been committed, involves physical injury. Cf. Rodriguez, 979 F.2d at 141; Aragon, 983 F.2d at 1312.

FN32. By way of contrast, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has held that, in determining whether a prior conviction is either a violent felony or serious drug offense for purposes of sentence enhancement under 18 U.S.C. § 924(e), "the sentencing court is not restricted to looking solely at the fact of conviction and the statutory definition of the offense but may also consider the charging paper and jury instructions." United States v. Maddix, 96 F.3d 311, 314 (8th Cir.1996) (citing > Taylor v. United States, 495 U.S. 575, 602, 110 S.Ct. 2143, 2160, 109 L.Ed.2d 607 (1990)). The court also examined the actual conduct of the defendant to determine whether the offenses in question were "crimes of violence" for sentencing purposes under U.S.S.G. § 4B1.2(1)(i). Id. at 315.

ii. "Crime of violence" test. Thus, the questions for the court to decide as a matter of law in this case are whether the offenses defined by Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f) are felonies against the person (or against property that present a serious risk of physical injury to another), as required by the first prong of the VAWA "crime of violence" element, 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2)(A), and whether they are also "crimes of violence" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16, as required by the second prong of the VAWA "crime of violence" element. Id. The crimes defined by Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(1) and (2), § 709.15(1)(f)(1) and (3), and § 709.15(1)(f)(2), respectively, are all indisputably "felon[ies] against the person" of the victim. Id. Therefore, the first prong of the VAWA "crimes of violence" element is satisfied. The more difficult question is whether these felonies are "crimes of violence" within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16.

Section 16 of Title 18 provides as follows:

> The term "crime of violence" means--
> (a) an offense that has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, or
> (b) any other offense that is a felony and that, by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing an offense.

18 U.S.C. § 16.

As to the alternative stated in § 16(b), this court must respectfully point out that, while part of the Rodriguez decision speaks in terms of a "risk of harm," finding that all crimes that "by their nature involve a substantial 1403 risk of physical force share the risk of harm," Rodriguez, 979 F.2d at 141 (emphasis in the original), the statute does not speak in terms of a "risk of harm," but in terms of a "risk that physical force " may be used. 18 U.S.C. § 16 (emphasis added). While the court accepts that any use of physical force necessarily involves a risk of harm, as the Rodriguez court stated, the converse is not correct: a risk of harm does not necessarily involve a risk of use of physical force, because a risk of harm can arise from many sources unrelated to use of physical force.

For example, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals, in an en banc decision, recently considered extensively the risk of harm or injury to a victim of a statutory rape, even if no physical force was involved. See United States v. Shannon, 110 F.3d 382 (7th Cir.1997) (en banc). The court was considering the meaning of "crime of violence" under U.S.S.G. § 4B1.2(1), which, in one alternative defines "crime of violence" as an offense that "has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person of another," while in another alternative, refers to an offense that "is burglary of a dwelling, arson, or extortion, involves use of explosives, or otherwise involves conduct that presents a serious risk of physical injury to another." U.S.S.G. § 4B1.2(1) (emphasis added); see also Shannon, 110 F.3d at 384. The court found that statutory rape, as defined by Wisconsin law, was not a forcible felony. Shannon, 110 F.3d at 384. The court also rejected the argument that any unconsented-to touching involved force or a risk of injury:

> An inference of violence from mere unconsented-to physical contact, the government's first reason for arguing that every felonious sexual act with a minor is per se a crime of violence, would not wash in this circuit. It would transform any unconsented-to touching that the law made a felony into a crime of violence, including picking a person's pocket, a crime that we have held is not a crime of violence.

Shannon, 110 F.3d at 385. Although the court found that an argument that any felonious sexual act with a minor creates a "serious potential risk of physical injury," that suggestion was undermined by the government's concession that statutory rape laws were not necessarily passed to protect minors from a serious risk of physical injury. Id. at 386. The court agreed that a risk of injury could not be "read off" or automatically inferred from the statute. Id. However, the court then made an extensive analysis of the risks to the victim of statutory rape of physical injury arising from sexually transmitted disease or pregnancy. Id. at 387-89. Consequently, the court concluded that statutory rape, as defamed by Wisconsin law, was a "crime of violence" where the definition of "crime of violence" depended not upon use of physical force, but upon a risk of physical injury. Id. at 389.

The predicate offense alleged in this case may be another example. All of the risks of physical injury, described by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in the context of statutory rape, such as injuries from sexually transmitted disease or pregnancy to a person presumed to be incapable of giving proper consent to sexual contact, apply with equal vigor to the offenses defined by Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f). Yet, that does not suggest that use of physical force was necessarily part of the offense. Cf. Shannon, 110 F.3d at 383 (finding that the risk of use of physical force did not necessarily arise with the crime of statutory rape, although a risk of physical injury did).

iii. Application of the test. Again, the crimes defined by Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(1) and (2), § 709.15(1)(f)(1) and (3), and § 709.15(1)(f)(2), respectively, are all indisputably "felon[ies] against the person" of the victim. Id. They therefore satisfy the first prong of the "crime of violence" inquiry under the VAWA. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(2).

Turning to the second prong of the inquiry, whether the predicate offenses are "crimes of violence" under either alternative defined by 18 U.S.C. § 16, however, the court concludes none of the § 709.15 offenses has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another. 18 U.S.C. § 16(a). Thus, none is a "crime of violence" under the alternative stated in § 16(a).

1404 [24] In determining whether the offenses defined in Iowa Code § 709.15 necessarily involve a substantial risk of the use of physical force, as required to fit the alternative definition of "crime of violence" under § 16(b), the court finds that two decisions of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals guide, or perhaps even dictate, the court's conclusion. The earlier of these decisions is the Rodriguez decision already mentioned. In Rodriguez, the defendant was convicted of lascivious acts with a child, which was defined as committing certain acts "with or without the child's consent." Rodriguez, 979 F.2d at 140. The court held that "[t]here is no question that the crime to which Rodriguez admitted, lascivious acts with children of the tender age of ten, is by its nature a crime of violence" within the meaning of § 16(b) and U.S.S.G. § 2L1.2(b)(2). Id. at 141. In the second decision, United States v. Bauer, 990 F.2d 373 (8th Cir.1993) (per curiam), the court rejected the defendant's argument that his conviction for statutory rape under Iowa law could not be a crime of violence on the basis that it involved a substantial risk of use of physical force, because the sexual intercourse had been consensual. Bauer, 990 F.2d at 374. Looking at the nature of the offense, the court concluded that the defendant had been convicted of a crime of violence, because the conviction was one "that presented a serious potential risk of physical force," regardless of the victim's consent. Id. at 375. By analogy, Iowa Code § 709.15, which defines sexual offenses on the basis that the victim cannot give proper consent, also defines "crimes of violence" involving a substantial risk of the use of physical force within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. § 16(b), and hence within the meaning of the VAWA.

d. Adequate pleading of a predicate offense

Next, the court turns to whether one of the predicate offenses under § 709.15 has been adequately pleaded. The court recalls that, to defeat a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) , factual elements and legal conclusions must be pleaded in more than a conclusory manner, Silver, 105 F.3d at 397; Westcott, 901 F.2d at 1488, but that the court must assume that all facts alleged in the plaintiff's complaint are true, and must liberally construe those allegations. Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46, 78 S.Ct. at 101-02; Doe, 107 F.3d at 1303-04; WMX Techs., Inc., 105 F.3d at 1198; First Commercial Trust, 77 F.3d at 1083. Similarly, because the defendants' subject matter jurisdiction challenge pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) must be treated here as only a facial challenge, Doe is entitled to these Rule 12(b)(6) protections even against the subject matter jurisdiction challenge. Titus, 4 F.3d at 593; Osborn, 918 F.2d at 729 n. 6.

[25] The first element of each of the possible predicate offenses defined by Iowa Code § 709.15, as identified by the court above, is that the defendant provides or purports to provide mental health services, § 709.15(1)(a), as "mental health service" is defined in § 709.15(1)(d), and the second element of each of these offenses is that the victim receives or received mental health services from the defendant. The complaint also alleges, at least in conclusory fashion, that Father Hartz "served as a counselor to Plaintiff [and] as a member of the clergy ... is a 'counselor or therapist' within the meaning of Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(a)." Complaint, Count 1, ¶ 30. Father Hartz is plainly a member of the class of possible "counselors or therapists" to which this element refers, because he is a "member of the clergy." Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(a). However, more is required: Father Hartz must also be alleged to be a member of the clergy who "provides or purports to provide mental health services." Id. Doe does allege that Father Hartz "served as a counselor to Plaintiff," although she does not allege any specific meetings for such counseling or that the counseling involved the "treatment, assessment, or counseling ... for a cognitive, behavioral, emotional, mental, or social dysfunction, [either] intrapersonal or interpersonal." Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(d) (defining "mental health service"). Although the pleading is sketchy at best on this element, the court cannot say that "no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Handeen, 112 F.3d at 1347-48; accord Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46, 78 S.Ct. at 101-02; 1405Doe,* 107 F.3d at 1304; WMX Techs., Inc., 105 F.3d at 1198. The provision of mental health services by Father Hartz, and Doe's receipt of those services from Father Hartz, is instead consistent with Doe's allegations that Father Hartz was a member of the clergy and he counseled her.

Another element of each of the possible predicate offenses is that Father Hartz engaged in or engaged in a pattern, practice, or scheme of incidents to engage in sexual conduct as defined in the statute. Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(2) and (3). "Kissing" is specified as one of the prohibited kinds of sexual conduct, and "kissing" is the central incident in Doe's complaint. However, the court is much less sanguine that Doe has alleged a "pattern, practice, or scheme" to engage in sexual conduct as required by either of the offenses classified as felonies under Iowa Code § 709.15. See Iowa Code § 709.15(2) (classifying as felonies only sexual exploitation as defined in paragraph (1)(f)(1), which involves "a pattern practice or scheme of conduct to engage in any of the conduct described in paragraph (2) or (3)"). Doe alleges that the back-rubbing incident after mass on December 3, 1994, and the alleged fraudulent misrepresentations that Father Hartz would not engage in sexually exploitative conduct establish the requisite "pattern or practice or scheme" for the offenses classified as felonies under the Iowa statute. She also argues that Father Hartz's improper conduct towards other women is part of such a "pattern or practice or scheme." The court believes that it is only conduct toward this victim that can constitute part of the predicate offense, but considering only the incidents allegedly directed at Doe herself, and mindful of the liberality with which the court is to construe the allegations, the court finds that this element has also been adequately alleged, if just barely. However, even failing adequate allegations of a "pattern or practice or scheme," the court has found that a single incident of sexual conduct as defined in Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(2), an aggravated misdemeanor under Iowa law, Iowa Code § 709.15(3), would still constitute a predicate felony under federal law. Thus the "conduct" element of at least one predicate offense has been adequately alleged.

This leaves only the question of whether Doe has adequately alleged that she was an "emotionally dependent patient or client" for either the predicate offense defined by Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(2), standing alone, or the predicate offense defined by Iowa Code § 709.15(1)(f)(1) and (2). Doe has alleged, again in merely conclusory fashion, that she "was emotionally dependent upon Defendant Hartz as her counselor and priest." Complaint, Count 1, ¶ 31. Although the allegation is again conclusory, the court cannot say that "no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with the allegations." Handeen, 112 F.3d at 1347-48; accord Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46, 78 S.Ct. at 101-02; Doe, 107 F.3d at 1304; WMX Techs., Inc., 105 F.3d at 1198. Doe's emotional dependence is consistent with the allegations that she needed and received counseling from Father Hartz.

e. Remaining elements of the VAWA claim

Finally, the court must consider whether Doe has adequately pleaded that Father Hartz's conduct toward her was "motivated by gender" as required for a civil claim under the VAWA. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(c). Again, subdivision (e)(1) of § 13981 clarifies or narrows this element of the VAWA claim by excluding from the definition of "crimes of violence motivated by gender" those crimes that are merely "random acts of violence unrelated to gender or ... acts that cannot be demonstrated, by a preponderance of the evidence, to be motivated by gender." 42 U.S.C. § 13981(e)(1). The civil cause of action under the VAWA is therefore plainly aimed at conduct motivated by the victim's gender, not merely crimes in which the victim is a woman. See also S.Rep. No. 103-195, at 49-50 (1993) ("The committee is not asserting that all crimes against women are gender-motivated. As discussed below, title III requires subjective proof on a case-by-case basis that the criminal conduct was motivated by a bias against the victim's gender."); S.Rep. No. 103-138, at 49-50 (1993) (same). As construed above, to allege that a crime was "motivated by gender" within the meaning of the VAWA, it must be alleged to be both (1) committed "because of" or "on the 1406 basis of" the victim's gender, and (2) due, at least in part, to an animus based on the victim's gender. See 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d)(1).

Although there might be some difficulty in determining whether other crimes, even crimes against the person, were "because of" or "on the basis of" the victim's gender, the court has little doubt that allegations of sexual assault or sexual exploitation crimes are allegations of crimes committed "because of" or "on the basis of" the victim's gender. Defendants concede as much. See Brief In Support Of Motion To Dismiss, Motion For Abstention, And Motion For Certification Of Issues By Defendants Soens, St. Lawrence Church, And Diocese Of Sioux City ("Defendants' Brief In Support Of Motion To Dismiss"), p. 20. Furthermore, there are adequate factual allegations of sexual conduct to support a claim of sexual exploitation. Thus, the first prong of the "motivated by gender" element is adequately alleged here. However, a sexual assault alone is not enough to establish that the crime was gender-motivated within the meaning of the VAWA. See 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d). As legislative history clarifies, > Discriminatory motivation is clearly required by title III of the Violence Against Women Act, and the plaintiff bears the burden of proving that motivation. For a cause of action to arise under title III, a plaintiff must prove that the crime of violence--whether an assault, a kidnapping, or a rape-- was motivated by gender.

