Our Position Statement

Jehovah's Witnesses abhor child abuse, a crime that sadly occurs in all sectors of society. The safety of our children is of the utmost importance. For decades, our journals The Watchtower and Awake!, as well as our website jw.org, have featured articles for both Jehovah's Witnesses and the general public on how to protect children from abuse.

These articles include:

- "Jehovah's Witnesses Educate Parents and Children to Protect Against Sexual Predators", jw.org, posted September 2014;
- "A Danger That Concerns Every Parent", "How to Protect Your Children" and "Make Your Family a Safe Haven", Awake! of October 2007;
- "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked", The Watchtower of January 1, 1997;
- "Your Child Is in Danger!", "How Can We Protect Our Children?" and "Prevention in the Home", Awake! of October 8, 1993; and
- "Child Molesting—Every Mother's Nightmare", Awake! of January 22, 1985.

Jehovah's Witnesses do not separate children from their parents. We do not have any programs, such as Sunday Schools, youth groups or day care centres, in which we take custody of children from their parents. We believe that loving and protective parents are the best deterrent to child abuse. Thus, we continue to educate parents and provide them with valuable tools to help them educate and protect their children.—Deuteronomy 6:6, 7.

We have no paid clergy. Congregation elders comply with mandatory reporting laws. (Romans 13:1) They provide abuse victims and their families with spiritual comfort from the Bible. (Isaiah 32:2; 1 Thessalonians 5:14) The victim and his or her parents have the absolute right to report the matter to the governmental authorities. (Galatians 6:5) Congregation elders do not shield abusers from the authorities or from the consequences of their actions. (Galatians 6:7) Anyone who commits the sin of child abuse faces expulsion from the congregation. If such a person is serving in a position of responsibility, he is removed. Any suggestion that Jehovah's Witnesses cover up child abuse is absolutely false.

We are committed to doing all we can to prevent child sexual abuse and to provide spiritual comfort to any who have suffered from this terrible sin and crime.

Jehovah's Witnesses – Background

Jehovah's Witnesses are a Christian religion with 8,201,545 active members in 115,416 congregations in 239 lands. In 2014, a total of 19,950,019 attended the annual religious event commemorating the Memorial of Christ's Death. The 'Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses' is based in the United States and provides ecclesiastical guidance of our worship. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania is a legal entity used in the United States. Branch offices have been established around the world to assist in organising our worship which includes our well-known public ministry, the distribution of Bibles and Bible-based publications to members of the faith (equivalent to parishioners) and to the general public, and to provide assistance to congregations.

As stated on our website, Jehovah's Witnesses:

> [C]ome from hundreds of ethnic and language backgrounds, yet we are united by common goals. Above all, we want to honor Jehovah, the God of the Bible and the Creator of all things. We do our best to imitate Jesus Christ and are proud to be called Christians. Each of us regularly spends time helping people learn about the Bible and God's Kingdom. Because we witness, or talk, about Jehovah God and his Kingdom, we are known as Jehovah's Witnesses.—http://www.jw.org/en/

Jehovah's Witnesses, although imperfect, take living in accordance with Bible principles extremely seriously and are known worldwide as law-abiding citizens. We actively promote respect for human rights and the care and protection of children.

Jehovah's Witness parents have the responsibility to train, educate, counsel, care and protect their children. Consequently, there are no activities or events which separate children from their parents.

Our beliefs are widely published and distributed to all, without charge, in printed form and through the extensive information made publicly available on the jw.org website. The Watchtower magazine currently has a worldwide distribution of nearly 53 million copies in 228 languages and the Awake! magazine, 51 million copies in 101 languages, making these two journals the most widely distributed periodicals in the world. In addition, millions of people worldwide access these and other publications each month by visiting the jw.org website.

Jehovah's Witnesses – In Australia

Jehovah's Witnesses have been active in Australia since 1896, with a branch office first established here in 1904. There are presently 817 congregations in Australia with over 68,000 parishioners. In 2014, over 118,000 were in attendance at our annual religious event to commemorate the Memorial of Christ's Death. As with our publications, all congregation meetings and assemblies are open to the general public.

The translation, production and distribution of Christian publications throughout the Australasia region is facilitated by Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia (ABN 42 002 861 225). This is the entity used to transmit our Bible-based guidance to congregations throughout the country. Each congregation in Australia is registered with the Australian Charities and Not-for-Profits Commission.

Oversight of Congregations

Elders (equivalent to pastors) and ministerial servants (equivalent to deacons) care for various responsibilities within congregations. The majority of elders are themselves parents and maintain secular employment to support their families. Our congregation structure does not involve a salaried clergy and as such, our organization has no employees. Therefore, we have no contractual arrangement that enables us to direct such persons to move from one congregation to another.

In addition to their teaching role, elders have the responsibility to provide spiritual support and pastoral care to members of the congregation. On the other hand, a ministerial servant's role in the congregation is predominately an administrative support function, such as congregation accounting and maintaining the meeting place known as a 'Kingdom Hall'.

For various periods of time over the past 10 years, 16,505 different individuals have served as elders and ministerial servants throughout Australia, although a large number have discontinued due to secular commitments, health, family, age, or are deceased. Currently, there are 6,978 elders and 4,693 ministerial servants in Australia.

Jehovah's Witnesses – Our View of Child Sexual Abuse

Child abuse is abhorrent to us and we do not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of their sin. Sexual abuse of children is both a terrible sin and a crime. This is in harmony with the Bible principle recorded at Romans 12:9: "Abhor what is wicked."

Additionally, at Romans 13:1 we are commanded to: "Let every person be in subjection to the superior [governmental] authorities." Consequently, we do not shield any perpetrator of child sexual abuse from the consequences, both spiritual and legal, of their offences.

For over 30 years our Bible-based policy on child sexual abuse has been available to the public. In situations where the abuse of a child is suspected, the Awake!, January 22, 1985, page 8, made it clear what is required:

> First, the child—and other children too—must be protected from any further abuse. This must be done, whatever the cost. In many cases the accused molester will have to be confronted. But whatever it takes, it is important that the child should feel confident that the molester will never be able to get at her (or him) again.
> Second, the child must be given a lot of love and emotional support. Parents must make it very clear that the little victim is not to blame. The crime and anything that happens as a result of it—even if a close relative goes to prison—is not her (or his) fault. But that reassurance will have to be given many times, so that the victim comes to believe it—and to believe that the parents believe it too!

This Bible-based policy has been restated in our publications over many decades. For instance, The Watchtower, January 1, 1997, page 29, stated that:

> Depending on the law of the land where he lives, the molester may well have to serve a prison term or face other sanctions from the State. The congregation will not protect him from this.
> A dedicated adult Christian who falls into the sin of child sexual abuse reveals an unnatural fleshly weakness.

Our religious beliefs and practices are epitomised in a letter to all bodies of elders dated October 1, 2012, Re: Child Abuse (Policy Letter) page 3, paragraph 9, which provides that:

> As spiritual shepherds, elders should continue to make every effort to protect all in the congregation, especially children from the unwholesome practices of the world. (Isa 32:1,2) One of these is child sexual abuse. We abhor the sexual abuse of children and will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of his gross sin. (Rom 12:9)

Therefore, given the extremely high importance we place on addressing child sexual abuse and protecting children, elders are instructed to conduct a spiritual investigation of each and every accusation of child abuse against a congregation member to determine whether the accused should be expelled from the congregation as an unrepentant child molester. (1 Corinthians 5:11-13) If the elders determine that a congregation member who committed child sexual abuse is genuinely repentant for his sin (Acts 3:19; 26:20), the genuinely repentant sinner will be allowed to remain a member of the congregation. However, the elders will monitor the repentant sinner's conduct to protect children and the sinner will be disqualified from serving in any position of responsibility in any congregation.

Ongoing Program of Worship and Education

Our Activities Do Not Separate Parents from Children

Jehovah's Witnesses do not separate children from their parents. We do not have any programs, such as Sunday Schools, youth groups, or day care centres, in which we take custody of children from their parents. We believe that loving and protective parents are the best deterrent to child abuse. Thus, we continue to educate parents and provide them with valuable tools to help them educate and protect their children. This is in harmony with Scriptural principles at Deuteronomy 6:6, 7 and Ephesians 6:4.

Program of Parental and Child Education

For decades, The Watchtower and Awake! journals and other Bible-based publications have featured articles designed to educate both Jehovah's Witnesses and the general public on how to protect children from sexual abuse and to be alert to any inappropriate behavior. In recent years, our jw.org website has also made such resources accessible to a wider audience (see for example, http://www.jw.org/en/search/?q=child+abuse). These resources include advice for parents on how to initiate an age-appropriate conversation with each child concerning what to do if confronted by any inappropriate behaviour. We believe that parental education of children about sex and the dangers of child sexual abuse in this way can be a major factor in helping to prevent child sexual abuse. Child-safeguarding experts whom we have consulted, agree that in a religious organisation that does not sponsor programs that separate children from their parents, the best way to safeguard children is to educate parents on how they can protect their children from becoming a victim of child sexual abuse.

Regular Study Program

The information published by Jehovah's Witnesses also forms the basis for information considered at our weekly congregation meetings, in either a lecture format or through an audience discussion. Larger conventions held three times each year provide education for families through Bible-based lectures, video presentations, re-enactments and interviews. As part of their weekly routine of worship, each family schedules a Family Worship Evening, to consider resources relevant to their situation.

Training of Elders and Ministerial Servants

Each congregation is visited for review by an experienced travelling elder known as a 'circuit overseer', who is a representative of the organisation. Twice each year, he visits approximately 20 congregations in his circuit for a period of a week at a time. His role is to provide pastoral encouragement to the congregations. During each visit he also meets with the elders to review our Scriptural doctrine and the application of Bible principles to ensure each congregation is complying with any theocratic direction given, including that related to child protection.

Periodic one-day programs are also held for all congregation elders. For example, following the release of Shepherd The Flock of God (Elders' Handbook) in 2010, 'Kingdom Ministry Schools' as they are known, were scheduled for all congregation elders to review and discuss the contents of the Elders' Handbook and the implementation of its Bible-based procedures. In 2013, a further series of Kingdom Ministry Schools were conducted for all elders, which reviewed the theocratic direction outlined in our Policy Letter and other publicly available Bible-based publications. The outlines of these schools relevant to our policy on child sexual abuse are included as part of our Submission Documents.

Appointment and Screening Process for Elders and Ministerial Servants

Congregation elders and ministerial servants are volunteers who have been actively associated with a congregation for a period of time before appointment, usually several years or more. Ministerial servants are chosen from among Scripturally qualified congregation members. After a ministerial servant has served effectively in assisting the elders for some time, he may be recommended to serve as an elder.

Any appointment of an elder or ministerial servant occurs after a person meets the qualifying Scriptural criteria as recorded at 1 Timothy 3:1-13, Titus 1:5-9, 1 Peter 5:2 and James 3:17, 18. For example, a fundamental requirement is:

> [H]e should also have a fine testimony from outsiders so that he does not fall into reproach . . . Also, let these be tested as to fitness first; then let them serve as ministers, as they are free from accusation . . . For the men who minister in a fine manner are acquiring for themselves a fine standing and great freeness of speech in the faith.—1 Timothy 3:7-13.

These Scriptural qualifications are explained in detail in the Jehovah's Witnesses' Handbook, Organized to Do Jehovah's Will (Chapters 5 & 6), an article entitled "Are You Qualified to Serve?", The Watchtower, September 1, 1990, and the Elders' Handbook (Chapter 3, paragraphs 1-10). Moreover, the current process to appoint elders and ministerial servants is outlined in the letter to all bodies of elders dated July 13, 2014 Re: Appointment and Deletion of Elders and Ministerial Servants.

In each instance, before making a recommendation for appointment, the local body of elders carefully reviews the above-mentioned references. The recommendation is forwarded to the circuit overseer who contacts the branch office to determine whether there is a record of child sexual abuse in the past. If not, at the circuit overseer's next scheduled visit to the congregation, he would chair a meeting of the body of elders to process the appointment.

If the decision is unanimous in the affirmative, the circuit overseer and another elder meet with the individual and ask the following questions:

- "Is there anything from your past, even before baptism, or in your personal or family life that disqualifies you or that would prevent you from accepting this appointment?
- Is there any reason why your appointment should not be announced to the congregation?
- Have you ever been involved at any time in the past with child molestation?"

(Please refer to the Letter to all bodies of elders dated July 13, 2014, Re: Appointments and Deletions of Elders and Ministerial Servants, paragraph 4.)

Working With Children Checks

The footnote on page two of the July 13, 2014 letter states that: "In the states or territory of Australia where an appointed brother is required to obtain a Working With Children Check (WWCC), the announcement will be held in abeyance until he provides a WWCC number/notification to the coordinator of the body of elders." Once all the requirements of the WWCC have been met, the body of elders notifies the branch office and then the announcement is made. (Please refer to our Submission Documents.)

Removal of Elders and Ministerial Servants

If an elder or ministerial servant is found to no longer Scripturally qualify because of an issue relating to child sexual abuse, the matter is immediately referred to the circuit overseer. The circuit overseer advises the congregation and the branch office of the deletion, and the deletion is then announced to the congregation. (Letter to all bodies of elders dated July 13, 2014, Re: Appointments and Deletions of Elders and Ministerial Servants, paragraphs 10-12.)

Our Child Protection Policy

Our approach to child protection is outlined in the Policy Letter and in the Elders' Handbook, which are made available to every elder. However, additional information in support of our theocratic policy is made available to congregation members and the general public through The Watchtower and Awake! journals and other publications.

Concerning the protection of children from sexual predators, our Policy Letter at paragraph 9 clearly states that:

> We abhor the sexual abuse of children and will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of his gross sin. (Rom 12:9) Elders should take seriously their responsibility in this matter so that the congregation will be safeguarded from any valid accusation of neglect in protecting children from sexual abuse.

While our Bible-based religious beliefs and practices remain unchanged, our procedures for child protection have continued to be refined. Over the years, as we have noted areas where our procedures could be strengthened, we have followed through in making necessary changes. This is a continual process to ensure that we have a strong, Scripturally-based policy that protects children and complies with the law.

Our Policy Letter addresses both the legal and the congregational issues regarding any accusation of child sexual abuse. As a religious organisation, we are only authorised to address these matters in accord with Scriptural direction when dealing with them internally. Therefore, dealing with allegations of child sexual abuse spiritually in no way precludes any other options for redress a survivor or their parent/guardian may choose to pursue.

How We Address Accusations of Child Sexual Abuse

In our Policy Letter, elders are given a clear, unambiguous definition of what constitutes child sexual abuse. Paragraph 3 of the Policy Letter states:

> Child sexual abuse generally includes sexual intercourse with a minor; oral or anal sex with a minor; fondling the genitals, breasts, or buttocks of a minor; voyeurism of a minor; indecent exposure to a minor; soliciting a minor for sexual conduct; or any kind of involvement with child pornography. Depending on the circumstances of the case, it may also include "sexting" with a minor. "Sexting" describes the sending of nude photos, seminude photos, or sexually explicit text messages electronically, such as by phone.

In any circumstances, where the elders learn that the victim remains in danger of further abuse, the elders are reminded that, "First, the child—and other children too—must be protected from any further abuse. This must be done, whatever the cost." —Awake!, January 22, 1985, page 8.

Concerning reporting of child abuse to the authorities, we believe that a victim or parent/guardian has the absolute right to do so. Thus, our elders have been given clear instruction in this regard in chapter 12 of the Elders' Handbook, page 131, paragraph 19, which states:

> Child abuse is a crime. Never suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or other authorities. If you are asked, make it clear that whether to report the matter to the authorities or not is a personal decision for each individual to make and that there are no congregation sanctions for either decision. Elders will not criticize anyone who reports such an allegation to the authorities. If the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so. —Gal[atians]. 6:5.

Congregation members are well aware of their absolute right to report child abuse to the authorities. For example, The Watchtower, August 1, 2005, page 14, stated:

> In our time, rape is also a major crime with severe penalties. The victim has every right to report the matter to the police. In this way the proper authorities can punish the offender. And if the victim is a minor, the parents may want to initiate these actions.

Also, the Awake! of October 8, 1993, in the Teaching Box at page 9, "If Your Child Is Abused," states:

> Some legal experts advise reporting the abuse to the authorities as soon as possible. In some lands the legal system may require this.

Further, paragraph 10 of the Policy Letter states:

> Regardless of whether the law requires the elders to report an accusation to the authorities, steps need to be taken to protect children.

As an organisation, we direct our elders to comply with legislation regarding mandatory reporting by clergy of allegations of child sexual abuse.

Contacting the Legal Department

Elders are directed to immediately contact the Legal Department when an allegation of child sexual abuse comes to their attention. Paragraph 4 of our Policy Letter states:

> . . . when elders learn of an accusation of child abuse, two elders from their congregation should immediately call the Legal Department for legal advice.

State and Territory mandatory reporting laws differ and are subject to change over time. Our elders may not be able to keep up-to-date with all of the developments in these laws. Therefore, elders are specifically instructed, upon hearing of any accusation, and before addressing the allegations with the alleged perpetrator, to contact the Legal Department.

The purpose of this direction is two-fold:

1. To ensure that congregation elders are fully apprised of and comply with the relevant and up-to-date reporting obligations applicable in the State or Territory in which they reside; and
2. Even in the absence of a mandatory reporting obligation, to ensure that elders convey to the victim (and/or their parent/guardian) that they have an absolute right to report the matter to the police and that elders should provide whatever support is needed in each instance.

We have instructed our Legal Department to specifically direct all elders who contact us that they are to advise the victim (and/or their parent/guardian) that they are completely free to report the matter to the police or other appropriate authority. Further, the Legal Department is instructed to then refer the call to the Service Department, which will provide Scriptural direction to the elders on how they can spiritually comfort and support the victim and his or her family. Elders are also reminded on how to handle the matter in harmony with Bible principles.

Elders Serve as Spiritual Shepherds of the Flock

Congregation elders are encouraged by the Bible to "Shepherd the flock of God in their care." (1 Peter 5:2) This means that each elder would serve as a spiritual protection for members of the congregation or to " . . . be like a hiding place from the wind, A place of concealment from the rain storm." (Isaiah 32:2) Likewise, the elders serve as a source of spiritual refreshment and encouragement as they "speak consolingly to those who are depressed, [and] support the weak." (1 Thessalonians 5:14) This protective concern for each member of the congregation would especially extend to the protection of children from any type of sexual abuse.

Our Policy Letter dated October 1, 2012, paragraph 9 puts it this way:

> As spiritual shepherds, elders should continue to make every effort to protect all in the congregation, especially children, from the unwholesome practices of the world. (Isa. 32:1, 2) One of these is child sexual abuse. We abhor the sexual abuse of children and will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of his gross sin. (Rom. 12:9) Elders should take seriously their responsibility in this matter so that the congregations will be safeguarded from any valid accusation of neglect in protecting children from sexual abuse.

Thus, when an allegation is made against a congregation member of the sin of child sexual abuse or any other gross violation of God's law comes to the attention of the body of elders, they are instructed to conduct a spiritual investigation according to Bible guidelines. To do so, they select two elders to look into the allegation. The two elders, with the consent of the parent(s)/guardian, would talk to the victim with the parent(s)/guardian present. If the victim is a very young minor, the two elders would talk just with the parent(s)/guardian alone, to ascertain the exact nature of the allegation. The elders would also privately talk to the alleged offender, without the victim being present. The elders would ask the accused questions about the allegations, and if necessary, seek information from any other witnesses.

If sufficient evidence is discovered by the two elders that establishes, under the rules of evidence set out in the Bible (as discussed under the next sub-heading), that the sin has been committed, the two elders make a verbal report to the body of elders. A decision is then made to form what Jehovah's Witnesses call a 'judicial committee'. The elders would contact the circuit overseer to designate an experienced elder from the circuit to serve as chairman of the committee. Two or more elders from the congregation would also be appointed to serve on this committee.

A judicial committee is a special shepherding arrangement to determine if the individual accused is guilty of a violation of God's law and also to determine whether or not he is repentant. If the offender is unrepentant he will be 'disfellowshipped' (equivalent to being excommunicated) from the congregation. Following a disfellowshipping, an announcement of the decision is made to the congregation informing them that the perpetrator is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses. A disfellowshipped person will be treated by all Jehovah's Witnesses in harmony with the admonition of the Apostle John: ". . . do not receive him into your homes or say a greeting to him." (2 John 10) Thus, in the case of child sexual abuse, disfellowshipping is clearly a strong measure toward protecting children.

Even if a sinner is determined by the judicial committee to be genuinely repentant, the committee will follow the Scriptural injunction to "Reprove before all onlookers those who practice sin, as a warning to the rest." (1 Timothy 5:20) This includes an announcement made to the congregation that the sinner "has been reproved". A few weeks after an announcement of reproof is made, a warning lecture about the wrongness of the conduct and how to avoid it will generally be presented to the entire congregation. In cases of child sexual abuse, this will serve as a warning to help parents protect their children from any potential danger. Therefore, whether the judicial committee disfellowships or reproves, congregation members are aided in their ability to protect children from child sexual abuse should a congregation member commit this sin.

Allegations for Which Scriptural Proof is Insufficient

As in the case of rules of evidence in any secular legal system, congregations also have rules of evidence. These are set out in the Bible. Bible standards require clear evidence for the elders to judge an errant one guilty of serious sin. That evidence may be in the form of an admission, the testimony of two or more witnesses, or compelling circumstantial evidence testified to by at least two witnesses.

The Policy Letter states this on page 3, paragraph 11:

> However, in evaluating the evidence for internal congregational purposes, they must bear in mind the Bible's clear direction: "No single witness should rise up against a man respecting any error or any sin . . . At the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deut. 19:15) This requirement to consider testimony of two or three witnesses was confirmed by Jesus. (Matt. 18:16 ["On the testimony of two or three witnesses every matter may be established."]) Thus, although they investigate every > allegation, the elders are not authorized by the Scriptures to take congregational action unless there is a confession or there are two credible witnesses. . . . [However,] if two persons are witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, their testimony can be deemed sufficient to take judicial action. (1 Tim. 5:19, 24, 25)

When the rules of evidence of the Bible do not authorise the elders to take further judicial action and the matter has to be held in abeyance, our Policy Letter further directs that "the elders should remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused".

How We Assist Survivors of Child Sexual Abuse

As well as supporting the efforts of parents/guardians in protecting their children, congregation elders are encouraged to be supportive of child and adult survivors of abuse. Ancillary to any mental health care or professional therapy that a survivor may seek, local congregation elders will provide spiritual comfort and pastoral care from the Scriptures. For example, elders are encouraged to "Speak consolingly to those who are depressed." (1 Thessalonians 5:14) Elders also need to be good listeners and to use the Bible to "Be quick to listen, slow to speak."—James 1:19.

Spiritual comfort provided by elders to a survivor is not viewed as a substitute for professional therapy or legal redress. Elders focus on reassuring the survivor that he or she is the innocent victim, that they are loved by God, and that they have the care and full support of the elders and the congregation.

As expressed in the Awake!, January 22, 1985, page 8:

> [T]he child must be given a lot of love and emotional support. Parents must make it very clear that the little victim is not to blame. The crime and anything that happens as a result of it—even if a close relative goes to prison—is not her (or his) fault. But that reassurance will have to be given many times, so that the victim comes to believe it—and to believe that the parents believe it too!

Extensive material is published by Jehovah's Witnesses to assist elders and members of the congregation on how best to provide such spiritual support.

Re: BCH

Dear Brothers:

We received the attached letter dated November 26, from BCH concerning a plea for reinstatement. As you are aware, the allegations of child abuse against BCH by his daughters have been clearly documented and explained to him in the past.

Therefore, as previously advised, "Regardless of the time elapsed, there would be no need to consider BCH 's claims of repentance while he continues to deny clearly established offenses. Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offenses, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he is repentant. In view of this, and in harmony with the ks10 elder's textbook, on page 118, two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform him."—See our letters to Kalamunda dated January 31, 2014, December 27, 2013, and February 12, 2013.

Before meeting with him, if we can be of assistance, please have two elders contact our Service Department to discuss the matter. However, rather than informing him that the branch office is responsible for the matter, we commend you for supporting the decision made by the original judicial committee, regardless of how BCH now chooses to recall events.

We take this opportunity to send our warmest Christian love and best wishes.

The Body of Elders
Kalamunda - Perth WA

Re: BCH

Dear Brothers:

After receiving correspondence dated January 20 from the committee handling REDACTED BCH s request for reinstatement, we are seeking the cooperation of the body of elders in carefully considering our response.

In replying to our letter of December 27, 2013, the committee writes, "Please do not think we are questioning the decision not to reinstate BCH the original committee, and the branch, obviously have 'credible evidence' that contradicts his side of the story, so your response was expected. However, as a committee we feel at a distinct disadvantage in trying to handle this case, simply because we do not have access to the 'credible evidence' to which you refer. Without knowing exactly what he is supposed to have done, we cannot tell if he is genuinely repentant of committing these offences. Obviously we are hearing only his side of the story, hence this letter: Is it possible for us to have access to the evidence you have, or even just a summary of it? This would enable us to challenge his claim that there cannot be any genuine evidence, as he did not commit any offence against his other daughters. . . . While this case is only a plea for reinstatement, if it had been an original judicial committee hearing, then (as discussed in *ks*10 7:2), the testimony of the witnesses would 'be given in the presence of the accused' or if necessary, would be 'submitted in writing and read to the accused.' Presumably this was done at the original judicial hearing, although he claims it wasn't and because we do not have any details of the evidence, we are not able to re-read the evidence to him. If it is not possible for us to be given a copy (or summary) of the evidence to read to him, would it be possible for his plea for reinstatement to be heard by the original committee, or ones who do have this evidence? This possibility has not been discussed with him, but in the past he has said he would be prepared to travel if necessary, if it is the only way to establish that he is repentant. . . . So, in summary, is it possible for us to have more details of the evidence against him or, if not, for those who do have the evidence to hear his plea for reinstatement? . . . We apologise for having to trouble you with this case again. However, it does distress us, (and the whole congregation in fact), to see someone, who for so many years has conducted himself faultlessly and appears to be totally repentant, yet is not accepted back into the congregation. We, as a committee, would also like to be convinced in our own mind that this is justified and hence our requests above."

As with the previous letters we received, the reasoning quoted above from the reinstatement committee is not in harmony with theocratic procedure. As noted in ks10 11:8, "The elders on the original committee may be aware of important factors not apparent to others, so it usually best to respect their judgement." (Italics ours) The local committee does not need to review the evidence with BCH, but simply trust their fellow elders who judged the case, and the branch office that reviewed the case. (Compare Prov. 18:17) Those who judged and reviewed the case established that the evidence of the witnesses was credible. On the other hand, your local committee is now hearing the testimony of one man, who is a self-confessed and convicted child molester with an extensive history of lying. Regardless of how convincing he may seem or how adamant his denial, the Biblical principle remains the same: "The witness of two men is true." (John 8:17; Deut. 19:15) In the same way that elders cannot judge a person guilty without proving there is a confession or two witnesses to the wrongdoing, they cannot make a judgement on the testimony of one witness—in this case BCH —to refute the credible evidence established by a judicial committee. Therefore, it is inconsistent to say he "appears to be totally repentant" while he continues to deny the proven sexual abuse of his daughters.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

To help your body of elders reason on the implications of what is being suggested by the reinstatement committee in requesting a summary of the evidence, picture a situation where a disfellowshipped person moves to a number of different congregations. The original committee may have highly confidential information and testimony from victims. Those victims are assured that their testimony will be treated with confidentiality by the elders who handled the case. Anything less would circumvent our published theocratic procedure. For example, our letter to all bodies of elders dated September 7, 2011, regarding the sealed record of a judicial case, states, "If there is a need to open these files in the future, such as in connection with a plea for reinstatement, this should be done only by the elders who are assigned by the body to handle the matter." If successive congregations were made aware of confidential evidence and victim statements, perhaps a dozen or more elders could become aware of what the victims believed was confidential between them and the original committee. As sometimes explained to outside enquirers, "Confidential shepherding makes it easier for those who seek the elders' help to do so without worrying that what they say to the elders will be divulged later."—ks10 6:18.

Finally, the suggestion that BCH travel to Queensland to meet with a judicial committee in the congregation that disfellowshipped him seems impractical while he continues to deny the offences. If, as it appears, the intention is to establish his innocence, the original committee would be obliged to conclude that, "Regardless of the time elapsed, there would be no need to consider BCH 's claims of repentance while he continues to deny clearly established offences."—See our letters to Kalamunda dated February 12, 2012, and December 27, 2013.

Brothers, as you say, the congregation may "see someone, who for so many years has conducted himself faultlessly and appears to be totally repentant, yet is not accepted back into the congregation." However, these individuals are not aware of the facts. They do not see the ongoing physical and emotional suffering of the victims of sexual abuse by BCH , or his adamant denial of what the victims know to be true. That is why, as elders, we must be firm for righteousness in defence of the innocent victims of child sexual abuse.—1 Pet. 3:12.

So they are aware of our additional comments, we have copied in the body of elders in Loganholme Congregation, Queensland, and your circuit overseer.

We are confident in your willingness to cooperate with the direction provided. Be assured, Jehovah is aware of all the factors in this difficult case and will ultimately judge. (Isa. 33:22) In the meantime, we commend your efforts to "Shepherd the flock of God under your care." (1 Pet. 5:2) We also take this opportunity to send you our warm Christian love and greetings.

Re: SD:SSG, December 27, 2013, BCH – Request for Reinstatement

Dear Brothers,

Thank you for your response to our recommendation of reinstatement of BCH.

Please do not think we are questioning the decision not to reinstate BCH – the original committee, and the Branch, obviously have "credible evidence" that contradicts his side of the story, so your response was expected. However, as a committee we feel at a distinct disadvantage in trying to handle this case, simply because we do not have access to the "credible evidence" to which you refer. Without knowing exactly what he is supposed to have done, we cannot tell if he is genuinely repentant of committing these offences. Obviously we are hearing only his side of the story, hence this letter: Is it possible for us to have access to the evidence you have, or even just a summary of it? This would enable us to challenge his claim that there cannot be any genuine evidence, as he did not commit any offence against his other daughters.

While this case is only a plea for reinstatement, if it had been an original judicial committee hearing, then, (as discussed in KS 7/2), the testimony of the witnesses would "be given in the presence of the accused" or if necessary, would be "submitted in writing and read to the accused". Presumably this was done at the original judicial hearing, although he claims it wasn't and because we do not have any details of the evidence, we are not able to 're-read the evidence' to him. If it is not possible for us to be given a copy (or summary) of the evidence to read to him, would it possible for his plea for reinstatement to be heard by the original committee, or ones who do have this evidence? This possibility has not been discussed with him, but in the past he has said he would be prepared to travel if necessary, if it is the only way to establish that he is repentant.

So, in summary, is it possible for us to have more details of the evidence against him or, if not, for those who do have the evidence to hear his plea for reinstatement?

We apologise for having to trouble you with this case again. However, it does distress us, (and the whole congregation in fact), to see someone, who for so many years has conducted himself faultlessly and appears to be totally repentant, yet is not accepted back into the congregation. We, as a committee, would also like to be convinced in our own mind that this is justified and hence our requests above.

We send our warm Christian love and thanks for your continuing support in these difficult situations.

Re: BCH – plea for reinstatement

Dear Brothers:

We received your correspondence of December 15, 2013, regarding BCH 's further request for reinstatement. Although you have assigned a new committee to "allow for a fresh look at the situation," our previous direction would still apply.

Although he continues to deny or misrepresent the offences involving two of his daughters, you explain that the "current committee has observed his conduct over several years, considered all the evidence we currently have and listened to BCH 's personal testimony and we also conclude that he is truly repentant." However, as noted in your letter, the local elders do not have access to the "credible testimony" from three of his daughters as considered by the judicial committee. In addition, this case has been carefully reviewed by the branch office. In this regard, our letter of February 23, 2013, stated in part:

> At least three of BCH s daughters have provided clear and credible testimony of sexual abuse by their father. This includes the daughter who serves as a REDACTE Her testimony is balanced and reliable, as opposed to BCH 's long-established pattern of lying to elders and judicial committees.
> In addition to the conclusions drawn by various judicial committees, his deceitfulness is well known to responsible brothers here at the branch. As the matters have been clearly established judicially, and despite his repeated requests, there is no need for the local committee to review the original case with him. Rather, as the situation remains unchanged, we can only repeat the comments from our previous letters: Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offences, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he was repentant. In view of this, and in harmony with the ks10 elders' textbook, on page 118, two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform him.
> Despite his persuasiveness and the difficulty of the situation, we again advise extreme caution in recommending the reinstatement of a child abuser who has a proven history of dishonesty. If responding to future requests, two elders could briefly remind him that the only basis for reinstatement would be genuine repentance over the sexual abuse of his daughters and the associated lying.—ks10 11:4; 7:10; Prov. 6:16-19.

In summary, and regardless of the time elapsed, there would be no need to consider RE BCH 's claims of repentance while he continues to deny clearly established offences. We trust our observations are helpful. Please accept our warmest Christian love and greetings.

Re: BCH – Request for Reinstatement

Dear Brothers,

We have recently had a further application for reinstatement from BCH. On this occasion a different committee has reviewed the case, to allow for a fresh look at the situation.

We are aware that he has applied for reinstatement a number of times previously and on at least the last three occasions, the local committee involved recommended his reinstatement.

This current committee has observed his conduct over several years, considered all the evidence we currently have and listened to BCH 's personal testimony and we also conclude that he is truly repentant. We have considered very carefully your directions in the letters of September 19, 2011 and repeated in the letter of February 12, 2013 that "At least three of BCH 's daughters have provided clear and credible testimony of sexual abuse by their father. This includes the daughter who serves as a REDACTE Her testimony is balanced and reliable, as opposed to BCH 's long established pattern of lying to elders and judicial committees."

We do not of course have access to the "credible testimony" you refer to, including that of his daughter BCK REDACTED but the testimony of his other daughters, relates to events over 30 years ago and in the case of BCK , was when she was only 2-3 years old (over 40 years ago) and before BCH was in the truth. Apart from the incident with BCG , RE BCH continues to deny any indiscretion with any of his other daughters but, even if these other events did happen, they are over 30 years ago. How long can these accusations be held against him, when he shows every evidence that he has repented a long time ago?

As we look at this man now, we can see nothing against him – everything he does indicates he is conducting himself in an irreproachable manner and commensurate with someone who has truly repented over previous sins.

Your last three responses to his requests for reinstatement (9th Nov 2010, 19th Sept 2011 and 12th Feb 2013) have all said that "Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee, his sins of child abuse and lying in connection with these offences, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he was repentant". BCH says that he has fully acknowledged these sins to Jehovah; he certainly has admitted molesting BCG to this committee and to the previous committees from this congregation also and clearly regrets everything, including any lying that happened. Yes he still consistently denies molesting any of his other daughters but we tend to believe him, as there would seem to be no point continuing to deny it, when he has admitted to the incident with BCG . His repeated requests for reinstatement indicate his obvious desire to be reinstated and he is aware that admitting to these other charges may enhance his chance of being reinstated, yet he continues to deny them. If he was to admit to these incidents now and did NOT actually do them as he claims, he would then be lying and effectively we would have forced him to do that.

We have observed his conduct over the last 3-4 years and everything he does and says indicates he is truly repentant of any sins he has committed, whether they be child molestation, lying or anything else.

We list the following as 'works that befit repentance' evident in BCH :

1. He regularly attends congregation meetings, doing so even if his wife happens to be sick.
2. He pre-studies diligently for the meetings and follows the program intently.
3. He takes his responsibilities as head of the house seriously.
4. His engagement with members of the congregation as a disfellowshipped person cannot be faulted.
5. He witnesses informally at every opportunity and has been responsible for others becoming interested in the truth.
6. He prays frequently, continually seeks forgiveness and feels that Jehovah listens to him.
7. There has been no interaction with children either inside or outside the congregation.
8. His wife has seen absolutely no evidence of him viewing pornography or seen any indiscretion on his part over the 20 or so years they have been married, whether physically, in printed matter or on the internet.
9. He does not have a complaining, justifying attitude, despite the time it is taking to prove that he is repentant and the repeated refusals of his reinstatement requests. He has obviously accepted the reproof he has received.
10. The congregation notices his exemplary conduct as a disfellowshipped person and are clearly puzzled that it is taking so long for him to be reinstated. Some have been overheard applying 2 Cor 2:5-8 to his situation and this concerns us also.

All the evidence says that anything that happened all those years ago is behind him and we cannot see anything else that he can do to prove that he is truly repentant over whatever actually happened. He admits to the incident with BCG and to any past occasions of lying and is sincerely repentant over these things. He could admit to molesting his other daughters too, just to try to get reinstated but he did that once before apparently and that resulted in the lying charges. Would we want to force him to do that again, if he was not guilty of these accusations against him?

Like the previous committee, on three occasions, this committee also have no doubt that he is truly repentant of child molestation and lying, so we request that you accept his genuine repentance and approve his plea for reinstatement.

Warm Christian love,

Your Brothers

Dear brothers,

As you are aware, I was disfellowshipped ten years ago for "carrying on a lie". (Not for any immoral activity.)

I have not turned my back on Jehovah or stopped attending meetings. I have continued to preach the good news at every opportunity available under the circumstances.

Of course it has been a testing time. Remaining faithful to Jehovah during trials is very important to me, and my wife and I was happy to have the opportunity to prove Satan a liar, but from now on I will be more vigorously pursuing reinstatement as recommended by the faithful and discreet slave.

Have I repented and left my bad course ? - Yes. I have. As you know.
Have I produced works that befit repentance ? – Yes, I attend all the meetings, had many bible studies.
Am I now, or been practising anything wrong ? - No. I have a pure heart. My wife of 20 yrs, a faithful sister bears witness to this fact.

I wrote to BCK, as suggested, asking for her support in my reinstatement plea. You have a copy of the letter. That was 5 months ago. She has not answered. She may have written to someone at the service desk in Sydney. (The letter had my return address and it did not come back to me.)

There are no other matters involved. My conscience is perfectly clear. Jehovah will judge those making false accusations.
Jehovah is merciful, kind, loving and looks for reasons to forgive and reinstate.

I do repent about "carrying on a lie" The last thing I would ever want to do, is be like the father of the lie. I make no excuses. I did a stupid thing and feel really bad that in wanting to be reinstated, to serve Jehovah, I have wronged Jehovah, the congregation and myself.

As directed by the faithful and discreet slave, can you or the service desk please outline for me what else I can do, adjust, start or stop doing, in order to be reinstated. It seems my writing to BCK has not worked. But I do appreciate the suggestion. For the sake of Jehovahs name please help me to be reinstated.

The Body of Elders
Kalamunda - Perth WA

Dear Brothers:

After considering your letter of February 2, we are pleased to comment further on REDACTED's repeated requests for reinstatement.

You wrote: "We believe from the evidence available to us and of course we are only able to access one side of the picture, that he should be considered for reinstatement. He believes that he is not able to 'repent' of the lying charge against him, for following reasons: He denies any wrongdoing with his other daughters; Believes that any previous 'admissions' were given under duress or misunderstood; Did not make a plea-bargain when suggested by his solicitor. It would seem from our evidence that some of the charges against him are questionable, as they originate with his former wife who apparently has falsified evidence before at the time of her adultery."

Despite his current and persistent claims, we can only reiterate the clear direction provided in our letter of September 19, 2011, as follows:

> At least three of BCH's daughters have provided clear and credible testimony of sexual abuse by their father. This includes the daughter who serves REDACTED Her testimony is balanced and reliable, as opposed to BCH's long-established pattern of lying to elders and judicial committees.
> In addition to the conclusions drawn by various judicial committees, his deceitfulness is well known to responsible brothers here at the branch. As the matters have been clearly established judicially, and despite his repeated requests, there is no need for the local committee to review the original case with him. Rather, as the situation remains unchanged, we can only repeat the comments from our previous letters: Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offences, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he was repentant. In view of this, and in harmony with the ks10 elders' textbook, on page 118, two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform him.
> Despite his persuasiveness and the difficulty of the situation, we again advise extreme caution in recommending the reinstatement of a child abuser who has a proven history of dishonesty. Thank you for ensuring that the judicial committee carefully reviews the above-mentioned details if considering further requests from BCH. And may Jehovah grant you the "wisdom from above" in handling such extremely serious matters. (Jas. 3:17) We take this opportunity to send you our warm Christian love and greetings.

Dear Brothers,

Please find enclosed a request by BCH for re-instatement.

We believe from the evidence available to us and of course we are only able to access one side of the picture, that he should be considered for reinstatement.

He believes that he is not able to "repent" of the lying charge against him, for following reasons;

- He denies any the wrongdoing with his other daughters.
- Believes that any previous 'admissions' were given under duress or misunderstood.
- Did not make a plea-bargain when suggested by his solicitor.

It would seem from our evidence that some of the charges against him are questionable, as they originate with his former wife who apparently has falsified evidence before at the time of her adultery.

We support what he says in his letter about his meeting attendance. BCH usually attends even when his wife is sick. He is a good example in conforming to his restrictions and faithfully attends all meetings. Due to this regularity some in the congregation are asking why he has not been reinstated. Of course the congregation is not aware of the facts of the case.

REDACTED is active in the congregation. She states that in all their 20 years of marriage he has never had inclinations for wrong doing as charged. His wife recently commented that he wishes to keep applying for reinstatement to demonstrate his desire to be a part of the congregation once again. Having spoken with him on numerous occasions and considering all the evidence available to us, having observed his diligence in conducting himself appropriately within the congregation over the last four years we feel that he definitely demonstrates works befitting repentance. On this basis we unanimously recommend his reinstatement. Of course we leave this in your hands and continue to pray for Jehovah's guidance in this matter.

Dear Brothers

17th December 2012

A. I want to make a plea for reinstatement. I love the truth, I love Jehovah. Also would like to point out that while disfellowshipped I have not faithlessly turned back or left Jehovah or his congregation. I have continued to witness about Jehovah informally at every opportunity. I still want to serve him. I have not carried on anything illicit nor have I done anything wrong but remained no part of the world. I have continued to attend all the meetings since being disfellowshipped. I have not stopped worshipping Jehovah or deviated from the path because it was incovenient or difficult. I have continued and am continuing to serve Jehovah as best as I can under the circumstances. It must be said that the strength to do so comes from Jehovah and the encouragement he provides through his organization.

B. I want to set right any matters from the past. I am willing to do whatever is necessary to come back into the congregation. Except admit to things I did not do.

C. The wrong that took place with BCG many years ago & for which I spent time in gaol, I sadly regret and apologise for my wrong.. I continued to pray for Jehovahs forgiveness after being disfellowshipped in 1989. Thankfully Jehovah is merciful and I was reinstated 20 years ago in Dec. 1992.

D. In the last ten years since I was disfellowshipped this time, it has been claimed that - I wronged other daughters, that I admitted to this, and then later denied it. And this has been used as a reason for keeping me from being reinstated. I continue to deny this because it never ever happened. If it had occurred, I would readily face up to it. It was a claim made by my ex wife to support her effort to get money from the state and she and BCG influenced the daughters to back her claim. Why would I admit to something I knew was a scheme to blackmail me?
I readily admit, the mothers financial situation was partly my fault because I was not able to always pay child support and owed her many thousands of dollars. It must be said though, I always paid child support and more, when I had work.

E. It is difficult to sort this out. I have prayed to Jehovah continually for guidance. Some of the facts are as follows.

1. It has been said I have at some time admitted to these charges and later denied them.

(a) The only time I can recall ever saying anything that could be called an admittance was when after an all night questioning, I said out of frustration, "whatever you say." I should not have said that, and I regret it.

(b)Before the trial, a plea bargain was offered by the prosecution. After prayerful consideration, I rejected it outright. Thinking of the reproach it would bring on Jehovahs name to accept it, even if there was a slim chance it would be kept out of the news if I accepted it. Then I heard that false information had been sent to the Society that the plea bargain was accepted by me, meaning an admittance. Then when the case went to trial the charges were denied. It must be remembered, the court case only concerned the one daughter as per paragraph 3 above.

(c) If this is the admittance/ denial that you are referring to, First – I dont think other daughters allegations were involved in the plea bargain. Second – at any rate there was no plea bargain acceptance or admittance. If the pre trial plea bargain/ admittance was accepted (admittance) There would have been no trial.
SO – I dont understand where you get admittance /denial. In the above scenario – it does not exist

I am sorry to have labored the point above, but my desire is to set things straight. If you would be so kind and pinpoint where you feel the admittance /denial is, that would be a great help.

2. Other kids. No charges were presented in court. Accusations were brought up briefly at the committal. They were not acted on by police or the prosecution. Please see No : 4 below. If they were true or could be substantiated, they would have been presented in court. As previously mentioned in par. D, the kids were coached by their mother to make up stories. Also I knew about this coaching before the case went to trial.

3. So why would I admit to anything that I first of all, knew to be fabricated, unsubstantiated as well as reportedly made up stories as found by a counselor ? Please see 4 below.

4. My son informed me about 2002. Before the court case
- That their mother took two of the daughters to a counsellor to try to get some verification of abuse.
-That the mother was very disappointed when the report said there was no evidence of such.
-That the mother had obviously coached them to make up stories. The prosecution no doubt interviewed the other daughters and must have found lack of credibility too. At any rate, whether they were found out to be lying or not, their stories are untrue.

5. BCK My wife RED about 23 years ago asked BCG had any thing ever happened to her. Her answer was she didnt know of anything, but would ask her mother. Her mother told her something happened when she was 3 or 4. BCG has no recollection of this and although she has repeated her mothers story, she cannot support it. It is untrue. Also I would like to point out that when BCG was 3-4 yrs old I was not even in the truth. Efforts from myself and RED to speak to BCG again have been refused because of my being disfellowshipped.

6. Credibility under scrutiny. It seems important to point out that the Mareeba elders presumed I lied right in the beginning when they disfellowshipped me in 1989. They thought I made up a story about my then wifes admission to me of adultery.

7. Evidence that I was telling the truth when separating in 1989 re : BCK 's Mother - I dont like to bring this up again. But it is necessary to prove that BCK 's mother hid the truth for years, and lied throughout this affair right from the beginning. She admitted to me that she committed adultery "No more than the fingers you can count on one hand." Her subsequent denial of those words, when questioned by the elders resulted in my being disfellowshipped in 1989, because I had left her, separating because of what she told me (The five adulteries)
I had forgiven her for one adultery already, that I found out about through work associates. She assured me it only happened once.

8. The truth emerges, but it is disregarded by the elders. A few years after I was disfellowshippd in 1989. Ron DeRooy, an elder from Mareeba Qld congregation, told me that my ex wife did finally admit to the elders that she said those exact words to me, but that "Nothing can be done about it now." I had sent him taped evidence a year or so earlier of her admitting what she said. He said he refused to listen to it. So it is proven I was telling the truth from the beginning about the reason I separated. Ron DeRooy disregarded the evidence I sent him and disregarded the proof when he heard it from her own mouth.

9. At the (congregation) appeal in 1989 other charges were added. I had a lot of trouble being reinstated because I kept trying to set things straight and be accurate about what happened and what did not happen. That the mother did indeed make that admission to me, and THAT is why I separated from her. Also tried to do the same with the other charges.

10. Present disfellowshipping. At some time since being disfellowshipped this time, somebody added the accusation as in par. 1. If you would be so kind as to let us know the identity of this accuser and who or where they got this information from, it would be a great help in getting this matter finally resolved. It may be a misunderstanding or misinterpretation on one or both sides.

11. I readily admit I had made wrong decisions. I acted rashly and impatiently and without thinking of the consequences of my actions. I sinned against Jehovah himself. Even though in his aboundant mercy he has forgiven me, it still tugs at my heart that I offended him.

12. Still, I have never turned my back on or left the table of Jehovah or his congregation. I made a dedication to Jehovah 38 years ago. I am sticking to Him. Yes, I made mistakes and spoke foolishly and this I truly regret.

13. I dont feel wronged in any way. I dont blame anyone else. If this is what Jehovah wanted, for the last ten years, I am happy to have had an opportunity to prove Satans accusations or part thereof, false. I am happy to have been disciplined. ...For whom Jehovah loves, he disciplines. I am at peace. "As humans we remember things and we will never let you live it down". As bro Sydlik said in a talk about Jehovahs loving kkindness. On the other hand Jehovah has wonderfully his mercy and loving kindness many times over. Without Jehovah and the provisions of the faithful and discreet slave he is using, I could never have kept going. Even though crippled, I will never leave him.

14. I love righteousness. When I see or experience righteousness, it makes my heart jump and I feel drawn to truly righteous ones. Because Jehovah and Jesus are the epitome of righteousness, they make my heart jump when I see their righteous loving and merciful acts. I am drawn to them and want to be like them.

15. My wife REDA who is an active sister in the congregation is happy to give a statement that in all our 20 years of marriage I have never shown any inclination to be attracted to any young girls or any other females. I am not like that and not that way inclined at all. Also that I am in no way interested in pornography or any stuff like that. I detest it.

16. The authorities in prison saw no danger from me in the direction of wrongdoing. I was appointed the Chef in the Officers mess. They released me early. I am not on the dangerous offender data base. They never wanted me to do a rehabilitation program on my release.

17. I want to continue to serve Jehovah in the way he approves, in the congregation. I want to put the past behind me. Even though I have always attend all the meetings, I have never in any way tried to influence others to take sides with me or spoken against Jehovahs organizational arrangement.

18. There is no more worthwhile work than helping people to know Jehovah and helping them to stay on the road to life. Jehovah has blessed my informal witnessing with many interested ones.
I truly regret the problems that I have caused for my family, the congregation and especially the reproach on Jehovahs name. I know I am a nobody in the congregation and that is fine. It is Jehovah and his name that matters. I accept full responsibility for my actions. I have acted foolishly. I have begged for Jehovahs forgiveness.

19. The most important thing in my life is the worship of Jehovah. Please let me know what else I need to do to be reinstated. I am happy to receive any counsel or admonition you have.

The Judicial Committee
Loganholme Congregation of
Jehovah's Witnesses—Brisbane QLD

Dear Brothers:

We are responding to your letter dated May 6, 2006, regarding a plea for reinstatement by Mr. BCH Please accept our apologies for not responding to your correspondence earlier. You mention that BCH is nearing the end of his 5 year prison sentence and that he has made an application for reinstatement into the Christian congregation.

The judicial committee in the Camira Congregation has recommended the reinstatement of BCH Their letter indicates that they understand that he was disfellowshipped for lying. BCH was disfellowshipped twice. On the first occasion, he was disfellowshipped for child abuse and lying. On the second occasion he was disfellowshipped for lying.

BCH was serving as a ministerial servant at the time of his first disfellowshipping. He appealed the decision to disfellowship and denied any wrongdoing with his daughter, BCG However, during the appeal hearing, he finally confessed to the appeal committee, in the presence of the original committee, that he had sexually molested BCG on several occasions. When he was reinstated three years later, his family suffered much grief, as he was again denying any wrongdoing. In our letter to the Body of Elders in Mareeba, dated SD:SSB July 25, 1996, we commented on the fact that he had still not apologised for the sexual, physical, and mental abuse of his daughter BCG We asked if this factor had been taken into consideration when hearing his plea for reinstatement. Our letter stated: "If Brother BCH is genuinely repentant for his wrong conduct, he ought to do what he can to assist his family members who have suffered because of his wrong actions."

BCH was disfellowshipped again in 2003. We wrote to the elders at the time about his problem with telling the truth. During the committee hearing, further information came to light. Now, two other daughters were alleging that he had sexually abused them. Mr. BCH was charged by the police for the abuse of BCG The 2003 S-77 Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation report states that when the matter went to court, he initially pleaded guilty but when the matter came to the attention of the congregation, he "changed his plea to not guilty to avoid being disfellowshipped." He again reverted to saying that his confession to abusing BCG had been made under duress.

After corresponding with the branch office, the judicial committee decided to disfellowship him on the charge of lying. The S-77 report stated that he "has continued to change his story depending on what he thinks is the most expedient at the time" and that on 3 separate occasions he denied the charges but later confessed. They wrote: "he has 3 daughters claiming he molested them and he continues to deny their claims and lies about it to the judicial committee and law courts to suit his own ends." Although the judicial committee were aware of further allegations of sexual abuse being raised by two other daughters, it appears that they did not make any statements to the elders at the time. Apparently, they received legal advice not to disclose this information as it may have prejudiced the legal case against their father. However, we do now have a written statement by BCK one of his daughters who now serves as a missionary, in which she alleges in specific detail how her father sexually abused her. We are enclosing a copy of this statement for your information.

In summary, it is our understanding that the allegations of sexual abuse made against Mr. BCH have been clearly substantiated. The allegations made by BCG have been established repeatedly by Mr. BCH confession before many witnesses. It is extremely difficult to accept the retraction of a confession where a person has established a long history of lying to suit his own ends. Even if you were to accept his retraction, there are still two witnesses who have testified against him in writing or before a judicial committee. The Bible states that "at the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deuteronomy 19:15) Jesus reaffirmed this principle at Matthew 18:16 and John 8:17, 18. The apostle Paul also referred to it at 2 Corinthians 13:1 and 1 Timothy 5:19.

Mr. BCH states in his letter requesting reinstatement that "nothing is more important to me than doing Jehovah's will" and that he is "firmly resolved to maintain a good relationship with Jehovah." Is he now willing to admit to molesting his three daughters? Does he still insist that his daughters are lying and that the elders placed undue pressure on him? Has he demonstrated works of repentance commensurate with his dishonest past? Has he apologised to the victims of his abuse and acknowledged his wrongful conduct towards them and the painful suffering they have endured? The judicial committee will need to be convinced that he has clearly demonstrated works of Godly repentance and that he is not again 'changing his story depending on what he thinks is the most expedient.'—2 Corinthians 7:10-11.

We hope that these few comments are of assistance to you and take this opportunity to convey our best wishes and warm Christian love.

Regarding Disfellowshipping of BCH

In November 2002 it came to light that BCH had pleaded guilty in a public court of law to molesting two of his daughters. He had been disfellowshipped over 10 years earlier for molesting one of his daughters, amongst other things. As a second daughter was now involved Bro.Pencheff and Bro.Hatton met with BCH to explain that we needed to deal judicially with the accusation of the second daughter. At this meeting he denied he had molested either of them. We thought this to be a lie, as prior to making his court plea he had asked Bro.Gee what he should do and was told "to just tell the truth". As a result a judicial committee was formed composing of Bro.Pencheff, Bro.Hatton and Bro.Gee was formed to handle the matter as very serious and damaging lies had been involved. It came to light from another source that a third daughter had also claimed BCH had molested her. As we investigated BCH history we found that he had been carrying on lies about these matters for many years. For example, at the appeal committee that disfellowshipped him he at first denied his daughters accusation but then confessed. At a re-instatement attempt he made he hid these facts. When they probed and the facts came to light he again denied the molestation claims. However when he realised that by denying things he was not getting anywhere, he then confessed to them he had molested one of his daughters. At that time he was not re-instated because of his deception. Now, at our judicial hearing he told us he had changed his plea of guilty to not guilty to the law court. He admitted that this was as a result of his meeting with Bro.Pencheff and Bro.Hatton where it had been explained to him that if he pleaded guilty in court and not guilty to the congregation he would be disfellowshipped . He keeps changing his story to what appears to him to be the most expedient thing at the time.
He has three daughters claiming he molested them and he denies their claims and lies about whatever happened to bring about what he thinks will be the best outcome for him at the time.
Based on Rev22:15 ("Those liking and carrying on a lie will be excluded from Gods kingdom") we had no choice but to disfellowship him.
We explained that he needs to come to grips with the truth and reconcile things to the best of his ability with his daughters in the spirit of Matt5:23,24.
He did not appeal this decision.

MEMORANDUM

To: Service Department

From: Legal — V. Toole

Date: January 23, 2003

Subject: BCH - Loganholme Congregation - Qld

The attached letter from the judicial committee handling the present case involving Brother BCH appears to indicate that they have become slightly lost with regard to the primary issue involved here which is his lying. Set out below are the facts which clearly establish that Brother BCH is either lying now or has lied in the past.

Brother BCH refused to admit to the original judicial committee in Mareeba Congregation that he molested his daughter. However, the committee made the decision to disfellowship him on other grounds. He appealed that decision and a committee made up of Brothers Jim Bennett, Donald Wilson and Joseph Maraziz handled the appeal. The original committee's decision was upheld and added further grounds to the reasons for his disfellowshipping. The appeal committee comments as follows in their report:

> "Fresh evidence under questioning of witnesses and appellant produced further more serious reasons for disfellowshipping. Namely 1. Porneia, in the form of gross sexual acts against his teenage daughter (five of six times) during the later part of last year. Under pressure of witnesses he confessed to this charge."

BCH daughters, BCG and BCL have recently reported their father to the police for sexually molesting them when they were growing up. We were advised that BCH was going to plead guilty to several of these charges. However, the brothers in Loganholme Congregation handling his case have advised that he is now going to plead not guilty to all the charges. The committee comments: "He still maintained that he has never molested any of this daughters. He claimed that he admitted to molesting his daughter BCG under duress but that it was not true."

In the present court proceedings, the elders involved in the original committees have been required to make statements to the police. While their memories of the specific events are somewhat dulled due to the passage of time, they overwhelmingly confirm that Brother BCH admitted molesting his daughter at the appeal hearing. Relevant comments from their statements on this point are as follows:

> Brother Jim Bennett: "Towards the end of the meeting, I remember one of his daughters made a statement in BCH presence concerning his conduct towards her. I can not recall which daughter it was. I can remember two things that she said that he father had done. One was that he would come into the bathroom whilst they were showering and that he had interfered with her in someway. I am unable to recall the exact words that she used or the extent of how he had interfered with her. When BCH was confronted by the statement made by his daughter BC admitted that they were true."
> Donald Wilson: "At some point during the course of our meeting with BCH I remember that his daughter, BCG raised an allegation that her father had gone into her bedroom and sexually interfered with her by touching or fondling her inappropriately. While I do not recall the details of what she alleged that he did to her, or how many times it had occurred, but I do recall that it involved touching and fondling her inappropriately in a sexual way. Initially BCH denied his daughter's allegation, but I recall that he finally admitted that he had done what BCG had alleged."
> Joseph Miraziz: "At a certain point, BCG and BCK came in and I recall that BCG made some very serious accusations against her father in connection with him sexually interfering with her. As I recall, she claimed that her father had, on a number of occasions, entered her bedroom during the night and sexually abused her by fondling and massaging her private parts. Both BCG and BCK were extremely distressed during this discussion.

"I recall that, during the discussion, BCH acted in an extremely menacing way towards his daughters, even standing up, raising his voice and pointing his finger at them. I recall that on several occasions we had to ask him to his cease his actions and sit down. I found this whole situation very stressing emotionally and at one point I excused myself and went outside for a little while. After a short while I returned.

"Towards the conclusion of the meeting, I said to BCH words to the effect: "Based on the evidence of the girls, it has been established beyond doubt that you did molest them." He replied: "Yes, yes, yes, ok, get on with it." I was completely satisfied that his reply was an admission that he had done the things the girls had accused him of doing."

Two brothers from the original committee were present during the appeal and they comment as follows in their statements to the police:

Ronald De Rooy: "In middle of 1989, two other elders in the Mareeba Congregation, Dino Ali and Kevin Bowditch, and I were handling a serious matter involving BCH that had nothing to do with the matter involving his daughter, BCG

"During one of the meetings that we had with BCH his daughter BCG made some very serious accusations against her father involving sexual matters. She said using words to the effect: 'While I was in the shower, you were looking at me through the window.' While I cannot remember exactly what she also accused her father of coming into her bedroom at night on several occasions and improperly interfering with her in a sexual way.

BCH denied BCG accusation with words to the effect: 'You are making these things up. It's all in your mind. Any of my dealings with you about these matters was my teaching you about sex and marriage. It was all part of your training.'

"We found it impossible to establish whether or not BCH had sexually interfered with his daughter BCG on what was presented to us.

"However, we decided to disfellowship BCH from the congregation for his actions that had nothing to do with his daughter BCG accusations. He then appealed our decision and shortly thereafter three different elders considered the matter.

"During the appeal meeting BCG again put the accusations mentioned in paragraph 4. [mentioned above] to her father. I also remember that BCG was really upset and distraught during this meeting.

"When confronted with BCG accusations on this occasion, he continued to deny that he had done the things that she was claiming he had done and then he confessed with words to the effect: "Yes, what BCG said happened, happened."

Kevin Bowditch: "I was present when the elders heard BCH appeal. BCG was also present for part of that hearing and she again put her allegation concerning her father's conduct to him with words to the effect: 'I was laying in bed when you came into my bedroom with only a towel around you. You started speaking to me and gradually got yourself into a position where you started to touch my breasts and genitals.'

"On this occasion, when confronted by BCG accusation, he admitted that he had done what she was accusing him of doing using words to the effect: "Yes, I did do that." I cannot remember the exact words that he used, but BCH then apologised to his daughter BCG for what he had done to her."

In their signed Report dated June 15, 1990, the committee made up of Brother Rodney Spinks, Arthur Johnson and Monty Baker appointed to hear BCH application for reinstatement commented as follows:

"Original committees defined sins: 1. Loose conduct, 2. Lying, 3. Pornea, 4. Malicious slander [last 2 by appeal comm..]

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

"Differed substantially from BCH account. He denied incest and claimed firstly that it was a lie and that he never confessed then after a while stated that he had confessed under pressure.

"We felt that he has constantly lied and been evasive."

In a signed letter dated March 14, 1992 to the judicial committee in Mareeba from the committee in Beenleigh Congregation hearing BCH s plea for reinstatement, Brothers Monty Baker, Michael Clarkeson and Beck state:

"We know you brothers in Mareeba are fully aware of the pattern of deceit that we speak of, but for the benefit of the brothers in St. George, who will also receive a copy of this letter we would like to give a synopsis of this pattern as follow:

"1. Upon his arrival, in his first appeal he stated the grounds for his disfellowshipping were 'Going against theocratic order' only.

"As a result of discussions with Brother Jim Bennett, who made a special point of seeing us whilst he was in Brisbane, and as you know served on the committee that heard BCH appeal against his disfellowshipping, we discovered there were more grounds for his disfellowshipping that he did not disclose to us. As follows:

"3. Porniea. With his daughters, to which he had vehemently denied, until recently when he conceded he interfered with one of them on a couple of occasions. Nevertheless he still claims that he has only interfered with one of them, whereas your recent letter states clearly that both of his daughters were sexually molested and that BCH admitted it in your hearings with him.

"With all of the above information, while we are not trying to 'rake over old coals' as it were but we are concerned about the way he still seems to be holding to a pattern of lying."

In conclusion, if BCH claims that he did not sexually molest his daughter, BCG then on the basis of what he had admitted to before numerous witnesses he is guilty of lying. If he claims that he did not molest his daughter even though he has admitted to doing so before the appeal committee and the other elders mentioned above, then he is saying that he lied to the them. Either way, he is guilty of lying. The committee in considering this matter does not have to concern itself about whether or not BCH did in fact molest his daughter. That has already been established by the appeal committee. The primary issue before the present committee is the charge of lying.

The Presiding Overseer
Loganholme Congregation of
Jehovah's Witnesses — Brisbane QLD
REDACTED

Dear Brother Harrop:

We are writing to you in connection with Brother BCH who we understand associates with the Loganholme Congregation. Brother BCH was disfellowshipped in the Mareeba Congregation in 1989 and reinstated in 1992 in one of the Brisbane congregations.

You may be aware that Brother BCH has recently been prosecuted for sexually interfering with two of his daughters some years ago. We have been informed that it is a matter of public record that Brother BCH has pleaded guilty to four charges — three sexual assaults on his daughter BCG and an indecent dealing with his daughter BCL who is no longer involved in the truth. We are advised that he is due to be sentenced on January 24, 2003.

In 1989 when the judicial committee in Mareeba decided to disfellowship him, Brother BCH appealed the decision and an appeal committee heard the case. The appeal committee upheld the original decision and additional grounds for disfellowshipping were added at the hearing when he admitted to sexually abusing his daughter, BCG In their report about the case, the appeal committee made the following comment about Brother BCH behaviour: "it must be noted that during the appeal hearing the appellant's attitude … was in fact obstructive, devious and lying, denying earlier admissions."

Since he was disfellowshipped, Brother BCH has consistently denied that he sexually abused his daughter even though he admitted to doing so at the appeal. For example, Brother Ron de Roy, who was a member of the original committee and who heard him admit to this sin during the appeal, has told us that Brother BCH telephoned him some time after the appeal and told him that he had only admitted to this sin so that the meeting would come to an end. The committee in the Beenleigh East Congregation hearing his plea for reinstatement wrote to the Society in a letter dated August 16, 1991:

> "Of the above grounds for which he was disfellowshipped, at this point in time, he still refuses to acknowledge the porneia he committed with his daughters, … BCH is determined to maintain his innocence of the charge of porneia."

We also understand that throughout the present court proceedings up until his recent guilty plea, Brother BCH has maintained that he did not molest his daughter. We are advised that he claimed he was not disfellowshipped for molesting his daughter, but for other acts of impropriety. Brother BCH children also confirm that he has continued to deny that he molested BCG He has said to them that he is innocent of the charges for which he was disfellowshipped and on many occasions has said of his abuse of BCG "it's all in her head." Notwithstanding these actions, as already mentioned, we are advised that he has now pleaded guilty to three counts of sexually abusing BCG

We do not want you to follow-up the matter involving BCG since it has already been handled to the extent possible at this stage. We simply provide it as background information to assist you to be aware of the kind of actions that Brother BCH has exhibited in connection with past wrongdoing of the kind that we now want you to handle.

As mentioned already, Brother BCH has pleaded guilty to sexually abusing another of his daughters, BCL We understand that the incident in question occurred in 1988 when BCL was approximately 6 years of age. She claims that Brother BCH told her to go and have a shower which she thought at the time was a bit strange. When she got into the shower, he got undressed and got into the shower with her. He then took her hand and placed it on his penis. He then started to wash her vaginal area and digitally penetrated her. This is the first that we have heard of this accusation which, we understand, has never been handled. We therefore want the elders in your congregation to handle the matter and we suggest that you proceed to do so in the following manner.

Two elders should be appointed to approach Brother BCH and inform him that they are aware that he has been charged by two of his daughters, BCG and BCL of sexually molesting them. The elders should also inform him that they are aware that it is a matter of public record that he has entered a plea of guilty to three charges of sexual assault in relation to BCG and to one charge of sexually interfering with BCL when she was approximately 6 years of age. He should be asked to explain his actions. We would like to think that he would be forthcoming with sufficient information to enable the matter to be handled judicially. If he is not prepared to cooperate and provide the elders with an admission of his wrongdoing, even though he has already done so on the public record, he should be told that when he is sentenced on January 24, 2003, without any further contact with the elders, he will likely be disfellowshipped for sexually abusing BCL as a child as well as for being dishonest.

Once the two brothers have met with Brother BCH , we would like them to contact the legal department before proceeding any further with the case. If you have any questions concerning this matter, or need any additional information before approaching Brother BCH please do not hesitate to contact us.

Please accept our warm Christian love and best wishes as you handle this important matter.

Dear Brothers,

In my letter dated October 13 2002, I spoke about how my father has abused my two sisters BCG and BCL BCL has spoken to me about what my father did to her and because this matter has not been dealt with - I feel I have an obligation to let you know what she told me. She mentioned that he used to make her take a shower with him and forced her wash his private parts for him. She is thoroughly disgusted with him and his behavior. I am convinced that if these things had not of happened to my sister BCL she would not be in the position she is in today, being an unwed mother of three.

Also in my letter dated October 13 2002, I spoke of an incident that happened to myself in 1978, at an International Convention here in Sydney. We were camping in the show grounds. I have made a statement to the police concerning this incident. This matter also has never been dealt with by the brothers - that I am aware of, and it was of a similar nature to what happened to BCL If you would like a copy of this police statement - please let me know.

I hope this information will be of assistance in keeping Jehovah's congregations clean and protected from destructive and damaging influences.

Yours sincerely,

BCK

The Body of Elders
Beenleigh East Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses — Qld

Dear Brothers:

Thank you very much for the letter regarding Mr. BCH Your comments have been most helpful. He has again written to us and we will enclose a copy of his latest letter.

From what you say, he still has a problem telling the truth. You mention he denied that he had "slept along side the sister. The very next morning he rang Brother Baker's home and confessed to sleeping along side her." He needs to reinforce in his heart the importance of following Jehovah's standard of truthfulness and hatred of lying. You indicate his health problems may effect his memory. If this is the case, this should be taken into consideration.

Regarding the offenses with his teenage daugther, we understand you have information from the elders in Mareeba on this matter. Mr. BCH says he is willing to go to Mareeba to meet with the elders there if need be. This would be a personal decision. However, if he did choose to visit Mareeba, no doubt the brothers could clarify this point.

Caution is required when a disfellowshipped person continues to mislead the elders. Page 182 of the publication Pay Attention to Yourselves and To All the Flock indicates that elders considering pleas for reinstatement should look at "the overall pattern whether the person is repentant over wrongdoing of which he really was guilty or for which clear evidence existed." Even though a disfellowshipped person may deny certain matters raised during the original judicial committee hearing for which there was no positive proof, if his overall pattern indicates that he has Jehovah's forgiveness and is genuinely repentant, consideration can be given to reinstatement. A very fine discussion of godly repentance is found in Insight On The Scriptures (Volume 2) under the heading "Repentance."

Be assured of our appreciation for the time and effort you spend in caring for these important matters. We pray Jehovah may bless your desire to carry out his will. If you believe we can be of further assistance, do not hesitate to correspond with us. We will send a copy of our letter to the elders in Mareeba so they are aware of our thinking. Please accept our warm Christian love and greetings.

Concerning BCH Appeal

Appeal Committee... J.Bennett (Chairman)
D.Wilson
J.Maraziz

Charge. Loose Conduct and Lying.
Reason for appeal.. Repentance AFTER disfellowship action.

After exhaustive hearing of all evidence it was apparent that the original committee had sound scriptual grounds for their action.

The basis for the appeal according to the appellant's letter was repentance after the committee had anounced their decision. On the basis of this letter the appeal committee must uphold the decision of the original committee. However it must be noted that during the appeal hearing the appellant's attitude demonstrated no such repentance. It was in fact obstructive, devious and lying, denying earlier admisions.

Fresh evidence under questioning of witnesses and appellant produced further more serious reasons for disfellowshiping. Namely 1. Porneia, in the form of gross sexual acts against his teenage daughter (five or six times) during the latter part of last year. Under pressure of witnesses he confessed to this charge. 2. Malicious slander against his wife, claiming he had caught VD from her and that she was guilty of numerious acts of adultry. Confronted with witnesses he admitted to the truth of the charge, and that he had no evidence to back up his statements.

Very full information should be kept on the congregation files due to threats of legal action by both the appellant and his wife.

Re: - Deletion of Bro William Neil

Dear Brothers,

This is a brief summary of events leading to the deletion of Bro. Neil from serving as an elder in the Narrogin, WA, Congregation around 1993 whilst I was serving there.

Bro. Bill had served from about 1975 and had a family of a wife and six children, four girls and two boys. Sister BCB (nee REDACT) grew up on a farm some 45 minutes REDACTED Her mother, BCD, was a faithful witness while her father was an unbeliever.

BCB stayed with Bro Neil's family on numerous occasions as she was growing up as some of his daughters were a similar age. This became more frequent when she began working in town as it meant she was saved the long drive home after work. While staying with them, she was always treated as part of the family, sitting in on the family study and meeting preparation and attending meetings. It no doubt helped her to make the truth her own and dedicate her life to Jehovah.

When BCB raised the allegations against Brother Bill concerning being touched inappropriately I viewed it very seriously. I listened to both to try to ascertain the facts and our Circuit Overseer at the time, Brother Doug Jackson, also did the same during his visit. Sadly, it became a matter of her word against his as there were no witnesses to the alleged events. BCB was an attractive young sister and often got around the house in her nightwear as was the custom of the other children. When it was time for them to go to bed, Bill would kiss her good night as he did with his daughters.

The situation raised doubts in my mind about Brother Bill's freeness of speech and this was compounded by the way he dealt with a couple of other situations in the congregation at the time. His comments and actions towards these others who were having problems of a different kind showed a lack of loving concern and willingness to help.

When I discussed these matters with the Circuit Overseer, he agreed with my recommendation that Brother Bill no longer qualified as an elder.

Please feel free to contact me if I can be of further assistance,

Your Brother,

Max Horley

Dear Brothers,

ACCUSATION OF CHILD ABUSE

We refer to the attached handwritten letter received from BCB of REDACTED REDACTED on 10 December 2014 in relation to the above matter.

The following background information is provided:

Background

1) BCB is of good standing; however, she has struggled spiritually from time to time with meeting attendance and field service. She is 47 years old having been born in 1967.
2) The alleged perpetrator is Brother Bill Neil, now deceased, who was serving as an elder in the Narrogin Congregation in Western Australia. His wife's name is Bronwyn Neil. The allegation of child abuse is reported to have occurred from 1982 to 1986 inclusive, when BCB was 15 to 19 years of age. The accusation of child abuse was apparently reported to the Body of Elders in the Narrogin Congregation by BCB in 1989 when she was 22 years of age. We are advised that the matter was handled at the time by Brother Max Horley and the Circuit Overseer.

Involvement of the REDAC Congregation

3) Brothers Joe Bello and David Wood undertook a shepherding visit to BCB approximately one year ago. At this time, BCB outlined the alleged child abuse that had previously occurred. This was for the purpose of simply advising the brothers in the event of anything arising in the future. No further action was requested by BCB and, as the matter had been dealt with many years ago, the brothers offered comfort from the Scriptures.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

4) Following this visit, Brother Bello recalls sending a letter to the Watchtower B. & T. Society and receiving a response, possibly by email. However, no record has been kept of this letter and response.
5) Sometime after the events described in 3) and 4) above, BCB handed Brother Joe Bello a typewritten letter giving further information of the accusation of child abuse. A further couple of weeks after receipt of the first letter, a second letter was handed to Brother Bello giving additional details of the accusation. Following receipt of the second letter, Brother Bello destroyed the first letter as it had been superseded. Brother Bello was then approached by BCB 's husband, BCC who requested that the second letter be handed back to them as it was the only copy. The second letter was duly given back to BCC
6) In about July 2014, Brother Bello paid a friendly visit to both BCC and BCB at their home. It was only at this time that BCB made mention that she was considering reporting the matter to the Royal Commission on Child Abuse and seeking compensation. Brother Bello offered comfort and encouragement from the Scriptures and did not suggest to BCB that she should not report the allegation of child abuse to the authorities. No further action was taken on the matter at this time.
7) During the recent Circuit Overseer's visit by Brother Warren Reynolds to the REDACTED Congregation from 4 to 9 November 2014, both Brother Reynolds and Brother David Wood visited BCB at her home expecting to discuss her concerns in relation to the allegation of child abuse; however, BCB did not take the opportunity to raise the matter. As a result, the accusation of child abuse was not discussed.
8) Subsequent to this, the attached handwritten letter was given to Brother David Wood by BCB 's mother, BCD , at a congregation meeting on Wednesday, 10 December 2014. It should be noted that the letter is not signed and is not dated, but is reported to have been written by BCB Furthermore, BCD now aged 79, apparently only found out about the accusation of child abuse a week prior to handing over the letter and had no previous knowledge.
9) Brothers David Wood and Robert Boardman then telephoned the Watchtower B. & T. Society's branch office on Friday, 12 December 2014 and spoke to the Service Department to seek their direction.
10) Brothers Wood and Boardman also briefly met with BCC and BCB on Sunday, 14 December 2014. The purpose of this meeting was to ascertain the congregation where the alleged abuse occurred and the period involved.

Your further direction on this accusation of child abuse is sought. Thank you for your assistance with this important matter. It is our privilege to serve unitedly with you in furtherance of Kingdom interests.

- REDACTED
- I feel like BCE was REDACTED was trying to protect herself.
- I feel like when they asked Max to tell me not to tell anymore people they were trying to control me again.
- Why did Max go along with this, did he check with the C.O. before he told me that.
- I feel like they got away scot-free, even though Bill is dead, he didn't pay any consequence really.
- I feel like I've done so much therapy and gone through so much pain and yet I still have trouble with feeling closure.
- I feel like if I ask for compensation for this, I am being presuptuous, after all he's dead, what can he do.
- I think that there are other people who have been through worse suffering during their lives than me, so who am I to complain or ask for compensation.
- At the same time, because the authorities know now, as well as all the professional people I've dealt with over the years (Psychiatrist, etc) know I was abused by an Elder in the Jehovahs Witness organisation, I think it would be a worse witness if I wasn't treated fairly as a victim of abuse by a member of a religious institution.
- Joe told BCC that I should ask myself if I really want to drag Jehovahs name through the mud by reporting it to the Royal Commission, but I haven't done anything wrong - Bill was the one to do that, not me.
- I'm worried about what others will think of me asking for compensation, that I'm a greedy, selfish, lazy person who just wants the easy way of life.
- I don't know whether I need to talk to the C.O. or if the Royal Commission will send someone else, what do I say anyway? I'm afraid to speak up about what I want.
- I need someone to tell me what I'm entitled to as a fair and just compensation. I don't want more than I have a right to, but I don't want to be treated like the Catholic Church and swept under the rug or paid out to hush me up.

Dear Brothers,

Included with this letter is a summary of events experienced by BCB when she was a young girl. The matter involves child abuse and was handled at the time. However BCB has provided these details as others may have suffered a similar experience with the same brother and this may help support their cases.

Brother David Wood and I have heard the account from BCB and can confirm that it matches the details contained with this letter.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

I met the Neill family in 1980 when I was about 13, BCE was 2 years younger than me. We used to stay at each other's place, they lived at REDACTED and I lived on a farm REDACTED Bronwyn treated me like a daughter, so I felt really close to her. I was really skinny then, I remember "Uncle" Bill calling me a stick insect. It used to be fun staying there, they had the first Witness party I remember going to . BCE used to have lots of Barbie dolls, which I never had. She played 'Barbies' til she was about 16, Barbie and Ken were often 'having sex'. The Neills were very open with the kids about sex.

When Bronwyn was REDACTED (it would have been about 1982) I was having a shower (BCE and I always shared the bathroom) when BCE said "What's that on your tummy?" I loked down and I had a rash on my stomach. BCE said she would get her mum. I didn't want her to but she got her anyway. I had my knickers and singlet on, Bronwyn looked at my tummy and said she hoped it wasn't German Measles because she thought she might be pregnant. She said she wanted to show Uncle Bill but I said I didn't want him to see me. I never even let my Dad see me in my knickers so I was really embarrassed. She said "It's OK, he's done First Aid so he'll know. Just keep your singlet on." So he came in and she pulled up my singlet to show him my tummy. He did seem to be speculating for a while and then said I'd better go to the Doctors to be sure. Bronwyn took me to her Doctor, but I didn't have German Measles.

The Neills always kissed each other on the lips when they said goodnight or goodbye, everyone, parents and kids. I thought it was nice that they were so affectionate as my parents weren't very affectionate, especially my Dad. It was not very long after the Measles incident (I was 15) that I was saying goodnight to Uncle Bill in the hallway that he stuck his tongue in my mouth when he kissed me. I looked at him in shock, but he just gave me this queer smirk, and I found myself half-smiling back, and thus began our "little secret". Every time I stayed there after that, I had to endure the tongue when he said goodnight to me.

One day a few months later, BCE must have seen something, because she asked me afterwards "Did my Dad just kiss you for a long time?" I got scared of getting in trouble (Bill always belted his kids with his belt when they were naughty) so I said "Don't worry, it's OK."

About a year later (1983), he must have been feeling guilty or something, we were doing Return Visits in their Combi van, and Bill and I were alone in the van, when he said to me "What shall we do about 'our little secret'?" I said I didn't know. Then he asked me if I wanted him to talk to Brother Jack Shaylor about it, but that if he did my Mum and Dad would find out. I got scared and said no. Then he stopped doing it for while, I may not have been staying there as much as BCE and I might have had a bit of a falling out. I think I was 16.

Then when I was about 17 (1984), it started again. I always shared the bathroom with BCE (they's moved to REDACTED but if I couldn't I always locked the door. This was in defiance of Bronwyn's orders as she'd told all of us never to lock the bathroom door in case of emergency so they could get in. One day I was having a shower by myself when I heard a noise and looked up. Bill was perving at me over the top of the shower cubicle (he was standing on the basin). I screamed at him to get out, so he did. I don't know if this had happened before or if that was the first time I'd caught him out.

Once when he kissed my in the loungeroom (I was about 18 so it must have been about 1985) I heard Bronwyn say sharply "Bill!", so REDACTED I thought there would be trouble, but nothing happened. Another time I was in the pantry (this was quite a large room) when he came in and shut the door and started kissing me. I was a bit older now and didn't want to put up with this anymore, so I tried to resist, but he yelled at me to kiss him back and shoved me up against to wall, which really frightened me, then he told me to pull up my dress so he could see me in my underwear. Thankfully someone came into the kitchen just then, but I was starting to get really scared. Up until then I thought it was just something unpleasant that I had to put up with so I could have a good time with my friends and the rest of the family, as they always had lots of people over every weekend. I think that's why I became a bit wild with kissing boys, because I kind of had to prove to myself that it could be a nice experience and that there wasn't something wrong with me because I didn't like him doing it.

I was about 18 or 19 (1986) when I was living there, as I was trying to find a job in town, and BCE and I were starting to rub each other up the wrong way. I was never allowed to disagree with anything they said, so I learned to keep my opinions to myself. Bronwyn always blamed me for our disagreements, so I was starting to think I should just move back home.

REDACTED had just moved to Narrogin and asked if I would share a house with her as she was pioneering and living in a caravan. The decision was made easy (despite the Neills arguing that the Society doesn't approve of single sisters living by themselves) when the last night I was at the Neills' I had just got out of the shower when Bill came in. I had locked the door but he opened it with a knife in the lock. I was naked and he told me to sit one the floor and open my legs. Then he started touching me down there, and told me to stand up and then had oral sex with me. Then REDA pushed open the door so Bill pushed him out again. I'm not sure if REDA saw anything, he was quite young. Thankfully Bill left then. The next day I was lying in bed feeling sick, when he came into the room (I shared with BCE but she was at work). He asked me if I liked it. I just looked at him and said nothing. Then he said "It's better with this in", pointing at his crutch. "Would you like to see it?" I said "Go away" so he left. Then I packed my bags and went home to the farm without even saying goodbye to BCE

Just before I married BCC in 1989 I was dreading telling him, so I told him the bare minimum and said that the whole thing stopped ages ago and there's nothing to worry about.

It was about 1991 that I was talking to REDACTED (nee RED) and REDACTED before RED's wedding. REDA said that RED was nervous because she'd been abused by her uncle when she was young. I said that I'd had a similar experience. REDAC said "I thought so, me too and also REDACTED, nee REDA). Someone with lots of kids." I said yes, I was really shocked, but no names were mentioned. When a friend, REDACTED needed to stay somewhere and the Neills offered to have her, I mentioned to her to be careful of Bill. I'm not sure if she really believed me. Then another girl BCF told me about how she tried to commit suicide because of the trauma from her uncle abusing her, I told her what happened to me, but no names. She guessed it was Bill, and I freaked out and asked her not to tell, but she did tell someone. As soon as Max Horley, the young Elder REDACTED heard the rumour he came straight to me to find out. I told him about most of it but I couldn't mention the bathroom incident when he had oral sex with me, I was so ashamed. It was hard talking about it in front of Bill. At the committee meeting Bill said I wore revealing clothing, but the Circuit Overseer, Doug Jackson, made it quite clear to both of us that the Society has never allowed the victim's clothing as an excuse. Bill was asked to say something to me, so he said "I'm sorry."

Just after the meeting Bronwyn rang me and confronted me with "What did you say to BCF ?" I told her BCF was telling me about how her uncle abused her and so I told her about what happened to me. She said "Bill didn't abuse you." I didn't know what Bill had told her, but he was supposed to tell Bronwyn everything. I got scared so I said "I didn't actually say that". I never actually used the word abuse as I didn't really understand what it meant. Then she asked me about what REDAC had said. When I told her she said "That was her grandfather." I didn't think to question her.

COMMISSION USE ONLY

I rang Max straight away to tell him what she said and he said he's sort it out. He rang me back to say that the family had requested that I not tell any more people out of respect for the family. So I didn't tell anyone, not even my then best friend REDACT but where was the respect for me?
At the next couple of meetings Bronwyn was ignoring me, and I felt bad because I really loved her like a second mother. Then the next meeting she came up behind me and said "Don't worry, I still love you." Like I'd done something wrong.
Over the years of our marriage I occasionally let some detail out to BCC about what happened, but it wasn't until just before my nervous breakdown 10 years ago that I finally confided in REDACTED the first true girl friend I ever had. I also confided in Brother Craig Barton, our group study conductor. It was like opening a can of worms, and I was very very ill, but I got the best help possible from my wonderful Psychiatrist REDACTED Bill Neill is dead now, so I don't have to worry about seeing him at conventions anymore. I still struggle with my thoughts and feelings all the time, but I have an amazing group of Sisters and friends, as well as my lovely husband BCC and my two beautiful daughters, REDACTED

Dear Brothers,

I am writing in reply to your letter SB:SSA dated January 13, 1992 concerning Brother William Neil now serving as an elder in the Narrogin Congregation and his conduct with a young sister in the congregation some years back.

I investigated the matter further with the other elder in the Narrogin congregation, Brother Max Horley, and spoke to the sister involved and her husband and also other brothers and sister in the congregation. We gave counsel to both the husband and the wife about going to the elders and setting the matter straight with Jehovah; James 5:13-15. Then showed that after we have done this, that if we have repented Jehovah would forgive us. We also made mention of the Awake October 8, 1991 which the sister had read lately and appreciated the support from it and how she could continue to get support from the elder which we highlighted as important. We also highlighted the part on page 11 of that Awake about "A Spiritual Recovery". Her husband is also very supportive and a great help. At present she still has a nervous and scared feeling when she is talking to Brother Neil.

We also spoke to other brothers and sisters in the congregation who knew about the matter through another sister who had spread the story after being told about it by the sister with whom Brother Neil had conducted himself in an unchristian way. The sister who has spread the information has since left Narrogin. It appears that a number of brothers know about the matter and unfortunately there may be worldly people who also know but we are not sure. The brothers we spoke to feel that Brother Neil is no longer "free from accusation" and does not have "freeness of speech", 1Tim. 3:2,10; Titus 1:6,7.

After interviewing the brothers and sisters and reviewing the scriptures, Our Kingdom Ministry, November 1972 Question Box and the Watchtower November 15, 1977 pages 698,699 we felt that "uncleanness" had been committed on several occasion but it was not "loose conduct". We felt that Brother Neil could not speak with confidence and we recommended to him that he step down as an elder due to these points which we reviewed with him. He agreed to this and that he would accept the direction of ourselves as elders and the organization. He has been given strong counsel and we feel that no further action or restrictions need apply.

Brother Max Horley (the other elder who worked with me) and myself were both impressed by Brother Neil's acceptance of counsel and his humility throughout the ordeal. Brother Neil and his family have served in an exemplary way for many years in this assignment. He came to Narrogin to serve where the need is great and has faithfully shown his loyalty to his assignment. He has truly repented of what happened and constantly reproved himself and has taken the counsel from us well. Now that it is all in the open and discipline has been applied and accepted he feels much better about his relationship with Jehovah. I said to him that the next few months would be hard but for him and his family to lean heavily on Jehovah, his organization and to have the remaining elder visit him regularly. Also brothers, I would recommend that once this has died down and it appears that Brother Neil again has the freedom of speech that he be recommended as an elder again so that he can be of help in the congregation as he has done in the past.

In the meantime I would like to recommend that Brother Max Horley becomes the presiding overseer and his address and telephone number is:-

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Brothers:

Recently we arranged for two elders, REDACTED to interview REDACTED REDACTED regarding an accusation made by REDACTED against him of child abuse. Essentially, REDACTED has admitted the claims made by REDACTED has had a previous accusation of sexual abuse made against him by REDACTED a former sister, but he has denied this. He has admitted to an "accidental contact" with another sister REDACTED REDAC Suspicion exists that others may have been molested.
REDACTED

REDACTED He himself has suffered abuse at the hands of others. However, our responsibility to provide a safe environment for our children requires that his conduct be monitored to ensure this, and that we take whatever precautions are warranted to protect the congregation. For this reason the spirit represented in the restrictions that would be imposed on a baptised known child abuser should guide the elders if consideration is ever given to extending privileges to him in the congregation. The Society should be consulted. The consequences that flow from such abhorrent behaviour cannot be evaded.—The Watchtower, January 1, 1997 "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" pages 26-9.

Many times when these matters are considered we think of the perpetrator, his personality and the privileges he may have lost when his sins have been exposed. Very little thought is given to the suffering and in many cases the irreparable damage done to the victim. Out hearts must go out to those suffering emotional, psychological and spiritual damage caused by the selfish conduct of others. To say that a victim was a willing participant or the victim was not forced is to completely ignore the often-unconscious pressure or dominance exerted by the perpetrator, reflecting a dangerous callousness.

The Body of Elders
REDACTED

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Brothers:

We would like to thank you for the comprehensive report provided on the matter of alleged child molestation on the part of REDACTED It would seem that nothing further could be done at this time. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we will have to accept the denial of the accused. If the police and the Department of Community Services are unable to proceed then the matter will have to be left in abeyance. Please keep us informed on any future developments.

It is evident that much work will be required of the elders to ensure that the ill feeling generated by these allegations does not further upset the peace of the congregation. We would suggest that in making a shepherding call on the family of the victim you explain the Scriptural requirements for testing evidence. When investigating allegations of any kind, elders must be guided by Bible principles, including the Bible's clear direction on hearing testimony: "No single witness should rise up against a man respecting any error or any sin ... At the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deuteronomy 19:15) Additionally, Deuteronomy 17:6 states: "At the mouth of two witnesses or of three witnesses the one dying should be put to death. He will not be put to death at the mouth of one witness." Jesus himself reaffirmed this principle at Matthew 18:16 and John 8:17, 18, and the apostle Paul did also at 2 Corinthians 13:1 and 1 Timothy 5:19.