Defendants contend that there are inadequate allegations pertaining to the second prong of the inquiry, that is, allegations that Father Hartz committed an offense due, at least in part, to his animus based on Doe's gender. They contend that there are no allegations of "animus," because the complaint reflects that Father Hartz and Doe were on friendly terms and that "[a] kiss is typically viewed as a signal of affection." Defendants' Brief In Support Of Motion To Dismiss, p. 20. [FN33] Defendants construe "animus" to mean "dislike." Id. Plaintiff vehemently disagrees with the assertion that an unwanted kiss on the neck is a "signal of affection," arguing strenuously that such conduct is instead illustrative of an on-going gender-motivated animus toward women, because forcing physical intimacy on a woman, whether it be a kiss or rape, is illustrative of a lack of respect for women.

> FN33. This argument is consistent with Father Hartz's defense that his actions were simply misunderstood by Doe.

As Justice Stevens has observed, "The term[ ] 'animus' ... [is] susceptible to different interpretations." Bray v. Alexandria Women's Health Clinic, 506 U.S. 263, 320, 113 S.Ct. 753, 785, 122 L.Ed.2d 34 (1993) (Stevens, J., dissenting). The court finds that "animus" is certainly ambiguous in the context of the VAWA. The court may therefore resort to the legislative history of the VAWA to find an explanation of the meaning of "due, at least in part, to an animus based on the victim's gender" under 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d). See Barnhill v. Johnson, 503 U.S. 393, 401, 112 S.Ct. 1386, 1391, 118 L.Ed.2d 39 (1992) (noting that "appeals to legislative history are well taken only to resolve 'statutory ambiguity' "). Fortunately, there are portions of the legislative history that are instructive on this issue.

A report to the Senate Judiciary Committee on the civil remedies provision of the VAWA states that "[t]he committee is not asserting that all crimes against women are gender-motivated." S.Rep. No. 103-138, at 49 (1993). Rather, the civil remedies provision of the VAWA "requires subjective proof on a case- by-case basis that the criminal was motivated by a bias against the victim's gender," which is a question of fact. Id. at 50. After identifying the elements of the statutory definition of crimes "motivated by gender," the report explains that "[a] cause of action cannot be established by saying, 'I am a woman; I have an injury; ergo, I have a civil rights claim.' " Id.

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> To satisfy the burden of establishing a civil rights cause of action, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant's act was motivated by gender bias. *This civil rights cause of action is no different than the cause of action an African-American 1407 might use. For example, an African-American man or woman who is the victim of an assault, cannot under our present laws say, "My civil rights were violated because I am an African-American and someone that wasn't African-American did me harm." He or she must prove racial animus.
> Similarly, a woman who is attacked and seeks relief under title III must demonstrate that the defendant attacked her because she is a woman and that the attacker was motivated, at least in part, by her gender. For example, she might offer proof that a defendant entered a department store carrying a gun, picked out women in the store and shot her while screaming anti-women epithets, and leaving the many nearby men unharmed. The fact that the attacker in this example verbally expressed his bias against women is helpful, but not mandatory. The fact that the attacker segregated the men from the women and then shot only the women might be evidence enough of his gender-based motivation.

Id. at 50-51 (emphasis added). Turning to the mechanics of proof, the committee report states that "motivation" will be proved from "the totality of the circumstances" surrounding the event. Id. at 52. The report explains further:

> Gender-motivated crimes should be viewed in precisely the same way [as race- motivated crimes]. Consider the case of a serial rapist who shouts misogynist slurs as he attacks his victims. A victim's lawyer would prove exactly the same type of evidence that the lawyer in the "race" case proved: that the victim was of a particular sex; that the attacker had a long history of attacking persons of that sex, but not those of the opposite sex; and that the attacker shouted antiwoman (or man) epithets during the assault. Bias, in short, can be proven by circumstantial as well as indirect evidence. Again, the jury might not be convinced by any one of these circumstances individually--but could conclude that, taken together, they show gender bias.

Id. The committee pointed out that the definition of gender-motivated crimes under the VAWA is based on Title VII. Id.

> Hence, title III defines crimes motivated by gender to be crimes committed "because * * * of gender." The phraseology "motivated by," "because of," "on the basis of," or "based on" sex or gender is used interchangeably in case law discussion of title VII. This body of case law will provide substantial guidance to the trier of fact in assessing whether the requisite discrimination was present.

Id. at 52-53. [FN34] Finally, in a section-by-section analysis, the committee explained that 1408 the amendment adding the language that the predicate offense must be "due, at least in part, to an animus based on the victim's gender" was added to "elucidate[ ] the committee's intent that a victim alleging a violation under this section must have been targeted on the basis of his or her gender. The defendant must have had a specific intent or purpose, based on the victim's gender, to injure the victim." Id. at 64.

> FN34. This portion of legislative history is in accord with an explanation of "actions motivated by a gender-based animus" in a case, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1985(3), concerning actions of abortion protesters. See Lucero v. Operation Rescue of Birmingham, 954 F.2d 624 (11th Cir.1992)
> [W]e find that the record in the present case does not support a finding that defendants' actions were motivated by a gender-based animus. Instead, the record amply supports a finding that defendants' actions were motivated by a disapproval of a certain activity, namely the abortion of a fetus, and therefore were designed to prevent individuals, women and men alike, from engaging in that activity. Nothing in the record suggests that defendants' efforts to "depriv[e], directly or indirectly, a class of women who seek abortions of the constitutional right that they have to secure abortions," [Lucero v. Operation Rescue of Birmingham,] 772 F.Supp. [1193,] 1198 [(N.D.Ala.1991)] (footnote omitted), sprang from an animus directed at women qua members of the female gender.
>
> Even assuming arguendo that Congress intended section 1985(3) to cover activities motivated by a gender-based animus, the record in this case does not support a finding of this kind of animus. As the district court found, defendants' animus > targeted the "practice of abortion," 772 F.Supp. at 1205 n. 37, and therefore motivated actions designed to prevent others from engaging in that practice. While the participation of women in the practice of abortion hardly is incidental, the record in this case supports the finding that defendants' actions nevertheless were motivated by an animus not primarily directed at members of the female gender, but at a practice. On the record of this case, it further would not have been clearly erroneous to find that the make-up of, and particularly the participation of women in, the group of persons engaging in that practice did not arouse the animus motivating defendants to stage their so-called rescues. Lucero, 954 F.2d at 628-29. The court remarked further that the presence of men in the targeted group did not necessarily remove the activities from the class of actions motivated by a gender-based animus, because gender-based animus extends to those who champion the cause of the group toward which such an animus would be directed. Id. at 629 n. 7 (citing United Bhd. of Carpenters & Joiners of Am., Local 610 v. Scott, 463 U.S. 825, 836, 103 S.Ct. 3352, 3360, 77 L.Ed.2d 1049 (1983)). However, "[w]hat is missing is any indication that the gender of the pregnant women represents the source of defendants' animus." Id.

[26] Allegations of unwanted or unwelcome sexual advances, the court finds, are sufficient to meet the requirement to allege that the defendant "targeted [the victim] on the basis of his or her gender" and "had a specific intent or purpose, based on the victim's gender, to injure the victim." Id. Casting an unwanted kiss as merely a "signal of affection" is suggestive of the sort of "romantic paternalism" the Supreme Court has described as "put[ting] women, not on a pedestal, but in a cage," something the Equal Protection clause did not condone, Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 684, 93 S.Ct. 1764, 1769, 36 L.Ed.2d 583 (1973), while such unwanted conduct gives rise to an inference that the actor relegates women as a group to an inferior status without regard to their individual qualities. Id. at 687, 93 S.Ct. at 1770- 71. As the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals explained in a Title VII case,

> Individuals who engage in sexual harassment may have different motives. Sometimes, an employer or supervisor may use his power within the company's hierarchy in order to gratify his sexual desires. When an employee becomes the victim of her boss' unwanted sexual attention, she may be forced to tolerate his sexually harassing conduct for fear that her job or her advancement in the company are at risk. A woman in this circumstance may reasonably feel subordinated and belittled even though the harasser's primary purpose is to seduce her rather than to demean her or cause her anguish and distress.... In other circumstances, however, sexual harassment may be symptomatic of gender-based hostility, the employer or supervisor using sexual harassment primarily to subordinate women, to remind them of their lower status in the workplace, and to demean them. In this latter circumstance, the "sexual" element of the harassment is only secondary.

EEOC v. Farmer Bros. Co., 31 F.3d 891, 897-98 (9th Cir.1994) (citations omitted). Also, with Title VII cases for guidance, see S.Rep. No. 103-138, at 52-53 (1993), it is readily apparent that allegations of unwanted or unwelcome sexual advances are sufficient to support a claim that requires a showing of gender-motivated animus. See, e.g., Kinman v. Omaha Pub. Sch. Dist., 94 F.3d 463, 467 (8th Cir.1996) ("Hostile environment sexual harassment occurs when unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, or other verbal or physical conduct have the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's performance or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive environment."); Quick v. Donaldson Co., Inc., 90 F.3d 1372, 1377 (8th Cir.1996) (one element of a sexual harassment claim is that the plaintiff is subjected to unwelcome sexual conduct). To meet the requirements of the VAWA, the conduct need be due only in part to gender animus. 42 U.S.C. § 13981(d). Again, because unwanted or unwelcome sexual advances may be demeaning and belittling, and may reasonably be inferred to be intended to have that purpose or to relegate another to an inferior status, even if the advances were also intended to satisfy the actor's sexual desires, the allegations of the "animus" element here are sufficient.

[27] There are, therefore, reasonable inferences from the allegations that Father Hartz's conduct was due, at least in part, to an animus based on Doe's gender, as required by § 13981. Handeen, 112 F.3d at 1347-48; accord Conley, 355 U.S. at 45-46, 78 S.Ct. at 101-02; Doe, 107 F.3d at 1304; WMX Techs., Inc., 105 F.3d at 1198. Defendants'1409 motion to dismiss is denied as to failure to state the "animus" element of a VAWA claim. This conclusion pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) also suffices to defeat defendants' facial challenge to the court's subject matter jurisdiction over the VAWA claim, and hence over the entire complaint, on the ground that Doe has failed to allege an essential element of her claim. Titus, 4 F.3d at 593; Osborn, 918 F.2d at 729 n. 6.

2. Is the VAWA constitutional?

The court may now turn to what was really the focus of the briefing and oral arguments, the question of the constitutionality of the VAWA as an exercise of congressional power under either the Commerce Clause or section five of the Fourteenth Amendment. The civil remedies provision of the VAWA itself explicitly states that these are the sources of congressional power for enactment of the provision:

> (a) Purpose
> Pursuant to the affirmative power of Congress to enact this part under section 5 of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, as well as under section 8 of Article I of the Constitution [the Commerce Clause], it is the purpose of this part to protect the civil rights of victims of gender motivated violence and to promote public safety, health, and activities affecting interstate commerce by establishing a Federal civil rights cause of action for victims of crimes of violence motivated by gender.

42 U.S.C. § 13981(a). However, the two courts to consider the question have split on the constitutionality of the statute under either the Commerce Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

a. The split in authority

On one side of the split in authority is the decision of the United States District Court for the District of Connecticut in Doe v. Doe, 929 F.Supp. 608 (D.Conn.1996). In Doe, the court upheld the civil remedies provision of the VAWA as a valid exercise of Commerce Clause power, and therefore did not reach the question of constitutionality under section five of the Fourteenth Amendment. Doe, 929 F.Supp. at 612 n. 5. Defendants in that case, as here, argued that this portion of the VAWA exceeds Commerce Clause power, because it creates a "plenary federal police power" beyond the enumerated powers of the federal government, trespassing on the states' Tenth Amendment powers, including the states' traditional police powers. Id. at 612.

The court in Doe was unpersuaded. The court found that the question of the validity of the VAWA must be determined under the third category of Commerce Clause powers identified in United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549, 558-59, 115 S.Ct. 1624, 1629-30, 131 L.Ed.2d 626 (1995), i.e., "those activities that substantially affect interstate commerce." Doe, 929 F.Supp. at 612. The test of validity in this category, the court found, remained "whether a rational basis existed for concluding that a regulated activity sufficiently affected interstate commerce," and, if it did, "whether the means chosen by Congress are ' "reasonably adapted to the end permitted by the Constitution." ' " Id. (citing Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Ass'n, Inc., 452 U.S. 264, 276, 101 S.Ct. 2352, 2360, 69 L.Ed.2d 1 (1981), in turn quoting Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 262, 85 S.Ct. 348, 360, 13 L.Ed.2d 258 (1964)). The court rejected the defendants' arguments, also similar to ones asserted here, that Lopez had somehow overruled this "rationality test." Id. at 613, 115 S.Ct. at 1656-57. The court observed,

> Lopez does warn that the Commerce Clause has limits, and that "the scope of the interstate commerce power 'must be considered in light of our dual system of government and may not be extended so as to embrace effects upon interstate commerce so indirect and remote....' " Lopez, [514] U.S. at [557], 115 S.Ct. at 1628 (quoting N.L.R.B. v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1, 37, 57 S.Ct. 615, 624, 81 L.Ed. 893 (1937)). Along with this warning, however, Lopez reaffirmed the rationality test of Hodel:
> Since that time, the Court has heeded that warning and undertaken to decide whether a rational basis existed for concluding 1410 that a regulated activity sufficiently affected interstate commerce.
> Id. [514] U.S. at [557], 115 S.Ct. at 1629 (citing Hodel, 452 U.S. at 276-80, 101 S.Ct. at 2360-2362); See Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146, 155-56, 91 S.Ct. 1357, 1362, 28 L.Ed.2d 686 (1971); Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 299-301, 85 S.Ct. 377, 381-82, 13 L.Ed.2d 290 (1964); Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc., 379 U.S. at 252-253, 85 S.Ct. at 354-55.

Doe, 929 F.Supp. at 613.

The court in Doe rejected as relying on dicta in Lopez arguments that "cost of crime" and "national productivity" arguments were insufficient to establish a nexus to interstate commerce. Id. Instead, the court noted that "[t]he Congressional findings and reports qualitatively and quantitatively demonstrate the substantial effect on interstate commerce of gender-based violence," which the court found was "in marked distinction" to the Gun Free School Zone Act struck down in Lopez. Id. After reviewing some of the congressional findings based on four years of hearings, the court found that "because of the extensive compilation of data, testimony, and reports on which Congress based its findings, this Court is not left to speculate or ' "pile inference upon inference" to perceive an explicit connection between the regulated activity and interstate commerce.' " Id. at 614, 115 S.Ct. at 1656-57 (quoting United States v. Sage, 906 F.Supp. 84, 92 (D.Conn.1995), aff'd, 92 F.3d 101 (2d Cir.1996), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1099, 117 S.Ct. 784, 136 L.Ed.2d 727 (1997), which upheld the constitutionality of the Child Support Recovery Act under the Commerce Clause).

Applying standards established in Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 63 S.Ct. 82, 87 L.Ed. 122 (1942), the court examined the "outer limits" of Commerce Clause authority to regulate private intrastate conduct, and found the interstate impact of violence against women to be comparable to that of the wheat grower growing wheat for home consumption in Wickard. Id. at 614, 115 S.Ct. at 1656-57. Noting further the numerous instances in which courts throughout the country after Lopez had upheld federal criminal and civil rights statutes under the Commerce Clause, the court "conclude[d] that the statistical, medical, and economic data before the Congress adequately demonstrated the rational basis for Congress' findings that gender-based violence has a substantial effect on interstate commerce," despite the fact that states retain the primary authority to define and enforce criminal law. Id. at 615, 115 S.Ct. at 1657. The court found no impermissible federal encroachment upon traditional state powers over criminal law, family law, and state tort law, largely because of the care with which Congress crafted the civil remedies of the VAWA to complement rather than supplant state laws. Id. at 615-16, 115 S.Ct. at 1657-58. Furthermore, the court found that the Act was based upon the federal government's traditional power to recognize civil rights and provide for their enforcement. Id. at 616, 115 S.Ct. at 1657-58.

The court in Doe much more briefly disposed of the second prong of the analysis, the question of whether the civil remedies portions of the VAWA were reasonably adapted to the intended end of the Act. Id. The court wrote,

> Given the important nature of the conduct sought to be prevented and the previously-approved private attorney general method of remedy, this court concludes that the statutory scheme which creates a federal civil rights remedy for gender-motivated violence is reasonably adapted to an end permitted by the Constitution. This conclusion is consistent with prior precedent related to other federal civil rights remedies enacted by Congress and upheld by courts as constitutional under the Commerce Clause.

Doe, 929 F.Supp. at 617. Thus, the Doe decision upheld that civil remedies portion of the VAWA as a valid exercise of Commerce Clause power.

On the other side of the split in authority is the decision of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia in Brzonkala v. Virginia Polytechnic & State Univ., 935 F.Supp. 779 (W.D.Va.1996). In Brzonkala, the court found that the civil remedies provision of the VAWA could not be upheld under either the Commerce Clause 1411 or the enforcement provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment. In Brzonkala, the court began its analysis of the Commerce Clause basis for the civil remedies portion of VAWA in much the same way as did the court in Doe, by looking to the Supreme Court's decision in Lopez. Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 786. However, the Brzonkala court took as its theme this warning from Lopez:

> [T]he Court considered important that "the scope of the interstate commerce power 'must be considered in light of our dual system of government and may not be extended so as to embrace effects upon interstate commerce so indirect and remote that to embrace them, in view of our complex society would effectually obliterate the distinction between what is national and what is local and create a completely centralized government.' " [Lopez, 514 U.S.] at [557], 115 S.Ct. at 1628-1629 (NLRB v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1, 37, 57 S.Ct.

615, 626, 81 L.Ed. 893 (1937)). The Court has "heeded that warning" and has "undertaken to decide whether a rational basis existed for concluding that a regulated activity sufficiently affected interstate commerce." Id. at [557], 115 S.Ct. at 1629 (citing among other cases Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., Inc., 452 U.S. 264, 276-280, 101 S.Ct. 2352, 2360-2362, 69 L.Ed.2d 1 (1981)). The Supreme Court has not " 'declared that Congress may use a relatively trivial impact on commerce as an excuse for broad general regulation of state or private activities.' " Id. [at 558, 115 S.Ct. at 1629] (quoting Maryland v. Wirtz, 392 U.S. 183, 197 n. 27, 88 S.Ct. 2017, 2024 n. 27, 20 L.Ed.2d 1020 (1968)). "Rather, '[t]he Court has said only that where a general regulatory statute bears a substantial relation to commerce, the de minimis character of individual instances arising under that statute is of no consequence.' " Id. (quoting Wirtz, 392 U.S. at 197 n. 27, 88 S.Ct. at 2024 n. 27).

Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 786. Like the court in Doe, the court in Brzonkala concluded that the VAWA could only fall within the third category of activity the Lopez decision identified as reached by the Commerce Clause, activity that "substantially affect[s]" interstate commerce. Id. However, the court concluded that there was no substantial effect on interstate commerce at which the VAWA was targeted.

The court in Brzonkala drew from Lopez a four-part analysis of effects on interstate commerce:

> The effects-analysis of the majority decision in Lopez can be broken down into four parts. First, the Court noted the relevance of the nature of the regulated activity; the Court distinguished that case, dealing with the regulation of intrastate possession of guns, from cases dealing with the regulation of an intrastate activity which is economic in nature. Second, the Court considered whether [18 U.S.C.] § 922(q) had any jurisdictional element to ensure in individual cases that the firearm possession would affect interstate commerce. Third, the Court considered the importance of legislative history. And finally, the Court considered the practical implications of accepting the Government's argument that the economic impact of the regulated activity had sufficient effects on interstate commerce to sustain the regulation.

Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 786-87. In applying this four-part analysis to the VAWA, the court took passing notice of Congress's conclusion that gender-based violent crimes meet the " 'modest threshold required by the Commerce Clause.' " Id. at 788 (quoting S.Rep. 103-138, at 54 (1993)). However, the court in Brzonkala found that, after Congress had made its findings, the "modest threshold required by the Commerce Clause" had "become less modest." Id. at 789. The court's view that the Commerce Clause threshold was no longer so modest was based on its reading of Lopez:

> Notably, the Lopez Court stated, " '[S]imply because Congress may conclude that a particular activity affects interstate commerce does not necessarily make it so.' " Lopez, [514] U.S. at [557] n. 2, 115 S.Ct. at 1629 n. 2 (quoting Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., Inc., 452 U.S. 264, 311, 101 S.Ct. 2389, 2391, 69 L.Ed.2d 1 (1981) (Rehnquist, J., concurring)). " 'Whether particular operations 1412 affect interstate commerce sufficiently to come under the constitutional power of Congress to regulate them is ultimately a judicial rather than a legislative question, and can be settled finally only by this Court.' " Id. (quoting Heart of Atlanta Motel v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 273, 85 S.Ct. 348, 366, 13 L.Ed.2d 258 (1964) [(Black, J., concurring)]).

Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 788-89. The court then summarized its own analysis of the VAWA in light of Lopez:

> The differences between Lopez and the case at hand are insignificant, and the similarities are significant. Arguably the following three differences between the case at hand and Lopez render Lopez's logic inapplicable to the case at hand: (1) that VAWA is civil, and the Lopez statute was criminal, (2) that there are legislative findings here but not in Lopez, and (3) that fewer steps of causation exist between the VAWA regulated activity and commerce than § 922(q)'s regulated activity and commerce. The similarities include (1) the criminal nature of both statutes, (2) the non- commercial nature of both statutes, (3) the lack of a jurisdictional requirement that some effect on interstate commerce is involved in each case, (4) the remoteness of any effect on commerce, and (5) the excessive congressional power that would logically follow from permitting both statutes based on the Commerce Clause.

Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 789.

Looking at differences, the court in Brzonkala discounted the importance of congressional findings regarding the VAWA versus the lack of such findings in support of the Gun Free School Zone Act before the Court in Lopez. Id. at 789-90. The court found that the presence or lack of such findings concerning effects on interstate commerce was of little significance, because the Court "had a reasonable appreciation of the effects via reasonable inferences." Id. at 790. In short, the court concluded that, "[w]hile findings will often be helpful, findings are not necessary for a determination of whether a rational relation to interstate commerce exists." Id. Next, the court acknowledged that is was "technically correct" that the VAWA was civil in nature, while the Gun Free School Zone Act was criminal. Id. However, the court rejected the significance of this distinction, asserting that "[o]ther than the economic nature of the activity to be regulated, the focus is not on the nature of the activity but on the related issue of the effects of the regulated activity on interstate commerce." Id. Finally, the court rejected as of any real significance the fact that the "chain of inferences" from the targeted activity under the VAWA to the effect on interstate commerce was one step shorter than in the Lopez case, because "[i]t is far from clear that the distance from the first to the last step is greater in the Lopez chain of causation than in the case at hand's chain." Id. at 790-91. "The bottom line," the court wrote, "is that both Lopez and the case at hand involve regulated activity that is too remote from interstate commerce." Id. at 791.

Unlike the differences between the VAWA and the act at issue in Lopez, the court found that the similarities were "real and significant." Id. First, the court found that both acts regulated activity that was "not commercial or even economic in nature." Id. Second, the court wrote,

> [S]imilar to § 922(q), VAWA does not have a jurisdictional requirement limiting each individual case under VAWA to situations involving interstate commerce. Although it is unclear whether such a jurisdictional requirement is needed, indications exist that such a requirement may be necessary.

Id. at 792.

Third, the court found that, like the statute at issue in Lopez, the VAWA would have the practical result of excessively extending Congress's power and inappropriately tipping the balance away from the states. Id. Although the court acknowledged that a reasonable inference from the findings of Congress was that violence against women has a major effect on the national economy, the court concluded that it was wrong to use "effects on the national economy" interchangeably with "effects on interstate commerce." Id. The court concluded that accepting the chain of causation between an effect on the national economy and an effect on interstate commerce as sufficient would *1413 extend the Commerce Clause power to an "unbounded extreme." Id. at 793. The court pointed out that the yearly costs of insomnia are much higher than the yearly costs of domestic abuse, but to allow the Commerce Clause to reach insomnia, even though insomniacs engage in interstate travel, would unreasonably tip the balance away from the states. Id. Continuing this line of reasoning, the court concluded that the limitations in the VAWA on federal jurisdiction over state law matters such as divorce, alimony, division of marital property, and child custody, "is utterly insignificant to the practical implications of accepting the regulated activity as having a substantial effect on interstate commerce." Id. The court continued,

> If the justification for VAWA under the Commerce Clause is constitutionally acceptable, then certainly Congress would have power to regulate much activity which should be left to state control. Similar to the situation in Lopez, if I accepted plaintiff's argument, I would be "hard pressed to posit any activity by an individual that Congress is without power to regulate." Lopez, [514] U.S. at [564], 115 S. Ct. at 1632. In essence, if VAWA is a permissible use of the commerce power because of the regulated activity's effect on the national economy, which in turn affects interstate commerce, then it would be inconsistent to deny the commerce power's extension into family law, most criminal laws, and even insomnia.

Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 793. The court therefore rejected the VAWA as a valid exercise of Commerce Clause power, remarking that "[a]ny other conclusion would strain reason." Id. The court also rejected the VAWA as a valid exercise in Fourteenth Amendment power, but this court will survey the discussion concerning Fourteenth Amendment power in Brzonkala only if this court also reaches that issue.