It is recognized that child molesters usually engage in such practices away from the presence of others, and thus establishing a matter by two witnesses may not be possible in a particular incident. Of course, that does not mean that the victim is not telling the truth and we would never imply that we disbelieve the victim's testimony because two witnesses cannot be found. However, often other incriminating evidence is available to corroborate the victim's claim. The molester may have assaulted more than one child. If two victims testify to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, their testimony may be deemed sufficient to take congregational action against the perpetrator. However, even if the elders cannot take such action, they are expected to report the allegation to the branch office, which has been done in this instance. At times, accusations are made with a wrong motive, and on investigation prove to be without substance or are withdrawn. To outsiders, who are not privy to all the facts, inaction on the part of elders may give the impression they do not believe the complaint by the alleged victim or are unwilling to act, but be assured that the elders under the direction of the Faithful and Discreet Slave will do all that is possible to exercise justice.—See The Watchtower November 1, 1995, p.28

Hoping that this information is helpful to you, we send our warm love and best wishes for Jehovah's guidance and blessing.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Dear Brothers:

After the recent Kingdom Ministry School, the Society received many expressions of appreciation from you brothers for the fine instruction presented. Indeed, not only did the school remind us of the privilege we have as elders but it provided us with practical direction on how to care properly for our many responsibilities.

As elders, you certainly have much to do —keeping your families spiritually strong, studying and preparing for meetings, caring for judicial matters, working at assemblies and conventions. Some of you willingly expend yourselves in building and maintaining Kingdom Halls and even in doing construction work at Bethel or on branch projects. And all of this is in addition to your taking the lead in the field ministry.

Your work in shepherding God's people is also very much needed and deeply appreciated. (1 Pet. 5:1-3) We often receive reports of your hard work in giving spiritual encouragement and personal attention to the needs of individual members of the congregation, some of whom are experiencing very serious problems. This is true of many who have been victims of child abuse. They also need our loving understanding and help. Many of these, even after learning the truth, continue to suffer emotional scars and must cope with unhappy memories. The Kingdom Ministry School drew attention to some of the things that the Bible and the Society's publications show that you, as spiritual shepherds, can do to help such victims. We would like to review some of these points and others with you. We also hope to answer various questions that you have asked about meeting the needs of such victims of child abuse, particularly those sexually abused.

HELPING VICTIMS OF CHILD ABUSE

Many children who have been continually violated by adults grow up with severe emotional scars and certainly need much loving attention. Thus, you will want to be conscious of treating such victims of abuse with much thoughtfulness and kindness. (See "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock," page 17.) Such an attitude helps to assure the victim that you really care for him and that you are "like a hiding place from the wind and a place of concealment from the rainstorm." (Isa. 32:2) Like Jesus, we should be "tenderly compassionate."—Eph. 4:32.

One way you can show sincere interest is by being a good listener. James counselled: "Every man must be swift about hearing, slow about speaking." (Jas. 1:19) Further, Proverbs 21:13 says: "As for anyone stopping up his ear from the complaining cry of the lowly one, he himself also will call and not be answered." So as patient spiritual counsellors, listen carefully when a victim's problem is being discussed. The October 1, 1983, issue of The Watchtower, on page 28, cautions against telling a sufferer who seeks assistance "just to forget" what occurred. Many have found great relief simply in talking with a sympathetic, nonjudgmental elder who can provide "the good word" of encouragement. (Prov. 12:25) Though you may need to ask tactful questions to help the victim express matters, avoid probing unnecessarily or repeatedly into the details of the abuse, which can have a discouraging effect.

Many victims of abuse have learned to handle their emotional scars quite well, which is commendable. If the victim is leading a calm and peaceful life, then there is no need to dredge up memories that have been handled and put in the past. Others can be helped to put this problem to rest. On the other hand, there are still others, as described at Psalm 55: 17, who 'cannot but show concern and moan' over their turmoil. In such cases, it may be very difficult for them to heal completely. Still, we want to help such ones feel that there is hope. By reasoning on the Scriptures and strengthening the victim with words of consolation and encouragement, elders may be able to help such troubled ones put the bad experiences behind them.—Job 16:5; 1 Pet. 5:12.

BALANCING YOUR RESPONSIBILITIES

It must be recognized that the time you can spend in helping an abuse victim is limited. Therefore, this shepherding responsibility must be balanced with your other responsibilities, which include caring for the spiritual, emotional, and material needs of your own family and assisting those in the congregation who have other problems. In some cases an incest survivor wants more attention than you can give. So some elders have found it beneficial to put boundaries, or some limits, on the time they spend. Depending on the individual's need, it may take several visits to get the desired relief for the victim, if this is possible. If the individual approaches you looking for help at times when you cannot discuss the problem extensively, perhaps giving some brief words of encouragement assuring that one of Jehovah's love, reading an appropriate scripture, or offering a short prayer, will affirm to the sufferer your interest and willingness to help to the extent possible.

Sometimes abuse victims approach capable older sisters for help. It is understood that a sister should not be in the awkward position of trying to help in a situation that would appropriately be cared for by an elder, but the sister can give victims emotional support and encouragement as her circumstances and time allow. (See the March 15, 1990, issue of The Watchtower, page 28.) If the sister is approached by a child-abuse victim and endeavours to help her, she should periodically let the elders know what is being accomplished. If an abuse victim accuses a member of the Christian congregation of having molested her, then it would not be appropriate for a sister to become involved in this aspect of the matter. It is best for the victim to be assisted by the elders.

Just as good judgment is needed in selecting brothers to serve on a judicial committee, depending on what is involved, so, too, it would be wise to select among yourselves those best fitted to assist certain abuse victims. Since elders have varied abilities, some may be more effective than others in handling these cases.—Compare 1 Corinthians 12:4.

WHAT ABOUT PROFESSIONAL THERAPY?

There are times when an emotionally distressed Christian may seek professional help. Whether or not a brother or a sister pursues treatment from psychiatrists, psychologists, or therapists is a personal decision as long as the therapy does not conflict with Bible principles. (See The Watchtower of April 15, 1975, pages 255-6.) Potential problems may be avoided if a patient, or a companion, explains to the therapist the importance of the sufferer's religious beliefs.

Some medical professionals and therapists offer group therapy to those suffering from the effects of child abuse. While participating in group therapy by a professional therapist is a personal decision, there could be problems of revealing confidential facts about other members of the Christian congregation during such therapy if a Christian does not exercise discretion. (See July 8, 1982, issue of Awake!, page 8.) Thus, elders can give cautions to their brothers and sisters, such as those outlined in the October 15, 1988, issue of The Watchtower, page 29, under the subheading "Talk Therapies." They can be helped to see that talking indiscriminately to others about child abuse may result in circulating damaging and harmful talk.—Prov. 17:9.

It must be recognized that elders as such are not mental-health professionals or therapists but are spiritual shepherds. (1 Pet. 5:2) Consequently, they should not conduct sessions where victims have come together for what some may view as group therapy. Nor should elders spend time reading secular publications dealing with worldly psychology or psychiatry. They should not take on a role similar to that of a professional therapist. Someone who has a serious mental or emotional illness may need professional help.

If a current case of child abuse comes to light in your congregation, elders should do what they can to protect children from further abuse. (See "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock," page 93.) How might this be accomplished? In the Addendum presented at the Kingdom Ministry School, direction was given that when elders receive reports of physical or sexual abuse of a child, they should contact the Society immediately for advice. Thereafter, if it is established that a member of the congregation is guilty of sexually abusing a child, a judicial committee would meet with this one, following theocratic procedures, unless otherwise directed by the Society. If the person is not repentant over the gross sin, disfellowshipping action would be warranted. Additionally, elders can encourage parents to review the January 22, 1985, issue of Awake!, which provides suggestions on what they can do to protect their children from sexual abuse by anyone, inside or outside the family. —See also Awake! issues of June 22, 1982, and December 22, 1986.

Hopefully, the above direction will assist you brothers lovingly to help victims of abuse, as well as others in the congregation who face different problems. May Jehovah's rich blessing continue to be with you in carrying out your many responsibilities as shepherds of the flock. With this letter we send our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Your brothers,

Watchtower B.&T. Society OF AUSTRALIA

P.S. The presiding overseer should arrange to read this letter to the body of elders. Thereafter, the secretary should place it in the congregation file. In the future if elders are called upon to assist a victim of child abuse, this letter should be reviewed by them. It would be beneficial for the elders to spend some time discussing points made in the Watchtower and Awake! articles referred to in this letter.

A copy of the information "What Elders Can Say to Abuse Victims," which appears on the following page, may be made for each elder.

WHAT ELDERS CAN SAY TO ABUSE VICTIMS

The apostle Paul said to "speak consolingly to the depressed souls." (1 Thess. 5:14) So, in line with James 5:13-15, elders want to use God's Word in helping victims to heal, as stressed in The Watchtower of April 1, 1990, pages 13 and 14, paragraphs 12-14, under the subheading "The Bible's Counsel—Uniquely Wise." In addition, becoming well acquainted with fine Bible-based articles in The Watchtower and Awake! is also vital. In fact, one of the reasons for the articles on sexual abuse in the October 8, 1991, issue of Awake! was to aid elders in giving more effective Scriptural assistance to abuse victims. The response, as described in the April 8, 1992, Awake!, shows how effective and acceptable these articles proved to be to the victims. The article "Help for the Victims of Incest" in the October 1, 1983, issue of The Watchtower explains that victims often are filled with shame, anger, and frequently an overwhelming sense of guilt because of such abuse. Thus, strive to help such ones see that they were not at fault; they were being victimized.

Help such ones to see that their worth as individuals is not diminished by the shameful way they were treated. The important thing is how Jehovah views them. By means of the ransom sacrifice, Jehovah purchased such ones with the "precious blood" of Jesus. (1 Pet. 1:19) Surely, if Jehovah paid such a price, he must love them dearly as he loves all who put their faith in that valuable shed blood. (John 3:16) Jehovah considers desirable all of the "great crowd," who have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Despite any past abuse, they now have a clean standing as God's friends and are assured that "God will wipe out every tear from their eyes." He is not insensitive to their suffering but will help them heal their emotional scars as they call upon him in faith. He guarantees to heal the wounds completely in the future.—Rev. 7:9, 14, 17; Isa. 65:17; Hag. 2:7; see "Will You Benefit From Undeserved Kindness?" in the February 15, 1990, issue of The Watchtower.

By earnest prayer and by considering upbuilding, wholesome things, the excelling 'peace of God will guard the heart and mental powers' of these ones. (Phil. 4:6-9) Remind them of the value of keeping their mind on maintaining fine works. When followed, this divine counsel can be most beneficial, enabling them to move forward and find joy. (Titus 3:8) When an individual fills his mind with the many lovable things in God's Word, he is strengthened and refreshed. (Ps. 19:7, 8, 14) Not only can this lessen the pain of any past abuse but it can also restore one's spiritual health.

In some instances, emotional pains of this nature simply have to be endured. Yet, such endurance produces "an approved condition." (Rom. 5:3-5) As "the Father of tender mercies and the God of all comfort," Jehovah promises to give us sufficient strength so that we are not overwhelmed by grief. (2 Cor. 1:3, 4) The apostle Paul contended with "a thorn in the flesh." Although this made it harder for him to carry out his ministry, he was able to endure faithfully with the strength provided by Jehovah. (2 Cor. 12:7-10) Today, too, a depressed person needs to keep as active as he can with field service, meeting attendance, and close association with the congregation.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Re: Protecting victims of child abuse

Dear Brothers:

We are pleased to outline below some guidelines that we hope will be helpful to you in protecting victims of child abuse and in dealing with a brother or sister in the congregation who has been guilty of sexually abusing a child.

When a member of the congregation is accused of child molestation, the elders should contact the Society immediately. Some states make it mandatory that elders report an accusation to the proper authorities but other states do not. In those states where such is required, oftentimes the parent, the guardian, or the accused person himself can do the reporting. In this way confidentiality is not violated. Ecclesiastical privilege is not available in all states and where available it is restricted to special circumstances. Still, whether or not the accusation is reported to the authorities, when it is established that a member of the congregation is guilty of child abuse, appropriate steps should be taken in keeping with initial direction from the Society. It is important to first obtain the Society's direction to protect both the elders and the organization.

Additionally, steps should be taken to protect the child, or other children, from further sexual abuse. Obviously, parents would be keenly interested in taking adequate precautions in this regard. Helpful information along these lines can be reviewed in the January 22, 1985, and October 8, 1993, issues of Awake! Loving elders, too, will want to act in a way that demonstrates their protective care, since the word "overseer" carries the thought of one who watches over, a guardian, a shepherd of the flock. (See "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock," pages 90 and 93.) Thus, they would want to take steps to protect a child abuse victim when a judicial committee determines that the child molester is repentant and will remain a member of the Christian congregation. The same concern would be shown when a paedophile is disfellowshipped and later cleans up his life and is reinstated.

It would be appropriate to talk very frankly to a former child abuser, strongly cautioning him as to the dangers of hugging or holding children on his lap and that he should never be in the presence of a child without another adult being present. This may prevent putting that one in the way of temptation or unfounded accusation. At the same time, it is good to remember that the Bible, at Matthew 12:31 and 1 Corinthians 6:9-11, shows it is possible for a person to stop his or her wrongful course, repent, and thereafter live in harmony with God's righteous standards. This is true of all wrongdoers even a former child abuser.

While it is unscriptural to say that a former child abuser could never enjoy exemplary privileges of service in the congregation, certainly the elders will want to be very cautious, especially when one had repeatedly engaged in this kind of wrongdoing or had been disfellowshipped for such an offence. Before extending privileges, therefore, it is necessary that one would meet the qualification of having a fine testimony from individuals inside and outside the congregation. This means that he must have lived down the reproach which resulted from his wrongdoing. Generally, it will take a considerable number of years to achieve such irreprehensibility depending on the notoriety involved. So it would be up to the elders to determine whether such a one is extended privileges, taking into account all factors in each individual case. (1 Tim. 3:7) At any rate, this should never be done hastily. Considerable time should always pass before a former child abuser is used, if ever.

What if a former child abuser moves to another congregation? The Congregation's Publisher Record card(s) for that person should be sent to the new congregation, along with a letter of introduction. If he is under judicial restrictions, the committee in his former congregation should clearly and discreetly inform the elders in the new congregation about the problem, outlining the counsel given and the restrictions imposed and pointing out what they have been doing to monitor and assist him. Even if years have passed and the individual is no longer restricted but there is still some concern (as outlined in the preceding paragraph), the elders in the new congregation should be informed. However to maintain confidentiality, this should be restricted to just the basic details and only to the brothers handling the case in the new congregation. It would be wise for the chairman of the judicial committee to first contact the Society.

It is hoped that the above direction will help you brothers in handling matters in the congregation so as to protect victims and potential victims from child abuse, and at the same time, balance justice with mercy. With this letter we send our warm Christian love and greetings.

Dear Brothers:

This is further on your letter AB February 19, 1997, No. 173, in which you ask for guidance in handling cases where baptized Witnesses are accused of child abuse or where child abusers wish to become baptized Witnesses. Last week the Publishing Committee sent you a brief letter explaining the policy on seeking to preserve "clergy confidentiality" in legal cases involving this problem.

However, there were other questions that you asked, particularly in view of the information in the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower. For your information, the Governing Body is in the process of studying the way the Scriptural principles in that article can be implemented by congregation elders. When that investigation is complete, it is likely that a letter will be sent to the bodies of elders to help them handle things wisely. We believe that such a letter would answer most of the questions in your letter.

If the Governing Body decides not to write a letter about this to the congregations, we will send you additional information when the study by the Governing Body is completed. We hope that will be soon. Meantime, if you have specific problems, feel free to write to the Governing Body for help.

This is a sensitive issue, and we are happy to see that you are trying to handle it in a balanced, Scriptural way. Please be assured of our warm love and Christian greetings.

Re: Protecting victims of child abuse and information to be provided to branch office

Dear Brothers:

A matter of serious concern was addressed in the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked," published in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower. This concern involves the purity of Jehovah's organization in these last days. It is our responsibility to protect the flock of God from these threatening influences.—Isa. 32:1, 2.

We wish to take necessary steps that will help protect the congregation, especially our children, from the unwholesome practices that are constantly worsening in the world. We are grateful that the truth has limited the spread of child sexual abuse in Jehovah's organization.

WHO IS A 'KNOWN CHILD MOLESTER'?

What is child molestation? Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary defines "paedophilia" as "sexual perversion in which children are the preferred sexual object." (See "Questions From Readers" in The Watchtower of February 1, 1997, page 29.) Deuteronomy 23:17, 18 condemns such practices as "detestable." (See the footnotes to verses 17 and 18 in the Reference Bible. Also, it would be helpful to see the footnote on page 10 of the October 8, 1993, issue of Awake!) In harmony with these references, we are herein discussing sexual perversion in which children are the object of sexual abuse, including fondling by an adult. We are not discussing a situation wherein a consenting minor, who is approaching adulthood, has sexual relations with an adult who is a few years older than the minor. Rather, we are referring, for example, to situations in which it is established by a congregation judicial committee that an adult brother or sister has been guilty of sexually abusing a young child or has been sexually involved with a nonconsenting minor who is approaching adulthood.

Who is a known child molester? The January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" mentions on page 29 that a man "known to have been a child molester" would not qualify for privileges in the congregation. An individual "known" to be a former child molester has reference to the perception of that one in the community and in the Christian congregation. In the eyes of the congregation, a man known to have been a child molester is not "free from accusation" and "irreprehensible," nor does he have "a fine testimony from those on the outside." (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22: Titus 1 :7) In view of his past, people in the community would not respect him, and the brothers might even stumble over his appointment.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

PROTECTING OUR CHILDREN

What can we do to protect our children and preserve the cleanness of Jehovah's organization? The primary responsibility for protecting our children rests upon the parents. Fine suggestions for parents can be found in the January 22, 1985, Awake! article "Child Molesting—You Can Protect Your Child." Other articles that parents do well to consider are those in the October 8, 1993, Awake! entitled "How Can We Protect Our Children" and the December 1, 1996, Watchtower entitled "Parents, Find Pleasure in Your Children," specifically pages 13 and 14, paragraphs 18 and 19.

What can the elders do to help protect our children? The elders should be alert to the activity of any who are known to have molested children in the past. Individuals who have manifested a weakness in this regard should be sensitive to their need not to be alone with children. They should refrain from holding children or displaying other forms of affection for them. It would be appropriate for elders to give kindly cautions to any who are doing things that may be a temptation or a cause for concern to others in the congregation.—1 Cor. 10: 12, 32.

What should elders do when a former child molester moves to another congregation? As outlined in the February 1991 Our Kingdom Ministry "Question Box" and the August 1, 1995, letter to all bodies of elders, our policy is always to send a letter of introduction when a publisher moves to another congregation. It is imperative that this be done when one who is known to have been a child molester moves. The secretary should write on behalf of the elders to the new congregation's body of elders and outline this publisher's background and what the elders in the old congregation have been doing to assist him. Any needed cautions should be provided to the new congregation's body of elders. This letter should not be read to or discussed with the congregation. This information should be kept in the congregation s confidential files where it can be reviewed by any elder. The elders should send a copy of this letter to the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society in one of the "Special Blue" envelopes.

PRIVILEGES OF SERVICE IN THE CONGREGATION

In the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower, the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" stated on page 29: "For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer or serve in any other special full-time service." We have had a number of inquiries asking how this applies in the congregation, and this is being given consideration.

It may be possible that some who were guilty of child molestation were or are now serving as elders, ministerial servants, or regular or special pioneers. Others may have been guilty of child molestation before they were baptized. The bodies of elders should not query individuals. However, the body of elders should discuss this matter and give the Society a report on anyone who is currently serving or who formerly served in a Society-appointed position in your congregation who is known to have been guilty of child molestation in the past.

In your report please answer the following questions: How long ago did he commit the sin? What was his age at the time? What was the age of his victim(s)? Was it a one-time occurrence or a practice? If it was a practice, to what extent? How is he viewed in the community and by the authorities? Has he lived down any notoriety in the community? Are members of the congregation aware of what took place? How do they and/or his victim(s) view him? Has he ever been disfellowshipped, reproved, counselled, or otherwise dealt with? If he has moved to another congregation, please identify the congregation to which he has moved. Was that congregation advised of his past conduct of child molestation, and, if so, when? [If you have not advised them, this should be done now, and you should send a copy of your letter to the Society in a "Special Blue" envelope.] This information should be sent to the Society along with any other observations that the body of elders has. Please send this to the Society in the "Special Blue" envelope so that the factors involved may be given due consideration; this information is not to be made available to those not involved.

Jehovah has been blessing the efforts of his people to get the vital Kingdom-preaching and disciple-making work done. Isaiah 52:11 states: "Keep yourselves clean, you who are carrying the utensils of Jehovah." We must be ever vigilant to demonstrate to Jehovah that we want to keep the organization he uses in these last days fit for this all-essential trust. May Jehovah bless your efforts to that end.

We are writing per your letter dated SA:LLA October 29, 1997, No. 121. The Legal Department had considered your letter and then made inquiry of the Writing Committee about the possibility of putting something in the publications concerning the law regarding confidentiality with regard to child abuse cases.

It is the opinion of the Writing and Service Committees that nothing be put in print in the publications, either in The Watchtower or Our Kingdom Ministry, concerning this subject. However, if the publishers in Australia need further information in this area, what do you propose to include in an article in Our Kingdom Ministry or possibly in a letter if it is really needed? Could we hear from you on this point before anything further is done?

Dear Brothers:

We are writing further to you on the subject of child abuse. We understand some of the questions set out in your letter of October 29, 1997, No. 121 were not answered. We have in our files a letter dated December 16, 1997 discussing these matters, but it appears this was never sent to you, but was mistakenly filed away. We apologize for this. We will now address your questions.

It is understood that if the law requires elders to report cases of child abuse, they should comply with the law and do so. Of course, it would be better if the person confessing to having engaged in such activity would himself report it, but if he does not do so, the elders should do it. Where the law does not obligate the elders to report cases that come to their attention, there is no need for them to do so, but if the matter becomes known to the authorities and they are required to disclose information they have in their possession, they will do so unless they can claim ecclesiastical privilege.

In view of this, we do not think there will be any problem in following the procedure in *ks*91, page 97 regarding having the body of elders appoint two elders to see whether there is substance to an accusation. The body of elders would no doubt assign the elder to whom the accusation is made and probably the presiding overseer to investigate the matter. Of course, what has been stated in previous letters about contacting the Society should be followed in these cases.

You raised the question as to how much should be said when notifying the elders in a congregation to which a "known child molester" moves. We believe that what is said in the Society's March 14, 1997 letter can be followed without difficulty. The letter of introduction should also state what the elders in the former congregation have been doing to assist him and any needed cautions should be provided to the body of elders in the new congregation. The supplemental school for elders held early in 1997 had some additional material that may be helpful. Please refer to part 135 for this. You should keep in mind that the March 14, 1997 letter was prepared with a view toward qualifications for appointed service and does not address legal obligations, including the duty to report.

As to the question of reporting a matter that is many years old to the authorities when such an individual moves to a state where reporting is mandatory, the elders should determine what the law requires and comply with that. You now have the letter from the Service Committee dated GSC:AD December 31, 1998, No. 164S concerning the appointment of persons after 20 years has passed. Of course, this refers to theocratic procedures within the congregation. What should be done with regard to reporting would depend on what the local law states.

You asked whether the elders should tell the accused that they are obligated to make a report where such is the case. Probably from a legal viewpoint there is no obligation to tell the accused that a report will be made, but we do think that from the moral viewpoint the accused should be told what the law requires and that we have an obligation to comply with it. Even if there is no legal requirement that we make a report, it would be a kindness to the accused to let him know that should the matter later become known to the authorities, the law may require the elders to reveal what they know of the matter. (Romans 13:4; Matt. 22:21) You were given approval in a letter from the Service Committee dated GSC:AS July 24, 1998 to publish some information in your edition of Our Kingdom Ministry concerning keeping certain matters confidential. We do not know whether this has been done yet, but it should prove helpful to the elders in these circumstances.

If a report is made, it would be preferable to keep only a brief record in the file that a report was made. However, if a written report is made, or a written statement is taken, then a copy of that report or statement should be retained in the congregation's file. Of course, if a judicial committee is formed, the normal documentation would be retained in the files.

Concerning the possibility that brothers from Bethel may be called upon as witnesses, we do not see that there is much risk in that, since in most cases the authorities will look to the local congregation for witnesses and records about a particular case. It would be a rare case where the local brothers would not have the information but those in Bethel would. As to the attorney-client privilege, it is our understanding that those working under the supervision of a lawyer are also protected by the privilege. Therefore, discussions with those brothers in your Legal Department who take calls under the supervision of an attorney should be protected by the privilege. Of course, the matter may need to be reported to the Service Department, and we do not know whether the privilege could be extended to them. In any event, it should be a rare case when one of these brothers would be called as a witness.

Thank you for your continued concern regarding the serious matter of child abuse. We all look forward to the time when such conduct will no longer occur. We regret the delay in sending you this information, and hope what we have now stated will be helpful.

Please be assured of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

We are providing you with revised guidelines for use by the Service Desk(s) when handling certain matters. The attachment dated September 1, 2005, replaces the guidelines of March 31, 1997. The information in the revised guidelines is confidential and should only be distributed to the Service Desk(s) in your branch office. Comments in the guidelines are not to be included in the letters your Service Desk(s) sends out to answer questions raised by those who make inquiries.

The following are some notable adjustments that are included in the updated guidelines.

1) In point 1, a statement was added to the effect that elders are to not interview a victim or a victim's relatives when determining what the current feeling is toward an individual guilty of child abuse. Elders are to communicate with the branch office if they feel that this needs to be done. The branch office should be very cautious before giving elders permission to interview anyone, whether it is the victim or the victim's relatives.

2) In the "Factors to consider" for point 3, the statement is added that if twenty or more years have passed an individual who has built up a good record may serve in a position of trust provided there is no outcry.

3) In point 7, the reference is removed about elders meeting with a brother who is reaching out so as to make him aware of what is stated in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower.

4) In the "Factors to consider" for point 7, direction is given to the effect that if a brother has not previously served as an elder or ministerial servant, it would be appropriate to ask him privately if he has ever been involved in the past with child sexual molestation. This would most appropriately be done when two elders meet with him about his receiving an appointment from the branch office.

5) For point 8, it has been clarified that those guilty of child abuse would not qualify to serve as an auxiliary or regular pioneer since they would not be considered exemplary.

6) In point 9, a statement is included about restricting a known child abuser from using the Kingdom Hall for a wedding ceremony.

7) Another statement added to point 9 is that a book study should not be held in the home of a known child abuser.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

8) In point 11, it is explained that a former child abuser is not to work in the field ministry with children, including his own children, unless another adult publisher who is in good standing in the congregation accompanies him.

9) In point 11, a statement concerning Caesar restricting a known child abuser from participating in the ministry is provided along with instructions on how the elders are to handle this type of matter.

10) In point 11, direction is also given about what precautions to take when the elders are notified that a child abuser is living in the territory.

11) A final change with point 11 is the removal of the reference about elders speaking with an individual who desires to be baptized so as to make him aware of what is stated in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower.

12) For point 12, a statement was added to the effect that when a former child abuser is appointed to a position of trust, there is no need to pass information about his sin to another congregation's elders.

13) Also, in point 12, in the "Factors to consider" section, it is mentioned that if an individual is disfellowshipped there is no need to mention all the details of the person's sin. The elders would simply inform the new congregation that the individual was guilty of child abuse.

We trust this information will be helpful to you. Please be assured of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Your brothers,

GUIDELINES FOR BRANCH SERVICE DESK USE ONLY—September 1, 2005

Questions have come up with regard to the January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked." Set out below are suggestions and guidelines that should help you in formulating answers to some of these questions. Following the information in the answer section, factors to consider when making decisions are offered. These comments are not to be included in the letters your service desk sends out to answer questions raised by those who make inquiries but are for the guidance of the service desk only.

1. According to the article, a former child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Does that mean he would automatically be disqualified even if the molestation took place before his becoming a baptized Christian?

Answer: Not necessarily, because someone who has come into the truth has been 'made new in the force actuating his mind and has put on the new personality.' (Eph. 4:22-24) While he has been "washed clean" from sins committed prior to baptism, his past conduct could still have an effect on his qualifying for congregation responsibilities. (1 Cor. 6:11) Therefore, all of the factors would need to be carefully weighed. In any case, he should never be recommended hastily. In view of potential difficulty, while the elders make the recommendation, the final decision is always made by the branch office, not by the local elders.

The following questions should be considered when determining whether he qualifies to serve: How many years ago did he commit the sin? What was the extent of the conduct? Was it a single incident, or was it repeated? What were the circumstances? What was his age at the time? What was the age of his victim? Is there an outcry about his situation? Were the authorities ever informed of his actions? If so, what action did they take and do they have him listed as a sex offender? How do the community and the secular authorities view him? If he were extended privileges would this be disturbing to others, including the victim(s) and their relatives? Has he given clear indication by his words and actions that he is now guided by God's spirit? (Gal. 5:16; Rom. 8:5) Has he demonstrated that he is "self-controlled?" (Gal. 5:23; Titus 1:8) Does he have a reputation of being "free from accusation," "irreprehensible," "having a fine testimony from those on the outside?" (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7.). How do his victim(s) and/or relatives view him now? Are members of the congregation aware of what took place? How do they view him?

As to determining how a former child molester is viewed, when the abuse took place many years ago there is no need for elders to conduct interviews either with members of the congregation or with the one(s) wronged or his or her relatives in order to determine what the current feeling is toward him. Doing so may bring up painful memories and cause further harm. Rather, from their own observation, elders are to explain the relationship between the victim and the former abuser.

On the other hand, if the elders believe it is necessary or prudent to approach the injured party or his or her relatives, they should write the branch office for approval before doing so, providing the reasons why they believe it is necessary to do so. The branch office should consider very carefully how the victim or the victim's family would potentially be affected if they were to be interviewed.

2. What if a man who molested a child before getting baptized is already serving in a responsible position? Must he now step aside?

Answer: Possibly not, but it depends on the circumstances. The elders should consider the matter and make a recommendation to the branch office. (See the answer to Question 1.)

Factors to consider: As with the previous situation, we believe there may be some circumstances that would enable him to continue serving. The elders would need to carefully consider the same questions and Scriptural principles outlined above. If he has served faithfully in a position of trust for many years, there is no evidence of repeating his past wrongdoing, his previous wrongdoing is known only by the responsible brothers, the congregation has respect for him, there is no outcry, and everything else points to his currently enjoying Jehovah's blessing, we think the branch office could allow him to retain his congregation privilege. Such a case could be decided on an individual basis.

3. If a man molested a child many years ago after getting baptized, could he retain his privilege of service? If so, under what circumstances could he continue to serve? Is there a time limit on how long ago the offense must have occurred?

Answer: Yes, it is possible. The elders should carefully consider the matter and provide full details in making a recommendation to the branch office. (See the answer to Question 1.) The following example illustrates under what circumstances a man might continue to serve: A Christian may have sexually molested a child many years ago, perhaps even several decades. The matter was handled at that time by the congregation. Since that time, he has had an exemplary record of theocratic service and has been serving faithfully. He has not repeated the sin and there is no evidence that he is a threat to children. Over many years he has performed "works that befit repentance." (Acts 26:20) In every respect, he has demonstrated himself to be chaste in conduct. All indications point to his having Jehovah's blessing. Given these circumstances and the fact that no present questions are being raised about his qualifications nor is there a cry for his removal, we believe that he might continue to serve. Of course, each situation would be judged individually.

Factors to consider: In the case of an individual who has committed child abuse while baptized, if twenty or more years have passed and the brother has built up a faithful record of service, there is no outcry, and everything else points to his currently enjoying Jehovah's blessing, the branch office may decide a valid basis exists to allow him to continue to serve in a position of trust, if he otherwise qualifies

If a former child molester continues in a position of responsibility—whether the sin occurred before or after baptism—there may be some serious problems if he later molests a child. This could bring great reproach on Jehovah's name and it could affect the faith and confidence that our brothers have in Jehovah's organization. So, the branch office is to consider this matter very carefully, considering all the potential implications and factors, before allowing a former child molester to serve.

4. The article on page 29 states that a "man known to have been a child molester" does not qualify for congregation privileges. What is meant by "known?"

Answer: A man "known" to be a former child molester has reference to the perception of the community and the Christian congregation. It would be one who has sexually abused a minor and is still viewed negatively by the victim's family, the congregation, or the elders; or one who is viewed by the community or secular authorities as someone who is a sexual abuser of minors, whether the abuse has been established by the congregation or not. Such a man is not "free from accusation," "irreprehensible," nor does he have "a fine testimony from those on the outside." (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7) In view of his notorious past, people in the community would not respect him and the brothers may even stumble if he were appointed.

Factors to consider: The term "known" needs to be qualified. At times, information regarding a man is known only to the elders. The fact that they have knowledge of his past sin should not automatically rule out his serving. There may be unusual circumstances that would indicate this is not necessary.

5. From a theocratic standpoint, whom do we regard as a "child molester?"

Answer: The February 1, 1997, Watchtower "Questions From Readers" quotes Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, which defines "pedophilia" as "sexual perversion in which children are the preferred sexual object." In referring to the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked," the above-referred to "Questions From Readers" made the point "that what The Watchtower was discussing was a child's being made the object of sexual abuse, including fondling, by an adult." [Italics ours.] The January 1, 1997, Watchtower also refers to a child molester in the congregation as "a baptized adult Christian." Thus, from a theocratic standpoint, we would generally regard a "child molester" as an adult.

In other words, child sexual abuse occurs when an adult uses a child to gratify his or her own sexual desires. It may involve what the Bible calls fornication, or por◎nei'a, which could include manipulation of genitalia, sexual intercourse, and oral or anal sex. Some abusive acts may amount to what the Bible condemns as "loose conduct", such as the fondling of breasts, explicitly immoral proposals, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, and indecent exposure. (Gal. 5:19-21; see footnote on page 10 of the October 8, 1993, issue of Awake!) Since the adult involves a child in such activities, all of these actions would be considered child sexual abuse.

Yet, the level of seriousness is not the same in every case. (For instance, an adult who rapes or fondles the genitalia of a child, would be much more culpable than someone who showed pornography to a child, even though such unclean actions could escalate.) Thus, the elders handling the matter would have to determine what the adult actually did.

6. At what age would we regard a child molester an adult? Does the age of the child who is the "victim" play a factor?

Answer: The word "adult" is broadly defined, and so we cannot specify a certain age when one becomes an adult. From a legal standpoint, the definition depends on the country in which one lives. For instance, in the United States, one is generally viewed as an adult somewhere between the ages of 18 and 21. In other countries, the legal age may be defined differently. From a theocratic standpoint, the Bible does not indicate a specific calendar age at which time one enters adulthood. Therefore, each case would need to be dealt with on an individual basis.

When judging whether an individual is a child molester, you would need to consider the ages of both the "molester" and the "child." As pointed out in the March 14, 1997, letter to all bodies of elders, in judging cases of alleged child abuse, we are not referring to a situation where an adult has sexual relations with a consenting minor who is approaching adulthood and who is only a few years younger than the adult. Rather, we are referring to a situation where it is established that an adult brother or sister has been guilty of sexually abusing a young child or a non-consenting minor who is approaching adulthood. So it is important that the ages of both the "molester" and the "child" be considered. If some doubt existed as to whether an act constituted child molestation and whether privileges should be revoked, extended or retained by a man, the elders should refer the matter to the branch office and provide complete details.

7. Should the elders ask a man who is reaching out for congregation privileges if he ever molested a child?

Answer: No. It is not the duty of elders to query an individual about whether he ever molested children. It would also not be appropriate for elders to meet with brothers reaching out for privileges to make them aware of what is stated in the January 1, 1997, Watchtower. The point the elders should have in mind is that they should avoid recommending any man "known" as a former child molester.

Factors to consider: When the branch office approves a recommendation for one to be a ministerial servant or elder, we ask two elders to speak with a man before announcing his appointment. They will ask if there is anything in his past or in his personal or family life that would prevent him from being qualified to accept the appointment, or if there is any other reason why his appointment should not be announced. If he has never previously served as an elder or a ministerial servant, the elders should specifically ask him if he has ever been involved in the past with child sexual molestation. If he confesses to sexually molesting a child in the past, then the S-2 form is returned to the branch and the matter can be reconsidered. If the branch office is keeping track of such ones, as has been suggested, they would be aware of his past conduct if he is later recommended.

8. What does page 29 mean when it says that a known child molester "cannot be a pioneer"?

Answer: It means that if in the perception of the community or in the minds of those in the congregation a man is "known" to be a former child molester, he would not qualify as an auxiliary or regular pioneer.

Factors to consider: An auxiliary or regular pioneer is to be "an exemplary publisher." A person guilty of child abuse is not exemplary and would therefore not meet the qualifications of a regular pioneer. (See the Organized book page 113, paragraph 2.) It is also understood that a former child molester would not qualify as a special pioneer, a Bethel family member, an international servant, a missionary, for the traveling work, or any similar special full-time service. This would be so even if he is not perceived by the community to be a former child molester. However, if the offense was many years ago, the answers to Questions 1, 2, and 3 should be considered.

9. The article says that a former child molester could "have parts on the Theocratic Ministry School and non-teaching parts in the Service Meeting." What might these parts include? What other duties could he handle in the congregation? Are there other restrictions that would apply to him?

Answer: Anyone guilty of child molestation is not exemplary and so should not be extended to him any specific responsibility that could be construed as an assigned duty, even though some assignments might be considered minor. He should not be used to handle accounts, literature, magazines, or territories. Nor would he be used as an attendant, microphone handler, to operate sound equipment, to represent the congregation in prayer, or to present "Announcements" on the Service Meeting. He would not be used as the reader at the Congregation Book Study or Watchtower Study, nor to conduct a meeting for field service. It would be advisable not to have a book study in his home. And, he would not qualify to auxiliary or regular pioneer. Whereas he could volunteer to assist with general care of the Kingdom Hall where he attends meetings, he could not be approved to work on other Kingdom Halls or Assembly Halls. He may give student talks on the Theocratic Ministry School and share in non-teaching parts on the Service Meeting, provided that his doing so will not be offensive to those in the congregation who know of his past wrongdoing. In any case, he would not be given a teaching part, one that would normally be assigned to an elder or a capable ministerial servant who has cultivated good speaking ability. (See "Question Box" in the February 1975 and October 1976 Kingdom Ministry.)

Also, he should not be allowed to use the Kingdom Hall for his wedding. Since he is not in good standing and cannot be used in positions of responsibility within the congregation, it would be better for him to have the wedding ceremony in another location. Additionally, even if after many years have passed, it would not be good to have a book study in the home of a known child abuser since this may be a stumbling block for those who may know of brother's past.

Factors to consider: A Service Meeting teaching part would include being chairman of an introductory part on this meeting, presenting a talk, conducting an interview, and handling a question-and-answer part. He would not qualify for this. In the United States, there is little chance he could be used for such anyway because there is usually a sufficient number of elders and ministerial servants in each congregation to care for these parts. Logically, the expression "non-teaching parts" on the Service Meeting would primarily refer to participating in demonstrations or interviews under the direction of an elder or capable ministerial servant, as there is little else he could participate in on the Service Meeting. In the Theocratic Ministry School he could only give student talks.

10. What procedure does the Society follow in handling letters of inquiry or reports that a publisher knows of an appointed one who molested a child in the past?

Answer: If the inquirer telephones the branch office, he should be encouraged to put his comments in writing and to provide the branch office with the complete details. If the inquirer writes, we could answer in harmony with the Scriptural principles presented earlier.

Factors to consider: It may be that letters will be received from publishers that say they know one who molested a child and he now has a congregation privilege. Some publishers have asked: 'What responsibility do I have to report him?' Others are very angry and have demanded his removal. Letters may be received from elders asking such questions and expressing similar views.

The validity of the accusation(s) should be verified to the degree possible. In the case of an elder writing, he should ascertain any legal responsibility he may have to the report the matter to the authorities. If the individual writing has not already done so, he should notify the Legal Department. Individuals should not be discouraged from reporting matters to the authorities, but should be reminded of the need for confidentiality, especially when speaking with others, thus avoiding any charge of slander.

11. What can the congregation elders do to protect children?

Answer: The elders should periodically remind parents of the need to review with their children articles in the organization's publications. (You may refer them to pages 170-71 of the book Learning from the Great Teacher) Elders want to be alert to the activity of any who are known to have molested children in the past. As the January 1. 1997, Watchtower points out on page 29: "True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do." An individual who has manifested a weakness in this regard should be sensitive to his need to not be alone with children. He should refrain from holding or from displaying other forms of affection for children. He must recognize that he had a weakness in this area in the past. The advice at 1 Corinthians 10:12 is wise counsel for one who has shown this kind of weakness. In the spirit of Galatians 6:1 elders should kindly, but firmly, endeavor to readjust any who have had a problem in the past and seem to be showing affection to children or cultivating inappropriate association with such ones. It also would be appropriate for elders to kindly caution any who are doing things that may be a cause for concern to others in the congregation. (l Cor. 10:32) By giving such specific, clear and pointed counsel, elders would be imitating Jehovah who gives specific advice to help his servants avoid temptation. (See the March 15, 1970, issue of The Watchtower "Questions from Readers," pages 190, 191.) At the same time, the response to this counsel by the former molester would be a basis for the elders to decide if he is determined to "abstain from every form of wickedness," and to clear himself of even any hint of wrongdoing. Does he in every respect demonstrate himself to be chaste?—l Thess. 5:22.

When a former child molester (perhaps known only to the elders) begins attending congregation meetings, or a molester is shown mercy and not disfellowshipped, designated elders should kindly, but frankly, discuss with him what type of actions regarding children should be clearly avoided. This would include not allowing children (other than his own) to spend the night in his home, not cultivating friendships with children, and the like.

Additionally, a former abuser should be told not to work alone with children in the field ministry. He should always be accompanied by another adult publisher who is in good standing in the congregation. This also applies to working with his own minor children in the field ministry. If he chooses to do so, there still should always be another adult present. This serves to protect the minor who might answer the door, the former abuser and the reputation of the congregation. In some cases, Caesar may place the restriction that a former abuser cannot engage in the house-to-house witnessing. (Rom. 13:1-7; Gal. 6:7) The elders could determine whether the restrictions apply to other forms of the field ministry such as telephone witnessing or letter writing. The elders may allow the individual to share in these forms of service alone if there is no objection from his parole officer or other government official or agency. If there is an objection, perhaps he can be allowed to participate in the company of another qualified adult publishers.

Factors to consider: This direction could apply in several situations, such as: When a "known" former child molester begins attending congregation meetings; when a judicial committee determines that a child molester is repentant and will remain a member of the Christian congregation; when a child molester is disfellowshipped and later cleans up his life and is reinstated.

Whenever the elders are notified of a known sex offender living in the territory, they are to mark the address on the territory card as a "Do Not Call." Thereafter, two elders should visit these addresses every six months to a year to give the individuals an opportunity to hear the good news and verify whether the sex offender still lives there.

12. What should be done if a former child molester moves to another congregation?

Answer: The normal procedure of sending a letter to the new congregation should be followed. As outlined in the February 1991 Our Kingdom Ministry "Question Box" and in the August 1, 1995, letter to all bodies of elders in the United States, our policy is always to send a letter of introduction when a publisher moves to another congregation. While this should be done in every case, it is imperative that this be done when one who is known to be a former child molester moves. On behalf of the elders, the Congregation Service Committee should write to the new congregation's body of elders and outline the publisher's background and what the elders in the former congregation have done to assist him. Any needed cautions should be provided to the new congregation's body of elders. This information is for the use of the elders only, and should be kept in the congregation's confidential files. The elders should send a copy of this letter to the branch office in one of the "SPECIAL BLUE" envelopes. If a "known" child abuser has moved and information about him has not been sent to the body of elders where he is now serving, then this should be done now.

If more than 20 years have passed and a former child abuser has a good record in the truth, and the branch office decides that he could be appointed to a position of trust—such as an elder, ministerial servant, or regular pioneer—the congregation elders will not have to pass on information regarding the past sin to another congregation's elders.

Factors to consider: If an individual is disfellowshipped, there is no need to forward detailed information to another congregation until the individual submits a request for reinstatement. The elders in the new congregation should only be told that the individual was guilty of child abuse.

We hope that these guidelines will help you in providing some direction and help to the brothers who write in from the field.

Re: Privacy Laws and Proposed Revision of S-77 Form

Dear Brothers:

We have at hand your letter dated LLD September 12, 2008, No. 105, and its enclosures, regarding the matter referenced above. You ask for our approval of the adjusted S-77 form (Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation) and the Instructions for Completing the S-77 form. You also ask if all of the Scriptural references listed on the Instructions for specific disfellowshipping offenses need be listed on the adjusted S-77 form. In addition, you also ask how the adjusted S-77 form is to be identified, distinguishing it from the previous form.

We approve your proposed letter to All Bodies of Elders as well as your proposed adjusted S-77 form and Instructions. Also, all of the Scriptural references listed on the Instructions for specific disfellowshipping offenses should be listed on the adjusted S-77 form. As for designating your adjusted S-77 form, use "S-77-E-Au (10/08)."

Finally, we thank you for your explanation of how you propose to track persons accused of or disfellowshipped for child molestation or other abuse, and we look forward to receiving your further correspondence regarding the merits of forming a separate legal entity to minimize liability exposure.

Please be assured of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Re: New Arrangement for Notification of Disfellowshipping and Disassociation

Dear Brothers:

We would like to advise you of some adjustments that are being implemented in order to simplify the procedure involved in notifying the branch office of persons have been disfellowshipped or who have disassociated themselves from the congregation. These adjustments will also impact on the retention of documents related to such matters. We enclose 10 copies of the revised Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) along with a separate form containing adjusted Instructions for Completing the Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) (S-77i). The congregation secretary should immediately destroy/shred all unused versions of the previous S-77 form.

There are three fundamental changes regarding the notification procedure. We encourage all elders to become familiar with the adjusted procedures which are summarised below.

1. Offences and Scriptural References

Under the heading "DISFELLOWSHIPPING" the judicial committee must identify the offence(s) for which the disfellowshipping action was taken, along with the appropriate Scriptural references. Only offences and Scriptural references listed on the S-77i ("Instructions") should be used. Please note that all Scriptural references cited on the S-77i ("Instructions") should be listed. For example:

> Porneia (Lev. 20:10, 13, 15, 16; Rom. 1:24, 26, 27, 32; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Deut. 23:17, 18)
> Drunkenness (1 Cor. 5:11; 6:9, 10)

At times, you will need to discern which offence is applicable. For example, "Child abuse" is not an offence listed on the S-77i ("Instructions"). In this case, the Scriptural offence will likely be shown as:

> Gross uncleanness (Eph. 4:19, Gal. 5:19), or > Porneia (Lev. 20:10, 13, 15, 16; Rom. 1:24, 26, 27, 32; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Deut. 23:17, 18)

Nothing apart from the offence and Scriptural references listed on the S-77i ("Instructions") should be recorded on this section of the form. Sufficient space has been provided to list several offences and Scriptural references. Before sending the S-77, the judicial committee chairman will review the S-77i ("Instructions") and check off each box under the heading "Reporting." After making a copy of the S-77 and summation (referred to the next paragraph) the chairman will post the two original documents to the branch office using a special blue envelope.

2. Summation

Previously, the judicial committee completed section 2 of the form by providing a summation of what took place. From now on, we would like the judicial committee to always include a separate sheet briefly summarising what took place. The summation should be concise and include the reasons why the judicial committee judged the person to be unrepentant. It would rarely be necessary for a summation to be longer than one page. The summation should not be stapled or fixed in a permanent way to the S-77 form.

In some instances, specific details may be necessary. For example, if a person is being disfellowshipped for viewing pornography, your comments would need to give insight on why such wrongdoing was considered to be "Gross uncleanness."—See our letter To All Bodies of Elders of June 7, 2006.

Usually, only the S-77 and summation will be sent to the branch office. However, where a person provides the elders with a letter of disassociation, this letter should also be sent to the branch office. As mentioned, a copy of each of these documents should be retained by the chairman of the judicial committee.

3. Document Retention

After the branch office processes the S-77 and summation, you will be sent a date-stamped copy of the S-77. In some cases, the branch office will add additional comments to the back page of the form. Once the date-stamped S-77 form is received, it should be placed in a sealed envelope in the congregation's confidential file. The front of the envelope should be dated and show the name of the disfellowshiped person as well as the names of the elders who comprised the judicial committee.

All other documents regarding the case should be destroyed. This includes any notes that the elders who served on the judicial may have retained, previous copies of the S-77, and the summation. The chairman of the judicial committee will be responsible to ensure all documents, with the exception of the date-stamped S-77 form, are destroyed. The chairman should then sign and date the back page of the S-77. The only exception to this would be the signed letter of disassociation. This letter should be retained in the congregation permanent file.

May we take this opportunity to express our heartfelt appreciation for your tireless efforts to shepherd the flock in your care. (1 Peter 5:2) Please be assured of our warm love and best wishes.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Re: Retention of Confidential Records

Dear Brothers:

No doubt you are aware of the increased emphasis governments are placing on the collection, retention, and dissemination of personal information. In an effort to minimise the unnecessary accumulation of confidential information, we wrote to you in our letter SC:LLD November 20, 2008, regarding the revised method of reporting disfellowshipping action and disassociation. Please read the November 20 letter before reading this letter.

We would like you to select two or three qualified elders from your body who are experienced in handling judicial matters to review the congregation permanent file. If there is only one elder in the local congregation, this brother will need to follow through as directed below. The selected elder(s) will undertake a review of all documents in the permanent files, other than letters from the branch office, and separate them into two categories:

1. Records regarding persons who remain disfellowshiped, disassociated, or who have been reinstated. These records must be sent to the branch office.
2. Persons reproved by a judicial committee, removed as an unbaptised publisher, and other non-judicial files containing personal information. These records are not required by the branch office.

INFORMATION TO BE SENT TO THE BRANCH OFFICE

Disfellowshipped or disassociated persons: The selected elder(s) will open and read each judicial file. After becoming thoroughly familiar with the contents, the selected elder(s) will complete a replacement copy on the new Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) form in harmony with the directions provided in our letter SC:LLD November 20, 2008. The selected elder(s) will print or type their names on the new S-77 form under the heading "The Judicial Committee" and place their signature on the space provided. Under their signatures, they should type in the names of the elders who served on the original judicial committee. A brief summation of the case should be prepared for each new S-77 form. The summation should not be stapled or fixed in a permanent way to the S-77 form. Please refer to the sample copy of the completed S-77 form enclosed in our November 20 letter.

Once the above procedure has been followed, the chairman will post all of the completed documents to the branch office via registered post marked "Attention Service Department." You will receive a date-stamped copy of the S-77 back from the branch. This copy should be placed in the congregation file and all other documents relating to the matter should be destroyed according to the instructions in our November 20 letter.

Reinstated persons: The selected elder(s) may destroy the record if more than five years have passed since the reinstatement, unless there is there is a good reason for retaining it

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

(For example, a matter involving child abuse. See our letter September 25, 1984.) If a record is to be retained, the selected elder(s) will prepare a new S-77 form and summation as discussed above and send these to the branch office via registered post marked "Attention Service Department." After receiving a date-stamped copy of the S-77 form all other documents relating to the matter should be destroyed as discussed above.

INFORMATION THAT WILL NOT BE SENT TO THE BRANCH OFFICE

Persons reproved by a judicial committee or removed as an unbaptised publisher: The selected elder(s) may destroy records of persons reproved by a judicial committee if judicial restrictions have been removed and more than three years have passed since the matter was handled, unless there is there is a good reason for retaining it. Similarly, if a person previously removed as an unbaptised publisher and is now a publisher again or a baptised member of the congregation, the record may be destroyed unless there is there is a good reason for retaining it.

If a record is to be retained in either of these cases, the selected elder(s) will prepare a brief summation of the matter containing only pertinent information and destroy all other records. No copies of these records should be sent to the branch office.

Non-judicial files: The selected elder(s) may also want to review all other files in the congregation's permanent file (For example, letters of introduction and other general correspondence.) These files should also be destroyed unless there is a good reason to retain them. These records should not be sent to the branch office. For general information on the retention of congregation records, please refer to the Question Box in the February 1974 Our Kingdom Ministry.

We would like all bodies of elders to ensure that confidential records relating to the new S-77 form are dealt with immediately. We therefore ask you to handle this matter urgently, so that we receive your correspondence by December 20, 2008. We realise that considerable time will be involved in following through with these instructions and we express our sincere appreciation for your diligent assistance in dealing with this important matter. May Jehovah continue to bless the self-sacrificing spirit you and your dear families show. We send our warm Christian love and best wishes.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA

Re: Mandatory Reporting of Child Abuse in South Australia

Dear Brothers:

As mentioned in last year's Kingdom Ministry School, we would like to remind all elders that new legislation in South Australia has extended the obligations of mandatory reporting of child abuse further than has previously been the case. Ministers of religion and volunteers in a religious organisation, which would include elders, ministerial servants, and possibly pioneers, are now obliged to report child abuse if they have a reasonable suspicion that a child has been abused or is likely to be abused.

Since pioneers and ministerial servants will usually report any allegation or suspicion of child abuse to the elders, it is now even more important that elders contact the branch office immediately upon hearing of such. This should be done before any further inquiries or investigations take place.

We send our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Your brothers,

Congregational concerns regarding accusations of child sexual abuse .....Pars. 8-20
Helping victims of child sexual abuse .....Par. 21

CONFIDENTIAL (PC)

Dear Brothers:

1. This letter updates the letters to all bodies of elders regarding child abuse dated August 1, 1995; March 14, 1997; July 20, 1998; April 1, 2004; June 5, 2006; and May 24, 2010. Those letters should be removed from the congregation permanent file of policy letters and be destroyed. No one should keep originals or copies of any of those letters.

2. Additionally, much fine direction has been included in the Shepherding textbook. Thus, elders should first consult the Shepherding textbook and review the Scriptural principles involved. They should thereafter study the additional points outlined in this letter. As you review this letter, please note that paragraphs 3-7 set forth legal concerns regarding accusations of child abuse. Paragraphs 8-20 set forth congregational concerns. This letter should be carefully consulted anytime a matter involving child abuse arises.

LEGAL CONCERNS REGARDING ACCUSATIONS OF CHILD ABUSE

3. What is child abuse from a legal standpoint? Child abuse includes the sexual or physical abuse of a minor (generally a person less than 18 years of age). It would also include the extreme neglect of a minor by his parent or guardian. Child sexual abuse generally includes sexual intercourse with a minor; oral or anal sex with a minor; fondling the genitals, breasts, or buttocks of a minor; voyeurism of a minor; indecent exposure to a minor; soliciting a minor for sexual conduct; or any kind of involvement with child pornography. Depending on the circumstances of the case, it may also include "sexting" with a minor. "Sexting" describes the sending of nude photos, seminude photos, or sexually explicit text messages electronically, such as by phone.

4. Some states have child-abuse reporting laws that, depending on the facts, mandate elders to report an accusation to the authorities. Thus, when elders learn of an accusation of child abuse, two elders from their congregation should immediately call the Legal Department for legal advice. If the individuals involved are in different congregations, each body of elders should arrange for two of their elders to call the Legal Department. A call should be made even when both persons involved in sexual misconduct are minors. The elders should not ask an alleged victim, the accused person, or relatives of the victim or accused to call the Legal Department. The elders should call the Legal Department even in the following situations:

- The alleged abuse occurred many years ago.
- The alleged abuse is based on the testimony of only one witness.
- The alleged abuse is believed to be a repressed memory.
- The alleged abuse involved perpetrators or victims who are deceased.
- The alleged abuse is believed to have already been reported to the authorities by someone.
- The alleged perpetrator or victim is no longer a member of the congregation.
- The alleged abuse occurred before the alleged perpetrator or victim was baptized.
- The alleged victim is now an adult.
- The alleged abuse occurred in the past, and you are not certain whether the elders involved at the time called the Legal Department for direction.

5. The Legal Department will provide you with legal advice based on the facts and the applicable law. If the individual who is accused of the child abuse is associated with a congregation, please provide the Legal Department with his date of birth and, if applicable, his date of baptism. The same information should be provided in connection with any victim(s). After a report has been made to the Legal Department, depending on the need, the elders may be directed to contact the Service Department for assistance with questions regarding theocratic or judicial aspects of the case or regarding how to protect children.

6. Two elders should also call the Legal Department regarding any prison inmate who has been accused of child abuse in the past and who is now associating with a congregation, such as by attending congregation meetings held in the prison. This would apply whether he is baptized or not. In some cases, elders may not be authorized to inquire of the offense that an inmate may have committed. But if the elders learn that the alleged offense has to do with child abuse, they should call the Legal Department immediately.

7. If the elders become aware of minors associated with a congregation "sexting" with other minors or of adults "sexting" with minors, the Legal Department should be called immediately. The Legal Department does not need to be called when the elders receive reports of adults (that is, cases in which all parties involved are at least 18 years old) "sexting" one another.

CONGREGATIONAL CONCERNS REGARDING ACCUSATIONS OF CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

8. What is child molestation from a congregational standpoint? Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary defines "pedophilia" as "sexual perversion in which children are the preferred sexual object." (See "Questions From Readers" in The Watchtower of February 1, 1997, page 29.) Deuteronomy 23:17, 18 condemns such practices as "detestable." (See the footnotes to verses 17 and 18 in the Reference Bible. Also, see the footnote on page 10 of the October 8, 1993, issue of Awake!) In harmony with these references, we are herein discussing sexual perversion in which children are the object of sexual abuse, including fondling, by an adult. We are not discussing a situation wherein a minor who is a willing participant and who is approaching adulthood has sexual relations with an adult who is a few years older than the minor nor, generally speaking, are we discussing situations in which only minors are involved. Rather, we are referring to situations in which it is established that an adult brother or sister has been guilty of sexually abusing a young child or has been sexually involved with a minor who is approaching adulthood and who was not a willing participant.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

9. As spiritual shepherds, elders should continue to make every effort to protect all in the congregation, especially children, from the unwholesome practices of the world. (Isa. 32:1, 2) One of these is child sexual abuse. We abhor the sexual abuse of children and will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of his gross sin. (Rom. 12:9) Elders should take seriously their responsibility in this matter so that the congregations will be safeguarded from any valid accusation of neglect in protecting children from sexual abuse.

10. Regardless of whether the law requires the elders to report an accusation to the authorities, steps need to be taken to protect children. Elders should help the parents of the children involved to understand that they have the primary responsibility for protecting their children. Obviously, such parents will be keenly interested in taking precautions in this regard. Our publications contain helpful information on how parents can protect their children.—w10 11/1 p. 13; w08 10/1 p. 21; g 10/07 pp. 3-11; lr pp. 170-171; g03 2/8 p. 9; g99 4/8 pp. 9, 11; g97 4/8 p. 14; w96 12/1 pp. 13-14; fy pp. 61-62; g93 10/8 pp. 5-13.

11. In addition, the elders should investigate every allegation of child sexual abuse. When elders learn of an accusation, in addition to this letter, they should carefully review the direction outlined in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 12, paragraphs 18-21. However, in evaluating the evidence for internal congregational purposes, they must bear in mind the Bible's clear direction: "No single witness should rise up against a man respecting any error or any sin . . . At the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deut. 19:15) This requirement to consider testimony of two or three witnesses was confirmed by Jesus. (Matt. 18:16) Thus, although they investigate every allegation, the elders are not authorized by the Scriptures to take congregational action unless there is a confession or there are two credible witnesses. However, even though the elders are not authorized to take congregation action when there is only one witness, the elders should remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused. (See paragraph 12 of this letter.) If two persons are witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, their testimony can be deemed sufficient to take judicial action. (1 Tim. 5:19, 24, 25) If the person is not repentant over the gross sin, disfellowshipping action would be warranted. If the decision is to reprove, the reproof should be announced. (ks10 chap. 7 par. 20, second bullet) This will serve as a protection for the congregation. Information concerning an individual accused of child molestation, proved or otherwise, should be placed in the congregation confidential file and marked "Do Not Destroy" and kept indefinitely. This includes Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) forms on individuals who have been disfellowshipped for child sexual abuse and then later reinstated. Because of the delicate nature of handling a judicial case where an adult sexually abuses a child, please contact your circuit overseer. He will designate an experienced elder from your circuit to serve as chairman of the judicial committee.

12. Loving elders should take steps to protect children, especially when a judicial committee determines that the one who has sexually abused a child is repentant and will be allowed to remain a member of the Christian congregation. The same concern would be shown when one who has sexually abused a child is disfellowshipped, later cleans up his life, and is reinstated. The elders should be especially mindful of the activity of any who are known to have sexually abused a child in the past. They should also ensure that newly-appointed elders are made aware of this caution. It would be appropriate for elders to talk kindly but very frankly to individuals who have manifested a weakness in this regard, strongly cautioning them to refrain from displaying affection for children, to avoid hugging or holding children on their lap, never to be alone with a child (other than their own), not to allow children to spend the night in their home, not to work alone in field service (hence, they should always be accompanied by another adult), and not to cultivate friendships with children. This not only serves to protect children but will help to prevent those who have sexually abused a child from putting themselves in the way of temptation, being subjected to an unfounded accusation, or doing things that may cause concern to others in the congregation. (1 Cor. 10:12, 32) If the individual does not follow this direction from the elders, the elders should immediately call the Service Department for assistance.

13. If the individual does not follow the above direction from the elders, or if the elders believe he may be a "predator," the elders should immediately call the Service Department for assistance. A "predator" is one who clearly lacks self-control and by his actions provides reason to believe he will continue to prey on children. Not every individual who has sexually abused a child in the past is considered a "predator." The branch office, not the local body of elders, determines whether an individual who has sexually abused children in the past will be considered a "predator." If the branch office determines that an individual will be considered a "predator," parents with minor children will need to be warned of the danger that exists so that they can protect their children. In such a case, and only after receiving direction and instructions from the Service Department, two elders should be assigned to meet with the parents of minor children in order to provide a warning. At the same time that parents are warned about an individual, it would be appropriate for the elders to inform the individual that parents in the congregation will be discreetly informed.

14. What step should be taken when you learn of an adult who has been viewing child pornography? As stated in paragraph 4 of this letter, two elders should call the Legal Department. After receiving legal direction, the elders will be directed to contact the Service Department for theocratic direction.

15. Who is considered a known child molester? The January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" mentions on page 29 that a man "known to have been a child molester" does not qualify for privileges in the congregation. The expression "known to have been a child molester" has reference to how such a man is considered in the community and in the Christian congregation. In the eyes of the congregation, an adult "known" to be a former child molester is not "free from accusation" or "irreprehensible," nor does he have "a fine testimony from people on the outside." (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7) In view of his past, those in the community would not respect him and congregation members might be stumbled over his appointment. Keep in mind that the branch office, not the local body of elders, determines whether one who has sexually abused a child is considered a known child molester.

16. When a known child molester moves to another congregation, the elders should follow the procedure set forth in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 12, paragraph 20. If a known child molester is in prison and is transferred to another facility or is released, it is important to inform the appropriate congregation of his situation in writing, if it is possible to do so. This direction also applies when one considered a "predator," as outlined in paragraph 13 of this letter, moves to another congregation.

17. From time to time, local authorities may inform you that a sex offender is living in your area. The notice usually provides the address of the individual and may state the nature of his criminal activity. In such a case, the elders should list that address on the appropriate territory card as a "Do Not Call." Thereafter, two elders can periodically make calls on that address. Following this direction will assist you in protecting the flock.

18. Sexual misconduct involving only minors: What steps should elders take when minors (generally a person less than 18 years of age) engage in sexual misconduct with one another? As stated in paragraph 4 of this letter, two elders should call the Legal Department even when both persons are minors. Minors who have sexual contact with one another are generally not considered as child molesters by the congregation. However, regardless of the ages of those involved, such misconduct is serious. Elders should be alert to render assistance and to protect children. The body of elders should also arrange for the minor(s) to receive assistance in the presence of their believing parent(s), in harmony with the principles and guidelines found in the Scriptures and in our publications.

19. When baptized minors become involved in "sexting," the elders must use good judgment in determining whether the wrongdoing has escalated to a point warranting judicial action. Helpful information can be found in "Questions From Readers" in the July 15, 2006, issue of The Watchtower. Please review this material carefully before concluding that a baptized minor is guilty of gross uncleanness or "brazen conduct, loose conduct." (ks10 chap. 5 par. 9) However, if the baptized minor has been previously counseled and persists in the wrong course, in most cases, judicial action is taken. Each case must be evaluated on its own merit. If elders have questions regarding a specific case they should contact the Service Department. Also, keep in mind that Christian parents should be included in any discussions the elders have with a minor who may be involved in "sexting."

20. The potential serious consequences associated with "sexting" underscore the importance of Christian parents supervising their children's use of cellular telephones and other means of electronic communication. Excellent suggestions can be found on pages 6-7 of the November 2009 issue of Awake! (Matt. 24:45) When a minor has been involved in "sexting," elders can use such excellent material to offer Scriptural counsel and encouragement to both the parents and the child.—1 Pet. 5:2, 3.

HELPING VICTIMS OF CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

21. Some Christians may become troubled with memories and feelings associated with past child sexual abuse. When an elder is approached by someone concerned or distraught about such memories, he should "speak consolingly." (1 Thess. 5:14) Elders should manifest an empathetic, compassionate, patient, and supportive response to those approaching them about such memories. An elder must never be alone with or become the sole confidant of a sister to whom he is not closely related. Helpful suggestions and guidelines can be found in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 4, paragraphs 21-28. The elders should carefully review this material when helping victims of child sexual abuse.

RESTRICTIONS AND PRIVILEGES

22. It cannot be said in every case that one who has sexually abused a child could never qualify for privileges of service in the congregation. However, the elders will certainly want to be very cautious, especially when dealing with one who had repeatedly engaged in this kind of wrongdoing or who had been disfellowshipped for such an offense. Before privileges can be extended, such a man must meet the Scriptural qualifications of being "self-controlled" and "irreprehensible." He must "also have a fine testimony" from individuals inside and outside the congregation. (Titus 1:6-8; 1 Tim. 3:2, 7) Elders should keep in mind what is stated in the January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked," page 29, paragraph 2:

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

"Child sexual abuse reveals an unnatural fleshly weakness. Experience has shown that such an adult may well molest other children. True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do. And the congregation cannot read hearts to tell who is and who is not liable to molest children again. (Jeremiah 17:9) Hence, Paul's counsel to Timothy applies with special force in the case of baptized adults who have molested children: 'Never lay your hands hastily upon any man; neither be a sharer in the sins of others.' (1 Timothy 5:22)."

23. Hence, privileges of service should never be extended hastily. Considerable time should always pass before one who has sexually abused a child is recommended, if ever. It would be up to the local body of elders to determine whether such a recommendation should be made to the branch office, taking into account all factors in each individual case. Please note that unless specifically approved by the branch office, one who has sexually abused a child should not be used to conduct any meetings held in the congregation or in a prison, and he does not qualify to work on any Kingdom Hall project other than one involving the congregation where he serves as a publisher.

24. If the elders as a body conclude that one who has sexually abused a child in the distant past may now qualify for privileges, they should assign two elders to call the Service Department.

25. In view of the foregoing, each elder should make the following notation next to chapter 3, paragraph 20; chapter 5, paragraph 10, second bullet; chapter 7, paragraph 20, second bullet; and chapter 12, paragraph 18, of the Shepherding textbook: "See letter dated October 1, 2012, to all bodies of elders."

26. It is hoped that the direction provided in this letter will help you brothers in handling matters in the congregation so as to protect children from sexual abuse and, at the same time, balance Bible-based justice and mercy. We also hope this direction will assist you to lovingly help victims of child sexual abuse. May Jehovah's rich blessing continue to be with you in carrying out your many responsibilities as shepherds of the flock. With this letter we send our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Re: Child abuse

Dear Brothers:

As outlined in paragraph 11 of the October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders, the elders will contact you when handling judicial cases involving child sexual abuse. When you are contacted, please identify the brother on the special committee list who is best qualified to serve as chairman of the judicial committee. He will serve on the committee along with two elders from the local congregation. This provision will enable the two local elders to gain experience by observing how the experienced elder handles matters. Also, the two local elders will be able to shepherd the victim, the victim's family, the family of the accused, and any others who require assistance.

When preparing the list of brothers qualified to serve on special committees, please make a notation next to the names of any brothers whom you feel are qualified to handle judicial cases involving child abuse. (tg chap. 23 par. 4) This should prove helpful to you if you are contacted by the body of elders for assistance. In due course, Traveling Overseer Guidelines will be updated to reflect this adjusted procedure.

We send our warm Christian love.

Re: Guidelines for Branch Office Service Desks (S-66)

Dear Brothers:

We are pleased to inform you of the release of Guidelines for Branch Office Service Desks (S-66). These revised deskman guidelines take into account the latest direction to all bodies of elders on child abuse matters. The S-66 replaces the current Guidelines for Branch Service Desk Use Only—September 1, 2005, which were sent with our letter to all branches dated SC:AT September 7, 2005, and which were then later updated in our letter to all branch offices GAJ:AT April 30, 2007. These older guidelines should be destroyed.

The S-66 document is now available to Branch Committee and Country Committee members who have access to the "Highly Confidential" security role in the Materials Distribution System (MDS). As explained below, translations of the S-66 will be made available in MDS in other languages. The Branch or Country committee is responsible to provide a printed copy of the S-66 to each member of the Branch or Country committee as well as to each of the elders serving as deskmen in the Service Department. (Branch Organization 6:36) No one else is authorized to access the S-66. Electronic copies should not be distributed and the S-66 will not be made available in any Research library.

As a further aid to your understanding the latest refinements to these guidelines, the MDS item also contains a copy of the S-66 showing the additions and deletions that were made. A printed copy of that second document may also be provided to each authorized brother for his review. Once he has reviewed that document showing the revisions, it should be destroyed. On October 1, 2013, that second document will be removed permanently from the MDS item.

Since it is understood that translations of the S-66 will be needed, vernacular editions of the S-66 may be made available by translation branches on MDS in the major languages. Since the S-66 is considered non-publication material, the Translation Department should not take the lead in translating this material. (See Branch Organization 8:23 and the circular letter to all branches dated GED:ETA June 29, 2010) Only Service Department deskmen or their secretaries who are elders should be used for the translation work. In the case of the S-66, any translation inquiries that cannot be answered by the Branch Committee should be referred to the Service Committee in a numbered letter.

Please be assured of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

GUIDELINES FOR BRANCH OFFICE SERVICE DESKS

1. The January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked" explains the congregational viewpoint of child abuse. The October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders provided instructions in connection with handling child abuse matters that may arise in the congregation. As questions come up from the field in this regard, what is outlined in these Guidelines for Branch Office Service Desks (S-66) should help you in formulating answers to some of these questions. Copies of the guidelines are only to be given to Branch Committee members and service desks. While references to the accused or to the victim are in the masculine gender, the guidelines apply equally to females.

2. The specific comments that are found below are not to be included in the letters the deskman may send out to answer questions raised by those who make inquiries but are for the guidance of the service desk only. As you consider each matter, do so prayerfully and carefully, allowing holy spirit to guide your mind and heart, so that any direction given to the field reflects divine wisdom and discernment as well as love and concern for the sheep.—1 Ki. 3:9; Prov. 2:1-12; Acts 20:28; 1 Cor. 2:10-13; Jas. 1:5; 1 Pet. 5:2, 3.

QUESTION 1: According to the January 1, 1997, Watchtower article, "a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation." Does that mean he would automatically be disqualified even if the molestation took place before his becoming a baptized Christian?

3. Answer: Not necessarily. Someone who has come into the truth has been 'made new in the force actuating his mind and has put on the new personality.' (Eph. 4:22-24) While he has been "washed clean" from sins committed prior to baptism, his past conduct could still have an effect on his qualifying for congregation responsibilities. (1 Cor. 6:11) Therefore, all of the factors would need to be carefully weighed. In any case, he should never be recommended hastily. In view of potential difficulty, although the elders make the recommendation, the final decision is always made by the branch office, not by the local elders.

4. The following questions should be considered when determining whether he qualifies to serve: How many years ago did he commit the sin? What was the extent of the conduct? Was it a single incident, or was it repeated? What were the circumstances? What was his age at the time? What was the age of his victim? Is there an outcry about him? Were the authorities ever informed of his actions? If so, what action did they take, and do they have him listed as a sex offender? How do the community and the secular authorities view him? If he were extended privileges, would this be disturbing to others, including the victim or the victim's relatives? Has he ever been disfellowshipped, reproved, counseled, or otherwise dealt with? Has he given clear indication by his words and actions that he is now guided by God's spirit and can be trusted? (Rom. 8:5; Gal. 5:16) Has he demonstrated that he is "self-controlled"? (Titus 1:8; Gal. 5:23) Does he have a reputation of being "free from accusation," "irreprehensible," having "a fine testimony from people on the outside"? (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7) How do the victim and the victim's relatives view him now? Are members of the congregation aware of what took place? How do they view him?

5. As to determining how a former child molester is now viewed when the abuse took place many years ago, there is no need for elders to conduct interviews either with members of the congregation or with the one wronged or with the wronged one's relatives in order to determine what the current feeling is toward the former child molester. Doing so might bring up painful memories and cause further harm. Rather, from their own observation, elders are to evaluate and report the relationship between the victim and the former abuser, if possible.

CONFIDENTIAL (RS)

6. On the other hand, if the elders believe it is necessary or prudent to approach the victim or the victim's relatives, they should contact the branch office for approval before doing so, providing the reasons why they believe it is necessary to do so. The branch office should consider very carefully how the victim and the victim's family would potentially be affected if they were to be interviewed.

QUESTION 2: What if a man who molested a child before getting baptized is already serving in a responsible position? Must he now step aside?

7. Answer: Possibly not, but it depends on the circumstances. The elders should consider the matter and make a recommendation to the branch office.—See the answer to Question 1.

8. Factors to consider: As with the previous situation, we believe there may be some circumstances that would enable him to continue serving. The elders would need to consider carefully the same questions and Scriptural principles outlined above. If he has served faithfully in a position of trust for many years, if there is no evidence of repeating his past wrongdoing, if his previous wrongdoing is known only by the responsible brothers, if the congregation has respect for him, if there is no outcry, and if everything else points to his currently enjoying Jehovah's blessing, we believe the branch office could allow him to retain his congregation privilege. Such a case would be decided on an individual basis.

QUESTION 3: If a man molested a child many years ago after getting baptized, could he retain his privilege of service? If so, under what circumstances could he continue to serve? Is there a certain amount of time that must have passed?

9. Answer: It is possible for him to retain his privilege. The elders should carefully consider the matter and provide full details in making a recommendation to the branch office. (See the answer to Question 1.) The following example illustrates under what circumstances a man might continue to serve: A Christian may have sexually molested a child many years ago, perhaps even several decades. The matter was handled at that time by the congregation. Since that time, he has had an exemplary record of theocratic service and has been serving faithfully. He has not repeated the sin, he has gone on record before Jehovah and the elders that there have been no other incidents of child abuse, and there is no evidence that he is a threat to children. Over many years he has performed "works that befit repentance." (Acts 26:20) In every respect, he has demonstrated himself to be chaste in conduct. All indications point to his having Jehovah's blessing. Given these circumstances and the fact that no present questions are being raised about his qualifications and there is no cry for his removal, we believe that he might continue to serve. Of course, each situation would be judged individually.

10. Factors to consider: In the case of an individual who has committed child abuse while baptized, if 20 or more years have passed and (1) the brother has built up a faithful record of service, (2) there is no outcry, and (3) everything else points to his currently enjoying Jehovah's blessing, the branch office may decide that a valid basis exists to allow him to continue to serve in a position of trust, if he otherwise qualifies.

11. If a former child molester continues in a position of responsibility—whether the sin occurred before or after baptism—there may be some serious problems if he later molests a child. This could bring great reproach on Jehovah's name, and it could affect the faith and confidence that our brothers have in Jehovah's organization. So the branch office is to consider this matter very carefully, weighing all the potential implications and factors before determining how a former child molester is to be used in the congregation.

CONFIDENTIAL (RS)

Question 4: The January 1, 1997, Watchtower article on page 29 states that "a man known to have been a child molester" does not qualify for congregation privileges. What is meant by "known"?

12. Answer: "A man known to have been a child molester" has reference to the perception of the community and the Christian congregation. It may be one who has sexually abused a minor and who is still viewed negatively by the victim's family, the congregation, or the elders, or it may be one who is viewed by the community or secular authorities as someone who is a sexual abuser of minors, whether the abuse has been established by the congregation or not. Such a man is not "free from accusation" or "irreprehensible." Neither does he have "a fine testimony from people on the outside." (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7) In view of his notorious past, people in the community would not respect him, and the brothers may even stumble if he were appointed.

13. Factors to consider: The term "known" needs to be qualified. At times, information regarding a man is known only to the elders. The fact that they have knowledge of his past sin should not automatically rule out his serving. There may be unusual circumstances that would indicate this is not necessary. At times, the branch office may determine that a man qualifies for congregation privileges, as he is not considered to be a "known" child molester. He may then move to another congregation. In such cases, the elders would not normally mention anything about his past conduct in the letter of introduction unless the branch office has determined that there is reason to do so.

14. In the case of a man who molested a child in the distant past, the branch office will advise the elders first to use him on a gradual basis before appointing him to a position of trust. In this way, he continues to build a record of righteousness, and this will often reveal whether the victim, or perhaps others, has concerns about his having privileges. For example, it may be he can be given duties such as passing microphones, operating sound equipment, and helping with literature or magazines. After the elders have observed him for a while and as he continues to build a commendable record, they may recommend to the branch office that he be allowed to use his home for meetings for field service or be given other special privileges, such as pioneering, offering congregation prayer, or other congregational assignments that require one to be exemplary. As he continues to give evidence of being guided by God's spirit and if there is no apparent outcry, the elders may eventually recommend that he be appointed as a ministerial servant.

QUESTION 5: From a congregational standpoint, whom do we regard as "a child molester"?

15. Answer: The February 1, 1997, Watchtower "Questions From Readers" quotes Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, which defines "pedophilia" as "sexual perversion in which children are the preferred sexual object." In referring to the article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked," the above-referred-to "Questions From Readers" made the point that "what The Watchtower was discussing was a child's being made the object of sexual abuse, including fondling, by an adult." The January 1, 1997, Watchtower also refers to a child molester in the congregation as "a baptized adult Christian." The October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders says, "We are referring to situations in which it is established that an adult brother or sister has been guilty of sexually abusing a young child or has been sexually involved with a minor who is approaching adulthood who was not a willing participant." Thus, from a congregational standpoint, "a child molester" refers to an adult.

16. In other words, child sexual abuse occurs when an adult uses a child to gratify his own sexual desires. It may involve what the Bible calls fornication, or por·nei'a, which could include manipulation of genitalia, sexual intercourse, and oral or anal sex. Some abusive acts, such as the fondling of breasts, explicitly immoral proposals, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, and indecent exposure, may amount to what the Bible condemns as brazen conduct. (Gal. 5:19-21; ks10 chap. 5 par. 10, second bullet point; g 10/07 p. 3, ftn.; g93 10/8 p. 10, ftn.) Since the adult involves a child in such activities, all of these actions would be considered child sexual abuse.

17. Yet, the level of seriousness is not the same in every case. (For instance, an adult who rapes a child or fondles the genitalia of a child would be much more culpable than someone who showed pornography to a child, even though such an unclean action could escalate.) Thus, the elders handling the matter would have to determine what the adult actually did.

18. Factors to consider: At times, the conduct of an individual may not be classified as child abuse from the perspective of the congregation, but from a legal standpoint he may be viewed as guilty of such. If his name appears on some public listing of sex offenders, he may not be considered one who is "free from accusation," "irreprehensible," 'having a fine testimony from people on the outside' and thus not qualify to serve in an appointed position or to be used for even minor privileges while this situation exists. (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7) However, this may need to be considered on a case-by-case basis.

19. Viewing child pornography is a serious violation of Jehovah's standards, and any involved in such conduct would need strong counsel and, depending on the frequency and the extent of his viewing, could be subject to judicial action. (See the April 10, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders.) Nonetheless, if the one who views child pornography does not involve anyone else in his actions, this is not considered to be child abuse from a congregational standpoint. Still, the elders should be alert to the conduct of the individual and provide any appropriate Scriptural counsel in connection with his interactions with children.

QUESTION 6: At what age would we regard someone as an adult who could be guilty of child molestation? Is the age of the victim a factor?

20. Answer: The word "adult" is broadly defined, and so we cannot specify a certain age when one becomes an adult. From a legal standpoint, the definition depends on the area in which one lives. For instance, in the United States, one is often viewed as an adult when one is 18 years old. In other countries, the legal age may be defined differently. From a congregational standpoint, the Bible does not indicate a specific calendar age at which time one enters adulthood. Therefore, each case would need to be dealt with on an individual basis.

21. When judging whether an individual is a child molester, you would need to consider the ages of both the "molester" and the "child." As pointed out in the October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders, we are not referring to a situation in which an adult has had sexual relations with a minor who was approaching adulthood and who was a willing participant and who was only a few years younger than the adult. Rather, we are referring to a situation in which it is established that an adult brother or sister has been guilty of sexually abusing a young child or of sexual activity with a minor approaching adulthood who was not a willing participant. So it is important that the ages of both are considered. If some doubt exists as to whether an act constituted child molestation and whether privileges should be revoked, extended, or retained, the elders should refer the matter to the branch office and provide complete details.

22. Factors to consider: As already mentioned, the difference in age between the adult and the minor is a key factor. Also, what is the emotional and spiritual maturity of the minor? Has the minor already demonstrated a pattern of immoral behavior? For example, is the minor sexually active? Was the adult dating the minor with the consent of the minor's parents and with a view toward marriage? Or is it apparent that the adult took advantage of the inexperience or immaturity of the minor? Again, each case would need to be evaluated on its own merits, since the age and maturity of the minor play a factor.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

23. While minors who have sexual contact with minors are not considered to be child molesters by the congregation, it is still necessary for two elders to call the branch office. Elders should be alert to render spiritual assistance to minors in the presence of their believing parent(s), especially in the case of a minor who was taken advantage of by another minor who was significantly older.—See the October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders, paragraph 18.

QUESTION 7: Should the elders ask a man who is reaching out for congregation privileges whether he has ever molested a child?

24. Answer: No. It is not the duty of elders to query an individual about whether he ever molested children. It would also not be appropriate for elders to arrange meetings to explain to brothers reaching out for privileges what is stated in the January 1, 1997, Watchtower. The point the elders should have in mind is that they should avoid recommending any "man known to have been a child molester."

25. Factors to consider: When the branch office approves a recommendation for one to be a ministerial servant or an elder, we ask two elders to speak with the man before his appointment is announced. They will ask if there is anything in his past or in his personal or family life that would prevent him from being qualified to accept the appointment or if there is any other reason why his appointment should not be announced. If he has never previously served as an elder or a ministerial servant, the elders should specifically ask him if he has ever been involved in the past with child sexual molestation. If he confesses to sexually molesting a child in the past, then the S-2 form or S-52 appointment letter is returned to the branch office and the matter is reconsidered.—See the Shepherding textbook, chapter 3, paragraphs 12 and 13.

QUESTION 8: What does page 29 of the January 1, 1997, Watchtower article mean when it says that "a man known to have been a child molester . . . cannot be a pioneer"?

26. Answer: It means that if the perception of the community or the congregation is that a man is a sexual abuser of minors, he would not qualify as an auxiliary pioneer or as a regular pioneer.

27. Factors to consider: An auxiliary pioneer or a regular pioneer is to be "an exemplary publisher." A person guilty of child abuse is not exemplary and would therefore not meet the qualifications of a pioneer. (See the Organized book, page 113, paragraph 2.) It is also understood that a known child molester would not qualify as a special pioneer, as a Bethel family member, as an international servant, as a missionary, for the traveling work, or for any similar special full-time service. This would be so even if he is not perceived by the community to be a known child molester. However, if the offense was many years ago, the answers to Questions 1-4 should be considered.

QUESTION 9: The January 1, 1997, Watchtower article says that a known child molester could "have parts in the Theocratic Ministry School and nonteaching parts in the Service Meeting." What might these parts include? What other duties could he handle in the congregation? Are there other restrictions that would apply to him?

28. Answer: Anyone who is a known child molester is not exemplary and so there should not be extended to him any specific responsibility that could be construed as an assigned duty, even though some assignments might be considered minor. He should not be used to handle accounts, literature, magazines, or territories. Nor would he be used as an attendant, a microphone handler, an operator of sound equipment, or as one who represents the congregation in prayer. He would not be used as the reader at the Congregation Bible Study or the Watchtower Study or to conduct a meeting for field service. It would be advisable not to use his home for meetings for field service. And he would not qualify to auxiliary pioneer or regular pioneer. Although he could volunteer to assist with general care of the Kingdom Hall where he attends meetings, he could not be approved to work on other Kingdom Halls or Assembly Halls. He may give student talks on the Theocratic Ministry School and share in nonteaching parts on the Service Meeting, provided that his doing so will not be offensive to those in the congregation who know of his past wrongdoing. In any case, he would not be given a teaching part, one that would normally be assigned to an elder or a capable ministerial servant who has cultivated good speaking ability.

29. He should not be allowed to use the Kingdom Hall for his wedding. Since he is not in good standing, it would be better for him to have the wedding ceremony in another location. Additionally, even after many years have passed, it would not be good to use his home for the meetings for field service since this may be a stumbling block for those who may know of the brother's past.

30. Factors to consider: A Service Meeting teaching part would include presenting a talk, conducting an interview, and handling a question-and-answer part. He would not qualify for these. Logically, the expression "nonteaching parts in the Service Meeting" would primarily refer to participating in demonstrations or interviews under the direction of an elder or capable ministerial servant. In the Theocratic Ministry School, he could only be assigned student talks.

QUESTION 10: What procedure does the branch office follow in handling letters of inquiry or reports that a publisher knows of an appointed one who molested a child in the past?

31. Answer: If the inquirer telephones the branch office, the service desk should ask him for the name of the accused person and, if available, the congregation where he attends. If there is an indication that the matter has already been reported to the branch office, the service desk can offer the caller spiritual encouragement and comfort, as needed. If it cannot be determined if the branch office already has a record of the matter, the call taker will listen to the caller's concerns, take note of the allegation, and encourage him to discuss his concerns with his local elders and to ask his elders to call the branch office. If the elders do not call within 24 hours, the branch office will call the elders. If the inquirer writes, an answer could be provided in harmony with the Scriptural principles presented earlier.

32. Factors to consider: It may be that letters will be received from publishers who say they know one who molested a child and who now has a congregation privilege. Some publishers have asked, "What responsibility do I have to report him?" Others have been very angry and have demanded his removal. Letters or calls may be received from elders asking such questions and expressing similar views.

33. The validity of the accusation should be verified to the degree possible. In the case of an elder's calling or writing, he should be informed of any legal responsibility he may have to report the matter to the authorities. Individuals should not be discouraged from reporting matters to the authorities but should be reminded of the need for confidentiality when speaking with others, thus avoiding any charge of slander.

QUESTION 11: What can the congregation elders do to protect children?

34. Answer: The elders should periodically remind parents of the need to review with their children articles in the organization's publications. (You may refer them to pages 170-171 of the book Learn From the Great Teacher.) Elders want to be alert to the activity of any who are known to have molested children in the past. As the January 1, 1997, Watchtower points out on page 29: "True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do." An individual who has manifested a weakness in this regard should be sure he is never alone with other people's children. He should refrain from holding them or from displaying other forms of affection for them. He must recognize that he has had a weakness in this area in the past. The advice at 1 Corinthians 10:12 is wise counsel for one who has shown this kind of weakness. In the spirit of Galatians 6:1, elders should kindly, but firmly, endeavor to readjust any who have had a problem in the past and seem to be showing affection to children or cultivating inappropriate association with such ones. It also would be appropriate for elders to kindly caution any who are doing things that may be a cause for concern to others in the congregation. (l Cor. 10:32) By giving specific, clear, and pointed counsel, elders imitate Jehovah, who gives specific advice to help his servants avoid temptation. (See the March 15, 1970, issue of The Watchtower, "Questions From Readers," pages 190-191.) At the same time, the response to this counsel by the former molester would be a basis for the elders to decide if he is determined to "abstain from every form of wickedness" and to clear himself of even any hint of wrongdoing. Does he in every respect demonstrate himself to be chaste?—l Thess. 5:22.

35. When a former child molester (perhaps known only to the elders) begins attending congregation meetings or when a molester is shown mercy and is not disfellowshipped, designated elders should kindly, but frankly, discuss with him what type of actions regarding children he should clearly avoid. This would include not allowing children (other than his own) to spend the night in his home, not cultivating friendships with children, and the like. In addition, ensure that newly appointed elders are aware of his past history of child abuse and any of the restrictions that have been imposed.—See the October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders, paragraph 12.

36. Additionally, a known child molester should be told not to work alone with children in the field ministry. He should always be accompanied by another adult publisher who is in good standing in the congregation. This also applies to working with his own minor children in the field ministry. If he chooses to do so, there still should always be another adult present. This serves to protect any minor who answers the door, the former abuser, and the reputation of the congregation. In some cases, Caesar may place the restriction that a former abuser cannot engage in house-to-house witnessing. (Rom. 13:1-7; Gal. 6:7) The elders could determine whether the restrictions apply to other forms of the field ministry, such as telephone witnessing, witnessing by means of electronic media, or letter writing. If allowed to share in these forms of service, the elders would arrange for him to do so in the company of another qualified adult publisher.

37. Factors to consider: This direction could apply in several situations, such as when a "known" former child molester begins attending congregation meetings, when a judicial committee determines that a child molester is repentant and will remain a member of the Christian congregation, or when a child molester is disfellowshipped and later cleans up his life and is reinstated.

38. Whenever the elders become aware of a sex offender living in the territory, they are to mark the address on the territory card as a "Do Not Call." Thereafter, two elders should periodically visit the address, perhaps every six months to a year. They will verify whether the sex offender still lives there and give him an opportunity to hear the good news.—See the October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders, paragraph 17.

39. What if a known child molester does not comply with the direction from the elders? Two elders should offer him firm but loving counsel. (Gal. 6:1; 2 Tim. 4:2) If after repeated counsel he continues to disregard the restrictions that have been placed on him, the elders should contact the branch office and explain the situation. The service desk will obtain the answers from the elders to the following questions: How often has the individual been counseled? What has been his response? What is he doing that is raising concern? Why do the elders believe that he lacks self-control and will continue to prey on children? Did the elders present a warning talk to the congregation? Has the body of elders concluded that his actions constitute brazen conduct and merit judicial action? The service desk under the direction of the Branch Committee will carefully examine all of these factors in order to determine whether the individual should be considered a "predator" and whether the elders can proceed judicially.