Defendants, as the challengers to the constitutionality of the VAWA here, generally echo the analysis used in the Brzonkala decision, asserting that when non-economic activity is the target of legislation ostensibly based on the Commerce Clause, and when there is no jurisdictional element required for each regulated incident, a higher standard than mere rationality is required under Lopez. The supporters of the constitutionality of the VAWA here-- plaintiff, plaintiff/intervenor, and amici --on the other hand, criticize the Brzonkala decision as improperly disregarding Congress's findings of an interstate nexus with the targeted activity, distinguishing, without authority, between effects on the national economy and effects on interstate commerce, and failing to recognize that the VAWA is a civil rights statute, not a criminal statute, and thus falls well within a sphere traditionally subject to federal regulation.

b. Commerce Clause analysis

[28] The provision of the United States Constitution that is generally known as the Commerce Clause grants to Congress the power "[t]o regulate Commerce ... among the several states...." U.S. CONST., Art. I, § 8, cl. 3; United States v. Crawford, 115 F.3d 1397, 1399 (8th Cir.1997); United States v. Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d 913, 919 (8th Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 1043, 117 S.Ct. 613, 136 L.Ed.2d 538 (1996). As the courts in both Doe and Brzonkala noted, the Supreme Court in Lopez recognized three categories of activity that come within the reach of the Commerce Clause: (1) regulation of the use of the channels of interstate commerce; (2) regulation and protection of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce, or persons or things in interstate commerce, even though a threat may come only from intrastate activities; and (3) regulation of activities that substantially affect interstate commerce. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 558-59, 115 S.Ct. at 1629-30; see also Crawford, 115 F.3d at 1399-1400 (identifying these three categories of activity subject to Commerce Clause power from Lopez); United States v. McMasters, 90 F.3d 1394, 1397 (8th Cir.1996) (identifying the same three categories); United States v. Bates, 77 F.3d 1101, 1104 (8th Cir.1996) (also citing Lopez for these three categories of situations in which the exercise of Commerce Clause power is permissible), cert. denied, *1414 519 U.S. 884, 117 S.Ct. 215, 136 L.Ed.2d 149 (1996); Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d at 919 (same). [FN35]

FN35. The decision in Lopez thus synthesizes over two centuries of Commerce Clause theory and practice. As Justice Stevens explained in a very recent decision, the need to repose authority over commerce in the central government was a major impetus to the drafting of the Constitution:

During the first years of our history as an independent confederation, the National Government lacked the power to regulate commerce among the States. Because each State was free to adopt measures fostering its own local interests without regard to possible prejudice to nonresidents, what Justice Johnson characterized as a "conflict of commercial regulations, destructive to the harmony of the States" ensued. See Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 224, 6 L.Ed. 23 (1824) (opinion concurring in judgment). In his view, this "was the immediate cause that led to the forming of a [constitutional] convention." Ibid.

Camps Newfound/Owatonna, Inc. v. Town of Harrison, Maine, 520 U.S. 564, ---- - ----, 117 S.Ct. 1590, 1595-96, 137 L.Ed.2d 852 (1997). Justice Stevens also noted that the "negative" or "dormant" aspect of the Commerce Clause, which prohibits regulation that invidiously discriminates against interstate commerce, was at least as important to the framers as the affirmative exercise of congressional authority over commerce. Id. (citing Gibbons, 9 Wheat. at 231; West Lynn Creamery, Inc. v. Healy, 512 U.S. 186, 193 n. 9, 114 S.Ct. 2205, 2211 n. 9, 129 L.Ed.2d 157 (1994); Hughes v. Oklahoma, 441 U.S. 322, 325-26, 99 S.Ct. 1727, 1730- 31, 60 L.Ed.2d 250 (1979); Hughes v. Alexandria Scrap Corp., 426 U.S. 794, 807 n. 16, 96 S.Ct. 2488, 2496-97 n. 16, 49 L.Ed.2d 220 (1976)).

In New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, 112 S.Ct. 2408, 120 L.Ed.2d 120 (1992), the Supreme Court traced briefly the expansion of Congress's Commerce Clause power:

Interstate commerce was an established feature of life in the late 18th century. See, e.g., The Federalist No. 42, p. 267 (C. Rossiter ed. 1961) ("The defect of power in the existing Confederacy to regulate the commerce between its several members [has] been clearly pointed out by experience"). The volume of interstate commerce and the range of commonly accepted objects of government regulation have, however, expanded considerably in the last 200 years, and the regulatory authority of Congress has expanded along with them. As interstate commerce has become ubiquitous, activities once considered purely local have come to have effects on the national economy, and have accordingly come within the scope of Congress' commerce power. See, e.g., Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 85 S.Ct. 377, 13 L.Ed.2d 290 (1964); Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 63 S.Ct. 82, 87 L.Ed. 122 (1942).

New York, 505 U.S. at 158, 112 S.Ct. at 2418-19. In Gibbons, the Court recognized the limits of Commerce Clause power to reach "completely internal" or intrastate activity. Gibbons, 9 Wheat. at 194-95, 6 L.Ed. 23. For nearly a century after Gibbons, therefore, the focus of Commerce Clause decisions was the "dormant" or "negative" aspect of the clause, and the Court "dealt but rarely with the extent of the Congress' power." Lopez, 514 U.S. at 553, 115 S.Ct. at 1627.

The second century of the nation's existence saw expansion of Congress's Commerce Clause power to include "production," "manufacturing," and "mining," matters originally considered as entirely within the province of the states, where such activities were so mingled together with interstate matters that full regulation of interstate commerce required incidental regulation of intrastate commerce. Id. at 554, 115 S.Ct. at 1627 (citing Shreveport R. Co., v. U.S., 234 U.S. 342, 34 S.Ct. 833, 58 L.Ed. 1341 (1914)).

The next watershed was a departure from distinctions between "direct" and "indirect" effects on interstate commerce, formulated, for example, in A.L.A. Schechter Poultry Corp. v. United States, 295 U.S. 495, 55 S.Ct. 837, 79 L.Ed. 1570 (1935), with the recognition that Congress's Commerce Clause power extends to matters that "have such a close and substantial relation to interstate commerce that their control is essential or appropriate to protect that commerce from burdens and obstructions." NLRB v. Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., 301 U.S. 1, 37, 57 S.Ct. 615, 624, 81 L.Ed. 893 (1937). In Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 63 S.Ct. 82, 87 L.Ed. 122 (1942), the Court held that Congress's Commerce Clause power extended to the regulation of intrastate activity that, in aggregate, has a substantial effect on interstate commerce. Wickard, 317 U.S. at 127-28, 63 S.Ct. at 90-91. As Chief Justice Rehnquist explained, > Jones & Laughlin Steel, Darby, and Wickard ushered in an era of Commerce Clause jurisprudence that greatly expanded the previously defined authority of Congress under that Clause. In part, this was a recognition of the great changes that had occurred in the way business was carried on in this country. Enterprises that had once been local or at most regional in nature had become national in scope. But the doctrinal change also reflected a view that earlier Commerce Clause cases artificially had constrained the authority of Congress to regulate interstate matters.

Lopez, 514 U.S. at 556, 115 S.Ct. at 1628.

In Lopez, however, the Supreme Court made a renewed search for the "outer limits" of Commerce Clause power. Id. at 557, 115 S.Ct. at 1628- 29. Chief Justice Rehnquist reiterated that those limits " 'must be considered in the light of our dual system of government and may not be extended so as to embrace effects upon interstate commerce so indirect and remote that to embrace them, in view of our complex society, would effectually obliterate the distinction between what is national and what is local and create a completely centralized government.' " Id. at 557, 115 S.Ct. at 1628-29 (quoting Jones & Laughlin Steel, 301 U.S. at 37, 57 S.Ct. at 624).

*1415 [29][30] As to the third category, the category into which this court agrees the VAWA must fall, "[t]he Commerce Clause ... gives Congress the authority to regulate 'those activities that substantially affect interstate commerce.' "

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d at 920 (quoting Lopez, 514 U.S. at 559, 115 S.Ct. at 1629-30). The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has explained that, "[u]nder this power, Congress may regulate a class of purely intrastate activity if, in the aggregate, the activity has a substantial effect on interstate commerce." Id. Furthermore, the court observed, " '[w]here the class of activities is regulated and that class is within the reach of federal power, the courts have no power "to excise, as trivial, individual instances" of the class.' " Id. (quoting Perez v. United States, 402 U.S. 146, 154, 91 S.Ct. 1357, 1361-62, 28 L.Ed.2d 686 (1971), in turn quoting Maryland v. Wirtz, 392 U.S. 183, 193, 88 S.Ct. 2017, 2022, 20 L.Ed.2d 1020 (1968)). In determining whether a statute is a proper exercise of this category of Commerce Clause power, the court's task is to decide " 'whether a rational basis existed for concluding that [the] regulated activity sufficiently affected interstate commerce.' " Id. (quoting Lopez, 514 U.S. at 557, 115 S.Ct. at 1628-29). Where this requirement is satisfied, the only remaining question for the court is whether the means chosen by Congress are "reasonably adapted" to the asserted goals of the legislation. Hodel, 452 U.S. at 276, 101 S.Ct. at 2360; Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc. v. United States, 379 U.S. 241, 258, 85 S.Ct. 348, 358, 13 L.Ed.2d 258 (1964).

i. Substantial effect on interstate commerce. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals recently discussed the analysis in Lopez of the Gun Free School Zone Act as an exercise of the third kind of Commerce Clause power:

> The Lopez Court concluded that the statute could not "be sustained under our cases upholding regulations of activities that arise out of or are connected with a commercial transaction, which viewed in the aggregate, substantially affects interstate commerce." [Lopez, 514 U.S.] at [561], 115 S.Ct. at 1631. The Court noted that the statute contained "no jurisdictional element which would ensure, through case-by-case inquiry, that the [activity] in question affects interstate commerce," id. at [561], 115 S.Ct. at 1631, and that Congress had made no legislative findings that the activity so affected interstate commerce. See id. at [562-63], 115 S.Ct. at 1631-32. Without a more definite connection to interstate commerce, upholding the statute would allow Congress to "regulate not only all violent crime, but all activities that might lead to violent crime, regardless of how tenuously they relate to interstate commerce," id. at [564], 115 S.Ct. at 1632, which exceeded the proper limits of the federal government's power.

McMasters, 90 F.3d at 1398. The court in McMasters found that there was a jurisdictional requirement in the statute in question, a requirement that the property be "used in interstate or foreign commerce or in any activity affecting interstate or foreign commerce." Id. The court also looked to legislative history demonstrating Congress's concern that it not exceed its Commerce Clause authority further coupled with a determination that the statute was necessary to protect interstate commerce. Id.

[31] To answer one concern raised by the Brzonkala court, Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 792, it appears from McMasters that the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals reads Lopez not as requiring that the statute contain a jurisdictional element ensuring that the activity in question affects interstate commerce, but as considering whether the statute contains such a jurisdictional element, or whether, in the alternative, "Congress had made ... legislative findings that the activity so affected interstate commerce." Id. (citing Lopez, 514 U.S. at 562-63, 115 S.Ct. at 1631-32). This point was made more explicitly by the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in another decision in which the court observed that, both before and after Lopez, courts had consistently determined that 21 U.S.C. § 841(a)(1) is a valid exercise of Commerce Clause power even though it does not require an interstate nexus as an element of conviction. United States v. Bell, 90 F.3d 318, 321 (8th Cir.1996) (citing as so holding 1416United States v. Weinrich,* 586 F.2d 481, 498 (5th Cir.1978), cert. denied, 440 U.S. 982, 99 S.Ct. 1792, 60 L.Ed.2d 243 (1979), and 441 U.S. 927, 99 S.Ct. 2041, 60 L.Ed.2d 402 (1979), and United States v. Leshuk, 65 F.3d 1105, 1111-12 (4th Cir.1995)). Similarly, in United States v. Monteleone, 77 F.3d 1086 (8th Cir.1996), the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals explicitly held that 18 U.S.C. § 922(d), although it "does not contain any jurisdictional element which limits its scope to those offense affecting interstate commerce, and it could thus be applied to wholly intrastate transactions ... [s]till ... is [not] rendered unconstitutional by the Supreme Court's narrow holding in Lopez." Monteleone, 77 F.3d at 1091. In so concluding, the court examined congressional findings of the effect on interstate commerce of widespread traffic in firearms. Id. at 1092; see also Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d at 920 (never examining the statute in question for a jurisdictional element, but instead examining congressional findings concerning the impact of the regulated activity on interstate commerce). Furthermore, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals reads Lopez to reaffirm that "[i]n cases challenging Congress' lawmaking power under the third category, ... 'the proper test requires an analysis of whether the regulated activity "substantially affects" interstate commerce,' " Bates, 77 F.3d at 1104 (quoting Lopez, 514 U.S. at 559, 115 S.Ct. at 1629-30), not as instituting a new test of statutes under the third category of Commerce Clause power based solely on whether the statutes include a jurisdictional element.

This court finds that the Lopez decision itself supports such a reading of "jurisdictional elements" and "congressional findings" of effect on interstate commerce as alternative ways in which a statute ostensibly founded on Commerce Clause power can meet the requirement of a substantial effect on interstate commerce. In Lopez, the Court began its analysis of whether there was a substantial effect upon interstate commerce from the activity targeted by the Gun Free School Zone Act by looking at whether the statute contained any "jurisdictional element which would ensure, through case-by-case inquiry, that the firearm possession in question affects interstate commerce." Lopez, 514 U.S. at 561, 115 S.Ct. at 1631. The Court cited its prior decision in United States v. Bass, 404 U.S. 336, 92 S.Ct. 515, 30 L.Ed.2d 488 (1971), in which it had required that a felon not only possess a firearm, but that the possession in question showed " 'the requisite nexus with interstate commerce.' " Id. at 562, 115 S.Ct. at 1631 (citing Bass, 404 U.S. at 349, 92 S.Ct. at 523). The court in Lopez found that, unlike the statute in Bass, the one then before it "has no express jurisdictional element which might limit its reach to a discrete set of firearm possessions that additionally have an explicit connection with or effect on interstate commerce." Id. The Court then considered whether "legislative findings, and indeed even congressional committee findings, regarding effect on interstate commerce" established the required effect on interstate commerce. Id. In the case of the statute before the Court in Lopez, there were no such legislative findings to meet the requirement; thus, "to the extent that congressional findings would enable [the Court] to evaluate the legislative judgment that the activity in question substantially affected interstate commerce, even though no such substantial effect was visible to the naked eye," they were lacking in the case of the Gun Free School Zone Act. Id. at 563, 115 S.Ct. at 1632.

Because the Court made alternative inquiries into whether the statute contained "jurisdictional elements" and whether it was supported by congressional findings establishing the substantial effect of the activity addressed on interstate commerce, it is incorrect to assert that the presence of "jurisdictional elements" in the statute is necessary to an exercise of Commerce Clause power. Contra Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 792 (stating that "indications exist that [a 'jurisdictional elements'] requirement may be necessary"). To put it another way, the requirement is that the activity have a substantial effect on interstate commerce; factors to consider in determining whether there is such a substantial effect include whether there is a jurisdictional element in the statute establishing that the activity addressed on a case-by-case basis has the requisite nexus to interstate commerce, but also *1417 include, in the alternative, whether legislative findings establish the nexus of the activity in question to interstate commerce. See Lopez, 514 U.S. at 561-63, 115 S.Ct. at 1630-32; see also Bates, 77 F.3d at 1104 (reading Lopez to state that the test of lawmaking power under the third category is whether the regulated activity substantially affects interstate commerce). This court's reading of Lopez is in accord with that of the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals:

> We do not view Lopez as holding that federal criminal statutes must contain jurisdictional elements. If a jurisdictional element were critical to a statute's constitutionality, the Court in Lopez would not have gone on to examine the Government's proffered rationales for the constitutionality of the gun possession statute. See Lopez, [514] U.S. [at 563-64], 115 S.Ct. at 1632-34.... Congress may [ensure that there is a substantial effect on interstate commerce] either through its own legislative findings or by including a jurisdictional element in the statute; it need not do both. Where, as here, detailed congressional findings support the conclusion that the activities prohibited by the Access Act substantially affect interstate commerce, the absence of a jurisdictional element is not fatal to the statute's constitutionality. See [United States v.] Wilson, 73 F.3d [675,] 685 [(7th Cir.1995)] ("In discussing the lack of a jurisdictional element in Lopez, the Court simply did not state or imply that all criminal statutes must have such an element, or that all statutes with such an element would be constitutional, or that any statute without such an element is per se unconstitutional.")[, cert. denied, --- U.S. ----, 117 S.Ct. 47, 136 L.Ed.2d 12 (1996)].

Terry v. Reno, 101 F.3d 1412, 1418 (D.C.Cir.1996) (emphasis added), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1264, 117 S.Ct. 2431, 138 L.Ed.2d 193 (1997). The court in Brzonkala confused alternative factors establishing a requirement with the requirement itself. "Jurisdictional elements" are not necessarily required to establish a valid exercise of Commerce Clause power.

The decision of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in Dinwiddie is instructive on other aspects of the third category of Commerce Clause power. In Dinwiddie, the court concluded that, to be a valid exercise of Commerce Clause power, a statute does not have to regulate commercial entities. Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d at 920. Instead, the court noted that "[i]t is settled law that the Commerce Clause gives Congress the power to regulate activity that diminishes interstate commerce in a good or service." Id. (citing Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 299-300, 85 S.Ct. 377, 381-82, 13 L.Ed.2d 290 (1964), and Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 128-29, 63 S.Ct. 82, 90-91, 87 L.Ed. 122 (1942)). Furthermore, the court clarified the meaning of Lopez with regard to distant relationships between the regulated activity and interstate commerce, finding that what Lopez rejects is the exercise of Commerce Clause power that requires the court to "pile inference upon inference" to conclude that the regulated activity has a substantial effect on interstate commerce. Id. at 921 (citing Lopez, 514 U.S. at 567, 115 S.Ct. at 1633-34). Again, the court looked at how directly the congressional findings establish an effect upon interstate commerce, such as an interference with business or a reduction in the availability of goods or services. Id.

Although Dinwiddie explains that statutes enacted pursuant to the Commerce Clause power do not have to regulate commercial entities, there seems to be a mounting uncertainty as to whether Lopez rejects Commerce Clause regulation of non-commercial or non-economic activity. Half of an equally-divided en banc court of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals observed, "Lopez sends a clear cautionary signal that federal criminalization of intrastate noneconomic activity, when such regulation is not essential to a broader regulation of commercial activity, will have difficulty satisfying the substantial effects basis for Commerce Clause regulation." United States v. Kirk, 105 F.3d 997, 1009 (5th Cir.1997) (opinion of Jones, J., on behalf of judges who would reverse the district court on the constitutionality under the Commerce Clause of 18 U.S.C. § 922(o), which criminalizes the manufacture, transfer, and possession of machineguns), petition for cert. filed, *1418 65 U.S.L.W. 3756 (May 5, 1997) (No. 96-1759). However, this is far from any conclusion that Lopez excludes entirely from Commerce Clause power the regulation of non-economic or non-commercial activity. The judges voting to reverse in Kirk recognized that regulation of non-economic activity would encounter problems satisfying Commerce Clause requirements "when such regulation is not essential to a broader regulation of commercial activity." Id. As one judge of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals has explained,

> As I understand it, then, Congress can regulate non-"commercial" or non-"economic" activity under the third category of its interstate commerce authority. But it can only do so where the non-"commercial" or non-"economic" regulation is, as Lopez explained, "an essential part of a larger regulation of economic activity, in which the regulatory scheme could be undercut unless the intrastate activity were regulated." Lopez, [514] U.S. at [561], 115 S.Ct. at 1631.

United States v. Chesney, 86 F.3d 564, 575 n. 3 (6th Cir.1996) (Batchelder, J., concurring), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1282, 117 S.Ct. 2470, 138 L.Ed.2d 225 (1997).

Similarly, this court reads Lopez to have invalidated the Gun Free School Zone Act, not because it regulated non-commercial or non-economic activity, but because the Court could not find that the non-commercial, non-economic activity regulated had the requisite substantial effect upon interstate commerce, since the regulation lacked either jurisdictional elements or supporting legislative findings demonstrating that the activity had the necessary substantial effect. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 561-63, 115 S.Ct. at 1630-32. This is certainly the understanding of Lopez held by the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals in Terry. Terry, 101 F.3d at 1418. In Terry, the court wrote,

Copr. © West 2003 No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works

> Lopez's fundamental proposition is that Congress must ensure that its Commerce Clause power to regulate noncommercial activities extends to only those activities that substantially affect interstate commerce.

Terry, 101 F.3d at 1418. Thus, the VAWA's regulation of gender-based violence is not beyond the reach of the Commerce Clause power simply because it involves regulation of non-economic or non-commercial activity.

The decision in Brzonkala raises one further issue regarding proof of a substantial effect on interstate commerce. That issue is whether "effects on the national economy" can be used interchangeably with "effects on interstate commerce." Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 792. The court in Brzonkala conceded that "[a] reasonable inference from the congressional findings is that violence against women has its major effect on the national economy." Id. However, that court concluded that to use "effects on the national economy" interchangeably with "effects on interstate commerce" was "wrong":

> Undoubtedly effects on the national economy in turn affect interstate commerce. Such a chain of causation alone, however, is insufficient to bring an act within the purview of the commerce power. If such a chain of causation sufficed, Congress's power would extend to an unbounded extreme.

Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 792-93. The court then compared the huge effect of gender-based violence on the national economy with the effect of insomnia, suggesting that it would be unreasonable to allow the exercise of Commerce Clause power in either case because a substantial effect on the national economy had some incidental effect on interstate commerce. Id. at 793.

Although this portion of the analysis in the Brzonkala decision is at best slight, it is not wholly without support in the Supreme Court's decision in Lopez. In Lopez, the Court rejected the government's arguments that an inference of an effect on the national economy establishing an inference of a substantial effect upon interstate commerce sufficed to draw regulation of guns in school zones within Commerce Clause authority. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 563-64, 115 S.Ct. at 1631-32. In Lopez, the government asserted, without supporting findings from Congress, "that possession of a firearm in a school zone may result in violent crime and that violent crime can be expected to affect the functioning *1419 of the national economy in two ways." Id. at 563, 115 S.Ct. at 1632 (emphasis added). Those two expected effects on the national economy that might result from violent crime that in turn might result from possession of a firearm in a school zone were costs of violent crime spread nationally by insurance and unwillingness of individuals to travel into areas of the country perceived to be unsafe. Id. at 563-64, 115 S.Ct. at 1631-32. Additionally, the government argued that guns in schools might ultimately affect the learning environment and thus produce less productive citizens. Id. at 564, 115 S.Ct. at 1632. The Supreme Court was unimpressed with this chain of inferences, concluding that the "costs of crime" reasoning would allow federal regulation of all violent crime, no matter how distantly related to interstate commerce, while the "national productivity" reasoning would lead to regulation of matters formerly regarded as within the sovereignty of the states, such as family law. Id.

However, the Supreme Court has long recognized that a substantial effect on the national economy validates the exercise of Commerce Clause power, even when the activity regulated pursuant to the Commerce Clause is purely intrastate. Reviewing the history of the Commerce Clause, the Supreme Court observed, "As interstate commerce has become ubiquitous, activities once considered purely local have come to have effects on the national economy, and have accordingly come within the scope of Congress' commerce power." New York v. United States, 505 U.S. 144, 158, 112 S.Ct. 2408, 2419, 120 L.Ed.2d 120 (1992) (citing Katzenbach v. McClung, 379 U.S. 294, 85 S.Ct. 377, 13 L.Ed.2d 290 (1964), and Wickard v. Filburn, 317 U.S. 111, 63 S.Ct. 82, 87 L.Ed. 122 (1942)). Indeed, what Lopez rejects is not this premise, but the premise that a chain of inferences from the regulated activity to an effect on the national economy and a further chain of inferences from some effect on the national economy to an effect on interstate commerce could suffice to establish that the regulated activity had the requisite substantial effect on interstate commerce. Lopez, 514 U.S. at 567, 115 S.Ct. at 1633 ("To uphold the Government's contentions here, we would have to pile inference upon inference in a manner that would bid fair to convert congressional authority under the Commerce Clause to a general police power of the sort retained by the States."); Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d at 921 (clarifying Lopez as rejecting the exercise of Commerce Clause power that requires the court to "pile inference upon inference" to conclude that the regulated activity has a substantial effect on interstate commerce, citing Lopez, 514 U.S. at 567, 115 S.Ct. at 1634). Lopez certainly does not bar the exercise of Commerce Clause power to regulate an activity that is shown by congressional findings to have a direct rather than merely inferential, effect on the national economy. Even the court in Brzonkala conceded that "[u]ndoubtedly effects on the national economy in turn affect interstate commerce." Brzonkala, 935 F.Supp. at 792. Plainly then, Lopez also does not bar the exercise of Commerce Clause power where the regulated activity's direct effect on the national economy is also shown by congressional findings to be coupled with a substantial direct effect on interstate commerce.

ii. Deference to congressional findings. The ground on which the champions of the constitutionality of the VAWA here take the Brzonkala decision most severely to task, however, is that the Brzonkala decision fails to demonstrate, indeed eschews, any deference to Congress's findings of an interstate nexus to gender-motivated violence. This court agrees that the analysis of the constitutionality of the VAWA in Brzonkala is fatally flawed in this respect.

The court is mindful that in Lopez, the Supreme Court wrote, "Congress normally is not required to make formal findings as to the substantial burdens that an activity has on interstate commerce." Lopez, 514 U.S. at 562, 115 S.Ct. at 1631 (citing McClung, 379 U.S. at 304, 85 S.Ct. at 383-84). However, that statement is no license to disregard congressional findings when they are present, nor is the Court's comment elsewhere in the Lopez decision that it is to decide whether there is a rational basis for Congress's conclusion that the activity in question has a substantial effect on interstate commerce. Id. at 557 & n. 2, 115 S.Ct. at 1628-29 & n. 2. Indeed, the Court in Lopez also wrote, "[A]s 1420 part of our independent evaluation of constitutionality under the Commerce Clause we of course consider legislative findings, and indeed even congressional committee findings, regarding effect on interstate commerce." Id. at 562, 115 S.Ct. at 1631.

Decisions of several federal circuit courts of appeals post-Lopez confirm that deference to a congressional finding that a regulated activity has a substantial effect on interstate commerce is alive and well. The District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals reads Lopez to clarify that an activity must not only "affect" interstate commerce, but must "substantially affect" it. Terry, 101 F.3d at 1416. However, the court did not suggest that this clarification ended deference to Congressional findings, but instead simply required the court to review the legislative findings to see if a "substantial" effect was supported by those findings. Id. at 1416-17. Similarly, the Third Circuit Court of Appeals concluded in Pic-A-State Pa., Inc. v. Reno, 76 F.3d 1294 (3d Cir.), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1246, 116 S.Ct. 2504, 135 L.Ed.2d 194 (1996), that

> "[t]he task of a court that is asked to determine whether a particular exercise of congressional power is valid under the Commerce Clause is relatively narrow." Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., 452 U.S. at 276, 101 S.Ct. at 2360. "The court must defer to a congressional finding that a regulated activity affects interstate commerce, if there is any rational basis for such a finding." Id.

Pic-A-State Pa., Inc., 76 F.3d at 1301. Later in the opinion, that court also observed that deference to Congress extends to the congressional determination of the means used to effect the desired end:

> We do not substitute our judgment for that of Congress. "Where the legislative judgment is drawn in question," our inquiry "must be restricted to the issue of whether any state of facts either known or which could reasonably be assumed affords support for it." United States v. Carolene Prod. Co., 304 U.S. 144, 154, 58 S.Ct. 778, 784, 82 L.Ed. 1234 (1938). The Supreme Court's recent decision in United States v. Lopez, [514] U.S. [549], 115 S.Ct. 1624, 131 L.Ed.2d 626 (1995), does not change the nature of this inquiry. Lopez asks whether the activity at issue could rationally be understood to affect commerce. The Court did not reach the question of whether the legislation itself was rationally related to its announced goal.