40. If the branch office advises the elders to inform the parents of minor children that an individual is a "predator," there is no need for elders to go into all the details with the parents. The elders would simply warn the parents that they should be sure to watch their children at all times when he is present. They should also tell the parents that there is no need for them to speak with others about the matter. The elders will take the lead in making sure that all parents of minor children in the congregation are aware. At the same time, the elders will inform the "known" child molester that the parents will be discreetly informed.

QUESTION 12: What should be done if a "known" child molester or one who is considered to be a "predator" moves to another congregation?

41. Answer: The normal procedure of sending a letter to the new congregation should be followed. As outlined in the February 1991 Our Kingdom Ministry "Question Box" and in the November 17, 2010, letter to all bodies of elders, our policy is always to send a letter of introduction when a publisher moves to another congregation. While this should be done in every case, it is imperative that this be done when a "known" child molester moves. As indicated in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 12, paragraph 20, the Congregation Service Committee, on behalf of the elders, should write to the new congregation's body of elders and outline the publisher's background and what the elders in the former congregation have done to assist him. Any needed cautions should be provided to the new congregation's body of elders. This information is for the use of the elders only and should be kept in the congregation's confidential files. The elders should send a copy of this letter to the branch office in one of the special blue envelopes. If a "known" child molester has moved and information about him has not been sent to the body of elders where he is now serving, then this should be done now. In the case of a "predator," the elders of the congregation where the individual has moved will consult with the branch office to determine what warning should be given to the parents of minor children.

42. If more than 20 years have passed and a former child abuser has a good record in the truth and the branch office decides that he could be appointed to a position of trust—such as an elder, ministerial servant, or regular pioneer—the congregation elders will not have to pass on information regarding the past sin to another congregation's elders.

43. Factors to consider: If an individual is disfellowshipped, there is no need to forward his Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card or the confidential file to the congregation where he lives or attends meetings; however, a brief letter should be sent to the body of elders in whose territory he lives to inform them that a disfellowshipped person who was guilty of child abuse lives in their territory and, if known, they can provide the address. A copy of the letter should be sent to the branch office. No detailed information is sent to another congregation until the individual submits a request for reinstatement.—See the Shepherding textbook, chapter 10, paragraph 2.

QUESTION 13: Should the fiancée or wife of a brother who is restricted because of being guilty of child abuse in the past be informed about his past wrongdoing?

44. Answer: With regard to one who is married, he should note that the Family Happiness book says that marriage is based on love and respect. At 1 Corinthians 13:4-7, Paul states that love is "kind" and "does not look for its own interests." Love also "rejoices with the truth." Additionally, page 30, paragraph 8, of the Family Happiness book mentions this: "Those who wish to enjoy a happy marriage show respect for their mates by 'keeping an eye, not in personal interest upon just [their] own matters, but also in personal interest upon those of [their mates].' (Philippians 2:4) They do not consider what is good only for themselves—which would be selfish. Instead, they consider what is best also for their mates. Indeed, they give that the priority." Therefore, in the case of a known child abuser who is married, the elders should encourage the former abuser to share this critical information about his past with his wife if he has not already done so. The same would apply to a brother who is engaged or is contemplating marriage. Page 25, paragraph 21, of the Family Happiness book states: "An honorable courtship also includes honest communication. As your courtship progresses toward marriage, certain matters will need to be discussed openly. Where will you live? Will both of you work secularly? Do you want to have children? Also, it is only fair to reveal things, perhaps in one's past, that could affect the marriage." In view of this, you should alert a former child abuser of the importance of discussing his past abuse with his fiancée before marriage.

45. When inquiries are received from congregations, the elders may be directed to assign two elders to speak with each known child abuser to whom the above direction would apply. The elders may share the references cited above to help him appreciate the importance of complying with this direction. When meeting with the known child abuser, make him aware of the need to communicate this information about his past child abuse to his wife or fiancée. The elders should write, date, and sign a brief confidential memorandum for the former child abuser's file. Thereafter, the elders can discreetly inquire of the wife or fiancée as to whether she was informed about his past abuse.

QUESTION 14: When should elders interview a young child who is a victim of child abuse?

46. Answer: When the elders call the branch office regarding a child abuse matter, they may ask about the need to interview the victim. In such cases, help the elders to balance the need to investigate with the dangers of inadvertently further traumatizing a young child abuse victim. For example, has the accused already confessed to the wrongdoing? Is there more than one accuser and thereby already sufficient evidence to handle the matter judicially? (Deut. 19:15; John 8:17) In such cases, there is likely no need to interview the young child.

47. If the branch office agrees for the elders to speak with the child, the service desk can share all or part of the following guidelines to help the elders thoroughly prepare for the interview. The service desk should also refer the elders to the principles found in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 12, paragraph 21, which will help them evaluate whether the testimony has the ring of truth.

48. Recognize the headship principle.—Eph. 6:2, 3.

- Be sure you have the consent of a parent or legal guardian to interview the child.
- Make every effort to have at least one dedicated parent or legal guardian present for the interview.

49. Conduct the interview in a loving manner.—Isa. 32:1, 2.

- Although it is preferred to have only one elder conduct the interview, another elder should be present as an observer.
- Be kind, unhurried, and establish a rapport with the child.
- Sit next to the child, rather than across from or standing over the child. This will be less threatening.
- Ask the parent to allow the child to tell the story without his interrupting or interpreting.
- You could inadvertently intimidate the child by asking the same question multiple times.
- You should not use dolls or toys in an attempt to recreate the event.
- Sincerely and frequently commend the child at appropriate times, knowing how difficult this interview may be for the child.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

50. Ask questions skillfully.—Prov. 20:5.

- Start with open-ended questions, such as:
  "Please tell us what you can about . . ."
  "What else do you remember about . . .?"
- Then gently move to more focused questions, such as:
  "Where did it happen?"
  "Who else was there?"
  "Please tell us more about what you can remember about . . ."

- If the child senses that the elders think they already know everything, the child may not feel the need to speak up. Biased, leading questions or statements like the following should not be used because they could influence a child to please the elders and change what he would otherwise have said:
  "Did Brother So-and-so do something bad to you?"
  "Brother So-and-so is such a nice person; I don't see how this could be."

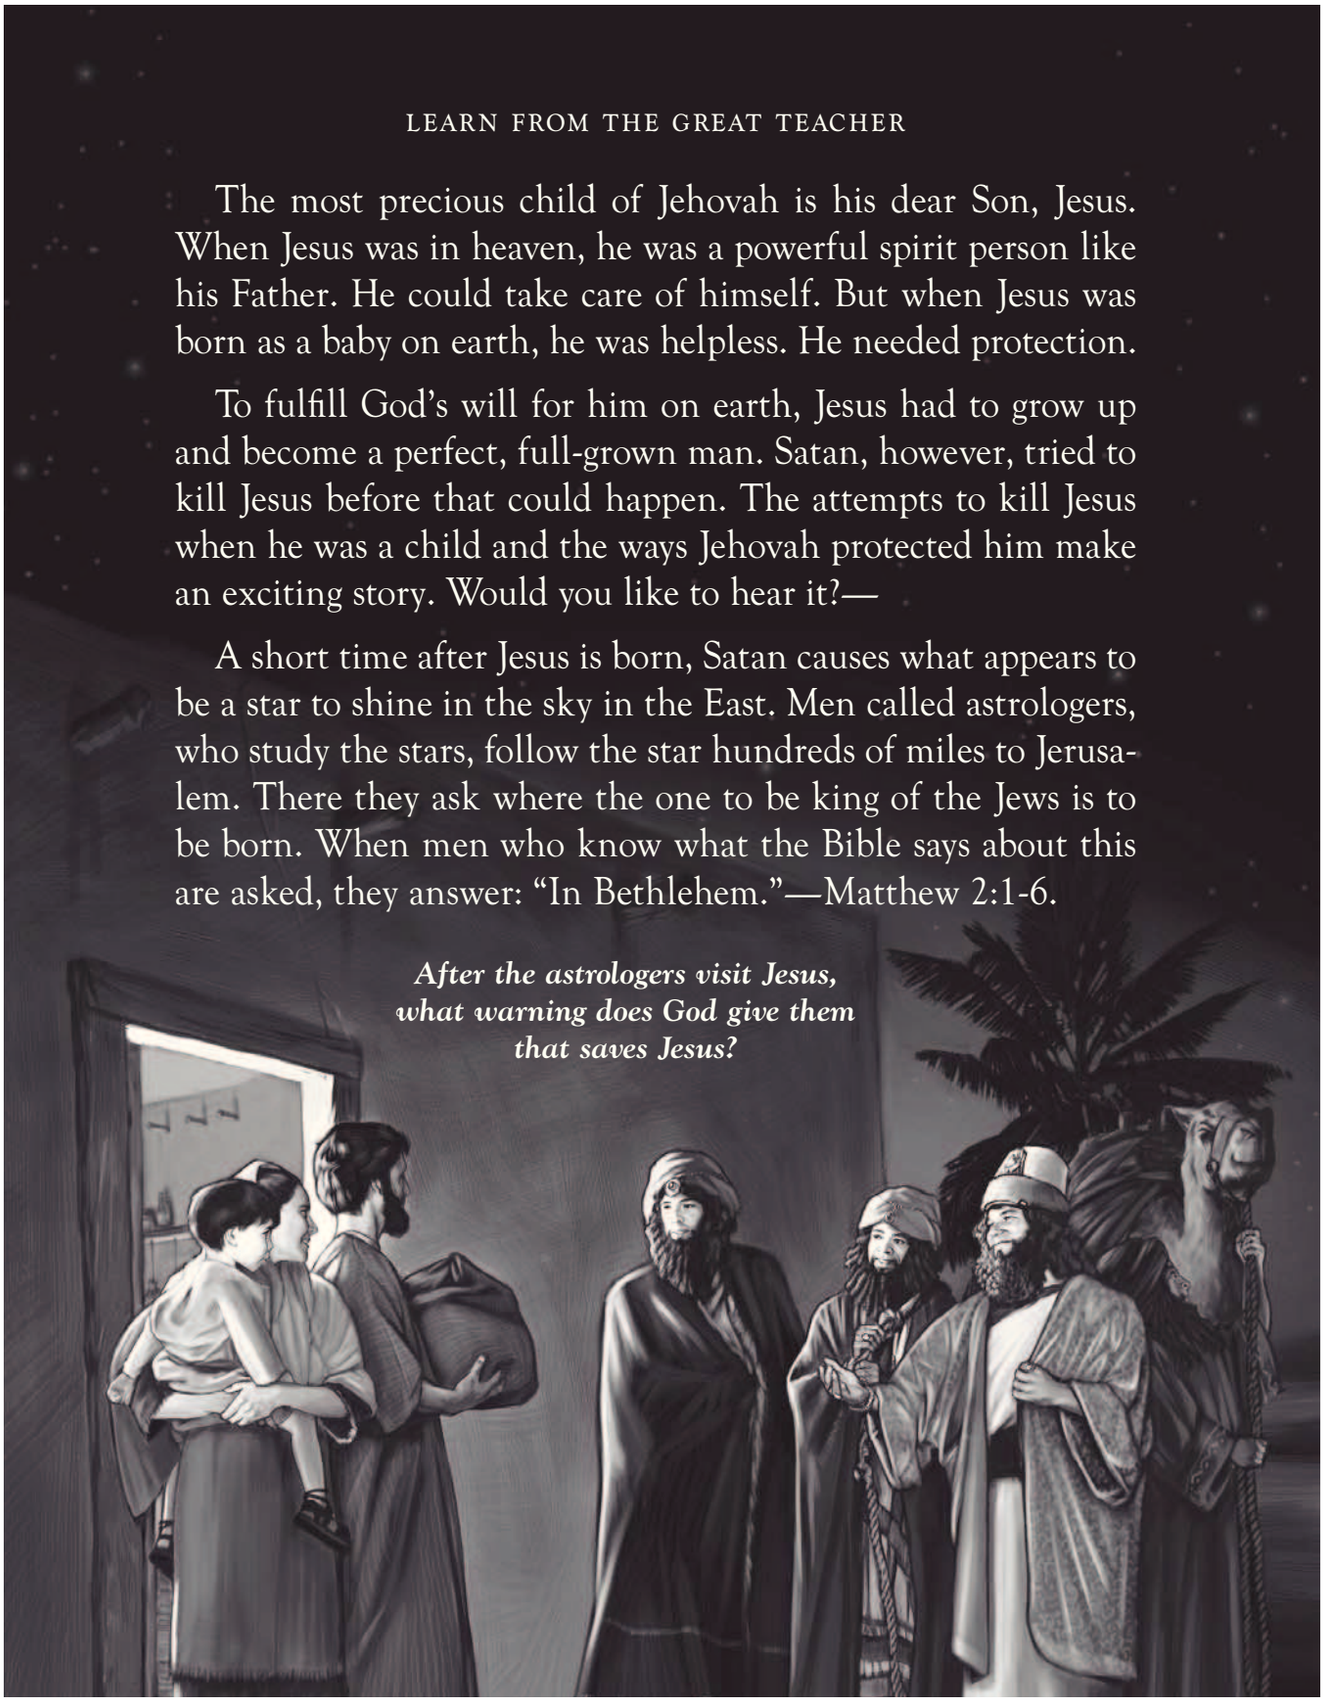
CHAPTER 32

HOW JESUS WAS PROTECTED

JEHOVAH sometimes does things in a wonderful way to protect those who are young and who are unable to protect themselves. If you go walking in the country, you may see one way that Jehovah does this. But at first you may not really understand what is happening.

You see a bird land on the ground near you. It seems to be hurt. It drags one of its wings and moves away when you try to approach it. As you follow the bird, it keeps just ahead of you. Then, suddenly, the bird flies away. Its wing was not hurt at all! Do you know what the bird was doing?—

Well, close to where the bird landed near you, its babies were hidden in the bushes. The mother bird was afraid that you might find them and hurt them. So she pretended to be hurt and led you away. Do you know who can protect us as a mother bird does her babies?— In the Bible, Jehovah is compared to a bird called an eagle, which helps its little ones. —Deuteronomy 32:11, 12.



How is this mother bird protecting her little ones?

The most precious child of Jehovah is his dear Son, Jesus. When Jesus was in heaven, he was a powerful spirit person like his Father. He could take care of himself. But when Jesus was born as a baby on earth, he was helpless. He needed protection.

To fulfill God's will for him on earth, Jesus had to grow up and become a perfect, full-grown man. Satan, however, tried to kill Jesus before that could happen. The attempts to kill Jesus when he was a child and the ways Jehovah protected him make an exciting story. Would you like to hear it?—

A short time after Jesus is born, Satan causes what appears to be a star to shine in the sky in the East. Men called astrologers, who study the stars, follow the star hundreds of miles to Jerusalem. There they ask where the one to be king of the Jews is to be born. When men who know what the Bible says about this are asked, they answer: "In Bethlehem."—Matthew 2:1-6.

After the astrologers visit Jesus, what warning does God give them that saves Jesus?

After Herod, the bad king in Jerusalem, hears about this new king who has recently been born in the nearby town of Bethlehem, he tells the astrologers: 'Search and find the child, and then come back and tell me.' Do you know why Herod wants to know where to find Jesus?— It is because Herod is jealous and wants to kill him!

How does God protect his Son?— Well, when the astrologers find Jesus, they give him gifts. Later God gives the astrologers a warning in a dream not to return to Herod. So they go home another way without returning to Jerusalem. When Herod finds out that the astrologers have left, he is very angry. In an effort to kill Jesus, Herod has all the boys in Bethlehem under two years of age killed! But by then, Jesus is gone.

Do you know how Jesus escapes?— After the astrologers leave to go home, Jehovah gives a warning to Mary's husband, Joseph, to get up and run far away to Egypt. There Jesus is safe from bad Herod. Years later, when Mary and Joseph return from Egypt with Jesus, God gives another warning to Joseph. He tells him in a dream to move to Nazareth, where Jesus will be safe. —Matthew 2:7-23.

How is young Jesus saved again?

Do you see how Jehovah protected his Son?— Who would you say is like the little birds hidden by their mother in the bushes or like Jesus when he was a small child? Aren't you like them?— There are those who want to hurt you too. Do you know who?—

The Bible says that Satan is like a roaring lion who wants to eat us. And just as lions often pick on small animals, Satan and his demons often pick on children. (1 Peter 5:8) But Jehovah is stronger than Satan. Jehovah can protect his children or undo anything bad that Satan does to them.

Do you remember from Chapter 10 of this book what the Devil and his demons try to get us to do?— Yes, they try to get us to have the kind of sex relations that God says is wrong. But who only should have sex relations?— Yes, two grown people of the opposite sex who are married to each other.

However, sad to say, some grown-ups like to have sex with children. When they do, boys and girls may begin to do bad things that they have learned from these grown-ups. They also begin to use their sex organs in a wrong way. That is what happened a long time ago in the city of Sodom. The Bible says that people there, "from boy to old man," tried to have sex with men who had come to visit Lot.—Genesis 19:4, 5.

So just as Jesus needed protection, you also need to be protected from grown-ups—and even from other children—who may try to have sex with you. Usually, these people will pretend to be your friends. They may even offer you something if you will promise not to tell others about what they want to do with you. But these people are selfish, like Satan and his demons, and they only want to get pleasure for themselves. And they try to get this pleasure by having sex with children. This is very wrong!

What should you say and do if someone tries to touch you in a wrong way?

Do you know what they may do to get pleasure for themselves?— Well, they may try to rub your sex organs. Or they will even rub their sex organs against yours. But you should never let anybody play with your penis or vulva. Not even your own brother or sister or your mother or father. These parts of your body are private.

How can you protect your body from people who do bad things like this?— First of all, do not let anybody play with your sex organs. If someone tries to do this, say firmly in a loud voice: "Stop that! I'm going to tell on you!" And if that person says that what happened is your fault, don't believe that. It is not true. Just go and tell on him no matter who it is! You should do so even if he says that what you are doing together is a secret just between you and him. Even if that person promises you nice presents or makes scary threats, you should get away from him and tell on him anyway.

You do not have to be afraid, but you do need to be careful. When your parents warn you about people or places that could be a danger to you, you need to listen to them. If you do, you take away a bad person's chance to hurt you.

Read about protecting yourself from wrong sex acts, at Genesis 39:7-12; Proverbs 4:14-16; 14:15, 16; 1 Corinthians 6:18; and 2 Peter 2:14.

Child Molesting

Every Mother's Nightmare

FOR the young mother, it was a nightmare come true. When her four-year-old daughter complained of abdominal pains, she took her to see a doctor. The doctor, after a thorough examination, gravely told the mother that her little girl was the victim of sexual molestation. She had been raped. The mother informed the New York City authorities, who quickly determined that the abuse occurred at a Bronx, New York, day-care center.

Investigations at the center yielded horrifying results. First one, then another, then still another child revealed that they, too, had been molested. At least 30 children eventually claimed that they had been abused in that same center. One of them had gonorrhea. Then reports surfaced that children had been molested at another day-care center. Then at another. Eventually seven day-care centers had to be investigated in the New York City area alone.

As each new case was publicized, reports of child molesting started coming in from other parts of the country. The scandal spread. Parents asked one another: "What's happening?" What indeed! Was this just a freakish rash of molestation incidents? Or was it something very widespread that was only now being noticed?

A Widespread Problem

The fact is, sexual molestation of children has been going on for a long time and today it is widespread. In 1983, the head of New York City's Advisory Task Force on Rape reported 'a dramatic increase in the number of young children who are victims of rape, incest, and other forms of sexual abuse.' Dr. David Finkelhor of the Family Violence Research Program at the University of New Hampshire conducted a large-scale study of the subject. He found that the children of 9 percent of the parents interviewed had been sexually abused. Fifteen percent of the women and 6 percent of the men had themselves been sexually abused as children!

Exact statistics are difficult to come by. In the United States, the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect has records of 55,399 cases of children being sexually molested in one year. But these are only cases of incestuous abuse. Abuse by friends, neighbors, teachers, and so forth—as well as by strangers—would increase that figure to a considerable extent. And a spokesman for the Child Welfare League of America told Awake! that "the figures we have are only the tip of the iceberg."

A report in the magazine Ladies Home Journal estimates: "Sexual abuse of young girls is four times more common than rape of adult women. Between the ages of five and 13, one in four little girls falls prey to some form of sexual abuse by adults—whether it be exhibitionism, inappropriate fondling, rape, or incest. Although young females are the most common victims, 20 to 25 percent of those attacked are little boys."

Doctors are convinced of the harmful and long-term effects of such abuse. Hence, parents wonder: 'Are my children at risk? What steps can I take to protect them? What sort of person would try to harm them?'

Child Molesting

'Who Would Do a Thing Like That?'

MOST parents would answer this question wrong. When we think of sexual molestation, most of us probably picture a weird stranger who exposes himself to children or lures them away into a car or to some wooded area. Publicity has also been given to groups that lure children away to exploit them for pornography or child prostitution. Such things do happen, but these people are far from the usual type of child molester. So who are the usual child molesters?

Sue was molested by a man who was running a church group. He ran a youth club, and everybody agreed that he was very pleasant. But he sexually abused Sue and other girls. Another young girl wrote to an advice column to tell that her favorite uncle had taken to pulling her onto his lap and fondling her improperly. One man remembers that as a boy he was habitually abused by the grown son of a close family friend. An 11-year-old boy was molested by the aunt that he lived with. A New York woman reports being molested by her grandfather when she was seven years old. A 15-year-old boy was molested by his doctor during a medical examination. For Pam, it was even worse. For many years, her own father molested her. And Mary was molested by two older brothers and an older first cousin.

In fact, probably less than a third of sexual assaults on children are committed by strangers. Usually the victim knows the assailant. Often the abuser is a relative. Thus, in most cases children are molested by people they know and trust, which makes the problem of protecting them more difficult.

The Molester at Work

Many parents have another misconception. They envision molestation as being violent, with the child fighting and screaming for mercy. This may not be the case at all, at least not in the beginning. At the outset, sexual abuse may be disguised as playful or affectionate contact, and go on from there. The abuser is likely to persuade and pressure the child, using all the built-in authority of an older person. Do you remember what it was like when you were a child and were trained to obey adults even when they told you to do things you did not like, such as go to bed early or eat all your vegetables? Molesters take advantage of this training. One convicted abuser said: "Show me an obedient child, and I'll show you an easy victim."

One child was receiving obscene phone calls. When asked why she had not put the phone down, she said she thought it was rude to do that when someone was still talking! A woman of 30 remembers having been approached at the age of 5 by her grandfather. He said to her: "Good girls do this for Grandpa and never tell their mothers." How many five-year-olds would be able to see through such a deception?

And do you remember how you loved presents and treats as a child? Abusers often use this childish trait to get an abusive relationship started. For example, what would your child do if the school janitor said: "Stay with me for a while in the office after school, and I will give you some money"? or if the baby-sitter said: "I will let you sit up late and watch television, if you do something for me first"?

Sometimes molesters misuse a child's natural love of secrets. Wasn't it exciting, when you were young, to have a secret? One little girl had a secret that she kept from her parents. But one day her parents saw her acting in a precocious, sexual manner. When asked where she had learned such a thing, the little girl said: "It's a secret." Her father explained that sometimes we should not keep a secret, so the little girl revealed her secret. A 40-year-old man with a family of his own, who was a close family relative, had pushed her down and sexually assaulted her.

She was molested by her minister

Finally, threats may be involved, subtle threats that strike at a child's sense of security. A grown woman tells of having been abused by her stepfather when she was a child. She says he abused her for four years, starting when she was six. Why did she not tell her mother? "He said that if I ever told anybody about it, the police would come get him and my mother would lose her job. The family would starve and it would all be my fault."

Author Gail Sheehy covers many of these points in the following observation: "We forget how grownups seemed omnipotent to us when we ourselves were children." She adds: "It is very easy for a parent or babysitter to initiate sexual activities under the guise of normal bathing and hygiene inspection. The child gets the message something is wrong only when secrecy is introduced: 'Don't tell your mommy that we did that'—and sufficient intimidation can be laid in with a single stroke—'or she won't love you anymore.'" Would your child be able to withstand that sort of psychological blackmail?

The Child's Best Defense

So you see, molesters can be the most unexpected of people and they can use sophisticated and cunning tactics. Child molestation is probably almost as old as history. But as this generation progresses, and more and more people are "lovers of themselves, . . . having no natural affection, . . . without self-control," the threat is becoming greater. (2 Timothy 3:1-3) However, children do have one very strong defense. What is that? Their parents. These are the adults best able to protect them from other adults who may wish to molest them. Let us see how.

Child Molesting

You Can Protect Your Child

A YOUNG woman who was molested as a girl by her brother and her brother-in-law says: "I was afraid, so I did not tell anyone. For this reason, I would like to warn all parents: 'Please teach your children not to let anyone in the family, or outside the family, put their hands on them in any wrong way. If anyone tries to, do not be afraid to tell on them.'" She adds: "It can happen to any child at any time!"

In this degenerating world, we must take definite steps to protect our children from sexual molestation. It is not wise to leave things to chance and just hope that nothing will happen.

The First Line of Defense

The first line of defense is to avoid situations that leave our children vulnerable. For example, parents are advised to be careful about using as baby-sitters young adults who seem to prefer being with children rather than with folks their own age. One clinical psychologist reports that two thirds of the molesters he is treating committed the offense while baby-sitting.

Dr. Suzanne M. Sgroi mentions two more situations that have led to trouble: Children doubling up (in beds or rooms) with adults or teenagers, and large family gatherings where the grown-ups get involved in enjoying themselves and just assume that the older children are taking care of the young ones.

The truth is, the more we can keep our children under our own supervision, the less opportunity molesters will have to get at them. Ann, a mother of three, goes to the extent of not allowing her youngest child, a 14-year-old boy, to wander around the shopping mall—or even to go into public rest rooms—alone. The boy probably finds this very restrictive, but his mother has her reasons. She was molested as a child.

However, parents cannot always keep such a close watch on their children. Working parents may have no choice but to use day-care facilities or to leave their children with relatives or baby-sitters. Children have to go to school, and parents cannot always be with them. Relatives and friends come to visit. And then there are the neighbors! How can we protect our children when they are so vulnerable? Really, there is only one way—

Talk to Your Child About the Danger

Psychologist Debrah Shulman said: "It's foolish to pretend to children that dangers do not exist. Children are aware of their vulnerability and are naturally concerned about their own safety. It's part of a parent's job to give them the tools to deal with danger realistically. If presented honestly and positively such information will not threaten children, it will reassure them." Yes, we have to talk to them about it.

This is easy to say but not so easy to do, especially since the greatest danger is from friends and relatives. We may already have warned our children against the stranger who wants to lure them into the woods or carry them away in a car. But how can we give them "the tools" to protect themselves from ones they know, respect, and even love?

Follow Their Instincts

Ann, the mother referred to previously, reports that she was only five years old when a male relative molested her. Nevertheless, she knew that he was doing something wrong, although she did not know how to stop him. And, unhappily, she could not talk to her parents about it. The lines of communication were not very good at that time.

Ann's experience demonstrates that children usually have a natural sense of what is fit and proper. We have to reinforce this instinct, tell them that they should obey it even if an adult tells them differently. A simple and determined "No, I don't want you to do that!" is often enough to deter a molester. Ann's experience also shows the need for open lines of communication with our children.

Recently a husband and wife were discussing this problem between themselves. Becoming concerned, they asked their

If the Worst Should Happen

No parent can give a child complete protection against sexual molestation, although taking sensible precautions will enormously reduce the possibility that anything will happen. However, if parents have established good family communication, it may be that children will talk about it in the event that the worst should happen. Sometimes, though, children are so shocked by or ashamed of the experience that they will not discuss it. Hence, parents need to be alert. Here are some signs that researchers say may show that something has happened.

Be suspicious of any changes in the normal routine. In one case, a teacher asked that certain children come to school long before others. Watch for any telling signs in children such as declining grades or extreme anxiety around a specific adult. One woman who was victimized by her brother and her father as a girl said: "I came at the bottom of a class of 42, and nobody tried to find out why."

Pay attention to physical symptoms, such as headaches, vomiting or loss of appetite, and difficulty in sleeping. Genital complaints, such as soreness, are particularly important. Be aware of precocious sexuality in language, dress, or behavior. Be on the lookout for sudden changes in behavior that might indicate a problem. If a child becomes unusually withdrawn or shows an inclination to avoid one member of the family, a warning bell should sound. We also have to listen for the oblique messages that our children send us. The statement, "I don't like that math teacher any more" may be the child's way of trying to broach this difficult subject.

If parents see anything like this in their child, they should try to find out what is wrong. The child has a problem, and it may be a problem of molestation. If so, the child needs help. Unfortunately, many children do not get that help. Molested children have been accused of inventing the incident, although researchers assure us that children rarely, if ever, invent such things. Incest has been covered up so as not to break up the family.

However, if molestation—and especially incest—is discovered to have occurred, two things must be done immediately:

First, the child—and other children too—must be protected from any further abuse. This must be done, whatever the cost. In many cases the accused molester will have to be confronted. But whatever it takes, it is important that the child should feel confident that the molester will never be able to get at her (or him) again.

Second, the child must be given a lot of love and emotional support. Parents must make it very clear that the little victim is not to blame. The crime and anything that happens as a result of it—even if a close relative goes to prison—is not her (or his) fault. But that reassurance will have to be given many times, so that the victim comes to believe it—and to believe that the parents believe it too!

child if she had ever been molested. To their horror, the child said yes. An old and trusted friend of the family had repeatedly done so. The family had excellent communication with their children, so why had the child not said something before? Simply because she did not know how. Once the subject was mentioned, the child was more than willing to discuss it.

How Can We Tell Them?

First, we have to bring the subject up. One suggestion is that if ever a scandal is reported in the news, parents could use it as an opportunity to ask their children: "Did anyone ever do anything like that to you?" and then go on to tell them how to act if anyone tries to.

Parents who teach their children about the Bible can use parts of it as a starting point. They can use the story of Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, to explain the boundaries that exist in what one person may do to another. (Genesis 34:1-4) The story of Tamar and Amnon can be used to show that there are things that even close relatives are not permitted to do to each other. (2 Samuel 13:10-16) And we should make sure they understand that if something like that does happen to them, we want to know about it. We will not get angry with them if they tell us.

Mary was molested when she was a little girl, so she made very sure to put her three daughters on guard against molesters. How did she do it? As soon as they were old enough to understand, she told them: "If anyone touches you in the wrong place, tell me and I will not be angry." How would they know where the wrong places are? Mary says that when they were about three years old she showed them. When she was bathing them or getting them ready for bed, she pointed out the parts of their body that other people should not touch. As they got a little older, she presented situations: "Nobody should touch you there, even if it is a schoolteacher or a policeman. Not even Mummy or Daddy should touch you there. And a doctor should only touch you there if Mummy or Daddy is with you!"

Did this work? Mary remembers one occasion when a relative was playing with her six-year-old daughter. The things the relative was doing started to make the little girl feel uncomfortable. What did she do? She just walked away from him. Mary is not sure whether the relative had bad intentions or not. But she is delighted that her daughter was able to walk away from the situation when it started to feel "not right," or "strange."

Hence, just as parents warn their children against going off with strangers, playing in a busy street, and putting their hands on electric wires, they should also tell them about avoiding molestation. They should explain the boundaries on their bodies that others—even their own parents—should not transgress. They should clearly state that if something does happen, they want to know about it. And they will not blame the children.

"If anyone touches you in the wrong place, tell me"

WAT.0001.004.0212

The "What if . . . ?" Game

Sometimes adults will use their greater experience and intelligence to deceive children into joining them in some inappropriate activity, and children may not spot the deception without help. So Linda Tschirhart Sanford, author of the book The Silent Children, suggests a tool that could be used to counter this in advance: the "What if . . . ?" game. From time to time, ask the children what they would do in certain situations: "What if the baby sitter said that you could stay up late watching television if you got in the bathtub with him and played games? What would you tell him?" "What if someone you knew took you for a ride and wanted to put his hands where he should not? What would you do?" "What would you do if an older friend touched you in a way you did not like, or wanted to undress you and play a secret game with you?"

Tell children the right names for the parts of their body

In teaching the child how to answer, parents can show that there are occasions when they can say no to an adult. There are also occasions when they should reveal secrets. If they are trained to say things like "I will just go and ask Mummy first," they will be able to discourage most potential molesters. If the child learns the right answers in the "What if . . . ?" game, it is gaining some good tools to protect itself. If it gives a wrong answer, well, go back over the question and suggest a different answer.

Give Them the Words

The following experience shows another problem that children face in the matter of molestation: A woman relates that she was abused as a child and tried to tell her mother about it. But she did not have the right words and could not explain what had happened. Her mother thought that someone was just trying to be affectionate and that the little girl had misunderstood the situation and blown it out of proportion.

Because of similar experiences, social workers encourage parents to tell their children the right names for parts of their bodies. Give them the vocabulary to express themselves in case the worst happens.

Alert but Balanced

One of a parent's worst nightmares is that their child might be sexually molested. However, we need to remember that most adults are not going to molest our children. Most of our relatives love them and would be as concerned as we are to protect them from abuse.

On the other hand, it can happen. And merely hoping that it will not happen is not enough. The Biblical proverb says: "Shrewd is the one that has seen the calamity and proceeds to conceal himself." (Proverbs 22:3) Hence, it is wise to be cautious, especially in view of the times we live in. If we avoid, to the extent possible, putting our children in situations that leave them vulnerable, if we explain to them the boundaries that even adults are not to cross, and if we teach them how to react in case any adult should try to cross those boundaries, then we are doing a lot to protect our children from the molester.

To End Child Abuse

The remedy works when practiced, not when preached

THE new morality is not new. It is only a new name for the old immorality. The tree is still rotten, its fruit still worthless. Its wisdom is unrighteous, its "children" prove it so. As it occurred in the days of Noah and in the days of Lot, so it is occurring in these last days of another immoral system. The crop being reaped is the same, only this time it's a bumper harvest. And not at all practical—very, very impractical. Especially so for the children.

The Bible's remedy is practical, for children and everyone else. Even the professional people who are involved with the problem of child abuse offer similar solutions, up to a point. They know that bad family conditions cause children to run away from home, and that a high percentage of runaways end up on the streets and in prostitution and pornography and suffer appalling abuse. Some are escaping incest at home, homes broken by divorce, chronic conflicts with parents, lack of loving attention, and some are swayed by their peers. Whatever the specific causes, the remedy is the healing of family breakdown. So say the experts.

So does the Bible. It calls for close communication between parent and child. Concerning righteous principles, the command is: "You must inculcate them in your son and speak of them when you sit in your house and when you walk on the road and when you lie down and when you get up."—Deuteronomy 6:7.

The Bible counsels both parents and children on how to act: "Children, be obedient to your parents in union with the Lord, for this is righteous . . . And you, fathers, do not be irritating your children, but go on bringing them up in the discipline and mental-regulating of Jehovah."—Ephesians 6:1, 4.

Psychiatrists agree. They say parents must be fair and set good examples, but children need regulations and discipline. One psychotherapist confirms this, saying: "We abandon our children also when, hoping to make 'friends' of them, we renounce our responsibilities as models and as law-givers. This is a betrayal that children feel acutely because no need is stronger to a growing child than the sense of boundaries and limits. The child experiences them as love." The Bible confirms this. "The one whom Jehovah loves he reproves, even as a father does a son in whom he finds pleasure." —Proverbs 3:12.

Some say that more sex education in the schools is what is needed; others contend it's already too explicit and goes too far. One illustrated booklet for children, prepared by a Syracuse University professor, says: "All thoughts are normal." "Masturbation is a normal expression of sex for both males and females at any age. Enjoy it." Homosexuality is your business, "so choose the sexual life you want." "A lot of people wonder about oral and anal sex, and some think it is 'perverted.' We think there is nothing wrong with any kind of sex." "Pornography is harmless."

Perhaps Johnny can't read or write because his teachers are too busy indoctrinating him with the "normality" of sexual perversions. Sex instruction for children can be too much too soon. Dr. Greenwood warns: "Parents in their efforts to be liberal often overeducate, and they may be giving their children material they're not yet ready to cope with." Regardless of the pros and cons of sex education, the hard fact is the tremendous increase in child prostitution, sodomy, pornography and incest.

Those who greedily exploit children in these ways fit the Bible's description, found at Ephesians 4:19: "Having come to be past all moral sense, they gave themselves over to loose conduct to work uncleanness of every sort with greediness." They fit those of Noah's day: "Jehovah saw that the badness of man was abundant in the earth and every inclination of the thoughts of his heart was only bad all the time."—Genesis 6:5.

Only the Bible's solution will end the abuse of children. Jesus summed it up: 'Love God with your whole heart. Love your neighbor as yourself.' (Matthew 22: 37-39) The apostle Paul repeated it: "Love does not work evil to one's neighbor; therefore love is the law's fulfillment." —Romans 13:10.

This solution of brotherly love is practical. When applied, it works. Too many are hearers of God's Word but not doers of it. Too many say "Lord, Lord," but don't listen to Jesus or do Jehovah's will. —James 1:22; Matthew 7:21.

In God's due time all who embrace his kingdom under Christ will become able to keep this law of love perfectly. Then will come fulfillment of Proverbs 2:21, 22: "The upright are the ones that will reside in the earth, and the blameless are the ones that will be left over in it. As regards the wicked, they will be cut off from the very earth; and as for the treacherous, they will be torn away from it."

This is the only way, the final way, to end child abuse.

What Parents Can Do

LOOKING at their own lack of training and ability, many parents might think it would be easier to leave sex education all to the school. But, then, some conscientious parents are confused. They have heard stories about sex education given without a moral background and they rightly worry. Children are now being told that premarital sex, sodomy and other forms of sexual deviation are normal and, though not desirable, are not to be condemned.

Some advocates say conventional standards of morality are irrelevant. One such claims that "the core of the ethical problem is not whether a boy or girl remains or does not remain a virgin, but whether sex is used exploitatively and self-centeredly, or in a meaningful and dignified way." Is this what you want your child taught? How do unmarried people use sex in a meaningful and "dignified" way if they violate the divine command to "flee from fornication"?—1 Cor. 6:18.

What can you do about the situation? Fight the giving of sex education in the schools? For the true Christian the direction is given: The servant "of the Lord does not need to fight, but needs to be gentle toward all, qualified to teach, keeping himself restrained under evil." (2 Tim. 2:24) If a parent objects to what is being taught and wants to protect his child, he can ask to have his child released from such classes.

In fairness to the courses taught at some schools, however, it must be admitted that not all is bad. There is teaching in hygiene, disease prevention, care of children, family responsibility, and so forth. Further, there is some effort to refer students to others for guidance, such as the textbook that urges those with concerns about homosexuality to speak to their doctor or some other counselor. It also speaks against "misuse of oneself" in discussing masturbation. But there are veiled statements that leave the reader feeling it is up to each one to decide the matter for himself; there is no honest condemnation of wrong acts.

Christian parents take the course that the text at 2 Timothy 2:24 recommends, namely, to be "qualified to teach." Such parents have learned to be well equipped to combat the misinformation their children get in some schools in the teaching of evolution and the setting of materialistic goals by perhaps well-meaning teachers. With answers given in home training, parents can be confident that their children have a defense.

If your church has not provided you with the information to combat faith-eroding teachings of today and no longer upholds the Bible as the source of moral teaching, why not find out where you can be taught and trained to aid your children?

Help Available

Jehovah's witnesses as Christians sense the need to fortify youth and equip parents to fill present-day needs. They take the position that "wisdom is for a protection." (Eccl. 7:12) Repeatedly their Watchtower and Awake! magazines have presented articles to aid parents on how to approach sexual matters with their young ones, what to discuss and how to say it. Examples are the articles in Awake! of December 8, 1968, and June 8, 1965, on a father talking to his sons and the July 8, 1965, issue on a mother talking to her daughters. These took up such matters as conception, birth, proper use of sexual powers, bodily functions, dating and self-control. Others of their publications also provide helpful instruction, all on a fine basis of Biblical morality.

At their conventions the Witnesses receive frank and straightforward material in talks and even dramas that make application of the points taught. At the 1969 "Peace on Earth" International Assembly sessions they heard talks warning against the illicit satisfaction of fornication and adultery and the dangers of toying with sexual immorality. During 1970 additional counsel along these lines will be given at their assemblies. More worthwhile occupation of time and abilities are set before youthful attenders who are with their parents for this instruction. Yes, it is sometimes beneficial to have group instruction. But the setting must be right, with parents or other responsible adults present and with good motives.

In your home, put information about sex on the right basis. Found it upon the "discipline and authoritative advice of Jehovah." (Eph. 6:4) This is much more valuable source material than the conceited, always-changing views of humans who call for "new values" as to "when and how we should have sexual experiences." Dr. Mary Calderone, one of the prime backers of sex courses in schools, says: "Separate yourselves from your parents. I don't believe the old 'Thou shalt nots' apply anymore." Is this what you want your children to hear and defenselessly believe? They need fortifying!

Some Suggestions

Teach your own children that possession of sexual powers brings responsibility to the Designer and calls for respect for his original purpose. Use the Scriptures to show what is honorable use, that these are powers of procreation, a wonderful thing! (Gen. 1:28) Show that there must be deep mutual love between a husband and his wife, a giving that brings pleasure to another and thus disciplines in unselfishness. (Prov. 5:15-23; Eph. 5:21-33) Explain that confinement of one's sexual interests to one's marriage mate is a sound requirement for life.—Heb. 13:4.

As you see from the above Scripture references, the Bible can be used as a source and as a model of tasteful and forceful expression for teaching. Use it and thus counter the influence of declining moral standards.

Give such teaching in a wholesome atmosphere of respect for God and decency. Use proper terminology. Warm teaching, with association of the knowledge to its proper use, is better than detached presentation of cold biological facts with too many details. If children want to know more, they will usually ask. At times ask them questions or encourage them to ask questions. In that way they learn what they want and need to know. Make it a conversation rather than lecturing or preaching. Look up information together.

Be sure the child sees the practical wisdom as well as the obedience to God's law that is involved, that it is not a matter of being prudish.

With discernment several children can be taught together. In this way they come to face the subject without feeling it is a deep, dark secret. After the smaller ones have been simply taught and leave, then the older ones who ask for and need more details can get some elaboration on the matter by the parents. Or, they may select another time, such as when walking home from a visit or shopping, to speak to their children who need information to prepare them for changes in their body or to counter the misinformation they will be hearing from other children.

When is the best time to start with this training of children? Before they start to school. But remember, a small question requires only a small answer. It is unwise to swamp the child with all the clinical details. Make answers clear and direct, honest and simple. Children are quick to detect deceit and hypocrisy. That will result in a loss of confidence. Elaborate only if further questions come. Usually a simple answer suffices.

One of the reasons for not giving them more than they need at such a young age gives basis to some of the strongest objections against forcing the teaching of sex upon children in the lower grades. Age five to adolescence is viewed as the "latency period," when a child's sexual interests are not intense, other things being pursued. It is a time to let a child enjoy growing up, being a child. The child can be damaged or disturbed at this period by unwanted sex talk that can lead to sexual difficulties later on.

Then there is a period in life when more information must be given without waiting for questions from the child. It is when the bodies of youngsters begin to develop the capacity to carry out the marvelous function of procreation. Children need to be told in advance what to expect. They should be taught what changes will occur in their bodies and in their feelings toward the opposite sex. But again, this should be suitable to their age and need. It is best not to make a "big" thing out of it, either then or with children at other sessions. It should not be made an obsession. A physician and author, Dr. Melvin Anchell, says he can teach all that a child needs to know about sex, giving it the medical viewpoint, in about fifteen minutes. But that is the medical viewpoint; there is also God's viewpoint.

There is another matter that is a parental responsibility. What the parents fail to curb in the way of reading and viewing could damage the child's mind. Do you really know what your child reads? What do others, his school chums, offer him to read? One mother was shocked to find some scandalous material tucked under the mattress of her son's bed. Are you serious about the quality of your son's food? Then be serious about the quality of his reading matter. Comics often exploit sex and violence, as does TV.

What Your Family Needs

While the suggestions above may be a help, there is something else you need in order to combat the rising tide of loose conduct and adverse effects of possibly harmful sex instruction. Just as one must have something firm and solid onto which one can fasten a lifesaving rope if it is to be truly useful, so there must be a well-rounded-out knowledge of the Bible if one is to have the background that will give solid support to this kind of parentally taught sex information. This can be had by a regular, weekly Bible study in your home.

Jehovah's witnesses provide this service free of charge, at a time convenient to you in the privacy of your own home, using your own Bible. There is no obligation except to agree to prepare in advance for the best results. The book The Truth That Leads to Eternal Life contains the course of study. It takes only about six months to cover the material. The fact that in less than two years this publication has reached the astounding circulation of some 23 million copies in many languages is proof enough that it is supplying a need.

More than a million free home Bible studies are being conducted by Jehovah's witnesses each week all around the world. Why not avail yourself of this fine provision? In this way you can fortify your family with the basis in faith that it needs to endure in this era of sex obsession. It will spare you many heartaches and crises in family life.

Parents, do not let your God-given responsibility toward your children in this or any other matter be wrested from you, either by your own apathy or by the questionable motives of some others. The fact that some advocates of sex education in schools advise their followers to "sneak in" such courses and claim that they are merely expanding already-existing programs shows dishonesty on their part and does raise questions about their motives.

The effect of sex education can be bad, depending upon the manner in which it is taught and the content of the material. A conscientious parent will acquaint himself with what is taught and know who has edited the material. Thus he will be able to counteract effectively any misinformation that his child gets in classes.

If information given in some programs serves to supplement that which parents are morally responsible to give their children, then it may be good. It can be learned along with related facts and other studies in school.

But in either case, the final effect upon your children will be determined in great measure by what you as the parent do to discharge your own responsibility in the matter. Avail yourself of the Bible-study course that will erect a firm foundation of faith upon which you can build the spirituality of your family. Use the timely material in the Watch Tower publications to aid you to teach your children Bible principles. Build all aspects of a close family relationship. The warm, loving atmosphere of Christian family life is the wholesome climate in which to nurture youth to responsible manhood and womanhood.—Eph. 5:15-23; 6:1-4.

"Plowing with Twelve Spans"

◆ Persons who read the Bible account at 1 Kings 19:19 might conclude that the prophet Elisha was plowing with a team of twelve pairs of bulls. They might wonder how he ever managed to do this. However, travelers in Bible lands have reported some interesting facts about plowing methods there. Considering these reports will help us get a clearer picture of how Elisha plowed.

Since the small plows of the farmers in the Middle East do not make a very deep furrow, farmers there will arrange to plow in company with fellow farmers. One traveler reported that he had seen more than a dozen plows at work in the same field, each with its own plowman and team of oxen before him. Evidently, Elisha was not behind a single plow to which twenty-four bulls were yoked, but he was in charge of the last of twelve plows.

Your Child Is in DANGER!

The molestation of children is an ugly reality in this sick world. Lear's magazine said: "It affects more of us than cancer, more of us than heart disease, more of us than AIDS." Awake! thus feels an obligation to try to alert its readers to this danger and what can be done about it. —Compare Ezekiel 3: 17-21; Romans 13: 11-13.

IN RECENT years a global outcry has arisen over the molestation of children. But the media attention, replete with celebrities who have publicly disclosed their own experiences of childhood abuse, has led to some popular misconceptions. Some believe that all this talk about attacks on children is simply the latest fad. In truth, though, there is little new about such sexual assault. It is nearly as old as human history itself.

An Ancient Problem

Some 4,000 years ago, the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah were famous for depravity. Pedophilia was apparently among the region's many vices. Genesis 19:4 describes a sex-crazed mob of Sodomites ranging "from boy to old man" seeking to rape Lot's two male guests. Consider: Why would mere boys be inflamed with the idea of raping males? Clearly they had already been introduced to homosexual perversions.

Centuries later, the nation of Israel moved into the region of Canaan. So steeped was this land in incest, sodomy, bestiality, prostitution, and even the ritualized sacrifice of little children to demon gods that all these vile acts had to be expressly forbidden in the Mosaic Law. (Leviticus 18:6, 21-23; 19:29; Jeremiah 32:35) Despite divine warnings, rebellious Israelites, including some of their rulers, adopted these despicable practices.—Psalm 106: 35-38.

Ancient Greece and Rome, however, were far worse than Israel in this regard. Infanticide was common to both, and in Greece it was a widely accepted practice for older men to have relations with young boys. Boy brothels flourished in every ancient Greek city. In the Roman Empire, child prostitution was so prevalent that special taxes and holidays were set up specifically for that trade. In the arenas, girls were raped and forced into acts of bestiality. Similar atrocities were prevalent in many other ancient nations.

What about modern times? Is mankind too civilized for such horrible sex acts to flourish today? Students of the Bible cannot accept this notion. They well know that the apostle Paul characterized our era as "critical times hard to deal with." He detailed the rampant self-love, the love of pleasure, and the disintegration of natural family love that overrun modern society and added: "Wicked men and impostors will advance from bad to worse." (2 Timothy 3:1-5, 13; Revelation 12:7-12) Has child molestation, so often perpetrated by "wicked men and impostors," got worse?

An Urgent Problem

Assaults on children are often cloaked in secrecy, so much so that they have been called perhaps the most unreported of crimes. Even so, such crimes have evidently spiraled upward in recent decades. In the United States, a survey on the subject was conducted by the Los Angeles Times. It found that 27 percent of the women and 16 percent of the men had been sexually abused as children. Shocking as these statistics are, other careful estimates for the United States have run considerably higher.

In Malaysia, reports of child molestation have quadrupled over the past decade. In Thailand, some 75 percent of the men in one survey admitted to using child prostitutes. In Germany, officials estimate that as many as 300,000 children are sexually abused each year. According to South Africa's Cape Times, the number of reports of such assaults soared by 175 percent in a recent three-year period. In the Netherlands and Canada, researchers found that about one third of all women had been sexually abused as children. In Finland, 18 percent of the ninth-grade girls (15 or 16 years old) and 7 percent of the boys reported having had sexual contact with someone at least five years their senior.

In various countries disturbing reports have surfaced about religious cults that abuse children with sadistic sexual practices and torture. Often, those who report that they were victims of such crimes are treated with incredulity, not compassion.

So child molestation is neither new nor rare; it is a long-standing problem that is epidemic today. Its impact can be devastating. Many survivors suffer profound feelings of worthlessness and low self-esteem. Experts in the field have listed some common aftereffects of incest on girls, such as running away, drug and alcohol abuse, depression, attempted suicide, delinquency, promiscuity, sleep disturbances, and learning problems. Long-range effects may include poor parenting skills, frigidity, distrust of men, marriage to a pedophile, lesbianism, prostitution, and child molestation itself.

These aftereffects are not inevitable for a victim; nor could anyone rightly excuse wrong conduct solely on the grounds of having been assaulted in the past. Abuse does not predestine its victims to be immoral or delinquent; nor does it dissolve all their personal responsibility for the choices they make later in life. But these common outcomes for victims are real dangers. They add urgency to the question, How can we protect children from molestation?

Awake!

Why Awake! Is Published Awake! is for the enlightenment of the entire family. It shows how to cope with today's problems. It reports the news, tells about people in many lands, examines religion and science. But it does more. It probes beneath the surface and points to the real meaning behind current events, yet it always stays politically neutral and does not exalt one race above another. Most important, this magazine builds confidence in the Creator's promise of a peaceful and secure new world before the generation that saw the events of 1914 passes away.

How Can We Protect OUR CHILDREN?

AFTER using children to satisfy perverted lusts, after robbing them of their security and their sense of innocence, child molesters still want something else from their victims—SILENCE. To secure that silence, they use shame, secrecy, even outright terror. Children are thus robbed of their best weapon against abuse —the will to tell, to speak up and ask an adult for protection.

"Don't ever tell. It will be our secret."

"No one would believe you."

"If you tell, your parents will hate you. They'll know it was your fault."

"Don't you want to be my special friend anymore?"

"You don't want me to go to jail, do you?"

"I'll kill your parents if you tell."

Tragically, adult society often unwittingly collaborates with child abusers. How so? By refusing to be aware of this danger, by fostering a hush-hush attitude about it, by believing oft-repeated myths. Ignorance, misinformation, and silence give safe haven to abusers, not their victims.

For example, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops concluded recently that it was a "general conspiracy of silence" that allowed gross child abuse to persist among the Catholic clergy for decades. Time magazine, in reporting on the widespread plague of incest, also cited a "conspiracy of silence" as a factor that "only helps perpetuate the tragedy" in families.

However, Time noted that this conspiracy is crumbling at last. Why? In a word, education. It is as Asiaweek magazine put it: "All experts agree that the best defence against child abuse is public awareness." To defend their children, parents must understand the realities of the threat. Educate Your Child!

Wise King Solomon told his son that knowledge, wisdom, and thinking ability could protect him "from the bad way, from the man speaking perverse things." (Proverbs 2:10-12) Isn't that just what children need? The FBI pamphlet Child Molesters: A Behavioral Analysis says this under the heading "The Ideal Victim": "For most children sex is a taboo subject about which they receive little accurate information, especially from their parents." Don't let your children be "ideal victims." Educate them about sex.* For example, no child should reach puberty unaware of how the body will change during this time. Ignorance will make them confused, ashamed—and vulnerable.

A woman we'll call Janet was sexually abused as a child, and years later her own two children were sexually abused. She recalls: "The way we were brought up, we never talked

Common Misconceptions

Misconception: Child abusers are usually strangers, deranged misfits who abduct children and use physical force to abuse them.

In the vast majority of cases—from 85 to 90 percent by some estimates—the abuser is a person the child knows and trusts. Rather than using force, abusers often manipulate the child into sexual acts gradually, taking advantage of the child's limited experience and reasoning ability. (Compare 1 Corinthians 13:11 and Proverbs 22:15.) These abusers are not the drooling loners of the stereotype. Many are quite religious, respected, and well liked in the community. According to the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation, "to assume that someone is not a pedophile simply because he is nice, goes to church, works hard, is kind to animals, and so on, is absurd." Recent research suggests that it is also wrong to assume that all abusers are male or that all victims are female.

Misconception: Children fantasize or lie about sexual abuse.

Under normal circumstances children lack the experience or sophistication in sexual matters to invent explicit claims of abuse, although some small children may become confused about details. Even the most skeptical of researchers agree that most claims of abuse are valid. Consider the book Sex Abuse Hysteria—Salem Witch Trials Revisited, which focuses on false claims of abuse.* This book admits: "Genuine sex abuse of children is widespread and the vast majority of sex abuse allegations of children . . . are likely to be justified (perhaps 95% or more)." Children find it enormously difficult to report abuse. When they do lie about abuse, it is most often to deny that it happened even though it actually did.

Misconception: Children are seductive and frequently bring the abuse on themselves by their conduct.

This notion is particularly warped, since, in effect, it blames the victim for the abuse. Children have no real concept of sexuality. They have no idea of what such activity implies or of how it will change them. They are therefore incapable of consenting to it in any meaningful way. It is the abuser, and the abuser alone, who bears the blame for the abuse.—Compare Luke 11:11, 12.

Misconception: When children disclose abuse, parents should teach them to refrain from talking about it and to 'put it behind them.'

Who is best served if the child keeps silent about the abuse? Is it not the abuser? In fact, studies have shown that denial with emotional suppression may be the least effective way to deal with the trauma of abuse. Of the nine coping methods used by one group of adult survivors studied in England, the ones who denied, avoided, or suppressed the issue suffered the greater emotional maladjustment and distress in adult life. If you experienced a terrifying assault, would you want to be told not to talk about it? Why tell a child such a thing? Allowing the child the normal reaction to such a terrible event, such as grief, anger, mourning, will give him the opportunity eventually to put the abuse in the past.

* In some divorce cases, contending adults have been known to use an accusation of child abuse as a weapon.

about sex. So I grew up embarrassed about it. It was shameful. And when I had kids, it was the same. I could talk to other people's kids but not to my own. I think that's unhealthy because children are vulnerable if you don't talk to them about these things."

Abuse prevention can be taught early. When you teach children to name such body parts as the vagina, the breasts, the anus, the penis, tell them that these places are good, they are special—but they are private. "Other people are not allowed to handle them—not even Mommy or Daddy—and not even a doctor unless Mommy or Daddy is there or has said it is OK."* Ideally, such statements should come from both parents or each adult guardian.

In The Safe Child Book, Sherryll Kraizer notes that while children should feel free to ignore, scream at, or run from an abuser, many children who are abused explain later that they didn't want to seem rude. Children thus need to know that some grown-ups do bad things and that not even a child has to obey anyone who tells him or her to do something wrong. At such times a child has a perfect right to say no, just as did Daniel and his companions to the Babylonian adults who wanted them to eat unclean food.—Daniel 1:4, 8; 3:16-18.

One widely recommended teaching tool is the "What if . . . ?" game. You might, for example, ask: "What if your teacher told you to hit another child? What would you do?" Or: "What if (Mommy, Daddy, a minister, a policeman) told you to jump off a tall building?" The child's answer may be inadequate or simply wrong, but don't correct harshly. The game need not include shock or scare tactics; in fact, experts recommend that it be played in a gentle, loving, even playful manner.

Next, teach children to fend off displays of affection that are inappropriate or that make them feel uncomfortable. Ask, for example, "What if a friend of Mommy and Daddy wanted to kiss you in a way that made you feel funny?"* It is often best to encourage the child to act out what he or she would do, making it a "Let's pretend" game.

In the same way, children can learn to resist other tactics of abusers. For example, you might ask: "What if someone says, 'You know, you're my favorite. Don't you want to be my friend?'" When the child learns to resist such ploys, discuss others. You might ask: "If someone says, 'You don't want to hurt my feelings, do you?' What will you say?" Show the child how to say no through words and clear, firm body language. Remember, abusers often test how children respond to subtle advances. So a child must be taught to resist firmly and say, "I'm telling on you."

Be Thorough in Your Training

Do not limit such training to a onetime talk. Children need much repetition. Use your own

* Of course, parents must bathe and change very little children, and at such times parents wash the private parts. But teach your children to bathe themselves early on; some child-care experts recommend that they learn to wash their own private parts by the age of three if possible.

* Some experts caution that if you force your child to kiss or hug every person who asks for such displays of affection, you may undermine this training. Thus, some parents teach children to make polite excuses or substitutions when unwanted demands are made of them.

He Cried Out for Help

"PLEA to Jehovah Halts Molester's Attack on Youth," declared a headline in the U.S. newspaper The Arizona Republic, on May 5, 1993. The alleged molester abducted the 13-year-old youth at gunpoint, taking him to the perpetrator's apartment. When the youth cried out, "Jehovah, help me!" the molester was shaken and let the boy go free. The police later apprehended the man.

While calling upon Jehovah's name is certainly appropriate under such circumstances, it does not mean that God's servants will be free from attack in these critical "last days." (2 Timothy 3:1-5, 13) Christian parents must therefore train their children to be cautious with all strangers, regardless of apparent authority.

judgment in determining just how explicit the training should be. But be thorough.

Be sure, for example, to forestall any attempt by an abuser to create a secret pact. Children should know that it is never all right for an adult to ask them to keep a secret from either parent. Reassure them that it is always proper for them to tell—even if they had promised not to. (Compare Numbers 30: 12, 16.) Some abusers blackmail the child if they know that the child has disobeyed some family rule. "I won't tell on you if you won't tell on me" is the message. So children should know that they will never get in trouble for telling—even under these circumstances. It is safe to tell.

Your training should also be threat-resistant. Some abusers have killed small animals in front of a child and threatened to do the same to the child's parents. Others have warned their victim that they will abuse younger siblings. So teach children that they should always tell on an abuser, no matter what scary threats are made.

In this regard the Bible can be a helpful teaching tool. Because it so vividly stresses Jehovah's almighty power, it can take the bite out of abusers' threats. Children need to know that no matter what threats are made, Jehovah is able to help his people. (Daniel 3:8-30) Even when bad people hurt those Jehovah loves, he can always undo the damage afterward and make things better again. (Job, chapters 1, 2; 42:10-17; Isaiah 65:17) Assure them that Jehovah sees everything, including the people who do bad things and the good people who do their best to resist them.—Compare Hebrews 4:13.

Teach children to use words and clear, firm body language to resist improper advances

Cautious as Serpents

It is the rare pedophile who uses physical force to molest a child. They generally prefer to befriend children first. Jesus' advice to be "cautious as serpents" is thus appropriate. (Matthew 10:16) Close supervision by loving parents is one of the best safeguards against abuse. Some molesters look for a child alone in a public place and strike up a conversation to spark the child's curiosity. ("Do you like motorcycles?" "Come see the puppies out in my truck.") True, you cannot be with your children at all times. And child-care experts recognize that children need some freedom to move around. But wise parents are cautious about granting children too much freedom prematurely.

Make sure you get to know well any

If Your Child Is Abused

TO STOP abuse, you must know it when you see it. In the numerous books on the subject experts have listed dozens of telltale signs of abuse that parents can watch for. These include: complaints of pain while urinating or defecating, genital infections, abrasions or lesions in the genital area, the sudden onset of bed-wetting, appetite loss or other eating problems, precocious sexual behavior, a sudden fear of such places as school or parts of the house, periods of panic, an extreme fear of undressing, a fear of being alone with a familiar person, and self-mutilation.

However, be careful about jumping to conclusions. Most of these symptoms do not by themselves necessarily mean that a child has actually been sexually abused. Each could indicate some other problem. But if you see disturbing symptoms, gently broach the subject, perhaps with such a statement as: "If anyone ever touches you in a way that makes you feel uncomfortable, I want you to know that you can always tell me, and I'll do all I can to protect you. Has anything like that ever happened to you?"—Proverbs 20:5.

If your child discloses sexual abuse, you will no doubt feel shattered. But remember: Your reaction will play a major role in the child's recovery. Your child has been carrying an unbearable burden and needs you, with all your adult strength, to lift it from her or his shoulders. Praise the child for being so brave as to tell you what happened. Repeatedly reassure the child that you will do your best to provide protection; that the abuse was the abuser's fault, not the child's; that the child is not "bad"; that you love the child.

Some legal experts advise reporting the abuse to the authorities as soon as possible. In some lands the legal system may require this. But in other places the legal system may offer little hope of successful prosecution.

What, though, when the abuser is one's own beloved mate? Sad to say, many women fail to take decisive action. To be sure, it is never easy to face the ugly reality of a mate who is a child abuser. Emotional ties, and even financial dependency, can be overwhelmingly strong. The wronged wife may also realize that taking action could cost her husband his family, his job, his reputation.* The hard truth is, though, that he may just be reaping what he has sown. (Galatians 6:7) Innocent children, on the other hand, stand to lose much more if they are not believed and protected. Their whole future is at stake. They do not have the resources that adults have. Trauma can scar and shape them adversely for life. They are the ones who need and deserve tender treatment. —Compare Genesis 33:13, 14.

Parents must therefore make every reasonable effort to protect their children! Many responsible parents choose to seek out professional help for an abused child. Just as you would with a medical doctor, make sure that any such professional will respect your religious views.# Help your child rebuild his or her shattered self-esteem through a steady outpouring of parental love.

* In reality, the molester is already in trouble and badly needs help. Even if the perpetrator claims to be sorry, the wronged mate may consider: Why didn't he confess before being exposed by his victim?

For instance, when Jehovah's Witnesses are confronted with issues involving blood transfusion, they make sure that the doctor respects their religious beliefs.

adults or older youths who are close to your children, using extra caution when deciding who should care for your children in your absence. Be wary of baby-sitters who make your children feel funny or ill at ease. Likewise, beware of teenagers who seem to have an excessive interest in younger children and have no friends their own age. Thoroughly check out day-care facilities and schools. Tour the entire premises and interview the staff, observing carefully how they interact with children. Ask if they mind if you drop in to check on your children at unexpected times; if this is not allowed, look elsewhere.—See Awake! of December 8, 1987, pages 3-11.

The sad truth is, however, that not even the best of parents can control everything that happens to their children.—Ecclesiastes 9:11.

If parents work together, there is one thing they can control: the home environment. And since the home is where most child abuse occurs, that will be the focus of the next article.

Prevention IN THE HOME

IT IS NOT the stranger in a trench coat, the loner lurking in the bushes, who poses the greatest threat to children. It is a member of the family. The vast majority of sexual abuse occurs in the home. So how can the home be made more resistant to abuse?

Monique was nine years old when he started abusing her. He began by spying on her as she undressed; then he started visiting her room at night and touching her private parts. When she resisted him, he was furious. Once he even attacked her with a hammer and threw her down a flight of stairs. "No one would believe me," Monique recalls—not even her mother. The abuser was Monique's stepfather.

In his book Slaughter of the Innocents, historian Dr. Sander J. Breiner examines the evidence of child abuse in five ancient societies—Egypt, China, Greece, Rome, and Israel. He concludes that while abuse did exist in Israel, it was relatively rare compared to the other four civilizations. Why? Unlike their neighbors, the people in Israel were taught to have respect for women and children—an enlightened view they owed to the Holy Scriptures. When the Israelites applied divine law to family life, they prevented child abuse. Today's families need these clean, practical standards more than ever.

Moral Laws

Does Bible law have an impact on your family? For instance, Leviticus 18:6 reads: "You people must not come near, any man of you, to any close fleshly relative of his to lay bare nakedness. I am Jehovah." Similarly the Christian congregation today enforces strong laws against all forms of sexual abuse. Anyone who sexually abuses a child risks being disfellowshipped, put out of the congregation.* —1 Corinthians 6:9, 10.

All families should know and review such laws together. Deuteronomy 6:6, 7 urges: "And these words that I am commanding you today must prove to be on your heart; and you must inculcate them in your son and speak of them when you sit in your house and when you walk on the road and when you lie down and when you get up." Inculcating these laws means more than occasionally lecturing your children. It involves a regular give-and-take discussion. From time to time, both mother and father should reaffirm God's laws on incest and the loving reasons for these laws.

* Sexual abuse of a child occurs when someone uses a child to gratify his or her own sexual desires. It often involves what the Bible calls fornication, or por·nei'a, which could include fondling of genitalia, sexual intercourse, and oral or anal sex. Some abusive acts, such as the fondling of breasts, explicitly immoral proposals, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, and indecent exposure, may amount to what the Bible condemns as "loose conduct."—Galatians 5:19-21; see The Watchtower of March 15, 1983, footnote on page 30.

You might also use such stories as that of Tamar and Amnon, David's children, to show children that in sexual matters there are boundaries that no one—close relatives included—should ever cross.—Genesis 9:20-29; 2 Samuel 13:10-16.

Respect for these principles can be shown even in practical living arrangements. In one Oriental country, research has shown that much incest occurs in families where children sleep with parents even when there is no economic necessity for this. Similarly, it is generally unwise to have opposite-sex siblings share a bed or a room as they grow older, if this is at all avoidable. Even when cramped living conditions are a fact of life, parents should use good judgment in deciding on where each family member should sleep.

Bible law forbids drunkenness, suggesting that it can lead to perversion. (Proverbs 23:29-33) According to one study, some 60 to 70 percent of incest victims reported that their abusing parent had been drinking when the abuse started.

A Loving Family Head

Researchers find that abuse is more common among families with domineering husbands. The widely held view that women exist merely to fulfill male needs is Scripturally wrong. Some men use this unchristian opinion to justify turning to a daughter for anything they cannot get from a wife. This type of oppression can cause women in these circumstances to lose their emotional balance. Many lose even the natural urge to protect their own children. (Compare Ecclesiastes 7:7.) One study, on the other hand, found that when workaholic fathers were largely absent from the home setting, sometimes mother-son sexual abuse has festered.

What about your family? Do you as husband take the role of head seriously, or do you abdicate it to your wife? (1 Corinthians 11:3) Do you treat your wife with love, honor, and respect? (Ephesians 5:25; 1 Peter 3:7) Do her views count? (Genesis 21:12; Proverbs 31:26, 28) And what about your children? Do you see them as precious? (Psalm 127:3) Or do you view them as mere burdens, readily

One survivor of years of incest said: "Abuse kills children, it kills their trust, their right to feel innocent. That's why children have to be protected. Because now I have to rebuild my whole life. Why make more children do that?" Why indeed?

Listen to the Children!

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, Canada, a recent study examined the careers of 30 child molesters. The results were chilling. The 30 individuals had, between them, abused 2,099 children. Fully half of them held positions of trust—teachers, ministers, administrators, and child-care workers. One molester, a 50-year-old dentist, had abused nearly 500 children over a 26-year period.

However, The Globe and Mail of Toronto notes: "In 80 per cent of cases, one or more sectors of the community (including friends or colleagues of the offender, families of victims, other children, some victims) denied or minimized the abuse." Not surprisingly, "the report suggests that denial and disbelief allow abuse to continue."

Some of the victims had told on the abusers. However, "parents of young victims were unwilling to accept what their children were telling them," The Globe and Mail quotes the report as saying. Similarly, a government official in Germany recently cited a report that child victims of sexual abuse have to approach adults with their story as many as seven times before they are believed.

exploitable? (Compare 2 Corinthians 12:14.) Eliminate warped, unscriptural views of family roles in your household, and you will make it more resistant to abuse.

An Emotionally Safe Place

One young woman whom we'll call Sandi says: "My whole family was set up for abuse. It was isolated, and each member was isolated from the other." Isolation, rigidity, and obsessive secrecy—these unhealthy, unscriptural attitudes are trademarks of the abusive household. (Compare 2 Samuel 12:12; Proverbs 18:1; Philippians 4:5.) Create a home atmosphere that is emotionally safe for children. Home should be a place where they feel built up, where they feel free to open their hearts and speak freely.

Also, children have a great need for physical expressions of love—hugging, caressing, handholding, romping. Do not overreact to the dangers of sexual abuse by withholding these demonstrations of love. Teach children through open, warm affection and praise that they are valued. Sandi remembers: "My mom's view was that to give anyone any commendation for anything was wrong. It would give you a big head." Sandi suffered at least ten years of sexual abuse in silence. Children who are not secure in the knowledge that they are beloved, worthwhile individuals may be more susceptible to an abuser's praise, his "affection," or his threats to withdraw it.

"Get Help Now"

"IF YOU are a man and you are sexually involved with children, you may be saying to yourself, 'She likes it,' or 'He asked for it,' or 'I'm teaching her about sex.' You're lying to yourself. Real men are not involved sexually with children. If there's any part of you that really cares about that child, stop it. Get help now." —A proposed public service announcement, quoted in the book By Silence Betrayed.

A pedophile who sexually abused hundreds of boys over a 40-year period admitted that the boys who had an emotional need for a friend like him made the "best" victims. Don't create such a need in your child.

Under severe trial Job said: "My soul certainly feels a loathing toward my life. I will give vent to my concern about myself. I will speak in the bitterness of my soul!" (Job 10:1) Likewise, many parents have found that they can help their children by helping themselves. The Harvard Mental Health Letter noted recently: "Strong social sanctions against the expression of pain by men apparently perpetuate the cycle of abuse." It seems that men who never get to express their pain about having been sexually abused are more likely to become abusers themselves. The Safe Child Book reports that most child molesters were themselves sexually abused as children but never got help to recover. They express their pain and anger by abusing other children.*—See also Job 7:11; 32:20.

The risk to children may also be higher when mothers do not come to terms with past abuse. For example, researchers report that women who were sexually abused as girls often marry men who are child abusers. Furthermore, if a woman has not come to terms with past abuse, she may understandably find it difficult to discuss abuse with her children. If abuse occurs, she may be less able to discern it and take positive action. Then the children pay an awful price for the mother's inaction.

Thus, abuse may pass from one generation to the next. Of course, many individuals who choose not to discuss their painful past seem able to cope well enough in life, and that is commendable. But in many the pain is deeper, and they do need to make a concerted effort

* While most child molesters were abused as children, this does not mean that abuse makes children become abusers. Less than a third of abused children become child molesters.

Children need plenty of warm, loving attention —including, if necessary, seeking competent professional help—to heal such severe childhood wounds. Their goal is not to wallow in self-pity. They want to break this sick, hurtful cycle of child abuse affecting their family. —See Awake! of October 8, 1991, pages 3 to 11.

The End of Abuse

Properly applied, the foregoing information can do much to reduce the chances of child abuse in your home. Remember, though, that abusers work in secrecy, they take advantage of trust, and they use adult tactics on innocent children. Inevitably, then, some of them do seem to get away with their disgusting crimes.

However, rest assured that God sees what they do. (Job 34:22) Unless they repent and change, he will not forget their vile acts. He will bring them out into the open in his due time. (Compare Matthew 10:26.) And he will exact justice. Jehovah God promises a time when all such treacherous people will be 'torn away from the earth,' and only the meek and gentle who love God and fellowman will be allowed to remain. (Proverbs 2:22; Psalm 37:10, 11, 29; 2 Peter 2:9-12) We have that marvelous hope of a new world thanks to the ransom sacrifice of Jesus Christ. (1 Timothy 2:6) Then, and only then, will abuse end forever.

In the meantime we must do all we can to protect our children. They are so precious! Most parents will readily put their own safety at risk in order to protect their little children. (Compare John 15:13.) If we don't protect our children, the consequences can be horrible. If we do, we give them a wonderful gift—a childhood that feels innocent and free from calamity. They can feel just as the psalmist did, who wrote: "I will say to Jehovah: 'You are my refuge and my stronghold, my God, in whom I will trust.'"—Psalm 91:2.

Consoling Adult Survivors of Childhood Trauma

THEY were an outgoing young couple, highly respected in the congregation. But his tone was urgent when he asked if the elder would call on them, and she had tears in her eyes. She was suffering from episodes of severe depression and self-hatred, even thoughts of suicide. She had been sexually abused as a youngster. Thankful that Jehovah's organization has provided direction on how to help the victims of such crimes, the elder studied the Society's letters to elders as well as the October 8, 1991, Awake! articles and the October 1, 1983, Watchtower article that dealt with this subject. Here are a few useful points derived from these sources.

1. Listen, listen, listen. When a child skins his knee, his first impulse is to run to Mommy or Daddy for comfort. But an abused child may never even have had that option. So as an adult, he still has that same need—to tell, to talk it out, to be comforted by a sympathetic listener. (Compare Job 10:1; 32:20.) When the elder visited the couple mentioned above, the husband was surprised by how little the elder spoke and how much he listened. The husband, a very practical, helpful man, found that he had been trying to fix the problem by answering emotion with logic, trying to correct feelings that seemed irrational to him. He learned that his wife needed empathy more than answers. (Compare Romans 12:15.) She needed to hear that she had valid reasons for feeling the way she did.

2. Expose the lies. Abuse teaches children that they are dirty, unlovable, worthless. Like false religious doctrines, these ideas can make a healthy relationship with Jehovah very difficult. So expose the lies, and replace them with the truth—gently, repeatedly, patiently. Reason from the Scriptures. (2 Corinthians 10:4, 5) For example: "I understand that you feel dirty. But how does Jehovah feel about you? If he allowed his Son to die and provide a ransom for you, doesn't that mean he loves you? [John 3:16] In His eyes, did the abuse make you dirty, or did it make the abuser dirty? Remember, Jesus said: 'There is nothing from outside a man that passes into him that can defile him; but the things that issue forth out of a man are the things that defile a man.' [Mark 7:15] Did the abuse really issue forth out of you, a little child? Or did the abuser purpose it in his own mind?"

3. Speak consolingly. Each individual is unique, so Paul's counsel to "speak consolingly to the depressed souls" applies differently in each case. (1 Thessalonians 5:14) Simplistic talk, however, rarely seems to console. For instance, merely telling an abuse survivor to read the Bible more, preach more, or 'just throw your burden on Jehovah'—helpful though these suggestions are at times—may not produce results. (Psalm 55:22; compare Galatians 6:2.) Many are already doing these things as best they can and berate themselves mercilessly for not doing better.—Compare 1 John 3:19, 20.

Similarly, telling abuse survivors simply to forget the past may do more harm than good. If they could do so, likely they would have—and would not have needed help to arrive at such a simple solution.* Remember, theirs is a severe emotional trauma. For comparison's sake, just imagine coming upon a car crash victim lying moaning amid the wreckage. Would you just tell him not to think about the pain? Clearly, more is needed.

If you are not sure that what you are saying is consoling and helpful, why not ask the depressed one? After all, even counsel that is true and Scriptural needs to be timely and appropriate as well.—Compare Proverbs 25:11.

After a few visits, the sister began to see some improvement in her outlook, and her husband was better able to help her through the hard times. Both have since been able to speak consolingly to others who have been through similar traumas. How faith-strengthening to see Jehovah, "the God of all comfort," working through his Word and his people to "bind up the brokenhearted" in these troubled times.—2 Corinthians 1:3; Isaiah 61:1.

* True, the apostle Paul did counsel Christians to 'forget the things behind.' But Paul was here referring to his former prestige and worldly success, which were now "a lot of refuse" to him. He was not referring to his past tribulations, of which he spoke freely.—Philippians 3:4-6, 8, 13; compare 2 Corinthians 11:23-27.

A Danger That Concerns Every Parent

HEATHER and Scott are a vivacious, happy couple, the parents of a bright, healthy three-year-old boy.* They take good care of their son. In today's world, that is no easy job. It involves a wide array of worries and responsibilities. There are so many things that children need to be taught! Heather and Scott feel strongly about one responsibility in particular: They want to protect their child from the dangers of sexual abuse. Why?

"My father was a cold, angry drunk," Heather says. "He beat me terribly, and he molested me and my sisters."# It is widely agreed that such abuse can inflict deep emotional scars. No wonder Heather is determined to protect her son! Scott feels the same about protecting him.

Many parents are concerned about child abuse. Perhaps you are as well. Unlike Scott and Heather, you may not have come face-to-face with abuse and its effects, but you have no doubt heard shocking reports about the prevalence of this disgusting practice. Around the world good parents are horrified to learn what is happening to children in their area.

Not surprisingly, one researcher in the field of sexual abuse called the rates of child abuse "one of the most discouraging discoveries of our era." That is certainly sad news, but are such developments surprising? Not to students of the Bible. God's Word explains that we are living in a troubled period of time called "the last days," a time marked by a prevalence of "fierce" behavior, when people would be "lovers of themselves" and would have "no natural affection." —2 Timothy 3:1-5.

Sexual abuse is a daunting issue. Indeed, some parents feel overwhelmed when they contemplate the sheer wickedness of the people who seek out children to abuse them sexually. However, is this problem too much for parents to handle? Or are there some practical steps that parents can take to keep their children safe? The following articles will address these questions.

* Names in this series of articles have been changed.

Sexual abuse of a child occurs when an adult uses a child to gratify his or her own sexual desires. It often involves what the Bible calls fornication, or por·nei'a, which could include fondling of genitalia, sexual intercourse, and oral or anal sex. Some abusive acts—such as the fondling of breasts, explicitly immoral proposals, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, and indecent exposure—may amount to what the Bible condemns as "loose conduct" or "uncleanness . . . with greediness."—Galatians 5:19-21; Ephesians 4:19.

How to Protect Your Children

FEW of us want to dwell on the subject of sexual abuse of children. Parents shudder at the very thought of it! Such abuse, however, is a frightening and unpleasant reality in today's world, and its effects on children can be devastating. Is the matter worth considering? Well, what would you be willing to give for the sake of your child's safety? Learning about the unpleasant realities of abuse is surely a small price to pay. Such knowledge can really make a difference.

Do not let the plague of abuse rob you of your courage. At the very least, you have power that your child does not have—strengths that it will take years, even decades, for your child to gain. The passing years have brought you a fund of knowledge, experience, and wisdom. The key is to enhance those strengths and put them to use in protecting your child. We will discuss three basic steps that every parent can take. They are as follows: (1) Become your child's first line of defense against abuse, (2) give your child some needed background education, and (3) equip your child with some basic protective tools.

SEXUAL ABUSE —A GLOBAL PROBLEM

In 2006 the secretary-general of the United Nations transmitted to the UN General Assembly a world report on violence against children that had been compiled by an independent expert for the UN. During a recent year, according to the report, an estimated 150 million girls and 73 million boys under 18 years of age experienced "forced sexual intercourse or other forms of sexual violence." Those numbers are staggering, but the report notes: "This is certainly an underestimate." A review of studies from 21 countries suggested that in some places as many as 36 percent of women and 29 percent of men had been subjected to some form of sexual victimization in childhood. The majority of the perpetrators were relatives!

Are You the First Line of Defense?

The primary responsibility for protecting children against abuse belongs to parents, not to children. So educating parents comes before educating children. If you are a parent, there are a few things you need to know about child abuse. You need to know who abuse children and how they go about it. Parents often think of molesters as strangers who lurk in the shadows, seeking ways to kidnap and rape children. Such monsters certainly do exist. The news media bring them to our attention very often. However, they are relatively rare. In about 90 percent of the cases of sexual abuse of a child, the perpetrator is someone the child already knows and trusts.

THIS JOURNAL IS PUBLISHED for the enlightenment of the entire family. It shows how to cope with today's problems. It reports the news, tells about people in many lands, examines religion and science. But it does more. It probes beneath the surface and points to the real meaning behind current events, yet it always stays politically neutral and does not exalt one race above another. Most important, this magazine builds confidence in the Creator's promise of a peaceful and secure new world that is about to replace the present wicked, lawless system of things.

Be your child's first line of defense

Naturally, you do not want to believe that an affable neighbor, teacher, health-care worker, coach, or relative could lust after your child. In truth, most people are not like that. There is no need to become suspicious of everybody around you. Still, you can protect your child by learning how the typical abuser operates.—See the box on page 6.

Knowing such tactics can make you, the parent, better prepared to act as the first line of defense. For instance, if someone who appears more interested in children than in adults singles out your child for special attention and gifts or offers free babysitting or private excursions with your child, what will you do? Decide that the person must be a molester? No. Do not be quick to jump to conclusions. Such behavior may be quite innocent. Nonetheless, it can put you on the alert. The Bible says: "Anyone inexperienced puts faith in every word, but the shrewd one considers his steps." —Proverbs 14:15.

Remember, any offer that sounds too good to be true may be just that. Carefully screen anyone who volunteers to spend time alone with your child. Let such an individual know that you are likely to check on your child at any time. Melissa and Brad, young parents of three boys, are cautious about leaving a child alone with an adult. When one son had music lessons at home, Melissa told the instructor: "I'll be in and out of the room while you're here." Such vigilance may sound extreme, but these parents would rather be safe than sorry.

Be actively involved in your child's activities, friendships, and schoolwork. Learn all the details about any planned excursion. One mental-health professional who spent 33 years working with cases of sexual abuse notes that he has seen countless cases

A PATTERN OF SEDUCTION

An abuser is likely to be too clever to use force on his victims. Rather, he may prefer to seduce children gradually. He begins by selecting a target, often a child who seems vulnerable and trusting, thus relatively easy to control. Next, he singles out that child for special attention. He may also try to win the trust of the child's parents. Molesters are often expert at pretending to be sincerely interested in the child and the family.

In time, the molester will begin grooming the child for abuse. He gradually becomes more physical with the child through innocent-looking displays of affection, playful wrestling, and tickling. He may give generous gifts and begin to separate the child from friends, siblings, and parents, in order to spend time alone with the child. At some point he may ask the child to keep some minor secret from the parents—perhaps a gift or plans for some future excursion. Such tactics set the stage for seduction. When the abuser has won the child's trust and that of the parents, he is ready to make his move.

Again, he is likely to be subtle about it rather than violent or forceful. He may exploit the child's natural curiosity about sex, offering to act as a "teacher," or he may suggest that they play a "special game" together that only they will know about. He may try exposing the child to pornography in order to make such behavior seem normal.

If he succeeds in molesting the child, he is now eager to ensure that the child does not tell anyone about it. He may use a variety of tactics, including threats, blackmail, and blame, or perhaps a combination of these. For example, he may say: "It's your fault. You didn't tell me to stop." He may add: "If you tell your parents, they'll call the police and send me to jail forever." Or he may say: "It's our secret. If you tell, no one will believe you. If your parents ever do find out, I will hurt them." There is no end to the devious and malicious tactics such individuals will try.

that could have been prevented by simple vigilance on the parents' part. He quotes one convicted molester as saying: "Parents literally give us their children. . . . They sure made it easy for me." Remember, most molesters prefer easy targets. Parents who are actively involved in their children's lives make their children difficult targets.

Another way to act as your child's first line of defense is to be a good listener. Children will rarely disclose abuse directly; they are too ashamed and worried about the reaction. So listen carefully, even for subtle clues.* If your child says something that concerns you, calmly use questions to draw him out.# If he says that he does not want a certain babysitter to come back, ask why. If he says that an adult plays funny games with him, ask him: "What kind of game? What does he do?" If he complains that someone tickled him, ask him, "Where did he tickle you?" Do not be quick to dismiss a child's answers. Abusers tell a child that no one will believe him; all too often, that is true. And if a child has been abused, being believed and supported by a parent is a big step toward recovery.

Give Your Child Background Education

One reference work on the subject of child abuse quotes a convicted molester as saying: "Give me a kid who knows nothing about sex, and you've given me my next victim." Those chilling words are a useful reminder to parents. Children who are ignorant about sex are much easier for molesters to fool. The Bible says that knowledge and wisdom can deliver us "from the man speaking perverse things."

* Experts note that many abused children give nonverbal clues that something is wrong. For example, if a child suddenly regresses to behavior he had outgrown some time earlier, such as bed-wetting, clinginess, or fear of being alone, he may be sending a signal that something serious is upsetting him. Such symptoms should not be taken as definite proof of abuse. Calmly draw out your child to learn the cause of the distress so that you can offer comfort, reassurance, and protection.

For the sake of simplicity, both the abuser and the victim are referred to here as males. Regardless of gender, though, the same principles apply.

Give your child background education

(Proverbs 2:10-12) Is that not what you want for your child? Then, as your second basic step in protecting him, do not hold back from teaching him about this important subject.

How, though, do you go about it? More than a few parents find the subject of sex a bit awkward to discuss with children. Your child may find the subject even more awkward, and he is not likely to bring it up with you. So take the initiative. Melissa says: "We started early, with naming the body parts. We used real words, not baby words, to show them that there is nothing funny or shameful about any part of their body." Instruction about abuse follows naturally. Many parents simply tell their children that the parts of their body that a bathing suit covers are private and special.

Says Heather, mentioned in the preceding article: "Scott and I told our son that his penis is private, personal, and not a toy. It's not for anyone to play with—not for Mommy, not for Daddy, not even for a doctor. When we take him to the doctor, I explain that he's only going to make sure everything is OK, and that's why he may touch there." Both parents take part in these little talks from time to time, and they assure the child that he can always come to them and tell them if anyone touches him in a way that's wrong or makes him feel uncomfortable. Experts in child care and abuse prevention recommend that all parents have similar talks with their children.

Many have found the book *Learn From the Great Teacher to be a real help in teaching this subject. Chapter 32, "How Jesus Was Protected," has a direct yet comforting message for children on the dangers of abuse and the importance of staying safe. "The book has given us a perfect way to reinforce what we have told our children personally," says Melissa.

In today's world children need to know that there are some people who want to touch children or get children to touch them in ways that are wrong. These warnings need not fill children with fear or make them distrust all adults. "It's just a safety message," says Heather. "And it's one message among many others, most of them having nothing to do with abuse. It hasn't made my son fearful at all."

Your child's education should include a balanced view of obedience. Teaching a child to obey is an important and difficult lesson. (Colossians 3:20) However, such lessons can go too far. If a child is taught that he must always obey any adult, regardless of the circumstances, he is vulnerable to abuse. Molesters are quick to notice when children are overly compliant. Wise parents teach their children that obedience is relative. For Christians, that is not as complicated as it may sound. It simply means saying to them: "If anybody tells you to do something that Jehovah God says is wrong, you don't have to do it. Even Mommy or Daddy should never tell you to do something that Jehovah says is wrong. And you can always tell either Mommy or Daddy if someone tries to get you to do something wrong."

Finally, let your child know that no one should ask him to keep a secret from you. Tell him that if anyone asks him to keep any kind of secret from you, he should always come and let you know. No matter what he is told—even if scary threats are made or he has done something wrong himself—it is always OK to come to Mommy or Daddy and tell them all about it. Such instruction need not scare your child. You can reassure him that most people would never do such things—touch him where they shouldn't, ask him to disobey God, or ask him to keep a secret. Like a planned escape route in case of fire, these are just-in-case messages and will probably never be needed.

Equip Your Child With Some Basic Protective Tools

The third step we will discuss is to give your child some simple actions to take in case someone tries to take advantage of him when you are not there. One method that is often recommended is like a game. Parents ask "What if . . . ?" and the child answers. You might say, "What if we were at the store together and we got separated? How would you find me?" The child's answer may not be exactly what you would hope for, but you can guide him along with further questions, such as "Can you think of anything you could do that would be safer?"

You can use similar questions to ask a child what the safest response would be if someone tried to touch him in a wrong way. If the child is easily alarmed by such questions, you might try telling a story about another child. For example: "A little girl is with a relative she likes, but then he tries to touch her where he shouldn't. What do you think she should do to stay safe?"

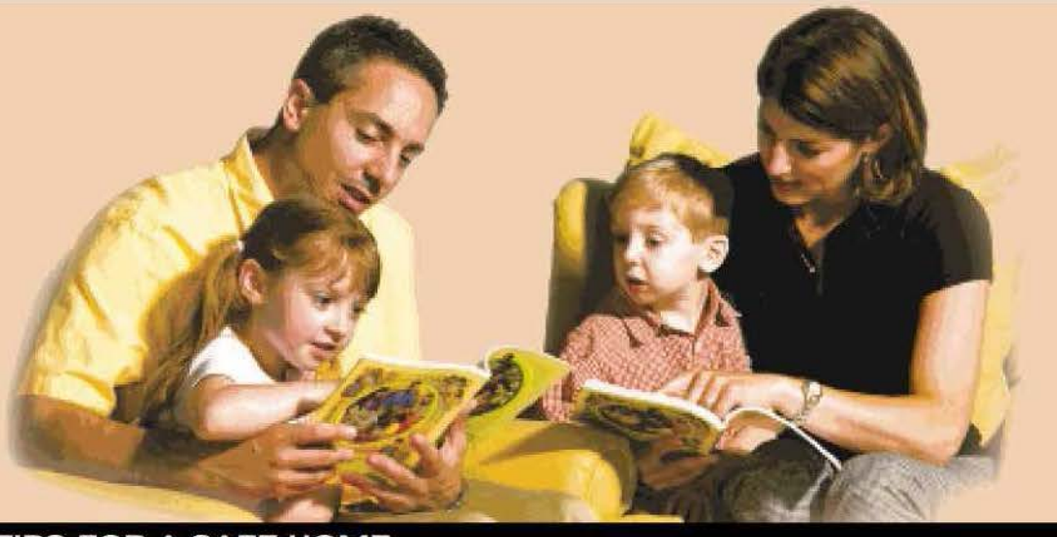
What should you teach your child to do in situations like the one above? Notes one author: "A firm 'No!' or 'Don't do that!' or 'Leave me alone!' does wonders to frighten the seductive offender into retreat and into rethinking his or her choice of victim." Help your child act out brief scenarios so that he feels confident to refuse loudly, get away quickly, and report to you whatever has happened. A child who seems to understand the training thoroughly may easily forget it within a few weeks or months. So repeat this training regularly.