Id. at 1301-02. Similarly, when considering the constitutionality of the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act, 18 U.S.C. § 248, in light of Lopez, the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals found that what Lopez added, or reiterated, was that congressional findings must not only show an effect on interstate commerce from the regulated activity, but a substantial effect. United States v. Wilson, 73

F.3d 675, 681 (7th Cir.1995). The court wrote,

> Thus courts must ask the additional question whether the relation to interstate commerce is substantial. The district court erred further by giving no deference to Congress's findings. Courts need only look for a rational basis. Hodel, 452 U.S. at 276, 101 S.Ct. at 2360. The district court essentially converted the rational basis test into a less deferential standard. Here it is plainly rational that reproductive health facilities are engaged in interstate commerce and that obstruction of such facilities brings the commerce to a halt.

Wilson, 73 F.3d at 681. The court found that the proper counterweight to excessive expansion of Commerce Clause power was not institution of a non- deferential review of congressional findings, but the requirement that the effects Congress has found must be substantial. Id. ("If individuals travel interstate more often to seek and provide reproductive health services than to bowl or to camp, Congress's authority to regulate may very well reach health facilities but not bowling alleys or campgrounds: courts must apply the substantial effects test to draw the proper distinction."). The district court had therefore improperly dismissed out of hand Congress's findings of a substantial effect of the regulated activity upon interstate commerce. Id. [FN36]

> FN36. Writing for four judges of an equally-divided Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals en banc, Judge Higginbotham wrote, Lopez, then, adhered to a rational basis standard of review. This deferential standard does not insist that Congress actually make factual findings. To the contrary, its tolerance of hypothetical, judicially supposed purposes and means gives the rational basis standard its deferential character. Courts can assume a more activist role in judicial review by refusing to look to a basis for legislation not identified by Congress. This elevates the standard of review, according significantly less deference to Congress. Giving weight to the absence of congressional findings lies in the middle ground between an intrusive absolute insistence upon legislative findings and traditional rational basis inquiry. Congressional findings are not merely playthings of formalism. They help define the respective roles of the courts and the Congress and the federal and the state governments. So the role of findings demands our attention. But their absence does not end our inquiry.
> Kirk, 105 F.3d at 999 (Higginbotham, J., writing for four judges who would vote to affirm the district court's determination that 18 U.S.C. § 922(o) was a constitutional exercise of Commerce Clause power). Although the judges joining in this opinion found that there were no legislative findings to support 18 U.S.C. § 922(o), copious findings support the VAWA.

*1421 iii. Congressional findings. A brief review of Congress's findings in support of the substantial effect of gender-motivated violence upon interstate commerce, garnered in four years of hearings prior to enactment of the VAWA, clearly establishes Congress's rational basis for finding that the regulated activity had the necessary interstate nexus. [FN37] The congressional findings on the scope of the problem of gender-based violence are staggering:

. Fear of gender-motivated crime deters use of public transportation, and thus "acts as a barrier to mobility, particularly for those women who have no alternative to public transportation because of economic constraints." S. Hrg. 101-939, Pt. 1, at 69 (testimony of Helen Neuborne); see also S. Hrg. 102-369 at 2 (statement of Sen. Biden).

. Fear of gender-based violence deters women's free movement interstate, and limits every economic choice, including education, employment, and travel. Crimes of Violence Motivated by Gender: Hearing before House Subcomm. on Civil and Constitutional Rights, House Committee on the Judiciary, 103d Cong., 1st Sess., at 5 (Nov. 16, 1993).

See also Doe, 929 F.Supp. at 611 (citing these or similar findings). These findings led Congress to the following conclusion:

> [Gender-motivated violence has] a substantial adverse effect on interstate commerce, by deterring potential victims from traveling interstate, from engaging in employment in interstate business, and from transacting with business, and in places involved, in interstate commerce.

H.R.Rep. No. 103-711 at 385 (1994), U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News at 1801, 1853. In light of its findings, Congress concluded that enactment of the civil remedies of the VAWA was "firmly based on the Commerce Clause." S.Rep. No. 103-138 at 54 (1993).

Also in light of these findings, giving them the deference they are properly due in a Commerce Clause analysis, this court finds that there was undeniably a rational basis for Congress's conclusions that gender-motivated violence has a substantial effect on interstate commerce. See Lopez, 514 U.S. at 557, 115 S.Ct. at 1628-29 (the first prong of the test for the proper exercise of Commerce Clause is whether Congress had a rational basis for concluding that the regulated activity had a substantial effect on interstate commerce); Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d at 920 (same). Unlike the situation presented in Lopez, no chain of inferences from the regulated activity to an effect on the national economy to an effect on interstate commerce is required. See Lopez, 514 U.S. at 567, 115 S.Ct. at 1634 ("To uphold the Government's contentions here, we would have to pile inference upon inference in a manner that would bid fair to convert congressional authority under the Commerce Clause to a general police power of the sort retained by the States."); Dinwiddie, 76 F.3d at 921. Instead the congressional findings demonstrate not only a direct and substantial impact of gender-motivated violence on the national economy, see, e.g., Women And Violence: Hearing before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, S. Hrg. 101-939, Pt. 1, 101st Cong., 2d Sess., 58 (June 20, 1990) (domestic violence costs employers an estimated $3 to $5 billion annually due to absenteeism from the workplace), but a direct and substantial effect on interstate commerce. See, e.g., Crimes of Violence Motivated by Gender: Hearing before House Subcomm. on Civil and Constitutional Rights, House Committee on the Judiciary, 103d Cong., 1st Sess., at 5 (Nov. 16, 1993) (fear of gender-based violence deters women's free movement interstate, and limits every economic choice, including education, employment, and travel). Furthermore, because the effects on interstate commerce reflected in Congress's *1423 findings are so profound, the substantiality of the effects demonstrates that enactment of the VAWA was an exercise of Commerce Clause power in properly limited circumstances. See Wilson, 73 F.3d at 681 (substantiality of effect, not a lack of deference to congressional findings, is the proper limitation on Commerce Clause power).

iv. Reasonable adaptation of means to goal. Having concluded that Congress did indeed have a rational basis for concluding that gender-motivated violence has a substantial effect on interstate commerce, the court next turns to the second part of the Commerce Clause analysis, which asks whether the means chosen by Congress are "reasonably adapted" to the asserted goals of the legislation. Hodel, 452 U.S. at 276, 101 S.Ct. at 2360; Heart of Atlanta Motel, Inc., 379 U.S. at 258, 85 S.Ct. at 358. On this prong of the analysis, this court can do little better than adopt the conclusion of a fellow district court judge in Doe:

> Given the important nature of the conduct sought to be prevented and the previously-approved private attorney general method of remedy, this court concludes that the statutory scheme which creates a federal civil rights remedy for gender-motivated violence is reasonably adapted to an end permitted by the Constitution. This conclusion is consistent with prior precedent related to other federal civil rights remedies enacted by Congress and upheld by courts as constitutional under the Commerce Clause.

Doe, 929 F.Supp. at 617.

The court would add only these points, often reiterated by the plaintiff, the plaintiff/intervenor, and amici. First, 42 U.S.C. § 13981 has been cast as a civil rights statute, not a criminal statute, and thus falls within the traditional purview of federal regulation. Just as importantly, the statute defers to state definitions of crimes and clearly supplements rather than supplants state regulation of criminal and family law matters. As such, the statute is not only reasonably adapted to serve the goals Congress had in mind, but reasonably adapted to avoid the parlaying of Commerce Clause power into a general police power, leading to a completely centralized government that obliterates our dual system of government. See Lopez, 514 U.S. at 557, 115 S.Ct. at 1628-29 (stating these concerns). Thus, contrary to the view of the district court in Brzonkala, the concerns of the Supreme Court in Lopez simply are not present here.

In short, defendants' challenge to the civil remedies provision of the VAWA, 42 U.S.C. § 13981, on the ground that it exceeds Congress's power under the Commerce Clause is overruled, and their challenge to the court's subject matter jurisdiction pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(1) is denied. [FN38]

> FN38. Because the court finds that the civil remedies portion of the VAWA is constitutional under the Commerce Clause, the court does not reach defendants' challenge to the constitutionality of the statute under section five of the Fourteenth Amendment.

C. Supplemental Jurisdiction

Defendants contend that, even if the court has subject matter jurisdiction over a federal VAWA claim and that claim is adequately pleaded, the court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the plaintiff's many and varied state-law claims. Defendants contend that the state-law claims predominate over the single federal claim, both on the basis of mere numerosity and on the basis that the state-law claims are quantitatively different. They also contend that the court should decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims, because they involve novel and complex issues of state law. Plaintiff counters that her claims all arise from a common nucleus of operative fact, and thus can and should reasonably be tried together, and that her state-law claims are neither so complex, novel, or quantitatively different that this court should refrain from hearing them.

The statute defining the supplemental jurisdiction of the federal courts provides as follows:

> [I]n any civil action of which the district courts have original jurisdiction, the district courts shall have supplemental jurisdiction over all other claims that are so related to claims in the action within such original jurisdiction that they form part of *1424 the same case or controversy under Article III of the United States Constitution.

28 U.S.C. § 1367(a). The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has observed that the word "shall" in the phrase "shall have supplemental jurisdiction" "is a mandatory command." McLaurin v. Prater, 30 F.3d 982, 984 (8th Cir.1994). The court pointed out further that > Congress has directed that federal district courts 'shall' have jurisdiction in both 28 U.S.C. § 1331 (1988) (federal question jurisdiction) and 28 U.S.C. § 1332 (1988) (diversity jurisdiction), and the accepted import of the terms is that federal courts must accept and cannot reject jurisdiction in such cases.

McLaurin, 30 F.3d at 984-85 (citing McCarthy v. Madigan, 503 U.S. 140, 145-47, 112 S.Ct. 1081, 1087, 117 L.Ed.2d 291 (1992), and Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co., 212 U.S. 19, 40, 29 S.Ct. 192, 195, 53 L.Ed. 382 (1909)).

[32] There are exceptions to this mandate, however, and some of those exceptions are cast in discretionary terms. Id. at 985 (citing 28 U.S.C. § 1367(b) and (c)). [FN39] A court "may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction" if

> (1) the claim raises a novel or complex issue of State law,
> (2) the claim substantially predominates over the claim or claims over which the district court has original jurisdiction,
> (3) the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction, or > (4) in exceptional circumstances, there are other compelling reasons for declining jurisdiction.

28 U.S.C. § 1367(c). This subsection gives a court the discretion to reject jurisdiction over supplemental claims, "but only to a point." McLaurin, 30 F.3d at 985. "The statute plainly allows the district court to reject jurisdiction over supplemental claims only in the four instances described therein." Id. Thus, where the case clearly fits within one of the subsections listed above, the court may decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction. Packett v. Stenberg, 969 F.2d 721, 726-27 (8th Cir.1992); see also O'Connor v. State of Nev., 27 F.3d 357, 362 (9th Cir.1994), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1021, 115 S.Ct. 1367, 131 L.Ed.2d 223 (1995); Growth Horizons, Inc. v. Delaware County, Pa., 983 F.2d 1277, 1285 n. 14 (3d Cir.1993); Chesley v. Union Carbide Corp., 927 F.2d 60, 65-66, n. 3 (2d Cir.1991); Carroll v. Borough of State College, 854 F.Supp. 1184, 1200 (M.D.Pa.1994), aff'd mem., 47 F.3d 1160 (3d Cir.1995). The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals has counseled that, once one of the grounds listed in § 1367(c) is present, "the court should consider whether the exercise of jurisdiction advances 'the values of economy, convenience, fairness, and comity.' " Allen v. City of Los Angeles, 92 F.3d 842, 846 (9th Cir.1996) (quoting Executive Software v. U.S. Dist. Court, 24 F.3d 1545, 1557 (9th Cir.1994)), overruled in part, Acri v. Varian Assocs., Inc., 114 F.3d 999 (9th Cir.1997) (en banc). [FN40] However, "in the absence of the circumstances described in subsections (b) and (c), § 1367(a) requires the district court to accept supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims [the plaintiff] has raised in [the] case." McLaurin, > FN39. In McLaurin, the court observed that the exceptions are found in both subsection (b) and (c). McLaurin, 30 F.3d at 985. According to the court in McLaurin, subsection (b) "prohibits district courts from exercising supplemental jurisdiction in certain instances when the basis for original jurisdiction is premised on § 1332 (diversity of citizenship)," id. (emphasis added), and the court notes that this subsection contains the "mandatory," but negative, words "shall not have supplemental jurisdiction." 28 U.S.C. § 1367(b); cf. McLaurin, 30 F.3d at 984-85 ("shall" is mandatory). Thus, the court concludes that only subsection (c) provides discretionary grounds for declining to exercise supplemental jurisdiction.

30 F.3d at 985.

FN40. In Acri, the en banc court overruled "suggestions" in Allen that either the district or appellate courts have an obligation, sua sponte, to ensure that the discretionary retention of supplemental jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c) is prudent where no one has objected and supplemental jurisdiction was proper under § 1367(a). Acri, 114 F.3d at 1001-02.