Teach your child to be firm and resolute if he or she is ever faced with a molester

All the child's direct caregivers, including the males—whether father, stepfather, or other male relatives—should be part of these discussions. Why? Because all involved in such teaching are, in effect, promising the child that they will never commit such acts of abuse. Sadly, much sexual abuse occurs right within the confines of the family. The following article will discuss how you can make your family a safe haven in an abusive world.

Make Your Family a Safe Haven

"HAVING no natural affection." With those sad words, the Bible describes many people of our time, a period called "the last days." (2 Timothy 3:1, 3, 4) The epidemic of child abuse in the family furnishes vivid proof of the truth of that prophecy. In fact, the original Greek word a'stor·gos, rendered in English "having no natural affection," suggested a lack of the love that should exist among family members, especially between parents and children.* And all too often that is the setting in which child abuse occurs.



Some researchers say that the most common perpetrator of sexual abuse is the male parent figure. Other male relatives also commonly molest. While most victims are girls, many boys are abused as well. Female perpetrators are not as rare as you might assume. Perhaps the most underreported form of abuse is sibling incest, where an older or more powerful child bullies or seduces a younger or weaker brother or sister into sexual acts. As a parent, you surely find all such acts repugnant.

How can you keep these problems from arising in your family? Clearly, every member of every family needs to learn and to value some principles that rule out abusive conduct. The best place to find that kind of guidance is in God's Word, the Bible.

God's Word and Physical Relations

To be safe, every family needs to embrace the Bible's standard of morality. The Bible is not prudish when it comes to discussing sex. It is dignified, yet frank and to the point. It shows that God designed sexual intimacy to be a real blessing to husband and wife. (Proverbs 5:15-20) However, it condemns sexual conduct outside that arrangement. For instance, the Bible speaks openly against incest. In Leviticus chapter 18, a wide variety of incestuous relationships are forbidden. Note these words in particular: "You people must not come near, any man of you, to any close fleshly relative of his to lay bare nakedness [to

* This ancient Greek word has been defined: "Hard-hearted towards kindred." One Bible translation thus renders this verse: "They will . . . lack normal affection for their families."

TIPS FOR A SAFE HOME

Internet: If your children have access to the Internet, they need instructions on how to use it safely. There are countless pornographic sites as well as chat rooms and other social networks where pedophiles seek out and seduce children. It is wise to keep the computer in an open area where parents can more easily monitor its use. Without parental supervision children should never give out personal information or arrange to see anyone they have met over the Internet.—Psalm 26:4.

Alcoholic Beverages: In many cases of sexual abuse of a child, alcohol has played a role. Experience shows that adults who overindulge tend to lower their inhibitions; some give in to desires they might otherwise have suppressed. At any rate, this danger adds another reason to heed the Bible's counsel to avoid drunkenness and overdrinking.—Proverbs 20:1; 23:20, 31-33; 1 Peter 4:3.

Privacy: One woman recalls: "After Mom died, my father was the only one in the house who had curtains on his windows or a door into his bedroom. He gave us no privacy—even in the bathroom." This man molested all his daughters. Every family member needs to understand the importance of privacy. As parents need privacy from their children at certain times, so they need to give children an appropriate measure of privacy as they mature. Wise parents treat others as they themselves want to be treated. —Matthew 7:12.

have sexual intercourse]. I am Jehovah."—Leviticus 18:6.

Jehovah listed acts of incest among the "detestable things" punishable by death. (Leviticus 18:26, 29) Clearly, the Creator has very high standards on this matter. Today, many governments take a similar view, outlawing the sexual abuse of children within the family. Often, the law holds that a child who is subjected to sexual relations by an adult has been raped. Why use that strong word if physical force was not involved?

Many authorities have come to recognize what the Bible has said all along about children—that they tend to be unable to reason in the way that adults do. For example, Proverbs 22:15 says: "Foolishness is tied up with the heart of a boy." And the apostle Paul was inspired to write: "When I was a babe, I used to . . . think as a babe, to reason as a babe; but now that I have become a man, I have done away with the traits of a babe."—1 Corinthians 13:11.

A child cannot understand the full meaning of sexual acts, nor can a child imagine the consequences that will follow over the years.

Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked

JEHOVAH is a holy God. In ancient times he was "the Holy One of Israel," and as such he demanded that Israel be clean, unsullied. (Psalm 89:18) He told his chosen people: "You must prove yourselves holy, because I am holy." (Leviticus 11:45) Anyone who wanted to "ascend into the mountain of Jehovah" had to be "innocent in his hands and clean in heart." (Psalm 24: 3, 4) That meant more than merely avoiding sinful acts. It meant "the hating of bad."—Proverbs 8:13.

Lovingly, Jehovah laid down detailed laws so that the nation of Israel could identify and avoid wrongdoing. (Romans 7:7, 12) These laws included strict guidelines on morality. Adultery, homosexual acts, incestuous relationships, and bestiality were all identified as unholy spiritual pollutants. (Leviticus 18:23; 20:10-17) Those guilty of such degraded acts were cut off from the nation of Israel.

When the congregation of anointed Christians became "the Israel of God," similar moral standards were laid down for them. (Galatians 6:16) Christians too were to "abhor what is wicked." (Romans 12:9) Jehovah's words to Israel also applied to them: "You must be holy, because I am holy." (1 Peter 1:15, 16) Such unholy practices as fornication, adultery, homosexual acts, bestiality, and incest were not to corrupt the Christian congregation. Those refusing to stop engaging in such things would be excluded from God's Kingdom. (Romans 1:26, 27; 2:22; 1 Corinthians 6:9, 10; Hebrews 13:4) In these "last days," the same standards apply to the "other sheep." (2 Timothy 3:1; John 10:16) As a result, anointed Christians and other sheep make up a clean and wholesome people, able to carry the name of their God as Jehovah's Witnesses.—Isaiah 43:10.

Keeping the Congregation Clean

In contrast, the world condones all kinds of immorality. Although true Christians are different, they should not forget that many who now serve Jehovah were once in the world. There are many who, before they knew our holy God, saw no reason not to indulge the desires and fantasies of their fallen flesh, wallowing in a "low sink of debauchery." (1 Peter 4:4) The apostle Paul, after describing the disgusting practices of degraded people of the nations, said: "That is what some of you were." Still, he went on to say: "But you have been washed clean, but you have been sanctified, but you have been declared righteous in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ and with the spirit of our God."—1 Corinthians 6:11.

What a comforting statement that is! Whatever a person did earlier in life, he changes when the glorious good news about the Christ has an effect on his heart. He exercises faith and dedicates himself to Jehovah God. From then on he lives a morally pure life, washed clean in God's eyes. (Hebrews 9:14) The sins that he committed previously are pardoned, and he can 'stretch forward to the things ahead.'* —Philippians 3:13, 14; Romans 4:7, 8.

* See "Questions From Readers" in the May 1, 1996, issue of The Watchtower.

Jehovah forgave repentant David for murder and adultery, and He forgave repentant Manasseh for immoral idolatry and much bloodshed. (2 Samuel 12:9, 13; 2 Chronicles 33:2-6, 10-13) We can be truly grateful that he is prepared to forgive us too if we repent and approach him in sincerity and humility. Still, despite Jehovah's forgiving David and Manasseh, these two men—and Israel with them—had to live with the consequences of their sinful acts. (2 Samuel 12:11, 12; Jeremiah 15:3-5) In a similar way, while Jehovah forgives repentant sinners, there may be consequences of their actions that cannot be avoided.

Inevitable Consequences

For example, a man who lives a life of immoral debauchery and contracts AIDS may accept the truth and turn his life around to the point of dedication and baptism. Now he is a spiritually clean Christian having a relationship with God and a wonderful hope for the future; but he still has AIDS. He may eventually die of the disease, a sad but inescapable consequence of his former conduct. For some Christians the effects of former gross immorality may persist in other ways. For years after their baptism, perhaps for the rest of their lives in this system of things, they may have to fight urges in their flesh to return to their previous immoral life-style. With the help of Jehovah's spirit, many succeed in resisting. But they have to wage a constant battle.—Galatians 5:16, 17.

Such ones do not sin as long as they control their urges. But if they are men, they may wisely decide not to 'reach out' for responsibility in the congregation while still having to struggle with powerful fleshly impulses. (1 Timothy 3:1) Why? Because they know the trust that the congregation puts in the elders. (Isaiah 32:1, 2; Hebrews 13:17) They realize that the elders are consulted on many intimate matters and have to handle sensitive situations. It would be neither loving, wise, nor reasonable for one waging a constant fight with unclean fleshly desires to reach out for such a responsible position.—Proverbs 14:16; John 15:12, 13; Romans 12:1.

For a man who was a child molester before he was baptized, there may be another consequence. When he learns the truth, he repents and turns around, not bringing that cruel sin into the congregation. He may thereafter make fine progress, completely overcome his wrong impulses, and even be inclined to 'reach out' for a responsible position in the congregation. What, though, if he still has to live down notoriety in the community as a former child molester? Would he "be irreprehensible, . . . have a fine testimony from people on the outside, . . . [be] free from accusation"? (1 Timothy 3:1-7, 10; Titus 1:7) No, he would not. Hence, he would not qualify for congregation privileges.

When a Dedicated Christian Sins

Jehovah understands that we are weak and that even after baptism we may fall into sin. The apostle John wrote to Christians of his day: "I am writing you these things that you may not commit a sin. And yet, if anyone does commit a sin, we have a helper with the Father, Jesus Christ, a righteous one. And he is a propitiatory sacrifice for our sins, yet not for ours only but also for the whole world's." (1 John 2:1, 2) Yes, on the basis of Jesus' sacrifice, Jehovah will forgive baptized Christians who fall into sin—if they truly repent and abandon their wrong course.

An example of this was seen in the first-century congregation at Corinth. The apostle Paul heard of a case of incestuous fornication in that young congregation, and he gave instructions that the man involved be disfellowshipped. Later, the sinner repented, and Paul exhorted the congregation to reinstate him. (1 Corinthians 5:1, 13; 2 Corinthians 2:5-9) Thus, by the healing power of Jehovah's loving kindness and the great value of Jesus' ransom sacrifice, the man was cleansed of his sin. Similar things may happen today. Again, though, even if a baptized person who commits a serious sin repents and is forgiven in Jehovah's eyes, there may still be ongoing consequences of his sin.—Proverbs 10:16, 17; Galatians 6:7.

For example, if a dedicated girl commits fornication, she may bitterly regret her act and eventually be restored to spiritual health with the help of the congregation. But what if she is pregnant because of her immorality? Then her whole life has been inescapably changed by what she did. A man who commits adultery may repent and not be disfellowshipped. But his innocent mate has Scriptural grounds to divorce him, and she may choose to do so. (Matthew 19:9) If she does, the man, although forgiven by Jehovah, will live the rest of his life with this grave consequence of his sin.—1 John 1:9.

What of a man who unlovingly divorces his wife in order to marry another woman? Perhaps he will eventually repent and be reinstated in the congregation. Over the years he may make progress and "press on to maturity." (Hebrews 6:1) But as long as his first wife lives without a mate, he will not qualify to serve in a responsible position in the congregation. He is not "a husband of one wife" because he had no Scriptural right to divorce his first wife. —1 Timothy 3:2, 12.

Are these not powerful reasons why a Christian should cultivate an abhorrence of what is wicked?

What of a Child Molester?

What if a baptized adult Christian sexually molests a child? Is the sinner so wicked that Jehovah will never forgive him? Not necessarily so. Jesus said that 'blasphemy against the holy spirit' was unforgivable. And Paul said that there is no sacrifice for sins left for one who practices sin willfully despite knowing the truth. (Luke 12:10; Hebrews 10:26, 27) But nowhere does the Bible say that an adult Christian who sexually abuses a child—whether incestuously or otherwise—cannot be forgiven. Indeed, his sins can be washed clean if he repents sincerely from the heart and turns his conduct around. However, he may still have to struggle with the wrong fleshly impulses he cultivated. (Ephesians 1:7) And there may be consequences that he cannot avoid.

While Jehovah forgives repentant sinners, there may be consequences of their actions that cannot be avoided

Depending on the law of the land where he lives, the molester may well have to serve a prison term or face other sanctions from the State. The congregation will not protect him from this. Moreover, the man has revealed a serious weakness that henceforth will have to be taken into account. If he seems to be repentant, he will be encouraged to make spiritual progress, share in the field service, even have parts in the Theocratic Ministry School and nonteaching parts in the Service Meeting. This does not mean, though, that he will qualify to serve in a position of responsibility in the congregation. What are the Scriptural reasons for this?

For one thing, an elder must be "self-controlled." (Titus 1:8) True, none of us have perfect self-control. (Romans 7:21-25) But a dedicated adult Christian who falls into the sin of child sexual abuse reveals an unnatural fleshly weakness. Experience has shown that such an adult may well molest other children. True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do. And the congregation cannot read hearts to tell who is and who is not liable to molest children again. (Jeremiah 17:9) Hence, Paul's counsel to Timothy applies with special force in the case of baptized adults who have molested children: "Never lay your hands hastily upon any man; neither be a sharer in the sins of others." (1 Timothy 5:22) For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer or serve in any other special, full-time service.—Compare the principle at Exodus 21:28, 29.

Some may ask, 'Have not some committed other types of sin and apparently repented, only to repeat their sin later?' Yes, that has happened, but there are other factors to consider. If, for example, an individual makes immoral advances to another adult, the adult should be able to resist his or her advances. Children are much easier to deceive, confuse, or terrorize. The Bible speaks of a child's lack of wisdom. (Proverbs 22:15; 1 Corinthians 13:11) Jesus used children as an example of humble innocence. (Matthew 18:4; Luke 18:16, 17) The innocence of a child includes a complete lack of experience. Most children are open, eager to please, and thus vulnerable to abuse by a scheming adult whom they know and trust. Therefore, the congregation has a responsibility before Jehovah to protect its children.

Well-trained children learn to obey and honor their parents, the elders, and other adults. (Ephesians 6:1, 2; 1 Timothy 5:1, 2; Hebrews 13:7) It would be a shocking perversion if one of these authority figures were to misuse that child's innocent trust so as to seduce or force him or her to submit to sexual acts. Those who have been sexually molested in this way often struggle for years to overcome the resulting emotional trauma. Hence, a child molester is subject to severe congregational discipline and restrictions. It is not his status as an authority figure that should be of concern but, rather, the unblemished purity of the congregation.—1 Corinthians 5:6; 2 Peter 3:14.

If a child molester sincerely repents, he will recognize the wisdom of applying Bible principles. If he truly learns to abhor what is wicked, he will despise what he did and struggle to avoid repeating his sin. (Proverbs 8:13; Romans 12:9) Further, he will surely thank Jehovah for the greatness of His love, as a result of which a repentant sinner, such as he is, can still worship our holy God and hope to be among "the upright" who will reside on earth forever. —Proverbs 2:21.

to give up in the fight against any tendency to become discouraged. I have learned to view Jehovah as my Father and his organization as my Mother. I have come to realize that if we make the effort, Jehovah can use any one of us to be an effective servant of his.

Even though I at times have felt that I was, as it were, "thrown down," I have 'not been destroyed.' I have never been abandoned by Jehovah and his organization, nor by my family and my Christian brothers. Thanks to my reaching out for the Bible and starting to read it, I regained spiritual strength. I am grateful to Jehovah God, who gives "power beyond what is normal" when we trust in him.—2 Corinthians 4:7.

With full confidence and complete trust in Jehovah, I am eagerly looking forward to the future. I am confident that very soon Jehovah God will fulfill his promise about a restored paradise here on earth along with all the wonderful blessings it will bring. —Revelation 21:3, 4.

Comfort for those with a "stricken spirit"

TODAY, Satan's world has come to be "past all moral sense." (Ephesians 4:19; 1 John 5:19) Adultery and fornication are pandemic. In many lands 50 percent or more of marriages end in divorce. Homosexuality is widely accepted. Sexual violence—rape—is often in the news. Pornography is a billion-dollar industry.—Romans 1:26, 27.

Among the vilest perversions is the sexual abuse of innocent children. Like the wisdom of Satan's world, child sexual abuse is "animal, demonic." (James 3:15) In the United States alone, Time magazine says, "more than 400,000 reports of verifiable sexual assaults are filed with authorities each year by teachers and doctors." When victims of this abuse become adults, many still carry painful wounds, and those wounds are real! The Bible says: "The spirit [mental inclination, inner feelings and thoughts] of a man can put up with his malady; but as for a stricken [wounded, afflicted] spirit, who can bear it?"—Proverbs 18:14.

The good news of God's Kingdom appeals to people of all kinds, including "the brokenhearted" and those with a "downhearted spirit." (Isaiah 61:1-4) Not surprisingly, many who are in emotional pain respond to the invitation: "Let anyone thirsting come; let anyone that wishes take life's water free." (Revelation 22:17) The Christian congregation can be a place of comfort for these. They rejoice to learn that suffering will soon be a thing of the past. (Isaiah 65: 17) Until that time, though, they may need to be 'comforted' and have their wounds 'bound up.' Well did Paul counsel Christians: "Speak consolingly to the depressed souls, support the weak, be long-suffering toward all."—1 Thessalonians 5:14.

"Repressed Memories"

In recent years some have been "brokenhearted" for reasons that others find difficult to understand. They are adults who, on the basis of what have been described as "repressed memories," say that they were sexually abused when they were children.* Some have no thought of having been molested until, unexpectedly, they experience flashbacks and "memories" of an adult (or adults) abusing them when they were young. Do any in the Christian congregation have such disturbing thoughts? In a few lands, yes, and these dedicated ones may experience deep distress, anger, guilt, shame, or loneliness. Like David they may feel isolated from God and cry out: "Why, O Jehovah, do you keep standing afar off? Why do you keep yourself hid in times of distress?"—Psalm 10:1.

* "Repressed memories" and similar expressions are enclosed in quotation marks to distinguish them from the more typical memories that all of us have.

Many aspects of these "memories" are not well understood by mental-health professionals. Still, such "memories" can affect the spirituality of dedicated Christians. So we look with confidence to God's Word for guidance in handling them. The Bible provides "discernment in all things." (2 Timothy 2:7; 3:16) It also helps all concerned to put faith in Jehovah, "the Father of tender mercies and the God of all comfort, who comforts us in all our tribulation."—2 Corinthians 1:3, 4.

Did It Really Happen?

In the world, there is much controversy as to what these "memories" are and to what extent they represent things that actually happened. Jehovah's Witnesses are "no part of the world" and take no part in this controversy. (John 17:16) According to published reports, "memories" have sometimes proved to be accurate. For example, after insurance adjuster Frank Fitzpatrick "remembered" being molested by a certain priest, almost one hundred others came forward to claim that they too had been abused by the same priest. The priest reportedly admitted to the abuse.

It is noteworthy, however, that a number of individuals have been unable to corroborate their "memories." Some afflicted in this way have had vivid recollections of a certain individual committing abuse or of the abuse being committed in a specific place. Later, though, legitimate evidence to the contrary made it clear that these "remembered" details could not be true.

Providing a Refuge

Nevertheless, how can comfort be given to those who experience a "stricken spirit" because of such "memories"? Remember Jesus' parable of the neighborly Samaritan. A man was set upon by robbers, beaten, and stripped of his possessions. When the Samaritan came along, his heart went out to the wounded man. What did he do? Did he insist on hearing every last detail about the beating? Or did the Samaritan get a description of the robbers and immediately chase after them? No. The man was hurt! So the Samaritan gently dressed his wounds and lovingly carried him to the safety of a nearby inn where he could recover.—Luke 10: 30-37.

True, there is a difference between physical wounds and a "stricken spirit" caused by actual childhood sexual abuse. But both cause great suffering. Hence, what the Samaritan did for the wounded Jew shows what can be done to help an afflicted fellow Christian. The first priority is to give loving comfort and to help him recover.

The Devil afflicted faithful Job, apparently confident that either emotional or physical pain would break his integrity. (Job 1:11; 2:5) Since then, Satan has often tried to use suffering—whether he directly causes it or not—to weaken the faith of God's servants. (Compare 2 Corinthians 12:7-9.) Can we doubt that the Devil now plays upon child abuse and the "downhearted spirit" of many adults who suffered this (or are troubled by "memories" of having suffered it) to try to weaken the faith of Christians? Like Jesus when under attack by Satan, a Christian who suffers pain but who stalwartly refuses to abandon his integrity is saying: "Go away, Satan!"—Matthew 4:10.

Stay Spiritually Strong

"The faithful and discreet slave" has published information to help handle the spiritual and emotional hurt caused by child abuse. (Matthew 24:45-47) Experience shows that the sufferer is helped if he can rely on the 'power of the Lord and the mightiness of his strength,' putting on "the complete suit of armor from God." (Ephesians 6:10-17) This armor includes Bible "truth," which exposes Satan as the ultimate enemy and dissipates the darkness in which he and his henchmen work. (John 3:19) Then, there is "the breastplate of righteousness." The afflicted one should strive to hold to righteous standards. For example, some have strong impulses to harm themselves or to commit immorality. Every time they resist these impulses, they win a victory!

Spiritual armor also includes "the good news of peace." Talking to others about Jehovah's purposes strengthens the one talking as well as anyone who listens. (1 Timothy 4:16) If you should be one with a "stricken spirit," making it difficult for you to talk about the good news, try to accompany another Christian as he or she does this vital work. And do not forget "the large shield of faith." Have faith that Jehovah loves you and that he will restore all that you have lost. Believe without reservation that Jesus also loves you, and he proved this by dying for you. (John 3:16) Satan has always falsely claimed that Jehovah does not care for his servants. That is just another of his gross, vicious lies.—John 8:44; compare Job 4:1, 15-18; 42:10-15.

If pain of heart makes it difficult to believe that Jehovah is concerned about you, it will help to associate with others who firmly believe that he does have concern. (Psalm 119: 107, 111; Proverbs 18:1; Hebrews 10:23-25) Refuse to allow Satan to rob you of the prize of life. Remember, "the helmet of salvation" is part of the armor; so is "the sword of the spirit." The Bible is inspired by holy spirit, which Satan cannot defeat. (2 Timothy 3:16; Hebrews 4:12) Its healing words can soothe emotional pain.—Compare Psalm 107:20; 2 Corinthians 10:4, 5.

Finally, pray constantly for the strength to endure. (Romans 12:12; Ephesians 6:18) Heartfelt prayer sustained Jesus through intense emotional agony, and it can help you too. (Luke 22:41-43) Is it difficult for you to pray? Ask others to pray with you and for you. (Colossians 1:3; James 5:14) Holy spirit will support your prayers. (Compare Romans 8:26, 27.) As with a painful physical illness, some with deep emotional wounds may not be completely healed in this system of things. But with Jehovah's help we can endure, and endurance is victory, as it was in Jesus' case. (John 16:33) "Trust in [Jehovah] at all times, O people. Before him pour out your heart. God is a refuge for us." —Psalm 62:8.

What of the Alleged Abuser?

A person who actually abuses a child sexually is a rapist and should be viewed as such. Anyone victimized in this way has the right to accuse his abuser. Still, an accusation should not be made hastily if it is based solely on "repressed memories" of abuse. In this case the most important thing is for the sufferer to regain a degree of emotional stability. After the passage of some time, he may be in a better position to assess the "memories" and decide what, if anything, he wants to do about them.

Consider the case of Donna. She reportedly had eating disorders and went to a counselor—apparently one of dubious competence. Soon she was accusing her father of incest and he was taken to court. The jury was deadlocked, so the father did not go to prison, but he was left with $100,000 in legal bills. Then, after all that, Donna told her parents that she no longer believed that the abuse happened!

Wisely, Solomon said: "Do not go forth to conduct a legal case hastily." (Proverbs 25:8) If there is some valid reason to suspect that the alleged perpetrator is still abusing children, a warning may have to be given. The congregation elders can help in such a case. Otherwise, take your time. Eventually, you may be content to let the matter drop. If, though, you want to confront the alleged perpetrator (after first assessing how you would feel about the possible responses), you have a right to do so.

During the time that the one experiencing "memories" is healing, awkward situations may arise. For example, an individual may have vivid mental images of being molested by someone he or she sees every day. No rules can be laid down for handling this. "Each one will carry his own load." (Galatians 6:5) Sometimes one may feel that a relative or a member of one's immediate family is involved. Remember the dubious nature of some "repressed memories" when it comes to identifying the one suspected of being a perpetrator. In such a situation, as long as the matter has not been firmly established, keeping contact with the family—at least by occasional visits, by letter, or by telephone—would show that one is trying to follow a Scriptural course.—Compare Ephesians 6:1-3.

What Can Elders Do?

If the elders are approached by a member of the congregation who is experiencing flashbacks or "repressed memories" of child abuse, two of them are usually assigned to help. These elders should kindly encourage the afflicted one to focus for the time being on coping with the emotional distress. The names of any "remembered" abusers should be kept in strict confidence.

The elders' primary task is to act as shepherds. (Isaiah 32:1, 2; 1 Peter 5:2, 3) They should be especially careful to "clothe [themselves] with the tender affections of compassion, kindness, lowliness of mind, mildness, and long-suffering." (Colossians 3:12) Let them listen in a kindly way and then apply healing words from the Scriptures. (Proverbs 12:18) Some who are afflicted with painful "memories" have expressed appreciation for elders who make regular visits or even telephone calls to check to see how they are doing. Such contacts need not take a lot of time, but they show that Jehovah's organization cares. When the afflicted one realizes that his Christian brothers truly love him, he may be helped to recover a considerable degree of emotional balance.

What if the sufferer decides that he wants to make an accusation?* Then the two elders can advise him that, in line with the principle at Matthew 18:15, he should personally approach the accused about the matter. If the accuser is not emotionally able to do this face-to-face, it can be done by telephone or perhaps by writing a letter. In this way the one accused is given the opportunity to go on record before Jehovah with his answer to the accusation. He may even be able to present evidence that he could not have committed the abuse. Or perhaps the one accused will confess, and a reconciliation may be achieved. What a blessing that would be! If there is a confession, the two elders can handle matters further in accordance with Scriptural principles.

If the accusation is denied, the elders should explain to the accuser that nothing more can be done in a judicial way. And the congregation will continue to view the one accused as an innocent person. The Bible says that there must be two or three witnesses before judicial action can be taken. (2 Corinthians 13:1; 1 Timothy 5:19) Even if more than one person "remembers" abuse by the same individual, the nature of these recalls is just too uncertain to base judicial decisions on them without other supporting evidence. This does not mean that such "memories" are viewed as false (or that they are viewed as true). But Bible principles must be followed in establishing a matter judicially.

* It may also be necessary for the step outlined in this paragraph to be taken if the matter has become common knowledge in the congregation.

What if the one accused—though denying the wrongdoing—is really guilty? Does he "get away with it," as it were? Certainly not! The question of his guilt or innocence can be safely left in Jehovah's hands. "The sins of some men are publicly manifest, leading directly to judgment, but as for other men their sins also become manifest later." (1 Timothy 5:24; Romans 12:19; 14:12) The book of Proverbs says: "The expectation of the righteous ones is a rejoicing, but the very hope of the wicked ones will perish." "When a wicked man dies, his hope perishes." (Proverbs 10:28; 11:7) Ultimately, Jehovah God and Christ Jesus render everlasting judgment in justice.—1 Corinthians 4:5.

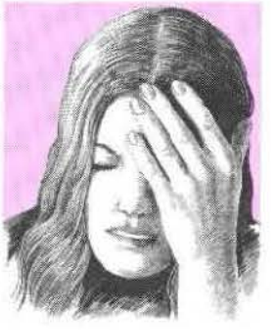
Resisting the Devil

When dedicated souls endure in the face of great physical or emotional pain, what an evidence it is of their inner strength and love for God! And what a testimony to the power of Jehovah's spirit to sustain them! —Compare 2 Corinthians 4:7.

Peter's words apply to such ones: "Take your stand against [Satan] solid in the faith." (1 Peter 5:9) Doing so may not be easy. Sometimes, it may even be difficult to think clearly and logically. But take heart! Soon, the Devil and his crafty acts will no longer exist. Truly, we long for that time when "God himself . . . will wipe out every tear from their eyes, and death will be no more, neither will mourning nor outcry nor pain be anymore. The former things have passed away."—Revelation 21:3, 4.

Box Meal Gives Witness

IN THE days following the earthquake in Kobe, Japan, last January, people in the affected area had a hard time finding food. Still, Jehovah's Witnesses did not lack sustenance, thanks to the kind assistance of their friends. For the first two or three days after the quake, nearby congregations provided rice balls. Soon, caring friends were providing box meals. To the box meals, many attached notes expressing concern for the affected ones. Those who received the meals said that every meal was "salted" as they could not hold back their tears when reading the notes.



Jehovah's Witnesses shared their food with others who were in need. One Witness found himself eating his lunch while traveling by car with a non-Witness colleague working in the same company. So he shared one of the box meals he had received.

"Where did you buy this box lunch?" his colleague asked. The brother explained the relief work of the Witnesses. "I haven't eaten vegetables for days. I'm going to save some and take it home for my family," the man said appreciatively.

The third time this happened, the colleague handed 3,000 yen (about $35, U.S.) to the Witness and said: "I'm familiar with your activities, so please let me make a donation to your work. I appreciate your sharing your lunch with me. Really, your friends are all such nice people."

Help for the Victims of Incest

"FOR most of her life Rachel has been ridden with guilt, convinced of her own worthlessness, and trapped in a sense of hopeless isolation." What could so blemish the life of a British housewife and mother?

A 16-year-old girl from California said: "I now have a pain deep in my heart that will never go away, and it hurts, truly hurts." What could cause her such anguish?

The answer in both cases is the same: incest. Both of these women were sexually abused by their fathers when they were children. Unhappily, there are many like them. Studies in the United States suggest that one in five girls and one in ten boys suffer sexual molestation before they grow up. In most cases, the crime is committed by someone the young victim knows, and in many cases it is incestuous. Reports from other countries tell a similar story.

As the world becomes more degenerate, this problem will likely get worse. Even now, many women coming into the Christian congregation have emotional difficulties because of incest committed against them when they were children. Some have gone to professional counselors and psychologists for help, but many turn to the congregation, looking to their Christian brothers and sisters for support. Is there any way mature ones in the congregation, even if they are not professionals in the field of mental health, can help them? Often there is.—1 Thessalonians 5:11.

If you have any doubt about the harm incest does, consider the expressions of some of its victims many years after the crime: "For 15 years I kept all those things in, so I was engulfed by years of guilt . . . How I hated men!"

"Almost worse than the actual molesting is the guilt."

"I can truly say I think I would have killed myself by now because of the memories."

"I don't want to get married because of the memory of sex. And I surely don't want any children."

A study prepared by Doctors Bruce A. Woodling (of the University of Southern California School of Medicine) and Peter D. Kossoris (a deputy district attorney) confirms the above, stating: "Older women who were incestuously molested as children or adolescents are commonly depressed and neurotically anxious." A University of Washington study published in Medical Times adds: "Problems reported Incestuous child abuse is sexual abuse of children by an older relative. Usually, it is by a male relative—such as a father, stepfather, uncle or older brother. Sometimes, but much more rarely, it is by a female relative. According to the book The Silent Children, incestuous abuse can range from improper fondling to oral-genital contact to intercourse. Of course, affectionate physical contact between children and older people is proper. But when the older person finds these contacts arousing, or when he does things alone with the child that he would not do if the child's mother were present, this will likely lead to sexual abuse of the child.

include: feelings of guilt and depression; negative self-image; difficulties in interpersonal relationships associated with an underlying mistrust of men, inadequate social skills, and sexual dysfunction."

Why is incest so shattering? The magazine Child Welfare draws attention to the situation of a daughter molested by her father: "The daughter who has been molested is dependent on her father for protection and care. . . . She dares not express or even feel the depths of her anger at being used. She must comply with her father's demands or risk losing the parental love that she needs."

A former victim rightly insists that incest "is selfish and reprehensible . . . and a grotesque violation of a child's trust and dependency."

Some little girls who were victims of incest thought that the only way men would love them was sexually, so they behaved precociously toward other men besides the one victimizing them. Other victims, when they grew to be teenagers, were overly interested in sex, even promiscuous. Many have feelings of deep anger, worthlessness and, especially, guilt. They feel guilty because of what happened, guilty because they did not stop it, guilty because of the harmful emotions, guilty if they had any pleasurable feelings during the experience, and, if the incest affected the parents' marriage, guilty because of that.

Is there any way they can be helped to handle such emotional turmoil?

It Does Not Help to Say . . .

One woman who was having problems because she had been a victim of incest over many years went to the elders in the congregation to discuss her problem. "They told me to forget about it," she reports. The well-intentioned reasoning behind that advice was doubtless that since the bad experiences were all in the past and nothing could be done about them now the best thing to do was to put them out of her mind and think good thoughts. (Philippians 4:8) Unhappily, it is not as simple as that.

Why not? Well, think of someone who has had an arm severely disabled in an accident. His friends visit him to help him. Would it help for them to say to him: 'Oh, forget about it!' Of course not. There is no way he can forget about it.

Similarly, many women who have been incestuously abused are unable just to forget about it. For some, it is stamped on their consciousness like an emotional scar. One victim wrote: "My grandfather assaulted me when I was seven years old, not just once but on a number of occasions. My naiveté left me defenseless. Now I feel the repercussions constantly. It's been a living nightmare ever since. The memory can be pushed back for a while only to resurface and make me sick to my stomach. I feel ashamed and dirty, and I wasn't even to blame."

True, the emotional scars of incest (and other traumatic experiences) are not visible. But they are just as real as physical scars. So how can those be helped who have them? One way is to listen to the victim and encourage her to "talk it out."

> "The memory can be pushed back for a while only to resurface and make me sick"

It Might Help to Say . . .

The counselor should be helpful, not judgmental. The apostle Paul encouraged Christians: "Become kind to one another, tenderly compassionate." (Ephesians 4:32) In counseling situations, these qualities are vital.

Thus, a woman who was victimized over many years by her father when she was a girl says: "Elders (or whoever else is approached) should be superkind." Another who was also abused by her father says: "The main thing is not to be shocked. Be calm and understanding, not pushing for every detail but being willing to listen to whatever you are told. Try to understand the victim's emotions."

Being calm and understanding is not always easy. One woman admitted that she often spoke excitedly, even belligerently, when discussing her problem. Is such conduct disrespectful? Perhaps. But a "tenderly compassionate," mature Christian will quickly realize that it is not meant personally. It is an expression of inner turmoil.—Philippians 2:1-4.

Additionally, those counseling incest victims need to listen, just as Jehovah God listens. (Psalm 69:33) They should not be quick to make comments or judgments. (Proverbs 18:13; James 1:19) Does listening and giving comfort really help? Yes, indeed. One victim reports: "I was able to talk it over with a sister older than I, and what a relief I felt! I . . . wept with her." Another said: "I think just having somebody to talk to was the thing that helped me most."

If the victim is suffering from severe emotional turmoil, a more experienced counselor may be able to help her determine the reason for that turmoil and how she can deal with it. Questions such as the following may help to draw out hidden feelings: "Do you want to discuss what happened? How do you feel about yourself? How do you feel about your father [or uncle, or whoever the abuser was]? Do you blame yourself for what happened? Do you think it makes you worse than other people?" A loving counselor will show that he is not shocked by the answers. Rather, he will explain that such feelings are not uncommon. Some have felt better when they learned this.

What if the victim reveals that she feels worthless because of the experience? A young woman who was abused by her grandfather, father and stepfather, says: "They [the counselors] could help her realize she is worth a lot. I used to feel different from my friends at school. I felt dirty compared with them. Then as a teenager I got into trouble a few times. But now I know that Jehovah does not hold this experience against me. He views me as a worthwhile person." —Psalm 25:8; 1 John 4:18, 19.

Victims often feel anger too. In her book The Silent Children Linda T. Sanford explains why, saying: "As the child grows older, she learns the real meaning of the sexual activity and becomes aware of the adult's gross inappropriateness. Therefore she feels betrayed. She had looked up to and trusted this older person. She learns that his reassurances were monumental lies."

'Just having somebody to talk to helped me the most'

Some of this anger—and some of the guilt feelings victims experience—may be defused if the abuser straightforwardly admits what he did and apologizes. One victim, whose father was arrested after the incest was exposed, said: "About three years ago, my father gave me a nice present and said: 'I just want you to know I am really sorry for a lot of the things that happened between us.' I knew what he meant and accepted his apology. Now I have a good relationship with him."

Unhappily, however, many abusers flatly deny everything or admit to only a fraction of what they did. By the time a disturbed woman seeks help, the abuser may even be dead. But the anger may still be there. Those counseling may, nonetheless, be able to help her. They can kindly point out that her anger is completely understandable. Even Jehovah remains angry at sinners who do not repent.—John 3:36.

However, they may tactfully point out the dangers of letting anger overwhelm a person. (Ephesians 4:26) They may help her to reason on this by gently asking questions such as, "Is your anger helping you or is it harming you? By letting anger affect you so much, are you still letting him influence your life? Do you really think he has got away with something? Is not Jehovah the Judge even of those who commit crimes in secret?" —Psalm 69:5; Luke 8:17; Romans 12:19.

Reasoning, but not in a lecturing tone, on Romans 12:21 may help. The purpose of the counsel is to help, not to discipline or apply pressure. Rather than telling the victim how she should feel, it is far more beneficial to listen and find out how she does feel, and, by gently probing with questions, to help her to see for herself why she feels that way.

If discussions reveal a deep feeling of guilt, it should be pointed out that incest committed against a young child is never the child's fault. True, young children often act affectionately toward adults. But they have no idea about adult sex. As the book The Silent Children points out: "The child never intended the closeness and warmth to become sexual. Incest is an adult's interpretation of the child's wishes—an interpretation greatly colored by the adult's own needs."

Surely one who was sexually abused as a child can be certain of God's understanding and loving acceptance. Why, Jehovah forgives even those who, unlike the abused child, commit gross sins—if they repent and change their course of action!—1 Corinthians 6:9-11.

A Realistic View

Helping victims of emotional trauma is not easy. It cannot be handled in a few minutes in a crowded Kingdom Hall. It takes patience, love, kindness, repeated efforts and, especially, time. There are no miracle cures. It takes a lot of talking —and praying—before a disturbed victim achieves emotional stability. The bad experience is never forgotten. But the victim can learn to live with the memory.

Thus one victim said: "I still get feelings of worthlessness. But I tell myself it is not true. And in about a day, the feeling goes." Another victim said: "I've learned from the Scriptures to be forgiving, to help others and not to feel sorry for myself." Another added: "They helped me to see that Jehovah loves me still . . . I'm going to overcome all my problems with the help of Jehovah."—Psalm 55:22.

The Permanent Solution

While Jesus was on earth, he miraculously healed those who were physically scarred, the 'lame and maimed.' (Matthew 15:30) In the approaching New Order, that miracle will be repeated many times over as all physical sickness is removed.—Isaiah 33:24.

In the case of those suffering emotional scars, often the loving, patient help of mature Christian men and women applying the soothing influence of God's Word can help them to handle their problems and still find joy in Jehovah's service. (James 5:13-15) However, in the New Order, we are promised: "The former distresses will actually be forgotten." (Isaiah 65:16) Thus, all servants of God look forward with confidence to the time when God "will wipe out every tear from their eyes, and death will be no more, neither will mourning nor outcry nor pain be anymore. The former things have passed away." (Revelation 21:4) This will be the final healing of all sicknesses, including emotional ones.

Questions From Readers

■ Does Jesus' promise of everlasting life, as given at John 11:25, 26, apply only to the anointed, or do these words embrace also the "great crowd," who look forward to life in the Paradise earth?

At certain times in the past The Watchtower has suggested that the application of this scripture is limited to those Christians who gain heavenly life. Evidently this view was taken because Jesus was there speaking to persons who later would be given that hope. But a careful examination of these scriptures shows that Jesus was not making such a limitation. As the articles for study in this issue of The Watchtower confirm, our viewpoint on John 11:25, 26 must be the broader one that includes those persons whose hope is to live forever in the Paradise earth. Why do we make this statement?

Note what Martha says about the dead Lazarus at John 11:24: "I know he will rise in the resurrection on the last day." Which resurrection did she there have in mind? Why, the resurrection that Abraham, and other integrity-keeping Jews looked forward to in faith—an earthly resurrection! How, then, would Jesus' following words appeal to Martha? They would convey to her the situation with regard to the earthly resurrection.

Jesus next identified himself as the one who would raise the dead. But he did not say that he was talking only about some of the dead who exercised faith in him. He is "the resurrection and the life" for all who attain to everlasting life, whether in heaven or on earth. All of what Jesus goes on to say, in verses 25 and 26, may be applied to both groups, though in different ways. Anointed Christians "come to life" in that they are raised to immortal heavenly life. Those of the dead who will live forever on earth are resurrected and then are gradually brought to perfection.—Compare Revelation 20:4.

It is certainly true of the anointed, as stated in verse 26, that they will "never die at all" after being resurrected. They then 'see God just as he is,' so that they are no longer "walking by faith." (1 John 3:2; 2 Corinthians 5:7) So when Jesus says, "Everyone that is living and exercises faith in me," he introduces a factor that is especially significant with regard to those today whose hope is to attain to everlasting life on earth. Righteousness is already imputed to the "great crowd" because "they have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." They are already living in the flesh with the hope of surviving the great tribulation, and their lives are considered righteous lives, like that of Abraham of old. They, together with resurrected mankind, must continue to exercise faith during Christ's millennial reign in order to attain to everlasting life in human perfection.—Revelation 7:9, 10, 14, 15; 21:3, 4.

Actually, this is not an entirely new viewpoint. From time to time through the years, the Watch Tower Society's publications have suggested a broader application of John 11:24-26. For example, The Watchtower of June 1, 1959, page 337, said of the witnesses of Jehovah gathered out of all nations: "Those who expect to live on this earth hope also to survive the end of this world, and to live on into the new world without ever dying." It cited Hebrews 11: 1, 6 and John 11:26 in support. And The Watchtower of April 15, 1976, page 243, likewise included resurrected mankind along with the "great crowd" of Armageddon survivors in those same words of Jesus: "Everyone that is living and exercises faith in me will never die at all. Do you believe this?"

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Dear Brothers:

We are here providing, for your future reference, information that was presented at the 15-hour supplementary course for congregation elders on certain serious matters.

Child Molestation: The Society's letter to all bodies of elders dated May 1, 1997, page 2, paragraph 5, states: "[G]ive the Society a report on anyone who is currently serving or who formerly served in a Society-appointed position in your congregation who is known to have been guilty of child molestation in the past." Reports indicate that some elders think this direction does not apply if before his baptism the person sexually abused a child. However, even in such a situation, the elders should write the branch office. This is true even if what occurred was many years ago. If any body of elders has not yet reported such a matter, they should immediately do so. Furthermore, any correspondence put in the confidential congregation file about an individual accused of child molestation, proven or otherwise, should be marked "Do Not Destroy" and be kept indefinitely.

In the Kingdom Ministry School Supplementary Course for Congregation Elders there was a panel discussion in Unit 5b, "USE DISCERNMENT IN HANDLING SERIOUS MATTERS." This portion of the course addressed questions related to the problems associated with child abuse. Question 6 to the panel asked: "What factors should be considered in determining what congregation privileges, if any, a former child molester can enjoy?" The answer included the statement: "There are also legal considerations." Some have inquired about how and why legal considerations should affect our recommendations of those who have been guilty of child abuse in the past.

Those who are appointed to privileges of service, such as elders and ministerial servants, are put in a position of trust. One who is extended privileges in the congregation is judged by others as being worthy of trust. This includes being more liberal in leaving children in their care and oversight. The congregation would be left unprotected if we prematurely appointed someone who was a child abuser as a ministerial servant or an elder. In addition, court officials and lawyers will hold responsible any organization that knowingly appoints former child abusers to positions of trust, if one of these, thereafter, commits a further act of child abuse. This could result in costly lawsuits, involving dedicated funds that should be used to further the Kingdom work. So, legal considerations must also be weighed along with the degree of notoriety, the extent of the misconduct, how many years ago the sin occurred, and how the brother is now viewed by the congregation and people in the community including those he victimized.

Scriptural Freedom to Remarry: The 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 1, describes a situation where an adulterous mate unilaterally obtains a divorce over the objection of the innocent mate. In such a case, the guilty one is not free to remarry.

What if the innocent mate consents to the divorce by signing the divorce papers? Does this free the guilty mate to remarry? Yes, Jesus' counsel at Matthew 5:37 applies here: "Let your Yes mean Yes, your No, No." If the innocent mate, perhaps in an effort to protect herself financially or to obtain custody of children, agrees to a divorce obtained by her adulterous husband, the adulterous one is then free to remarry. Although the innocent one may claim forgiveness, by signing the divorce papers she indicates her rejection of the adulterous mate. Since she has rejected that one, she holds no further claim on him, and he is Scripturally free to remarry.

Another situation involving the Scriptural freedom to remarry is where an unscriptural divorce is obtained and then, some time later, one of the mates commits fornication. In such a case, does either one have a Scriptural basis to remarry?

If a man takes the initiative and divorces his mate without a Scriptural basis and his divorced wife later commits adultery, both are free to remarry. This is because, by his previous unscriptural action of divorcing his wife, the husband has given evidence of his wanting to reject her. What is stated in the 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 6, applies: "A person who commits adultery after having been divorced by his or her mate on unscriptural grounds would be Scripturally free to remarry, since he or she had already been rejected by the mate that obtained the divorce." However, the converse is not necessarily true. If the one who initiated the unscriptural divorce later commits adultery, that one is still obligated to confess to the mate, although they are legally divorced. The innocent mate must be given the opportunity to determine whether to forgive or not. However, in both cases, the one committing adultery would need to meet with a judicial committee.

While the principles outlined above should prove helpful in handling inquiries from publishers about the Scriptural freedom to remarry, the elders should always exercise extreme caution when providing an answer. They should never inform a publisher that there appears to be a basis for Scriptural freedom to divorce and remarry, unless conclusive evidence has been established (1) that adultery was committed, (2) that the innocent mate has rejected the guilty one, and (3) that a legal, final divorce has been obtained. Because of the numerous factors involved in such matters, in many cases it will be best to write the Society. When doing so, always provide as many details as possible, including the names of the individuals involved. The Society will then provide the needed assistance.

When a divorced brother or sister wishes to remarry, the elders should kindly request to see the divorce papers to make sure that that one is legally free to do so. They should also determine that it has been established that both parties involved are Scripturally free to remarry. (Matt. 19:9) This will help servants of Jehovah to preserve the cleanness of the congregation and avoid entering adulterous marriages. Always review the Society's letter to all bodies of elders dated TB:COS September 25, 1988, regarding guidelines on wedding procedures before agreeing to solemnize any marriage.

Please be assured of our prayers on your behalf as you endeavour to fulfil your weighty responsibilities as shepherds of the flock. We send herewith a warm expression of our Christian love and best wishes.

Your brothers,

Re: Child abuse and Scriptural freedom to remarry

Dear Brothers:

We are here providing, for your future reference, information that was presented at the 15-hour supplementary course for congregation elders on certain serious matters.

Child Molestation: The Society's letter to all bodies of elders dated March 14, 1997, page 2, paragraph 5, states: "[G]ive the Society a report on anyone who is currently serving or who formerly served in a Society-appointed position in your congregation who is known to have been guilty of child molestation in the past." Reports indicate that some elders think this direction does not apply if before his baptism the person sexually abused a child. Scriptural Freedom to Remarry: The 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 1, describes a situation where an adulterous mate unilaterally obtains a divorce over the objection of the innocent mate. In such a case, the guilty one is not free to remarry.

What if the innocent mate consents to the divorce by signing the divorce papers? Does this free the guilty mate to remarry? It appears that in most countries, both parties must consent to the divorce by "signing the divorce papers." However, this is not the case in Australia. In this country, we have what is known as a "no-fault" divorce, that is, the only requirement for getting a divorce is the "irretrievable breakdown of the marriage." This is evidenced by the parties living separately and apart for at least twelve months with no reasonable likelihood of them getting together again. In effect, a person may unilaterally seek a divorce with or without their spouse's consent. A signature from the innocent party is not required for a legal divorce to proceed. Therefore, in all cases of divorce, the elders should establish who initiated the divorce and whether or not the spouse is in agreement. It would be helpful for both parties to sign a statement to this effect so that a permanent record is kept in the congregation's files.

Another situation involving the Scriptural freedom to remarry is where an unscriptural divorce is obtained and then, some time later, one of the mates commits fornication. In such a case, does either one have a Scriptural basis to remarry?

If a man takes the initiative and divorces his mate without a Scriptural basis and his divorced wife later commits adultery, both are free to remarry. This is because, by his previous unscriptural action of divorcing his wife, the husband has given evidence of his wanting to reject her. What is stated in the 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 135, paragraph 6, applies: "A person who commits adultery after having been divorced by his or her mate on unscriptural grounds would be Scripturally free to remarry, since he or she had already been rejected by the mate that obtained the divorce." However, the converse is not necessarily true. If the one who initiated the unscriptural divorce later commits adultery, that one is still obligated to confess to the mate, although they are legally divorced. The innocent mate must be given the opportunity to determine whether to forgive or not. However, in both cases, the one committing adultery would need to meet with a judicial committee.

While the principles outlined above should prove helpful in handling inquiries from publishers about the Scriptural freedom to remarry, the elders should always exercise extreme caution when providing an answer. They should never inform a publisher that there appears to be a basis for Scriptural freedom to divorce and remarry, unless conclusive evidence has been established (1) that adultery was committed, (2) that the innocent mate has rejected the guilty one, and (3) that a legal, final divorce has been obtained. Because of the numerous factors involved in such matters, in many cases it will be best to write the Society. When doing so, always provide as many details as possible, including the names of the individuals involved. The Society will then provide the needed assistance.

When a divorced brother or sister wishes to remarry, the elders should kindly request to see the divorce papers to make sure that that one is legally free to do so. They should also determine that it has been established that both parties involved are Scripturally free to remarry. (Matt. 19:9) This will help servants of Jehovah to preserve the cleanness of the congregation and avoid entering adulterous marriages. Always review the Society's letter to all bodies of elders dated May 15, 1988, regarding guidelines on wedding procedures before agreeing to solemnize any marriage.

Re: Privacy Laws and Proposed Revision of S-77 Form

Dear Brothers:

We have at hand your letter dated AB:LLA July 15, 2008, No. 322, regarding Australia's Privacy Amendment (Private Sector) Act, 2000, and your proposed adjustments to the S-77 form. We apologize for our delay in replying, but we are happy to do so now. You say that organizations subject to the privacy law must on request provide individuals with any personal information held about them and that organizations may retain "sensitive" information (which includes information about religious, ethnic or sexual practices) only with the individual's consent.

To avoid the inclusion of sensitive information that would be viewed as undesirable under the privacy law, you propose that:

- the S-77 form include a series of check-off boxes without Scriptural references of the disfellowshipping offense(s) instead of the current form's request for a summation and explanation of the offense(s);
- the S-77 form include a statement of the primary purposes for retaining the form as well as statements from the branch and the judicial committee chairman that all other records have been destroyed;
- a S-77 form instruction sheet be provided separate from the S-77 form itself because separate instructions would not be subject to disclosure as they would not contain personal information;
- the judicial committee prepare a detailed summary of the case on a separate sheet that would be sent to the Service Desk but would be discarded after the matter has been considered and finalized by the Service Desk.

While we agree in general with your recommendations, we think it would be better to show the series of disfellowshipping offenses (now shown as check-off boxes) in the separate instruction sheet instead of listing these as check-off boxes on the S-77 form itself. In the instruction sheet, we wish for you to show the appropriate Scriptural citations next to each offense. The judicial committee can be instructed to copy the appropriate wording (along with the corresponding Scriptural citation) from the instruction sheet to the S-77 form. Furthermore, the point on "Lying" should be adjusted to say "Malicious lying." We look forward to reviewing the adjusted form and instruction sheet.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

We also wonder how you propose to track those who have been accused of, and/or disfellowshipped for, child molestation and other abuse to protect against their being appointed to positions of responsibility in the future. Please let us know how you will be tracking such persons.

Also, in view of the privacy law's express exemption of 'small businesses' (i.e., those with less than $3,000,000 (Australian) in annual turnover), we wonder if the formation of a new legal entity that would supervise religious activities only, but would receive little if any income, might come within the statutory exemption with respect to any judicial or other personal records it would keep. (Mark 12:17; Romans 13:1, 7) We would appreciate your thoughts on the possible formation of such a new legal entity.—Proverbs 15:22.

We appreciate your hard work on behalf of the brothers in Australia and send our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Your brothers,

Re: Privacy Laws and Proposed Revision of S-77 Form

Dear Brothers:

Thank you for your reply dated GAJ:LPX August 19, 2008, No. 542S. We have now adjusted the S-77 form and separate instruction sheet in harmony your recommendations. We enclose copies of these documents for your approval. Additionally, we attach a draft letter addressed to all bodies of elders in our country in which we explain the adjusted procedure. We are unsure if you consider it necessary for the elders to list all of the Scriptural references connected with an offence or if citing some of the relevant Scriptures would suffice. We would appreciate any suggestions you may have regarding the contents of this letter.

We note that Branch Organization 18:26 states that the United States branch "revises … English forms" and in Branch Organization 18:20 it says that "dates are changed when forms are revised in English." Therefore, regarding the proposed adjusted S-77-E form, could you advise how we may represent this change on the form? Will the United States branch provide a new revision date (the current date is 10/06)? We already use the edition code "Au" to show that we have changed other local information on the form.

You ask about how we propose to track persons who are accused and/or disfellowshipped for child molestation and other abuse. We intend to continue doing what we have done in the past, that is, maintaining a list of such individuals along with the necessary details of what transpired. All appointments processed by the Service Department are checked against that list of names. We see no major difficulties in our continuing to collect and retain this needed information for several reasons:

(1) The Privacy Act (Act) permits "sensitive information" to be collected if it relates to a member of the organization or to an individual who has regular contact with the organization provided "at or before the time of collecting the information, the organization undertakes to the individual whom the information concerns that the organization will not disclose the information without the individual's consent." There should be little difficulty in explaining this process to the individual concerned and obtaining this consent when the matter or allegation is handled; and

(2) On a completely separate basis, the Act also permits "sensitive information" to be collected, without consent from the individual concerned, if "the collection is necessary for the establishment, exercise or defence of a legal or equitable claim." The collection and retention of this kind of information is needed to enable the organization to defend itself against potential future legal claims in connection with individuals who have been involved in child molestation and other abuse situations. This provision should also provide the organization with the necessary basis to retain "sensitive information" of this kind collected in the past, without the consent of the individual.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

You also ask if we have considered the formation of a new legal entity which might come under the 'small business' exemption. We confirm that we are presently considering the formation of a separate legal entity for the purposes of minimizing liability in the case of litigation and we intend to correspond with you regarding this matter in the near future. However, we do not feel that forming a separate legal entity will result in exemption from privacy legislation in the long term. The Australian Law Reform Commission has recently recommended that parliament abolish the "small business" exemption and that all businesses should come under the Act. It is highly likely that this recommendation will be adopted in the not-too-distant future.

We look forward to your response and send our warm Christian love and best wishes.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Re: Retention of confidential records

Dear Brothers:

At this time, we are writing to provide further direction and clarification in regard to the retention of confidential records. Please note the following guidelines:

Matters resulting in disfellowshipping or disassociation: As you are aware, for all cases of disfellowshipping or disassociation an S-77 form must be completed along with a separate summation of the matter, usually no more than one page in length. These documents are forwarded to the branch office, processed, and a stamped copy of the S-77 form is returned to you. The chairman of the judicial committee then completes the back page of the S-77 form, and all other documents regarding the case should be destroyed, including any copy of the summation. The S-77 form (only) is then placed in a sealed envelope in the congregation's confidential file. (The only exception to this involves signed letters of disassociation, which are kept along with the stamped S-77 form.)

Other serious matters: We have, however, received many inquiries concerning document retention relating to serious matters that do not result in disfellowshipping. These may concern persons judicially reproved, allegations of serious wrongdoing that cannot be established, and matters that are investigated and handled by two elders. In these and other similar situations, a summation of no more than one page should be written and held in the confidential file. All other documents and correspondence relating to the matter should then be destroyed. Summations concerning persons judicially reproved should be kept for a minimum period of five years. All other summations may be retained for as long as the body of elders deems necessary.

Child abuse matters: In regard to all matters involving allegations or established cases of child abuse, the above-mentioned direction will apply, with one exception. All documents relating to the matter should be sent to the branch office, instead of being destroyed. This will facilitate the congregation retaining only a stamped S-77 form in matters resulting in disfellowshipping, or a single page summation for all other situations.

Summation of cases: In regard to the summation itself, it is reasonable to conclude that as each case is unique, the content and length (within one page) of each summation will vary. However, certain details should be included in each summation, such as:

- congregation name and date
- contact details for the coordinator of the body of elders
- names and signatures of each brother involved in investigating the matter or serving on the judicial committee

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

- details such as the specific nature of the allegation that has been raised, or clear proof of wrongdoing that Scripturally established the matter.

Letters of introduction: Generally speaking, when each elder has had opportunity to read the letter, there would be no need for it to be retained. However, when the letter of introduction recommends a brother to continue serving in an appointed capacity, the letter should be retained until that recommendation is handled, either at the time of the circuit overseer's visit, or by way of an S-52 appointment letter being supplied by the branch office between visits of the circuit overseer. Additionally, any letter of introduction that refers to matters of child abuse should be retained in the confidential file for as long as the accused person remains in the congregation. Should this person move, a new letter should be prepared and sent to the elders in the new congregation outlining the individual's background, current restrictions that apply, what the elders have been doing to protect minors and to assist him, and their present experience with him. In all such cases, a copy of the letter of introduction must be sent to the branch office in a special blue envelope. Any previous letter of introduction held in the congregation's file can then be destroyed.

Minutes of elders' meetings: We also understand that many congregations use and retain a minutes book, detailing items for discussion and attention at meetings of the body of elders. In this regard, please note the following direction provided to the presiding overseer, now known as the coordinator of the body of elders, as found in "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock", page 71, paragraph 12: "Compiles Scriptural and practical agendas outlining points for discussion at regular elders' meetings throughout the year." In addition, page 70, paragraph 11 states: "Make sure that either you or another elder takes notes as to decisions made and who will carry them out." Therefore, it would be appropriate that notes taken at a meeting of the body of elders are made on the agenda itself, or on other loose-leaf sheets of paper. Once the noted items have been completed, perhaps in the weeks or months following the meeting, these agendas and notes should be destroyed. This would negate the need for a minutes book to be used or retained.

We appreciate that the direction provided in this letter does not cover every possible scenario involving documents that a congregation may come to possess. Reasonableness and good judgment will be necessary by the body of elders in determining the appropriate course of action concerning documents that have not been addressed herein. However, we trust that the clarification provided by means of this correspondence is of assistance to you, and it is our prayer that Jehovah may continue to bless your efforts to "shepherd the flock of God in your care." (1 Peter 5:2) We take this opportunity to send our warm Christian love and greetings.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Re: Letters of introduction

Dear Brothers:

Much fine direction on the subject of letters of introduction has been included in the Shepherding textbook. For example, paragraphs 30 and 31 of chapter 3 deal with letters of introduction when elders and ministerial servants move. Paragraph 22 of chapter 7 deals with letters of introduction when a publisher with judicial restrictions moves. Paragraph 2 of chapter 10 deals with what should be sent when a disfellowshipped or disassociated person moves. And paragraphs 20 and 21 of chapter 12 provide updated direction on letters of introduction when a known child molester or an accused child molester moves. Thus, the July 1, 2006, letter to all bodies of elders regarding letters of introduction should be removed from the congregation permanent file of policy letters and be destroyed. However, please note the following additional points that are not included in the Shepherding textbook.

Format: A letter of introduction should always contain the following information: (1) the date of the letter, (2) the previous congregation's full name and complete mailing address, (3) the new congregation's full name and complete mailing address, and (4) signatures of the Congregation Service Committee, with their names typed or printed underneath their signatures. (be pp. 71-73) Some also find it helpful to use a regarding line (as shown above) so that the recipient may easily identify the purpose of the letter.

Congregation publisher: When a publisher (active or inactive) moves to another congregation, a letter of introduction and the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards should be promptly sent to the congregation where the publisher moved. (The last record card of an inactive publisher should be retained indefinitely by the congregation where the publisher moved.) If the previous service committee knows where the publisher moved, they may take the initiative and send these items without waiting for a formal request from the new congregation. What information should be conveyed in the letter of introduction? Ask yourself: What information would we want to receive if this person were moving into our congregation? (Matt. 7:12) Clearly state the publisher's full name, the names of any immediate family members, and any privileges the publisher or his family members have enjoyed, such as assignments on the Theocratic Ministry School, working with the Regional Building Committee, auxiliary pioneer service, and so forth. These elements should be included in all letters of introduction. If the person was reproved in the distant past but is not presently under restrictions, there may be no need to mention past judicial action unless the offense involved child molestation, adulterous marriage, or some other notorious wrongdoing.

Regular pioneer: In addition to the information previously described for a congregation publisher, the letter of introduction for a regular pioneer should clearly state whether the pioneer is recommended to continue serving as such. The regular pioneer appointment letter (S-202) should also be forwarded to the congregation where the pioneer is moving. The secretary of the new congregation will make the needed adjustments to the form and send it to the branch office.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

A revised appointment letter will then be sent to the new congregation. If a regular pioneer moves out of the branch territory, the pioneer appointment letter should be mailed to your branch office with a cover letter providing the date of the move and the name, city, state, and country of the congregation where the pioneer will be associating.

Each elder should make the following notation next to the penultimate bullet in paragraph 16 of chapter 2 in the Shepherding textbook: “See letter dated November 17, 2010, regarding letters of introduction.”

Carefully following these guidelines will help you to protect the flock and to render needed spiritual assistance to Jehovah’s precious sheep. We pray that Jehovah will continue to “give you peace constantly in every way” as you faithfully serve him in these last days. —2 Thess. 3:16.

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Re: Correspondence from branch office and congregation file

Dear Brothers:

This letter replaces the letter dated December 6, 2010, to all bodies of elders. That letter should be removed from the congregation permanent file of policy letters and be destroyed. Paragraphs 3-5 of this letter have been revised to reflect updated direction on the routing and printing of letters. Paragraph 9 has been revised to include direction on the review of Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards by field service group overseers and assistants. Selected notations previously made in the Shepherding textbook will need to be updated as well.

Letters to individuals and congregations: At times, the branch office will send letters to individuals in care of the coordinator of the body of elders because of not having the mailing address of the individual. Such correspondence should be given to the addressee without being opened by the coordinator of the body of elders. Generally speaking, routine letters addressed to congregations do not need to be read to the congregation. Rather, at the next Service Meeting, the coordinator of the body of elders will arrange for an announcement to be made that a letter on that subject has been posted on the information board. Any exceptions to this direction will be noted in the postscript of the letter.

Letters to bodies of elders: It is preferred that letters addressed to bodies of elders be viewed on the jw.org Web site by each elder rather than be read as a body unless otherwise directed. Doing so limits the number of elders' meetings required and allows each elder to examine the letter in greater detail. Upon receipt of a letter to the body of elders, the coordinator of the body of elders or secretary should print two copies of the letter. The secretary can immediately place one copy in the congregation file as directed and can route the other copy to any elders who do not have access to a computer and the Internet. Once the routed copy is returned to the secretary, it should be destroyed. Of course, if each elder has confirmed that he is able to regularly view letters on the site, there is no need for a second copy of each letter to be printed and routed.

Although during the course of printing letters from the site electronic files are copied to a user's computer, such files should not be retained. Neither should individual elders compile their own library of printed letters. In most cases, it should be possible for elders to read letters from the screen rather than printing a hard copy.

Index to Letters—For Bodies of Elders* (S-22): Periodically, Index to Letters will be revised. The coordinator of the body of elders or secretary should print one copy for the congregation file. He should also provide a copy to each elder who does not have access to a computer and the Internet. A list of letters comprising the congregation permanent file of policy letters is provided at the end of the index. Each letter in that list should be sorted in date order in the congregation file. Those letters should be kept separate from other items in the congregation file. Most congregations find it helpful to keep a separate binder of those letters with the Index to

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

Letters at the front of the binder. As those letters are replaced or as new ones are added in the future, direction will be given to update the congregation permanent file of policy letters. You will likely find it helpful to update your copy of Index to Letters at that time as well.

We wish to offer the following caution. There are some older letters that are referred to in Index to Letters. In some cases those older letters contain just one or two policy matters that currently apply. The other points in the letter may have been revised. Thus, while researching a specific point in one of the older letters, you may notice other policy matters that may or may not still apply. Therefore, exercise care in using that older direction. If those points of policy are not referred to in Index to Letters, it is likely because the matter has been addressed in the Shepherding textbook or in more recent correspondence.

Congregation file categories: Besides correspondence to be retained in the congregation permanent file of policy letters, the branch office sends annual correspondence (such as district convention instructions, guidelines for visitors to Bethel, and pioneer encouragement letters and outlines). At times, letters are sent to inform the elders or the congregation of a specific problem or temporary need. Additionally, the congregation may have paperwork regarding ownership of the Kingdom Hall, instructions for congregation accounting, and direction on requesting literature and magazines. If the branch office does not specifically direct that the correspondence should be retained in the congregation permanent file of policy letters, it will be up to the elders to determine how to file such material. If the branch office does not specifically direct how long a piece of correspondence or documentation should be retained, the elders may make the decision based on local laws and circumstances. The attached list suggests some categories that may be useful in filing material other than items to be retained in the congregation permanent file of policy letters. Additional categories may be used as needed.

- Accounts
- Assemblies/Conventions
- Bethel visitors information
- Circuit overseer's report on visit
- Confidential reports (sealed envelopes)
- Elders and ministerial servants
- Field service reports
- Forms
- Hospital Liaison Committee/DPA cards
- jw.org Web site
- Kingdom Hall
- Letters of introduction
- Literature/Magazines
- Miscellaneous
- Notes from elders' meetings
- Pioneers
- Regional Building Committee
- Talk outlines
- Territory

Confidentiality and security: The congregation files and records should be kept locked in a safe and secure place, preferably at the Kingdom Hall. However, if the Kingdom Hall is in any way vulnerable, then such records may be kept in the home of a responsible elder, such as the secretary, under lock and key to prevent unauthorized entry. Although the secretary is primarily responsible for the organization of the congregation file, each elder may be provided with a key to the file.—Each elder should make the following notation next to the second bullet point in paragraph 16 in chapter 2 of the Shepherding textbook: "See letter dated September 7, 2011, to all bodies of elders regarding updated direction on keys to congregation file."

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

Field service and meeting attendance records: The box at the Kingdom Hall for collecting field service reports will continue to be used. It may be useful to the secretary in gathering the field service reports collected by the group overseers. Individual publishers may put their reports in the box at the Kingdom Hall if they desire or are otherwise unable to give them to their group overseer. The Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards should be retained showing at least the last eight years of activity for each publisher. Cards from more than eight years ago may be destroyed. At least the last 12 months of activity should be retained in the current file of cards. The last card of an inactive publisher should be retained in the current file indefinitely. The current file of cards should be divided into two sections—"Active" and "Inactive." The section for active publishers should be arranged alphabetically, with the cards subdivided into sections for regular and special pioneers, baptized publishers, and unbaptized publishers. Monthly Field Service Report (S-4) slips, after being tabulated and posted on the Congregation's Publisher Record cards, do not have to be retained. A record card should be filled out for the monthly totals of all publishers, auxiliary pioneers, and regular and special pioneers. Such cards, as well as meeting attendance records for the congregation, will be kept at least two years. Although the record cards are part of the congregation file, they may be kept by the secretary and made available to the other elders upon request. The field service group overseer (or servant) and his assistant should periodically review the cards of the publishers in their group with the goal of learning what each publisher's strengths and weaknesses are and then offering appropriate assistance. If the assistant is not an elder or a ministerial servant, the group overseer (or servant) should orally share the information with him, noting areas of concern.

Appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants: Records related to the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants should be kept indefinitely.

Judicial files: After a duly appointed judicial committee has met with an individual and decided to disfellowship him, to reprove him, or to dismiss the case because of a lack of evidence, a report on the proceedings is signed by the judicial committee. (The same is true of a committee handling a request for disassociation or two brothers handling wrongdoing involving an unbaptized publisher.) Such reports, including Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) forms, should be placed in a sealed envelope. On the front of the envelope should be listed the name of the individual, the action taken by the congregation (if any), the date of the action, and the names of the elders who handled the matter. The sealed envelope should be placed in the congregation file by the secretary. If there is a need to open these files in the future, such as in connection with a plea for reinstatement, this should be done only by the elders who are assigned by the body to handle the matter. In cases of reinstatement, the reinstatement date should appear on the outside of the sealed envelope along with the names of those serving on the reinstatement committee. The date all restrictions are removed after reinstatement or reproof should also be noted on the outside of the sealed envelope. No judicial information should be posted on Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards.

After a disfellowshipped or disassociated person has been reinstated a full five years, if the judicial committee feels there is no longer any need to retain the file material, it can be destroyed. (The same applies to records involving judicial reproof.) If these brothers are not available or qualified, the determination may be made by the Congregation Service Committee or qualified elders designated by them. If there is some reason why the committee feels that it would be better to retain the material longer, it can be kept as long as necessary. If a man or a woman has entered into an adulterous marriage, the file should be kept for five years after reinstatement and thereafter at least until the death or remarriage of the innocent mate. Judicial files involving child abuse should be marked "Do Not Destroy" and should be kept indefinitely. Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation forms on individuals who have not been reinstated should also be kept indefinitely.

In view of the foregoing, each elder should make the following notation next to paragraphs 39 and 62 in chapter 5; paragraphs 21 and 34 in chapter 7; paragraph 2 in chapter 9; paragraph 13 in chapter 11; and paragraph 17 in chapter 12 of the Shepherding textbook: "See letter dated September 7, 2011, to all bodies of elders regarding filing confidential material."

We trust this direction will be helpful to you as you seek to imitate our orderly God, Jehovah. (1 Cor. 14:33) Please accept an expression of our warm Christian love.

Dear Brothers:

1. As previously announced, effective September 1, 2014, circuit overseers will be responsible for the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants. This letter provides further direction regarding this adjustment.

2. Appointments during a regular visit to a congregation: At least one month before the circuit overseer's visit, the Congregation Service Committee should send to the circuit overseer the full name, date of birth, and date of baptism of any brother the body of elders will be recommending for appointment as an elder or a ministerial servant. The Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants (S-62) form should be used for this purpose.—See paragraph 14.

3. No earlier than a day or two before the start of the visit, perhaps when other congregation records are provided, the elders should provide the circuit overseer with background information that will help him have a complete view of the qualifications of the brother(s) being recommended for appointment. Such information would include letters of recommendation (or perhaps letters of introduction) from a previous congregation. During the meeting with the elders later in the week, the circuit overseer will discuss the Scriptural qualifications of each brother recommended. (ks10 chap. 3 pars. 1-10) If the circuit overseer determines that the brother does not measure up to the Scriptural requirements to a reasonable degree, he will advise the elders accordingly and inform them how they can help the brother to qualify in the future.

4. When the circuit overseer decides to appoint a brother, the circuit overseer and another elder will meet with the brother to inform him of his appointment. If the brother is (1) being appointed for the first time as a ministerial servant or (2) being reappointed as an elder or a ministerial servant for reasons other than his move from one congregation to another, the circuit overseer will ask the following questions: "Is there anything from your past, even before baptism, or in your personal or family life that disqualifies you or that would prevent you from accepting this appointment? Is there any reason why your appointment should not be announced to the congregation?

Have you ever been involved at any time in the past with child sexual molestation?" (This revises the direction in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 3, paragraph 13.) If the brother answers no to the questions, the circuit overseer will provide the elders with a signed appointment letter that includes the brother's name in the list of those appointed during the visit. The appointment should be announced to the congregation at the next Service Meeting.[1]

5. If the brother approved for appointment is not present at the conclusion of the visit and it is necessary to ask him the three questions mentioned in paragraph 4, the circuit overseer will not include the brother's name in the appointment letter, if any, left with the elders at the end of the visit. Rather, when the brother returns, the coordinator of the body of elders should assign two elders to ask the brother the three questions. The coordinator of the body of elders will then inform the circuit overseer of the brother's answers. If the brother answers no to the questions, the circuit overseer will provide the elders with a signed appointment letter. At the Service Meeting following the receipt of the appointment letter, the brother's appointment should be announced to the congregation.[1]

6. If the brother approved for appointment is not present at the conclusion of the visit but it is not necessary to ask him the three questions mentioned in paragraph 4, the circuit overseer will include the brother's name in the appointment letter left with the elders at the end of the visit. When the brother returns, two elders should meet with the brother to inform him of his appointment before it is announced to the congregation.[1]

7. Appointments between regular visits to a congregation: When a brother moves into the congregation with a favorable letter of recommendation for reappointment and the next visit of the circuit overseer is not in the near future, the body of elders may recommend his immediate reappointment. In such cases, the Congregation Service Committee should submit the Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants (S-62) form to the circuit overseer along with a copy of the letter of recommendation from the service committee of his former congregation. (See paragraph 14.) If the recommendation is approved, an appointment letter will be sent to the body of elders. A brother who has been reappointed as an elder or a ministerial servant should be informed of his appointment before it is announced to the congregation.

8. Appointments of coordinators of the body of elders: The circuit overseer is responsible for the appointment of the coordinator of the body of elders. When needed, this appointment will be made during his regular visit to the congregation. If a temporary adjustment is made apart from the circuit overseer's visit, the Congregation Service Committee should immediately notify the circuit overseer, explaining the reason for the change. Whether the change in the coordinator of the body of elders is permanent or temporary, a Coordinator of the Body of Elders/Secretary Change of Address (S-29) form should be sent to the Service Department.

9. Deletions during a regular visit to a congregation: Recommendations for deletion because of poor judgment not of a judicial nature are usually best considered with the elders during the visit of the circuit overseer. At the start of the circuit overseer's visit, the elders should provide any background information that will help the circuit overseer have a complete view of the qualifications of a brother recommended for deletion. During his meeting with the elders later in the week, the circuit overseer will discuss the Scriptural qualifications of the brother. (ks10 chap. 3 pars. 15-24) If the circuit overseer agrees with the recommendation, the brother will be informed of his deletion. If the brother agrees with the decision, the circuit overseer will generate a letter of deletion. The announcement of deletion should be made at the next Service Meeting. (ks10 chap. 3 par. 26) If the brother disagrees with the decision, he will be informed of his right to appeal.—See paragraph 13.

10. Deletions between regular visits to a congregation: If serious questions arise concerning a brother's qualifications and the next visit of the circuit overseer is not in the near future, the body of elders should follow the procedure outlined in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 3, paragraphs 22-24. If, after reviewing a brother's qualifications the elders decide to recommend his deletion, the Congregation Service Committee should send the recommendation of the body of elders to the circuit overseer immediately. The letter should provide complete details and indicate whether or not the brother agrees with the recommendation. (ks10 chap. 3 par. 25) If the circuit overseer agrees with the recommendation and believes it should be processed immediately, he will send a letter of deletion to the body of elders. Upon receipt of the letter, the coordinator of the body of elders should assign two elders to inform the brother of the circuit overseer's decision. If the brother accepts the circuit overseer's decision, the announcement should be made at the next Service Meeting. (ks10 chap. 3 par. 26) If the brother does not accept the decision, he should be informed of his right to appeal, the announcement to the congregation should be held in abeyance, and the coordinator of the body of elders should inform the circuit overseer.—See paragraph 13.

11. Transfers to another congregation: When an elder or a ministerial servant moves out of the congregation, an announcement of deletion would not be made to the congregation. At the next visit of the circuit overseer, the elders should inform the circuit overseer of the brother's move.

12. Resignations, deletions for judicial reasons, and deaths: The Congregation Service Committee should immediately inform the circuit overseer of (1) the deletion of an elder or a ministerial servant because of resignation, judicial reproof, disfellowshipping, or disassociation or (2) the death of an elder or a ministerial servant. For deletions resulting from judicial reproof, disfellowshipping, or disassociation, the information sent to the circuit overseer should include the specific judicial offense and the action taken by the committee. When a brother resigns for personal reasons, the information sent to the circuit overseer should include full details as to why he chose to relinquish his privilege of service. In cases involving judicial reproof or the resignation by a brother, the circuit overseer will send a letter of deletion to the body of elders. No letter of deletion will be sent in cases of disfellowshipping, disassociation, or death.

13. Appealing deletions: If an elder or a ministerial servant disagrees with his deletion by the circuit overseer and wishes to appeal, he should immediately write a brief letter to the Service Department, with a copy to the body of elders and the circuit overseer, explaining why he disagrees with the deletion. The announcement of deletion should be held in abeyance, and the letter of deletion should be destroyed (if one had been generated). Thereafter, the Service Department will select an experienced circuit overseer who will then rehear the entire matter with the original circuit overseer. After the circuit overseers hearing the appeal reach a joint decision, there is no further right to appeal. If it is decided that the brother should be deleted, the circuit overseer will generate a letter of deletion to the body of elders. Upon receipt of the letter of deletion, the announcement of deletion should be made at the next Service Meeting.

14. Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants* (S-62) form: Beginning August 1, 2014, the Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants form should be used to submit to the circuit overseer the names, birth dates, and baptism dates of brothers being recommended for appointment in conjunction with a regular visit. Effective September 1, 2014, this form should also be used to submit recommendations for appointments between visits. Enhancements to jw.org are under way to provide a Web version of the form. In the event that this new Web form is not available by the time it is needed, the Congregation Service Committee should submit this information by means of the PDF version of the form, using the jw.org Inbox feature. The PDF version of the form, containing editable fields, will be posted in the "Forms" section of jw.org in the near future.

15. Congregation file: Records related to the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants should be retained indefinitely. This would include S-2 forms and S-52 acknowledgement letters from the branch office and letters of appointment and deletion from circuit overseers. In connection with any deletion, a brief explanation of the reason for the brother's deletion should also be kept. Such background material will be helpful in supplying the circuit overseer with complete details in the event a brother is recommended for reappointment in the future.

16. Shepherding* textbook adjustments: The adjusted procedures described in this letter update a number of paragraphs in the Shepherding textbook. Each elder should make the following notations in his copy:

- In chapter 2, paragraph 13, and in chapter 3, paragraphs 11-13, 27, and 29, cross out the existing sentences and write in the margins the following: "See letter dated July 13, 2014."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 6, cross out the words "and the branch office."
- In chapter 3, in the subheading preceding paragraph 11, cross out the words "Branch Office" and replace them with the words "Circuit Overseer."
- In chapter 3, cross out the subheading preceding paragraph 12 and replace it with the subheading "Appointments Made During the Visit of the Circuit Overseer."
- In chapter 3, insert before paragraph 14 the new subheading "Recommendations Not Approved by the Circuit Overseer."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 14, in the first and fourth sentences, cross out the words "branch office" and replace them with the words "circuit overseer." In the third sentence of the same paragraph, cross out the word "neither" and replace it with the word "not," and cross out the words "nor read to him from the confidential letter received from the branch office that explains why he was not appointed."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 23, cross out the existing sentences in the last bullet point.
- In chapter 3, in the subheading preceding paragraph 25, cross out the words "Branch Office" and replace them with the words "Circuit Overseer."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 25, in the first sentence, cross out the words "branch office" and replace them with the words "circuit overseer."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 25, in the penultimate sentence of the first bullet point, cross out the words "branch office" and replace them with the words "circuit overseer."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 25, second bullet point, at the end of the third sentence, cross out the words "branch office" and replace them with the words "circuit overseer." Cross out the sentence "If he disagrees, he may submit a letter along with the elders' letter of explanation, stating why he does not accept the recommendation." Write in the margin the following: "See letter dated July 13, 2014."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 26, cross out the first two sentences and write in the margin the following: "See letter dated July 13, 2014."
- In chapter 3, paragraph 28, cross out the word "include" and replace it with the words "send to the Service Department."

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

Dear Brothers:

1. As an appointed representative of the Governing Body and in accord with the Scriptural precedent at Acts 14:23, beginning September 1, 2014, you will be responsible for the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants, based on the recommendations of the local elders. Of course, the process of elders notifying you of the names of brothers they wish to recommend for appointment during your next visit will take place prior to September 1. When considering the appointment or deletion of an elder or a ministerial servant at any time, you should feel free to consult with the Service Department or another experienced circuit overseer if this would be helpful in making a decision.

2. The responsibility of appointing and deleting elders and ministerial servants is a weighty one. It is entrusted to men who are kind, impartial, and just. (Ex. 18:21) When handling recommendations, whether for appointment or deletion, you should avoid imposing your personal viewpoints and opinions or setting arbitrary rules. (1 Cor. 4:6) You should strive to imitate Jehovah and his Son by caring for matters with love and patience. (Deut. 10:17; 16:18, 19; Isa. 42:1-4) In this way, you demonstrate deep respect and submission to Jehovah and to the Head of the Christian congregation, Jesus Christ. (Eph. 1:22, 23) We are confident you will continue to make these thoughts a matter of prayer.

3. Appointments during a regular visit to a congregation: At least one month before your visit to the congregation, the Congregation Service Committee will send to you the full name, date of birth, and date of baptism of any brother the body of elders will be recommending for appointment as an elder or a ministerial servant. The Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants (S-62) form will be used for this purpose. (See paragraph 22.) If the jw.org Web form is used, the names will automatically be sent to the Service Department. If this information is received via the jw.org Inbox feature, hard copy, or in any other manner, you should forward this information immediately to the Service Department. The Service Department will notify you whether there are any reasons a recommendation should not be considered. If this occurs, you should inform the body of elders accordingly.

4. No earlier than a day or two before the start of the visit, perhaps when other congregation records are provided, the elders will provide you with background information that will help you have a complete view of the qualifications of the brother(s) being recommended for appointment. Such information would include letters of recommendation (or perhaps letters of introduction) from a previous congregation. During the week, you should make an effort to observe those whom the elders are recommending. (tg chap. 20 par. 2) During the meeting with the elders later in the week, you should discuss the Scriptural qualifications of each brother recommended.—tg chap. 20 par. 1; ks10 chap. 3 pars. 1-10.

5. Along with this letter, we have provided a checklist to assist you in considering the qualifications of brothers being recommended. The checklist should not be read word-for-word to the elders, since a variety of scenarios are described and not all will apply. Neither should copies of the checklist be given to the elders. If you determine that the brother does not measure up to the Scriptural requirements to a reasonable degree, you will advise the elders accordingly and inform them how they can help the brother to qualify in the future.

6. When you decide to appoint a brother, you and another elder will meet with the brother to inform him of his appointment. If the brother is (1) being appointed for the first time as a ministerial servant or (2) being reappointed as an elder or a ministerial servant for reasons other than his move from one congregation to another, you should ask the following questions: "Is there anything from your past, even before baptism, or in your personal or family life that disqualifies you or that would prevent you from accepting this appointment? Is there any reason why your appointment should not be announced to the congregation? Have you ever been involved at any time in the past with child sexual molestation?" (This revises the direction in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 3, paragraph 13.) If the brother answers no to the questions, you should provide the elders with a signed appointment letter that includes the brother's name in the list of those appointed during the visit. (See paragraph 21.) You should inform the Service Department of the appointment using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form. (See paragraph 23.) The appointment will be announced to the congregation at the next Service Meeting.[1]

7. If the brother approved for appointment is not present at the conclusion of the visit and it is necessary to ask him the three questions mentioned in paragraph 6, you should not include the brother's name in the appointment letter, if any, left with the elders at the end of the visit. Rather, when the brother returns, the coordinator of the body of elders will assign two elders to ask the brother the three questions. The coordinator of the body of elders will then inform you of the brother's answers. If the brother answers no to the questions, you should provide the elders with a signed appointment letter. (See paragraph 21.) At the Service Meeting following the receipt of the appointment letter, the brother's appointment will be announced to the congregation.[1]

8. If the brother approved for appointment is not present at the conclusion of the visit but it is not necessary to ask him the three questions mentioned in paragraph 6, you should include the brother's name in the appointment letter left with the elders at the end of the visit. When the brother returns,

[1] In the states and territories of Australia where an appointed brother is required to obtain a Working With Children Check (WWCC), the procedure outlined in the relevant policy letter for that particular state (as contained in the congregation permanent file of policy letters (S-22) for Australia), will need to be followed before the brother's appointment is announced to the congregation.

two elders will meet with the brother to inform him of his appointment before it is announced to the congregation.[1]

9. Appointments between regular visits to a congregation: When a brother moves into a congregation with a favorable letter of recommendation for reappointment and your next visit is not in the near future, the body of elders may recommend his immediate reappointment. In such cases, the Congregation Service Committee will submit the Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants (S-62) form to you along with a copy of the letter of recommendation from the service committee of his former congregation. (See paragraph 22.) If the recommendation is approved, you should generate an appointment letter to be sent to the new body of elders and inform the Service Department of the appointment using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form. (See paragraphs 21 and 23.) If there are disqualifying factors mentioned or questions raised in the letter of introduction from the brother's former congregation, you may encourage the elders to wait until your next visit to make the recommendation so they have an opportunity to observe the brother for a time.

10. Appointments recommended by the Service Department: At times, the Service Department will assign an appointed elder or ministerial servant, such as a special pioneer or a graduate of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers, to serve in a particular congregation. In such cases, the Service Department will recommend that the brother be appointed in the congregation. Thereafter, you may generate an appointment letter to the new congregation and inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form.—See paragraphs 21 and 23.

11. Appointments of coordinators of the body of elders: You are responsible for the appointment of the coordinator of the body of elders. When needed, this appointment will be made during your regular visit to the congregation. You should review the qualifications mentioned in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 2, paragraph 11, with the body of elders. This should be done early in the week of your visit, preferably on Tuesday evening following the congregation meetings that night. These points should again be reviewed with the elders later in the week when discussing their recommendations with them. The name of the brother appointed as the new coordinator of the body of elders should be listed in the appointment letter with "(CBOE)" appearing after his name.—See paragraph 21.

12. If a temporary adjustment in the coordinator of the body of elders is made apart from your visit, the Congregation Service Committee should immediately notify you, explaining the reason for the change. Whether the change in the coordinator of the body of elders is permanent or temporary, a Coordinator of the Body of Elders/Secretary Change of Address (S-29) form should be sent to the Service Department.

13. Appointments of assembly overseers and assistant assembly overseers: You are responsible for the appointment of assembly overseers and assistant assembly overseers. Although no appointment letters need to be generated, you should inform the Service Department of the appointment by means of the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form.—See paragraph 23.

14. Deletions during a regular visit to a congregation: Recommendations for deletion because of poor judgment not of a judicial nature are best considered during your visit to the congregation. At the start of the visit, the elders will provide any background information that will help you have a complete view of the qualifications of a brother recommended for deletion. During your meeting with the elders later in the week, you should discuss the Scriptural qualifications of the brother. (ks10 chap. 3 pars. 15-24) If you agree with the recommendation, you and another elder should inform the brother of the deletion sometime before the conclusion of the visit. Of course, an elder who attends the meeting to discuss his qualifications will be informed of the decision at that time.

15. If the brother agrees with the decision, you should generate a letter of deletion to be left with the body of elders and inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form. (See paragraphs 21 and 23.) The announcement of the deletion will be made at the next Service Meeting. (ks10 chap. 3 par. 26) If the brother disagrees with your decision, he should be informed of his right to appeal.—See paragraph 20.

16. Deletions between regular visits to a congregation: If serious questions arise concerning a brother's qualifications and your next visit is not in the near future, the body of elders should follow the procedure outlined in the Shepherding textbook, chapter 3, paragraphs 22-24. If after reviewing a brother's qualifications the elders decide to recommend his deletion, the Congregation Service Committee may submit their recommendation to you immediately. Their letter should provide complete details and indicate whether or not the brother agrees with their recommendation. (ks10 chap. 3 par. 25) If you agree with the recommendation and believe it should be processed immediately, you should send a letter of deletion to the body of elders. (See paragraph 21.) Upon receipt of the letter, the coordinator of the body of elders will assign two elders to inform the brother of your decision. If the brother accepts the decision, the announcement will be made at the next Service Meeting. (ks10 chap. 3 par. 26) You should inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form. (See paragraph 23.) If the brother does not accept the decision, he will be informed of his right to appeal, the announcement to the congregation will be held in abeyance, and the coordinator of the body of elders will inform you.—See paragraph 20.

17. If the letter recommending a brother's deletion indicates that the brother disagrees with the elders' recommendation or if the reason for the recommendation is an issue of poor judgment that is not widely known, you may decide to wait until your next visit to consider the matter. In such cases, you should inform the body of elders accordingly. Meanwhile, the brother will continue to serve as an elder or a ministerial servant, and the body of elders will determine what congregation responsibilities he will have in the interim, according to the circumstances.

18. Transfers to another congregation: At the start of each visit, the elders should inform you of any elders or ministerial servants who moved out of the congregation since the last visit. If jw.org still lists the brother as serving in the congregation, you should inform the Service Department by means of the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form. (See paragraph 23.) In such cases, a letter of deletion should not be provided.

19. Resignations, deletions for judicial reasons, and deaths: The Congregation Service Committee will immediately inform you of (1) the deletion of an elder or a ministerial servant because of resignation, judicial reproof, disfellowshipping, or disassociation or (2) the death of an elder or a ministerial servant. You should thereafter inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form. (See paragraph 23.) For deletions resulting from judicial reproof or the resignation of a brother, you should also generate a deletion letter to the body of elders. (See paragraph 21.) No letter of deletion should be sent in cases of disfellowshipping, disassociation, or death.

20. Handling appeals of deletions: If an elder or a ministerial servant disagrees with his deletion and wishes to appeal the decision, he should immediately write a brief letter to the Service Department, with a copy to the body of elders and you, explaining why he disagrees with the deletion. The announcement of deletion will be held in abeyance, and the letter of deletion will be destroyed (if one had been generated). Thereafter, the Service Department will select an experienced circuit overseer who will then rehear the entire matter with you. You should listen to the brother carefully and deal with him kindly and justly. You may consult the Service Department for advice. After you and the other brother hearing the appeal reach a joint decision, there is no further right to appeal. If it is decided that the brother should be deleted, you should generate a letter of deletion to the body of elders and inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form. (See paragraph 23.) Once the body of elders receives the letter of deletion, the announcement of deletion will be made at the next Service Meeting.

21. Letters of appointment and deletion: At the end of this letter, a sample letter of appointment and deletion has been provided. Please note that the letter should include your own circuit letterhead, should be addressed to the body of elders, and should include the names of those being appointed or deleted in the congregation. The original, signed letter will be left with (or sent to) the elders for them to place in the congregation confidential file. The date of the letter will be considered the official date of the appointments and/or deletions noted therein. Please use the wording exactly as shown, which will make it clear that you, in your capacity as an appointed circuit overseer, are making the appointments or deletions.

22. Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants (S-62) form: Beginning August 1, 2014, the Congregation Service Committee should use the Recommendations for Appointment of Elders and Ministerial Servants form to submit to you the names, birth dates, and baptism dates of brothers being recommended for appointment in conjunction with a regular visit. Effective September 1, 2014, this form should also be used to submit recommendations for appointments between visits. Enhancements to jw.org are under way to provide a Web version of the form. In the event that this new Web form is not available by the time it is needed, the service committee should submit this information by means of the PDF version of the form, using the jw.org Inbox feature. The PDF version of the form, containing editable fields, will be posted in the "Forms" section of jw.org in the near future.

23. Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2) form: You should use this form to inform the Service Department of any appointments or deletions you make, whether in conjunction with a regular visit to congregations, between visits, or in conjunction with the formation of a new congregation. Enhancements to jw.org are under way to provide a Web version of the form. In the event that this new Web form is not available by the time it is needed, you should submit this information by means of the PDF version of the form, using the jw.org Inbox feature. The PDF version of the form, containing editable fields, will be posted in the "Forms" section of jw.org in the near future.

24. Substitute circuit overseers: In the event a substitute circuit overseer will serve a congregation, it may still be possible for him to contact you and discuss any recommendation(s) sometime after the meeting with the elders but before the conclusion of the visit. At the conclusion of the visit, the substitute circuit overseer should forward his recommendation(s) and those of the body of elders to you for consideration. You will handle the recommendation(s) as you would other recommendations for appointment or deletion that are received between visits. You should inform the elders that the substitute is not authorized to make appointments or deletions.

CONFIDENTIAL (FC)

25. In due course, Traveling Overseer Guidelines will be updated to reflect the changes described in this letter. It has been decided that substitute circuit overseers will be provided access to Traveling Overseer Guidelines once the revised version is completed. In the meantime, please provide them with a copy of this letter and its attachments. We send our warm Christian love.

CONSIDERATIONS WHEN MAKING APPOINTMENTS AND DELETIONS

(1Ti 3:1-13; Tit 1:5-9; 1Pe 5:2; Jas 3:17, 18)

Before making appointments of elders and ministerial servants, please consider the following, keeping in mind that each brother must "measure up to a reasonable degree" (ks10 3:1-2):

☐ Experience and Maturity
- Sufficient age, life experience, and respect of congregation—tg 20:6-7; km 5/00 8; w89 7/1 29.
- Baptized at least one year—w11 4/15 11 par. 11.
- If baptized many years ago, why only now being recommended?

☐ Family
- Wife and any children living at home good examples—tg 20:2; ks10 3:5; w96 10/15 21 pars. 6-7; w88 3/1 24 par. 5.
- Regular family worship—ks10 3:5.
- Scriptural marriage—ks10 3:8; 12:9-17.
- Separated or unscripturally divorced—ks10 3:9.

☐ Field Service Activity
- Meaningful, zealous share—ks10 3:4; od 56 par. 1.
- Restricted share because of other spiritual obligations or theocratic projects—tg 20:33; see also Index to Letters for Bodies of Elders (S-22).

☐ Tested as to Fitness
- Shows himself to be a spiritual man—ks10 3:3.
- Cares for responsibilities—od 57 par. 1; km 5/00 8.

☐ Viewpoint of Elders
- Recommendation is not unanimous—tg 20:20; ks10 2:8-9.

☐ Past Difficulties
- Reproved within the past three years or reinstated within the past five years—ks10 3:7; w90 9/1 24 par. 5.

Dear Brothers:

1. This letter replaces the letters dated December 1, 1998, October 2, 2001, and September 5, 2007, to all bodies of elders. Those letters should be removed from the congregation permanent file of policy letters and should be destroyed.

2. Appointments: The local elders, rather than the branch office, are responsible for the appointment of regular pioneers. However, as outlined in paragraph 5 below, announcements of such appointments should not be made until the branch office registers the appointments.

3. When a publisher submits an Application for Regular Pioneer Service (S-205), the Congregation Service Committee will obtain comments from the appropriate group overseer and then meet promptly to consider the applicant's qualifications, keeping in mind the following guidelines:

- The information provided by the applicant should be complete and correct, including the applicant's full name (no nicknames), birth date, and baptism date. If the applicant cannot recall his baptism date, the month, day, and year should be estimated.
- The applicant must be baptized for at least a full six months.—od pp. 113-114.
- The applicant must have a reputation for fine Christian conduct inside and outside the congregation, and the fruitage of God's spirit must be evident in his life.—km 8/86 pp. 5-6 par. 22; od pp. 113-114.
- The applicant must be able to follow a practical schedule and spend the required number of hours in field service.—od p. 114.
- Those who discontinue pioneer service must be off the pioneer list a full six months before starting again.
- The applicant must not have been reproved or reinstated within the past year, and all restrictions must have been lifted.

CONFIDENTIAL (RS)

- The applicant should indicate the date he wishes to begin pioneering. No retroactive appointments should be made unless there are significant extenuating circumstances, such as an application that was lost by the elders.
- If the applicant has marked "yes" to the question, "Have you ever engaged in sexual child molestation?" and this is the first time the elders have learned of the abuse, two elders should immediately call the Legal Department for legal advice. Also, please review the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower, pages 26-29, and the February 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower, page 29, along with the most recent direction provided for elders on the subject of child abuse. Thereafter, if the body of elders wishes to appoint the individual as a regular pioneer, they should assign two elders to call the Service Department before announcing the appointment.

4. Once the service committee has decided whether or not to appoint the applicant, the entire body of elders should be updated on how matters were handled. This should be done before any announcement of appointment is made to the congregation. If the service committee agrees that the applicant is not qualified to serve as a regular pioneer, they should explain their reasons to the applicant. (km 8/86 p. 6 pars. 24-26) If the service committee agrees to appoint the applicant as a regular pioneer, they should sign the application and enter it on jw.org as described in paragraph 5. The original application should be kept in the congregation file. Applications should not be sent to the branch office unless specific instructions are given to do so.

5. The secretary (or other brother who has been granted the "Enter Member Information" role and who has been assigned to assist him in using jw.org) should enter information from the approved application into the appropriate section of jw.org. (After logging in, click on "Help" [at the top right of the screen] to get detailed instructions for using the site and entering pioneer information.) After the information has been submitted, the new pioneer's name will be listed under the section "Appointed Pioneers Not Yet Registered." The secretary should check the site every few days until the pioneer's name is listed under the section "Regular Pioneers." Thereafter, the elders should print out the new regular pioneer welcome letter (S-236), found under the "Documents" tab in the "Forms" section, and provide a copy to the new pioneer informing him of the appointment. It is not necessary to transfer the pioneer's identification number to the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card. An announcement should be made to the congregation at the next Service Meeting that the publisher has been appointed as a regular pioneer. Please do not announce to the congregation the appointment of the regular pioneer until his name is listed under the section "Regular Pioneers," thus indicating that the appointment has been registered by the branch office.

6. Deletions: Before deleting an individual as a regular pioneer because of a pioneer's inability to meet the hour requirement, the Congregation Service Committee should obtain comments from the appropriate group overseer. They should also consider whether the pioneer may qualify for special consideration. (See paragraphs 17-21.) The entire body of elders should be updated on how matters were handled before any announcement is made to the congregation. If consideration must be given to deleting a regular pioneer because he may no longer qualify as an exemplary Christian, the final decision in the matter should be agreed upon by the entire body of elders. If it is decided that the pioneer should be deleted, choose the appropriate reason on jw.org. Choose the option "Personal reasons" for discontinuation because of health, family responsibilities, secular work, and so forth. Choose the option "No longer qualifies" for discontinuation because of a poor example, reproof by a judicial committee, disfellowshipping, and so forth.

7. If the pioneer was reproved by a judicial committee, he is automatically disqualified and his deletion should be reported immediately on jw.org. If the deletion is because the pioneer has failed to set a good example and he has not responded to counsel, he should be informed of the decision. Announcements of deletion should read as follows: "This is to inform the congregation that Brother [individual's name] is no longer serving as a regular pioneer."

8. Congregation changes: If a pioneer transfers to another congregation, the secretary of his former congregation should indicate his deletion on jw.org and should show the reason as transferring to another congregation. Type the name of the new congregation or area in the space provided. Include the country if the pioneer is transferring to a congregation outside the branch territory.

9. The secretary of the new congregation should add the pioneer by entering the appropriate information on jw.org as follows:

- If transferring from a congregation in the same branch territory: Click on the appropriate link and enter the pioneer's name and former congregation. Then click "Search."
- If transferring from a congregation in another branch territory: If the pioneer would like to continue serving as a pioneer, enter his information as if he were a newly appointed pioneer. Be sure to complete the section for full-time service history.

10. Changes to pioneer information: Changes to a pioneer's name, birth date, baptism date, marital status, or spouse's name may be made on jw.org. If any other information about the pioneer needs to change, please contact the Service Department.

11. S-202 letters: If you are able to use jw.org, please destroy any S-202 letters in the congregation file after you verify that the pioneer information shown on the site is correct.

12. Those congregations not yet able to use jw.org may continue to send approved Applications for Regular Pioneer Service (S-205) to the branch office so that the appointments may be registered. In this circumstance, please do not announce to the congregation the appointment of the regular pioneer until you receive an S-202 letter indicating that the appointment has been registered. Congregations not yet able to use jw.org may also continue to use the S-202 letter to inform the branch office of a change in a pioneer's personal information or to inform another congregation that a pioneer is transferring to their congregation.

13. Field Service Reports* (S-4): Field Service Reports for regular pioneers should be handled in the same way that publisher reports are handled. Late reports should be added to the total activity for regular pioneers on the following month's report to the branch office.

14. Procedure for extending and posting hour credit: The branch office, its representatives overseeing construction or renovation projects, and Convention Committees may assign regular pioneers to assist with a particular project, for which they may be extended hour credit to help them meet their monthly requirement. Hour credit could also be extended to a regular pioneer when working on his own Kingdom Hall if this is done at the request of the branch office or its representatives overseeing the project. Assembly Hall Committees may, in limited cases, grant hour credit to pioneers for work performed at Assembly Halls.

15. When a pioneer's assistance is authorized, he will keep a record of the hours spent working on the project during the month. He will report this activity to the congregation at the same time he reports his field service activity.

16. Hour credit extended to pioneers should not be included with the field service report submitted to the branch office. Such hour credit should be noted in the "Remarks" column of the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card and should not be included in the "Hours" column.

CONFIDENTIAL (RG)

The figure in the "Hours" column should reflect the actual hours spent by the pioneer in field service. (Some time should be spent in the ministry during each month.) How much credit can a pioneer receive for sharing in theocratic projects? Those properly authorized are given credit to the extent that the total number of hours actually spent in field service plus time spent on special projects does not exceed the monthly goal of 70 hours. No credit will be carried over to any other month.

17. Special consideration: If a regular pioneer reaches at least 800 hours for the year, consideration may be extended to him, rather than removing him as a pioneer. Of course, there may be legitimate reasons why a regular pioneer may not be able to reach even 800 hours for the year.

18. In some situations, pioneers spend more hours in a month on theocratic projects than they can receive hour credit for. Later in the service year, they may need to take a vacation, spend time in secular work, or care for some other pressing issue that precludes their reaching the 70-hour goal for one or more months. They may thus fall short of the 840 hours for the service year. In that circumstance, when the body of elders reviews the activity of the regular pioneers at the end of the service year, they should take into consideration all that such pioneers are doing on behalf of Kingdom interests and grant special consideration to them. A pioneer would not lose his privileges if he has worked extensively on theocratic projects. The elders, being aware of the pioneer's work to support Kingdom interests, will offer warm commendation. A notation can be made on the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card to indicate that special consideration has been granted.

19. Special consideration should also be granted to pioneers who serve in construction oversight or on Hospital Liaison Committees, Disaster Relief Committees, Assembly Hall Committees, or Convention Committees if they fall short of the annual pioneer hour requirement. All such assignments are forms of sacred service. The spirituality, availability, and willing spirit of pioneers allow them to support Kingdom interests in a special way.

20. Infirm regular pioneers: In rare circumstances, a brother or sister may be approved to remain as a pioneer without having a minimum hour requirement. This provision is only for exemplary, longtime pioneers who have a heartfelt desire to serve always as regular pioneers and who feel they would be taking a backward step if they had to discontinue but who are unable to meet the hour requirement because of infirmity. The elders may consider designating such a pioneer as an infirm regular pioneer if he (1) is over 50 years old and (2) has pioneered for at least 15 cumulative years. This decision should be made only after consulting with the circuit overseer regarding the situation. This arrangement is not a provision to allow an individual to care for sick relatives, do added secular work, and so forth. Those who first enter the pioneer service when they are 60 or 70 years old do not come under this arrangement simply because of their age. If an older pioneer who develops health problems is willing to transfer to the publisher ranks, there is no need to give consideration to allowing this brother to serve as an infirm regular pioneer.

21. When the body of elders decides that a pioneer may serve as an infirm regular pioneer, a notation should be made on the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card indicating this status for the pioneer. It is not necessary to notify the branch office of this decision. Two members of the Congregation Service Committee should meet with the pioneer to inform him of this loving provision made in his behalf. Encourage the pioneer to continue exerting himself in his ministry to the extent that his circumstances allow. (Luke 13:24; Col. 3:23, 24) Assure the infirm pioneer that he has the full support of the elders in the congregation and that Jehovah is aware of the sacrifices that the pioneer has made during the pioneer's many years of service.—Heb. 6:10, 11.

22. Pioneers consistently not meeting the regular pioneer hour requirement: Pioneers are expected to meet the hour requirement on a consistent basis. Do not allow an extended period of time to pass before giving attention to a pioneer who is not meeting the hour requirement for reasons other than those mentioned in paragraphs 17-21 of this letter. Be prompt in talking to the pioneer so that you clearly understand why he has not been able to meet the hour requirement. Is it because of health problems, increased family responsibilities, or secular work? Or has he been self-sparing and somewhat disorganized? Are other activities consuming his time and energy? Once you have identified the problem, you will be able to provide assistance as directed in the July 1998 Our Kingdom Ministry insert.

23. After reviewing what is stated in Our Kingdom Ministry, determine whether the problem is temporary (lasting one, two, or three months) or ongoing, one that will not be solved in a short period of time. Of course, additional factors should be taken into consideration before a decision is made. How long has the individual been serving as a full-time minister? What is the age of the pioneer? Can special consideration be extended to the individual? In other words, are there legitimate reasons for the temporary problem that the pioneer has experienced, so that he can be allowed to continue pioneering without making up the lost time? Or might it be better for him to discontinue regular pioneer service until his circumstances change? Discontinuing pioneer service for a time may relieve him of the stress of trying to meet the hour requirement while coping with difficult or adverse circumstances. Be balanced and use good judgment when making such decisions. Consider what course of action will be in the best interests of the individual and, at the same time, will uphold the high standards of regular pioneer service.

24. Once the decision has been made, you should follow through without delay. If you delay in handling matters, further problems may develop. A pioneer may begin to minimize the need to meet the hour requirement. Or he may feel stress, wondering when the elders will recommend his removal. A pioneer may try unrealistically to increase the hours he spends in field service in an attempt to reach the hour requirement, thinking that is the only course to be taken. These situations may cause the pioneer to develop a poor attitude or even health problems. Therefore, the long-term interests of the pioneer are best served when elders promptly handle matters.

25. We know you brothers will use good judgment and discretion when handling matters pertaining to the appointment and deletion of regular pioneers. May Jehovah continue to bless your efforts to render loving assistance to pioneers and the efforts of the pioneers as they share with us in preaching the good news "to the most distant part of the earth." (Acts 1:8) We send our warm Christian love.

Chapter One

Shepherd the Flock of God

A good shepherd will strive to imitate Jehovah and his Son as shepherds by loving the sheep in the following areas:

Feeding the sheep

Leading the sheep

Protecting the sheep

1. Jehovah has entrusted elders with the responsibility to care for his precious sheep that he purchased with the blood of his Son. (Acts 20:28) This is a serious responsibility, but through holy spirit, elders can properly care for the sheep. Not only has Jehovah provided his own example as the Supreme Overseer but he has also sent to the earth his own Son, "the fine shepherd," to leave "a model" for us. (John 10:11; 1 Pet. 2:21, 25) God's written Word is "beneficial for teaching, for reproving, for setting things straight, for disciplining in righteousness." (2 Tim. 3:16) In addition, he gives timely direction through "the faithful and discreet slave." (Matt. 24:45) This publication has been prepared to help elders to "shepherd the flock of God."—1 Pet. 5:2.

2. "Shepherd the Flock of God" has been designed as a handbook for elders to supply vital information that will help them care for congregation matters. This publication is divided into chapters, each pertaining to a particular aspect of your work. Each chapter is numbered, and each paragraph within the chapter is also numbered. Therefore, paragraphs are referred to by chapter and paragraph number. For example, chapter 5, paragraph 10, would be written as

"5:10." All cross-references are by chapter-paragraph notation. Because of efforts to simplify this publication, it does not cover every aspect of our work as elders. At times you may need to consult other publications and letters to the body of elders for detailed information. Be alert to future direction and adjustments so as to stay up-to-date on theocratic direction.

3. As an elder, your ultimate objective is to imitate the Supreme Overseer, Jehovah, and his Son in the way you treat the sheep. (Eph. 5:1) Jehovah sets the example for overseers as a God of love and as the perfect Judge in that he is just at all times and in all of his ways.

Our Loving Overseer

4. Jehovah's love for us is expressed in action. He took the initiative to send his Son to die in our behalf. (John 3:16) He has given us knowledge of the truth and the privilege of being associated with the visible part of his universal organization. (John 6:44; Rev. 7:9, 10) Because of God's love, we enjoy food, clothing, life, a measure of health, and innumerable other blessings. God lovingly considers our limitations. (Ps. 103:14) How many are the expressions of love Jehovah has showered down on us, yet none of us deserve his love! Jehovah's example teaches us how to demonstrate love to others, especially those in the congregation.—1 John 4:19.

5. Our loving Supreme Overseer has also been a Guardian and Protector of his people both physically and spiritually. (Ps. 145:20; Prov. 18:10) Elders should also be guardians and protectors of his people. The basic idea inherent in the Greek word for overseer is protective care. Elders strive to be alert to the needs of individual publishers and families, stepping forward to assist in practical ways when there is a need. (Isa. 32:1, 2) When we imitate Jehovah, the flock in our care is helped to feel secure and content.—1 Thess. 2: 7, 8.

A Lover of Justice and a God of Mercy

6. Jehovah's justice and mercy became evident in the way he handled the rebellion in Eden. Justice prevailed in the judgment he pronounced upon those three unrepentant rebels against his sovereignty. Yet, mercy was also demonstrated when he foretold a deliverer for the unborn offspring of Adam and Eve. (Gen. 3:15) In justice Jehovah has allowed mankind to suffer the due recompense for sin. (Deut. 32:4, 5) But in mercy he has made provision for their redemption and has given them hope of everlasting life. The ransom provision itself satisfies justice—a perfect life for a perfect life. (1 Tim. 2:6) What mercy that provision reflects! It is undeserved kindness to those in desperate need.—John 1:17; Eph. 1:7.

7. Jehovah shows himself to be just and merciful with groups of people as well as with individuals. David was worthy of death because of his sin with Bathsheba, but God extended him great mercy because of his sincere repentance and heartfelt remorse over his conduct. (2 Sam. 12:13; Ps. 51:4, 17) Jehovah extended to natural Israel the opportunity to supply the members of the bride of Christ. But when the required number failed to respond, Jehovah mercifully extended the invitation to the Samaritans and then to people of the nations.—Acts 8:14; 10:45; 15:14; Rom. 11:25.

8. Although elders today cannot read the heart, they must be both just and merciful in their dealings with others. In giving counsel and in judging, elders should hold to God's standard with everyone. What Jehovah expects of elders is revealed at Deuteronomy 1:16, 17; Micah 6:8; and Matthew 5:7. The elders' love for impartiality, justice, and mercy will assist them in keeping the congregation clean and strengthening the faith of the flock.

9. To be an effective elder, you must care for Jehovah's precious sheep in the same way that he does—with loving-kindness, impartiality, and merciful judgment. Jehovah's people and, more important, Jehovah and his Son greatly appreciate your diligent efforts in behalf of the congregation. We pray for Jehovah's blessing to "be with the spirit you show." —2 Tim. 4:22.

Chapter Two

How Elders Work Together as a Body

Demonstrate that you accept Jesus as Head of the congregation

Have productive elders' meetings

Be well-organized to care for the congregation's needs

Pursue peace with one another as spiritual men

1. Jehovah has appointed Jesus Christ as Head of the Christian congregation. (Eph. 1:22, 23) Revelation 1:20 depicts Jesus as holding the anointed elders in his right hand, thus, by extension, indicating that he controls all bodies of elders for the purpose of accomplishing Jehovah's will. (re pp. 28-29, 136) Accepting Jesus as Head of the congregation promotes cooperation and unity on the body. You demonstrate submission to Christ's headship when you do the following:

- Let the Bible be your guide in making decisions. —John 7:16-18.
- Obey direction coming from agencies used by "the faithful and discreet slave," including Branch Committees, traveling overseers, and others appointed by the Governing Body to take the lead.—Matt. 24:45-47; Heb. 13:17.
- Avoid imposing personal viewpoints and opinions or arbitrary rules on the congregation or the body of elders.—1 Cor. 4:6.

- Listen carefully to the expressions of fellow elders.—Rom. 12:10b; Jas. 1:19.
- Deal in a kind and loving manner with each individual in the congregation, including fellow elders, not lording it over them.—Matt. 11:28-30; John 21:15-17; 1 Pet. 5:1-3, 5.
- Pray when a discussion of the body of elders seems to falter.—Jas. 1:5.

Elders' Meetings

2. The body of elders is a Scriptural entity. (Acts 14:23; 20:17; Titus 1:5; compare 1 Cor. 12:19, 20) When the body of elders discusses a matter, Christ, by means of the holy spirit, can influence any elder to make an expression that results in a wise decision, one that may not have been reached if the elders had been consulted individually.—Acts 15:6-21.

3. When to hold elders' meetings: Normally the body of elders holds four meetings a year. In addition to the two meetings held in conjunction with the visits of the circuit overseer, they should schedule another meeting about three months after each visit. The body of elders can arrange other meetings any time that circumstances necessitate. Limit additional meetings to their purpose and objectives. Endeavor to keep comments succinct and relevant to the matter under consideration. Unnecessary meetings, or unduly lengthy meetings, consume valuable time that the elders can better spend with their families, in the ministry, and in shepherding. (Matt. 24:14; 1 Tim. 3:4; 1 Pet. 5:2) Before compiling an agenda, the coordinator of the body of elders should contact the other elders individually for their input to determine what matters they would like to discuss. The circuit overseer compiles the agenda for the meeting held during his visit. In addition to points he himself puts on the agenda, the circuit overseer should contact the coordinator for any input from the body of elders. Meetings should normally not exceed two hours in length.

4. While it is not wrong for an elder to contact the branch office if he feels the need, it is generally best to discuss matters as a body first. Then, if necessary, write to the branch office. If there is a truly urgent matter requiring assistance from the branch office, it is best for two elders to call together to explain the situation and to make a note of the direction given.

5. Suggested matters to include on the agenda for elders' meetings: Spiritual matters should be of principal concern. (Phil. 1:9-11) Elders can obtain appropriate ideas regarding matters to discuss by considering the counsel found in the letters to Timothy and Titus and in such passages as Acts 20:17-35 and 1 Peter 5:1-11. If necessary, elders can allow time on the agenda for matters of a mechanical, nonspiritual nature. These items would include problems that an individual elder, the Congregation Service Committee, or the operating committee cannot resolve separately. The coordinator of the body of elders should give a copy of the agenda to each elder far enough in advance of the meeting to allow time to do research and to give prayerful thought to what will be discussed.—Prov. 21:5.

6. The coordinator should set the pace of the discussion by sticking to the agenda as much as possible and by keeping the main points to the fore. By concluding each matter before opening another, he can ensure that the meeting flows smoothly. The secretary or another designated elder should take notes of the decisions and indicate who will follow through and the time schedule for completion. In some cases the coordinator may ask the elder recommending an item for the agenda to take the lead in presenting it for discussion.

7. Elders' meetings will be more productive if brothers speak up, using "freeness of speech." (1 Tim.

3:13) The coordinator should avoid dominating the discussion, being careful as to when and how he expresses himself. There should be no wrath or debates evident in elders' meetings. (1 Tim. 2:8) Speak on the points under discussion only when you have something meaningful to add.—Prov. 10:19.

8. It should be possible for bodies of elders to be unanimous in most of their decisions. (Acts 15:25) The body of elders should always base their decisions on Bible principles and written direction from "the faithful and discreet slave." (Matt. 24:45) In cases that do not involve specific Bible laws or where there is no direction from the faithful slave, the body of elders must exercise their collective judgment and conscience. First, have the best interests of the entire congregation in mind, and second, consider what may spiritually assist any individual involved.

9. During the discussion, no one should insist on his personal viewpoint. If a decision is not unanimous, the minority should give willing support to the final decision. If in the opinion of the minority a Bible-based decision still has not been reached, the minority should continue to cooperate with the rest of the body and bring the matter to the attention of the circuit overseer during his regular visit. If the matter is urgent, write to the branch office.

How the Body of Elders Is Organized

10. The body should be well-organized to care for the needs of the congregation. All the elders should know their respective responsibilities. Just as individual members of the human body carry out certain functions without direct participation by other body members, individual elders have certain latitude to make decisions so as to carry out their respective responsibilities. (1 Cor. 12:12-31) Certain essential assignments in each congregation are outlined below.

He must be less than 80 years of age.

Coordinator of the Body of Elders

11. The coordinator should be, if possible, one who has loyally served with the organization for many years. The congregation should respect him for his hard work in the ministry and for his efforts as a shepherd in behalf of the congregation. (Acts 20:24, 31) He should be a good organizer and care for his responsibilities in real earnest. (Rom. 12:8) He should possess genuine humility and appreciate his fellow elders and the value of a multitude of counselors. (Prov. 15:22; Phil. 2:3, 4; Jas. 4:10) He should care about people, loving them and being interested in their spiritual welfare. (John 13:34, 35; 15:13; 1 Pet. 5: 2, 3) He should have the respect and cooperation of the congregation and his fellow elders on the body. He must be a spiritual man and should be approachable.

12. The coordinator's duties include the following:

- Serves as chairman of meetings of the body of elders.
- He or another elder contacts the group overseers to determine the situation of each household when a disaster occurs. (km 2/97 p. 7) Notifies circuit overseer of results when compiled.
- Directly oversees the attendant, sound, and stage departments. Another elder may assist.
- Receives congregation mail, and passes it along to the secretary for circulation and filing.
- Compiles Scriptural and practical agendas outlining points for discussion at regular elders' meetings throughout the year.

- Distinguishes between items that individual elders can handle and those needing attention by the entire body of elders, so as to avoid unnecessarily taking the time of the entire body.—w96 1/15 p. 18 pars. 13-14.
- Makes sure that there is appropriate follow-through on decisions made by elders.
- Assigns Service Meeting parts. He may ask other elders to assist.
- Supervises the assigning of approved conductors and readers for the Congregation Bible Study.
- Arranges for public Bible discourses. Another elder or a well-qualified ministerial servant may assist.
- Approves all announcements made to the congregation, especially those of a judicial nature.
- Takes the lead in caring for details in preparation for the circuit overseer's visit.
- Serves as chairman of the Congregation Service Committee when considering regular or auxiliary pioneer applications, unassigned territory applications, or similar matters as required by the branch office.
- Calls a meeting of the body of elders when judicial matters arise if he is present when a matter comes to light.
- Arranges for two elders (a member of the Congregation Service Committee and usually the group overseer) to meet with each person desiring to become a new publisher.
- Along with the service overseer, determines whether it is advisable for another publisher to conduct a Bible study with the child of a Christian parent.—km 11/03 p. 3.
- Arranges for elders to review questions with baptismal candidates. If the assigned elder needs to take someone along when meeting with a sister, another elder should be used. However, if needed, a capable ministerial servant may accompany the assigned elder to review the questions in "Part I—Elementary Bible Teachings" and "Part III—Jehovah's Arrangement of Things." If the congregation has very few elders, capable ministerial servants who have demonstrated good judgment and discernment may be assigned to review the questions in "Part I—Elementary Bible Teachings" and "Part III—Jehovah's Arrangement of Things." If the assigned ministerial servant needs to take someone along when meeting with a sister, another capable ministerial servant should be used. In all cases, only elders should be assigned to consider "Part II—Jehovah's Righteous Requirements."

- Arranges for two elders, one of them being the individual's group overseer, to meet with each baptized publisher one year following baptism to provide encouragement and helpful suggestions.
- Arranges for quarterly audit of congregation accounts.
- Authorizes payment of all normal operating expenses of the congregation.
- Approves the items placed on the congregation information board.—km 1/89 p. 7.

~~13. When needed, at the conclusion of his regular visit, the circuit overseer will submit a recommendation to the branch office for appointment of the coordinator of the body of elders. If a temporary adjustment is made apart from the circuit overseer's visit, the body of elders should immediately notify the branch office in a letter, signed by the Congregation Service Committee, explaining the reason for the change. A Coordinator of the Body of Elders/Secretary~~

See July 13, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants.

~~Change of Address (S-29) form should accompany the letter.~~

14. If the coordinator will be away for a time, the body of elders should select one from among their number to act as a replacement during the absence. Mail and correspondence will be handled by the replacement during the time of absence.

Congregation Secretary

15. The body of elders selects the secretary and notifies the branch office by means of the Coordinator of the Body of Elders/Secretary Change of Address (S-29) form. The secretary should have good organizational ability and be known as one who does not procrastinate. (Rom. 12:11) He should have the ability to write in a way that is clear and understandable. If necessary, the body of elders may select an elder to assist him or a capable ministerial servant to assist in caring for some routine matters.

16. The secretary's duties include the following:

- Maintains the congregation records, including correspondence from the branch office, in an orderly way.
- Keeps congregation records, including Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards, in an accessible but secure place (at the Kingdom Hall if possible) for use by any elder when the need arises. Although the secretary is primarily responsible for the organization of the congregation's file, each elder may be provided with a key to the file. Every elder should have access to the Congregation's Publisher Record cards, letters from the branch office, and other common records. Only elders directly handling a matter should open and view sealed confidential judicial records.
- Files sealed envelopes containing confidential records on disciplinary cases, including reports

This bullet point reflects updates provided in the September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders with regard to keys to the congregation file.

made by the judicial committees. Information concerning an individual accused of child molestation, proved or otherwise, should be placed in congregation's confidential file and marked "Do Not Destroy" and kept indefinitely.

- Directly oversees those caring for accounts.
- Circulates among the elders photocopies of all letters from the branch office and traveling overseers, and files the originals for reference.
- Keeps records concerning Kingdom Hall ownership, loans, insurance, deeds, and other matters.
- Keeps a list of business items that elders or the congregation must handle in the future, such as utility bills, tax matters, and government items, and checks to be certain these are cared for on time.
- Notifies coordinator when a publisher has been baptized one year.
- Oversees district convention matters.
- Along with service overseer, takes the lead in organizing efforts to care for inactive ones.—See 4:12, 15.
- Compiles field service reports. Keeps Congregation's Publisher Record cards up-to-date. Promptly informs group overseers regarding publishers in their group who did not report time for the month.
- Transmits monthly reports promptly; sends communications prepared by other brothers as needed.
- Keeps body of elders informed of any problems that the pioneers are experiencing. With service overseer, reviews the activity of regular pioneers near midpoint of service year so that any having difficulty meeting the hour requirement can be given assistance.

See November 17, 2010, letter to all bodies of elders regarding letters of introduction.

- Promptly sends Congregation's Publisher Record card and a letter of introduction signed by the Congregation Service Committee to the congregation to which a publisher moves, without waiting for a formal request from the new congregation. If necessary, initiates correspondence requesting such when a publisher moves into his congregation.
- Ensures that there is an adequate supply of Report of Meeting Attendance (S-3) forms for use by the attendants.

Service Overseer

17. The service overseer takes a keen interest in the publishers' share in the ministry and their effectiveness. He is enthusiastic about the ministry and motivates others to have a full share. He is skillful in various aspects of the work, capable of training others, and alert to do so.

18. The service overseer's duties include the following:

- Schedules regular visits to all field service groups so that once each month he visits a different group. (In smaller congregations with few groups, he may arrange to visit each one twice during the year.) During his visit, he conducts meetings for field service, works with the group in the field ministry from house to house, and helps publishers with their return visits and Bible studies. Reviews Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards with the group overseer, and checks the arrangements for field service.
- Takes the lead, working with the body of elders, in arranging meetings for field service at convenient times and locations during the day and in the evenings. Arranges for someone to conduct meetings for service, as needed. Organizes witnessing on holidays and during special campaigns.

- If congregation territory is large enough, promotes and monitors the working of personal territories.—km 12/06 p. 8; od pp. 103-104; km 6/81 p. 3.
- Shows genuine interest in the Bible study activity, helping the publishers to conduct effective studies and to direct interest to the organization.
- Directly oversees the work of brothers assigned to handle literature, magazines, and territory. Ensures that there will be sufficient literature for upcoming campaigns. Makes sure there is always a supply of Field Service Reports (S-4), House-to-House Records (S-8), and so forth.—km 7/92 p. 3; km 4/87 p. 4; km 4/86 p. 3.
- Verifies with literature servant quantities of literature to be requested from the branch office.
- Reviews the territory file once a year, making a list of houses where it is not advisable to call. Under his direction, elders will determine whether these householders would accept visits from Jehovah's Witnesses. Elders should adhere to recent direction from the branch office in contacting such ones.
- Presents recommendations to the Congregation Service Committee regarding adjustments of publishers assigned to field service groups.
- He and the coordinator of the body of elders determine together if it is advisable for a publisher to conduct a Bible study with the child of a Christian parent.—km 11/03 p. 3.
- Along with secretary reviews the activity of the regular pioneers near the midpoint of the service year so that any having difficulty meeting the hour requirement can be given assistance.

- Along with the secretary, takes the lead in coordinating efforts to care for inactive ones.—See 4:12, 15.

Congregation Service Committee

19. The Congregation Service Committee works under the direction of the body of elders and consists of the coordinator, the secretary, and the service overseer. This committee can make certain minor decisions that are in harmony with the judgment of the entire body. However, these brothers do not function apart from the body, and their opinions do not carry more weight than those of the other elders.

20. If unusual factors are involved or if the Congregation Service Committee is unsure of the thinking of the body, the entire body of elders should discuss matters and make a decision.

21. The duties of the Congregation Service Committee involve the following:

- Approves use of the Kingdom Hall for weddings and funerals.—km 11/08 p. 3; od pp. 42, 122.
- Assigns publishers to field service groups after consulting with group overseers involved.
- Signs correspondence regarding appointment or deletion of elders, ministerial servants, and pioneers.
- Signs letters of introduction to the elders of a publisher's new congregation.
- Processes applications for auxiliary and regular pioneer work, for Bethel service, and for other special service privileges.
- Approves publishers who have special needs for accommodations for a district convention.—km 12/07 p. 3, par. 6.

- Writes the branch office when a publisher plans to move and wishes to obtain information regarding congregations having a need for assistance.—od pp. 111-112.
- Determines whether to destroy records concerning a person reinstated five years if the judicial committee is unavailable or unqualified. May designate other elders to handle this.
- A member of the service committee is included in the meeting with each Bible student desirous of becoming an unbaptized publisher.—w88 11/15 p. 17.
- A member of the service committee gives direction on conducting a study with an inactive brother or sister who needs temporary spiritual help.—See 4:15; od pp. 85-86.
- If a member of the service committee is absent, another elder may substitute.

Group Overseer

22. The group overseer is responsible to assist all in his assigned group to make spiritual advancement. (1 Tim. 4:15) He should be an alert, caring shepherd and a zealous evangelizer. The entire body of elders chooses group overseers. In view of the importance of this assignment, the body of elders should select those elders most qualified to fulfill all the aspects of this assignment.

23. The responsibilities include the following:

- Takes an active interest in the spirituality of each person in the field service group. Takes note of who is missing during congregation meetings, seeks to determine the reason, and provides needed assistance. Along with his assistant (or another elder or qualified ministerial servant), periodically arranges to visit all in his group to provide encouragement and counsel, concentrating on those who are weak, irregular in meeting attendance or field activity, ill, depressed, or inactive.

- Assists and trains ministerial servants in the group to reach out and qualify for congregation responsibilities. It is best that another elder accompany him when visiting someone in the group having serious problems. However, he may select a qualified ministerial servant to accompany him when visiting publishers to offer encouragement, which will allow the overseer to observe how the servant reasons on matters. The overseer can ask the ministerial servant in advance to be prepared to share a scripture or a thought from a publication, relate an encouraging experience, or offer prayer. Afterward, the overseer reviews with the ministerial servant the reasons the call was handled the way it was.
- Assists each one in the group to have a regular, meaningful, and joyful share in the ministry. If possible, is present for meetings for field service on weekends to take the lead. If he cannot be present, makes sure his group will be cared for, either by his assistant or by another qualified publisher. Periodically reviews with his assistant the record cards of those in his group to determine their strengths and weaknesses in the ministry. (If the assistant is not an elder or a ministerial servant, then the overseer orally shares information with him, noting areas of concern.) Regularly arranges to work in the ministry with each one to provide encouragement and training in all aspects of the work. Assists in the collection of monthly field service reports. Endeavors promptly to obtain late reports for the secretary. Promptly provides assistance if any have not participated for an entire month.

Watchtower Study Conductor

24. Since The Watchtower is the principal means by which the faithful and discreet slave dispenses spiritual food, the conductor chosen by the body of elders should be one of the best teachers on the body. (Jas. 3:1) He should also be one who has "great freeness of speech."—1 Tim. 3:13.

25. The following will help the conductor to carry out this assignment in a way that will enable the congregation to receive the most benefit from the lesson. —w03 9/1 pp. 21-22.

- Presents brief, well-prepared opening remarks for one to one and a half minutes. Highlights the theme and theme scripture, and tries to stimulate interest in the lesson. May do this by calling attention to the subheadings, by mentioning questions in the teaching box, or by raising two or three rhetorical questions answered by the lesson. Demonstrates warmth and enthusiasm.
- Does not comment excessively. Avoids any tendency to summarize or enhance comments from the audience. If the audience fails to comment on an important point, perhaps asking a specific auxiliary question will stimulate the thinking of the audience and prompt an appropriate comment. Should not ask additional questions unnecessarily, as this tends to stifle commenting.
- Concentrates on the theme and main points, and highlights the practical value of the lesson rather than focusing on details. Since much research has been done in producing the lesson, he avoids bringing into the discussion extensive outside theocratic or secular material from personal research.

- Highlights artwork and teaching boxes in the lesson.

See April 22, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding reading scriptures at the Watchtower Study.

- Focuses on the Bible. Encourages the audience to comment on the scriptures in the lesson. Has the designated scriptures read and commented on. However, the paragraphs should be read uninterrupted.
- Encourages as many as possible to participate. Tactfully trains the audience that first answer should be a direct answer to the printed question. After that, audience may comment on cited scriptures, supporting arguments, practical application of the material, and so forth. Encourages individuals to comment in their own words. Calls on only one person at a time. Does not scold the audience if answers are not forthcoming.
- Considers the review box with the congregation.
- Keeps concluding remarks under one and a half minutes.
- Limits the study to no more than 60 minutes, excluding the songs and closing prayer.

Theocratic Ministry School Overseer

26. Since the Theocratic Ministry School trains publishers to present the Kingdom message in a clear and effective way, the body of elders should select a good teacher for this assignment. The body should also choose the auxiliary counselor and any counselors for secondary schools. In congregations that have few elders, qualified ministerial servants may be used as counselors for secondary schools. Instructions regarding the school are found in the book Benefit From Theocratic Ministry School Education and the current schedule.

Pursue Peace With One Another as Spiritual Men

27. Each body of elders is made up of imperfect men with different backgrounds and personalities. If these factors are allowed to cause strained relations, the free flow of Jehovah's spirit can be restricted and the congregation may be adversely affected. (Jas. 3: 16, 18) You must therefore work hard to pursue peace with your fellow elders. (Rom. 12:18; 14:19; 1 Pet. 3:11) The Hebrew word translated "peace" includes the idea of friendship. (it-2 p. 591) Thus, elders should cultivate and maintain friendships with one another, not merely tolerate one another.

28. By pursuing peace, you demonstrate that you are a spiritual man. A spiritual man displays self-sacrificing love and other aspects of the fruitage of God's spirit, such as peace, long-suffering, kindness, mildness, and self-control. (Gal. 5:22, 23) You can demonstrate love by not finding fault with your fellow elders but by accepting their limitations along with their excelling qualities. "Love . . . does not get puffed up, . . . does not look for its own interests, does not become provoked. It does not keep account of the injury. . . . It bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things." (1 Cor. 13:4-7; Matt. 7:1-5) At the same time, you should not hold back from giving fellow elders and their families counsel when needed.—Ps. 141:5; Prov. 27:5.

29. A spiritual man takes the lead in showing honor to his fellow elders. (Rom. 12:10) One way you can do this is by keeping communication open and free, especially if there are differences in background. Younger elders should be respectful of older, more experienced elders on the body and demonstrate patience. (Lev. 19:32) Older elders will not be quick to take offense when younger elders give suggestions or offer counsel.—Job 32:4-6; Eccl. 7:9; Joel 2: 28; 1 Pet. 5:5.

30. A spiritual man develops "the mind of Christ." (1 Cor. 2:16) Jesus was humble even though he was the greatest man who ever lived. (John 13:5, 12-17; Phil. 2:5-8) Humility will enable you to accept counsel. (Prov. 12:15) Even if you feel the counsel was not entirely justified, try to learn from it. (Prov. 17:10) Seek to imitate Jesus when you feel you are being mistreated. "When [Jesus] was being reviled, he did not go reviling in return. When he was suffering, he did not go threatening, but kept on committing himself to the one who judges righteously." (1 Pet. 2:23) Remember that the peace and well-being of the congregation is more important than personal interests. —Rom. 15:1-3; 1 Cor. 10:23, 24.

Chapter Three

Appointment and Deletion of Elders and Ministerial Servants

Closely examine Scriptural qualifications when considering brothers

Be particularly cautious when considering brothers who have had difficulties in the past

When meeting to inform a brother of his appointment, do not be hurried; allow sufficient time

Situations that may raise questions about an appointed man's qualifications

Follow proper procedure when reviewing an appointed man's qualifications

When an appointed brother moves into the congregation

Closely Examine Scriptural Qualifications

1. Before meeting to consider recommending brothers as ministerial servants or elders, individual elders should personally review the inspired qualifications found at 1 Timothy 3:1-13; Titus 1:5-9; 1 Peter 5:2; and James 3:17, 18. (w01 1/15 p. 13 par. 10) Helpful comments on the Scriptural qualifications can be found in chapters 5 and 6 of Organized to Do Jehovah's Will.

2. During the meeting, closely examine the *Scriptural qualifications of brothers who may qualify, and make sure that the brother being considered measures up to a reasonable degree. Pray for God's spirit to guide you. (w01 1/15 p. 14 par. 13) The Governing Body and its representatives rely heavily upon your good judgment and spiritual discernment in making your recommendations.

3. Natural ability does not qualify a brother for appointment. He must be a spiritual man, giving evidence that holy spirit is operating on him. (Gal. 6:1; 2 Tim. 1:14; w01 1/15 p. 14 par. 11) Is he zealous for fine works? (Titus 2:12, 14; 1 Pet. 3:13) Is he a good example in his attendance and participation at congregation meetings? (Heb. 10:24, 25) Does he demonstrate a zeal for the ministry? (Matt. 28:19, 20) Is he a student of the Bible? (1 Tim. 4:15) Does he endeavor to help his family spiritually, regularly studying with his wife and his children living at home? (Eph. 5:29; 6:4) Does he manifest the fruitage of the spirit in his daily life?—Gal. 5:22, 23.

4. The congregation expects elders and ministerial servants to take the lead in the ministry. (od p. 56 par. 1; w91 1/15 pp. 12-13) What is the brother's attitude toward preaching? Is he visible in the ministry? Is he doing all he can in view of his age, health, family obligations, and other theocratic responsibilities? To appoint a brother to a position of responsibility who is not exemplary in the ministry will adversely affect the congregation's zeal for the ministry.

5. Though it is the brother who must measure up to the Scriptural qualifications, you should also consider the spirituality of those in his household. If his wife is baptized, is she a good example? A wife's conduct often reflects favorably or unfavorably upon her husband. (1 Tim. 3:11) If the wife is spiritually weak, he should be doing all that he can to assist her. For instance, is he making Family Worship a priority? He should also have "believing children that [are] not under a charge of debauchery nor unruly." (Titus 1:6; see ks10 3:15.) As a general rule, he should have well-behaved minor children who are "believing." They should either be progressing toward dedication to God or be already baptized as Jehovah's Witnesses. The Scriptural qualification involves having "children in subjection with all seriousness." (1 Tim. 3:4) The conduct of adult children still living in the home also reflects upon him.—w90 9/1 p. 25 par. 7; w88 3/1 p. 24 par. 5.

Cautions Before Recommending Certain Brothers

6. Elders should make sure they have full and complete information regarding the brothers they intend to recommend to the circuit overseer ~~and branch office~~, especially those in the following circumstances.

7. Brother previously reproved or disfellowshipped: When was he reproved or disfellowshipped? What was the offense? In a case of reproof, did the judicial committee make an announcement? If disfellowshipped, what is the date of reinstatement? When were the last restrictions lifted? Was he reproved or disfellowshipped on any other occasions? What convinces you that he has lived down his past wrongdoing and that others now view him as a good example? (w90 9/1 p. 24 par. 5) If the wrongdoing took place in another congregation, have you communicated with the elders there to determine how that congregation views him? Recommending him prematurely tends to minimize the seriousness of wrongdoing in his own eyes and in the eyes of others. It is also disturbing to those who still have his bad course fresh in their memories.

8. Guilty of adultery in the past: It will likely take longer for him to live down his wrong and gain a good reputation. Before discussing his recommendation with the circuit overseer, you should know the answers to the following questions: When did the adultery occur? Was he reproved or disfellowshipped? In a case of reproof, did the judicial committee make an announcement? Did the innocent mate reject him? How do you know this? If he divorced, did he remarry? Did he marry the individual with whom he committed adultery? Is there evidence that he schemed to put away his former mate or that he pressured her to accept a divorce? Did the adultery break up the marriage of the other person? How were others affected by his adultery? Is the innocent mate still alive? Did the innocent mate remarry? What convinces you that he has lived down his past wrongdoing and is now viewed with respect? If the wrongdoing took place in another congregation, correspond with the elders there to get their comments on your recommendation.

9. Separated or unscripturally divorced: Who is primarily to blame for the marital problems? What were the circumstances surrounding the separation or divorce? Who is responsible for the separation or pursued the divorce? Did both sign the decree indicating their agreement? How long ago did it occur? What is the brother doing to try to reconcile? Is his mate unwilling to cooperate with his efforts? If so, why? How is his situation viewed by the congregations involved? How do the elders of the mate's congregation feel about the brother? When separation and divorce are involved, there may be deficiencies on the part of both mates that make it necessary to limit special privileges because neither of them is exemplary.—w88 11/1 p. 21 par. 7.

10. Brothers who served in an appointed position in the past: A clear understanding of the reasons for the previous deletion or resignation is necessary before making a recommendation. With what congregation did he previously serve, and when was he deleted? What were the reasons why he stopped serving? What makes his circumstances different now? What progress has he made since his deletion?

See April 10, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding pornography.

Circuit Overseer

Depending on the length of time since his deletion, if he previously served as an elder and his deletion was not the result of gross wrongdoing, it may not be necessary for him to serve first as a ministerial servant. If the removal took place in another congregation, you will need to correspond with the elders in that congregation for details of the situation and to get their view of his possible reappointment.

Making Recommendations to the ~~Branch Office~~

See July 13, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants.

~~11. The body of elders may recommend a brother as an elder or a ministerial servant on the following occasions:~~

- ~~The circuit overseer visits the congregation. He will submit S-2 forms to the branch office, providing comments on the brother's qualifications and indicating whether the circuit overseer agrees with the recommendation or not, and why.~~
- ~~A brother moves into the congregation with a letter of recommendation to reappoint, and the next visit of the circuit overseer is not in the near future. If the body of elders in the new congregation concurs that the brother qualifies, the Congregation Service Committee may send a letter to the branch office recommending his immediate reappointment. The letter from the new congregation should include the brother's full name, birth date, and baptism date. A copy of the letter of recommendation signed by the service committee from his former congregation must be included. The branch office will not act on the recommendation unless the entire Congregation Service Committee of each congregation signs their respective letter. If the recommendation is approved, an S-52 appointment letter will be sent to the congregation.~~

Appointments Made During the Visit of the Circuit Overseer

~~After You Receive the Response From the Branch Office~~

~~12. When the body of elders receives notice from the branch office of the appointment of a brother as an elder or a ministerial servant, the coordinator should assign two elders to meet with the brother before announcing the appointment. The atmosphere during the discussion should emphasize the seriousness of the matter; the elders should not rush the discussion or handle it in a casual manner.~~

See July 13, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants.

~~13. In every case, the elders must ask the following questions: "Is there anything from your past, even before baptism, or in your personal or family life that disqualifies you or that would prevent you from accepting this appointment? Is there any reason why your appointment should not be announced to the congregation?" If the brother has not previously served as an elder or a ministerial servant, ask the following question: "Have you ever been involved at any time in the past with child sexual molestation?" If he answers yes to any of these questions, do not announce the appointment. Return the S-2 form or S-52 appointment letter to the branch office, and provide a complete explanation as to why the appointment should be annulled. If the brother answers no to these questions and accepts the appointment, the elders might direct his attention to information provided by "the faithful and discreet slave" that will help him fulfill his new privilege of service. Matt. 24:45; od chaps. 5-6.~~

Recommendations Not Approved by the Circuit Overseer

14. If the ~~branch office~~ circuit overseer does not appoint a recommended brother, the elders should endeavor to help him qualify. Two elders may speak with the brother at an appropriate time and discreetly explain what he needs to do to qualify. The elders should ~~neither~~ not inform him that the body of elders recommended him ~~nor read to him from the~~

~~confidential letter received from the branch office that explains why he was not appointed~~. On occasion the ~~branch office~~ will not approve a recommendation so as to allow time for the brother to develop maturity and experience or to live down past conduct. In such cases, there may be no need to discuss matters with the brother.

Situations That May Raise Questions About an Appointed Man's Qualifications

See April 10, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding pornography. See also March 6, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders for direction on considering the qualifications of appointed men in connection with higher education.

15. Members of the brother's household are involved in serious wrongdoing: The brother's qualifications should automatically be reviewed if this occurs. If the brother's wife or children, including adult children living in his home, have serious problems, the body should seek to determine whether the head of the household was negligent. Was he permissive? Was he alert to provide needed direction, anticipating potential problems? Was he conducting a regular family study? Was he giving his family needed time and attention? When he became aware of serious wrongdoing, did he promptly inform the body of elders so that they could properly investigate the matter? Did he shield his family from discipline or try to manipulate the elders' handling of the situation? Does he continue to have the respect and confidence of the congregation as an exemplary family head? If one of his children was guilty of serious sin, are the other children doing well spiritually? If the brother has done all that can reasonably be expected and especially if he has had spiritual success with others in his household, rejection of his fine direction by one family member would not necessarily disqualify him if he continues to have the respect of the congregation.—w88 3/1 p. 24; w78 2/1 pp. 31-32; w72 2/15 p. 126.

16. A disfellowshipped or disassociated family member moves back into the home: This is a decision for the family head, not the body of elders. However, such a decision may cause many problems. If the brother has allowed a disfellowshipped or disassociated family member to move into his home, the body of elders should review his qualifications. Is the disfellowshipped or disassociated individual unable to live on his own, or has he moved back because it is an easier life? Are there valid reasons for allowing him back in the home, or is it primarily so that the Christian family members can resume a measure of association with him? Did the family avoid unnecessary contact with him when he was living outside the home? Is the arrangement temporary or permanent? What is the disfellowshipped or disassociated individual's conduct? What spiritual effect is he having on others in the household, especially siblings? Is the congregation disturbed by the brother's decision? Have a number lost respect for him?—km 8/02 pp. 3-4; w81 9/15 pp. 28-29.

17. Bankruptcy: If an elder or a ministerial servant declares bankruptcy, causing members of the congregation or the community to become upset, the elders should review his qualifications. Did the brother lack self-control in his spending or fail to use reasonable foresight in his business decisions? Does he have a reputation for being honest and responsible? Is he viewed as one who conscientiously tries to pay his debts? Does he feel a moral responsibility to repay canceled debts if former creditors would accept payment? Does he still have the respect of the congregation? Does he continue to have "a fine testimony from people on the outside"?—1 Tim. 3:7; w94 9/15 pp. 30-31; w68 pp. 223-224.

18. Tacit approval of a marriage between a baptized Christian and a person who is not baptized: An appointed man should be loyal to Jehovah's standards, including the Scriptural directive to marry "only in the Lord." (1 Cor. 7:39; 2 Cor. 6:14, 15; Titus 1:8; w04 7/1 p. 31) This directive applies to all Christians, even those who are inactive. Questions about a brother's qualifications would result if he gave tacit approval to a marriage between a baptized Christian and a person who is not baptized. Participating in, supporting, or assisting in the courtship, wedding, or reception implies approval. Questions would also arise if the brother did not get involved personally but allowed his wife or others in his household to do so. If an elder or a ministerial servant displays poor judgment in these areas to a degree that it raises serious questions in the minds of others, he may be Scripturally disqualified from serving.—w02 5/1 p. 17 pars. 13-15; w01 5/15 pp. 20-21 pars. 16-17.

19. If it comes to light or an appointed brother confesses that he has committed a disfellowshipping offense years in the past: The body of elders may determine he can continue to serve if the following is true: The immorality or other serious wrongdoing occurred more than a few years ago, and he is genuinely repentant, recognizing that he should have come forward immediately when he sinned. (Perhaps he has even confessed to his sin, seeking help with his guilty conscience.) He has been serving faithfully for many years, has evidence of God's blessing, and has the respect of the congregation.

See October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding child abuse.

20. If the sin occurred before he was appointed as an elder or a ministerial servant, the elders will need to take into consideration the fact that he should have mentioned this possible impediment to his being qualified when elders interviewed him just prior to announcing his appointment. Moreover, the nature of the sin may reflect greatly on his qualifications to serve. For example, the sin may involve past child abuse, and this would likely disqualify him for many years.—w97 1/1 pp. 26-29; w77 pp. 697-698.

21. If the wrongdoing occurred within the past few years while he was serving as an elder or a ministerial servant, he is disqualified from serving as such, not being "free from accusation." (1 Tim. 3:2, 10; Titus 1: 6, 7) Depending on the circumstances, the situation may also need to be handled by a judicial committee. —See 5:43-44.

Procedure for Reviewing the Qualifications of Appointed Brothers Who Experience Difficulties

22. Do not be quick to recommend deletion unless there is a solid basis for doing so. It may be possible to assist the brother so that he can correct the reasons for disqualification and continue to serve. Has the brother served faithfully for many years? What has he done or failed to do that raises questions? How did he react to counsel? Has he had such difficulties in the past, and how did he then respond to efforts to help? Was his wrongdoing really so serious that it requires restricting his privileges? Possibly he just made a mistake, using poor judgment on an occasion. The congregation in general may still have respect for him and confidence in him as an elder or a ministerial servant. Perhaps the matter is not widely known, if at all. If he realizes his action was unwise, has learned from his mistake, has a good attitude, and wants to improve, it may be that he can continue to serve.

23. If it is necessary to review an elder's qualifications, the body of elders should consider the matter, with the brother in question present, using the following procedure:

- After seeking Jehovah's guidance in prayer, make sure all the facts are presented. Maintain a respectful, orderly atmosphere that is conducive to such a discussion.
- Allow the brother adequate time to express his feelings and to answer any questions. Ask him for his view of the matters being discussed regarding his qualifications.

- Ask the brother to leave the room while the other elders continue their discussion and make a decision on what they will recommend.
- Invite the brother back into the room. If the decision is to recommend his deletion, inform him of this and the Scriptural reasons.
- Give the brother the opportunity to comment on the decision. This allows the elders to hear the brother's defense of himself if he chooses to make a defense. It may be necessary for the brother to leave the room again so that the elders can discuss the matter further before making a final decision.
- ~~If the elders decide to recommend his deletion and the brother disagrees with that recommendation, they should inform him that he may submit a letter stating why he does not agree with the recommendation. His letter should be included with the elders' letter of explanation to the branch office.~~

24. If the qualifications of a ministerial servant are being reviewed, the same basic procedure is followed except that rather than having the brother present during the meeting of the body of elders, it would usually be sufficient for two elders to speak with him in advance to hear him out. If the body of elders decides to recommend his deletion, the two elders would meet with him again to inform him of the decision and the Scriptural reasons and to give him the opportunity to express himself. If he disagrees with the elders' decision, he may submit a letter to the body of elders stating why he does not agree with the recommendation. The elders will consider his letter and determine whether to hold to their decision or not. If the visit of the circuit overseer is close, it would be good to discuss the matter with him.

Recommending Deletions to the ~~Branch Office~~

Circuit Overseer

25. The approval of the ~~branch office~~ is required when deletions of elders and ministerial servants are recommended in the following circumstances:

circuit overseer

- A brother resigns for personal reasons. Two elders should first discuss the matter with him. Why does he wish to resign? Is he Scripturally disqualified? If his personal circumstances hinder him from doing what he would like, can the elders be of any assistance and encouragement? Until his circumstances change, perhaps they can lighten his load for a period of time while he continues to serve. If, after this discussion, he still feels he wants to resign, then the Congregation Service Committee should write the ~~branch office~~ and give sufficient information so that the reasons for resignation are clear. Full details should be provided as to why he chose to relinquish his privilege of service.

circuit overseer

- The elders recommend deletion due to poor judgment not of a judicial nature. In most cases, it is best to consider such matters during the visit of the circuit overseer. However, if serious questions arise concerning a brother's qualifications and the next visit of the circuit overseer is not in the near future, the elders should make their recommendation to the ~~branch office~~. They should supply the following information: What has he done or failed to do that raises questions? What is he doing now, or not doing, that is different from when you recommended him for appointment? Does he agree with the recommendation for his deletion? ~~If he disagrees, he may submit a letter along with the~~

circuit overseer

See July 13, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants.

elders' letter of explanation, stating why he does not accept the recommendation. Meanwhile, he will continue to serve as an elder or a ministerial servant. The body of elders will determine what congregation responsibilities he will have in the interim, according to the circumstances.

See July 13, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants.

26. An announcement of deletion should be made to the congregation only after receiving from the branch office the returned S-2 form or an S-52 letter indicating that the recommendation has been approved. In such a case, the brother should be informed of his deletion before the announcement is made. The announcement should read as follows: "Brother [name of person] is no longer serving as an elder (a ministerial servant)."

See July 13, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants.

27. In addition to the above situations, the branch office should be informed whenever an elder or a ministerial servant is no longer serving for the following reasons:

- Moving or death: The circuit overseer will inform the branch office following his next visit to the congregation. In such cases, an announcement of deletion would not be made to the congregation.
- Disassociation, disfellowshipping, or reproof by a judicial committee: After a judicial charge is clearly established, an announcement of deletion should be made to the congregation at the next Service Meeting without waiting for an acknowledgment from the branch office. The Congregation Service Committee should inform the branch office immediately of the deletion, providing full information about the case. Include the specific judicial offense, the name of any other person involved, any counsel given, and how the wrongdoing became known to the elders. Please ~~also specify the action taken (whether disassociation, disfellowshipping, or judicial reproof, and whether an announcement of reproof was made to the congregation). If one disassociates himself or is disfellowshipped, an announcement to that effect is made to the congregation. If the case is handled just prior to the visit of the circuit overseer, the deletion may be included with his report to the branch office and the details of the case provided in a confidential supplementary letter.~~

send to the Service Department

28. If the coordinator or secretary is being deleted, fill out and ~~include~~ the Coordinator of the Body of Elders/Secretary Change of Address (S-29) form.

~~29. Information concerning the deletion of an elder or a ministerial servant should be retained indefinitely in the congregation's confidential file. This would include S-2 forms and S-52 acknowledgment letters from the branch office and related correspondence. Such background material will be helpful in supplying the branch office with complete details in the event the brother is recommended for reappointment in the future.~~

See July 13, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants.

When an Appointed Brother Moves to Another Congregation

30. The Congregation Service Committee should send a letter of introduction to the elders in the new congregation that plainly states whether the body of elders recommends that he continue to serve. Did he serve in other congregations? What is his total time of serving in an appointed capacity? In what assignments does he have experience? All three members of the Congregation Service Committee should sign the letter of introduction.

31. If any of the elders have serious reservations about the qualifications of an appointed brother who is moving, the body of elders should meet as soon as possible to determine whether they will recommend him for reappointment or not. If they do not recommend him, two or more elders should meet with him before he leaves and clearly explain the reason for the body's decision. The letter of introduction should clearly explain their concerns and the counsel they gave him.

When an Appointed Brother Moves Into the Congregation

32. Elders and ministerial servants who move to a new congregation with a favorable letter of recommendation and who have a favorable recommendation from the elders of the new congregation but who have not yet been reappointed may be used to handle Bible highlights, parts on the Service Meeting, public talks, and so forth, according to their abilities. They may attend a Kingdom Ministry School. In addition, they can be present with the ministerial servants during the meeting the circuit overseer conducts with the appointed servants in the congregation. If the circuit overseer's outline includes additional information for elders only, recommended elders who have not yet been reappointed can remain as this information is discussed. However, they should not be present when recommendations and local congregation needs are considered. If the brother is not recommended for reappointment either by the previous body of elders or by the new body of elders, he would not be eligible to attend the spiritual programs mentioned above. Brothers who served as elders in their former congregation do not function in an official capacity as elders (such as by serving on judicial committees or attending meetings of the body of elders) in their new congregation until they are reappointed.

- If an elder or a ministerial servant regularly moves away to live at a second residence, he should not be appointed in both congregations. One congregation should hold the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card. Each time he leaves, the elders should write a letter to the congregation where he will be temporarily, explaining his circumstances and how he was being used. The elders of the congregation he is visiting can use him to care for duties and responsibilities in the congregation as outlined above. Even if he will be away for more than three months, he should send his field service reports to his home congregation.

Chapter Four

Assisting Those Who Are Weak

Be alert to symptoms of spiritual weakness

Help the weak to adopt and maintain a good spiritual routine

Provide the needed help promptly

1. Elders need to maintain the proper attitude toward assisting others. The apostle Paul referred to an outstanding quality of Jesus when he wrote: "We, though, who are strong ought to bear the weaknesses of those not strong, and not to be pleasing ourselves. . . . For even the Christ did not please himself." (Rom. 15:1-3) Paul told the Ephesian elders: "You must assist those who are weak." (Acts 20:35) Elders should be keenly aware of the need to "speak consolingly to the depressed souls, support the weak, be long-suffering toward all." (1 Thess. 5:14) By doing so, elders imitate the Great Shepherd, Jehovah!—Ps. 23: 1-4.

2. Today, Jehovah is having a loving work done that harmonizes with his ancient promise: "I will search for my sheep and care for them. . . . I will deliver them out of all the places to which they have been scattered . . . In a good pasturage I shall feed them . . . The lost one I shall search for, . . . and the broken one I shall bandage and the ailing one I shall strengthen."—Ezek. 34:11-16.

3. What, though, if your efforts do not seem to be producing good results? Do not give up quickly. Adjusting an imperfect heart can be a delicate and time-consuming endeavor, but it can lead to great satisfaction. (Ps. 103:13, 14; 2 Cor. 13:7-9) Be supportive yet balanced in the amount of time you spend on those with chronic problems.

Symptoms of Spiritual Weakness

4. Alert, loving shepherds will detect symptoms of spiritual unsteadiness in others and then act decisively to help them before the problems escalate into serious sins. (Gal. 6:1, 2) Symptoms of spiritual fatigue include: lack of self-control in eating, drinking, and pursuit of pleasure; a complacent spirit; loss of enthusiasm for the truth, including daily Bible reading and personal study; harboring serious and lingering doubts; neglecting association at congregation meetings; and becoming overly critical of elders and the organization.—w86 1/15 pp. 18-19.

5. Signs of spiritual weakness are usually symptoms of neglecting one or more aspects of a good spiritual routine. Once you recognize signs of spiritual weakness, help the weak one see how he can make improvement. Scriptural shepherding calls can often encourage individuals to identify any spiritual weakness and avoid falling into serious sin. Try to motivate him to take advantage of the following Scriptural provisions to strengthen his faith: prayer for help by holy spirit (Luke 11:13; Gal. 5:22, 23; 1 Pet. 4:7); daily Bible reading and personal study in Christian publications (Ps. 1:1, 2); meditation on Scriptural matters (Ps. 77:12); regular attendance at meetings, assemblies, and conventions (Neh. 8:1-3, 8, 10; Heb. 10:23-25); regular participation in field service (Acts 20:18-21); willingness to accept spiritual help from congregation elders as well as from traveling overseers.—Rom. 1:11, 12; Heb. 13:17.

See February 2, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding shepherding.

Shepherding That Encourages

6. The primary objective of a shepherding call is to impart a spiritual gift, to help make firm, and to have an interchange of encouragement. (Rom. 1:11, 12) An elder may shepherd at the publisher's home, at the Kingdom Hall, while in field service, over the telephone, or on other occasions. The following basic points will assist in making encouraging visits to the homes of publishers.

- Make an appointment: Show consideration by making an appointment. If there is a serious problem you plan to discuss, it would be proper to inform the publisher of this before making the call.
- Prepare: Pray for Jehovah's guidance. Consider the individual's circumstances in determining his spiritual condition. Give thought to what kind of direction, encouragement, or counsel will be most beneficial. When there is a serious problem, arrange for another elder to accompany you. On other calls, you may take a qualified ministerial servant.
- Keep the atmosphere relaxed, loving, and positive: Express genuine concern for the individual's welfare. Give warm commendation for the good things he has done and is doing. Listen carefully. If you perceive that he might have a problem, tactfully draw the person out. Adapt your comments according to the need.
- Use the Bible: God's Word should be the primary source of information because it "exerts power." (Heb. 4:12) Skillful use of it lets Jehovah speak to the heart of the brother or sister.
- Do not stay too long: If an agreed-upon time is established, stick to it. If necessary, set up another visit to continue the discussion.
- Conclude with a prayer: A prayer is appropriate and truly appreciated.—Phil. 4:6, 7.
- Follow up to see if further aid is needed and can be given.

Giving Effective Counsel

7. Giving counsel is not only a privilege but also a weighty responsibility. Be alert to give counsel before bad trends progress too far. (Prov. 27:5, 6) Before proceeding with counsel, give careful thought as to what should be said and how to present the counsel in order to obtain the best results. Your endeavor should be to readjust the person so that he will grow spiritually.—Gal. 6:1.

8. Take sufficient time to listen; get all the facts. (Jas. 1:19; Prov. 18:13) It is essential to get the whole picture if you are to manifest true understanding, insight, and discernment in handling any question or problem.

9. Carefully plan your remarks; weigh your words. Endeavor to express yourself in a loving way. Remember that you are dealing with Jehovah's sheep and they should be treated with tenderness. (Ps. 100:3; w89 9/15 p. 19) Generally, it is beneficial to preface exhortation with specific, sincere commendation.

10. Carefully base what you say on the Bible and on Bible-based publications. (Ps. 119:105) Rather than expressing your personal opinion, let the Bible shape your view of what needs to be said. Endeavor to reach the heart, not just the mind.

11. In sensitive areas, such as dress and grooming and entertainment, it may be wise to seek the observations of another elder before providing counsel. This will ensure that your counsel is solidly based on God's Word and is not simply your personal opinion or preference. (Eccl. 7:16) If the counsel is appropriate, then you should speak to the individual without delay.

Assisting Those Who Are Inactive

12. The service overseer, along with the secretary, should be alert to assign each inactive publisher in the territory to a group overseer. The group overseer should then endeavor to provide needed help, either personally or through another qualified elder in the group. Depending on the circumstances, group servants or assistants may accompany an elder when he visits an inactive one.

13. The principal objective of a visit is to help inactive ones appreciate that Jehovah cares for them. The shepherds should endeavor to be warm and upbuilding. They might share a few encouraging Scriptural points from chapter 24 of Draw Close to Jehovah or from the article "You Are Precious in God's Eyes!," which appeared in the April 1, 1995, Watchtower, pages 10-15, or from The Watchtower of November 15, 2008, pages 8-16. Other material may be used, according to the needs and circumstances of the person.

14. When an inactive person has been involved in serious wrongdoing and now desires to return to the congregation, the shepherds need to reflect Jehovah's endearing quality of love. If the person acknowledges that he has sinned against Jehovah and he demonstrates genuine repentance, the shepherds will help him to appreciate that he can receive Jehovah's forgiveness. Loving discipline may be required.—Heb. 12:7-11; see The Watchtower of November 15, 2008, pages 14-15, paragraphs 12-13.

15. A Bible study may be helpful in some cases when an inactive publisher wishes to resume activity with the congregation. The group overseer may discuss this with the service overseer, who will then consult with the other members of the service committee. If the service committee arranges for a Bible study, they should consider who is best suited to conduct the study, weighing the circumstances that are involved. They should also determine what material should be used. With inactive ones who have a good knowledge of Bible truth but who have been sidetracked from Christian activities, a study of section 4 of Draw Close to Jehovah may help them to rekindle their love for Jehovah.—od pp. 85-86.

16. If the person has been inactive for only a short time, a helping hand from an experienced publisher might be all that is needed to reactivate the individual in the field service. A Bible study may not be necessary.

17. Before a longtime inactive one is invited to share again in the ministry, two elders should meet with him to see if he meets the basic requirements to serve as a publisher, as outlined on pages 79-81 of Organized to Do Jehovah's Will.—km 11/00 "Question Box."

Assisting Those With Marital Problems

18. The way married people discharge their marital responsibilities affects their relationship with Jehovah. (1 Pet. 3:7) In addition, a marriage can either bring honor to Jehovah and the congregation or cause reproach. Therefore, if fellow Christians experience marital difficulties resulting in one or both parties approaching the elders to seek help, the elders should try to provide loving counsel from the Scriptures and practical suggestions from Christian publications. Usually it is best to have both mates present. If only one is present, discuss only what he or she can do to improve the situation.

19. Elders should be modest as they try to provide help. Because they cannot know everything that occurs in a marriage, they should avoid taking sides. (Prov. 18:13) Likely both mates could make improvement and must share the blame for their marital problems. (Rom. 3:23; Jas. 3:2) Jehovah has not given elders the authority to make marital decisions for others. (2 Cor. 1:24; Gal. 6:5; w88 11/1 p. 21) Though the elders can offer assistance, it is up to the couple to decide how they will handle their marital affairs.

20. If a Christian is contemplating separation, the elders can point out what the Scriptures say. (1 Cor. 7:10, 11) They can explain that there are a few exceptional situations that some have viewed as a basis for separation. (lv pp. 219-221; w88 11/1 pp. 22-25) If the Christian is considering obtaining a divorce, the elders should explain that divorce does not free him to remarry unless adultery occurs. (Matt. 19:9) In addition, the extreme step of divorce may make it more difficult to reconcile. Elders should not encourage separation or divorce; neither should they forbid it. Separation and divorce are personal matters, and each Christian will have to accept the consequences for his decision. (Gal. 6:7) However, the elders may determine that a publisher's decisions in this area disqualify him or her from receiving special privileges normally given to those viewed as exemplary.

Encouraging Those Who Were Abused in Their Childhood

21. Those who as children were abused, sexually or otherwise, many times grow up to be adults with emotional scars. They are in need of much loving attention. Thus, you will want to be conscious of treating such ones with thoughtfulness, tenderness, and kindness. Such an attitude helps to assure them that you really care for them and that you are "like a hiding place from the wind and a place of concealment from the rainstorm." (Isa. 32:2) Like God, we should be "tenderly compassionate." (Eph. 4:32) When offering encouragement to such ones, select from the body of elders those elders best qualified to give the needed assistance. Remember that elders have varied abilities; some may be more effective than others in handling these cases.—1 Cor. 12:4.

22. It must be recognized that elders as such are not mental-health professionals or therapists but are spiritual shepherds. (1 Pet. 5:2) Consequently, you should not conduct sessions for what some may view as group therapy. It is not necessary to spend time reading secular publications dealing with worldly psychology or psychiatry. You should not take on a role similar to that of a professional therapist. Someone who has serious mental or emotional illness may need professional help.—w88 10/15 p. 27.

23. One way you can show sincere interest is by being a good listener. (Prov. 21:13; Jas. 1:19) The October 1, 1983, issue of The Watchtower, on page 28, cautions against telling a sufferer who seeks assistance just to forget what occurred. Many have found great relief simply in talking with a sympathetic, nonjudgmental elder who can provide "the good word" of encouragement. (Prov. 12:25) God's Word has healing power. Jehovah can heal "brokenhearted ones." (Ps. 30:2; 147:3) Though you may need to ask tactful questions to help an afflicted one express himself, avoid probing unnecessarily or repeatedly into the details of the abuse, which can have a negative effect. After patiently listening, apply the soothing oil of God's Word. (Jas. 5:13-15) 'The peace of God excels all thought,' including disquieting thoughts.—Phil. 4:7; Ps. 94:19; w95 1/1 p. 9 pars. 18-20; g91 10/8 pp. 3-11.

24. Sometimes a sister who suffered abuse as a child may approach a capable older sister for help. It is understood that a sister would not get involved in matters that need the attention of the elders. She can, however, give such a sister emotional support and encouragement as her circumstances and time allow. (w90 3/15 p. 28) If the elders are aware that a sister is offering such help, they should check with her from time to time as to the progress being made.

25. There are times when an emotionally distressed Christian may seek professional help. Whether a Christian or his family pursues treatment from psychiatrists, psychologists, or therapists is a personal decision. An elder should not assume the responsibility of recommending a specific practitioner or facility. He may draw attention to or discuss material in the publications that provides cautions regarding therapies that may conflict with Bible principles. (w88 10/15 pp. 28-29; w82 6/15 pp. 25-29; w75 pp. 255-256) While participating in group therapy by a professional therapist is a matter for personal decision, there could be a revealing of confidential facts about other members of the Christian congregation during such sessions if a Christian does not exercise discretion.

26. Elders must recognize that the time they can spend in helping those who are disturbed emotionally is limited. Therefore, they must balance this shepherding responsibility with all their other responsibilities, which include caring for the spiritual, emotional, and material needs of their own family and assisting all in the congregation. In some cases an abuse victim may ask for more attention than you can give. Elders need to maintain soundness of mind. (1 Pet. 4:7) Some elders have found it beneficial to place limits on the time they spend in shepherding. It may take several visits to get the desired relief for the victim, if this is possible. If the individual approaches you looking for help at times when you cannot discuss the problem extensively, perhaps giving some brief words of encouragement, assuring that one of Jehovah's love, reading an appropriate scripture, or offering a short prayer will affirm to the sufferer your interest and willingness to help to the extent possible. Also, discussing Biblical examples of some who had to endure a terrible childhood and yet succeeded in becoming faithful servants of Jehovah can help sufferers see that they need not be permanent victims of a bad family life.—w01 4/15 pp. 25-28.

Cautions Regarding Assisting Sisters

27. Elders and ministerial servants must never meet alone with a sister not closely related to them and should avoid becoming the sole confidant of an individual of the opposite sex who is experiencing marital problems. This includes lengthy phone conversations. Of course, this does not mean that it would be inappropriate for an elder to talk with a sister while in the full view of others at her home, at congregation meetings, or in the field service.—w06 9/15 p. 26 par. 7.

28. It is important never to meet alone with a sister who is a victim of abuse, suffers from depression, or for any other reason is in a delicate emotional state. A woman in such an emotional state may be more vulnerable and may be prone to develop improper feelings toward an elder meeting with her. So that this does not occur, it is the course of wisdom to have different pairs of elders involved in shepherding such a sister. This would serve as a protection for the elders, as well as for the sister, because it is possible for an elder to develop improper feelings for a sister he is comforting or counseling. —Jer. 17:9.

Chapter Five

Determining Whether a Judicial Committee Should Be Formed

Act promptly upon receiving a report of serious wrongdoing

Is the alleged offense serious?

Has the wrongdoing been established?

Are there other factors to be considered?

1. Elders should act promptly when they receive a report of serious wrongdoing so as to safeguard the congregation and provide assistance to the wrongdoer. (Jude 4) Neglecting to care for such matters can hinder the flow of Jehovah's holy spirit to the congregation. Elders must first assess whether the alleged wrongdoing, if established, is serious enough to require a judicial committee.

Offenses Requiring Judicial Decisions

2. Listed below are offenses that may require review by a judicial committee. Of course, this list is not comprehensive. There may be other matters that would also merit the attention of a judicial committee. The elders must use good judgment and reasonableness when evaluating the seriousness of the alleged wrongdoing. They should consider the extent and nature of the misconduct, intent and motive, frequency or practice, and so forth. If there is a question about whether certain wrongdoing merits judicial action, the body of elders may write to the branch office requesting further direction concerning the case.

3. Manslaughter: Aside from deliberate murder, bloodguilt may be incurred if a person causes loss of life through carelessness or because of violating a traffic law or other safety law of Caesar. The elders should investigate and if warranted appoint a judicial committee to hear the matter. The committee should base its decision on clearly established facts, not simply on a decision that may have been made by secular authorities.—Deut. 22:8; w06 9/15 p. 30.

4. Attempted suicide may be the result of deep despair or major depression. Deal carefully and compassionately with such a person. In most cases a judicial hearing is not required.—Ps. 88:3, 17, 18; Prov. 15: 13; Eccl. 7:7; w90 3/1 pp. 5-9; 3/15 pp. 26-30; g90 9/8 pp. 22-23; w83 8/1 pp. 3-11.

5. Por·nei'a: (Lev. 20:10, 13, 15, 16; Rom. 1:24, 26, 27, 32; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10) Por·nei'a involves immoral use of the genitals, whether in a natural or in a perverted way, with lewd intent. There must have been another party to the immorality—a human of either sex or a beast. Willing participation incurs guilt and requires judicial action. It is not a casual touching of the sex organs but involves the manipulation of the genitals. It includes oral sex, anal sex, and manipulation of the genitals between individuals not married to each other. (lv p. 99; w06 7/15 pp. 29-30; w04 2/15 p. 13; w00 11/1 p. 8 par. 6; w83 6/1 pp. 23-26) Por-nei'a does not require skin-to-skin contact, copulation (as in penetration), or sexual climax.

See March 6, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders for further comments on the definition of porneia.

6. Self-abuse, or masturbation of oneself, is not por·nei'a.

7. One who was raped would not be guilty of por-nei'a. Discernment is needed in considering claims of rape, taking into consideration such factors as the mental disposition of the person, the circumstances that led up to the incident, and any delay in reporting.—w03 2/1 pp. 30-31; it-1 pp. 862-864; w83 3/15 p. 30 ftn.

8. In all cases involving the possibility of por·nei'a, it is the responsibility of the judicial committee to use the Scriptures to weigh carefully the facts in each case. This responsibility is especially serious when it involves the Scriptural freedom to remarry. (Mal. 2: 16a) In situations in which the elders are uncertain or divided on their conclusions, it is best to write the branch office.

9. Brazen conduct, loose conduct: (Gal. 5:19) The Greek word translated "brazen conduct," or "loose conduct," is a·sel'gei·a. Strong's Greek Dictionary uses very forceful terms to define it: "licentiousness; filth[iness], lasciviousness, wantonness." The New Thayer's Greek English Lexicon adds to the list "unbridled lust, . . . outrageousness, shamelessness, insolence." Another lexicon defines a·sel'gei·a as conduct that "violates all bounds of what is socially acceptable." Rather than relating to bad conduct of a somewhat petty or minor nature, "brazen conduct" describes acts that reflect an attitude that betrays disrespect, disregard, or even contempt for divine standards, laws, and authority. Therefore, two elements are involved in brazen conduct: (1) The conduct itself is a serious violation of Jehovah's laws, and (2) the attitude of the wrongdoer toward God's laws is disrespectful, insolent.—w06 7/15 p. 30; w83 3/15 p. 31; w73 pp. 574-576.

10. Though this is not an exhaustive list, brazen conduct may be involved in the following if the wrongdoer has an insolent, contemptuous attitude made evident by a practice of these things:

- Willful, continued, unnecessary association with disfellowshipped nonrelatives despite repeated counsel.—Matt. 18:17b; 1 Cor. 5:11, 13; 2 John 10, 11; w81 9/15 pp. 25-26.

- Child sexual abuse: This would include fondling of breasts, an explicitly immoral proposal, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, indecent exposure, and so forth.
- Continuing to date or pursue a romantic relationship with a person though not legally or Scripturally free to marry, despite repeated counsel and generally after a warning talk to the congregation.—Gal. 5:19; 2 Thess. 3:6, 14, 15.

See October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding child abuse.

11. Evidence (testified to by at least two witnesses) that the accused stayed all night in the same house with a person of the opposite sex (or in the same house with a known homosexual) under improper circumstances.—If questions are raised regarding Scriptural freedom to remarry, see 12:12.

- Elders should use good judgment in assessing the situation before forming a judicial committee. Were the two persons alone together all night? Is there evidence of a romantic relationship? Are there understandable reasons, such as an unexpected emergency, that caused the situation?
- If there are no extenuating circumstances, a judicial committee would be formed on the basis of strong circumstantial evidence of por·nei'a.
- Depending upon the attitude of the accused, there might even be evidence of brazen conduct.

Consider the following examples:

- A married brother spends an inordinate amount of time with his female secretary after work hours but insists there is no romantic interest. His concerned wife informs the elders, who give him strong counsel. Later, when he claims to be leaving overnight for a "business trip," his suspicious wife and a relative follow him to the secretary's home. They observe the secretary invite him inside at 10 p.m. and continue watching all night until he leaves the home at 7 a.m. When the elders speak to him, he admits that he spent the night alone with his secretary, but he denies that he committed adultery. In such a case, the elders have a basis to take judicial action because there is strong circumstantial evidence of por·nei'a and there may be elements of brazen conduct. The innocent mate's conscience may allow her to choose to divorce him and remarry; the elders would not take action against her for making this decision.

Below are examples in which judicial action would likely not be warranted:

- An elderly Christian living alone has a member of the opposite sex move into the home to help care for him. There is no evidence of a romantic attachment or reason to suspect sexual immorality.
- After attending a social gathering at a single sister's home, a brother walks to a train station to catch the train home. After waiting for some time, the brother learns that the last train for the day has already left the station. He walks back to the sister's home, but by the time he arrives, everyone has left and it is quite late. The sister allows him to sleep in the living room while she sleeps in her bedroom.
- A single brother visits a married couple for several days. One night after everyone goes to bed, the husband is called to an emergency at his place of work and does not return until morning. The wife and the single brother are alone in the home all night sleeping in separate bedrooms.

12. The elders cannot apply one rule to every case; each situation has unique circumstances. After two elders have thoroughly investigated, the body of elders should use good judgment in determining whether serious wrongdoing has occurred. If elders are unsure how to proceed, they should consult with the branch office.

13. Gross uncleanness, uncleanness with greediness: (2 Cor. 12:21; Gal. 5:19; Eph. 4:19) Galatians 5:19-21 lists many vices that are not classed as por·nei'a but that could lead to one's being disqualified from God's Kingdom. Among them are uncleanness (Greek, a·ka·thar·si'a). When one practices uncleanness to a gross, or serious, degree, it can be grounds for disfellowshipping from the Christian congregation. Elders should use good judgment in discerning whether the conduct is minor uncleanness that can be handled by counsel or is gross uncleanness that requires the formation of a judicial committee.—w06 7/15 pp. 29-31; w83 3/15 p. 31.

14. Though this is not an exhaustive list, gross uncleanness may be involved in the following:

- Passion-arousing heavy petting or caressing of breasts on numerous occasions between individuals not married to each other. If such conduct occurred on a few isolated occasions, especially between two persons involved in a courtship with the intent to marry, counsel from two elders may suffice to handle such minor uncleanness. The elders should inform the coordinator of the situation. However, if the conduct occurred on numerous occasions and the actions escalated in gravity and frequency, it may constitute gross uncleanness with greediness, requiring judicial action. Their wrongdoing may constitute brazen conduct if they give evidence of a disrespectful, insolent attitude toward God's laws. For example, the individuals may have no honorable intentions of pursuing marriage.

- A practice of engaging in immoral conversations by telephone, in Internet chat rooms, or through similar electronic means can involve obscene speech or gross uncleanness, either of which can be a basis for judicial action. (g00 1/22 pp. 20-21; km 11/99 p. 4) If such conduct occurred on a few isolated occasions, judicial action may not be necessary. Counsel from two elders is sufficient to handle such minor uncleanness. The elders should inform the coordinator of the situation. However, such conduct may escalate in gravity and by frequent repetition become gross uncleanness with greediness requiring judicial action, especially if the individual had been previously counseled.

This bullet point reflects updates provided in the April 10, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding pornography. See that letter for additional information.

- An entrenched practice of viewing, perhaps over a considerable period of time, abhorrent forms of pornography that is sexually degrading. Such pornography may include homosexuality (sex between those of the same gender), group sex, bestiality, sadistic torture, bondage, gang rape, the brutalizing of women, or child pornography. Brazen conduct would be involved if the offender was promoting such material, such as by inviting others to view it, thus giving evidence of a brazen attitude.—w12 3/15 pp. 30-31; w06 7/15 p. 31.
- Misuse of tobacco: Elders should use good judgment in weighing the circumstances and extent of the wrongdoing so as to determine whether a judicial committee should be formed. For example, an elder or two may handle matters by means of counsel if a Christian smoked a few cigarettes in private. The coordinator of the body of elders should be informed. However, a judicial committee is required for a practice of using tobacco. (Mark 15:23; 2 Cor. 7:1; w06 7/15 pp. 30-31) When questions arise, consult with the branch office.

- Extreme physical uncleanness: (Deut. 23:12-14; 2 Cor. 7:1) Every effort should be made to help the offender see the need to keep his body and place of residence physically clean. Before disfellowshipping would be considered, elders would need to be certain that the uncleanness is pronounced and offensive, bringing much reproach upon Jehovah's good name and his people in the community. Appropriate counsel should be given. If this is not heeded, then marking may be necessary. (2 Thess. 3:14) If there is blatant, willful disregard of the counsel given and extremely offensive unclean conditions continue, disfellowshipping action may be necessary.

15. Misuse of addictive drugs: (2 Cor. 7:1; Rev. 21:8, Kingdom Interlinear; 22:15, Int) Please note: the use of addictive drugs under medical supervision, such as for pain management, would not necessarily require judicial review. When questions arise, consult with the branch office.

16. Apostasy: Apostasy is a standing away from true worship, a falling away, defection, rebellion, abandonment. It includes the following:

- Celebrating false religious holidays: (Ex. 32:4-6; Jer. 7:16-19) Not all holidays directly involve false religion and require judicial action.
- Participation in interfaith activities: (2 Cor. 6:14, 15, 17, 18) Apostate acts include bowing before altars and images and sharing in false religious songs and prayers.—Rev. 18:2, 4.
- Deliberately spreading teachings contrary to Bible truth as taught by Jehovah's Witnesses: (Acts 21:21, ftn.; 2 John 7, 9, 10) Any with sincere doubts should be helped. Firm, loving counsel should be given. (2 Tim. 2:16-19, 23-26; Jude 22, 23) If one obstinately is speaking about or deliberately spreading false teachings, this may be or may lead to apostasy. If there is no response after a first and a second admonition, a judicial committee should be formed. —Titus 3:10, 11; w89 10/1 p. 19; w86 4/1 pp. 30-31; w86 3/15 p. 15.

- Causing divisions and promoting sects: This would be deliberate action disrupting the unity of the congregation or undermining the confidence of the brothers in Jehovah's arrangement. It may involve or lead to apostasy.—Rom. 16:17, 18; Titus 3:10, 11; it-2 p. 886.
- Continuing in employment that makes one an accomplice to or a promoter of false worship would subject one to disfellowshipping after being allowed a reasonable amount of time, perhaps up to six months, to make the needed adjustments.—w99 4/15 pp. 28-30; km 9/76 pp. 3-6.
- The practice of spiritism.—Deut. 18:9-13; 1 Cor. 10:21, 22; Gal. 5:20.
- Idolatry: (1 Cor. 6:9, 10; 10:14) Idolatry includes the use of images, including pictures, in false religious worship.

17. Drunkenness: (1 Cor. 5:11; 6:9, 10; it-1 p. 656) A judicial committee is required when there is a practice of drunkenness or a single incident of drunkenness that brings notoriety. (w83 5/1 p. 8) A Scriptural description of drunkenness can be found in the following references: Job 12:25; Psalm 107:27; Proverbs 20:1; 23:29-35; Isaiah 24:20.

18. If an individual confesses to an elder that on one occasion he overindulged in alcohol to the point of drunkenness in the privacy of his own home and there was no notoriety, it may suffice for the elder to give strong counsel. In any case, the elder should inform the coordinator of the matter.

19. Gluttony: (Prov. 23:20, 21; w04 11/1 pp. 30-31) A glutton routinely shows a lack of restraint, even gorging himself on food to the point of feeling very uncomfortable or becoming sick. Gluttony is determined, not by someone's size, but by his attitude toward food.