1. Novelty and complexity

[33] The defendants here seek discretionary dismissal of the state- law claims on the *1425 grounds identified in 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(1) and (2) . As to novelty, § 1367(c)(1), the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals considered whether the claim asserted merely extended the common-law torts pleaded to new defendants, and looked at whether local courts had granted the relief sought by the plaintiffs on their tort claims--injunctive relief-- and found that such relief was far from "unexceptional" for claims of the sort presented. Women Prisoners of D.C. Dep't of Corrections v. District of Columbia, 93 F.3d 910, 921-22 (D.C.Cir.1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1196, 117 S.Ct. 1552, 137 L.Ed.2d 701 (1997). The court then observed that " 'the proper function of [a] federal court is to ascertain what the state law is, not what it ought to be,' " id. at 922 (quoting Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg. Co., 313 U.S. 487, 497, 61 S.Ct. 1020, 1022, 85 L.Ed. 1477 (1941)), and further that " 'a federal court should be reluctant to retain pendent jurisdiction over a question for which state jurisprudence gives inadequate guidance.' " Id. (quoting Financial Gen. Bankshares, Inc. v. Metzger, 680 F.2d 768, 776 (D.C.Cir.1982)). These considerations, the court found, meant that deference to the district court's decision to assert supplemental jurisdiction was "not boundless," and the district court had abused its discretion in asserting supplemental jurisdiction where no local court had granted the relief sought in the context of the claims asserted. Id. at 922-23.

By way of contrast, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals found that state-law indemnification claims "involve[d] novel issues of California law," but the court nonetheless found that "the values of economy, convenience, and fairness [would be] advanced by the district court's retention of jurisdiction over the [plaintiff's] state law claims." Allen, 92 F.3d at 846. The court found that the parties had already completed two trials and the judge who had presided over those trials was therefore intimately familiar with all of the facts and rulings. Allen, 92 F.3d at 846.

In this case, the court acknowledges that there may be novel and complex issues presented by some of the plaintiff's claims, including whether some of the claims and the relief sought on those claims can be asserted against particular defendants. See Women Prisoners of D.C. Dept. of Corrections, 93 F.3d at 921-22. However, even though proceedings are not very advanced, cf. Allen, 92 F.3d at 846, because the plaintiff's claims plainly arise from a common nucleus of operative fact, but have not yet been refined or even reassessed by plaintiff's counsel in light of discovery, "the values of economy, convenience, and fairness [may be] advanced by [this] court's retention of jurisdiction over the [plaintiff's] state law claims," id., at least during a reasonable period of discovery.

2. Predomination

As to whether state-law claims "predominate" over federal claims such that denial of supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims is appropriate, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(2), the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the district court's dismissal of a state-law inverse condemnation claim even though it retained jurisdiction over several federal substantive and procedural due process claims and equal protection claims. Patel v. Penman, 103 F.3d 868, 877 (9th Cir.1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1240, 117 S.Ct. 1845, 137 L.Ed.2d 1048 (1997). The district court had noted that the state-law claim relied on the California Constitution rather than the federal constitution, involved "a lot of different evidence," "a lot of different theories," and perhaps even a different trier of fact. Id. (quoting the court below). The appellate court noted that the only federal claim actually tried was a post- closure procedural due process claim, which the court described as "a slender federal reed on which to base jurisdiction over a state-law claim as substantial as inverse condemnation." Id. [FN41]

FN41. A judge on the Eleventh Circuit

Court of Appeals, dissenting from the majority opinion, nonetheless provided useful insights on how the court is to determine whether state-law claims predominate over federal claims within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(2). The dissenting judge found that, "[b]ecause Congress did not explain explicitly how to determine when state law predominates over federal question jurisdiction where the pleadings invoke both state and federal law, 'a value judgment by the federal court' is required." In re City of Mobile, 75 F.3d 605, 613 (11th Cir.1996) (Birch, J., dissenting) (quoting Martin v. Drummond Coal Co., 756 F.Supp. 524, 527 (N.D.Ala.1991), and also citing Moore v. DeBiase, 766 F.Supp. 1311, 1319 (D.N.J.1991)).

State law predominates " '[i]f the federal court finds that the federal claim, while plausible, is not really the plaintiff's main mission; that it is only an incident or adjunct of the state claim and that the state claim is the crux of the action....' " Moore, 766 F.Supp. at 1319 (quoting 28 U.S.C.A. § 1441 Commentary (West Supp.1991)); see Burnett [v. Birmingham Bd. of Educ.], 861 F.Supp. [1036,] 1038 [(N.D.Ala.1994)].... A district court decides whether state law predominates by examining the "nature of the claims as set forth in the pleading and by determining whether the state law claims are more complex or require more judicial resources to adjudicate or are more salient in the case as a whole than the federal law claims." Moore, 766 F.Supp. at 1319 (footnote omitted). Thus, Congress accorded district courts "broad discretion" in determining whether to retain a removed case or to remand it entirely to state court. Id. (emphasis added).

In re City of Mobile, 75 F.3d at 613. Applying this test, the dissenter would have upheld the district court's refusal to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over state claims and its decision to remand the case following removal, where the matter had proceeded for two years in state court before a federal claim was added and the action was then removed to federal court. Id. at 614. The majority, however, reversed the district court's remand order, because the district court had improperly remanded the-entire case to state court, including the federal claim. Id. at 608 (majority opinion).

1426 In this case, the federal claim is no such "slender reed," id., nor, as has been suggested by the defendants, a case of the tail wagging the dog. Rather, the federal claim is clearly substantial, and clearly is really the plaintiff's main mission, not merely an incident or adjunct of the state claim. Moore v. DeBiase, 766 F.Supp. 1311, 1319 (D.N.J.1991). The court concludes, in its discretion, that it need not decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state-law claims on the ground that they predominate over the federal claim.

D. Challenges To State-Law Claims

The defendants have also moved to dismiss various of the state-law claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). The counts in question are Count 3, which asserts fraud against Hartz and against defendants Church, Diocese, and Bishop; Count 4, which asserts breach of fiduciary duty against the Diocese and Bishop; Count 10, which asserts negligent hiring, training, and supervision against defendants Church, Diocese, and Bishop; Count 11, which asserts negligent breach of duty to protect against the Church and Diocese; Count 12, which asserts premises liability against the Church; and Count 13, which asserts respondeat superior liability of the Church. Of the challenges to these state-law claims, the court concludes that it need discuss in detail only the challenge to the negligent hiring, training, and supervision claim, as it involves both nonconstitutional and constitutional grounds for dismissal.

1. Negligent hiring, training, and supervision

Count 10 of Doe's complaint is a negligent hiring, training, and supervision claim directed against defendants Church, Diocese, and Bishop. In this count, Doe alleges that the named defendants failed to provide professional help to Father Hartz, an agent or employee, known or suspected to have tendencies toward sexual abuse and exploitation, and also failed to prevent, reprimand or punish, supervise or control Father Hartz's sexually abusive behavior or to respond to previous allegations of inappropriate behavior by Father Hartz. Defendants challenge the count on two grounds. First, they allege that Iowa has only recognized the tort of negligent supervision, hiring, or retention in limited circumstances not presented here. Second, they allege that recognition of such a claim against a religious institution concerning the conduct of a member of the clergy would violate the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. The plaintiff concedes that dismissal is appropriate as to her claim of negligent hiring of Father Hartz, because she agrees that such a claim trespasses on the Church's First Amendment protection from interference by secular courts on a "canonical act." However, she asserts the viability, the First Amendment notwithstanding, for her negligent retention and supervision claims, as these matters can be decided applying neutral principles of law that do not intrude upon religious matters.

*1427 As with a challenge to a statutory cause of action, the court will begin its consideration of the defendants' challenge to this common-law cause of action by examining nonconstitutional arguments, and only if it is "unavoidable," will the court turn to constitutional challenges. Jean, 472 U.S. at 854, 105 S.Ct. at 2996-97.

a. Recognition of the tort as alleged [34] Defendants first challenge Doe's negligent retention and supervision claim on the ground that it does not fit within the narrow definition of the tort recognized by the Iowa Court of Appeals in D.R.R. v. English Enters., CATV, Div. of Gator Transp., Inc., 356 N.W.2d 580 (Iowa.Ct.App.1984). Defendants read D.R.R. to acknowledge the availability of the tort only against common carriers and innkeepers or employers with an analogous "special duty" to the injured person. See D.R.R., 356 N.W.2d at 584.

In D.R.R., the Iowa Court of Appeals considered the arguments that a plaintiff who had been raped by a cable company employee could not hold the cable company liable for the employee's conduct under a tort defined by Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213. D.R.R., 356 N.W.2d at 583. Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213 provides as follows:

> A person conducting an activity through servants or other agents is subject to liability for harm resulting from his conduct if he is negligent or reckless:
>
> a. In giving improper or ambiguous orders or in failing to make proper regulation; or
>
> b. In the employment of improper persons or instrumentalities in work involving risk of harm to others; or
>
> c. In the supervision of the activity; or
> d. In permitting, or failing to permit, negligent or other tortious conduct by persons, whether or not his agents or servants, upon premises or with instrumentalities under his control.

Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213; D.R.R., 356 N.W.2d at 583. In D.R.R., the court acknowledged decisions of other states that contained "language to similar effect," citing the following from a Michigan Supreme Court decision:

> An employer who knew or should have known of his employee's propensities and criminal record before a commission of an intentional tort by an employee upon a customer who came to employer's place of business would be liable for damages to such customer.

D.R.R., 356 N.W.2d at 583 (quoting Hersh v. Kentfield Builders, Inc., 385 Mich. 410, 412, 189 N.W.2d 286, 288 (1971)). Finding no Iowa cases directly on point, the Iowa Court of Appeals nonetheless found that "a negligent hiring cause of action does exist under Iowa law when the employer owes a special duty to the injured party." Id. (citing Nesbit v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pac. Ry., 163 Iowa 39, 143 N.W. 1114 (1913); Fagg v. Minneapolis & St. Louis Ry., 175 Iowa 459, 462, 157 N.W. 148, 148-49 (1916); Garvik v. Burlington, Cedar Rapids & Northern Ry., 131 Iowa 415, 418-19, 108 N.W. 327, 328 (1906); and Giarratano v. Weitz Co., 259 Iowa 1292, 147 N.W.2d 824 (1967)). In D.R.R., the court found that evidence, if true, that the employee who committed the tortious act had access to a master key to the victim's apartment through his employment would be sufficient to demonstrate a special duty on the part of the employer to the victim. Id. at 584. The court found that the employer before it was "analogous to the carrier because both operate pursuant to a public franchise," and the employer was also "analogous to an innkeeper because both have access to master keys to another person's living quarters." Id. The court found that summary judgment was improper on the claim in light of genuine issues of material fact as to whether the employer provided master keys to the employee and whether hiring the employee without checking his criminal background was a breach of the special duty that arose from the employer's provision of master keys. Id. Furthermore, the court held that the employee's wrongful conduct was not a superseding cause of the harm to the victim if the employment relationship was instrumental to the employee committing the crime. Id. at 585-86. Defendants contend that the church here simply is not analogous to an innkeeper or common 1428 carrier, and therefore no "special duty" exists here that would satisfy the requirements of the tort as recognized by the Iowa Court of Appeals.

Notwithstanding defendants' objections, numerous courts have recognized the tort as defined by Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213 to be applicable to a church where a victim of sexual abuse by a member of the clergy asserted a cause of action against the church. Such courts have not found a "special duty" between the church and the victim to be the impediment, but whether the church had adequate notice of the clergy member's propensity to sexual abuse. For example, in Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, 229 A.D.2d 159, 654 N.Y.S.2d 791 (N.Y.App.Div.1997), the New York court held that, although the church could not be held vicariously liable for a priest's sexual abuse of infants, the church "can still be held liable under theories of negligent hiring, negligent retention, and negligent supervision," citing Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213. Kenneth R., 654 N.Y.S.2d at 793. However, the court found that "a necessary element of such causes of action is that the employer knew or should have known of the employee's propensity for the conduct which caused the injury." Id. The court found that there were sufficient allegations in the complaint and bill of particulars to satisfy the notice requirement for purposes of a motion to dismiss. Id. at 795.

Most recently in L.L.N. v. Clauder, 209 Wis.2d 674, 563 N.W.2d 434 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that, assuming such a claim would not violate the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, a claim pursuant to Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213 would lie against a church for conduct of a chaplain, but only if the church "knew or should have known that its employee would subject a third party to an unreasonable risk of harm." L.L.N., 563 N.W.2d at 445 (citing Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213 cmt. d, and Moses v. Diocese of Colo., 863 P.2d 310, 329 (Colo.1993) (en banc), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1137, 114 S.Ct. 2153, 128 L.Ed.2d 880 (1994) , and concluding that no genuine issue of material fact had been generated that the defendants did not have such notice).

Although a church is neither a common carrier nor an innkeeper, the question under the formulation of the negligent supervision tort, as recognized in D.R.R., is not whether the employer fits in either category, nor even whether the employer has access to the victim's place of residence, but whether the party sought to be held liable "owes a special duty to the injured party." D.R.R., 356 N.W.2d at 583. That duty, as defined in authorities upon which the court in D.R.R. relied, extends to " 'licensees, invitees, or customers of the employer.' " Id. (quoting Note, The Responsibility of Employers for the Actions of Their Employees: The Negligent Hiring Theory of Liability, 53 CHI.-KENT L. REV. 717, 721 (1979), and citing Hersh, 385 Mich. at 412, 189 N.W.2d at 288 (tort cause of action is available to "a customer who came to the employer's place of business")). Thus, the "special duty" requirement is not as exclusive as defendants would have it and certainly extends to a parishioner, as an invitee upon the premises of a church, even discounting any other special relationship and duties that might arise from the intimate and personal, rather than commercial, relationship between a church and a member. Under other decisions applying the tort to religious institutions, the further question is whether the institution had notice of the propensities of a clergy member to tortious conduct. L.L.N., 563 N.W.2d at 445-46; Kenneth R., 654 N.Y.S.2d at 793. Doe has adequately alleged that the institutional defendants she seeks to hold liable on her negligent supervision claim had such notice of Father Hartz's propensity to sexual abuse of women.