20. Stealing, thievery: (1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Eph. 4:28; w86 11/15 p. 14) Though all stealing is wrong, the body of elders should use discernment in weighing the circumstances and the extent of the involvement in wrongdoing to determine whether it is a judicial matter.

21. Deliberate, malicious lying; bearing false witness: (Prov. 6:16, 19; Col. 3:9; Rev. 22:15; it-2 pp. 244-245) Though all lying is bad, judicial action is taken only if there has been a practice of deliberate, malicious lying. "Malicious" means deliberately harmful, harboring ill will or enmity. Lying that justifies judicial action involves more than just exaggerations or petty, misleading statements of relatively minor consequence or lying because of momentary pressure or fear of man.—Matt. 26:69-75.

22. Generally, elders should not consider administering discipline if a Christian charges another Christian with making false statements in a court dispute. For example, this may involve divorce, child custody and support, and so forth. The Christian making the charge can express his concerns to the court that has the responsibility to determine what is truthful when rendering a judgment.

23. Fraud, slander: (Lev. 19:16; Matt. 18:15-17; it-1 pp. 870, 989-991; od pp. 147-150; w97 3/15 pp. 17-22) Fraud is defined as "the intentional use of deception, trickery, or perversion of truth for the purpose of inducing another to part with some valuable thing belonging to him or to give up a legal right." (w97 3/15 p. 21) Slander is defined as a false report meant to do harm to the good name and reputation of another. Such talk is generally malicious. Slander is not identical to negative gossip. Negative gossip may be true; slander is always false. Negative gossip requires counsel but not judicial action. (w89 10/15 p. 10; it-1 p. 990 par. 2) The congregation would not consider forming a judicial committee unless the offended Christian had taken steps one and two of Matthew 18:15, 16 and had initiated step three of Matthew 18: 17.—od pp. 147-149.

24. If asked, elders could participate in step two, but they do not represent the body of elders. If the matter proceeds to step three, any elders who were witnesses in step two could serve only as witnesses in step three. They would not be used to serve on the judicial committee in step three.

25. It is not the place of elders to become arbitrators of financial agreements. They are not debt collectors. Nor should they be involved in formulating contracts or written agreements, not even signing as witnesses to such. The same holds true should the matter reach step three.

26. The body of elders may first need to investigate before appointing a judicial committee. If so, the brothers involved in step two would not be used to investigate; they would be interviewed as witnesses.

27. It is not considered slander to make an accusation to the police, the court, the elders, or others who have authority to look into matters and render a judgment. (it-1 p. 990) This is true even if the accusation is not proved.—w97 8/15 p. 28 par. 1.

28. Reviling: (1 Cor. 6:10; it-2 pp. 801-802) Reviling involves "subjecting a person to insulting speech, heaping abuse upon him." (it-2 p. 801) The body of elders should weigh the circumstances and extent of wrongdoing so as to determine whether a judicial committee should be formed. Elders should not be quick to take judicial action unless the reviling is extreme, disrupts the peace of the congregation, and persists despite repeated counsel.

29. Obscene speech: (Eph. 5:3-5; Col. 3:8) Obviously, certain words are more offensive than others. Profanity is any kind of language that profanes. However, obscene speech involves sexually explicit, filthy expressions. (g03 6/8 p. 19-20; w83 2/1 p. 4) Is the speech sexually explicit? Does it persist despite repeated counsel? This would include obscenities used both in written and in oral communication, such as Internet chat rooms, phone sex, or e-mail.

30. Greed—gambling, extortion: (1 Cor. 5:10, 11; 6:10; 1 Tim. 3:8; it-1 pp. 789, 1005-1006; w89 1/15 p. 22) Christians should avoid gambling in all its various forms, including lotteries. (Isa. 65:11; g02 7/22 pp. 4-8; w89 7/15 p. 30; g82 7/8 pp. 25-27; g81 11/22 p. 27) If a person makes a practice of gambling and after repeated counsel unrepentantly pursues a course of greediness, judicial action would be appropriate.—w80 9/1 pp. 29-30; w67 p. 356.

31. An individual continuing in employment directly involved with gambling or employment making him a clear accomplice or promoter of gambling would be subject to judicial action, usually after being allowed time, perhaps up to six months, to make the needed adjustments. (w95 5/15 p. 23 par. 11; km 9/76 pp. 3-6) In questionable cases it is best to consult with the branch office.

32. If a business gives out prizes or prize money to winners of a contest or to potential customers for advertising, accepting the gift is an individual's decision to make. However, a person needs to be careful that accepting such a prize does not stir up greed.

(Rom. 14:21; 1 Cor. 10:31-33; g75 7/8 p. 28; w73 p. 127) The elders do well not to involve themselves in what individuals do with regard to petty gambling solely for entertainment. They may need to give counsel if this becomes a cause of stumbling for others or affects the spirituality of the individual or the congregation.—w02 11/1 p. 31.

33. A Christian who greedily and unrepentantly extorts a high bride-price may be disfellowshipped from the congregation.—1 Cor. 5:11, 13; 6:9, 10; Heb. 13:5; w98 9/15 pp. 24-25.

34. Adamant refusal to provide materially for one's own family, leaving wife and children destitute when having the means to provide: (1 Tim. 5:8; w88 11/1 pp. 22-23; km 9/73 p. 8) Some of the factors the body of elders should consider before forming a judicial committee are:

- Does the Christian adamantly refuse to provide for his family, or is the failure to provide because of other factors, such as health or financial difficulties? Is he doing what he reasonably can do to provide necessities for the family?
- Has counsel been previously given, and has there been an opportunity for the person to respond?
- Does his wife have material resources affording a secure life so that the family is not destitute?
- If the family is destitute, is it because they have rejected the family head's provisions by choosing to live apart from him?
- When a separation is involved, to what extent is the other mate responsible?

35. Fits of anger, violence: (Prov. 22:24, 25; Mal. 2:16; Gal. 5:20; g01 11/8 p. 12; g97 6/8 p. 20; fy p. 150; g93 2/8 p. 14) Judicial action would be warranted if an individual repeatedly and unrepentantly gave in to violent fits of anger despite counsel. In questionable cases it is best to contact the branch office.

36. If a Christian took up professional boxing and refused to stop despite repeated counsel, judicial action would be appropriate.—w81 7/1 pp. 30-31.

Evidence Establishing Wrongdoing

37. Even though a Christian has been accused of wrongdoing serious enough to require judicial action, a judicial committee should not be formed unless the wrongdoing has been *established. What kind of evidence is acceptable?

- Confession (admission of wrongdoing), either written or oral, may be accepted as conclusive proof without other corroborating evidence. (Josh. 7:19) There must be two witnesses to a confession, and the confession must be clear and unambiguous. For example, a statement from a married Christian that his mate is "Scripturally free" would not by itself be viewed as a clear confession of adultery.

  A guilty plea entered in court by a Christian as part of a plea bargain, perhaps on the advice of an attorney so as to avoid the possibility of a harsher sentence, would generally not in itself be viewed as an admission of guilt in the congregation.

- There must be two or three eyewitnesses, not just people repeating hearsay; no action can be taken if there is only one witness.—Deut. 19:15; John 8:17.

- If there are two or three witnesses to the same kind of wrongdoing but each one is witness to a separate incident, the elders can consider their testimony. While such evidence is acceptable to establish guilt, it is preferable to have two witnesses to the same occurrence of wrongdoing.

- The testimony of youths may be considered; it is up to the elders to determine whether the testimony has the ring of truth.
- The testimony of unbelievers and disfellowshipped or disassociated ones may also be considered, but it must be weighed carefully.

38. If wrongdoing has not been established but serious questions have been raised, the body of elders should appoint two elders to investigate the matter promptly. For example, there may be just one witness. If so, it would be loving for the witness first to confront the accused and encourage him to take the initiative to approach the elders. The elders can then allow the accused a few days to approach them. (For the witness by himself to confront the accused may not be advisable in all cases—for example, if the witness and the accused were involved in sexual immorality together or if the witness was a victim of incest or rape by the accused or is a child and the victim of sexual abuse. Or it may be that the witness is extremely timid.) Whether the witness approaches the accused or not, the two elders appointed should speak with the accused regarding the accusation.—w97 8/15 p. 27.

39. If the accused denies the accusation, the investigating elders should try to arrange a meeting with him and the accuser together. (Note: If the accusation involves child sexual abuse and the victim is currently a minor, the elders should contact the branch office before arranging a meeting with the child and the alleged abuser.) If the accuser or the accused is unwilling to meet with the elders or if the accused continues to deny the accusation of a single witness and the wrongdoing is not established, the elders will leave matters in Jehovah's hands. (Deut.

19:15-17; 1 Tim. 5:19, 24, 25; w95 11/1 pp. 28-29) The investigating elders should compose a record, sign it, put it in a sealed envelope, and place it in the congregation's confidential file. Additional evidence may later come to light to establish matters.

See September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders for further direction on filing confidential material.

Those Who Have Not Associated for Many Years

40. In deciding whether to form a judicial committee or not, the body of elders should consider the following:

- Does he still profess to be a Witness?
- Is he generally recognized as a Witness in the congregation or the community?
- Does his conduct continue to affect any other person, such as in some cases of adultery or child abuse?
- Does the person have a measure of contact or association with the congregation so that a leavening, or corrupting, influence exists?
- Is the person willing to meet with a committee, thus admitting accountability to the Christian congregation?

41. Depending upon length of inactivity and other factors suggested above, elders may determine to hold the matter in abeyance. In such a case, they would make a record of the person's questionable conduct for the congregation file. When the individual again shows interest in returning to the congregation, they can clarify these matters.

42. If the sinful conduct is known only to believing family members and no congregation action has been taken, believing relatives will likely determine to curtail family association severely, viewing the relative as bad association.—1 Cor. 15:33; w85 7/15 p. 19 par. 14.

Wrongdoing That Occurred Years in the Past

43. Depending upon the circumstances, the situation may need to be handled by a judicial committee. But if the immorality or other serious wrongdoing occurred more than a few years ago and the individual is genuinely repentant and recognizes that he should have come forward immediately when he sinned, good counsel by elders may be sufficient.

44. The body of elders may appoint two elders to gather the facts. Thereafter, the body would determine whether a judicial committee is needed or not, taking into consideration answers to the following questions:

- Was the wrongdoing in the distant past?
- How widely known is the matter?
- Does the erring one show evidence of spiritual progress as opposed to evidence that progress is being hindered?
- Will counsel be sufficient to restore him, or will more be required for him to have a clean conscience?
- Are there works befitting repentance?
- Did he voluntarily confess, or did the matter come to light by other means?
- How will respect for the body of elders be affected in the congregation?
- If por·nei'a was involved, has a confession been made to the innocent mate?
- To what degree have lives been affected or damaged by the wrongdoing? For example, does the matter involve child abuse or adultery?

45. If the individual is serving as a ministerial servant, elder, or pioneer, his qualifications should be examined. If the body of elders determines that he no longer qualifies, a report should be submitted to the branch office.—See 3:19-21.

Was the Wrongdoer's Baptism Valid?

46. When dealing with wrongdoers, the elders should not raise questions about the validity of the individual's baptism. If the individual raises the issue, the elders may refer him to the February 15, 2010, Watchtower, page 22. Further information on rebaptism can be found in the February 15, 1964, Watchtower, pages 123-126, and the March 1, 1960, Watchtower, pages 159-160. Rebaptism is a personal matter.

47. At times a wrongdoer will claim that his baptism is not valid and that he feels he is not accountable to a judicial committee because he secretly engaged in wrongdoing shortly before he was baptized. If the elders had been aware of his serious wrongdoing committed just before baptism, likely they would not have approved him for baptism. However, this does not necessarily mean that he did not make a valid dedication. Some individuals make a dedication long before the baptism; others have made a dedication shortly before. The elders are not in a position to read the heart and know for a certainty how Jehovah viewed the person at the time he was baptized. If the elders learn that a baptized individual secretly engaged in serious wrongdoing while he was an unbaptized publisher but the wrongdoing ceased before baptism, they should give counsel and encouragement. A judicial committee should not be formed for prebaptism wrongdoing. (1 Cor. 6:9-11) However, if the individual resumed serious wrongdoing after baptism, the elders would generally deal with him on the basis of what he has professed to be, a dedicated and baptized Christian, and would meet with him judicially. Thereafter, if he feels he should be rebaptized, this would be a personal decision. However, a person should not get rebaptized simply because he gains improved understanding or appreciation of the truth or some Scriptural doctrine. —Prov. 4:18.

48. There are rare occasions when it is obvious that the baptism was invalid because serious wrongdoing did not cease before baptism, even for a brief period of time. For example, it may be that at the time of baptism, the individual was living immorally with a member of the opposite or the same sex, was a member of a non-neutral organization, or something similar. If there are questions, the branch office should be consulted.

Which Congregation Should Handle the Matter?

49. Bodies of elders should cooperate if there is a question regarding which congregation should handle a case of wrongdoing. Which congregation has the facts? Which congregation can handle the case most effectively? Jurisdiction should not become an issue.

50. If a wrongdoer moves before a case has been concluded, it is usually best for the elders of the original congregation to follow through if possible and if distance permits. They are acquainted with the person and his circumstances. If he has moved a great distance away, the brothers of the original congregation should not insist on handling matters if the wrongdoer says he is unable to return to the congregation for the hearing. In such a case, it may be advisable to refer matters to the elders of the congregation where he now lives. There should be good communication between the two bodies.

51. If the elders learn that a publisher who is visiting the area for a short period of time is guilty of wrongdoing, they should promptly report the matter to the elders of his congregation.

If Wrongdoing Involves Publishers From Different Congregations

52. If a member of a congregation confesses to wrongdoing that involves a person in another congregation, the elders should promptly pass along what they know to the elders of the other congregation and allow them time to investigate. Does the other individual admit the wrong? Do their accounts match, or are there significant differences? The judicial committees should communicate freely and cooperate in obtaining the facts. There are many advantages to interviewing individuals jointly to ascertain what actually occurred and to clarify discrepancies. (Prov. 18:13, 17) If a joint hearing is held, thereafter the judicial committee of each congregation will withdraw and handle the case of the person from its own congregation. The judicial committee in one congregation should generally not conclude its case before the elders of the other congregation have fully investigated the situation.

Unbaptized Publishers Who Engage in Serious Wrongdoing

53. The elders should promptly handle a case of serious wrongdoing by an unbaptized publisher. While a judicial committee would not be formed, the elders should select two elders to meet with him, perhaps the ones who approved him as an unbaptized publisher. They should try to readjust him and to determine whether he continues to qualify.—od pp. 157-158; w88 11/15 pp. 17-20.

54. The assigned elders may determine to place certain restrictions on the individual for a time, including not commenting at meetings, giving talks on the Theocratic Ministry School, or sharing in the public ministry.

55. If the wrongdoing is widely known or might become widely known later and the wrongdoer is repentant, the two elders should inform the service committee, who will arrange for the following announcement to be made during the Service Meeting: "A matter involving [name of person] has been handled, and he [she] continues to serve as an unbaptized publisher with the congregation."

56. There may be reasons for the body of elders to determine that a Scriptural talk about the sort of wrongdoing involved should be given to the congregation a few weeks after the announcement.

57. If the unbaptized publisher does not respond to the elders' assistance, thus displaying an unrepentant attitude, the two elders should inform him that he no longer qualifies as an unbaptized publisher. Or if he informs the elders that he no longer desires to be a publisher, they will accept his decision. In either case, the elders will have the following announcement made during the Service Meeting: "[Name of person] is no longer recognized as an unbaptized publisher." Because of his unrepentant wrongdoing, it would be best for a time not to call on him if he raises his hand to comment at meetings.

58. If the elders see that such a person is a threat to the flock, they can privately warn those endangered. For example, despite the announcement, the wrongdoer might attempt to socialize with youths in the congregation. In that situation, the elders would speak privately to the parents of the endangered ones and maybe to those youths also.

59. There is no specific arrangement for an appeal or a seven-day waiting period before announcing the decision that one is no longer recognized as an unbaptized publisher. If he expresses dissatisfaction with the conclusion, the body of elders should choose two different elders to review the case.

60. If someone who was previously removed as an unbaptized publisher begins to make progress and wishes once again to share in the ministry, two elders

(perhaps those who met with him earlier) should meet with him to determine his qualifications. If he qualifies, an announcement should be made that he is an unbaptized publisher. There is no need to wait until he reports field service again to make the announcement.

61. If the unbaptized publisher is a minor by law, the two elders should first speak with the Christian parents to discern what occurred, the child's attitude, and the corrective steps that the parents are taking. If the parents have the situation in hand, the two elders may choose not to meet with the minor but will check with the parents from time to time to offer helpful counsel, specific suggestions, and loving encouragement.

62. When an unbaptized publisher is involved in wrongdoing, the two elders assigned to meet with him should prepare a written record of the case. The secretary files this record in the same manner as he files judicial cases.

See September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders for further direction on filing confidential material.

Chapter Six

Preparing for the Judicial Hearing

Select the elders for the judicial committee carefully

Elders are accountable to Jehovah for the judgment they render

Make proper arrangements for the hearing

Selecting the Judicial Committee and Chairman

1. If a judicial committee is needed, the elders who are present at the Kingdom Hall should determine which elders will serve on the committee and which one will be chairman. (See 2:12) The elders chosen should be men of discernment and good judgment. Extensive details of the case do not need to be conveyed to the entire body, but enough information should be presented for the elders to determine whether a disfellowshipping offense has actually been committed and, if so, who is best qualified to handle the particular type of case that has arisen. (km 9/77 pp. 5-6) It is usually best for newer elders to serve first with more experienced ones. They would never serve as observers on a judicial case. However, complex cases may warrant having four or even five experienced elders on the committee.

2. If the elders know that the accused has strong feelings against a particular elder, it would be better not to use him. An elder who is a close relative or has been in business with the accused or has had a special friendship with him would not normally serve on the committee. (km 9/77 p. 6) If there are not enough elders locally to make up the committee, the body of elders may request the assistance of an elder in a neighboring congregation by contacting the body of elders where he serves. In such situations, you may also contact the circuit overseer for recommendations.

Preparing Your Mind and Heart to Judge

3. Serving on a judicial committee is a heavy responsibility. You are judging for Jehovah and are accountable to him for the judgment you render. (2 Chron. 19:6, 7) Your decision will likely have long-lasting and far-reaching consequences for the individual involved, his Christian family members, and others in the congregation. Each time you serve on a judicial committee, you should first review Chapters 5-7 of this publication.

4. Allowing an unrepentant wrongdoer to remain in the congregation could result in a leavening influence. (Gal. 5:9) Failure to remove the individual may also minimize the wrong in the mind of the wrongdoer and in the minds of others who may know of his sin. (Eccl. 8:11) On the other hand, an individual unjustly dealt with may have difficulty recovering his spirituality.—Matt. 18:6.

5. You can render a good judgment with Jehovah's help. (Matt. 18:18-20) Pray for wisdom, discernment, and God's holy spirit. (1 Ki. 3:9; Phil. 1:9, 10; Jas. 1:5) Do careful, thorough research using Bible-based publications, not relying solely on past experience in handling judicial matters. (Prov. 15:28) Endeavor to obtain a clear picture regarding what occurred and what the individual's true attitude is. —Prov. 18:13, 17.

Inviting the Accused to the Judicial Hearing

6. It is best for two elders to invite him orally. Their invitation should include the following information:

- Make clear that the meeting is a judicial hearing.
- Explain what his course of action is alleged to have been.
- State the time and place of the hearing and how the person can contact the chairman if the person is unable to meet at the scheduled time and location.

7. If circumstances permit, hold the hearing at the Kingdom Hall. This theocratic setting will put all in a more respectful frame of mind; it will also help to ensure greater confidentiality for the proceedings.

8. The assigned elders should make every effort to arrange for a judicial hearing right away. Leaving the matter unresolved can harm the congregation and the accused. If the accused does not make himself available to receive an oral invitation despite repeated efforts by the judicial committee, then the judicial committee should send a written invitation. (Do not leave confidential information on an answering machine or voice mail or send by way of e-mail.) A written invitation signed by the judicial committee should include the same information as outlined above for an oral invitation. If possible, send the invitation in such a way that the elders can verify that the addressee received it. If they are unsuccessful in their diligent efforts to invite him and they cannot confirm that he received the invitation, they should hold the matter in abeyance.

9. If he accepts the judicial committee's invitation, yet fails to appear, the judicial committee should reschedule the hearing and endeavor to invite the accused again. If he does not attend after it is confirmed that he received the second invitation and if it is evident that he is unwilling to cooperate with the judicial committee, the committee will proceed with the hearing but will not make a decision until evidence and testimony by witnesses are considered.

10. If the accused makes known to the elders his adamant refusal to meet with a judicial committee, the judicial committee may proceed in his absence without extending further invitations. —See 7:29.

Meeting With Marriage Mates

11. If the accused is a married sister, it is best to have her believing husband present for the hearing. He is her head, and his efforts to restore her and direct her can be very helpful. (1 Cor. 11:3) If unusual circumstances are involved or the elders feel it would be best not to invite the husband because of their concerns for the safety of the wife, the elders should call the branch office.

12. If the accused is a married brother, his wife would normally not attend the hearing. However, if the husband wants his wife to be present, she may attend a portion of the hearing. The judicial committee should maintain confidentiality.

13. If the husband committed adultery, he has an obligation to inform his wife of the facts. The judicial committee should promptly inquire of the Christian wife as to what her husband has told her. If he refuses to inform her of his adultery, the elders should inform her that because of her husband's conduct, it is up to her to decide whether to pursue a Scriptural divorce or not. Furthermore, they should inform the innocent mate that her resuming sexual relations with the guilty mate would negate any claim to Scriptural freedom. But they should not give her further details. On the other hand, the elders may find that while the husband did confess adultery to his wife, he did not tell her the full extent of his wrong conduct and left out important information that the wife should know. The elders should not provide this confidential information to the wife, but they can suggest that she speak with her husband again. Even if he does not tell her anything more, this will alert her to the fact that he is withholding information from her, and this may help her to determine whether to forgive or not.

Meeting With Baptized Minors

14. It is best to meet with the youth and his Christian parents, since they have the responsibility to raise and train him. If the accused is living in the home of his believing parents but is no longer a minor, the elders would not generally invite the parents to the hearing. However, if the accused living in his parents' home has recently become an adult and the parents ask to be present and the accused has no objection, the judicial committee may decide to allow them to attend a portion of the hearing.

Meeting With Incarcerated Ones

15. When the judicial committee endeavors to meet with the incarcerated accused wrongdoer, the secular authorities may not allow all three members to meet with him at the same time. If so, a judicial committee should not handle the case over the telephone with a conference-line arrangement. The elders should endeavor to arrange for two members of the committee to meet with him in person in a confidential setting. Others should not be present when the accused person is interviewed. Afterward, the two brothers would discuss the case with the third member of the committee, and the judicial committee may then render a decision. Two members of the judicial committee should inform him of the decision. If he is disfellowshipped, the elders should inform him and tell him of his option to appeal, and so forth. If the authorities allow only one elder at a time to speak with him, the judicial committee should decide in advance what questions to ask. Then two on the judicial committee should talk with him separately and ask the same questions. Thereafter, the judicial committee should convene to make a decision. In unusual cases, the branch office should be contacted.

If the Accused Threatens Suicide

16. In judicial cases where the accused threatens suicide, it may be best for the committee to suspend the hearing to focus on helping him regain his balance. (See 7:12) They should assure him of the committee's desire to help him, then broach the subject of depression and suicide, using the Scriptures and Bible-based publications. (Prov. 3:11, 12; 4:13; Heb. 12:5, 6, 11-13) Depending upon his emotional state, it may be best to do this a day or two later. The elders can prepare by reviewing articles that will help them deal sensitively with the depressed individual. (w00 9/15 pp. 3-7; w88 10/15 pp. 25-29; 11/15 pp. 21-24; w82 6/1 pp. 9-14) The judicial committee should avoid prolonging the case unnecessarily, as this can cause stress for the accused. They should take notes for the confidential file, outlining the dates of their conversations and the scriptures and articles that were considered. They should sign it and place it in the file for the case. The judicial committee should communicate with the branch office if there are questions about a certain case.

If the Accused Threatens Legal Action

17. If the accused threatens legal action against the elders, the elders should suspend proceedings and promptly telephone the branch office.

18. If a member of the media or an attorney representing the accused contacts the elders, they should not give him any information about the case or verify that there is a judicial committee. Rather, they should give the following explanation: "The spiritual and physical welfare of Jehovah's Witnesses is of paramount concern to the elders, who have been appointed to 'shepherd the flock.' The elders extend this shepherding confidentially. Confidential shepherding makes it easier for those who seek the elders' help to do so without worrying that what they say to the elders will be divulged later. Consequently, we do not comment on whether elders are currently or have formerly met to assist any member of the congregation." If there is a need to do so, the elders may obtain the inquirer's name and phone number and inform him that their attorney will contact him. The elders should then promptly telephone the branch office.

19. If the authorities request confidential congregation records or ask that elders give testimony regarding confidential congregation matters, the elders should promptly telephone the branch office.

Chapter Seven

Judicial Hearing Procedure

Try to put the accused at ease

Establish the facts and ascertain his attitude

If repentance is unclear, try to lead him to repentance during the initial meeting

If repentance is commensurate with the extent of wrongdoing, reprove the wrongdoer from the Scriptures

If not convinced of sufficient repentance, inform the wrongdoer of the decision to disfellowship, explaining how he can repair his damaged relationship with Jehovah

1. The judicial hearing should be opened with prayer with the accused present. The judicial committee should feel free to seek Jehovah's wisdom through prayer at any time during their private deliberations. (Jas. 1:5) The chairman should state the reason for the meeting. He may offer a Scriptural point at the outset, such as from Proverbs 28:13 or James 5: 14, 15. The elders on the judicial committee should convey their desire to be helpful and try to put the accused at ease. They should be quick to listen but slow to indicate a preference or a leaning one way or the other. Even if the accused is belligerent, they should treat him kindly and respectfully, never harshly.—w89 9/15 pp. 19-20.

2. The chairman should invite the accused to make a personal statement. If the accused contends that he is innocent, the witnesses to the wrongdoing should be presented and their testimony should be given in the presence of the accused. It is best that the witnesses give their testimony in person. However, it may be that the witnesses live a great distance away or for some reason are not able to be physically present. If so, their testimony may be presented in the hearing of the accused by a secure phone call or perhaps submitted in writing and read to the accused. The accused should be given opportunity to respond to the testimony. If he wishes to present witnesses to establish his innocence, the judicial committee should allow them to give their testimony.

3. Hear only those witnesses who have relevant testimony regarding the alleged wrongdoing. Those who intend to testify only about the character of the accused should not be allowed to do so. The witnesses should not hear details and testimony of other witnesses. Observers should not be present for moral support. Recording devices should not be allowed.

4. In the rare event that testimony presented during the hearing causes the judicial committee to conclude that the matter should not be handled judicially, the hearing should be suspended. Inform the person that he will be contacted further regarding the matter. The body of elders should then be consulted to determine whether the judicial committee should be disbanded.

5. The committee should first seek to establish the facts and ascertain the attitude of the accused. This requires skillful and discreet questions. The judicial committee should be thorough but not inquire about needless details, especially in regard to sexual misconduct. However, in some instances, when Scriptural freedom to divorce and remarry may be an issue, details may need to be clarified. When the elders on the judicial committee feel that they have a clear picture, they may excuse the accused from the room and discuss the case and the individual's repentance or lack thereof.

Determining Genuine Repentance

6. In Greek, two verbs are used in connection with repentance. The first stresses a changed viewpoint or disposition. The second emphasizes a feeling of regret. Therefore, repentance involves a deep regret over a damaged relationship with Jehovah, remorse over the reproach brought upon Jehovah's name and people, and a sincere longing to come back into God's favor. It includes a heart-motivated rejection of the bad course as something repugnant, hated. (Rom. 12:9) Such an attitude should be demonstrated by "fruits that befit repentance," making evident to an adequate degree a sinner's claimed repentance.—Luke 3:8; it-2 pp. 770-777.

7. Judging repentance is not simply a matter of determining whether the wrongdoer is weak or wicked. Weakness is not synonymous with repentance. (w95 1/1, pp. 27-29) Neither should the judicial committee's decision be determined by the notoriety of the wrong. The judicial committee should look for clear works of repentance commensurate with his wrongdoing. (2 Cor. 7:10, 11) In order to extend mercy, the committee must be convinced that the wrongdoer has a changed heart condition and that he has a zeal to right the wrong and is absolutely determined to avoid it in the future. Even if this is the individual's first time before a judicial committee, it is necessary to determine whether his actions and attitude indicate that he has repented and can thus remain in the congregation.

8. The extent to which the person deviates from righteousness may be major or minor, and logically the degree of regret (repentance) ought to be commensurate with the degree of deviation. Was the individual caught off guard so that he momentarily succumbed to temptation, or did he plan to do wrong? Was he unaware of the gravity of his sin, or did he deliberately ignore counsel or warnings? Was it a single offense, or was it a practice? The more an individual repeats serious sin, the more that one reasonably gives evidence of being like wicked people who are "practicers of what is hurtful."—Ps. 28:3; it-2 p. 771 par. 5.

9. While there is no such thing as automatic disfellowshipping, an individual may have gone so far into sin that he may not be able to demonstrate sufficient repentance to the judicial committee at the time of the hearing. If so, he must be disfellowshipped, allowing time to pass for him to prove his repentance. Or it may be that the individual has been dealt with judicially a number of times in the past. Because he appeared repentant, he was reproved each time. Now he has sinned again. In such cases his life course may indicate a lack of repentance. —w81 9/1 p. 26 par. 23.

10. Below are some indications of repentance. However, none of these is the sole criterion for determining whether the sinner is repentant or not.

- Was his confession voluntary, or did he have to be accused by others? Some offenders are so deeply ashamed or have such difficulty expressing themselves that they are reluctant to speak.
- Is the individual truthful? (Acts 5:1-10) When questioned, are his answers forthright? Is he cooperative with the judicial committee? The judicial committee should be especially cautious if the individual has shown himself to be guilty of hypocrisy, lying, or deliberate efforts to deceive.
- Has he contritely prayed to Jehovah and sought his forgiveness and mercy? Keep in mind that some wrongdoers, though repentant, find it difficult to pray.—Jas. 5:14.

- Has he made restitution, expressed willingness to do so, or apologized to offended ones, those damaged by his sinful course? Has he sought forgiveness of those wronged?—w92 9/15 p. 10; w81 9/1 pp. 25-26; w73 p. 351.
- In cases of adultery, has he confessed to the innocent mate and asked for forgiveness?—w73 pp. 351-352; w68 pp. 319-320.

  Note: The option to forgive adultery rests with the innocent mate. The guilty mate cannot be viewed as repentant if, after committing adultery, he refuses to inform her and allow her the opportunity to forgive. If the wrongdoer is unwilling to confess and ask for forgiveness because of fear of violence by the innocent mate, contact the branch office before proceeding.
- Does he manifest a spirit of agony and regret over having damaged his relationship with Jehovah?—Ps. 32:3-5; 51:1-4.
- Does he demonstrate godly sadness or worldly sadness? (2 Cor. 7:8-11) Is his sadness primarily because of hurting Jehovah and bringing Him into reproach or because of the disappointment he has caused to family and friends and the shame he has experienced? (Ezra 10:1; Luke 22:59-62) Individuals vary in their emotional makeup and control. Tears do not necessarily indicate sincere repentance; neither does a lack of strong emotion show a lack of repentance. —Gen. 25:29-34; 27:34.
- Does he accept responsibility for his error, or does he minimize or justify his bad course? —1 Sam. 15:24; 2 Sam. 12:13.
- Does he recognize the fact that lesser sins led up to the wrongdoing, and is he determined to avoid these?

11. Each case is different. The judicial committee should consider all the unique factors involved, including any extenuating circumstances. For example, the wrongdoer may have been a victim of some type of abuse in the past. Extenuating circumstances do not excuse the wrongdoing. (g93 10/8 p. 4) However, discerning them will help the judicial committee to understand better the wrongdoer and his response to the judicial committee. Nevertheless, there would be no basis to extend mercy if fruits of repentance are lacking.

12. The same is true regarding wrongdoers who suffer from mental or emotional problems. (See 6:16) The congregation cannot overlook his wrongdoing if he is able to discharge normal responsibilities toward himself and the community in a reasonably acceptable manner and others generally view him as one who could be held accountable for what he does and says. However, the judicial committee should show consideration and patience in their dealings with him and be especially aware of the need for discernment in evaluating his repentance. On the other hand, if the judicial committee discerns that his mental condition is so severe that others generally regard him as not being responsible for what he does, they may recommend to the body of elders that no judicial action be taken, explaining the reasons for their recommendation.

If Repentance Is Unclear

13. If the wrongdoer's degree of repentance is unclear, the committee should invite him back into the room for further discussion. They should use God's Word to help him understand why his conduct was wrong and how it has affected his relationship with Jehovah and the congregation. It is possible that even as late as the judicial hearing, he will demonstrate repentance to the point that mercy by the judicial committee may be warranted. In most cases the individual will show some repentance, but is it commensurate with the degree of his wrongdoing? The judicial committee should be modest and keep in mind that if the wrongdoer has demonstrated few or no works of repentance before the judicial hearing is held, it may not be possible during the hearing to move him to demonstrate sufficient repentance to justify extending mercy. Even if it is determined that he must be disfellowshipped, their efforts to lead him to repentance may help him to begin making straight paths for his feet and work toward reinstatement. (Heb. 12:13) After trying to help him and hearing his further expressions, the judicial committee may excuse him from the room and deliberate.

14. In complex cases, if the judicial committee is not sure of the Bible's direction or the organization's counsel, the hearing may be adjourned and reconvened a few days later. However, an additional meeting should not be scheduled just to give the accused time to stop the wrongdoing or to demonstrate works of repentance. If he has demonstrated little or no repentance during the initial hearing, there would generally be no basis on which to prolong the case and schedule a second meeting.

15. At times, complicated judicial cases may necessitate consultation with an experienced mature elder in another congregation or the circuit overseer. In such a situation, inform the wrongdoer that the decision is pending. Do not inform him that you will be consulting with parties outside of the judicial committee, which may at times include the branch office. While pertinent details may be discussed, names should not be used when discussing the case with another elder. However, when the circuit overseer is consulted or when circumstances require that the branch office be contacted, the judicial committee should reveal the names.

16. Generally, those serving on a judicial committee should endeavor to be unanimous in their decision. Any difference of opinion can usually be resolved by discussing matters thoroughly as a judicial committee, researching the Scriptures and Christian publications, praying for wisdom and direction, and even consulting with an experienced elder outside the congregation. However, if the committee is unable to reach a unanimous conclusion, the minority should give support to the decision reached by the majority.

17. Anything submitted in writing to the committee by the alleged wrongdoer or by witnesses should be kept in strict confidence. If it is necessary to continue the matter later, the members of the committee should submit to the chairman any personal notes they have taken. The chairman will keep these notes in a secure place to prevent breaches of confidentiality. The notes may be returned to the individual elders for consultation before the hearing resumes.

If the Decision Is to Reprove

18. If the elders on the judicial committee determine that the wrongdoer is genuinely repentant, they should inform him of the decision, the judicial restrictions, and whether the reproof will be announced. They should also give reproof from the Scriptures, showing the seriousness of the wrongdoing and the minor sins that may have led up to it. Reproof is defined as "that which is designed to convince others of their having erred, in order to move them to acknowledge their mistakes and correct these." (it-2 p. 780) Hence, administering judicial reproof includes more than just making a decision or announcing it. It involves reinforcing the wrongdoer's resolve to do what is right. The original-language word for reproof comes from a verb meaning 'to show plainly, point out by facts, demonstrate, show by evident or convincing reasons or arguments.' Helpful suggestions should be given to help him make needed adjustments. If witnesses testified during the hearing, they may be invited to hear the Scriptural reproof. In this way the accused is reproved "before all onlookers." (1 Tim. 5:20) The judicial committee should pray with the repentant wrongdoer before concluding the hearing.

19. In all cases of judicial reproof, the wrongdoer is disqualified from special privileges. These include pioneering, offering congregation prayer, and sharing in any parts on the Service Meeting until he has made further spiritual progress. This also includes other congregational assignments that might be given to those who are exemplary. In addition, some judicial restrictions will be imposed in all cases of judicial reproof. Judicial restrictions may include not commenting at congregation meetings and not giving student talks in the Theocratic Ministry School. However, the judicial committee determines what judicial restrictions to impose. When the elders inform a repentant wrongdoer of restrictions, it would be helpful to tell him the date of the next meeting, at which his progress will be reviewed. It may be discouraging to the repentant wrongdoer if restrictions are imposed for a prolonged period of time. It would be an exceptional case when many months have passed and restrictions have not been gradually lifted.

20. The judicial committee should determine whether the reproof should be announced to the congregation. (w88 11/15 p. 18; w81 9/1 pp. 26-27) If the individual thereafter moves, no announcement of such previous judicial reproof is made in the new congregation.—km 3/75 p. 4.

- The reproof should be announced if the sin is widely known or will likely become known in the congregation or community. An announcement will safeguard the reputation of the congregation.

For example, in a case of adultery, an innocent mate may lean toward forgiveness but is not ready to resume sexual relations at the time that the judicial committee concludes the case. If the possibility of a Scriptural divorce still exists, an announcement would protect the reputation of the congregation and the innocent mate.

- The judicial committee may have specific reasons to believe that the congregation needs to be on guard concerning the repentant wrongdoer. Perhaps he ignored previous counsel several times concerning steps leading to the same wrongdoing.

  For example, in a case involving wrongdoing that could be viewed as child sexual abuse, announcing the reproof of a repentant wrongdoer will serve as a protection for the congregation.

See October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding child abuse.

21. The coordinator of the body of elders should approve the announcement before an elder reads it to the congregation. It should read as follows: "[Name of person] has been reproved." Restrictions are not announced.

See September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders for direction on filing confidential material.

22. The judicial committee should monitor the spiritual progress of the repentant wrongdoer and be alert to remove judicial restrictions progressively as he recovers spiritually. It is not necessary for the entire body of elders to decide on the removal of restrictions, except in unusual cases. The committee should inform the body of elders when any restrictions are removed. When an elder serving on the original committee moves or is no longer serving as an elder, the body of elders will select a replacement to monitor the wrongdoer's progress. If the wrongdoer moves before the committee lifts all of his restrictions, the new congregation should receive sufficient details so that the elders can evaluate his true spiritual condition. Provide the type of information and details you would appreciate receiving if the individual was moving into your congregation. The elders of the new congregation should choose two or three elders to continue to monitor the wrongdoer's progress and lift the remaining judicial restrictions.

23. In some cases the elders may feel that it is necessary to warn the congregation by means of a Scriptural talk about the type of conduct practiced. A member of the judicial committee should generally give the talk. He should explain the wrongness of the conduct and how to avoid it but without saying anything that would connect the wrongdoer with the type of sin under discussion. In the case of an announced reproof, the elders should wait a few weeks before giving such a talk; when the reproof is unannounced, there is no need to wait.

24. Once the case has been concluded, no further judicial action is taken unless the wrongdoer again engages in gross wrongdoing. However, in rare cases there may be an exception if within a few days of the decision new information comes to light that makes it obvious to the judicial committee that the wrongdoer was not repentant, perhaps because he gave misleading testimony or purposely omitted important facts during the hearing. In such instances there may be a basis for the judicial committee to reconsider its decision and decide to disfellowship, especially if no announcement of reproof had been made. When the hearing resumes, the individual would be given opportunity to hear any new evidence and to present his side of the matter. In cases of this nature, it is best to inquire of the branch office for direction before proceeding.

25. If the wrongdoer again engages in serious wrongdoing after the judicial committee renders a decision and completes the case, the judicial committee that handled the previous case will not automatically handle the new case. The body of elders should meet and select the judicial committee. In most cases, the elders will choose the same elders to serve on the new judicial committee, but the body of elders may decide to use different brothers or to add another elder to the committee.

If the Decision Is to Disfellowship

26. If the wrongdoer lacks genuine repentance, he should be disfellowshipped. (See 7:8) The committee should inform him of its decision and endeavor to help him see how he can use the time he is disfellowshipped in a way that will repair his damaged relationship with Jehovah. The committee may share with him scriptures such as 2 Corinthians 7:10, 11 and Hebrews 12:5-7. The judicial committee should be kind and positive, assuring him that forgiveness is possible if he truly repents.

27. The following information should be conveyed orally to the wrongdoer after informing him of the committee's decision:

- Outline the steps necessary for future reinstatement.
- Inform the wrongdoer that he may appeal in writing within seven days if he feels a serious error in judgment has occurred. (od pp. 153-154) He should address his letter of appeal to the judicial committee.

28. The judicial committee should neither encourage him to appeal nor discourage him from doing so. Before dismissing him, the elders should ask if he has any questions. The judicial committee will conclude with prayer after dismissing the wrongdoer.

29. If the unrepentant wrongdoer did not attend the judicial hearing, the judicial committee should make reasonable efforts to inform him orally of their decision, his option to appeal, and so forth. The elders should not leave a message of a confidential nature on a telephone answering machine or by means of voice mail or by way of e-mail. If he does not cooperate with the efforts to inform him, the judicial committee should contact the branch office.

30. Allow the seven-day appeal period to elapse even if the person states he does not wish to appeal or if he failed to appear for the judicial hearing.

31. The coordinator of the body of elders should check the announcement to make sure that it conforms to the guidelines outlined by the organization. An elder should read the announcement. The wording should be as follows: "[Name of person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses."

32. Disfellowshipping takes effect at the time of making the announcement to the congregation. In the interim before the public announcement, the wrongdoer should not comment or offer prayers at congregation meetings or care for any special privileges of service. (od p. 154) Make the announcement in only one congregation.

33. The judicial committee should promptly inform the branch office of the disfellowshipping using the appropriate forms. When making the report, read and carefully follow the instructions on the form.

34. Upon conclusion of the case, the chairman should place only necessary notes and documents, a detailed summary of the case, and the S-77 forms in a sealed envelope for the congregation's confidential file. Elders on the committee should preserve nothing outside of this sealed envelope (including personal notes). On the outside of the envelope should be written the wrongdoer's name, the names of those who served on the judicial committee (with the chairman indicated), the action taken, and the date of the action.

See September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders for further direction on filing confidential material.

Chapter Eight

Appeal Hearing Procedure

The appeal committee should be modest in working with the judicial committee

The appeal committee should determine whether the accused is guilty of serious wrongdoing and whether he was repentant when he met with the judicial committee

1. If the judicial committee receives a letter of appeal within seven days from the time the wrongdoer received notification of the decision to disfellowship, the chairman should promptly call the circuit overseer, who will arrange for an appeal committee. Arrangements should be made for the appeal hearing even if there seems to be no valid basis for it. He should select the most qualified elders available to rehear the case. To the extent possible, he will select brothers from a different congregation who are impartial and have no ties or relationship to the accused, the accuser, or the judicial committee.

2. If a person appeals after the seven days, immediately contact the branch office for direction.

3. The chairman of the judicial committee will make the completed S-77 forms and all other related material on the case, including the judicial committee's notes, available to the appeal committee.

Objective and Approach of the Appeal Committee

4. The elders chosen for the appeal committee should approach the case with modesty and avoid giving the impression that they are judging the judicial committee rather than the accused. While the appeal committee should be thorough, they must remember that the appeal process does not indicate a lack of confidence in the judicial committee. Rather, it is a kindness to the wrongdoer to assure him of a complete and fair hearing. The elders of the appeal committee should keep in mind that likely the judicial committee has more insight and experience than they do regarding the accused.

5. Generally, there is no arrangement to hold an appeal hearing outside the circuit; if the accused has moved, he must be willing to travel back to the area so that the judicial committee can be present for the appeal hearing. If the accused deliberately fails to appear at the appeal hearing, the disfellowshipping should be announced after reasonable efforts have been made to contact him.—od p. 154.

6. The appeal committee should first read the written material on the case and speak with the judicial committee. Afterward, the appeal committee should speak to the accused. Since the judicial committee has already judged him unrepentant, the appeal committee will not pray in his presence but will pray before inviting him into the room.

7. Conduct the hearing in a manner similar to the first judicial committee hearing. It may be necessary to rehear all the evidence relevant to the case, including that which was presented originally and any new evidence now available. For instance, if the accused continues to contend that he is innocent, the witnesses should again give their testimony in his presence, he should be given opportunity to respond, and the appeal committee should hear any additional witnesses he wishes to present to prove his innocence.

8. The judicial committee should be present to hear any testimony. If they or the accused believes that earlier testimony or evidence is being changed, this can be stated following the presentation of evidence that was allegedly altered.

9. After gathering the facts, the appeal committee should deliberate in private. They should consider the answers to two questions:

- Was it established that the accused committed a disfellowshipping offense?
- Did the accused demonstrate repentance commensurate with the gravity of his wrongdoing *at the time of the hearing with the judicial committee?

10. The appeal committee may find that while the original basis for disfellowshipping was invalid, other valid grounds for disfellowshipping exist. If so, the appeal committee should give the individual sufficient time, even several days if needed, to present any evidence or witnesses that he feels will disprove the new allegations. If the new allegations are nonetheless established and if the person does not demonstrate genuine repentance, the appeal committee may decide to uphold the disfellowshipping on these new grounds. ~~If so, the appeal committee should prepare a new report for the branch office showing the new grounds for disfellowshipping. The appeal committee should submit this along with the report composed by the judicial committee and should tell the original committee to announce the disfellowshipping.~~

If the original committee agrees with the new grounds, they should adjust the S-77 form, announce the disfellowshipping, and submit the form to the branch office. The appeal committee's brief summary should be retained in the confidential file along with a copy of the S-77 form and the brief summary of the original committee.

If the Appeal Committee Agrees With the Judicial Committee

11. If the brothers on the appeal committee feel they can accede to the judgment of the judicial committee, the appeal committee should inform the wrongdoer of the final decision in the presence of the judicial committee.

12. The judicial committee should allow seven days to pass before arranging for the disfellowshipping to be announced at the next Service Meeting.

13. ~~The appeal committee should compose a report and send this to the branch office along with the report given them by the judicial committee. The appeal committee should make sure that the report from the judicial committee is complete, including the date of announcement of the disfellowshipping.~~

The original committee should submit the completed S-77 form to the branch office. The appeal committee's brief summary should be retained in the confidential file along with a copy of the S-77 form and the brief summary of the original committee.

14. When the disfellowshipping is upheld, there is no further arrangement for appeal. However, if an individual persists in believing a serious error in judgment has occurred, the appeal committee should inform him that he may submit his allegations in writing to the appeal committee within seven days for transmittal to the branch office. The appeal committee should not mention this provision unless the individual indicates that he believes a serious error in judgment has occurred.

15. If he indicates a desire to submit a letter of appeal to the branch office, the announcement of disfellowshipping should be delayed. The appeal committee should submit the wrongdoer's letter, the report from the judicial committee, and a report from the appeal committee to the branch office. No announcement should be made until a reply is received from the branch office.

If the Appeal Committee Disagrees With the Judicial Committee

16. The appeal committee should meet privately with the judicial committee to discuss matters and explain the reason for disagreeing.

17. The accused should be invited back into the room, and the appeal committee should inform him that further consideration will be needed. He can be assured that the case will be concluded as soon as possible. Neither the judicial committee nor the appeal committee should give any indication of their differing decisions to the individual. After he is dismissed, the hearing can be concluded with prayer.

18. If the judicial committee does not agree with the conclusions of the appeal committee, the elders on the judicial committee should promptly compose a letter clearly expressing their reasons for disagreement and give this to the appeal committee. The appeal committee will include this letter along with their report to the branch office. ~~On the other hand, the judicial committee may now agree with the appeal committee. If so, their letter should explain why. Even if both committees agree not to disfellowship the individual, they will not advise him of their decision; rather, they will simply tell the person that the decision is pending. The appeal committee will send to the branch office separate letters from both the original committee and the appeal committee that supply sufficient details to give a clear picture of the reasons for the conclusion.~~

On the other hand, if both committees now agree not to disfellowship the individual, the appeal committee should inform him of the final decision in the presence of the judicial committee. The appeal committee's brief summary should be retained in the confidential file along with the brief summary of the original committee.

19. The appeal committee should promptly compose a letter explaining the appeal committee's conclusion and the reasons. The appeal committee should send this letter along with the S-77 report given to the appeal committee by the judicial committee at the beginning of the appeal hearing and the judicial committee's letter explaining the judicial committee's thinking on the decision of the appeal committee to the branch office. The branch office will thereafter provide written direction to assist both committees with bringing the case to a conclusion.

20. After the two committees have considered the observations of the branch office and made a final decision, the original committee should inform the person involved. If the decision is to disfellowship, the judicial committee will arrange to make an appropriate announcement in the congregation and inform the branch office of the date of the announcement.

Chapter Nine

Implications of Disassociation

Disassociation is action taken by the individual

A committee is appointed to provide assistance if possible

Announce and report disassociation if established

1. Whereas disfellowshipping is an action taken by a judicial committee against an unrepentant wrongdoer, disassociation is an action taken by an individual who no longer desires to be one of Jehovah's Witnesses. (1 John 2:19) The body of elders should appoint a committee of three elders to consider the facts.

See September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders for further direction on filing confidential material.

2. A judicial committee should not continue an investigation into alleged wrongdoing if the accused person makes known his decision to disassociate himself. (w84 7/1 p. 31) However, at no time should the elders ask the accused if he desires to disassociate himself. If the elders are handling a particularly difficult case and there is a question about whether the person has disassociated himself, it would be best for the committee to contact the branch office for further direction. If an individual is determined to disassociate himself, then the committee would prepare a summary of the alleged offense(s) and the evidence of such. This would be kept along with information regarding the disassociation. If the person later requests reinstatement, these matters would need to be considered with him at that time.

3. Actions that may indicate disassociation include the following:

- Making known a firm decision to be known no longer as one of Jehovah's Witnesses. If the individual is agreeable, the committee should first try to speak with him and provide spiritual assistance. (Gal. 6:1) Does he really desire to disassociate himself, or does he simply no longer want to associate actively with the congregation? Is the desire to disassociate prompted by doubts or discouragement? If he is adamant in his position, he should be encouraged to put his request in writing and sign it. If he does not, then the witnesses to his request should prepare a statement for the confidential files and sign it.
- Joining another religious organization and making known his intention to remain with it. If it is learned that a person has taken up association with another religious organization and thus is identified with it, a committee (not judicial) should be selected to investigate matters and endeavor to provide spiritual assistance. If the individual has joined another religious organization and intends to remain with it, he has disassociated himself.
- Willingly and unrepentantly taking blood. If someone willingly takes blood, perhaps because of being under extreme pressure, the committee should obtain the facts and determine the individual's attitude. If he is repentant, the committee would provide spiritual assistance in the spirit of Galatians 6:1 and Jude 22, 23. Since he is spiritually weak, he would not qualify for special privileges for a period of time, and it may be necessary to remove certain basic privileges. Depending on the circumstances, the committee may also need to arrange for an announcement to the congregation: "The elders have handled a matter having to do with [name of person]. You will be glad to know that spiritual shepherds are endeavoring to render assistance." On the other hand, if the elders on the committee determine that he is unrepentant, they should announce his disassociation.

See November 6, 2014, letter to all bodies of elders regarding procedures when legal issues are involved.

- Taking a course contrary to the neutral position of the Christian congregation. (Isa. 2:4; John 15:17-19; w99 11/1 pp. 28-29) If he joins a nonneutral organization, he has disassociated himself. If his employment makes him a clear accomplice in nonneutral activities, he should generally be allowed a period of time up to six months to make an adjustment. If he does not, he has disassociated himself.—km 9/76 pp. 3-6.

4. The coordinator of the body of elders should approve the announcement before an elder reads it to the congregation. The announcement should be as follows: "[Name of person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses."

5. Since disassociation is an action taken by the publisher rather than the committee, there is no arrangement for an appeal. Therefore, the announcement of disassociation can be made on the occasion of the next Service Meeting without waiting seven days. A report of the disassociation should promptly be sent to the branch office, using the appropriate forms.—See 7:33-34.

Chapter Ten

Matters Related to Disfellowshipped and Disassociated Ones

Make yearly visits on those who qualify

Permit them to obtain personal literature at the Kingdom Hall

Assist those having undue association with disfellowshipped or disassociated relatives

1. Once a year the body of elders reviews a list of those in the congregation territory who are disfellowshipped or disassociated. They will call on each one they select in order to see if he wants to return. (w91 4/15 pp. 22-23) Calls should not be made on those who are active apostates, on those who are trying to lead others into sin, or on those who have made it known that they want nothing to do with God's people. The body will assign two elders to make each call, preferably elders familiar with the case. During a brief visit, the elders may kindly explain what the individual can do to return. In some cases there may be good reason for a follow-up visit. They will report the results to the Congregation Service Committee, and the body will be informed at the next meeting of the elders.

2. If the elders learn that a disfellowshipped or disassociated person has moved, they should not send his Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards or the confidential file to the congregation where he lives or attends meetings. Since he cannot share in the ministry, the congregation that took disfellowshipping action or acknowledged the disasso-ciation should retain the cards. However, a brief letter should be sent to the body of elders in whose territory he lives to inform them that a disfellowshipped or disassociated person lives in their territory and to provide his address. This will enable the local elders to follow through and make yearly visits on this one if he qualifies. Generally, there would be no need for the letter to include specific information on the details of the judicial case. However, if the elders are aware of a situation that would disqualify him from yearly visits or there is reason for the elders in the new congregation to be especially on guard, this can be explained in the letter.

3. If someone gives evidence of repentance and a desire to be reinstated by changing his course or asks about reinstatement, the authorized elders may speak with him and kindly explain what he needs to do in order to be reinstated.

4. Disfellowshipped and disassociated ones may obtain a personal copy of the magazines and other literature at the magazine and literature counters at the Kingdom Hall. Our Kingdom Ministry is not distributed to such ones. If someone is an active apostate and known to misuse our literature to oppose the organization, the local elders may decide not to make literature available to him.

5. Disfellowshipped and disassociated ones are generally expected to make their own arrangements for transportation to and from congregation meetings. However, in some instances a disfellowshipped or disassociated individual who is making a determined effort to regain a right standing with Jehovah may be in a situation that prevents him from obtaining transportation. It may be that he has no car and that family members or others are not able to help him. Perhaps he cannot afford public transportation, or it is not available in his area. It may be that the distance involved, personal safety, or severe weather make it inadvisable to walk. In cases of such desperate need, the elders can determine whether some assistance may be provided. (w81 9/15 p. 18 par. 14) Such assistance would be viewed as similar to public transportation in that there should be no fraternizing or conversing with the disfellowshipped or disassociated person. (2 John 10, 11) The elders should monitor the situation to make sure that any arrangements made are not abused.

6. If members of the congregation are known to have undue association with disfellowshipped or disassociated *relatives who are not in the household, elders should counsel and reason with those members of the congregation from the Scriptures. Review with them information from the "God's Love" book, pages 207-208; The Watchtower of April 15, 1988, pages 26-30; or the article "Display Christian Loyalty When a Relative Is Disfellowshipped" in the August 2002 Our Kingdom Ministry. If it is clear that a Christian is violating the spirit of the disfellowshipping decree in this regard and does not respond to counsel, it may be that he would not qualify for congregation privileges, which require one to be exemplary. He would not be dealt with judicially unless there is persistent spiritual association or he openly criticizes the disfellowshipping decision.

Chapter Eleven

Reinstatement Committee Procedure

Allow sufficient time for a wrongdoer to prove his repentance

Be especially cautious if the individual:

Was deceptive

Secretly practiced sin over an extended period of time

Was reproved or disfellowshipped previously

Conspired to put away his marriage mate

When a Plea for Reinstatement Is Received

1. The final decision to reinstate a disfellowshipped person is always made by a judicial committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action. If possible, the elders in that congregation who served on the judicial committee should be used for the reinstatement committee. Even if the committee feels that it is much too soon to consider reinstatement, two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform the disfellowshipped one that more time must pass. Written requests for reinstatement should be responded to promptly.

2. After offering prayer without the disfellowshipped person present, the committee will invite him into the room. The committee should endeavor to put the disfellowshipped one at ease, commending him for his progress and desire to be reinstated. The chairman invites the disfellowshipped one to make a personal statement. The committee should seek to determine his conduct since the time of disfellowshipping and ascertain his attitude. The disfellowshipped person is then excused from the room while the committee deliberates.

3. The committee should be careful to allow sufficient time, perhaps many months, a year, or even longer, for the disfellowshipped person to prove that his profession of repentance is genuine. (od p. 156; it-2 p. 771) The committee should be especially cautious in some cases. For instance, the wrongdoer may have been deceptive, may have secretly practiced wrongdoing over a long period of time, or may have been repeatedly dealt with judicially in the past for the same or other wrongdoing. Quickly reinstating such a person may embolden others to commit serious sin, as they may feel that little or no discipline will be administered. Where there is evidence of conspiracy between individuals to put away their mates and marry each other, considerable time should elapse for them to prove their repentance and gain reinstatement.—w83 3/15 p. 29.

4. The reinstatement committee needs to be balanced. Genuine repentance and a turning away from the wrong course—not the attitude of others or merely the time elapsed—are the chief determining factors in deciding when a person may be reinstated.—1 Cor. 5:1, 11-13; 2 Cor. 2:6, 7.

5. The committee should consider the overall pattern of the wrongdoer's life. Does it now show that he is repentant? If so, elders should guard against going to extremes by exacting a point-by-point admission of sins that may not have been clearly proved.

6. If it is determined that the individual should not be reinstated, the committee should explain their reasons and what they expect the individual to do in the future to qualify for reinstatement. After he is dismissed, the committee will conclude with prayer.

7. If the disfellowshipped person has moved, a local judicial committee will hear his request for reinstatement where he is now attending meetings. If those elders believe he should be reinstated, they will give the judicial committee of the congregation that disfellowshipped the person their recommendation. They should not let the disfellowshipped one know their recommendation; if the other committee does not agree, knowing that would only cause him frustration. The committee should merely tell him that they must correspond with the elders where he was disfellowshipped and that he will be informed of the decision in due course.

8. The local judicial committee should not pressure the original committee to reinstate the person. The elders on the original committee may be aware of important factors not apparent to others, so it is usually best to respect their judgment. Likewise, the original committee should carefully consider the recommendation of the other committee. Sufficient time may have passed, and the individual may have made drastic changes that the elders on the original committee have not observed. They should keep in mind that the elders making the recommendation have met the individual and have had opportunity to observe his conduct.

9. If the two congregations are reasonably close to each other, the committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action should promptly arrange to meet with the disfellowshipped individual after receiving a positive recommendation from the committee of the congregation where he made his plea for reinstatement.

10. If the elders on the committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action disagree with the recommendation to reinstate, they should clearly explain their reasons to the other committee.

If the Decision Is to Reinstate

11. If he is being reinstated, the disfellowshipped person can be invited back into the room and informed. At that time Scriptural encouragement and counsel should be given to help him to continue to make spiritual progress. Until the reinstatement is announced, he should continue to conduct himself as a disfellowshipped one. The committee concludes with prayer with the individual present. The committee should make sure the branch office is properly informed of the reinstatement.

12. In all cases of reinstatement, judicial restrictions should be imposed to help the person see the need for continuing to make 'straight paths for his feet' and out of consideration for the congregation's conscience. (Heb. 12:13) The privilege of sharing in the field service is restored when the individual is reinstated. Other privileges, such as commenting at meetings and giving Theocratic Ministry School talks, can be restored progressively when it is determined that the individual has progressed spiritually to the point that he is qualified and when it is judged by the committee that the extending of such privileges will not be offensive to the congregation. It may be discouraging to the repentant wrongdoer if restrictions are imposed for a prolonged period of time. Therefore, when informing a repentant wrongdoer of restrictions, it would be helpful for the elders to inform him of the date for the next meeting when his progress will be reviewed. The committee may also arrange for a Bible study to be conducted, if needed, which would be reported as field service. It would be an exceptional case when many months have passed and restrictions have not been lifted.—See 7:19.

See September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders for direction on filing confidential material.

13. Reinstatement is announced in the congregation where that person was disfellowshipped as well as in the congregation where he now attends. The coordinator of the body of elders should approve the announcement before an elder reads it to the congregation. The announcement should read as follows: "[Name of person] is reinstated as one of Jehovah's Witnesses." Judicial restrictions should not be announced. The committee where he attends will supervise the gradual removal of restrictions.

14. A committee will deal with a disassociated person similarly if he requests reinstatement.

15. When a person is reinstated, he will still need much spiritual assistance. The committee should continue to monitor the person's spiritual progress.

Chapter Twelve

Clarifications and Guidelines on Handling Certain Matters

Marking disorderly ones

Weddings

Scriptural freedom to remarry

Adulterous marriage

Child abuse

Taking brothers to court

When disasters occur

Marking Disorderly Ones

1. At times it may be necessary to mark those who display a flagrant disregard for theocratic order though not practicing a grave sin that would result in judicial action. (w99 7/15 pp. 29-31) This could include such things as being grossly lazy or critical or being a profitless talker who is a constant 'meddler with what does not concern him.' (2 Thess. 3:11) It may involve one who schemes to take material advantage of others, indulges in entertainment that is clearly improper, or dates when not legally or Scripturally free.—od p. 150-151.

2. If the disorderly conduct is generally unknown to others and poses no threat to their spiritual well-being, usually it is best to handle things through admonition and counsel. The elders should not be hasty in giving a warning talk. However, if the individual does not see the error of his way but continues to be an unwholesome influence, a warning talk may be given to the congregation.—2 Thess. 3:6, 14, 15; w99 7/15 pp. 29-31; w85 4/15 pp. 30-31.

- Example—mark for dating an "unbeliever": The elders should first counsel and try to help a disorderly one. If a person persists in a way that is disturbing and that has the potential for spreading, they may conclude that there would be reason for a warning talk to be given to the congregation.—2 Cor. 6:14; 2 Thess. 3:11, 14; w99 7/15 p. 31.
- It may be that an individual is dating not an actual 'unbeliever' but an unbaptized publisher. In such cases a warning talk may not be needed, depending on the circumstances, on the attitude of the Christian, on the level of disturbance to the congregation, and other factors. Nonetheless, if he is dating with a view to marrying someone who is unbaptized, he is not obeying the Bible's counsel at 1 Corinthians 7:39 to marry "only in the Lord," and loving counsel should be given. Elders will use reasonableness and discernment in determining whether a particular situation is sufficiently serious and disturbing to require a warning talk. —od pp. 150-151; w04 7/1 pp. 30-31.

3. If the disorderly one becomes ashamed of his ways and is moved to change, then as elders of the congregation see the adjustment, they can individually decide to end the limitation they have put on personally socializing with him. This will indicate to the congregation that he is no longer marked.

Weddings

4. Elders may perform a wedding of two Christians or of two unbaptized publishers who are progressing toward baptism. If the couple have a specific elder in mind, they can personally ask him to officiate at their wedding. If the couple have no preference, the body of elders can select one of their number to do this. The elder solemnizing a marriage should make sure that he is legally qualified in the state or locality where the wedding takes place. If the speaker does not legally qualify to administer the vows, another elder who meets such legal requirements could administer the wedding vows after the speaker gives the discourse. The elder who administers the vows would complete the necessary documents. Any elder who is asked to give a wedding talk or administer the vows should conscientiously decide whether he wishes to serve in such capacity. (w97 4/15 p. 24; w84 4/15 pp. 13-14) Elders should not perform the wedding of two persons who are not seriously involved in the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses. Neither should the elders be involved, directly or indirectly, in the wedding of a baptized individual to an unbaptized, disassociated, or disfellowshipped person. (1 Cor. 5:11; 7:39) It would be improper to participate in a second wedding years after the initial ceremony, as this would imply that the first wedding was not binding.—w06 10/15 p. 19 par. 8.

See October 12, 2010, letter to all bodies of elders regarding wedding procedures and Scriptural freedom to remarry.

5. Before agreeing to officiate, an elder should personally speak with the couple and tactfully but straightforwardly inquire about their conduct during courtship. Make sure that all involved are familiar with and follow the direction in the articles in the November 2008 Our Kingdom Ministry, page 3; the October 15, 2006, Watchtower, pages 18-31; the April 15, 1997, Watchtower, pages 23-26; and the April 15, 1984, Watchtower, pages 11-15. If it is learned that they have engaged in sexual immorality that requires assistance from a judicial committee, the couple cannot use the Kingdom Hall. If neither is disfellowshipped, it will be up to the discretion of the elder as to whether he will officiate at another location. He may also want to inquire about some of the plans for the wedding and reception and give kindly reminders if needed to help them demonstrate reasonableness. However, he should remember that what they choose to do is a personal matter as long as this is not unscriptural. (Phil. 4:5; w84 4/15 pp. 11-12) The elder should also make sure that the bride and groom are legally and Scripturally free to marry. If either was married before, the elder should ask to see a copy of the divorce decree to make sure that the divorce was finalized. He should also be satisfied that the divorce is Scriptural. If the person's divorce occurred before baptism, the elder should not assume the individual is Scripturally free, as baptism does not dissolve previous marital ties. If either the bride or the groom is from another congregation, the elder should speak or correspond with the elders from that congregation to confirm the person's standing in the congregation, Scriptural freedom to marry, and so forth.

6. If a couple wishes to use the Kingdom Hall, they should submit a written request well in advance of the wedding date indicating the specific day and time they desire to use the hall. The Congregation Service Committee should promptly consider the request on behalf of the body of elders. Though it is not a requirement that all in the wedding party be baptized, the wedding party should not include any person whose lifestyle grossly conflicts with Bible principles. (km 11/08 p. 3; w84 4/15 p. 15) Any decoration of the Kingdom Hall or rearrangement of the chairs must be approved. Only music selected from Kingdom Melodies or that is found in our songbook may be used. The elders may permit a rehearsal at the Kingdom Hall as long as it does not interfere with other congregation arrangements.

7. The marriage discourse should reflect dignity, honor, and seriousness. (Heb. 13:4) Its purpose is to impress on the minds of the participants, as well as those observing, the God-given responsibilities that married couples must assume and discharge in full harmony with the Scriptures. It is not appropriate to tell humorous stories or read poems simply to entertain or amuse the audience. If the branch office provides an outline in the local language, it should be used.

8. Since much of the direction outlined above has generally been given only to congregation elders, appointed elders should be used to officiate at weddings, if available. (km 11/08 p. 3; w84 4/15 pp. 13-14) Also, elders are certified teachers of God's Word, so they are the ones most qualified to highlight the important Scriptural principles that apply on this special occasion.—1 Tim. 3:2.

Scriptural Freedom to Remarry

See October 12, 2010, letter to all bodies of elders regarding wedding procedures and Scriptural freedom to remarry.

9. Elders should be very careful when it comes to giving direction on whether an individual is Scripturally free and should consult with the branch office on any questions. This is especially true since the decisions a person makes in such matters will affect not only their relationship with their marriage mate but also their relationship with Jehovah. We therefore as elders shoulder a heavy responsibility in such matters and need to be cautious when offering counsel, especially when the answer may not be readily apparent.—Luke 12:48; Jas. 3:1.

10. Scriptural freedom to remarry requires three conditions: por·nei'a; a rejection (refusal to reconcile) by the innocent mate; and a legal, final divorce. —Matt. 5:31, 32; 19:9; Heb. 13:4.

11. If a dedicated Christian who accuses his believing mate of adultery and wishes to establish freedom to divorce and remarry approaches an elder, the matter should be referred to the body of elders. The accuser is not free unless the evidence establishing wrongdoing is sufficient to warrant the formation of a judicial committee. (Deut. 19:15; John 8:17) If the accused mate is associated with another congregation, the evidence should be presented to the elders of that congregation for review and a determination. The publisher should be advised that he is not to view himself as Scripturally free until the elders have investigated and guilt is established.

12. In some cases adultery is not proved, but it is established by confession or by two or more witnesses that the mate stayed all night in the same house with a person of the opposite sex (or a known homosexual) under improper circumstances. The elders should carefully consider the situation. Were the individuals together all night? Were improper circumstances involved? For example, were the two persons alone? Is there evidence of a romantic relationship? What were the sleeping arrangements? Even if adultery is not established, it may be that the Christian was involved in an immoral sleeping arrangement. Although the elders cannot tell the innocent mate that he is free to marry because adultery was not proved, in view of the circumstances, if the innocent mate is convinced that adultery did occur, the elders may allow him to take responsibility before Jehovah for obtaining a Scriptural divorce; if he remarries, no judicial action will be taken.

13. Even if the accused mate is not one of Jehovah's Witnesses (disfellowshipped, disassociated, or never baptized), two witnesses are also generally required to establish wrongdoing that would provide a basis for Scriptural freedom. An exception may be made, however, if the unbeliever privately makes an unambiguous confession of adultery to the Christian mate. In such a case, if the innocent Christian mate believes that the confession is true and does not wish to reconcile, he can submit a letter to the elders outlining his situation. The body of elders should then consider the letter. Is there any known reason to conclude other than that the unbelieving mate has been immoral? For example, was the confession worded ambiguously? Did the unbeliever later deny making the confession? If the unbeliever is willing to speak with the elders and matters are unclear, the elders may choose to ask the accused mate directly. If there is no known reason to conclude otherwise, the innocent mate can be allowed to take responsibility before Jehovah for obtaining a Scriptural divorce; if he remarries, no judicial action will be taken.—w77 pp. 607-608.

14. The following constitutes rejection by the innocent mate:

- The innocent mate initiates a divorce either before or after learning of the adultery.
- The innocent mate signs a divorce decree indicating he does not object to a divorce initiated by the guilty mate, either before or after learning of the adultery. Note: In some lands it is possible for the innocent mate to sign divorce documents that stipulate custody of the children and financial support without indicating he agrees with the divorce; his signing such papers in itself would not indicate a rejection.—w00 12/15 pp. 28-29.
- Though verbally expressing forgiveness and not seeking a divorce, the innocent mate refuses to resume sexual relations for a very prolonged period of time, a year or even years. Before indicating to the guilty mate that he is free to pursue a Scriptural divorce, the elders should consult with the branch office. Note: The innocent mate is not required to make a quick decision whether to forgive or not.—w74 pp. 671-672.

Adulterous Marriage

15. If a divorced person remarries and he was not Scripturally free to do so—in other words, if adultery and rejection by the innocent mate had not occurred—he has entered into an adulterous marriage.

In Jehovah's eyes, he has married someone while still bound to another. Entering into such a marriage would call for judicial action.

16. If the disfellowshipped one was eventually reinstated, the elders would be very cautious in extending any special privileges. He could share in the cleaning and repair of the local Kingdom Hall. He may eventually give student talks in the Theocratic Ministry School if his doing so would not disturb others. However, he would not be assigned to help with literature, accounts, magazines, attendants, or similar privileges in the congregation as long as the innocent former mate is alive, unmarried, and has not been guilty of *por·nei'a.—w83 3/15 p. 29.

17. If a Christian did not enter into an adulterous marriage but deliberately committed adultery in a scheming way so as to end his marriage or he pressured the innocent mate to reject him and eventually agree to a divorce, he has dealt treacherously with her. (Mal. 2:14-16) His conduct is similar to entering into an adulterous marriage, and he would not qualify for special privileges for many years.

See September 7, 2011, letter to all bodies of elders for direction on filing confidential material.

Child Abuse

18. You should immediately call the branch office for direction if you learn of an accusation of child abuse, regardless of the age of the victim now or at the time of the alleged abuse, even if it occurred before the alleged perpetrator's baptism. The branch office will then give direction based on the circumstances involved in each situation.

See October 1, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding child abuse.

19. Child abuse is a crime. Never suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or other authorities. If you are asked, make it clear that whether to report the matter to the authorities or not is a personal decision for each individual to make and that there are no congregation sanctions for either decision. Elders will not criticize anyone who reports such an allegation to the authorities. If the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so. —Gal. 6:5.

20. When a known child molester moves to another congregation, the Congregation Service Committee should send a letter of introduction with full and complete information about his background and current situation. Any letter from the branch office concerning the child molester should not be photocopied or sent to the new congregation. However, the new congregation should be clearly informed of any restrictions imposed by the branch office. A copy of the letter of introduction should be sent to the branch office.

21. In a case in which a brother denies an allegation of child abuse and he has been accused by only one witness, the following direction is given if he moves to another congregation. The elders should consult the branch office before sending any information regarding the accusation to the elders in the new congregation. It would be helpful if your letter to the branch office provided a detailed summary of the matter and explained the spiritual condition and personal circumstances of the accused and the accuser. With regard to the accused, the following questions should be answered: (1) What is his interaction with children? (2) Does he admit to any activity with the accuser that could have been misinterpreted by the accuser as sexual abuse, or does he claim to have a poor memory of the accusation? (3) What is his response to why the accuser has made the allegation? (4) Has he had to be counseled for any other matters of a sexual nature, such as inappropriate conduct with adult sisters or pornography? (5) What is the level of his spirituality? (6) Do all the elders on the body believe that he can be trusted with children?

The following questions should be answered with regard to the accuser: (1) What is the level of maturity of the child or youth? (2) Is he (or she) describing conduct that one his age would not normally know about? (3) Is the child or his parents known to be serious, mature? (4) Is his memory consistent, or is it intermittent, or does it involve repressed memories? (w95 11/1 pp. 25-26) (5) What is the reputation of the parents? (6) Are they spiritually and emotionally mature? After carefully considering the matter, the branch office will then give you direction as to what information about the allegation should be shared, if any, with the elders of the new congregation.

Taking Brothers to Court

22. At 1 Corinthians 6:1-8, the apostle Paul gave strong counsel that Christians should not take other Christians before secular courts to settle personal disputes that should be settled with the help of the congregation elders.—w97 3/15 pp. 21-22; w86 11/15 p. 20; g83 2/8 pp. 13-15; w73 11/15 pp. 703-704.

- If an individual ignores God's Word on this matter, it may affect his congregation privileges.
- There is no difference between taking an individual brother or sister to court and taking to court a corporation whose owners are all Jehovah's Witnesses. The spirit of 1 Corinthians 6: 1-8 would be violated by relying on the secular courts to settle business disputes among corporations that are made up entirely of brothers.

23. However, there are legal matters over which the congregation does not have authority and which may therefore be taken to a secular court for judgment without violating the principle or the spirit of 1 Corinthians 6:1-8. These include:

- Getting a divorce decree, child custody and support, alimony.

- Obtaining insurance compensation. If a person suffers loss or is injured in or by an automobile owned by a spiritual brother, it might be necessary legally to sue the brother in order to obtain compensation from the brother's insurer.
- Being listed among creditors in bankruptcy procedures.
- Probating wills.
- Certain countersuits. For example, if a worldly creditor sues a brother, it might be necessary for the brother, for his own protection, to file a countersuit even though spiritual brothers may be included in the action.
- If a brother takes legal action against another baptized Witness, it would not be a violation of 1 Corinthians 6:1-8 for the one being sued to defend himself or to countersue. This is true whether the matter was first taken before the elders or not.

When Disasters Occur

See January 6, 2012, letter to all bodies of elders regarding disaster preparedness and response.

24. When the local congregation is affected by a disaster, elders should assist the publishers in the following ways:

- Quickly make assessment of the immediate needs of the brothers and sisters. Group overseers can take the lead to locate each family in their field service group and inquire of their well-being. They will next want to communicate their findings to the coordinator or another elder, if he is not available, even if all is well.
- Take care of the immediate needs by arranging for medical treatment and supplies, such as water, food, and shelter. (John 13:35; Gal. 6:10) If advance warning of a disaster is given, as with some major storms, elders should ensure that everyone is in a safe location and if time permits, should obtain and distribute supplies that may be needed.

- Give spiritual and emotional support to the congregation, and resume congregation meetings as quickly as possible.—km 1/07 p. 4; g96 6/22 p. 17.
- In addition to the immediate physical needs of the brothers, is there property damage? Is damage to Kingdom Halls and individual homes major or minor? (For example, major would be roof destroyed, several feet of water in home; minor would be missing shingles on roof, windows broken, and so forth.) To gather the necessary information, responsible elders in the area may help in assessing the damage. Once this information is gathered, the coordinator or another elder may inform the circuit overseer of the damage and the health condition of the brothers and sisters in the congregation.
- When the circuit overseer has received the report from the elders, he will promptly call the branch office. The branch office will determine whether there is a need for further assistance.
- Other assistance may be provided, such as checking to see what government aid may be available.—w66 2/1 pp. 95-96.

25. If the disaster occurs in another area, elders can take the lead in assisting by doing the following:

- Remember the brothers and sisters in your prayers.—2 Cor. 1:8-11.
- If you wish to provide monetary assistance, you may send your donations to the worldwide work in the land in which you live, either through the congregation or directly. In this way, "the faithful and discreet slave," through the organizational arrangements set in place by the Governing Body, cares for the needs of the worldwide brotherhood in an orderly manner.—Matt. 24:45-47; 1 Cor. 14:33, 40; km 1/05 "Question Box."

- Do not send materials or supplies to the disaster area unless specifically requested by the brothers in charge. This will assure an orderly relief effort and the proper distribution of goods.
- Please do not telephone the branch office just for information, as this can tie up phone lines that are needed to handle incoming calls from the disaster area.

26. Following a disaster, the publishers can make good use of opportunities to comfort others spiritually and, to the extent possible, to help in practical ways according to the need. Aiding the brothers in these ways takes time and effort. However, love for the whole association of brothers will prompt us to do what we can to help those in need.—2 Cor. 8:1-12.

TO ALL CONGREGATIONS IN AUSTRALIA

Dear Brothers:

At Psalm 144:15 we read: "Happy is the people whose God is Jehovah!" We see the truthfulness of this inspired statement when we associate with our brothers and sisters at conventions, assemblies, and congregation meetings. We enjoy a warm atmosphere of peace while we benefit from fine spiritual encouragement from Jehovah and his organization. (Psalm 29:11) What a contrast to those of the world who lack true spiritual guidance and a solid hope for the future!—Isaiah 65:13.

What enables us to maintain our happy spirit? For one thing, we fear Jehovah and we deeply respect the admonition in His Word, including what the Bible says on sexual matters. (1 Corinthians 6:9, 10; Hebrews 13:4) At first, it was not easy for some of us to bring our lives into harmony with Jehovah's elevated standards. We had to make significant changes in our lifestyle before we could qualify for membership in Jehovah's clean, spirit-directed organization. Was it worth the effort? Absolutely! How happy we are to be living in harmony with God's righteous requirements!

In recent weeks, the media in this country has focused attention on the way accusations of child abuse are handled by various religious organizations. Such reports may cause some sincere individuals to ask about the procedures followed by Jehovah's Witnesses. Therefore, we believe that it will be beneficial to review with you our Bible-based position, so that you will "know how you ought to give an answer" to any who may inquire.—Colossians 4:6.

Simply stated, we abhor the sexual abuse of children and will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of his gross sin. (Romans 12:9) We expect the elders to investigate every allegation of child abuse. Even one abused child is one too many. However, in evaluating the evidence, they must bear in mind the Bible's clear direction: "No single witness should rise up against a man respecting any error or any sin . . . . At the mouth of two witnesses or at the mouth of three witnesses the matter should stand good." (Deuteronomy 19:15) Later, this requirement to consider testimony of two or three witnesses was confirmed by Jesus. (Matthew 18:16) Thus, although they investigate every allegation, the elders are not authorized by the Scriptures to take congregational action unless there is a confession or there are two credible witnesses. However, if two persons are witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, their testimony can be deemed sufficient to take action.—1 Timothy 5:19, 24, 25.

What if someone is a proven child molester? The article "Let Us Abhor What is Wicked!" published in the January 1, 1997, issue of The Watchtower, had this to say on page 29: "For the protection of our children, a man known to have been a child molester does not qualify for a responsible position in the congregation. Moreover, he cannot be a pioneer or serve in any other special, full-time service." We take such decisive action because we are concerned with maintaining Bible standards and protecting our children. (1 Timothy 3:2, 9, 10) Everyone in the organization is expected to meet the same requirements, namely, to be clean physically, mentally, morally, and spiritually.—1 Corinthians 7:1; Ephesians 4:17-19; 1 Thessalonians 2:4.

We have long instructed elders to report allegations of child abuse to the authorities where required by law to do so, even where there is only one witness. (Romans 13:1) In any case, the elders know that if the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so.—Galatians 6:5.

At least since 1981, articles have been published in our journals, The Watchtower and Awake!, with a view to educating Jehovah's people and the public on the need to protect children from child abuse. Besides the above-quoted article, there was the article "Help For the Victims of Incest," which appeared in the October 1, 1983, Watchtower. Awake! has featured such articles as "Your Child is in Danger!," "How Can We Protect Our Children?," and "Prevention in the Home" (October 8, 1993) as well as "Child Molesting—Every Mother's Nightmare," in its January 22, 1985 issue.

We believe that we have a strong, Bible-based policy on child abuse. Over the years, as we have noted areas where our policy could be strengthened, we have not hesitated to follow through. At Kingdom Ministry Schools the elders receive ongoing reminders regarding this policy and related matters. And we continue to urge the elders to follow closely the procedures that we have established.

The moral cleanness of the congregation continues to be of vital concern to the "faithful and discreet slave." (Matthew 24:45) As we keep applying Scriptural principles in our lives, our happiness will increase. We trust that these reminders will be helpful to you as you share the Kingdom hope with right-hearted ones. We have much to look forward to in the way of spiritual refreshment as we attend the "Zealous Kingdom Proclaimers" District Conventions. What a happy prospect! Yes, there is no doubt about it. "Happy is the people whose God is Jehovah!"—Psalm 144:15.

Dear Brothers:

Re: Handling Child Abuse Matters - Court Subpoenas

We are writing to seek an urgent response to two questions and matters related to them, as set out below. The Society and the chairman of a judicial committee have received subpoenas to produce confidential records relating to a charge of child abuse, the return date being February 27, 1997.

For the reasons later discussed in this letter, we have determined, subject to your direction otherwise, that the Society should hand the disfellowshipping records to the court without claiming ecclesiastical privilege. We believe that the elders may also want to hand over the congregation's records, but we will leave that for them to decide. We have today discussed the issues briefly with Brother Lloyd Barry of the Governing Body and are forwarding this letter with a request for an urgent response, if that is possible.

This particular case involves a man who was disfellowshipped for homosexual acts with a young boy with whom he studied some years ago. He was disfellowshipped on his own admission and later reinstated. It appears that the brother will deny the charges in court, and the testimony of the elders, and the congregation and Society records will be needed to convict him.

There is little, if any, chance that we would be successful in a claim of ecclesiastical privilege on the records held by the Society and if we seek to claim privilege it will give the impression that we are wanting to cover over the matter. However, if we do hand over the records without putting up a fight, it will tend to undermine the stand taken by the elders when asked to produce the congregation judicial records. Until now the elders have been willing to face a jail sentence rather than disclose confidential information or records.

So, basically, our questions are, where individual elders or the Society are subpoenaed to testify to what they know, and/or records in their possession are the subject of a subpoena:

1 How should the Society respond?

2 How should the elders on the judicial committee respond?

There have been several incidences where elders have been subpoenaed to testify against a brother or a disfellowshipped person who has been accused of child abuse and we have examined the possibilities of claiming ecclesiastical privilege on numerous occasions. Hence, we are not primarily seeking a legal answer to these questions. We are asking for a scriptural viewpoint on the appropriate course to take in view of the confidentiality requirements outlined in the Scriptures and the Society's publications.

In some of the States of Australia legislation exists which grants qualified privilege to ministers of religion. Only matters disclosed in confession, according to the ritual of the particular religion, are privileged. As you would appreciate, not all judicial matters come within this definition, since information is gained by the elders from the testimony of others and circumstances not related to a confession. This may be the case even where there is a confession. We believe that we can extend the claim of privilege to written notes made by the elders where they pertain to an actual confession, but not to records that originate from witnesses testifying in the judicial hearing. When records are forwarded to the Society, these records are distanced from the confession and would not come within the provisions of the various State Acts.

Three of the seven states of Australia have not legislated to provide for ecclesiastical privilege and the common law operating in these states provides no basis for such privilege. To date we have relied on the fact that prosecutors and judges have been reluctant to penalise ministers who have refused to divulge the contents of a confession.

If records held by the Society are subpoenaed, and where it is clear that no privilege exists, are such records to be released? If so, what effect will this have on the elders who may not see the fine line between documents held by the Society and those held by the elders? Even though the legal principles applicable to the records held by the Society are different to those applying to those held by the elders, it would be hard for the brothers to see that difference if the Society were to release their records but encourage the elders to take a different course.

In your Interbranch Memo LLB:LSB of September 16, 1993, on page 2, it is stated: "When elders are forced to go to the hearing, they have been directed to claim ecclesiastical privileg unless ordered to testify by a judge or risk contempt of court. Then, each lder has been allowed to make his own conscientious decision. No one should view any elder in an unfavourable light for whatever decision is made in these instances." This raises several questions.

When the order is to disclose or produce the records of the judicial committee, is it a matter for the elder personally and for his conscience alone?

Why is the subject matter no longer confidential merely because a judge decides it is not confidential? It would seem to us that it is a breach of confidentiality to disclose such matters whether or not a person is ordered to do so by a judge. Perhaps the principle of protection for the brothers and the community permits disclosure of information that would otherwise be confidential. (w 1/1/97, page 29, par 4) Is that the case?

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

The Watchtower has said, "Depending on the law of the land where he lives, the molester may well have to serve a prison term or face other sanctions from the State. The congregation will not protect him from this." (w 1/1/97, page 29) Does this mean that where a brother has committed a criminal offence, such as child abuse, the elders on the judicial committee or the Society, will disclose this information to the proper authorities if required to do so? If that were the case, and the brothers were aware of our stand, it would make a clear distinction between matters that may or may not be disclosed even under duress.

This also raises the question of whether elders should report child abusers or other criminal activities that they are aware of before they are ordered to do so by a court, particularly where they have some indication that the person may be a danger to the congregation or the community.

Of course, there are varying degrees of abuse, and the circumstances that surround the offences may vary greatly. A person may have committed an offence some 10 or 20 years ago, and the victim who is now an adult makes these accusations. The accused may admit the accusations, and while we would not permit him to serve in a responsible position, does that mean that the elders, or the Society, should testify against him in court when ordered to do so? If the elders were to testify and disclose the confidential records of his past, they would also have the opportunity to speak to his altered course of life, if that was a fact.

Where elders become aware of a person's previous record of child abuse, and that person applies for baptism, or to become an unbaptised publisher, should he not be encouraged to clear this matter with the authorities before he is approved, or at least should he not be advised by the elders that if the issue arises later, the elders will have to testify to the authorities.

The general feeling in the community and the legal profession is that churches will cover and protect child abusers, and that has proven to be the case in Christendom. We have also been accused of protecting the abuser when we refuse to reveal confidential matters, or produce confidential records.

Since these issues are arising with greater frequency as the old system decays, we feel that it is important to clarify the questions raised in this letter. It may be that the Society will need to review the extent to which it keeps records and reports of judicial proceedings involving criminal matters. Perhaps the only information we need to keep is the fact and date of the disfellowshipping. If this was the procedure only in matters involving child abuse it may be that this would be clear enough indication to the Society as to his past record. It may also be advisable to make an exception to the re-instatement procedure in these cases, allowing the Society to review the judicial committee's decision prior to any announcement to him or to the congregation. In that case, the elders could send a report from the disfellowshipping records of the congregation.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

There are, then, two issues that seem to cross the issue of confidentiality. Firstly, the need to protect the children in our congregations and the community, and the question of whether elders bear some responsibility if a person is permitted to continue to abuse children. Secondly, the question of where Caesar's law overrides the obligation of confidentiality.

Our questions, then, are:

1. Where it is clear that there is no ecclesiastical privilege available at law, does the obligation of the elder to maintain confidentiality cease when ordered by proper authority to disclose such information, either by personal testimony or the production of records?

2. Where the Society is called upon to produce and/or speak to the documents it holds, what stand should be taken?

We therefore seek an urgent response to these issues.

Please accept our warm Christian love,

Your brother,
H. V. Mouritz

Dear Brothers:

Re: Handling Child Abuse Matters

Thank you for your Interbranch Memo LLJ:LSD October 7, 1997 in response to our Interbranch Memo AB:LLA July 22, 1997, No. 231. We appreci te th points made and the procedure recommended for handling child abuse matters in Aus alia. There are one or two further points on which we now seek some clarification. In the main, these problems arise out of the instructions in the letter to all elders dated March 14, 1997 (US) and May 1, 1997 (Australia).

The legal position in connection with reporting in Australia is set out in our Memo No 231. In effect, with further information w have to hand, only the Community Welfare Act in the Northern Territories requir s elders to report child abuse. That act calls for "any person. . . who believes on reasonable grounds" to report the abuse. He must, "as soon as practicable after obtaining the knowledge that constitutes the reasonable grounds for his so believing, report the fact, and all material facts on which that knowledge is based . . . " We are now c nvinced that s.316 of the NSW Crimes Act, referred to in our letter No. 231, has no force in child abuse matters as ministers of religion in New South Wales are specifically exempted from reporting by s.22(3) of the Children (Care and Protection) Act 1987.

As mentioned in earlier correspondence, Ecclesiastical privilege is not available in all states, and where it is available, it is only on the basis of a confession according to the ritual of the church Not all cases of child abuse involve confession. In fact, those cases where the elders are subpoenaed or congregation records are sought, do not usually involve confession.

We have prepared and attached a flow chart of sorts, that we hope will assist in highlighting some problems that still remain in handling these cases, and in particular the consequ nces of advising the elders in another congregation. when a child abuser moves.

The paragraph numbered 1, in your letter LLJ:LSD of October 7, 1997, refers to the two elders determining if there is any "substance" to the accusation. However, we understand that the procedure for handling gross sins, as set out in ks 91 at pages 97 and 109, calls for the elders to first determine whether there is substance to an accusation. This point is made in the second paragraph on page 109, then three indented points are listed under that main point. The second and third indented points appear to indicate that there are three circumstances under which the body of elders may take further action. The second indented paragraph states that if there are two or three witnesses or a confession, then the body of elders would appoint a judicial committee. If there is insufficient evidence, but serious questions have been raised, then two elders would be assigned, it is assumed, by the body of elders, to investigate the matter. Thus, the proposed method mentioned under point 1. in both our memo No. 231 and your reply of October 7, 1997, that is, to have the elder receiving the accusation and the presiding overseer make the investigation prior to meeting with the body of elders, is a departure from normal procedure. Do we understand this correctly?

To follow the regular procedures outlined in ks 91 in handling child abuse matters or other criminal offences that put an individual under obligation to notify the authorities, the whole body of elders would need to have sufficient knowledge of the matter to determine the qualifications of those who will be appointed to serve on the committee. It would appear that that knowledge would be sufficient to constitute the "reasonable grounds" referred to in the reporting Acts. If they did not have "reasonable grounds", they would not appoint a committee. Thus if there is a reporting law applicable in that state, all of the elders would be under obligation to report. The others would have reasonable excuse not to report if one or two members of the body did so. Australia has just one small state where reporting laws apply, but there is quite extensive pressure from some groups for mandatory reporting in other states.

Another problem arises when a body of elders is aware of the details of an abuse matter and are not required by the state where they reside to report the matter. The offender now moves to a state where reporting is mandatory and information is forwarded to the new congregation in harmony with the Society's instructions in the March 14 letter. Perhaps the offender is not disfellowshipped, and is even making good progress with the congregation who is no longer concerned over the past abuse. Now the elders in the new congregation are under obligation to report the matter, since they now have reasonable grounds to believe that an abuse has been committed and has not been reported. So, even though it may be some time ago, and no one in the family is wanting to pursue the matter in the courts, the elders will still be obliged to report it.

This raises an additional question concerning cases where the offences were committed before baptism. The congregation may view the sin as being "dead works" and covered by the ransom sacrifice. However, if the state requires such offences to be reported, should the elders make the report even though they have not handled the matter and the sin was before he came to a knowledge of the truth? It may be a little difficult to report a person who is in good standing and accepted for baptism and against whom the congregation will take no action. Likewise, if the sin was committed after baptism, was handled by the congregation some 10 to 15 years ago, and the offender has lived an exemplary life since that time, should the elders now report this offence because he is now in a state that requires reporting of these offences? How far do we go in obeying

Caesar's law? Or does this come under the heading of "not protecting" the molester from the consequences of his past sins as mentioned on page 29 of The Watchtower January 1, 1997?

Step 2, in your Letter of October 7, 1997 and our Memo No. 231 both agree that the elders should then check with the Society to determine whether reporting laws apply. If they do, then the matter should be reported and a record kept in the file. There are two points arising out of this. Firstly, we believe that the accused should be told that the elders are obliged to make a report. We believe it would be better if a direction was given to the elders published in the publications that would notify all the publishers that there may be times when elders will have to report criminal offences, where required by law to do so. Secondly, we are not sure why only a simple statement should be placed in the file. If the matter is to be reported, it is quite likely that the elders will later be called to testify when it is brought to court. If that happens, then would it not be better to have a complete record on file of the contents of the statement made to the authorities? Is there any reason that we have overlooked for not having a complete record of the statement given on file?

In the third last paragraph of your letter of October 7, 1997, when referring to our concerns that ecclesiastical privilege may be lost when the elders are conveying information to another body of elders when a molester moves, you suggest that the elders simply write that "[the abuser] is known as a child molester." However, the March 14 letter says: "The secretary should write on behalf of the elders in the old congregation to the new congregation's body of elders and outline this brother's background and what the elders in the old congregation have been doing to assist him. Any needed cautions should be provided to the new congregation's body of elders." We understand that this information is necessary to enable the elders to give adequate protection to the congregation, as well as help in the abuser's restoration. If we reduce the statement to the words suggested, are we not, at least to some extent, defeating the purpose of the communication?

The March 14 letter also makes the point that an individual "known" to be a child molester has reference to the perception of that one in the community and in the Christian congregation. But where no disciplinary action has been taken by the old congregation, possibly because of a move during the investigatory or judicial process, or because there was insufficient evidence, then we could not say that that person is a "known child abuser," since the only persons having the knowledge are those on the committee. The elders may also need to be very careful to not imply that a person is a "convicted" child abuser, that is, known in the sense that the world views a "known child abuser", and thus make ourselves liable to a charge of defamation. If the only communication the elders receive is a brief statement saying that the person is a "known child abuser", they may assume that the matter has been handled by a court of law, or that he is a current abuser, when in fact he may have committed a single offence many years ago.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

Another issue, then, is the report that is to be made to the Society, referred to in the March 14 letter under the heading "Privileges of Service in the Congregation." The letter calls for a report on any person now serving in some Society appointed position who is known to have been guilty of child abuse in the past. The penultimate paragraph calls for detailed specific information. This information is forwarded to the Service Desk, and it is this report that puts the officers of the Society in possession of knowledge that may make them liable to be called upon to testify in court. At the time of writing of our Memo No. 231, we were advised by Crown Prosecutors that the Crimes Act in NSW requires a person to report serious crimes. Since that time, we have determined that under the Children (Care and Protection) Act, ministers of religion are exempt in New South Wales, and that should protect the Bethel brothers from reporting, but it will not protect them from testifying, or producing records when subpoenaed. As for attorney-client privilege referred to, that would only protect the one brother in Bethel who holds a practicing certificate, but he would certainly not be able to handle all aspects of a case, as some involve questions of a service nature. In addition, he is not always present, and other brothers who know legal matters but who do not hold a current practicing certificate may have to answer the elder's questions when he contacts the Society. As far as the brothers at Bethel are concerned, the problem does not lie in the area of reporting, but is related to subpoenas to produce records, such as disfellowshipping notices and other communications. Since ecclesiastical privilege can only be claimed in connection with confessions, it cannot be claimed in all cases of child abuse. Where the information comes by way of confession, we can try and claim that the disfellowshipping notice is part of the "confessional ritual," but this would be a question yet to be determined by a court of law in this country.

We do appreciate very much the careful thought that has been put into the response to our questions on this subject, as well as the large amount of time that has been taken to sort these matters out, and we want to thank you for this. We would appreciate your further observations on the points made above.

We send our warm Christian love

Dear Brothers:

Consideration has been given to a number of questions that have been raised about how we deal with those who have been guilty of child abuse. We are providing the branches with comments on a number of the questions that have been asked. No doubt similar questions have arisen in your area. This will supplement the letter and guidelines that were sent to the branches in 1997. These guidelines are for branch use only to help your servic desk(s) in deciding on cases that come to your attention.

1. Question: When reviewing the qualifications of former child abuser who is already serving as an elder or ministerial servant or who is being recommended for this privilege, we understand that the branch office could consider retaining or appointing him if the wrongdoing occurred many years ago and there is no evidence that he has repeated the sin since then and presently has the congregation's re pect Do we have the correct understanding on this matter?

   Answer:In the situation described above, repentance and forgiveness are important factors to be considered when the recommendation is to retain one who is already serving or to recomm nd him, if the sin occurred many years ago. Of course, one must have the r spect of the congregation and his pattern of life must harmonize with Bible principles since the wrongdoing occurred. It is best to wait at least 20 years since the last i cident of child abuse was committed before retaining or appointing former child abusers.

2. Question: Would there be exceptions to the above guideline? (Would it make a difference, for example, if 20 years had not passed but he had engaged in the sin before his baptism? Would i make a difference if 20 years had not passed but the elders unanimously recommend his appointment and his victim(s) have forgiven the abuser, perhaps even writing a letter to the branch showing support of him or objecting to his removal? Would it make a difference if 20 years had not passed but the degree of wrongdoing was restricted to a few "abusive acts," as noted on page 10 in the footnote to the October 8, 1993, Awake!, but porneia was not involved?)

   Answer: There may be exceptions if a period of twenty years has not yet passed and the individual engaged in the sin before his baptism. It would be well to consider what the apostle Paul wrote at 1 Corinthians 6:9, 10 in dealing with such cases. In reference to whether it would make a difference if twenty years had not passed but the elders unanimously recommend the appointment, the individual has been forgiven for his sin, and the one that was wronged even writes a letter to the branch indicating his support for the individual, then the direction given in The Watchtower of May 1, 1996 would apply. The Questions from Readers, explained the application of Philippians 3:13 and this would have a bearing on the matter. Would it make a difference if twenty years had not passed but the degree of wrongdoing was restricted to what is defined as loose conduct? If a long time has elapsed, but less than twenty years, if the brother has been making straight paths for his feet, leading to healing, consideration could be given to such recommendation. (Hebrews 12:12, 13; James 5:15, 16) In other words, if it is clear that the individual has been restored and his pattern of life over the years shows that he has measured up to Scriptural requirements, it may be that he can serve, providing there is no current outcry. Each case may be decided on its own merits and the circumstances involved.

3. Question: If the wrongdoing occurred over 20 years ago and in general there is no public outcry, would we prevent a former child abuser from serving solely on the basis of the victim's (or relatives') strong feelings against him?

   Answer: If the wrongdoing occurred over twenty years ago and there are still some strong feelings against him by either the one wronged or his relatives, it would be better to wait as long as such strong feelings persist.

4. Question: If it is decided that a former child abuser could not serve because a period of 20 years has not passed, might he be appointed after 20 years if recommended and the circumstances are favorable?

   Answer: If it was decided that a former wrongdoer could not serve because the period of twenty years had not passed, he might be appointed after that, if he is recommended and the circumstances are favorable.

5. Question: If the branch decides that a former child abuser could not serve, could he be given some privileges in the congregation whether or not a period of 20 years has passed? If so, what might these privileges include? (Some have equated a former child abuser with being in the same position with regard to privileges as one who entered into an adulterous marriage. Is such appropriate? Might a former abuser at some point in time qualify to carry the microphones, conduct a meeting for field service, or offer a prayer? If not normally assigned, might he conduct a meeting for service when it is only attended by sisters?)

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

Answer: If he has the respect of the congregation and there are no complaints against him, then he may be extended certain privileges if he has been endeavoring to make himself available.

6. Question: The March 14, 1997, letter to "Bodies of Elders," a copy of which was sent to all branches, requires that the elders of the former congregation send information about a former child abuser to the new congregation. Is it possible to qualify what is stated there if the sin took place 20 or more years ago and the branch has judged that he can remain in a position of trust? Must the elders of the new congregation be informed of his background in these situations? Or would it be better for the elders of the old congregation to follow the direction in the March 14, 1997 letter, to send this information to the new congregation, regardless of how long ago the sin occurred and regardless of the fact that the Society views him as qualified by appointing or retaining him as a servant?

   Answer: If the branch has judged that he remains in a position of trust, there is no need to pass on information regarding his past wrongdoing or reveal details. The branch office generally knows the details anyway. So if he is viewed as one qualified and is retained as a servant, then the elders in the new congregation would likely be getting a favorable letter of recommendation, but without any reference to what occurred twenty or more years ago.

It is hoped that this information will be helpful to you in dealing with questions that may occasionally arise in your branch territory. This is to be used by those on the service desk as guidelines for answering correspondence. However, when writing, you should not mention this 20 year period. These guidelines are given simply to assist the branch to make decisions in these matters. Thank you very much.

Dear Brothers:

Your letter AB April 28, 1998, No. 212 made a suggestion for a possible Question Box in your edition of Our Kingdom Ministry on the need under some circumstances for elders to inform the secular authorities when they learn of a brother or sister being involved in a serious crime.

After carefully considering the matter it has been concluded that if the Branch Committee in Australia continues to recommend publishing the suggested material, then it would be appropriate for the branch to feature the suggested question and answer as outlined in your letter 212. It will not be necessary to schedule the information to be considered on a service meeting program, nor to have an elder just read the question and answer. We will leave it to the brothers to read the information presented and suggest you proceed no further on the matter than that at this time.

Please be assured of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

■ Literature offer for April and May: Subscriptions to The Watchtower and Awake! for $10.00 each for one year or $5.00 each for six months. Have the Require brochure available for interested people for a contribution of 50c, and endeavour to start home Bible studies. June: Knowledge That Leads to Everlasting Life for $1.50.

■ The question has been asked whether elders should supply information to secular authorities when they learn that a brother or sister has been involved in a serious crime. Information provided to elders is treated as confidential and is not discussed with others who are not involved. (w71 4/1, pp. 222-4) All Christians are counselled by God's Word to be law-abiding, and they are to pay to Caesar what is Caesar's where there is no conflict with God's laws. (Matt. 22:21; w90 11/1 pp. 10-15, 18-28) When Christians obey Caesar's laws that are not in conflict with God's laws, they have no need to "fear" being punished by the authorities as law-breakers, and can maintain a good conscience. (Rom. 13:3, 4) If an elder learns of some serious crime on the part of a member of the congregation, they may, in some circumstances, be obliged to report the matter, or provide information to secular authorities. It is not the responsibility of the elders to enforce Caesar's laws, but the very nature of some crimes demand that they be reported, or that they be handled by Caesar, for this is the "arrangement of God." (Rom. 13:2) Even in such cases, it is important that the elders maintain confidentiality to the extent possible, and elders should always contact the Society before providing any information on confidential matters to secular authorities. Elders prove to be a "hiding place from the wind" to all in the congregation who are truly repentant. (Isa. 32:2) They try to readjust such a person, no matter how serious the sin committed. (Gal. 6:1) However, while Jehovah forgives repentant sinners, there may be consequences of the sinner's actions that cannot be avoided. Depending on the law of the land, the sinner may have to serve a prison term or face other sanctions. The congregation will not protect him from this.—w97 1/1, p. 29.

■ The Question Box in the March, 1998 issue of Our Kingdom Ministry emphasized the need to maintain appropriate dress and grooming when visiting Bethel. Therein it stated, "Remember the name Bethel means 'House of God,' so our dress, grooming, and conduct should be similar to what is expected of us when attending meetings for worship at the Kingdom Hall." Publishers are reminded that when inviting their Bible students or other visitors to Bethel they should ensure that they too are appropriately dressed, especially if associating with the Bethel family in the dining room. It is important that this standard be adhered to, thus avoiding embarrassment for all those concerned. We want your visit to Bethel to be upbuilding for you and any interested ones you invite.

■ Congregation secretaries should maintain an adequate supply of the following pioneer forms: Application for Regular Pioneer Service (S-205), Application for Auxiliary Pioneer Service (S-205b), and Notification for Discontinuing Regular Pioneer Service (S-206). These can be ordered on the Literature Order Form (S-14). Maintain at least a one-year supply. Review the regular pioneer application form to make sure it is complete. If applicants cannot recall the exact date of their baptism, they should estimate the date and keep a record of it.

Do You Have a Standing Order?

[1] Have you ever gone to a meeting for field service and discovered that you had no magazines in your witnessing bag? Well, recall the September 1995 Our Kingdom Ministry insert entitled "Make the Best Use of Our Magazines." It told us to "have a definite magazine order," stating: "Place a realistic order with the brother handling magazines for a definite number of copies of each issue. In this way, you and your family will have a regular and adequate supply of magazines." Have you done this?

[2] Why not place a standing order for magazines? You will feel a greater responsibility to distribute the magazines week by week, and you will experience increased joy in doing so. If you already have a standing order, re-evaluate whether you are obtaining the amount that you need for an average month in the ministry. Of course, we want to be faithful in picking up our order every week and should feel an obligation to do so. If you are going to be away from the congregation for an extended time, let the magazine servant know whether you want him to release your magazines to someone else until you return.

[3] The same insert quoted in paragraph 1 also said that we should "schedule a regular magazine day." Can you support the weekly Magazine Day? As shown on the 1999 Calendar of Jehovah's Witnesses, this is every Saturday of the year! Do not underestimate the importance of distributing The Watchtower and Awake! When we make an effort to share fully in magazine activity, we are "bringing good news of something better" to our neighbours. —Isa. 52:7.

TIME SENSITIVE

SERVICE COMMITTEE

Re: Privacy Laws and Proposed Revision of S-77 Form

Dear Brothers:

We are writing about recent developments with regard to our obligations under the Privacy laws. It seems that we will need to take steps urgently to reduce the amount of material in our files and in the files of the congregations. We will first outline the situation and then present our proposals.

In earlier correspondence from the year 2001, and in particular our letters LLA August 28, 2001, No. 354, and LLA January 8, 2002, No. 164, we advised the Publishing Committee and Coordinator's Committee of the difficulties in Australia following the introduction of the Privacy Amendment (Private Sector) Act, 2000 ("the Act"). Organizations that are affected by the Act must provide an individual with any personal information the organization holds about him if he requests it. The organization can only hold "sensitive" information about a person with his consent. "Sensitive" information is defined to include matters relating to religious, ethnic, and sexual practices.

Initially, we have made use of a provision that exempts a "small business" from complying with the Act. Under the Act, a "small business" is one with an annual turnover for the previous year of $3,000,000 (Australian) or less. It has been our position that turnover does not include contributions or donations. However, the Privacy Commissioner has ruled against us on this question, and we are appealing his decision. It is highly likely that in a few weeks' time we will be directed to comply with the Act. We can appeal this decision, but we doubt that it will succeed. An appeal with resultant publicity may give the impression that we have something to hide

The application of these principles to the branch and the congregations will affect the way we collect and retain information about judicial matters. Our immediate concern is that the Privacy Commissioner's involvement arises out of a request made by a disfellowshipped apostate. We believe that this person will advertise the fact that we have been forced to give him access to documents we hold concerning him, and he will invite others also to request access to documents we may hold about them. While there are other records held by both the branch office and congregations that will need further consideration, we would like to give our first and immediate attention to records relating to judicial matters.

In your letter GAO:AT January 3, 2002 No. 223S, in anticipation of the possibility of our need to comply with the legislation, you wrote that if we felt that there was an exception that needed to be made for us to comply with the law we should write the Service Committee of the Governing Body and express what adjustments we felt would be necessary for our branch and the reasons why they are necessary. "Otherwise," you stated, "we feel that you should follow the policy outlined herein." Your letter included some guidelines provided to our brothers in Europe who are in a similar situation.

On disciplinary matters you stated: "If you are not allowed to keep records accumulated in the past, discard the current Disfellowshipped Persons Forms (S-77) and (S-79a/b) that do not comply with the law. Adjustments can be made as outlined in this letter to have your files conform with the law on processing personal data."

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

We are enclosing a suggested revision of the S-77 form for use in Australia. It is designed to minimize the information contained on the form, and to avoid the recording of undesirable expressions when completing the form. This particularly applies to item 2 where we have replaced the request for a summation and explanation with a series of check boxes. We have chosen to list the disfellowshipping offences by name rather than citing a scripture text. In some cases, a scripture text, such as 1 Corinthians 6:9, will include more than one offence. For example, a disfellowshipped person who has committed adultery may claim that citing the scripture implies that he is a homosexual. The list of offences is taken from *ks*91 and we understand that the S-77 would need to be amended when ks91 is revised, or when we receive other instructions related to offences.

We have also made some amendments to the instructions, and we propose to put them in a separate document, so that if we have to provide someone with a copy of the S-77 form, the instructions would not be included, since they do not form a part of the record concerning the individual. The revised instruction sheet asks the judicial committee to attach a separate detailed summary. This summary will be discarded when the matter has been considered and finalized by the Service Desk. If there is a need for any information in the attached summary that should be retained, the Service Desk will make a carefully worded and brief comment on the back of the revised S-77. The Service Desk will then send the judicial committee a copy of the form along with the direction that all other documents should be destroyed, retaining only the branch's stamped copy of the S-77 in their confidential files. The Service Desk will also destroy all other unnecessary related records.

The Act does not prevent us from keeping records, as long as they are retained for a primary purpose. We can retain them as long as we believe that we have further use for them. We have therefore listed our proposal to set out our primary purposes for retaining records on the back of the revised S-77 form. We do not need the individual's permission to keep this information, but we must give him access to it if he requests it.

The Service Department and Legal Department in the branch are in agreement with this procedure. The Branch Committee has also considered it, and all present are in agreement with it. We have attached copies of the proposed revised S-77-E Au, and the additional instruction sheet S-77a-E Au.

We believe that this will enable the congregations to retain sufficient information to assist them when applications are made for reinstatement and will minimize the information that will be available to disfellowshipped persons who request access to records relating to them.

We have headed this letter "Time Sensitive" because we hope to be able to minimize the records of persons who may be potential trouble-makers before direction is given by the Privacy Commissioner. Since we expect the Commissioner to do that by the end of the month, we are asking for any suggestions and comments you may have as well as your approval as soon as possible. As stated above, there are other matters that we will need to consider. We hope to do this shortly, and we will write again about them in due course.

Please accept our warm Christian love.

Obscene speech (Eph. 5:3-5; Col. 3:8)
Porneia (Lev. 20:10, 13, 15, 16; Rom. 1:24, 26, 27, 32; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Deut. 23:17, 18)
Adamant refusal to provide for family when having the means to provide (1 Tim. 5:8)
Slander or reviling (Lev. 19:16; 1 Cor. 6:10)
Stealing or fraud (Lev. 6:2, 4; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Eph. 4:28)

Disassociation:

Non-neutral activity (Isa. 2:4; John 6:15; 17:16)
Joined another religion (1 John 2:19)
Unrepentant failure to abstain from blood (Gen 9:4; Acts 15:20, 28, 29)

- ☐ Did you fill out an original Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) form and make one copy, retaining the copy for the congregation's confidential file?

Summation

- ☐ Did you provide a detailed summation of the case, explaining what took place? Did you include the reasons why you judged the person to be unrepentant?
  - ☐ In the case of disassociation Did you explain what led to the person's decision, how he responded to efforts to assist him, and what convinced you that his position was adamant?
  - ☐ If the matter involved child abuse: Did you provide complete details, including names and dates of birth of those involved? Did you explain the nature and extent of the abuse and how it was substantiated?
- ☐ Did you send the original S-77 form along with the summation in a special blue envelope to the branch office?

Filing

- ☐ When you received the stamped S-77 form, did you place it in a sealed envelope in the congregation's confidential file and destroy the congregation's copy?
- ☐ Did the judicial committee chairman destroy all other correspondence, except any letter of disassociation or resignation, as directed on page 2 of the S-77 form?
- ☐ Did the chairman sign and date page 2 of the S-77 form?

REINSTATEMENTS AND DEATHS

- ☐ When a disfellowshipped or disassociated individual is reinstated or dies, did the secretary sign, check the appropriate box, and date the bottom of the stamped S-77 form?
- ☐ Did the secretary make a photocopy of both sides of the S-77 form for the congregation and mail the original to the branch office in a special blue envelope?
- ☐ Has the congregation's copy of the S-77 form been retained in the congregation's confidential file?

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

APPEALS

- When an individual appeals his disfellowshipping, the chairman of the judicial committee should promptly contact the circuit overseer, who will then designate elders to serve on the appeal committee.

- The judicial committee should complete the S-77 forms (except for the date of announcement of disfellowshipping) and give them, along with whatever written records it has from the judicial hearing(s), to the chairman of the appeal committee prior to the appeal hearing.—See ks91 p. 125.

- The appeal committee's report is to be in the form of a letter addressed to the branch office, using the appeal committee chairman's mailing address for the return address.

- It is to be signed by all the members of the appeal committee, with each one's name and the name of his congregation typed below his signature.

- The letter should provide a detailed summation of the appeal hearing and include comments that directly address the following questions: (1) Was there a Scriptural basis for the disfellowshipping? (2) Was there acceptable evidence to establish the wrongdoing? Explain. (3) Was the wrongdoer unrepentant at the time of the hearing by the original judicial committee? What convinces the appeal committee of this?

- If the appeal committee upholds the original committee's decision to disfellowship the individual, the appeal committee should make certain that the S-77 form is filled out completely, including the date of announcement of disfellowshipping and then mail the original form along with the appeal committee's letter to the branch office in the same special blue envelope.

- If the original basis for disfellowshipping was invalid but other valid grounds for disfellowshipping exist, new S-77 forms should be made out by the original committee, giving the proper information. The original form along with the initial S-77 form and the appeal committee's letter should be sent to the branch office.

- If both committees agree that the person should not be disfellowshipped, the individual should not be told this. Rather, the appeal committee should send the branch office the original S-77 form along with separate letters from both the original committee and the appeal committee that supply sufficient details to give a clear picture of the reason(s) for their conclusions. Thereafter, the branch office will provide its comments.

- If the appeal committee and the original committee are in disagreement, the appeal committee should send the original S-77 form to the branch office with a letter giving the reasons for its conclusion and should include a letter from the original committee that expresses that committee's reasons for disagreement.

- When the matter has been finalized: All written records from both the original and appeal committees should be destroyed. Only the stamped S-77 form should be retained in the congregation's confidential file. See also the instructions above under the heading "Filing".

TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS

Re: Letters of introduction

Dear Brothers:

Over the years, guidelines have been given regarding letters of introduction concerning publishers, regular pioneers, elders and ministerial servants, child molesters, and those in a disfellowshipped or disassociated state who move into another congregation's territory. So that these guidelines may be more easily followed, we are listing below some key elements that should be included in all letters of introduction as well as some situations in which additional information should be provided. This letter should be retained in the congregation's permanent file of policy letters.

Format: A letter of introduction should always contain the following information: (1) the date of the letter, (2) the previous congregation's full name and complete mailing address, (3) the new congregation's full name and complete mailing address, and (4) signatures of the Congregation Service Committee, with their names typed or printed underneath their signatures. (be p. 71-3) Some also find it helpful to use a regarding line (as shown above) so that the recipient may easily identify the purpose of the letter.

Congregation publisher: When a publisher (active or inactive) moves to another congregation, a letter of introduction and the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards should be promptly sent to the congregation where the publisher moved. (The last record card of an inactive publisher should be retained indefinitely by the congregation where the publisher moved.) If the previous service committee knows where the publisher moved, they may take the initiative and send these items without waiting for a formal request from the new congregation. What information should be conveyed in the letter of introduction? Ask yourself: What information would we want to receive if this person were moving into our congregation? (Matt. 7:12) Clearly state the publisher's full name, the names of any immediate family members, and any privileges the publisher or his family members have enjoyed, such as assignments on the Theocratic Ministry School, working with the Regional Building Committee, auxiliary or regular pioneer service, and so forth. These elements should be included in all letters of introduction.

If the person has recently been judicially reproved and is still under restrictions, list the restrictions that are still in effect so that the new congregation's elders may monitor the publisher's progress and gradually restore his privileges as appropriate. On the other hand, if the person was reproved in the distant past but is not presently under restrictions, there may be no need to mention past judicial action unless the offense involved child molestation, adulterous marriage, or some other notorious wrongdoing.

Regular pioneer: In addition to the above guidelines, the regular pioneer appointment (S-202) letter should be forwarded to the congregation where the pioneer is moving, along with a letter of introduction and the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards. The secretary of the new congregation will make the needed adjustments to the form and send it to the branch office. A revised appointment letter will then be sent to the new congregation. If a regular pioneer moves out of the branch territory, the pioneer appointment letter should be mailed to your branch office with a cover letter providing the date of the move and the name, city, state, and country of the congregation where the pioneer will be associating.

Elder or ministerial servant: If the elders recommend to the new congregation that a brother be reappointed to serve in the same capacity as that which he had been serving, this should be clearly stated in the letter of introduction. It should also state the total length of time he has served in an appointed capacity as well as list the assignments in which he has experience. If the elders do not recommend that he be reappointed, two elders from his current congregation should meet with the brother before he moves to explain to him why he is not being recommended.

Child molester: It is imperative that a letter of introduction be promptly sent when an individual who is known to have molested a minor and whose privileges are still restricted moves to another congregation. This should be done even if the abuse took place many years ago—even before baptism or when the person was in a disfellowshipped state. The letter to the elders in the new congregation should outline the individual's background, what the elders have been doing to protect minors and to assist him, and their present experience with him. In all such cases, a copy of the letter of introduction must be sent to the branch office in a special blue envelope.

If there are restrictions imposed on his theocratic activity, these must be clearly communicated to the new congregation's body of elders. Rather than merely forwarding copies of past letters of introduction, the elders should prepare their own letter of introduction with both the background and the current information regarding the person. If the elders have received a letter from the branch office regarding the individual, they should not send that letter, or a copy of it, to the new congregation. However, the elders should quote pertinent direction received from the branch office in their own letter of introduction for the benefit of the elders in the new congregation and for the protection of minors. The letter of introduction should be retained in the congregation's confidential file where it can be available for review by any elder.

Disfellowshipped or disassociated person: Although a formal letter of introduction and the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) cards are not sent when a disfellowshipped individual moves into a territory held by another congregation, a letter may be sent to inform those elders of the presence of the disfellowshipped individual, and to provide information that may be helpful to those elders. This will assist those elders to contact the individual annually to offer spiritual assistance.

Carefully following these guidelines will help you to protect the flock and to render needed spiritual assistance to Jehovah's precious sheep. We pray that Jehovah will continue to "give you peace constantly in every way" as you faithfully serve him in these last days.—2 Thess. 3:16.

Dear Brothers

We as members of the committee who were hearing the appeal for reinstatement by BCH would like to give you an up to date picture. as we see matters thus far. We find it necessary to do this due to the fact that BCH has now moved to St.George congregation, Queensland West.

In our last meeting with BCH before he left for St. George, we were right at the point of recommending to you Brothers that we felt he was now ready for reinstatement, due to his showing, outwardly, all the correct manifestations of repentance, along with a very strong desire to be part of Jehovah's people again.

We did however, have just one matter that we wanted to follow up with you brothers, before we would make the recommendation to you for his reinstatement. The matter we wanted to clarify, you replied to in your letter dated 3rd February 1992. Thank you.

From your reply it appears that BCH is still continuing to be untruthful in that he is still withholding information, and he still appears to be understating wherever possible the gravity of the wrongs for which he was disfellowshipped. Therefore, we have still got reservations about recommending his reinstatement.

The society has advised that it is not our responsibility to extract a point by point confession from BCH Our reservations are not based solely on his witholding information to us alone. A call from an elder in St.George reveals he is still not letting them know all the all they need to know. It appears he denies the porneia by saying he has never actually had intercourse outside of his marriage. We were under the impression after our last meeting with BCH that he was facing up to his wrongdoings and was able to display genuine repentance for them. However by his denial or witholding information from the brothers in St. George we can't help but feel his repentance is not genuine. How can a person be truly repentant for a sin they claimed never happened ie. Porneia.

We feel he is still holding to a pattern of deceit in the amount of information he has revealed to the brothers in St. George.

We know you brothers in Mareeba are fully aware of the pattern of deceit that we speak of, but for the benefit of the brothers in St. George, who will also receive a copy of this letter we would like to give a synopsis of this pattern as follows:

1. Upon his arrival, in his first appeal he stated the grounds for his disfellowshipping were 'Going against theocratic order' only.
As a result of discussions with Brother Jim Bennett, who made a special point of seeing us whilst he was in Brisbane, and as you know served on the committe that heard BCH appeal against his disfellowshipping, we discovered there were more grounds for his disfellowshipping that he did not disclose to us. As follows:

1. Loose conduct --- With Sis REDACTED of which to us he subsequently denied until we were able to substantiate.

2. Lying --- To original committee and Appeal committee of which he feels he was cajoled into in order to appease the committees so they would be more lenient. i.e. 'tell them what they want to hear so they will be happy.'

3. Porniea --- With his daughters, to which he has vehemently denied, until recently when he conceded he interferred with one of them on a couple of occasions. Nevertheless he still claims that he has only interferred with one of them, whereas your recent letter states clearly that both of his daughters were sexually molested and that BCH admitted it in your hearings with him.

With all of the above information, while we are not trying to 'rake over old coals' as it were but we are concerned about the way he still seems to be holding to a pattern of lying.

To add to this, throughout the duration of his stay in our area, we have had to counsel him several times regarding his communication with brothers and sisters in the congregations in the Brisbane area. Especially with Sister REDACTED the person with whom he originally schemed to remarry after they had both dismissed their existing partners. On each occasion we counseled him for communicating with her, he would deny the allegation until we had to substantiate it with evidence or witnesses.

We were hoping just recently that his pattern of deceit had ceased and that he was coming to terms with the need to speak the truth at all times. But sadly, we now have reservations. There are a few other reasons for our reservations also, and if you so desire, we can forward these on to you. Our grave concern is reproach that would come upon Jehovah's name in your area if immediately upon his reinstatement he were to marry [redacted]. As you are no doubt aware, they have both subsequently obtained divorces from their respective marriage mates, both it appears on very tenuous or technical grounds, thus making a mockery of Jehovah's arrangement for marriage.

If you are able to inform the Brothers in St George on any further matters in this regard, I'm sure they would be most grateful, as they hear further requests from BCH for reinstatement. We do have a file that has been compiled on the whole matter as far as we are concerned that we can hand over to either yourselves or the brothers in St. George if you so require.

As we hand the matter over to You Brothers, our prayer is that Jehovah's spirit be ever present to guide you through difficult matters such as these. We pray that the final result will be a shout of praise to Jehovah's name in your area and a suitable answer will be provided to the one taunting him.

Christian Love
Your Brothers,

J.Beck .....

P.S. We would like to inform you brothers in Mareeba a little further background into BCH going to St. George.

He informed us his main reason for going there was to follow our suggestion, which was to keep his distance from sister REDACTE REDACTED A rather extreme move we thought, but if it was a sign of his repentance, well so be it. But as it turns out, he and his wife were actually helped into the truth in St George. The brother who is part of the committee that is handling his appeal (Brother Bernard Kloos) is the brother who actually studied with him in the first place.

Our concern is that brother Kloos, who rightly has a sympathetic ear, may lose the objective behind our making BCH wait until he shows evidence of genuine repentance by being truthful. A further reason for concern is that brother Kloos has stated in a phone call that he felt we were taking too long to reinstate BCH

We hope this background information will assist your communications with St. George.

PPS. A copy of this entire letter will be going to branch office.

Dear Brothers:

We wish to thank you for taking the time to clearly set out your observations regarding the plea for reinstatement by Mr. BCH BCH You have handled this matter very thoroughly and the brothers in the Mareeba and St. George congregations will now need to follow through in handling any further pleas for reinstatement.

Thank you for your fine cooperation and we send our warm Christian love and greetings.

Your Ref. SD:SSA July 12, 1991

Dear Brothers:

In reply to your letter, with the above reference, regarding correspondence you received from BCH we are happy to make this reply.

It is true some time has passed by since BCH disfellowshipping from the congregation, on the grounds of "Loose Conduct and Lying". A further two grounds were added by an appeal committee, namely, Porneia and Malicious Slander".

Of the above grounds for which he was disfellowshipped, at this point in time, he still refuses to acknowledge the porneia he committed with his daughters, and still feels the lying charges are not valid. He says they are not valid on the basis, that he was forced into telling lies to the committee under pressure. He has maintained this stance all through the reinstatement hearings we have had with him.

Earlier pleas for reinstatement have been declined by the original committee in Mareeba, for the following reasons:
1. The first plea was too soon, and the case had some widespread notoriety.

2. The second plea was declined by the original committee on the basis that Mr BCH was still having communications with the sister with which he committed the loose conduct. (This was very serious because both the original committee and the appeal committee, were convinced that this couple were conspiring to divorce their mates and marry each other.)

3. The last plea made in September last year was also declined for the above reasons.
Also, to add to the situation, both he and the sister involved have obtained their legal divorces from their mates. Both, it appears, on very tenuous scriptural grounds.
He: In her case, her husband committed a number of acts of adultery of which she knew, (This prior to their coming into the truth) but, there was one occasion, during that time, that she did know of which subsequently came to light, and this is the basis for the divorce.

Coincidentally, BCH has obtained a divorce on the same tenuous grounds. For multiple acts of adultery performed some 16 years prior, and before coming into the truth.
In both cases their mates did not want to be divorced.

At this meeting (Late Jan, early Feb '91) he was also counseled for failing to inform the brothers that he is in a disfellowshipped state, especially when attending a strange congregation, as he was seen shaking the brothers hands, greeting them.

COPY

You may be interested to know BCH has since acknowledged to us the mistake he made in writing to you brothers, in stating he had not received an answer to his September reinstatement plea. The emotional turmoil he is going through definitely seems to affect his memory.

Toward the end of April we had another meeting with him, at his request. Once again we discussed his situation. On this occasion we were aware that the Sister with whom he committed the loose conduct, who is in a neighbouring congregation to us, was being met by a judicial committee, for an allegation of lying.
(Information came to light via BCH son in Mareeba, that BCH his son and this sister spent the night together in a tent, with he and the sister sleeping beside each other, whereas, they told the original committee that they spent the night in different lodgings.)
At this meeting, in April this year, she admitted lying to the original committee.
For this she received private reproof, alas, from a committee, who really, may have not been fully aware of the overall events that have taken place. Being aware of this we decided not to make a decision at this April Meeting.

Since our letter from you brothers, we have met with BCH again, and when questioned about this incident in the tent, he denied to us that he had slept alongside the sister. The very next morning he rang Bro. Bakers home and confessed to sleeping alongside her, although no immorality took place.

It appears, from where we stand now, that we have a person who is desperately trying to get back into Jehovah's organization, but who fails to accept some of the reasons for which he was disfellowshipped.

We hope that this information is enough for you Brothers to go on, but should you require any further information from us on this matter please don't hesitate to ask.

It heartens us to know that you brothers are working so diligently on our behalf, to the point that every person, disfellowshipped or not, you take the time to consider their situation. May Jehovah contine to bless your efforts.

Please be assured of our warm christian love,

Your Brothers
Beenliegh East Congregation.

P.S. As a reinstatement committee we are keen to establish his attitude toward the sins for which he was disfellowshipped. BCH is determined to maintain his innocence of the charge of paranoia. Insisting that the charge was well established, and not a fabrication as BCH suggests, then his attitude is not that of a repentant person, hence we have decided to decline his reinstatement appeal. A LG will BE DUE INFORMED.

Dear Brother Ron,

As mentioned in my phone call, I have enclosed some of the latest information on the BCH case.

He has written to the Branch Office. (A copy of his letter is enclosed.)

He has mistakenly informed the Bros. at the branch that the elders in Beenleigh East congregation have not answered his plea for reinstatement made in September last year. To the contrary, we have had quite a few meetings with him, of which two related to his plea for reinstatement. On each occasion he was declined.

The first time his reinstatement plea was declined on the recommendation of you Brothers after we informed you of his indirect contact and his high profile in the presence of REDACTED The second meeting (April 1991) also resulted in our feeling there was a need for more time due to some information that was coming to light via BCH older son REDACTED

That information led to a meeting between the Elders of the Loganholme West congregation and REDACTED with the result that she received private reproof for lying to your original committee.

Subsequently we have had another meeting with BCH on the 7th August 1991. Since one of the reasons for which BCH was disfellowshipped was lying, we thought we would question him on the information that recently came to light via his son, namely, it is alledged that he slept alongside REDACTE in a tent for the duration of one night. When questioned about this he denied any inference whatsoever of his being in close proximity to REDACT on the said occasion. But the following morning he rang me to acknowledge that it was true he had slept alongside her.

BCH seems to be going to great lengths to justify his divorcing his wife on scriptural grounds.... also he is hotly denying even the remotest possibility that he and REDACT schemed to divorce their mates and take up with each other later on. (Enclosed is a mildly scathing letter he sent me after one meeting we had with him, where I alluded to his possibly conspiring with REDACTED

Sadly, BCH still denies the charge of "Pornea" with his daughter, as established by the appeal committee.
Also, with regard to his lying charge, he still feels he felt compelled to lie under pressure of the brothers.

BCH has been faithfully attending all the meetings that he is able to.

So we need to answer the question: Is he truly repentent of the wrongs for which he was disfellowshipped.

We would very much value your prayerful consideration of this matter again as we would like to be able to send a constructive reply to the branch office, and we would like to see Jehovah's will done in relation to this matter.

Enclosed for your information is copy of a tape that BCH wishes to send to the society. Your comments on this would be much appreciated.

We thank you again Brothers for taking time out of your busy lives to care for these matters pertaining to the caring of the congregation.

Your fellow workers in the lord.

Dear Brothers:

We are enclosing a copy of a letter from BCH. You many already have a copy of this correspondence.

He feels that his life course is in harmony with Jehovah's requirements and believes that sufficient time may have passed for him to be considered for reinstatement. He says he has been attending meetings in your congregation for the past 19 months. It seems he submitted "another plea begging for reinstatement at the beginning of September last year, 11 months ago" but has not received an answer. This does seem a little unusual and perhaps you did not receive his request for reinstatement?

Perhaps the brothers assigned to consider his standing could meet with him and give some direction. If you feel that he needs to make some adjustment so as to qualify to be accepted back into the Christian congregation, this should be clearly outlined to him. We would appreciate a brief reply to our letter in case we receive further correspondence on this matter.

Thank you for your good help as we endeavour to act in line with Jehovah's decisions. (Matt. 18:18-20) Kindly accept our very warm Christian love and best wishes.

Dear Brother/s,

I would like to apologize for not taking this up with the circuit overseer when he was here, but I just did not know which way to go.

I was disfellowshipped 26 months ago by the Mareeba congregation, Far North Queensland. In this situation the severe discipline of being in the process of being disfellowshipped, shocked me to my senses and instilled in me a fear of the true God and severe remorse at having disappointed Jehovah. I immediately stopped the wrongdoing.

Also, I was living with my son at the time in Mackay and I sent him back to Mareeba to finish his baptism preparations which up until the time I was disfellowshipped, I was helping him with. This was in obedience to the instruction from the Society that you should not discuss spiritual things with a disfellowshipped person. He was very upset at having to go, but he could see that was the right thing to do. That is the way I had taught him.

For 7 months I attended the Mackay congregation and never missed a meeting and lived a clean life by myself, read all the magazines and the Bible and tried to find work. Dearly desiring to be back in Jehovah's organisation, I also sat in the car outside the Kingdom Hall construction site every saturday in support of the brothers working hard out in the hot sun. No elders ever visited me or gave any hope or any direction as to what else I could do to be reinstated.

Of course none of my children wrote to me or tried to contact me.(In line with the society's direction and what I myself had taught the children.) Nevertheless I was interested in their welfare and inquired often from their mother about them, and sent the family money, paid many family bills, and wrote them letters and spoke often to the younger, unbaptized ones on the telephone to encourage them. I have done this up until today. I submitted a plea for reinstatement and was told eventually that it was too early, by Bro. Bethel from Mackay.

Because I divorced the childrens mother, for her adultery, she was very bitter towards me and stopped the letters I wrote to the younger children and has told the elders in Mareeba that I have not been bothered with the family, and generally did her best to put me in a bad light. I sent certified mail, hoping that the kids would now feel better, knowing that I care about them, but the signature cards came back with HER signatures on them.
I had forgiven her for one act of adultery already. It took me ten years to get over that. I did not have the capacity to forgive any more adulteries. The brothers thought I had left her for another woman, because she lied, and would not admit to them what she said to me - that she "did it no more than what you can count on the fingers of one hand". The brothers felt that I should have forgiven her because it happened a long time ago, before she was baptised. I had been faithful to her, always.

It's true I have sinned, (I was not disfellowshipped for nothing) and I am truly sorry for what I have done wrong and I do repent and have repented in "dust and ashes" and with many tears and supplications I have petitioned Jehovah for forgiveness and mercy.

I realize we must wait on Jehovahs patience, but I have been faithfully attending meetings at Beenleigh East congregation for 19 months now, (I moved here because my mother was dying of heart trouble and my dad could not look after her because his back was injured.)
+ plus 7 months in Mackay, and I am at my wits end, as to what else I can do. I am trying to get back into Jehovahs organization, because I know it is the only place to be. It is my deepest wish. Please tell me what else do I need to do?

I submitted another plea begging for reinstatement at the beginning of September last year, 11 months ago, to this congregation, but I have had no answer. Maybe the brothers will tell me, if they decide to visit me one day. I realize the brothers have been very busy building Kingdom Halls and the new Brisbane assembly hall, but I would have thought 11 months was ample time to visit me and give an answer.

Please understand this is in no way criticism of the brothers, but a genuine zeal to be back in Jehovah's organization, and very great sadness. In support of my further pleas for reinstatement .....

I have been faithfully attending meetings for the last 26 months, read the Bible regularly and the magazines. I am ahead in the bible reading for the theocratic school, by two books, up to the middle of Leviticus. I study and meditate on the days text. I pray to Jehovah many times daily for strength, mercy and thankfulness for the unmistakable support he has given me to endure this - very, very sad time.

Also I witness informally and lead a clean life. I dont drink, gamble smoke or fornicate. I spend a lot of time writing job applications and looking for work. I would really like to know what else I can do to be reinstated.

Is there something about my life course now, that you know, that I don't know? If there is something that you know that you may have not expressed to me, that I can work on, please tell me what it is so that I can work on it. Maybe stories got back to Mareeba that are not true. Please tell me where I stand.

I have done every thing in my power, in my circumstances to be reinstated.

Please tell me, what else can I do ? ....Service Desk Please answer this letter

TO: JUDICIAL COMMITTEE
BEENLEIGH EAST CONG.

APRIL 6, 1991

DEAR BROTHERS,

RE :REPLY TO LETTER INCLUDING ALSO PHONE CONVERSATION WITH BR. MONTY

BY MEANS OF THIS LETTER WE WOULD LIKE TO CONVEY SOME OF OUR THOUGHTS AS A COMMITTEE WITH REGARDS TO BCH AND HIS REINSTATEMENT PLEA.

SINCE WE RECIEVED YOUR LETTER WE HAVE ALLOWED TIME TO ELAPSE AND IN THAT TIME WE HAVE ALSO HAD A DISCUSION WITH BCI (EX. WIFE)

FROM THAT DISCUSSION WE LEARNT THAT FROM BCI S POINT OF VIEW HE DOES NOT SHOW A REAL CONCERN FOR THE WELFARE OF HIS CHILDREN AS A FATHER SHOULD CONSIDERING THE REAL HURT CAUSED TO THE FAMILY. BCI DOES NOT STOP BCH FROM TALKING TO THE CHILDREN , SHE HAS ENCOURAGED THEM TO WRITE WHEN BCH REQUESTED THIS.HE HAS BROUGHT UP IN SOME OF HIS TELEPHONE CONVERSATIONS WITH BCI THAT HE BAMES HER FOR NOT BEING REINSTATED YET. HE BRINGS UP THE POINT THAT BCI COMMITTED SEVERAL ACTS OF ADULTERY IN THE PAST THAT HE DID NOT KNOW ABOUT. FROM THE BEGINNING WHEN THIS CAME UP TO THE COMMITTEE HE STUCK TO THAT STORY. FROM OUR DISCUSSION WITH BCI ON THIS IT SEEMS THAT WHEN BCI COMMITTED THE ADULTRY IT WAS ABOUT 3 TIMES WITH THE SAME PERSON WHICH SHE CLASSED AS ONE ACT OF ADULTRY. BCH FEELS THAT SHE ONLY TOLD HIM ABOUT ONE ACT . PERHAPS, PERHAPSTHERE MAY BE SOME MISUNDERSTANDING THERE BUT WE MUST REMEMBER THAT SINCE THEN BCI HAD BEEN A FAITHFUL WIFE , AND WAS BAPTISED THEN AFTER THIS. (Approx 16 years)

IF BCH FEELS HE HAS PROOF OF MORE ACTS OF ADULTERY HE NEEDS TO PRESENT THAT PROOF. THE ORIGINAL COMMITTEE PLUS THE APPEALS COMMITTEE SAID THAT AT THAT TIME THERE WAS NO REASON FOR HIM NOR GROUNDS FOR HIM TO OBTAIN A SCRIPTURAL DIVORCE BUT HE WENT AHEAD WITH THIS COURSE AND THAT DIVORCE HAS BEEN LEGALLY TERMINATED IN ABOUT OCTOBER, 1990. IF WHAT BCH SAYS OR FEELS THAT BCI ONLY OWNED UP TO ONE ACT OR ONE TIME SLEEPING WITH THE OTHER PERSON BUT NOW BCI SAYING THAT IT WAS PERHAPS 3 TIMES THEN PERHAPS THERE WAS A TECHNICALITY THERE. YET WE REMEMBER THAT BCI AS MENTIONED BEFORE HAD BEEN FAITHFUL AND HAD SINCE BEEN BAPTISED.

IT ONLY SEEMS THAT WHEN BCH AND REDAC WERE GETTING TOGETHER THAT EACH STARTED TO LOOK AT DIVORCING EACH ONES MATE. (BOTH NOW HAVE)

FROM THE COMMITTEES POINT OF VIEW BCI HAD GROUNDS TO DIVORCE BCH FOR THE GROSS WRONGS THAT HE COMMITTED. SHE STILL WANTED HIM BACK WHEN THESE MATTERS OCCURED.

A QUESTION THAT COULD BE POSED TO BCH IS WHY DID HE GO AHEAD WITH DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS AGAINST WHAT THE COMMITTEES HAD SAID ? AT THE BEGINNING BCH SHOWED AN UTTER DISREGARD FOR THEOCRATIC DIRECTION DOES THIS PERHAPS SHOW THAT HE STILL WANTS THINGS TO GO HIS WAY .

WHEN WE THINK OF WORKS THAT BEFIT REPENTANCE AS FAR AS BCH IS CONCERNED HE MAY HAVE STOPPED WHAT HE DID IN THE PAST AND HE MAY BE DOING ALL THE RIGHT THINGS AS FAR AS OUTWA RD APPEARENCES ARE CONCERNED AND HE MIGHT SAY ALL THE RIGHT THINGS BUT WE ARE VERY SCEPTICAL ABOUT WETHER HE IS MAKING THINGS RIGHT WITH HIS FAMILY FOR WHAT HE DID FOR A PERSON WHO SAYS HE IS CUT TO THE HEART FOR THE WRONG DONE IS HE GOING TO THE EXTE NT THAT HE SHOULD TO MAKE THINGS RIGHT THERE . AT THIS PARTICULAR TIME WE ON WHAT BCI HAS SAID DON'T THINK SO.

YOUR POINT NO. 1 YOU DO NOT HAVE EVIDENCE THAT BCH REDACTED ARE PURPOSE FULLY MAKING CONTACT.

YOU MENTIONED A FEW TIMES THAT THEY MAY STILL BE KEEPING EYE CONTACT. TALKING TO BR. BERT HATTON HE MENTIONED THAT BCH MAY BE WORKING VERY CLOSE BY.

BECAUSE THEY ARE IN THE LIMELIGHT EVERY MOVE THEY MAKE IS WATCHED AND WE MAY CONSTRUE IT TO MEAN THAT THEY ARE KEEPING THAT CONTACT. NEVER THE LESS BECAUSE OF THE WAY THINGS HAVE GONE OVER THE TIME SINCE THE COMMITTEE MEETINGS WE FEEL CAUTION IS THE WISE COURSE IT WOULD BE GOOD IF WE COULD FIND OUT IF THEY REALLY HAVE INTENTIONS OF STILL GETTING TOGETHER. WHAT IS OF GRAVE CONCERN TO US IS THAT THEY MAY STILL BE SCHEMING TO GET MARRI? AND BE IN THE TRUTH. SO FAR BOTH ARE DIVORCED , BOTH WANTED EACHOTHER , ONLY WAITING FOR BCH TO BE REINSTATED. COULD THIS BE THE CASE?, THIS IS IN OUR MINDS.

PHONE CONVERSATION BR.MONTY BAKER (THIS HAS ALSO BEEN CONVEYED TO BODY OF ELDERS LOGAN HOME WEST C/- BR. BERT HATTON)

JUST RECENTLY THE SON OF BCH WHO HAS SINCE BEEN BAPTISED CAME UP TO THE ELDERS BECAUSE THERS WAS A MATTER THAT WAS TROUBLING HIS CONSCIENCE. HE FELT THERE WAS SOMETHING THAT WE NEEDED TO KNOW THAT HE WAS NOT ABLE TO SAY WHEN THE MATTER WAS BEING HANDLED BECAUSE HIS FATHER WAS ALWAYS THERE LISTENING TO WHAT WAS BEING SAID . THE SITUATION WAS STRAINED.

THIS IS WHAT HE RELATED:- WHEN THE TWO PARTIES LEFT FROM HERE TO MACKAY THEY WERE CAMPED IN A TENT . BCH REDACTED SLEPT IN THE TENT FOR THE NIGHT.

BCH AND REDACTED WERE TOGETHER ON ONE SIDE AND REDACTED SEPARATED BY BAGGAGE WAS ON THE OTHER REDACTED SAYS THAT AS FAR AS HE KNOWS NO IMMORALITY TOOK PLACE.

WE ONLY HAVE REDACTED WORD ON THIS , BUT WE HAVE NO REASON TO DISBELIEVE HIM.

DURING THE COMMITTEE MEETINGS WE WERE ALL LED TO BELIEVE THAT THEY WERE IN SEPARATE ACC- OMODATION NOT TOGETHER AS REDACTED NOW SAYS.

IT WOULD BE INTERESTING WHAT BCH HAS TO SAY ABOUT THIS

DURING OUR COMMITTEE MEETINGS DETAILS HAD TO BE DRAGED OUT OF REDACTED AND BCH NOTHING CAME EASY, WE FELT THAT THERE WAS A LOT OF DECIET . THE REASON FOR OUR CAUTION.

AS OUR MAG. ON MERCY BROUGHT OUT WE WANT TO SEE ONES COME BACK, AND SPECIAL PROVISIONS ARE MADE TO CONTACT THESE ONES. THE POINT THOUGH WAS STILL, ARE THEY REPENTANT? BRS WITH BCH HE SEEMS TO BE WANTING AS THE MAIN POINT OF HIS REINSTATEMENT TO BE THE FACT THAT HE WANTS HIS DIVORCE TO BE RECOGNIZED AS A SCRIPTURAL DIVORCE BCH TALKS ABOUT REPEATED ACTS OF ADULTRY. TO CLARIFY EXACTLY WHAT HE MEANS DOES HE MEAN REPEATED ACTS WITH DIFFERENT PARTNERS OR DOES HE MEAN REPEATED ACTS WITH ONE PARTNER?(BCI ADMITS THOSE 3 TIMES WITH ONE PERSON AS MENTIONED BEFORE)

THE MAIN AREA THAT WE LOOK AT ARE HIS WORKS THAT BEFIT REPENTANCE. AS ONE WHO CLAIMS TO BE LIKE THE TAX COLLECTOR IN JESUS ILLUSTRATIONIS HE CONCERNED WITH THE WELFARE OF HIS FAMILY . THIS SHOULD BE HIS CONCERN YET HE DISTANCES HIMSELF SO FAR AWAY., BOTH IN ACTUAL DISTANCE AND IN PHYISICAL AND EMOTIONAL CONCERN FOR THE CHILDREN . HE SEEMS NOT TO WANT TO HAVE THAT RESPONSIBILITY. IS THAT THE WAY THAT HE FEELS ? AS YET WE DON'T SEE EVIDENCE OTHERWISE. EVEN WITH CHILD MAINTENANCE NOT MUCH HAS BEEN FORTH COMING AS FAR AS BCI IS CONCERNED.

BRS WE HOPE THAT THE INFORMATION WITHIN THIS LETTER WILL GIVE YOU BRS A LITTLE MORE TO CLARIFY AND A BIT MORE OF A BASIS TO LOOK AT BCH REINSTATEMENT PLEA

MAY JEHOVAH CONTINUE TO BLESS YOU IN YOUR CARING FOR THE BROTHERS. AND MAY HE CONTINUE TO GIVE YOU THE WISDOM TO DISCERN THE REAL SITUATION WITH BCH WE LIVE IN EXCITING TIMES, AND WE ARE PART OF A WONDER FULL ORGANIZATION WHERE THE MAJORITY OF JEHOVAHS PEOPLE ARE REMAINING FAITHFUL TO HIS PRINCIPLES.

Dear Bro. Monty

I am writing to clear up some inaccuracies and misconceptions that were expressed when we last spoke, though I do appreciate your telling me.

1. You stated "you have been following her around"

This is incorrect. After April 89 my eldest son and I lived in Cairns - Sis. REDA was in Mareeba. In June she shifted to Cairns, after her husband had left her. She shifted in with a sister.I lived in Mackay on my own for the next 6 months. Sis REDACTED was in Cairns. After visiting my sick mum in Brisbane, I shifted to Brisbane in Jan.90. She had her heart attack a few months later, from which she has not recovered.

I was told by Vic Kohl an elder in Cairns to always check with the elders before I do any thing. This I did, because it could be interpreted the wrong way, and asked Bro Ron if it would be O.k. to shift to Brisbane. He said "YES"

I don't think you should hold against me what an Elder gave me permission to do.

2. You also said "in cases like this" meaning cases when people committed adultery to divorce their mates and remarry their new partner, "it can be many years before a person is reinstated."

I am thoroughly amazed that you have made such assumptions. You are ASSUME.. ing, that this case is the same as others you may have heard about or dealt with. YOU ARE WRONG!
Not only are you wrong, but you are also putting yourself and me in a potentially very damaging situation.... Because you have repeated it only to me in Bro. Becks presence, and it won't go any further, I am not offended, though I am hurt that you said it. That is why I'm mentioning it, and supplying you with.....

More accurate information. There was NEVER any adultery on MY part. But there was, on the part of my ex wife, which is the reason I have divorced her.I FORGAVE her for one act of adultery already, which was all I knew about, until she admitted to me end of April 89, that there had been multiple acts "but no more than what you can count on the fingers of one hand" she said. ANY more, was too much for me to handle. It took me nearly ten years to get over the first ONE. By leading me to believe there had been only one act, she certainly compounded the problem, greatly.
SO... this is NOT a case "LIKE" that is it ??

I'm sorry if this sounds a bit harsh, but it's MY LIFE YOU ARE HANGING IN THE BALANCE, So please do not make inaccurate and potentially very damaging assumptions.

3. You said "It counts against you that you spoke to the girls" meaning sis. REDACT kids when they first saw me after I came down. I did not have the heart to turn my back on two little girls aged six and seven, running up to me with their arms outstretched to give me a hug. If it "counts against" me ....I'm sorry, I am too soft and kind. Besides, I told them they could NOT talk to me and to go back to their mother.

4. You also raised the point that I should be "out of the country" preferably, if I "wanted to get reinstated", and that I should not go down the street where sis REDA lives. While I do appreciate the love behind the advice, I cannot understand your reasoning on this point. Does that mean she should avoid going down City road where I live?

What am I supposed to be getting/running away from? What am I doing wrong? I can't run away from what I did do wrong, two or three years ago, no matter where I go.

You said you were worried about sis. REDACT ED feelings. That is commendable. It is true to say though, that once I am reinstated ALL my true christian brothers and sisters will be my friends again. That is normal in the true christian congregation. Of course there will probably be some people who will not want me around.

Also I have a scriptural responsibility to my aging parents especially with my mum being sick, they both need my support now. I know it means being self-sacrificing, and I am prepared to put their interests ahead of my own and stay here, in view of the fact that they did the same for me many times while bringing me up. If that counts against me.....

In addition I feel it would be grossly unfair, to make me spend another year or so with another congregation building up a reputation of good meeting attendance etc. and being kept in LIMBO like I have been here, about what I have to do to be reinstated or why I'm not being reinstated, even though I do repent and have repented a long time ago. (besides being told to go away).

However I really do appreciate the work you have done on my behalf, in particular your and bro. Beck's merciful attitude, up to this point, in speaking and listening to me. I especially would like to thank you for the commendation you gave me for "excellent" meeting attendance it was to me "like the shadow of a heavy crag in an exhausted land, like streams of water in a waterless country." May Jehovah, my God and the Great Shepherd, continue to be blessed for his undeserved kindness and mercy.

Thank you for your efforts,

Dear Brothers,

Re: BCH

In reply to your letter concerning BCH application for reinstatement, the following information should prove most helpful. In June, July 1989, a Judicial Committee was formed to consider BCH situation. In time facts showed he had become unscripturally involved with a married sister, Sis REDACTED REDACTED to the extent of spending intimate time and involvement with her, much to the detriment of his family. BCH separated from his wife and family on the pretext of supposed threatened physical violence and while we believe a problem exists in this regard, he certainly did not have any scripturally based grounds to do so. In time, this demonstrated an initial move to an ulterior motive, ie; further involvement with REDACTED with marriage in view while she, in turn, intended to divorce her husband REDACTED who in turn, had intentions of marrying BCH eldest daughter, BCK with the approval of BCH himself !

BCH involvement with REDACTED also continued into another congregation, North Cairns, and the elders there too counselled BCH relationship with REDACTED Despite our efforts and counsel along with North Cairns, he chose to ignore Jehovah's standards feeling justified that driving alone with REDACTED at all hours of the night on the pretext of business, to towns hours away etc, did not constitute any wrong. He attempted to twist related information from the publications each time we met with him. They continued meeting alone, even to 2a.m. and indeed 4.30a.m. During tis time, both admitted to discussing the possibility of marriage and intimate details of a sexual nature. when married.

By the series of events, BCH motives became apparent, i.e. of deliberate scheming to exclude his wife BCI and marry REDACT Too, his absolute disregard of Jehovah's standards and his total rejection of counsel from this Committee and the Cairns body of Elders emphasized his TOTAL DISRESPECT of theocratic authority BCH deliberately withheld information and willfully lied throughout our meetings with him.

The Judicial Committee then took the decision to disfellowship Gabe on the serious charges of 1) LOOSE CONDUCT

2) LYING

Brothers, we stress again deliberate scheming and his unrepentant attitude. BCH appealed the decision. Through our Circuit Overseer, Brother M. Fernam, an Appeals Committee was formed of elders not of this congregation. After extensive deliberation they supported the original decision to disfellowship BCH on the same grounds. Furthermore, additional charges were brought i.e. sexually molesting his 2 eldest daughters the most recent ocassion being in September 1988 of his 2nd daughter BCG It was found BCH had developed a warped sexual appetite and mentality that led to the degrading and abominable practice of sexually abusing his own children.

The Appeals Committee on thes grounds, added the following gross sins : PORNEIA to the original charges. It should be noted that BCI when told of the findings and her scriptural grounds for divorce due to Porneia, did not wish to do so but desired BCH to return to consolidate their marriage, and assume his responsibilities. He has not done so. Instead, he has expressed his plans for divorce regardless. He had raised certain allegations about his wife's fidelity, that she has commited adultery, thus providing him scriptural grounds to divorce her.He has absolutely NO GROUNDS to proceed. It was on this that the Appeals Committee brought MALICIOUS SLANDER. He has been advised that if he proceeds to remarry, he faces the consequences as an adulterer. It would appear that both BCH and REDACTE being in close proximity again, may have that intention.REDACTE on the other hand, does have grounds to divorce REDACT her husband, on a technical point.

Therefore, brothers, we firmly believe his application for reinstatement be rejected and extreme caution exercised to any claims of repentance at this stage. With Jehovah's interests at heart and the spiritual condition of his congregation to protect, we feel his deviousness in the past and his actions to date to not right the wrongs committed and continue his divorce action has not shown works befitting repentance! He is conducting himself unscripturally still in that both he and REDACTE appear to be 'confused' or 'vague' as to the circumstances- apparently he and perhaps she, still intend to gain approval to their purpose. This certainly fits the original pattern with us.

We apologize for the delay to your inquires about BCH . We pray these details will assist you in your decision on the matter.

REPORT ON REINSTATEMENT PLEA BY BCH

First contacted us Feb. 21, 1990 at Kingdom Hall.
Spoke to Rod Spinks. Given contact in Mareeba Cong as Bro Ron DeRooy REDACTED Mareeba 4880.
Rod Spinks contacted Ron Derooy to determin nature of problem and informed case very complex and that BCH had recently applied elsewhere for reinstatement.

Committee [R.Spinks (chairman), M.Baker and A.Johnson] met with BCH March 6, 1990.
Outline of statements by BCH
"His wife committed adultery prior to baptism and failed to confess one case to him. [She denies] Wife violent with family. BCH left to go to Cairns with his son. Wife accused BCH of wife swapping/ adultery.
BCH left wife because of her adultery. BCH claims scriptural basis for divorce although wife denies. BCH said Elders questioned his 'basis' for claim.
At Appeal hearing original decision upheld. BCH claims he had no chance to speak.
BCH wife BCI , accused BCH of adultery with wife of Brother who he worked with. BCH says no relationship exists/ed.
Sister concerned REDACTED was reproved but BCH says doesnt know why.
BCH reasons for disfellowshipping: Lying and disregarding theocratic order. "

Committee felt BCH statements vague and evasive. There appears to be scheming between BCH and REDACTE He admits to having some feelings for REDACTE He says by chance he now lives near her and has had some contact with her. BCH claims committee and appeal committee handled badly and that two of the brothers involved have since been removed as elders.
Committee sent letter to REDACTED to seek some information.[Enclosed]

Feb 9, 1990 committee and Bro Warren Martin met with REDACTED and she supported most of BCH claims but was quite evasive.
Admitted to "some feelings for BCH but played it down.

Bro Jim Bennett from Cairns who was in Brisbane , asked by original committee to pass on letter and explain some of details to us.
He was on appeal committee.
Bro Jim met with Rod and Monty to discuss case. [May 13]

BCH notified of decision as per attached letter Sun May 13.
[ie: not to be reinstated.]

Original committees defined sins: 1. Loose conduct, 2. Lying, 3. Pornea , 4. Malicious slander [last 2 by appeal comm.]

Differed substantially from BCH account. He denied any incest and claimed firstly that it was alie and that he never confessed then after a while stated that he had confessed under pressure.

We felt that he has constantly lied and been evasive.
We stated that he is not scripturally free to remarry and that to be considered again for reinstatement, he must first accept discipline of original committee which he at present resists.
BCH then stated that we had " changed and had been affected by original committee". We clarified that it is original comm. that makes decision to reinstate.

Due to concern by original committee with regard to the extent of the lying involved in the case and after comments from REDACTED that BCH and REDACTED were seeing each other, a meeting was arranged again between us and Bro Jim Bennett with REDACTED

REDACTED said that REDACTED was claiming divorce on technicality as he had confessed to adultery with the exception of one case which he later told her of. Took place prior to baptism.
[BCH claim on similar grounds.]
REDACTED had also confessed to adultery which REDACTED forgave her for.

REDACTED only knows of 3 times BCH and REDACTED had some contact in recent times 1. BCH rode bike past her house on claim it was a short cut which it isnt. 2. Met in Perrys shop where REDACTED sent children to say hello and hug BCH 3. Said hello in K.Hall carpark.

[We are aware of additional meeting recently in a shopping centre carpark to apparently pickup some things of REDACTED

With regard to REDACTED 1. REDACTED requested that REDACTED not be in attendance at her hearing which brothers agreed to. This concerns us as she appears to manipulate things to suit her own ends.

2. REDACTED requested that restrictions be lifted prior to leaving Nth Qld which they were.

3. REDACTED has full support of Loganholme West cong. which is a credit to the brothers there but also a concern that they may not see the true picture.

M.Baker to contact Warren Martin again to outline situation.

At this point we have told BCH that we wish to have no further contact with him as he has continued to approach us with little or no indication that he has changed his view of the discipline.

June 15, 1990.

Dear Brothers,

Re: Reinstatement request, BCH.

Following a phone conversation between Bro. DeRooy and Bro. Spinks a few weeks ago, we met with BCH to consider his plea for reinsta--tement. In addition to hearing his plea we also felt the need to meet with REDACTED who is in our area though not our congregation.

As Bro. DeRooy mentioned briefly on the phone the situation appears very complex in view of the two families involved and due to the fact that both BCH and REDAC are living so closely now. They both deny any collusion in this regard although they both expressed some "feelings" for each other.

We would appreciate some assistance from you brothers as we feel un--able to make any recommendation on what we now know.

Firstly, BCH says that the reasons for his disfellowshipping were "Lying and Disregarding theocratic order" although the latter appears a little vague. Could you please clarify this for us.

Secondly, there appears to be some variance between what BCH says took place between he and REDACT physically, and what REDAC says took place. This concerned us in view of the 'lying' aspect of his case.

Finally, as BCH is in the process of filing for divorce and both he and REDAC claim scriptural grounds for divorce, he indicated he would "not rule out the possibility of their getting together." Do you brothers have any comment on this situation

We would appreciate any additional suggestions you may have in our handling this situation.

Thankyou for your consideration of our requests and we look forward to hearing from you soon.

May Jehovahs spirit continue to guide your thoughts and deeds as you serve the brothers in your area.

Your Brothers

Rod Spinks [chairman] Monty Baker Arthur Johnson

DIRECTORS' REPORT
For the year ended August 31, 2014

The Directors present their report, together with the financial statements of Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia, for the year ending August 31st, 2014, along with the Notes to the Financial Statements, Directors' Declaration and the Audit Report.

DIRECTORS

The following persons were Directors of Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia during the year and at the date of this Report:

Name	Appointed	Resigned
Mr. Gordon Douglas King	29/07/1985	28/12/2013
Mr. Donald Howard MacLean	29/07/1985	28/12/2013
Mr. Harold Vivian Mouritz	29/07/1985
Mr. Winston Reginald Payne	17/10/2002
Mr. Terrence John O'Brien	19/12/2009
Mr. Alan John Wood	28/12/2013
Mr. Gregory John Frank	28/12/2013

The Directors have been in office since the start of the financial year, with the exception of Mr Alan John Wood and Mr. Gregory John Frank.

COMPANY SECRETARY

The following person held the position of entity secretary at the end of the financial year:

Mr. Terrence John O'Brien (date of appointment 3/12/11)

PRINCIPAL ACTIVITIES

The principal activities of the entity in the course of the financial year were to promote the Christian religion and study of the Bible, in accordance with the beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses by the dissemination of Bible truths, both orally and by printed word, by charitable work for the relief of poverty, by establishing and maintaining private Bible schools and classes for instruction and by Christian missionary work and support facilities, both in Australia and overseas. No significant changes in the nature of these activities occurred during the year.

OPERATING RESULT

The net amount of the deficit of the entity for the financial year ending August 31st, 2014 amounted to $1,703,164. This is due to extraordinary donations to the charitable work of Jehovah's Witnesses.

DIVIDENDS

As a not-for-profit entity no dividends are permitted to members.

REVIEW OF OPERATIONS

A review of the operation of the entity during the financial year and the results of those operations are as follows:

The entity continues to provide literature and Bible educational programs to the members of the public at no cost.

The entity is still committed to further overseas aid, including building projects, which will result in continuing cash outflows.

SIGNIFICANT CHANGES IN STATE OF AFFAIRS

No significant changes in the entity's state of affairs occurred during the financial year other than disclosed in the operating result.

AFTER BALANCE DATE EVENTS

No matters or circumstances have arisen since the end of the financial year which significantly affected or may significantly affect the operations of the entity, the results of those operations, or the state of affairs of the entity in subsequent financial years.

FUTURE DEVELOPMENTS

The entity expects to maintain the present status and level of operations and hence there are no likely developments in the operations in future financial years.

ENVIRONMENTAL ISSUES

The entity's operations are not regulated by any significant environmental regulation under a law of the Commonwealth or of a State or Territory. However, the entity is in compliance with major environmental legislation.

Notes to the Financial Statements

FOR THE FINANCIAL YEAR ENDED AUGUST 31, 2014

Note 1. Statement of Significant Accounting Policies

The financial report is a general purpose financial report that has been prepared in accordance with Australian Accounting Standards, other authoritative pronouncements of the Australian Accounting Standards Board and requirements of the Australian Charities and Non-for-profits Commission Act 2012.

Basis of Preparation

Reporting Basis and Conventions

The functional aspects of the Statement of Comprehensive Income are disclosed in accordance with the Watch Tower Bible & Tract Society of Pennsylvania's worldwide classifications.

The financial report has been prepared on an accruals basis and is based on historical costs and does not take into account changing money values or, except where stated, current valuations of non-current assets. Cost is based on the fair values of the consideration given in exchange for assets.

(a) Income

Revenue. Revenue from the sale of goods is recognised upon delivery of goods to customers.

Interest revenue is recognised on a proportional basis taking into account the interest rates applicable to the financial assets.

Other revenue including that from the rendering of a service is recognised upon the delivery of the service.

All revenue is stated net of the amount of goods and services tax (GST).

Gains. Donations and bequests are recognised in accordance with AASB 1004 (Contributions) at the time of receipt or when in receipt of property at fair market value. (AASB116 Aus15.1)

(b) Income Tax. The entity is exempt as a charitable entity from income tax under Subdivision 50-B of the ITAA 1997.

(c) Inventories. Inventories are measured at the lower of cost and net realisable value. Costs are assigned on a weighted-average basis.

(d) Property, Plant, Equipment and Motor Vehicles. Each class of asset is carried at cost or fair value less, where applicable, any accumulated depreciation. (AASB116.30)

Property. Freehold land and buildings are measured on the fair value basis being the amount by which an asset could be exchanged between knowledgeable willing parties in an arm's length transaction.

Plant, Equipment and Motor Vehicles. These are measured on the cost basis. The depreciable amount of all fixed assets are depreciated on a straight line basis over their estimated useful lives to the entity commencing from the time the asset is held ready for use.

(e) Depreciation. The depreciable amount of all fixed assets but excluding freehold land, is depreciated on a straight line basis over their useful lives to the entity commencing from the time the asset is held ready for use.

The depreciation rates used for each class of depreciable assets are:

Asset Class	Depreciation Rate (%)
Plant & Equipment	5 – 20
Computer equipment & software	20 – 33
Vehicles	10 – 20

Gains and losses on disposals are determined by comparing proceeds with the carrying amount. These gains or losses are included in the Statement of Comprehensive Income.

(f) Foreign Currency Transactions and Balances

Foreign currency transactions are translated into Australian currency using the exchange rates prevailing at the date of the transaction. Foreign currency monetary items are translated at the year-end exchange rate. Non-monetary items measured at fair value are reported at the exchange rate at the date when fair values were determined.

Exchange differences arising on the translation of monetary items are recognised in the Statement of Changes of Equity.

(g) Cash and Cash Equivalents

For the purposes of the Cash Flow Statement, Cash and cash equivalents include cash on hand, deposits held at call with banks, other short-term highly liquid investments with original maturities of 100 days or less.

(h) Goods & Services Tax (GST)

Income, expenses and assets are recognised net of the amount of GST, except where the amount of GST incurred is not recoverable from the Australian Taxation Office. In these circumstances the GST is recognised as part of the cost of the acquisition of the asset or as part of the item of the expense. Where applicable receivables and payables in the Statement of Financial Position are shown as inclusive of GST.

INDEPENDENT AUDIT REPORT To The Members Of Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia
A.B.N. 42 002 861 225
Not-for-Profit Entity

Report on the Financial Statements I have audited the financial statements of Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia for the year ended August 31, 2014 as set out in pages 1 to 14. The financial statements include the Directors' Report, Statement of Comprehensive Income, Statement of Financial Position, Statement of Changes in Equity, Statement of Cash Flows, Notes to the Financial Statements and Directors' Declaration.

Director's responsibility for the financial report The directors of the company are responsible for preparation and fair presentation of the financial report that give a true and fair view in accordance with Australian Accounting Standards, including the Australian Accounting Interpretations and the Australian Charities and Non-for-profits Commission Act 2012 (the "Act"). This responsibility includes designing, implementing and maintaining internal controls relevant to the preparation and fair presentation of the financial report that is free from material misstatement, whether due to fraud or error; selecting and applying appropriate accounting policies; and making accounting estimates that are reasonable in the circumstances.

Auditor's responsibility My responsibility is to express an opinion on the financial report based on my audit. My audit has been conducted in accordance with Australian Auditing Standards. Those auditing standards require that I comply with relevant ethical requirements relating to audit engagements and plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance whether the financial report is free from material misstatement.

An audit involves performing procedures to obtain audit evidence about the amounts and disclosures in the financial report. The procedures selected depend on the auditor's judgement including the assessment of the risks of material misstatement of the financial report, whether due to fraud or error. In making those risk assessments, the auditor considers internal control relevant to the entity's preparation and fair presentation of the financial report in order to design audit procedures that are appropriate in the circumstances, but not for the purpose of expressing an opinion on the effectiveness of the entity's internal controls. An audit also includes evaluating the appropriateness of accounting polices used and the reasonableness of accounting estimates made by the directors, as well as evaluating the overall presentation of the financial report.

I believe that the audit evidence I have obtained is sufficient and appropriate to provide a basis for my audit opinion.

Independence In conducting my audit, I have complied with the independence requirements of the Act. I confirm that the independence declaration required by the Act provided to the directors of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia on 19 September 2014 would be in the same terms if provided to the directors at the date of this auditor's report.

Auditor's Opinion In my opinion, the financial report is in accordance with the Act including:

1. Giving a true and fair view of the Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia's position on 31 August 2014 and its performance for the year ended on that date.
2. Complying with Australian Accounting Standards and the Australian Charities and Non-for-profits Commission Regulation 2013.

MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION
of
WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF AUSTRALIA

1. The name of the company is "Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia" (hereinafter called "the Society").
2. The registered office of the Society shall be at such place in New South Wales as the directors may from time to time determine.
3. The object of the Society is to promote the Christian religion and study of the Bible in accordance with the beliefs of the Jehovah's Witnesses, and to improve men, women and children spiritually, mentally and morally by any or all of the means set out in paragraphs (a) to (g) following and with the aid of the powers set out in paragraphs (h) to (p) following so far as the same may lawfully be adopted or exercised by a body of persons established for charitable purposes only, namely:

MEANS

(a) By the dissemination of Bible truths, orally and by the printed word, and by means of the printing and/or distribution of Bibles and the printing and publication of Bible study helps, tracts, pamphlets, film, slides, tapes, papers, and other literature and information whether in written, graphic or electronic form, containing information and comment explaining Bible truths and prophecy, and by the use of all other lawful means which may seem to the Board of Directors to be directly or indirectly conducive to the furtherance of the above objects.

(b) By authorizing and appointing agents, servants, employees, teachers, instructors, evangelists, missionaries and ministers to go forth publicly and from house to house to preach and teach Bible truths to persons willing to listen by leaving with such persons such literature and information or any of the same and by conducting Bible studies with them.

(c) By purchasing or otherwise acquiring sketches, photographs, drawings, publications, manuscripts, notes, data and memoranda bearing upon the above objects of the Society and by printing, publishing, displaying and distributing the same.

(d) By Christian missionary work and by education of the people on the Bible and incidental scientific, historical and literary subjects.

(e) By charitable work for the relief of poverty.

(f) By establishing and maintaining private Bible schools and classes for instruction of men and women in the Bible, Bible literature and Bible history; by teaching, training, preparing and equipping men and women as ministers, missionaries, evangelists, preachers, teachers and lecturers; by providing and maintaining homes, places and buildings to furnish lodging and meals for such persons and others who may be needed to carry on the purposes of the Society, and providing living allowances for such persons aforesaid.

(g) By arranging for and holding Christian conventions and assemblies for public and private Christian worship and ceremonies, and by the use of any other lawful means which are directly or indirectly conducive to the furtherance of the objects of the Society.

POWERS

Solely for the promotion of the aforesaid objects and not otherwise:

(h) To subscribe to, become a member of and co-operate with or amalgamate with any other association or organisation, whether incorporated or not, whose objects are similar to those of the Society.

Provided that the Society shall not subscribe to or support with its funds or amalgamate with any association or organisation which does not prohibit the distribution of its income and property among its members to an extent at least as great as that imposed on the Society under or by virtue of Clause 4 of this memorandum.

(i) Of entering into any arrangement with any Government or authority, supreme, municipal, local or otherwise, and of obtaining from such Government or authority all rights, concessions and privileges that are conducive to the objects of the Society.

(j) Of purchasing, taking on lease or in exchange, hiring or otherwise acquiring (including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, by gifts, bequests and devises), and of selling, exchanging, surrendering, leasing, mortgaging, charging, converting, turning to account, disposing of and dealing with any estate or interest in any lands, buildings, easements, rights, privileges, mortgages, debentures, options, contracts, licences or other rights, and any real or personal property of any kind necessary or convenient for the attainment of the objects of the Society, and, in pursuance of such objects, of erecting, constructing, enlarging, altering, furnishing, maintaining and improving buildings of all kinds.

(k) Of making donations to wholetime and part-time workers and in such cases, and either of cash or other assets, as are directly or indirectly conducive to the objects of the Society and of subscribing or guaranteeing money for religious or charitable objects.

(l) Of borrowing or raising or securing the payment of money for the objects of the Society in such manner as the Board of Directors of the Society shall think fit.

(m) Of paying out of the funds of the Society all expenses of or incidental to the formation, registration and management of the Society.

(n) Of investing any moneys of the Society not for the time being required for its objects in such investments, authorized by law for the investment of trust funds, as may be thought proper and of varying such investments.

(o) Of granting pensions and gratuities to any officers, employees, ex-officers and ex-employees of the Society (including directors, and ex-directors) or their relatives or dependents and of establishing and supporting any trust or scheme for securing the payment of pensions to or otherwise for the benefit of such persons.

(p) Of doing and suffering all such other things as bodies corporate may by law do and suffer as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Society.

Provided that the Society shall not support with its funds any activity or endeavour to impose on or procure to be observed by its members or others any regulations or restrictions, which if an object of the Society would make it a trade union within the meaning of the Trade Union Act.

The powers set forth in Sub-Section 67 (1) of the Companies (New South Wales) Code shall not apply to the Society except insofar as they are included in this Clause 3.

4. The income and property of the Society, whencesoever derived, shall be applied solely towards the promotion of the objects of the Society, and no portion thereof shall be paid or transferred, directly or indirectly by way of dividend, bonus or otherwise howsoever by way of profit to the members of the Society.

   Provided that nothing herein shall prevent the payment, in good faith, of reasonable and proper remuneration to any officer or servant of the Society, in return for any services actually rendered to the Society, nor prevent the payment of interest at a rate not exceeding interest at the lowest rate for the time being paid by trading bankers in Sydney for term deposits, or reasonable and proper rent for premises demised or let by any member to the Society; but so that no director or member of the governing body of the Society shall be appointed to any salaried office of the Society or to any office of the Society paid by fees, and that no remuneration or other benefit in money or money's worth shall be given by the Society to any director or member of such governing body except reasonable and proper remuneration for services actually rendered to the Society, and for out-of-pocket expenses and interest at the rate aforesaid on money lent or reasonable and proper rent for premises demised or let to the Society.

5. No addition, alteration or amendment shall be made to or in the memorandum or articles of association for the time being in force, unless the same shall have been previously submitted to and approved by the Commission.

6. The fourth, fifth and tenth paragraphs of this Memorandum of Association contain conditions upon which a licence is granted by the Commission to the Society in pursuance of the provisions of section 66 of the Companies (New South Wales) Code (hereinafter called the "Code"). For the purpose of preventing any evasion of the provisions of the said paragraphs the Commission may from time to time on the application of any member of the Society and on giving notice to the Society of its intention to do so and after affording the Society an opportunity of being heard in opposition thereto, within such time as may be specified in such notice, impose further conditions which shall be duly observed by the Society.

7. The liability of members is limited.

8. Every member of the Society undertakes to contribute to the property of the Society in the event of its being wound up while he is a member, or within one year after he ceases to be a member, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the Society contracted before he ceased to be a member, and of the costs, charges and expenses of winding up and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding one hundred dollars ($100).

9. If upon the winding up or dissolution of the Society there remains, after satisfaction of all its debts and liabilities, any property whatsoever, the same shall not be paid to or distributed among the members of the Society, but shall be given or transferred to some other institution or institutions having objects similar to the objects of the Society and whose memorandum of association or constitution shall prohibit the distribution of its or their income and property among its or their members to an extent at least as great as is imposed on the Society under or by virtue of clause 4 hereof, such institution or institutions to be determined by the members of the Society at or before the time of the dissolution and in default thereof by application to the Supreme Court of New South Wales for determination.

10. True accounts shall be kept of all moneys received and expended by the Society, and the manner in which such receipt and expenditure takes place, and of the property, credits and liabilities of the Society; and, subject to any reasonable restrictions as to the time and manner of inspecting the same that may be imposed in accordance with the articles of association of the Society for the time being in force, shall be open to the inspection of the members. Once at least in every year the accounts of the Society shall be examined by one or more properly qualified Auditor or Auditors who shall report to the members in accordance with the provisions of the Code.

COMPANIES (NEW SOUTH WALES) CODE
A COMPANY LIMITED BY GUARANTEE

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION
of
WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF AUSTRALIA

INTERPRETATION

1. In these articles
"the Code" means the Companies (New South Wales) Code;
"the Society" means the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia;
"the seal" means the common seal of the Society;
"Secretary" means any person appointed to perform the duties of a secretary of the Society and includes an honorary secretary;
"State" means the state of New South Wales; expressions referring to writing shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be construed as including references to printing, lithography, photography and other modes of representing or reproducing words in visible form; words or expressions contained in these articles shall be interpreted in accordance with the provisions of the Companies and Securities (Interpretation and Miscellaneous Provisions) (New South Wales) Code and of the Code as in force at the date on which these articles become binding on the Society.

2. The Society is established for the purposes set out in the Memorandum of Association.

MEMBERSHIP

3. The subscribers to the Memorandum of Association and such other persons as the Board of Directors shall admit to membership in accordance with these articles shall be members of the Society.

4. The number of members at any one time shall be not more than thirty, unless the Society in general meeting otherwise resolves, and the Board of Directors may from time to time register an increase or decrease in members pursuant to any such resolution.

5. Every applicant for membership of the Society (other than the subscribers to the Memorandum of Assocation) shall be proposed by one and seconded by another member of the Society to both of whom the applicant shall be personally known. The application for membership shall be made in writing, signed by the applicant and his proposer and seconder and shall be in such form as the Board of Directors from time to time prescribes. Only

(a) persons who hold a current appointment as elders in a congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses and
(b) the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania are eligible to be members.

6. At the next meeting of the Board of Directors after the receipt of any application for membership, such application shall be considered by the directors, who shall thereupon determine upon the admission or rejection of the applicant. In no case shall the Board of Directors be required to give any reason for the rejection of an applicant.

7. When an applicant has been accepted for membership, the Secretary of the Society shall forthwith send to the applicant written notice of his admission and a certificate of membership together with a copy of the Society's Memorandum and Articles of Association. Members shall not be required to pay any entrance fee, membership dues or annual subscription.

CESSATION OF MEMBERSHIP

8. A member may at any time by giving notice in writing to the Secretary resign his membership of the Society but shall continue liable for any sum for which he may be liable as a member or former member of the Society under clause 8 of the Memorandum of Association of the Society.

9. If any member shall wilfully refuse or neglect to comply with the provisions of the Memorandum or Articles of Association of the Society or shall be guilty of any conduct which in the opinion of the Board of Directors is unbecoming of a member or prejudicial to the interest of the Society, the Board of Directors shall have power to expel the member from the Society and erase his name from the register of members provided that at least one week before the meeting of the Board of Directors at which a resolution for his expulsion is passed, the member shall have had notice of such meeting and of what is alleged against him and of the intended resolution for his expulsion and that he shall at such meeting and before the passing of such resolution have had an opportunity of giving orally or in writing any explanation or defence he may think fit. Provided further that any such member may by notice in writing lodged with the Secretary at least twenty-four hours before the time for holding the meeting at which the resolution is to be considered by the directors, elect to have the question dealt with by the Society in general meeting, and in that event an extraordinary general meeting of the Society shall be called for the purpose; and if at the meeting such a resolution be passed by a majority of two-thirds of those present and voting (such a vote to be taken by ballot) the member concerned shall be expelled. Expulsion of a member forfeits any interest he has or had in and to the Society or any office therein, and cancels the right to participate in any meeting as a member and the right to vote, provided he shall have the right to be heard before expulsion.

GENERAL MEETINGS

10. An annual general meeting (hereinafter called the "annual meeting") of the Society shall be held in accordance with the provisions of the Code. Other general meetings may be convened as provided for in these articles. All general meetings, other than annual general meetings, shall be called extraordinary general meetings.

11. Any director may whenever he thinks fit convene an extraordinary general meeting. The directors shall convene an extraordinary general meeting of members whenever such meeting is requisitioned in accordance with the provisions of the Code.

12. Subject to the provisions of the Code relating to special resolutions and agreements for shorter notice, notice of a general meeting shall be sent to all persons entitled to receive such notice in accordance with article 53 at least fourteen (14) days prior to the date of the meeting, and shall specify the place, the day and the hour of the meeting, and shall in the case of special business state the general nature of the business to be transacted at the meeting.

13. For the purposes of article 12 all business shall be special that is transacted at an extraordinary general meeting and also all that is transacted at an annual general meeting, with the exception of the consideration of the accounts, balance sheets, and the report of the Board of Directors and Auditors, the election of directors and the appointment of the Auditors if necessary.

PROCEEDINGS AT GENERAL MEETINGS

14. No business shall be transacted at any general meeting unless a quorum of members is present at the time when the meeting proceeds to business. A majority of members shall constitute a quorum. For the purpose of determining whether a quorum is present, a person attending as a proxy, or as representing a corporation that is a member, shall be deemed to be a member.

15. If a quorum is not present within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting, the meeting, if convened upon the requisition of members, shall be dissolved; in any other case, it shall stand adjourned to such day, and at such time and place, as the directors determine, or, if no determination is made by the directors, to the same day in the next week at the same time and place; and, if at the adjourned meeting a quorum is not present within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting, the members present, being not less than five, shall be a quorum. Where five members are not present, the meeting shall be dissolved.

16. The President shall preside at every general meeting of the Society, or if there is no President, or if he is not present within 15 minutes after the time appointed for the holding of the meeting, or if he is unwilling to act, the Vice-President shall be the chairman; or if the Vice-President is not present or is unwilling to act, then the members present shall elect one of their members to be chairman of the meeting.

17. The chairman may with the consent of any meeting at which a quorum is present, and shall if so directed by the meeting, adjourn the meeting from time to time and from place to place, but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place. When a meeting is adjourned for thirty days or more, notice of the adjourned meeting shall be given as in the case of an original meeting; except for the aforesaid, it is not necessary to give any notice of an adjournment or of the business to be transacted at an adjourned meeting.

18. At any general meeting a resolution put to the vote of a meeting shall be decided on a show of hands unless a poll is (before or on the declaration of the result of the show of hands) demanded

    (a) by the chairman; or

    (b) by at least three members present in person or by proxy.

    Unless a poll is so demanded a declaration by the chairman that a resolution has on a show of hands been carried or carried unanimously, or by a particular majority, or lost, and an entry to that effect in the book containing the minutes of the proceedings of the Society, is conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution. The demand for a poll may be withdrawn.

19. If a poll is duly demanded, it shall be taken in such manner and either at once or after an interval or adjournment or otherwise as the chairman directs, and the result of the poll shall be the determination of the meeting at which the poll was demanded; provided that a poll demanded on the election of a chairman or on a question of adjournment shall be taken forthwith.

20. In the case of an equality of votes, whether on a show of hands or on a poll, the chairman of the meeting at which the show of hands takes place or at which the poll is demanded shall be entitled to a second or casting vote.