Therefore, the court concludes that Iowa courts have not only recognized a tort action for negligent supervision sufficiently broad to encompass the circumstances alleged, but that the elements of such a claim are adequately alleged. Defendants' motion to dismiss the negligent supervision claim on these grounds will be denied.

i. The "entanglement" test. Defendants also contend that a tort claim of negligent 1429 retention and supervision against a religious institution arising from the conduct of a member of the clergy is barred by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. The test the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has used to determine whether prosecution of a civil tort claim against a religious institution is barred by the Religion Clauses [FN42] of the First Amendment is whether consideration of the claim would risk "excessive entanglement" of the court in a religious matter. See Roxas v. Presentation College, 90 F.3d 310, 318 n. 6 (8th Cir.1996) (finding that consideration of Title VII and ADEA claims by a priest who left his employment with a private church-affiliated college would not risk such entanglement); Drevlow v. Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, 991 F.2d 468, 472 (8th Cir.1993) ("The Synod has not offered any religious explanation for its actions which might entangle the court in a religious controversy in violation of the First Amendment."); see also Weissman v. Congregation Shaare Emeth, 38 F.3d 1038, 1042 (8th Cir.1994) (framing the question of whether application of the ADEA to a religious institution would "present a significant risk of infringement upon the First Amendment," and concluding that the ADEA posed only a minimal intrusion upon religious beliefs or practices or the essentially religious relationship between a priest and the church). [FN43] In Drevlow, the court explained, > FN42. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals has not made clear whether such claims are tested against the "establishment" clause or "free exercise" clause of the First Amendment. See, e.g., Roxas v. Presentation College, 90 F.3d 310 (8th Cir.1996) (referring to "entanglement" with religion in violation of the First Amendment, without explaining whether the entanglement is with free exercise or establishment); Weissman v. Congregation Shaare Emeth, 38 F.3d 1038, 1044 & nn. 5 & 7 (8th Cir.1994) (referring to "the Religion Clauses of the First Amendment," although citing cases referring to the free exercise clause); Drevlow v. Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, 991 F.2d 468 (8th Cir.1993) (not explaining whether the clause of the First Amendment at issue is the establishment or free exercise clause). There appears to be some uncertainty or a split in authority in other jurisdictions as to which clause of the First Amendment is implicated by a claim against religious institutions or members of the clergy. See, e.g., Isely v. Capuchin Province, 880 F.Supp. 1138 (E.D.Mich.1995) (not clarifying whether the provision of the First Amendment at issue was the establishment or free exercise clause); Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F.Supp. 321 (S.D.N.Y.1991) ("Any award of damages would have a chilling effect leading indirectly to state control over the future conduct of affairs of a religious denomination, a result violative of the text and history of the establishment clause. U.S. Const. amend. I"; emphasis added); L.L.N. v. Clauder, 209 Wis.2d 674, 563 N.W.2d 434 (1997) ("The entanglement doctrine, which prohibits excessive governmental entanglement with religion, springs from the Establishment Clause.... It is well- settled that excessive governmental entanglement with religion will occur if a court is required to interpret church law, policies, or practices; therefore, the First Amendment prohibits such an inquiry."); Swanson v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Portland, 692 A.2d 441 (Maine 1997) ("Courts, however, 'do not inhibit free exercise of religion merely by opening their doors to [civil] disputes [and] there are neutral principles of law ... which can be applied ...,' " emphasis added); Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, 229 A.D.2d 159, 654 N.Y.S.2d 791 (N.Y.App.Div.1997) (viewing the question as whether tort suits burden the free exercise of religion or violate separation of church and state); Bear Valley Church of Christ v. DeBose, 928 P.2d 1315 (Colo.1996) (en banc) (considering a priest's "free exercise" defense to tort liability); Konkle v. Henson, 672 N.E.2d 450 (Ind.Ct.App.1996) (using Lemon entanglement test, without explaining whether the question is one involving the free exercise or FN43. A considerable portion of the defendants' brief devoted to a discussion of First Amendment impediments to a negligent supervision claim addressed cases in which courts had held that discrimination claims by members of the clergy against their churches could not be sustained, and offering these cases as analogous to the present case, even though the plaintiff here is a third party. Not only does the court find cases brought by members of the clergy to be largely inapposite to cases brought by third parties against churches for injuries inflicted by members of the clergy, but the court concludes that the holdings of the cases cited by defendants are contrary to the binding precedent of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals approving such causes of action as not barred by the First Amendment. Roxas, 90 F.3d at 318 n. 6; Drevlow, 991 F.2d at 472.

It is a fundamental tenet of First Amendment jurisprudence that:

the First and Fourteenth Amendments permit hierarchical religious organizations to establish their own rules and regulations for internal discipline and government, and to create tribunals for adjudicating disputes over these matters. 1430 When this choice is exercised and ecclesiastical tribunals are created to decide disputes over the government and direction of subordinate bodies, the Constitution requires that civil courts accept their decisions as binding upon them.

Serbian Eastern Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevich, 426 U.S. 696, 724-25, 96 S.Ct. 2372, 2387-88, 49 L.Ed.2d 151 (1976). The Constitution forbids secular courts from deciding whether religious doctrine or ecclesiastical law supports a particular decision made by church authorities. Scharon v. St. Luke's Episcopal Presbyterian Hosps., 929 F.2d 360, 363 (8th Cir.1991).

The First Amendment proscribes intervention by secular courts into many employment decisions made by religious organizations based on religious doctrine or beliefs. Personnel decisions are protected from civil court interference where review by civil courts would require the courts to interpret and apply religious doctrine or ecclesiastical law. [Citing cases omitted here.] The First Amendment does not shield employment decisions made by religious organizations from civil court review, however, where the employment decisions do not implicate religious beliefs, procedures, or law. Drevlow, 991 F.2d at 470-71 (footnote omitted).

In Drevlow, the court concluded that it was unable, at the motion to dismiss stage of the proceedings, "to predict that the evidence offered at trial will definitely involve the district court in an impermissible inquiry into the Synod's bylaws or religious beliefs" to decide the plaintiff's claims of libel, negligence, and intentional interference with his legitimate expectancy of employment arising from placement of false information in his personal file. Id. at 471. The court therefore reversed the district court's dismissal of the complaint and remanded for further proceedings. Id. at 472. However, the court cautioned that, "if further proceedings reveal that this matter cannot be resolved without interpreting religious procedures or beliefs, the district court should reconsider the Synod's motion to dismiss." Id.

ii. Federal decisions. Surprisingly few federal courts have considered the question of a First Amendment bar to a negligent hiring and retention claim brought against a church institution arising from wrongful conduct of a member of the clergy. One such decision is that of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan in Isely v. Capuchin Province, 880 F.Supp. 1138, 1151 (E.D.Mich.1995). Applying the "excessive entanglement" test, the court found that claims based on a "negligent hiring" theory could not be sustained, as such claims would involve an inquiry into who should be permitted to become or remain a priest and such an inquiry would in turn necessarily involve the court in interpretation of church canons and internal church policies and practices. Isely, 880 F.Supp. at 1150-51. The plaintiff here has conceded as much, and this court need not consider further the negligent hiring portion of her claim.

However, the court in Isely found that, unlike hiring decisions, supervisory decisions could be examined in light of neutral principles of law without determining questions of church law and policies. Id. at 1151. The court concluded that "no First Amendment issues are implicated which would mandate dismissal of the negligent supervision claims." Id. (but finding that the Wisconsin Supreme Court had not recognized the tort of negligent supervision, and therefore dismissing such claims). [FN44]

> FN44. However sound the reasoning of the court in Isely on the First Amendment issue, this court believes that the issues of recognition and constitutionality of the claims should be addressed in that order, and that the court should only reach the constitutionality of such a claim if it is recognized under state law and adequately pleaded. Cf. Jean, 472 U.S. at 854, 105 S.Ct. at 2996-97 (directing courts to examine nonconstitutional questions before constitutional questions, and to reach the constitutional questions only if it is "unavoidable").

The United States District Court for the Southern District of New York reached the opposite conclusion in Schmidt v. Bishop, 779 F.Supp. 321 (S.D.N.Y.1991). The court first concluded that negligent supervision and retention claims, as well as negligent hiring claims, against a church for the conduct of a *1431 pastor were time-barred. Schmidt, 779 F.Supp. at 332. In the alternative, the court found that "any inquiry into the policies and practices of the Church Defendants in hiring or supervising their clergy raises ... First Amendment problems of entanglement ..., which might involve the Court in making sensitive judgments about the propriety of the Church Defendants' supervision in light of their religious beliefs." Id. The court observed that a pastor of the Presbyterian Church "is not analogous to a common law employee," because he may not be removed without action by the presbytery "functioning essentially as an ecclesiastical court." Id. Because the ecclesiastical tribunals were more learned in ecclesiastical law than the federal courts, the court determined that it would be > inappropriate and unconstitutional for this Court to determine after the fact that the ecclesiastical authorities negligently supervised or retained the defendant Bishop Any award of damages would have a chilling effect leading indirectly to state control over the future conduct of affairs of a religious denomination, a result violative of the text and history of the establishment clause. U.S. Const. amend. I.

Schmidt, 779 F.Supp. at 332.

[35] Thus, on the one hand, the federal district court in Isely upheld the negligent supervision claim over First Amendment objections, because only application of "neutral" principles of law, rather than examination of church doctrine or policies, was required, and hence "no First Amendment issues are implicated which would mandate dismissal of the negligent supervision claims." Isely, 880 F.Supp. at 1151. However, for the federal district court in Schmidt, the mere possibility that the inquiry "might involve the Court in making sensitive judgments about the propriety of the Church Defendants' supervision in light of their religious beliefs" was sufficient to dismiss a negligent supervision claim on First Amendment grounds, at least where an ecclesiastic tribunal or something analogous to it was perceived to be required to make decisions to remove a cleric. Schmidt, 779 F.Supp. at 332. This court concludes that the court in Isely was nearer the mark, because, while who may become or remain a priest must, almost inevitably involve an inquiry into church doctrine or policies, barring a negligent hiring or retention claim on First Amendment grounds, negligent supervision can probably be determined applying only neutral principles of law and an inquiry that does not intrude upon church doctrine or policy. Isely, 880 F.Supp. at 1150-51.

In addition, however, this court has the further guidance of the decision of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals in Drevlow. That decision would suggest that dismissal is inappropriate, on the record at the Rule 12(b) stage of the proceedings, because the court is unable "to predict that the evidence offered at trial will definitely involve the district court in an impermissible inquiry into the [church's] religious beliefs." Drevlow, 991 F.2d at 471 (emphasis added). This court would add that it might be possible for a showing of excessive entanglement to be made at the summary judgment stage of the proceedings, but the court cannot say that such entanglement is definitely involved upon the pleadings.

decisions also reflect a split in authority on whether negligent supervision claims against churches, arising from tortious conduct of members of the clergy, can be sustained on First Amendment grounds. Compare, e.g., L.L.N. v. Clauder, 209 Wis.2d 674, 563 N.W.2d 434 (1997) (on a motion for summary judgment, the court concluded that undisputed facts established that a negligent supervision claim, arising from improper sexual relations between a hospital chaplain and a patient, necessarily required examination of church law, policies, and practices, including the vow of celibacy and whether a person with notice of a truant priest's conduct was an agent of the church, and thus such a claim was barred by the First Amendment, reaffirming Pritzlaff v. Archdiocese of Milwaukee, 194 Wis.2d 302, 533 N.W.2d 780 (1995)); Swanson v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Portland, 692 A.2d 441 (Maine 1997) (in a case in which the superior court had granted a motion to dismiss as to negligent selection and training claims against a church arising from a priest's sexual relations with a woman who 1432 came to him for marriage counseling, the supreme court held that the negligent supervision claim must also be dismissed as barred by the First Amendment); with, e.g., Kenneth R. v. Roman Catholic Diocese of Brooklyn, 229 A.D.2d 159, 654 N.Y.S.2d 791 (N.Y.App.Div.1997) (on a motion to dismiss claims arising from a priest's alleged sexual abuse of infants, negligent supervision and retention claims were not barred by the First Amendment, but negligent hiring claim was properly dismissed); Bear Valley Church of Christ v. DeBose, 928 P.2d 1315 (Colo.1996) (en banc) (after trial on the merits of claims brought on behalf of a child alleging improper touching by a minister during counseling sessions, the court sustained verdicts in favor of the child against the church, holding that courts may review an injured third party's claim that a religious institution negligently hired, supervised, or failed to discharge one of its employees without implicating or running afoul of the First Amendment, and citing in support Van Osdol v. Vogt, 908 P.2d 1122 (Colo.1996), and Moses v. Diocese of Colo., 863 P.2d 310 (Colo.1993) (en banc), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1137, 114 S.Ct. 2153, 128 L.Ed.2d 880 (1994)), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1248, 117 S.Ct. 1862, 137 L.Ed.2d 1062 (1997); Doe v. Dorsey, 683 So.2d 614 (Fla.Dist.Ct.App.1996) (affirming dismissal as time-barred a claim of negligent hiring and supervision based on sexual molestation of an altar boy by a priest, but observing in dicta that the First Amendment would not protect a church from negligent supervision claims based on criminal conduct); Konkle v. Henson, 672 N.E.2d 450 (Ind.Ct.App.1996) (First Amendment did not bar claims for negligent hiring and retention based on minister's sexual molestation of plaintiff, and therefore grant of church's summary judgment motion was reversed).