21. A member may vote in person or by proxy or by attorney; and on a show of hands every person present who is a member or a representative of a member shall have one vote, and on a poll every person present in person or by proxy or by attorney or other duly authorized representative has one vote.

22. If a member is of unsound mind or is a person whose person or estate is liable to be dealt with in any way under the law relating to mental health, his committee or trustee or such other person who properly has the management of his estate may exercise any rights of the member in relation to a general meeting as if the committee, trustee or other person were the member.

23. An instrument appointing a proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointor or of his attorney duly authorized in writing or if the appointor is a corporation, either under seal or under the hand of an officer or attorney duly authorized. An instrument appointing a proxy shall be deemed to confer authority to demand or join in demanding a poll. A member shall be entitled to instruct his proxy to vote in favour of or against any proposed resolutions. Unless otherwise instructed, a proxy may vote as he thinks fit.

24. The instrument appointing a proxy shall be in the following form or in a common or usual form:

WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT SOCIETY OF AUSTRALIA

I,.....of..... being a member of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia, hereby appoint ..... of.....or failing him
.....of.....
as my proxy to vote for me and on my behalf at the(annual*) general meeting of the Society to be held on the.....day of..... 19 .....and at any adjournment thereof.
My proxy is hereby authorized to vote *in favour of/against the following resolutions:

Signed this .....day of .....19 .....

.....

Note 1. In the event of any member desiring to vote for or against any resolution he shall instruct his proxy accordingly. Unless otherwise instructed, the proxy may vote as he thinks fit.

* Strike out whichever is not desired.

25. An instrument appointing a proxy shall not be treated as valid unless the instrument, and the power of attorney or other authority (if any) under which the instrument is signed or a notarially certified copy of that power or authority, is or are deposited, not less than 24 hours before the time for holding the meeting or adjourned meeting at which the person named in the instrument proposes to vote, and in default the instrument of proxy shall not be treated as valid.

26. A vote given in accordance with the terms of an instrument of proxy or of a power of attorney is valid notwithstanding the previous death or unsoundness of mind of the principal, the revocation of the instrument (or of the authority under which the instrument was executed) or of the power, if no intimation in writing of the death, unsoundness of mind or revocation has been received by the Society at the registered office before the commencement of the meeting or adjourned meeting at which the instrument is used or the power exercised.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS AND OFFICERS

27. Directors shall be elected by the members from among their own number at an annual meeting and hold office until successors qualify. The subscribers to the Memorandum of Association shall constitute the first Board of Directors, and they shall all retire at the first annual meeting of members. At the first annual meeting of the Society there shall be an election by ballot of five directors of the Society, one of whom shall be elected for a term of one year, two for two years and two for three years. At each annual meeting thereafter a number of directors equal to that of those whose terms have expired shall be elected for a term of three years. A retiring director is eligible for re-election.

28. Officers of the Society, chosen from among the members of the Board of Directors, shall be a President, who shall preside at the meetings of the Board of Directors, a Vice-President, who shall preside in the absence of the President, and a Treasurer. The Board of Directors shall elect officers, who shall hold office for a term of one year, or until successors qualify. Meetings for the election of officers shall be held annually within 30 days after the holding of the annual general meeting. The following named persons who have subscribed to the Memorandum of Association shall constitute the first officers:

President:	Harold Vivian Mouritz
Vice-President:	Walter Maxwell Lloyd
Treasurer:	Wallace Hendrie Baxter

They shall all retire at the first annual general meeting but shall be eligible for re-election.

29. The Society may from time to time by ordinary resolution passed at a general meeting increase or reduce the number of officers or directors.

30. Vacancies in any office or the Board of Directors occasioned by death, resignation, disqualification as a member or removal shall be filled by vote of a majority of the remaining members of the Board, who shall meet for that purpose within thirty days from the time when such vacancy or vacancies shall occur. If the Board fails to fill such vacancy or vacancies in the time and manner above provided, then the President, or if the office of the President be vacant, then the Vice-President, performing the duties of the President, shall fill such vacancy or vacancies by appointing such duly qualified person or persons as he shall think fit who shall hold office until the next annual meeting when such vacancy or vacancies shall be filled by election. A person so appointed is subject to retirement at the same time as if he had become a director on the day on which the director in whose place he is appointed was last elected a director.

31. Officers may be removed from office (but not from being directors) upon a vote of the majority of all the directors. Directors may be removed from the Board by ordinary resolution of the Society in general meeting, subject to any special notice requirements of the Code.

32. The office of an officer or a director shall become vacant if the director

    (a) ceases to qualify as a director by operation of section 226 of the Code;

    (b) becomes prohibited from being a director of a company by reason of any order made under the Code;

    (c) becomes a bankrupt or assigns or suffers an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors generally or otherwise takes the benefit of any statute for the relief of insolvent debtors;

    (d) becomes of unsound mind or a person whose person or estate is liable to be dealt with in any way under the law relating to mental health;

    (e) resigns his office by notice in writing to the Society;

    (f) is absent for more than six months without permission of the Board of Directors from meetings of the Board held during that period;

(g) is directly or indirectly interested in any contract or proposed contract with the Society and fails to declare the nature of his interest as required by the Code;

(h) ceases to qualify as a member of the Society or ceases to be a member;

(i) ceases to be an elder of a congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses as to which the certificate of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania shall be good prima facie evidence; or

(j) holds any office of profit under the Society.

Provided always that nothing in this article shall affect the operation of clause 4 of the Memorandum of Association of the Society.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF DIRECTORS

33. Subject to the Code and to any other provision of these articles and the Memorandum, the business of the Society shall be managed by the directors, who may pay all expenses incurred in promoting and registering the Society, and may exercise all such powers of the Society as are not, by the Code or by these articles, required to be exercised by the Society in general meeting, subject nevertheless, to any of these articles, to the provisions of the Code, and to such regulations being not inconsistent with the aforesaid articles or provisions, as may be prescribed by the Society in general meeting; provided that any rule, regulation or by-law of the Society made by the Board of Directors may be disallowed by the Society in general meeting and provided further that no resolution or regulation made by the Society in general meeting shall invalidate any prior act of the Board of Directors which would have been valid if that resolution or regulation had not been passed or made.

34. Without limiting the generality of article 33, the directors may exercise all the powers of the Society to borrow money, to mortgage or charge any property of the Society and to give any security whether outright or as security for any debt, liability or obligation of the Society or of any other person, firm, Society or company.

35. The directors may, by power of attorney, appoint any person or persons to be the attorney or attorneys of the Society for such purposes, with such powers, authorities and discretions (being powers, authorities and discretions vested in or exercisable by the directors), for such period and subject to such conditions as they think fit. Any such power of attorney may contain such provisions for the protection and convenience of persons dealing with the attorney as the directors think fit and may also authorize the attorney to delegate all or any of the powers, authorities and discretions vested in him.

36. All cheques, promissory notes, bankers drafts, bills of exchange and other negotiable instruments, and all receipts for money paid to the Society, shall be signed, drawn, accepted, endorsed or otherwise executed, as the case may be, by any two directors or in such other manner as the Board of Directors from time to time determines.

37. The directors shall cause minutes to be made

(a) of all appointments of officers and servants;

(b) of the names of directors present at any meeting of directors and at general meetings of the Society;

(c) of all proceedings at all meetings of the Society and its directors.

Such minutes shall be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which the proceedings were held or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

38. The directors may meet together for the despatch of business and adjourn and otherwise regulate their meetings as they think fit. A director may at any time, and the Secretary shall on the requisition of a director, convene a meeting of the directors.

39. Subject to these articles, questions arising at a meeting of directors shall be decided by a majority of votes of directors present and voting and any such decision shall for all purposes be deemed a decision of the Board of Directors. In the case of an equality of votes, the chairman of the meeting shall have a second or casting vote.

40. A director shall not vote in respect of any contract or proposed contract with the Society in which he is financially interested, or any matter arising therefrom, and if he does so vote, his vote shall not be counted.

41. The quorum necessary for the transaction of business at a meeting of directors shall be a majority of directors or such number, not less than two, as may be fixed by the directors from time to time.

42. In the event of a vacancy or vacancies in the office of a director or in the offices of directors, the remaining directors may act, but, if the number of remaining directors is not sufficient to constitute a quorum at a meeting of directors, they may act only for the purpose of increasing the number of directors to a number sufficient to constitute such a quorum or of convening a general meeting of the Society.

43. The President shall preside as chairman at every meeting of the directors, or if there is no President, or if at any meeting he is not present within 15 minutes after the time appointed for the holding of the meeting or if he is unwilling to act, the Vice-President shall be the chairman, or if the Vice-President is not present at the meeting then the remaining directors may choose one of their number to be chairman of the meeting.

44. The Board of Directors may delegate any of its powers and/or functions (not being duties imposed on the directors as the directors of a company by the Code or the general law) to a committee or committee consisting of such member or members of the Society as the directors think fit; any committee so formed shall exercise the powers delegated in accordance with any directions of the Board of Directors and a power so exercised shall be deemed to have been exercised by the directors.

45. A committee may meet and adjourn as it thinks proper. Each member of a committee shall have one vote. Questions arising at any meeting shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present, and in the case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote.

46. All acts done by any meeting of the directors or of a committee or by any person acting as a director or member of a committee shall, notwithstanding that it is afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such director or person acting as aforesaid, or that the director or any of them were disqualified, be as valid as if every person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director or member of such committee.

47. A resolution in writing signed by all the directors in Australia for the time being entitled to receive notice of a meeting of the Board of Directors, shall be as valid and effectual as if it had been passed at a meeting of the Board of Directors duly convened and held. Any such resolution may consist of several documents in like form, each signed by one or more directors.

SECRETARY

48. The Secretary shall in accordance with the Code be appointed by the Board of Directors for such term and upon such conditions as it thinks fit, and any secretary so appointed may be removed by it. Nothing shall prevent the Board of Directors from appointing a member of the Society as Honorary Secretary and any member so appointed shall forthwith become an officer of the Society and, if not already a director, ex officio a director and he shall be subject to the provisions of clause 4 of the Memorandum of Association.

SEAL

49. The directors shall provide for the safe custody of the seal. The seal shall be used only by the authority of the directors or of a committee of the directors authorized by the Board of Directors in that behalf, and every instrument to which the seal is affixed shall be signed by a director and countersigned by another director, a secretary or another person appointed by the directors for that purpose.

ACCOUNTS

50. The Board of Directors shall cause proper accounting and other records to be kept and shall distribute copies of every profit and loss account and balance sheet (including every document required by law to be attached thereto) accompanied by a copy of the Auditors report thereon as required by the Code, provided however that the Board of Directors shall cause to be made out and laid before each annual general meeting a balance sheet and profit and loss account made up to date not more than five months before the date of the meeting.

51. The Board of Directors shall from time to time determine in accordance with clause 10 of the Memorandum of Association of the Society at what times and places and under what conditions or regulations the accounting and other records of the Society will be open to the inspection of members.

AUDIT

52. A properly qualified Auditor or Auditors shall be appointed and his or their duties regulated in accordance with the Code.

NOTICES

53. Any notice required by law or under these articles to be given by the Society to any member may be given either by serving it on him personally or by sending it by post to him at his address as shown in the register of members or the address supplied by him to the Society for the giving of notices to him. Where a notice is sent by post, service of the notice shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying, and posting a letter containing the notice, and to have been effected, in the case of a notice of a meeting, on the day after the date of its posting and in any other case at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post.

54. Notice of every general meeting shall be given in the manner authorized by article 53 to

(a) every member except those members who (having no registered address within the State) have not supplied to the Society an address within the State for the giving of notices to them; and

(b) to the auditor or auditors for the time being of the Society.

WINDING UP

55. The provisions of clause 9 of the Memorandum of Association relating to the winding up and dissolution of the Society shall have effect and be observed as if the same were repeated in these articles.

INDEMNITY

56. Every director, auditor, secretary and other officer, or agent for the time being of the Society shall be indemnified out of the assets of the Society against any liability incurred by him in his capacity as officer, director, auditor or agent in defending any proceedings, whether civil or criminal, in which judgment is given in his favour or in which he is acquitted or in connection with any application in relation to any such proceedings in which relief is under the Code granted to him by the Court in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust.

WE, the several persons whose names are subscribed being the subscribers to the Memorandum of Association hereby agree to the foregoing Articles of Association.

Re: BCH

Dear Brothers

We received a letter of introduction from the Loganholme congregation for BCH REDAC and his wife REDACTED

The elders from Loganholme referred to the issue of child abuse with BCH and the reasons for his disfellowshipped state. He met with two elders when first moving to the congregation and expressed he was unsure of the reasons for the Brothers reluctance to reinstate him.

It is likely he will make a request for re-instatement in the near future. We would welcome any guidance you can provide for us in this matter.

We have enclosed a copy of the letter from the elders at Loganholme.

Re: BCH – Request for reinstatement

Dear Brothers

We have received a written request from BCH for reinstatement. Three brothers met with him to discuss this request. We met with him on another occasion in an attempt to clarify the situation. We pass on the following comments after these conversations and phone contact with brother Neil Harrop from Loganholme.

BCH admits to one occasion in which he molested one of his daughters, for which he was convicted. He believes the other occasions did not constitute abuse, i.e. bathing his children. During discussions BCH mentioned that under advice from a solicitor (a brother) he should enter a guilty plea. He considered this but decided not to. He felt this would be an admission to the other events he was accused of. So his denial is of these other accusations. He also alleges that the prosecution exaggerated his conduct to "build a case" against him. We also note the discrepancy between letters. The correspondence from you mentions abuse of all four daughters, whereas the letter from Loganholme mentions only three.

BCH agreed that he has a tendency to stretch the truth at times. This has been a long standing problem and he recognizes that this has impacted on his discussions with bodies of elders of over the years. He has repented of this sin and has made efforts to correct this weakness. BCH admitted that he had the wrong attitude with the elders in Loganholme. During meetings with them he was trying to justify himself and had an arrogant manner with the brothers. We have enclosed a copy of BCH's letter.

The picture we have tried to put together is:

1. BCG 's boyfriend reported to the elders the abuse by BCH who is disfellowshipped 1988.
2. BCH is reinstated in 1992.
3. Maintenance payments stop when his youngest child is 16 years old. His former wife now goes to court with the charges against him. After 3 court cases he is convicted of indecent assault and attempted rape and is jailed for over 2 years.
4. In 2003 BCH is disfellowshipped for malicious lying. This relates to the denial of the accusation of child abuse.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

5. A restraining order is placed on BCH on contact with his daughters. However he places advertisements in local papers in Northern Queensland to contact them. He does have written contact with his oldest daughter BCK. This contact stops when he is again disfellowshipped.
6. 2010 BCH applies for reinstatement in Kalamunda.

We have the following observations over the last 6 months.

- He is very regular in meeting attendance and is not disruptive.
- He expressed his sincere regret for past sins and wants to set things right.
- He does not communicate well and his answers are convoluted and confusing.
- He seems to have the complete trust and support of his wife. She is a sister and is in good standing in the congregation.

It has been difficult to understand how to assist BCH. Brothers we would like to ask for further direction in this situation.

Re: BCH – Request for Reinstatement

Dear Brothers

We received a fourth letter from BCH which we have enclosed. When we received the letter we met with him and asked what he meant when he said he confessed to all his sins. Did he also mean he confessed to the charges that he had abused his other daughters besides BCG. His answer was that he did not abuse them and that this was not what he intended to convey. In fact he again made the point that he has never ever been told what the specific charges are.

As we are concerned for his situation and the stress it is causing his wife we would like to help him get out of the hole he is in if that were possible. We would like to ask for a little more information regarding those charges. With this in mind we suggested to him that there must be some evidence in the letter his daughter wrote to your office. (We had heard of this letter from him previously) We asked could we see a copy of the letter and he gave us one.

The letter certainly paints him in a very poor light as a father. However what still concerns us is that there apparently is no evidence at all it seems, of any proof of his abusing his other daughters except BCG 's wild claims and BCG certainly seems to exaggerate things somewhat in the letter. For example she says he was disfellowshipped for a measly 2 years. Actually it was for close to 4 years. She says she would never leave the truth. She has not only left the truth but is disfellowshipped. She admits herself that some see her as a bit of a 'fruit cake'. The original wrong with BCG that can be proved and that he now makes a full confession of was over 20 years ago.

Although BCG has left the truth, he has maintained constant contact. Still attends meetings on a regular basis. Continued to witness while in goal and apparently still does.
On the evidence available to us we feel he could be considered for reinstatement.
Below are some of the reasons we have considered.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

1. Why would he continue to deny abuse of other daughters if they were true? It would be so easy for him to admit and confess and finish the matter.
2. None of the charges of other daughters were ever presented and tested in court. None of those daughters gave such testimony in court.
3. His present wife (who is an active sister) says she asked BCK if her father had ever touched her and BCK said she didn't remember and would ask her mother. She later came back to say her mother said he had when she was 2 – 3 years old. Her mother of course was the one who instigated the trial.
4. His present wife who has been married to him for 18 years and knows the man better than any of us says he has never in all those years shown any inclination toward young girls or other women or pornography or other wrongs.
5. We asked him if he has ever admitted to the charges about his other daughters. His answer was that only once did he say something that could be construed that way. After a long interrogation by the elders he, out of frustration said something like. I admit to whatever you say. He says it was wrong. He should not have said it. Incidentally the elders at Longholme have commented to us per phone that he never admitted anything to them.
6. If there are some other sins that he is accused of that have not yet been settle, is it possible to know what they are? If they are accusations again just from BCG or do they have the required two or more witnesses to sustain the.
7. At this stage we feel he would be willing to do whatever is requested of him to set matters straight.

We appreciated the need to take a very serious view of child abuse and can understand your strong views about the matter. However if there is further proof of the allegations that we do not have, we would be in a better position to handle the matter if that could be available to us.

Other points could be mentioned

1. BCG claims that she has a loving husband and is blessed with 2 children. We understand that she has been separated and had at least one child out of wedlock.
2. She claims he violated Jehovah's laws and brought great reproach on his name and how terrible that is. She would never do that but she has left the truth and left Jehovah and broken his laws.
3. The prison authorities were apparently satisfied he was not an ongoing threat. He was released early from prison and was never required to undergo counseling.

We pray Jehovah direction on this matter and thank you for your kind assistance.

Yours Brothers

Re: Child Abuse Cases

Dear Brothers:

We are replying now to your letter GSC:AT February 12, 1998, No. 174S concerning the possibility of putting something in writing on the subject of confidentiality and the law in relation to child abuse matters. We appreciate the opinion of the Writing and Service Committees, and we thank you for the opportunity to comment further. We are sorry to be so long in replying, but we held it up due to the absence of some of the brothers who deal with these matters.

Up till now the brothers generally expect that the elders will keep all matters confidential, since this has been stressed a number of times. In Australia, it has happened that some elders have been prepared to accept punishment for contempt of court rather than disclose confidential information. However, we are now saying that elders should comply with the law where mandatory reporting is required if there is no exemption available to them. The situation will no doubt arise at some time where elders will have to disclose some information concerning child abuse, either to the secular authorities or even in open court if they are called upon to answer. Our feeling is that it may seem to publishers that the elders are treating confidential matters lightly. Also, it may be that some who have sinned would hesitate to talk to the elders if they thought that elders would not respect confidentiality. You asked us to set out what we believe would help in Our Kingdom Ministry if we feel it is really needed.

It has been suggested that the following be printed in a Question Box in Our Kingdom Ministry. It would not be necessary to schedule it as part of the service meeting program, unless we simply ask the Presiding Overseer or another elder simply to read the question and answer in the Announcements part of the meeting.

> Question: Should elders supply information to secular authorities when they learn that a brother or sister has been involved in a serious crime?
> Answer: Information given to elders is treated as confidential and is not discussed with others who are not involved. (*w*71 4/1, pp. 222-4) All Christians are counseled by God's Word to be law-abiding, and they are to pay to Caesar what is Caesar's where there is no conflict with God's laws. (Matthew 22:21; *w*90 11/1 pp. 10-15, 18-28) When Christians obey Caesar's laws that are not in conflict with God's laws, they have no need to "fear" punishment from the authorities as law-breakers, and they can maintain a good conscience.—Romans 13:3, 4.
> If an elder learns of some serious crime on the part of a member of the congregation, he may, in some circumstances, be obliged by law to report the matter or to provide some information to secular authorities. It is not the responsibility of the elders to enforce Caesar's laws, but the very nature of some crimes demands that they be reported, or that they be dealt with by Caesar, for this is the "arrangement of God." (Romans 13:2) Even in such cases, it is important that the elders maintain confidentiality to the extent possible, and elders should always contact the Society before providing any information on confidential matters to secular authorities.

Elders prove to be a "hiding place from the wind" to all in the congregation who are truly repentant, and they try to "readjust such a person," no matter how serious the sin committed. (Isaiah 32:2; Galatians 6:1) However, while Jehovah forgives repentant sinners, there may be consequences of the actions of the sinner that cannot be avoided. Depending on the law of the land, the sinner may have to face sanctions from the state, or even serve a prison term. The congregation will not protect him from that.—See The Watchtower, January 1, 1997, page 29.

While in Brooklyn I turned in to the Service Committee a summary dated November 21, 1997 of what the Australia branch was saying. A copy is enclosed. The branch here will be happy if the Service and Writing Committees agree basically with what has been said, and we look forward to any comments or directions you may have.

We will look forward to your further comments on any of these matters. We realize that this is a complicated subject with many ramifications, and we appreciate the careful consideration given to the matter by the Governing Body. We have a current case under way which we are handling according to our past policies, so we would appreciate your comments as soon as convenient.

We take this opportunity of sending our warm love.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

COMMENTS ON HANDLING CASES OF CHILD ABUSE IN AUSTRALIA

To: Service Committee
From: H. V. Mouritz
Date: November 21, 1997

Dear Brothers:

Only one state in Australia (Northern Territory) requires mandatory reporting of child abuse cases. One other state, New South Wales, has mandatory reporting, but the legal department believes that ministers of religion are exempted from this requirement.

Only one state in Australia has ecclesiastical privilege, but it is only in case of a confession handled "according to the ritual of the church." Other states do not have any kind of ecclesiastical privilege, although courts are very reluctant to force ministers to testify.

The memorandum from Brooklyn dated LLJ:LSD October 7, 1997 states that when an accusation is made to an elder, he and another elder (preferably the presiding overseer) will determine whether there is any substance to the accusation. They then call the Society's legal department to see whether they are obligated to report the matter to the authorities. If they are required to report, the memo says they should do so.

The branch agrees with this part of the memo, but they propose that, if reporting is mandatory, the elders should inform the person that he should report the matter himself, and if he does not do so, they will be obliged by law to make a report. If reporting is not mandatory, they should inform the individual that they will keep the matter confidential, but that, if it does come to the attention of the authorities and they are called upon to disclose what they know, they will have to do so.

Following this, the two elders will follow the normal procedures to have a judicial committee look into the matter. Points 3 and 4 in the memorandum of October 7 cover this point. According to normal procedure, the body of elders will become aware of the accusation when called upon to for a judicial committee, but, even if this knowledge legally obliges them to make a report to the authorities, they will not have to take any action, since they will know that the matter has already been reported.

If a person with a history of child abuse moves to another congregation, the elders will follow the instructions in the Society's letter of March 15, 1997. There does not seem to be any need to simply state, as the October 7 memo says: "[abuser] is a known child molester." If there is mandatory reporting in that state, that statement would give them reasonable grounds for believing it, since it came from a reliable source, and so in theory they may still be required to disclose it. So the branch does not see any reason why a complete report should not be given, as outlined in the Society's instructions, and this would certainly be of more value to the elders in the new congregation.

If a person whose offense has been dealt with moves to a state where reporting is mandatory, the elders may have to inform the person of the situation, and that the elders may have to make a report if he does not do so. The branch is asking, however, about possible situations where the offense was committed many years ago, it has been dealt with, and the individual appears to have made a recovery. Is it necessary to bring an old matter up again by reporting it? What if the offense was committed before the person learnt the truth? He has now repented, "turned around," and been baptized. There is no record of his offending again. It would seem to me that elders should use good judgment in such cases. If the offense is an old one, and especially if the offender was not then in the truth, the elders could conceivably conscientiously feel that the matter is in the past and not something current. Surely the law would not punish them if they did not report an old offense of that nature. They could always say that, as far as they know, the person has reformed, but that they are monitoring the situation, and, if there should be any reason in the future to believe that this is not the case, they will then follow the law and make a report. Of course, if because of what some other party does, the law enforcement agencies do find out about it, and the elders are required to tell what they know, they may have to do so if they cannot obtain ecclesiastical privilege. But in most cases they would not have any first-hand knowledge of the case, and if they say that, they would not likely be asked to testify.

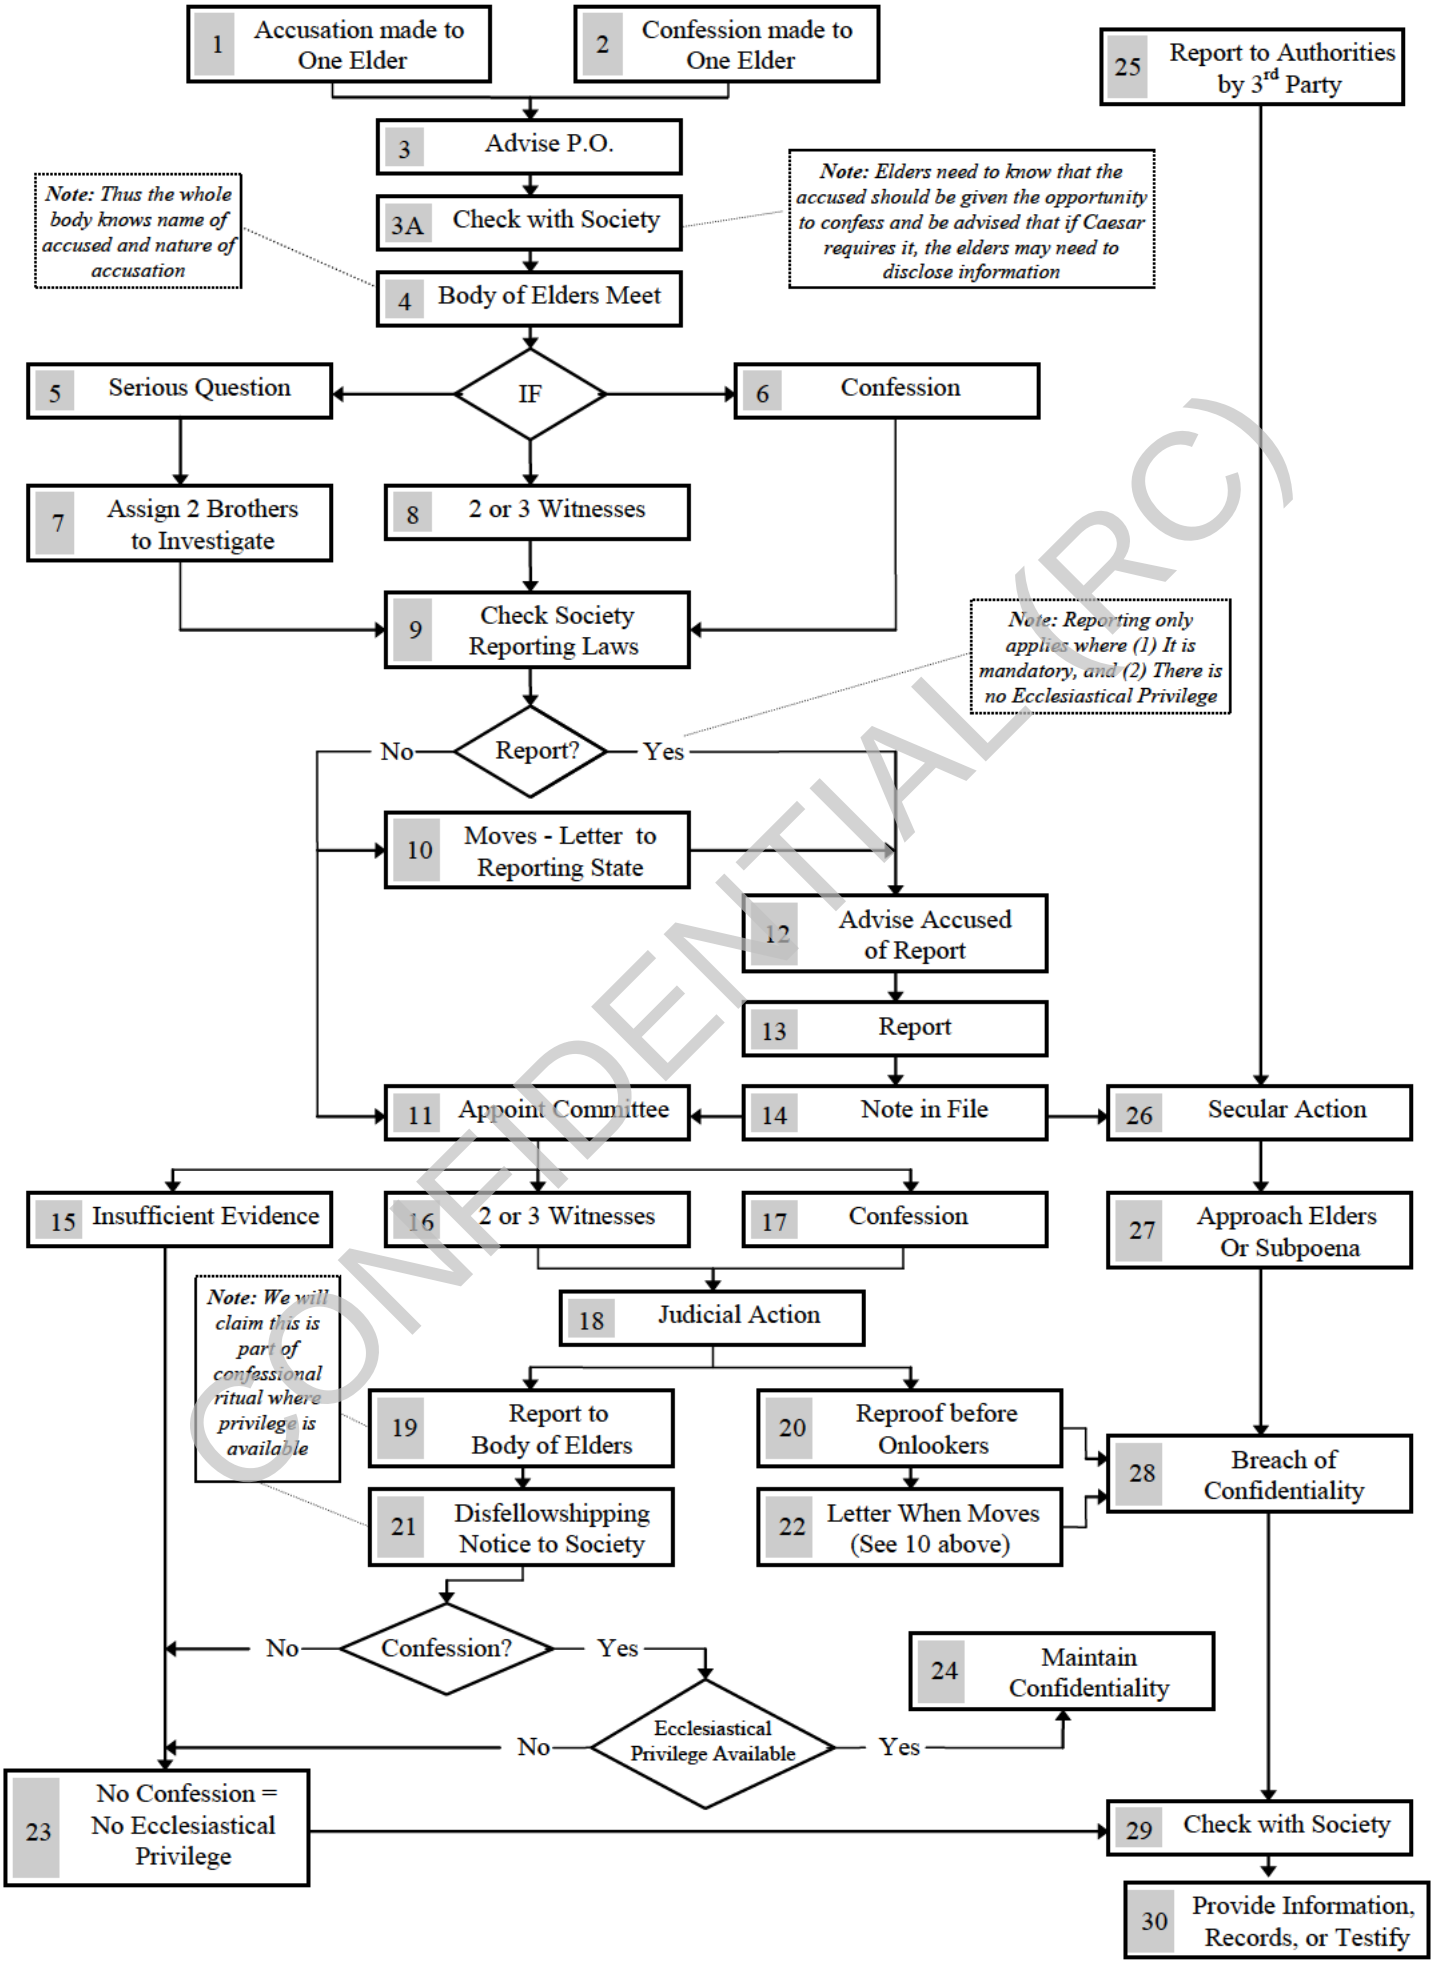
The point was made about the possible obligation on brothers in the Society's office to report a case when notification is sent in. If the elders follow the procedures, and they have made any necessary report, it would seem that there would be no legal obligation on those in the office to make another report. If we are in agreement that such matters may be disclosed on demand by a court if ecclesiastical privilege cannot be obtained, there would seem no reason why a full report could not be sent to the Society. The congregation elders would have such a report in their files, and if they are going to produce it if required, then there should be no need to call on the Society for further information. Brothers in the office will not have any first-hand knowledge to tell, in any case. As to whether reporting the facts to the Society would negate ecclesiastical privilege, we could always claim that it is part of the "ritual of the church." If we are not granted privilege, we are going to disclose it anyway, so it will hardly be a major problem.



I do not think we can cover every possible situation that might arise. These general guidelines should be sufficient. If unusual situations arise, the special circumstances can be considered and the branch can write about it then.

I hope these remarks will be of assistance. The branch will look forward to any comments you may have.

Your brother,

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

HANDLING CHILD ABUSE MATTERS (*ks*91 p. 109)

CONFIDENTIAL(RC)

Comments on Flow Chart - Handling Child Abuse Matters

The flow chart endeavours to follow the steps as outlined in ks 91 at page 109. It incorporates additional steps to enable the elders to maintain confidentiality where Caesar's laws make provision for privilege or exemption from reporting laws.

Elders receive information about child abuse matters in either of two ways; (1) When an accusation is made against the alleged molester, or (2) when the molester approaches an elder and confesses. Following the outline on page 109 of ks 91 the elder who receives this information from either source approaches the Presiding Overseer (3) and a meeting of elders is held (4).

We have inserted an additional step (3a) that has already been instituted with Child abuse matters, that is, for the elders to contact the Society before taking any action at all. The Legal Department, and or Service Department can advise the elders on how they should approach the accused, if it is not a confession. They may also be able to give some general advice in handling these cases at that time.

At the meeting of the body of elders, the elder hearing the accusation or confession will give sufficient information to the body of elders present (having in mind the principle of confidentiality referred to in ks 91 in the last paragraph on page 79) so that they can determine whether a disfellowshipping offence has been committed and whether there is a confession (6), or the matter can likely be established at the mouth of two or three witnesses (8) or if there are serious questions raised (5).

If there are serious questions but no indication that the matter can be established at the mouth of two or three witnesses, the body of elders present at the time assign two brothers to investigate the allegations.(7) These elders will report back to the body of elders.

If the allegations can now be established by two or three witnesses, by confession, or by sufficient circumstantial evidence, one of the elders, preferably the Presiding Overseer will contact the Society's Legal Department (or Service in some cases) to see if there are any reporting laws applicable.

The Society will determine if there are reporting laws applicable in that state or territory, and whether or not there are exemptions for ministers of religion and/or protection by way of ecclesiastical privilege which might. The Society will need to know whether or not there was a confession to determine this question, but they will not need to know the name of the person. In this way, the officers of the Society, at this point of the procedures, do not need to be practicing lawyers and could, therefore, be the brothers on the Service desk, providing the Legal Department can give them clear guidelines to enable them to apply the various state laws. This would not be difficult in Australia.

If the Society advises the elders to report the matter to the secular authorities, the elders assigned to investigate the matter, or the person who received the confession, should advise the accused that they are under obligation to make the report (12). They should then do so (13), making a full written report for the files (14).

At this stage, all the have knowledge of the bare details of the case, but the matter may not have been full investigated in detail by a committee. In this way, what the elders have is hearsay, except in the case of confession where the hearer has first hand knowledge. This may be of some benefit in claiming confidentiality under privilege where privilege is based on confession only. The secular authorities are now aware of the matter, either from the report made by the elders (13), or by a report from a third party (25).

A committee is then appointed to handle the matter (11), either after the report is made, or if there is no legal obligation to report.

If the information came by way of confession, either initially (2), or during the investigation (7), or even at a later stage, the Judicial Committee (and in fact all the elders) will keep strict confidentiality where ecclesiastical privilege is available. They will do this unless privilege has been breached by reproof before all onlookers (20), that is, where, for example, the molester is repentant and apologises before the family of the victim and receives counsel or reproof in their presence, or where a letter is written to another body of elders in the congregation to which the molester moved (22). In many cases, but perhaps not all, if the molester moves from a state without reporting laws to one that has reporting laws, the new body of elders could now need to check with the Society (9) as to their liability.

If privilege has been waived by a breach of confidentiality (28), as, for example in (20) and (22), then the Chairman of the Committee will again check with the Society to ascertain their legal obligations before disclosing information to the authorities.

Where the elders make the appropriate brief report to the body of elders (19), announce a disfellowshipping without stating the cause, or send a disfellowshipping notice to the Society (21), it would be appropriate to try, where ecclesiastical privilege is available, and claim that these actions are part of our confessional ritual.

Thus, in Australia, where there is no confession, there is no ecclesiastical privilege (24), and the only circumstances under which privilege can be claimed is where there is legislation making that provision and there is a confession, is when privilege has not been waived by such disclosures as reproof before onlookers (20), and the letter according to the instructions given in the March 14, 1997 (May 1, 1997 in Australia) letter to all elders (22).

The final step before giving information, handing over records, or testifying in court should be to check with the Society, preferably with the legal department, if the branch has one.

Branch Committee
AUSTRALIA

Dear Brothers:

Your letter dated LLA August 28, 2001, has been given consideration. You provided information concerning a new law that was recently enacted entitled the "Privacy Amendment (Private Sector) Act 2000." As you may know, our brothers in Europe have had to adjust the way they handle information since laws have been passed there that govern the way personal information is handled by organizations. As a result, the Service Committee has provided these branches with some general guidelines that we feel would be applicable to your situation. Therefore, we are setting out herein information that we feel will be helpful to you.

There may be some exceptions. If your branch feels there is an exception that needs to be made for you to comply with the law in your country, please feel free to write the Service Committee of the Governing Body and express what adjustment you feel is necessary for your branch and the reasons why this is necessary. Otherwise, we feel that you should follow the policy outlined herein.

FORMS AND APPLICATIONS

Since it seems clear that in most of the branches in the affected area, we can process personal data only if consent is given by the person(s) involved, then we should only maintain that data for which we have consent. This would mean that the signature be obtained of each person who is or becomes a publisher, to indicate consent is given to our keeping these records. Adjust the Congregation's Publisher Record Card (5-21) to include a statement that states the publisher consents to our keeping field service records. There should be a place for signature on the Congregation Publisher's Record Card (S-21). Nothing of an objectionable, confidential nature should be kept in the remarks column. You should mark "DO NOT DESTROY" on the original card that has this signature. This signed Congregation Publisher's Record Card (S-21) should be kept permanently in the Congregation's Publisher Record card file. If this is done, it would not be necessary for publishers to sign their cards each time a new one is issued every two years. There will be no need to keep a Congregation's Publisher's Record Card (S-21) for unbaptized minors whose parents are not Jehovah's Witnesses.

We will continue to use the Bible Study Report (S-3) to keep record of meeting attendance. However, it will not be necessary to have publishers fill out this form for their Bible Study(ies). The use of the House-to-House Record (S-8) must be discontinued. Publishers who find people of interest who desire them to return can make note of this in a personal notebook.

CONFIDENTIAL (PC)

When the names of interested persons speaking a foreign language should be passed on to a foreign language congregation in the area, branches use the Foreign Language Follow-Up Slip (S-70a). If the person to be called upon welcomes a visit from a publisher who speaks their language, obtain their consent. A statement to this effect can be added to the Foreign Language Follow-Up Slip (S-70a). Have a place for them to sign. If the Foreign Language Follow-Up Slip (S-70a) cannot be used in your branch, appropriate information could possibly be passed on to congregations needing such by means of a personal note or even a telephone communication.

In the future we will continue to use Subscription form M(d) 1 and M(d) 101. However, we need to include a line for the subscriber to sign as written consent. It is best not to use the gift subscription arrangement unless the one receiving the subscription signs the Subscription form M(d) 1 or M(d) 101.

It would seem that all applications for Bethel, Gilead, Ministerial Training School, traveling overseers, etc. are already being signed and so should satisfy the Supervisory Authority's requirement of consent. We can add a statement to these applications that gives us consent to process personal data on all who have to fill out applications for schools or some form of special service. This will enable us to acquire and keep Personal Qualification's Reports (S-326) and evaluation reports on traveling overseers, Special pioneers, Gilead students, Ministerial Training School students, etc. If this is not adequate for any branch in the European Union, please let the Service Committee know along with your recommendations for maintaining personal data needed for the branch in connection with such applicants. Information on their activity as well as personal data needs to be filed.

DISCIPLINARY MATTERS

Apparently certain personal data kept by congregations or the branch must be accessible to the person(s) involved. Since detailed information of a confidential nature should not be kept in congregation or branch files, use of the regular Disfellowshipped Person's Form (S-77) may be discontinued. The details of judicial committee cases reported to the Branch can be reported in a typewritten letter. After the Branch has reviewed it, such correspondence may be discarded. There is no need for the congregation judicial committee to keep a copy of this letter. The Disfellowshipped Person's Forms (S-79a/b), can still be used but needs to be modified. These forms may contain: Person's name; date of action; service position (if any); Scriptural text, related to reason for judicial action.

If you are not allowed to keep records accumulated in the past, discard the current Disfellowshipped Persons Forms (S-77) and (S-79a/b) that do not comply with the law. Adjustments can be made as outlined in this letter to have your files conform with the law on processing personal data.

We will send electronic copies of the above-mentioned forms to you.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

Letters Of Introduction sent when publishers and appointed brothers move may be viewed as 'minister to minister communications. Third parties are not involved, so it does not appear that these violate the spirit of this law. However, after a secretary receives such letters, and the body of elders becomes familiar with the content, such letters do not need to be kept. The same can be said for letters that the branch sends when a Bethel Family Member is dismissed. After such letters are read, there is no need to keep them on file.

OTHER MATTERS OF CONCERN

Those working on the Hospital Information Desk (HID) or on a Hospital Liaison Committee (HLC) should only keep on file data for doctors who have given consent. Likewise if data must be kept on medical matters involving some publishers as reference, we should have written consent to file that information and we should not share that data unless we have the written consent of the publisher(s) involved.

If there is a need to have a Director Processing Personal Data, you can officially appoint someone on the Branch Committee or someone in the Service Department. If there is a need for each department at the branch that deals with personal data to have someone appointed as an assistant to the Director Processing Personal Data, this can be arranged by the Branch Committee. If it is also necessary to appoint someone in the local congregation, it would be good to appoint the congregation secretary. If the body of elders feels it would be best for another elder to serve, they should send his name to the branch and the reason for not using the secretary.

Your branch should make sure that all confidential files kept are kept in a secure place that is locked. Only those who are authorized should have access to confidential files, whether these are hard copy or electronic. If confidential files have served their purpose, they need not be kept any longer.

We hope these observations and guidelines will be helpful to your branches and will enable us to carry out our commission to preach the good news as a clean Organization who exerts itself to please Jehovah and to give to Caesar what is due Caesar.—Matt 22:17; 24:14; 28:19.

Please be assured of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Your brothers,

Service Committee

REDACTED

October 13 2002

Dear Brothers,

I am writing about some concerns that I have about my father - BCH I am concerned that he may still have contact with young children in his congregation and they may be in danger of being abused by him. I am sure not many in his congregation are aware of his attitude toward pedophilia and may unknowingly expose their children to risk. As you are most probably aware, he has had a long history of abusing children - starting with myself when I was very young (1972), and even though, after learning the truth from the bible, and bringing his life into harmony with it for a time, he later allowed himself to other incidents. Again, some time after in 1978, at a convention, he behaved indecently toward me. Then, in 1988, he abused my sister BCG and at around that time, also my sister BCL.

It has become very obvious to me that he does not think he has done anything wrong and on several occasions has expressed that he was wrongly disfellowshipped. He has in the past been very misleading spiritually with myself, misquoting scriptures to suit his own ends giving no concern to the effect on others (even though, it's because of him that I have come to know and love Jehovah) - including myself. I feel no animosity toward him and have searched for signs of humility and true sorrow and regret over what he has done - but I have not found any. In the years since he left my mother with all of the children, he has been under obligation to pay maintenance for the children, but he hardly paid what was owed to my mother. (It was never on time or the correct amount and only sent after my mother phoned to ask for it) This issue over paying the maintenance for his children disgusted me and it made me ask the question "is this evidence of someone who is truly sorry for all the heartache he has caused his children. Is he really repentant?" I felt it difficult to see any repentance especially when I saw he had bought himself a new car.) I would love to have a proper father/daughter relationship with him, but after writing to him for about a year, and having some telephone conversations, I felt compelled to cut my contact with him, for my own spiritual health. This was because he continued to express the same attitude that he was spiritually strong, was enjoying privileges, (like having a book study group at his home, having the circuit overseer and his wife as a guest, that he was studying the bible with others etc) and he was known and loved in the congregation and he was innocent of the charges that he was disfellowshipped for.

CONFIDENTIAL

I feel very concerned that if something were to happen again to another child, besides the hurt and pain they would go through personally, Jehovah's name and his reputation and that of his organization would be damaged because my father had been reinstated. (Even though he has stood by the statement that he has done nothing wrong.) Saying that on many occasions "it's all in her head" about BCG 's abuse - My brother REDACT will support this statement, because I recently had the opportunity to speak to him about this matter. I know that Jehovah hates child abuse and that Jehovah's organization does not tolerate it in any fashion, but that there is room for mercy for someone who is truly repentant.

Please do not hesitate to contact me about this matter if you need clarification of anything I have mentioned in this letter.

Yours sincerely,

BCK

Dear Mr Toole:

In response to your recent inquiry about whether we had an original letter from REDACTED BCG dated 19 February 1995, we advise that a member of our staff, Mr Alan Wood, has located the requested letter which we have enclosed.

In addition to this letter, Mr Wood also located a report from the original committee that handled the case involving BCH 's (received 7 August 1989) as well as a report from the appeal committee concerning BCH dated 23 July 1989. These reports are also enclosed with this letter.

We understand that criminal charges have been laid against BCH and we confirm our agreement that these documents be sent to Constable Natalie Bennett of the police department in Brisbane in connection with that matter. We would like to mention, however, that these documents deal with correspondence that we would normally treat as strictly confidential as well as discussions that were held in circumstances of confidentiality. Because of this, we ask you to do whatever you can to see that these documents are dealt with as discreetly and sensitively as possible.

Please arrange to have the enclosed materials returned to us as soon as the case against BCH has been concluded.

Yours faithfully,

Re: Privacy Laws in Australia

Dear Brothers:

Thank you for your letter GAO:AT January 3, 2002, No. 223S, and the general guidelines that have been used to determine how personal information is to be handled under European privacy legislation. You refer to our letter LLA August 28, 2001, No. 354, in which we notified the Publishing Committee of the introduction of the Privacy Amendment (Private Sector) Act 2000 in Australia.

At present, the application of the law has been restricted to entities having a turnover of more than AUD 3,000,000 (about USD 1,500,000), as explained in the third paragraph of our letter No. 354. The turnover of the Australia branch is well below that figure, and we are unlikely to exceed the threshold unless we treat large transfers of funds or materials to other branches as receivables, actually billing the charges to the other branch. The Publishing Committee, in their letter LLJ:LPX December 19, 2001, No. 280P, approved our request to handle remittances and transfers to other branches as outright donations. We are, therefore, not subject to the provisions of the Privacy Amendment (Private Sector) Act 2000.

On this basis, we had not planned at this time to implement any of the guidelines outlined in your letter No. 223S, and will not do so unless you advise otherwise.

Please accept our warm Christian love.

Re: Interbranch Indebtedness

Dear Brothers:

The Australian government has recently passed the Privacy Amendment (Private Sector) Act 2000. The object of this legislation, which will come into effect in December, 2001, is to provide a code to control the collection, holding, use, correction, disclosure, and transfer of personal information by private sector organisations to meet international concerns and Australia's international obligations relating to privacy. Organisations caught by the Act must provide to an individual with access to any personal information the organisation may hold about that individual, and it can only hold "sensitive" information with the individual's consent. "Sensitive" information includes matters relating to religious, ethnic, and sexual practices.

The application of these principles to the Society would seriously affect the way we collect and collate information about ethnic witnessing territory, some congregation records, and the way we handle judicial matters, especially those relating to child abuse.

The legislation applies to non-profit organisations such as charities and religious organisations. However, "small businesses" are exempt from the operation of the Act. A business is a "small business" if its annual turnover for the previous year is AUD 3,000,000 (USD 1,500,000) or less. Turnover does not include contributions or donations, but does include amounts charged to other branches for items supplied by the Australia Branch. Where funds are transferred without consideration, that is, they are donations or cash transfers, then those amounts would not be included in the turnover figure.

We believe that it is important for the Australia branch to discontinue the practice of treating transfers to other branches as receivables, in a general sense, and should enter these transactions in the records as outright donations. If a branch, such as India or New Zealand, has some unusual situation that affects the transferring of funds, and for that reason a charge must be made for literature and other items supplied, we do not see these few instances as causing a difficulty. However, we would need to monitor the situation so that we did not at any time exceed the threshold.

In your letters AF:AG February 19, 1999 No. 142, AF:AG November 8, 1999 No. 139, AOK:ACB August 16, 2000 No. 301, and others the principle of holding sufficient debt between branches to enable a claim to be made in the event that adverse circumstances endanger the property of the branch, is clearly made. At present our records show substantial indebtedness between Australia branch and branches to which we are currently sending literature, funds, and other items. We do not see any need to write off these amounts already shown on the records.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

We now seek your permission to write off all future branch transfers, treating them as outright donations. In this way we will keep our "turnover" below the threshold and so avoid the difficulties and obligations that will otherwise apply if we come within the jurisdiction of this Privacy Act.

Thank you for your consideration of this matter.

Please accept our warm Christian love.

Re: Child Abuse Memorandum

Dear Brothers:

We have now had an opportunity to consider to your memorandum dated AB:AB July 22, 1997, No. 231 (Memo) together with comments from the United States Legal Department. Your Memo relates to child abuse matters and subpoenas for confidential records. We have the following comments and recommendations.

If the law requires that a report of child abuse be made under the circumstances presented to the elder in a specific case, the elders should report the matter to the authorities in the manner prescribed by local laws. (Romans 13:1-7)

We therefore recommend that the following procedure be implemented when handling child abuse accusations in Australia:

1. When an accusation is made to an elder, he and another elder (preferably the presiding overseer) together will determine whether there is any substance to the accusation. (ks 91, page 97, 109)

2. The two elders should immediately call the branch's legal department for assistance in determining whether or not the matter should be reported to the governmental authorities. Such assistance should be deemed legal advice. If it is determined that the matter must be reported to the authorities, then the two elders together should make the report as soon as possible even if other people are required to report the matter. When the matter has been reported, the reporting elders should place in the confidential file a memo stating only that "a report involving [victim] and [accused] was reported to [governmental agency] by [elder] and [elder] on [date]."

3. When the circumstances warrant it, a judicial committee will be appointed. The judicial committee eventually must make a decision on the merits of the matter before it. In light of the evidentiary requirements of *ks*91, there will be instances in which the evidence is insufficient for the committee to determine that the accused is guilty of wrongdoing because there will be no confession and only one eyewitness (the child victim) against the accused. (ks 91, page 111) For this reason, the judicial committee must keep in mind that it may not have enough evidence to decide that a serious sin has been committed for purposes of judicial reproof or disfellowshipping even though the matter has been reported to the governmental authorities.

CONFIDENTIAL (RC)

4. If any elder is contacted by a police officer or other investigating agent requesting information and/or documents relating to a child abuse case, before providing any information or documents the elder should first contact the branch's legal department for advice. If subpoenaed to testify in a court of law or to produce documents relating to a child abuse case, testimony should be given and documents produced only when there is no available privilege under local law. If the availability of such privilege is uncertain in the particular case, testimony should not be given and documents should not be produced unless a judge rules that the privilege is not available.

Your Memo raised concerns that the ecclesiastical privilege may be lost when one body of elders advises another body of elders that an individual is a former child molester. Therefore, we recommend that when such information must be conveyed by one body of elders to another as outlined in the March 15, 1997, letter to all bodies of elders, it be done in general terms. For example, the elders could simply state that "[abuser] is a known child molester." We understand that in Australia the ecclesiastical privilege only applies to confessions. By not referring to any confession or specific information that would identify the victim or specific type of sexual abuse involved, it would seem that the ecclesiastical privilege would be preserved.

Further, your Memo raised concerns that brothers at Bethel could be required to report child abuse matters or possibly be subpoenaed to testify based on information received from congregation elders who call the Society for direction on these matters. By following the procedure outlined in point #2 above, would not the attorney-client privilege apply so that brothers in your Legal Department would not have to report or give testimony? We are informed that such would be the case in the United States.

Thank you for presenting this matter to us. We hope that implementing our recommendations will help you to handle these difficult cases in a Scriptural manner for the benefit of the congregations while complying with the constraints of Caesar's law.

Please accept our Christian love and greetings.

Your brother,

DOCUMENT RETENTION POLICY

The primary purpose for recording and retaining this information is to enable Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia ("the Society"), which is responsible for the religion of Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia, to supervise the religious activities of Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the country, individually and collectively. This includes:

(1) Being aware of anyone who is no longer a member of the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses;

(2) Knowing what spiritual help and assistance has been given to the individual concerned;

(3) Providing whatever direction is needed to ensure that the Scriptural standards, as set out in God's Holy Word, the Bible, are maintained in the Congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses; and

(4) Ensuring that the individual concerned is given whatever spiritual help and assistance is needed if he or she wishes to again become a member of the Christian Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in the future.

DISFELLOWSHIPPINGS OR DISASSOCIATIONS

Reporting

- ☐ Did you review the notes written on page 143 of the Kingdom Ministry School textbook?
- ☐ Did you fill out an original Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) form and make one copy, retaining the copy for the congregation's confidential file?
- ☐ Did you provide a detailed summation of the case, explaining what took place? Did you include the reasons why you judged the person not to be repentant?
  - ☐ In case of disassociation, did you explain what led to the person's decision, how he responded to efforts to assist him, and what convinced you that his position was adamant?
  - ☐ If the matter involved child abuse, did you provide complete details, including names and dates of birth of those involved? Did you explain the nature and extent of the abuse and how it was substantiated?
- ☐ Did you send the original S-77 form along with the summation in a special blue envelope to the branch office?

Filing

- ☐ When you received the stamped S-77 form, did you place it in a sealed envelope in the congregation's confidential file and destroy the congregation's copy.
- ☐ Did the chairman of the judicial committee destroy all other correspondence as directed on page 2 of the S-77 form? Did the chairman sign and date page 2 of the S-77 form?

REINSTATEMENTS AND DEATHS

- ☐ When a disfellowshipped or disassociated individual is reinstated or dies, did the secretary sign, check the appropriate box, and date the bottom of the stamped S-77 form?
- ☐ Did he make a photocopy of both sides of the S-77 form for the congregation and mail the original to the branch office in a special blue envelope.
- ☐ Has the congregation's copy of the S-77 form been retained in the congregation's confidential file?

APPEALS

- ☐ When an individual appeals his disfellowshipping, the chairman of the judicial committee should promptly contact the circuit overseer, who will then designate elders to serve on the appeal committee.
- ☐ The judicial committee should complete the S-77 forms (except for the date of announcement of disfellowshipping) and give them, along with whatever written records it has from the judicial hearing(s), to the chairman of the appeal committee prior to the appeal hearing.—See ks91 p. 125.
- ☐ The appeal committee's report is to be in the form of a letter addressed to the branch office, using the appeal committee chairman's mailing address for the return address.
- ☐ It is to be signed by all the members of the appeal committee, with each one's name and the name of his congregation typed below his signature.
- ☐ The letter should provide a detailed summation of the appeal hearing and include comments that directly address the following questions: (1) Was there a Scriptural basis for the disfellowshipping? (2) Was there acceptable evidence to establish the wrongdoing? Explain. (3) Was the wrongdoer unrepentant at the time of the hearing by the original judicial committee? What convinces the appeal committee of this?
- ☐ If the appeal committee upholds the original committee's decision to disfellowship the individual, the appeal committee should make certain that the S-77 form is filled out completely, including the date of announcement of disfellowshipping, and then mail the original form along with the appeal committee's letter to the branch office in the same special blue envelope.
- ☐ If the original basis for disfellowshipping was invalid but other valid grounds for disfellowshipping exist, new S-77 forms should be made out by the original committee, giving the proper information. The original form along with the initial S-77 form and the appeal committee's letter should be sent to the branch office.
- ☐ If both committees agree that the person should not be disfellowshipped, the individual should not be told this. Rather, the appeal committee should send the branch office the original S-77 form along with separate letters from both the original committee and the appeal committee that supply sufficient details to give a clear picture of the reason(s) for their conclusions. Thereafter, the branch office will provide its comments.
- ☐ If the appeal committee and the original committee are in disagreement, the appeal committee should send the original S-77 form to the branch office with a letter giving the reasons for its conclusion and should include a letter from the original committee that expresses that committee's reasons for disagreement.
- ☐ When the matter has been finalized: All written records from both the original and appeal committees should be destroyed. Only the stamped S-77 form should be retained in the congregation's confidential file. See also the instructions above under the heading "Filing".

Dear Fellow Ministers:

Organized to Do Jehovah's Will is published for Jehovah's Witnesses. This book makes clear what is involved in pleasing God and finding delight in doing his will. It provides an overall view of how the Christian congregation is organized for getting God's work done. The book offers counsel and direction to help us maintain unity with our brothers worldwide. (1 Pet. 2:17; 5:9) It highlights how we can have a share in declaring the good news of the Kingdom in recognition of God's will that "all sorts of men . . . come to an accurate knowledge of truth."—1 Tim. 2:4; Matt. 24:14.

In addition to preaching the good news of the Kingdom, we desire to render needed spiritual assistance to all those who are being drawn to Jehovah in response to the invitation to praise him in association with his people. (Ps. 145:21; Rev. 22:17) New ones need to become familiar with the operation of Jehovah's organization and learn how they can have a share in the modern-day preaching work. They are encouraged to continue in their endeavors to meet the Scriptural requirements for becoming dedicated and baptized Witnesses of Jehovah.

General information is here published concerning the duties of elders and ministerial servants, judicial procedures, and various other features of congregation organization. Details regarding these matters are reviewed from time to time in The Watchtower, Our Kingdom Ministry, and other publications of Jehovah's Witnesses.

It is our prayer that the application of what is contained in this publication will help you to progress spiritually. May you continue to find delight in doing Jehovah's will in harmony with his organized people!

Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses

WAT.0013.001.0005

loved by the slave class for their loyal, zealous support.

THE ROLE OF THE GOVERNING BODY

"The faithful and discreet slave" seeks to preserve unity and makes it possible organizationally for 'all things to take place decently and by arrangement.' (1 Cor. 14:40) To accomplish this in the first century, a group of anointed Christians from among the faithful and discreet slave class were chosen as its representatives. As such, they did not consult with all anointed elders in the world before making decisions. From their position in the Jerusalem congregation, they served as a governing body for the entire anointed Christian congregation.

From Pentecost 33 C.E. onward, the faithful apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ took the lead in providing direction for the newly founded Christian congregation. (Acts 4:33, 35, 37; 5:18, 29) By about the year 49 C.E., this governing body had been enlarged to include more than Jesus' apostles. When the circumcision issue was decided, that body included "the apostles and older men in Jerusalem." (Acts 15:1, 2) It was their responsibility to consider matters affecting Christians everywhere. They sent out letters and decrees, all of which strengthened the congregations and made it possible for the disciples to remain united in thought and action. The congregations followed the direction of the governing body, and as a result, they received Jehovah's blessing and prospered.—Acts 8:1, 14, 15; 15:22-31; 16:4, 5.

The value of such an arrangement is evident today. The anointed ones making up the present-day Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses have decades of faithful service and theocratic experience behind them. They offer spiritual direction to Jehovah's people, as did the first-century governing body. The Governing Body also continues to carry the responsibility of overseeing the preaching work, producing Bible study material, and arranging for the appointment of overseers to serve in various capacities in the organization. These are some of the Kingdom interests of Christ that are being cared for today. Like the early Christians, we gladly look to spiritually mature men for Bible-based direction and guidance in matters of worship.

As was true in the first century, the Governing Body today is made up of imperfect men. However, Jehovah has used imperfect humans in the past to accomplish his will. He instructed Noah to build an ark and to preach about the coming destruction of his day. (Gen. 6:13, 14, 22; 2 Pet. 2:5) Moses was appointed to lead Jehovah's people out of Egypt. (Ex. 3:10) Imperfect men were inspired to write the Bible. (2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1:21) Jehovah's use of imperfect men today to direct the preaching and disciple-making work does not weaken our confidence in God's organization. Rather, we are strengthened because we know that without Jehovah's backing, the Governing Body could never accomplish all that they do.

WHY TRUST "THE FAITHFUL AND DISCREET SLAVE"

There are many reasons to have complete trust in the slave class. First and foremost, Jesus has appointed them over all his precious "belongings." This is a clear indication that he has complete trust in them.

WAT.0013.001.0007

Yes, we have every reason to trust "the faithful and discreet slave" fully. Satan, the god of this system of things, is making an all-out effort to disgrace Jehovah's name and organization. (2 Cor. 4:4) Do not fall prey to Satan's wicked tactics. (2 Cor. 2:11) He knows that only a short period of time remains before his abyssing, and he is trying to take down with him as many of Jehovah's people as possible. (Rev. 12:12) However, as Satan intensifies his efforts, may we draw ever closer to Jehovah by manifesting complete trust in the channel that He is using to direct His people today. Satan is waging war against "the remaining ones" of the slave class, who have been entrusted with directing "the work of bearing witness to Jesus." (Rev. 12:17) Our full confidence in Jehovah and his arrangements results in a united brotherhood.

CHAPTER 4

HOW THE CONGREGATION IS ORGANIZED AND GOVERNED

THE apostle Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians expressed an important truth about God when he wrote: "God is a God, not of disorder, but of peace." Then commenting further with regard to congregation meetings, he said: "Let all things take place decently and by arrangement."—1 Cor. 14: 33, 40.

At the very beginning of the same letter, the apostle gave admonition concerning reported dissensions within the Corinthian congregation. Paul exhorted the brothers there to "speak in agreement" and to be "fitly united in the same mind and in the same line of thought." (1 Cor. 1:10, 11) He then gave counsel with regard to various matters that were affecting the unity of the congregation. Using the illustration of a human body, he showed clearly the need for unity and cooperation. Hence, he urged all in the Christian congregation, regardless of their role, to care for one another in a loving way. (1 Cor. 12:12-26) Such harmonious cooperation among the members of the congregation implies an orderly arrangement—organization.

But how was the Christian congregation to be organized? Who would organize it? What kind of structure would it have, and who would serve in appointed positions? By letting the Bible be our guide, we get clear answers to these questions.—1 Cor. 4:6.

ORGANIZED THEOCRATICALLY

The Christian congregation was established in 33 C.E. on the Jewish festival day of Pentecost. What can we learn about the congregation at that time? It was organized and governed theocratically, that is, under God (Greek, the·os') rule (kra'tos). The inspired account of what took place there in Jerusalem nearly 2,000 years ago leaves no doubt that the congregation of anointed Christians was established by God. (Acts 2:1-47) It was his building, his household. (1 Cor. 3:9; Eph. 2:19) The same pattern of organization and operation that was established during the first century is adhered to by the Christian congregation of God today, which has now been enlarged by the addition of the "great crowd."—Rev. 7:9, 10.

The early congregation began with about 120 members. Holy spirit was poured out first upon these in fulfillment of Joel 2:28, 29. (Acts 2:16-18) But that same day, about 3,000 others were baptized in water and brought into the spirit-begotten congregation. They had embraced the word about the Christ and "continued devoting themselves to the teaching of the apostles." After that, "Jehovah continued to join to them daily those being saved."—Acts 2:41, 42, 47.

The growth of the anointed congregation in Jerusalem became such that the Jewish high priest complained that the disciples had filled Jerusalem with their teaching. The new disciples in Jerusalem included many Jewish priests, who became part of the congregation.—Acts 5:28; 6:7.

Jesus had said: "You will be witnesses of me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria and to the most distant part of the earth." (Acts 1:8) And so it was that when great persecution arose in Jerusalem following the death of Stephen, the disciples living there were scattered throughout Judea and Samaria. But wherever they went, they continued declaring the good news and making more disciples, including some from among the Samaritans. (Acts 8:1-13) Still later, the good news began to be preached with good success among the uncircumcised, non-Jewish nations. (Acts 10:1-48) All this preaching activity and the making of many disciples resulted in new Christian congregations being formed outside Jerusalem. —Acts 11:19-21; 14:21-23.

What arrangements were made to ensure that each newly established congregation was organized and governed God's way, theocratically? Through the operation of God's spirit, provision was made for undershepherds to care for the flock. In congregations that Paul and Barnabas visited during their first missionary journey, they made appointments of older men. (Acts 14:23) Acts chapter 20 relates information about the apostle Paul's meeting with the older men of the congregation in Ephesus. Paul said to them: "Pay attention to yourselves and to all the flock, among which the holy spirit has appointed you overseers, to shepherd the congregation of God, which he purchased with the blood of his own Son." (Acts 20:28) These were older men in a spiritual sense. They qualified for appointment because of meeting Scriptural requirements. (1 Tim. 3:1-7) Paul's fellow worker Titus was authorized to make appointments of older men in the congregations of Crete.—Titus 1:5.

As more congregations were formed, the apostles and older men in Jerusalem continued to serve as the principal overseers of the expanded international congregation of the first century. They served as a governing body for the entire Christian congregation.

Writing to the congregation in Ephesus, the apostle Paul explained that by working in accord with God's spirit, the Christian congregation could maintain unity through adherence to the headship of Jesus Christ. The apostle urged Christians there to cultivate humility and to observe the oneness of the spirit in peaceful association with all members of the congregation. (Eph. 4:1-6) Then he quoted Psalm 68:18 and applied it to Jehovah's provision for spiritually qualified men to serve the needs of the congregation as apostles, prophets, evangelizers, shepherds, and teachers. Such men, as gifts from Jehovah, would build up the entire congregation to a spiritual fullness that would be pleasing to God.—Eph. 4:7-16.

CONGREGATION TODAY FOLLOWS APOSTOLIC PATTERN

Today a similar pattern of organization is followed in all congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses. These collectively form a united worldwide congregation built around the nucleus of spirit-anointed ones. (Zech. 8:23) This is possible because Jesus Christ, true to his promise, has loyally remained with his anointed disciples "all the days until the conclusion of the system of things." Those brought into the growing congregation today embrace the good news of God, dedicate their life unreservedly to Jehovah God to do his will, and are baptized as disciples of Jesus Christ. (Matt. 28:19, 20; Mark 1:14; Acts 2:41) They recognize "the fine shepherd," Jesus Christ, as Head not only over the anointed members of the congregation but also over the entire flock, which includes the "other sheep." (John 10:14, 16; Eph. 1:22, 23) That "one flock" maintain their unity by loyally recognizing the headship of Christ and also by submitting to the organizational channel, "the faithful and discreet slave," whom Christ appointed. May we continue to manifest full confidence and trust in this faithful slave class today.—Matt. 24:45.

USE OF RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS

During these last days of this wicked system of things, the belongings of the Master have increased abundantly throughout all the earth. This has placed a heavy responsibility on 'the faithful slave.' In discharging the responsibility to provide spiritual food at the proper time and in order to get the good news of the Kingdom preached before the end comes, the slave class has formed certain agencies, or legal entities. It has proved to be the course of wisdom to organize certain corporations that are recognized by the laws of various countries. These religious corporations own and operate printing facilities that produce and distribute Bibles and Bible literature worldwide for use in the Kingdom ministry.

WAT.0013.001.0012

These corporations are exclusively devoted to advancing the interests of true worship in the earth. All these legal instrumentalities cooperate with one another. Such legal corporations are used to facilitate the preaching of the good news worldwide and to care for the spiritual needs of the entire congregation of God in all parts of the earth.

STRUCTURE OF BRANCH ORGANIZATION

Whenever a branch office is established, a Branch Committee of three or more elders is appointed to care for the various responsibilities involved in looking after the work in the country or countries under the jurisdiction of that particular branch. One member of the committee serves as the Branch Committee coordinator.

Local congregations under each branch are organized into circuits, and a number of circuits make up a district. Circuits and districts may be of various sizes, depending on geographic and language considerations as well as the number of congregations within the area assigned to the branch. A circuit overseer is appointed to serve the congregations in each circuit. A district overseer visits the different circuits, serves at circuit assemblies, and spends some time serving congregations, usually with the circuit overseer present. The duties of traveling overseers are set out from time to time in Our Kingdom Ministry as well as in correspondence directed to them by the branch office.

All in the organization recognize God's administration. The congregations acknowledge and conform to organizational arrangements that are outlined for the benefit of all. They accept the appointment of older men who oversee the work in branches, districts, circuits, and congregations. They look to "the faithful and discreet slave" for spiritual food at the proper time. 'The faithful slave' today, in turn, adheres strictly to the headship of Christ, holds to Bible principles, and submits to the direction of the holy spirit. As all work together in unity, they experience results similar to those experienced by the congregations in the first century. We are told at Acts 16:5: "Indeed, the congregations continued to be made firm in the faith and to increase in number from day to day."

CHAPTER 5

OVERSEERS TO SHEPHERD THE FLOCK

DURING his earthly ministry, Jesus proved himself to be "the fine shepherd." (John 10:11) Upon viewing the crowds that eagerly followed him, "he felt pity for them, because they were skinned and thrown about like sheep without a shepherd." (Matt. 9:36) Peter and the other apostles took note of his loving concern. How different Jesus was from the false shepherds of Israel, who neglected the flock to such an extent that the sheep were scattered and spiritually starved! (Ezek. 34:7, 8) By paying attention to Jesus' fine example of teaching and to the way he cared for the sheep even to the point of laying down his life for them, the apostles learned how to help those with faith return to Jehovah, 'the shepherd and overseer of their souls.'—1 Pet. 2:25.

By precept and example, Jesus emphasized the serious responsibility that he laid upon the apostles to care for the sheep. When speaking to Peter on one occasion, Jesus impressed very strongly upon the minds and hearts of the apostles the importance of feeding and shepherding the sheep. (John 21:15-17) Peter was deeply moved by this, as indicated later in his exhortation to older men. In his first inspired letter, he admonished overseers: "Shepherd the flock of God in your care, not under compulsion, but willingly; neither for love of dishonest gain, but eagerly; neither as lording it over those who are God's inheritance, but becoming examples to the flock."—1 Pet. 5:1-3.

Peter's words apply with equal force to overseers in the congregation today. The responsibility of overseers today is the same as it was in the first century, namely, to shepherd the flock of God. In his letter, Peter emphasized the proper attitude that overseers should have in caring for such responsibility. Imitating Jesus, they should serve willingly and eagerly as examples to the flock, taking the lead in Jehovah's service.

We can be grateful for the spirit-appointed overseers in the congregation. The benefits we receive are many. For example, overseers give spiritual encouragement and personal attention to the needs of individual members of the congregation. Each week they preside with earnestness at congregation meetings, where all are nourished in the faith. (Rom. 12:8) Their efforts to protect the flock from harmful elements, such as wicked men, contribute to our spiritual security. (Isa. 32:2; Titus 1:9-11) Their fine example and lead in the field ministry encourage us to keep active in preaching the good news regularly each month. (Phil. 3:16, 17; Heb. 13:15-17) Through these "gifts in men," Jehovah has provided well for the building up of the congregation.—Eph. 4:8, 11, 12.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR OVERSEERS

To ensure proper care of the congregation, men appointed to serve as overseers must meet the requirements set out in God's Word. Only if they qualify can it be said that they are appointed by holy spirit. (Acts 20:28) Admittedly, the Scriptural standards for Christian overseers are high, since these men have the serious responsibilities of taking the lead in Jehovah's worship and of being exemplary in Christian conduct. (1 Cor. 11:1; Heb. 13:7) But the standards are not so high that they cannot be met by Christian men who have real love for Jehovah and are willing to be used by him. The high standards call for those appointed as elders to be good examples in the congregation. It should be obvious to all that the overseers are individuals who apply Bible counsel in the affairs of life.

The apostle Paul set out in his first letter to Timothy and his letter to Titus the basic Scriptural requirements for overseers. At 1 Timothy 3:1-7, we read: "If any man is reaching out for an office of overseer, he is desirous of a fine work. The overseer should therefore be irreprehensible, a husband of one wife, moderate in habits, sound in mind, orderly, hospitable, qualified to teach, not a drunken brawler, not a smiter, but reasonable, not belligerent, not a lover of money, a man presiding over his own household in a fine manner, having children in subjection with all seriousness; (if indeed any man does not know how to preside over his own household, how will he take care of God's congregation?) not a newly converted man, for fear that he might get puffed up with pride and fall into the judgment passed upon the Devil. Moreover, he should also have a fine testimony from people on the outside, in order that he might not fall into reproach and a snare of the Devil."

Paul wrote to Titus: "For this reason I left you in Crete, that you might correct the things that were defective and might make appointments of older men in city after city, as I gave you orders; if there is any man free from accusation, a husband of one wife, having believing children that were not under a charge of debauchery nor unruly. For an overseer must be free from accusation as God's steward, not self-willed, not prone to wrath, not a drunken brawler, not a smiter, not greedy of dishonest gain, but hospitable, a lover of goodness, sound in mind, righteous, loyal, self-controlled, holding firmly to the faithful word as respects his art of teaching, that he may be able both to exhort by the teaching that is healthful and to reprove those who contradict." (Titus 1:5-9) Paul's counsel concerning overseers emphasizes what is involved in carrying out their responsibilities. Other Bible writers discuss additional Christian qualities required of men appointed as overseers, or shepherds, of the congregation. —Jas. 3:13, 17, 18.

Although the Scriptural requirements may at first seem to be somewhat overwhelming, there should be no reason for Christian men to shy away from desiring the fine work associated with the office of overseer. By taking the lead in manifesting fine Christian qualities, overseers encourage other members of the congregation to do the same. This is indicated by what the apostle Paul wrote in describing how "gifts in men" are provided "with a view to the readjustment of the holy ones, for ministerial work, for the building up of the body of the Christ, until we all attain to the oneness in the faith and in the accurate knowledge of the Son of God, to a full-grown man, to the measure of stature that belongs to the fullness of the Christ." (Eph. 4:8, 12, 13) Since all Christians are to strive to attain spiritual maturity, those standing before the congregation as appointed overseers are required to be taking the lead.

Paul instructed Timothy and Titus to appoint qualified men in the congregation to serve as overseers. They would not be mere boys or newly converted men, but they would be individuals with experience in Christian living, reflecting a broad knowledge of the Bible, a deep understanding of it, and a genuine love for the congregation. The overseers would be individuals who have the courage to speak up when wrongdoing exists and to take the needed action to correct it, thus protecting the flock from any who would selfishly exploit them. (Isa. 32:2) The overseers would be men readily recognized by all in the congregation as spiritually mature, having genuine concern for the flock of God. Their overall way of life would show this.

Those qualifying for appointment as overseers of the flock of God would be demonstrating a measure of practical wisdom in their daily lives. If married, they would be adhering to the Christian standard for marriage, namely, husband of one wife, and would be presiding over their own household in a fine manner. If the overseer has believing children who are in subjection with all seriousness and are not under a charge of debauchery nor unruly, other members of the congregation could confidently approach the overseer for counsel and advice on a wide range of personal matters having to do with family life and Christian living. Having conducted themselves properly within the family arrangement as well as within the community in general, these men would also be irreprehensible, be free from accusation, and have a fine testimony even from people on the outside. No valid charge of improper conduct could be brought against them to mar the reputation of the congregation. They would not have been reproved recently for serious wrongdoing. Others in the congregation would be moved to imitate this fine example and entrust their spiritual life to the shepherds' care.—1 Cor. 11:1; 16:15, 16; Phil. 2:25, 29; Heb. 13:7, 17.

Such qualified men would be able to serve the Christian congregation in a role similar to that of the older men of Israel who were described as "wise and discreet and experienced." (Deut. 1:13) They would not be without sin. (Rom. 3:23) But they would be known in the congregation and in the community as upright and God-fearing men who have demonstrated over a period of time that they conduct their entire life on the basis of God's principles. Their blamelessness would give them freeness of speech before the congregation.

Men qualifying for appointment as overseers would display moderation in personal habits and in their dealings with others. They would not be fanatics, but their way of life would be characterized by balance, orderliness, and self-control. Moderation would be demonstrated in such things as eating, drinking, recreation, hobbies, and entertainment. They would be moderate in the use of alcoholic beverages so as not to leave themselves open to charges of drunkenness or of being a drunken brawler. One whose senses have been dulled by intoxicating drink easily loses self-control and is not in a position to watch over the spiritual interests of the congregation.

Exercising oversight of the affairs of the congregation requires a man to demonstrate a measure of or- derliness, being systematic in life, habits, and work. This includes his personal appearance, his home, and his personal activities. Such a man avoids procrastination, and he is able to see what is required and to plan accordingly. He adheres to theocratic order.

An overseer must be reasonable. He must be able to work in unity with and cooperate with others within the body of older men, who are charged with the oversight of the congregation. He should have a proper view of himself in relation to others, both inside and outside the congregation. As a reasonable person, the overseer would not be opinionated, always considering his views as superior to those of his fellow elders. Others may excel in qualities or abilities that he may lack. Reasonableness comes as a result of basing one's conclusions solidly on the Scriptures and of striving to imitate the example of Jesus Christ. (Phil. 2:2-8) By showing proper respect for others and considering others as superior to himself, an elder would not become belligerent or be a smiter of others, either physically or verbally. He would not be self-willed, always insisting that his way or his point of view must be accepted as best. He would not be prone to wrath but would be peaceable in his dealings with others.

Similarly, one qualifying to serve as an overseer in the congregation should be sound in mind. This means that he should have a good comprehension of Jehovah's principles and their application. He should be levelheaded, not hasty in judgment. He should be receptive to counsel and direction. He should not be double-minded, hypocritical, or fanatic.

Paul reminded Titus that an overseer should also be a lover of goodness. He should be righteous and loyal. These qualities would be reflected in his dealings with others and in his firm stand for what is right and good. He would be unwavering in his devotion to Jehovah and consistent in upholding righteous principles when making judgments. He would be able to keep a confidence.

As one who is sound in mind, of course, he would not be overly demanding in what he expects of others. Nor would the overseer be unduly concerned about material advantages for himself, not greedy of dishonest gain, not a lover of money. He would not use his office to take material advantage of the brothers under his care, nor would he hold back because of the reasonable material sacrifices he may be required to make in order to give generously of his time in caring for the needs of the congregation. His love for the brothers, as well as for strangers, and his self-sacrificing endeavors in their behalf would mean that he is genuinely hospitable, freely giving of himself and his belongings for the benefit of others. —Acts 20:33-35.

In order to carry out his assignment effectively, an overseer, or shepherd, of the congregation would need to be qualified to teach. According to Paul's words to Titus, the overseer would be "holding firmly to the faithful word as respects his art of teaching, that he may be able both to exhort by the teaching that is healthful and to reprove those who contradict." (Titus 1:9) In employing his art of teaching, the overseer would be able to reason with others, produce evidence, overcome objections, and apply the Scriptures in such a way that others would be convinced and have their faith strengthened. The overseer would be able to exercise such teaching ability under circumstances both favorable and unfavorable. (2 Tim. 4:2) He would have the patience needed to reprove with mildness one who is in error or to convince a doubter and move him to profitable works on the basis of faith. Being qualified to teach either before an audience or on a one-on-one basis would give evidence that the overseer meets this important requirement.

The apostle Peter wrote that the older men of the congregation should serve willingly and eagerly, neither under compulsion nor begrudgingly. They should be enthusiastic in their endeavors. They should be taking the lead, becoming examples to the flock.—Heb. 13:17.

All of this may seem like a great deal to expect of one who serves as an overseer. Certainly no overseer could measure up perfectly to the high standard set forth in the Bible, as outlined here, but none of the appointed elders in the congregation should be so significantly deficient in any one of these qualities that the deficiency could be considered a serious flaw. Some elders may have certain outstanding qualities, whereas others of the body may excel in a number of different qualities. The effect is that the body as a whole will have within itself all the fine qualities that are necessary for exercising proper oversight of the congregation of God.

When recommending men for appointment as overseers, the body of elders will want to keep in mind their own standing before Jehovah and their relationship with fellow Christians. Romans 12:3 counsels that each one should in no way "think more of himself than it is necessary to think; but to think so as to have a sound mind, each one as God has distributed to him a measure of faith." Each should consider himself a lesser one. None should prove to be "righteous overmuch" when examining the qualifications of another. (Eccl. 7:16) Having clearly in mind the Scriptural requirements for elders, the body would want to determine whether a brother being considered measures up to those standards to a reasonable degree or he is so seriously deficient in one or more of the Scriptural requirements that he does not qualify to serve. Allowing for human imperfections and being free of biased leanings and hypocrisy, appointed elders will make their recommendations in a manner showing due respect for Jehovah's righteous standards and for the good of the congregation. Like Timothy and Titus, elders today need to give prayerful consideration to each recommendation and follow the direction of God's holy spirit. This is one of the serious responsibilities they shoulder, and they must do so in accord with Paul's admonition 'never to lay their hands hastily upon any man.'—1 Tim. 5: 21, 22.

Men meeting the Christian standards for overseers are able to protect the congregation from spiritual dangers, and they serve as fine examples of Christian conduct for all to imitate. They have freeness of speech, enabling them to be bold in giving needed counsel to those within the congregation and to be zealous in proclaiming the good news in the field ministry.—Acts 4:29; 1 Tim. 3:13; Heb. 10:19-23, 35.

FRUITAGE OF THE SPIRIT

Spiritually qualified men would give evidence in their life that they are directed by holy spirit. They would be producing the fruitage of the spirit, described at Galatians 5:22, 23 as "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faith, mildness, self-control." Their oversight of the congregation would be refreshing to the brothers and would serve to unite the congregation in rendering sacred service. Their course of conduct and the fruits of their labors would give evidence that they are appointed by holy spirit. (Acts 20:28) Having the spiritual requirements for overseers and shepherds stated so precisely in the inspired Scriptures has made it possible to have qualified men appointed to shepherd the flock today.

MEN WHO PROMOTE UNITY

It is vital that elders work together to promote unity in the congregation. While having personalities that vary widely, they preserve their unity by listening respectfully to one another even though they may not agree on every matter they discuss. As long as no Bible principle is being violated, each should be willing to yield and to support the final decision of the body of elders. A yielding spirit shows that one is guided by "the wisdom from above," which is "peaceable, reasonable." (Jas. 3:17, 18) No elder should think that he is above the others in the body, and no elder should try to dominate the others. Elders are really cooperating with Jehovah when they cooperate as a body for the good of the congregation. —1 Cor., chap. 12; Col. 2:19.

REACHING OUT

The office of overseer is to be desired by mature Christian men. (1 Tim. 3:1) However, the appointment means work and self-sacrifice. It means making oneself available to serve the needs of the brothers, caring for their spiritual interests. Reaching out for the office means striving to meet the qualifications set out in the Scriptures. The overseers of the congregation have both responsibility and accountability in caring for those entrusted to them.

Overseers take very seriously what is stated at Hebrews 13:17, where they are referred to as "those who are taking the lead," those who are "keeping watch over" the souls of the brothers, and "those who will render an account." Overseers must exercise special care not to 'lord it over' the flock of God, not to use their position of responsibility for selfish advantage, and not to serve because they feel that they are compelled to do so. The overseers must prove themselves to be loving shepherds of the flock of God.—1 Pet. 5:2, 3; Prov. 27:23.

Hebrews 13:17 gives direction also to members of the congregation when it says: "Be obedient to those who are taking the lead among you and be submissive, for they are keeping watch over your souls as those who will render an account; that they may do this with joy and not with sighing, for this would be damaging to you." Although the overseers are imperfect men, there is no need for anyone in the congregation to hold back from being submissive, since it is Jehovah's arrangement and He will hold the overseers accountable for their actions. They are representing him and his theocratic rule. Just as Jehovah uses holy spirit to appoint a man, by means of that same holy spirit, Jehovah will remove from office those overseers who fail to manifest the fruitage of the spirit and whose pattern of life falls short of the Scriptural requirements.

Do we not truly appreciate the hard work and fine example of the congregation overseers? In writing to the congregation at Thessalonica, Paul admonished the brothers: "We request you, brothers, to have regard for those who are working hard among you and presiding over you in the Lord and admonishing you; and to give them more than extraordinary consideration in love because of their work." (1 Thess. 5:12, 13) Much of the hard work of the congregation overseers makes our service to God easier and more enjoyable. Also, in his first letter to Timothy, Paul makes mention of the attitude that members of the congregation should cultivate toward the overseers, saying: "Let the older men who preside in a fine way be reckoned worthy of double honor, especially those who work hard in speaking and teaching."—1 Tim. 5:17.

PERSONAL CIRCUMSTANCES MAY CHANGE

Of course, a brother who has served faithfully for a period of time may become physically ill or otherwise incapacitated, perhaps because of advancing age, and may no longer be able to care for the responsibilities of an overseer as he once did or in the way that other overseers do. Even so, he should still be viewed and respected as an older man as long as he is appointed. There would be no need for him to step aside on account of his limitations. He is still worthy of the double honor given to all hardworking older men who are serving to the best of their respective abilities in shepherding the flock.

But if a brother should feel that it would be best for him to step aside because of changed personal circumstances that limit his ability to serve, he may choose to do so. (1 Pet. 5:2) He should still be viewed with respect and be able to do much good in the congregation, even though no longer having assignments and duties given to elders.

POSITIONS OF RESPONSIBILITY IN THE CONGREGATION

The Governing Body may arrange for men who qualify to serve as overseers in any locality at any time. The Governing Body is not bound by the recommendations of any local body of elders. Such recommendations serve merely as a guide and may even be rejected for reasons well-known to the Governing Body. Also, the Governing Body may authorize certain representatives to make appointments of overseers.—1 Tim. 1:3; Titus 1:5.

WAT.0013.001.0026

Whenever there are appointments or deletions of overseers, appropriate announcements are made to the congregation. This enables all concerned to know who are currently serving within the local congregation, and they can thus cooperate with the arrangement that is in effect.

Elders care for a variety of responsibilities in the congregation. There is a presiding overseer, a secretary, a service overseer, a Watchtower Study conductor, and a Theocratic Ministry School overseer. Some elders, if not all, serve as Congregation Book Study overseers. The elders serve in these positions for an indefinite period of time. Of course, if a brother holding any of these positions moves, is unable to care for his responsibilities because of health reasons, or becomes disqualified for failure to measure up to the Scriptural requirements, another elder is selected to handle the assignment. In congregations where the number of overseers is limited, it may be necessary for an elder to handle more than one assignment until other brothers qualify to be appointed as elders.

The presiding overseer serves as chairman at meetings of the body of elders. He should be a good organizer and able to preside in real earnest. (Rom. 12:8) He is responsible for overseeing the Service Meeting. He also arranges for public talks, at times using another elder or a well-qualified ministerial servant to assist him if needed.

The secretary handles congregation records and keeps the elders informed about important communications. If necessary, another elder or a capable ministerial servant may be assigned to assist in caring for some routine matters.

Arrangements for field activity and other service-related matters come under the direction of the service overseer. He schedules regular visits to all Congregation Book Study groups so that once each month he visits a different group and gives a service talk. On the weekend of his visit, he will work with the group in the field ministry and help publishers with their return visits and Bible studies. In smaller congregations where there are only one or two book studies, he may arrange to visit each one twice during the year.

The specific duties of these brothers, along with the Watchtower Study conductor, the Theocratic Ministry School overseer, Congregation Book Study overseers, and others who make up the body of elders, are set out from time to time in Our Kingdom Ministry and letters from the branch office.

Depending on the number available and their individual abilities, various elders handle assignments in connection with the other congregation meetings each week. These meetings are planned and prepared so that they will be informative and spiritually upbuilding. The elders are responsible for presenting instructive public talks. Besides teaching in the congregation, the elders take the lead in the field ministry, working along with the publishers.

It is suggested that the body of elders in each congregation meets periodically to discuss matters related to the spiritual progress of the congregation.

WAT.0013.001.0028

Two such meetings are held each year in conjunction with the regular visits of the circuit overseer. About three months after each visit of the circuit overseer, a meeting should be scheduled. These four meetings during the year are most likely sufficient for resolving any matters requiring the attention of the entire body of elders. Of course, the elders may convene at any time circumstances make it advisable. But if each one gives proper attention to his assigned duties and if the work of the elders is being adequately supervised and coordinated through the presiding overseer, meetings involving the entire body of elders can be kept to a minimum.

CONGREGATION SERVICE COMMITTEE

There are certain duties that are cared for by the Congregation Service Committee, made up of the presiding overseer, the secretary, and the service overseer. Members of this committee are involved in handling and signing various forms, such as those used in connection with literature inventories and requests, field service reports, and recommendations for appointment or removal of overseers, ministerial servants, and regular pioneers. In addition, the service committee approves the use of the Kingdom Hall for weddings and funerals and is responsible for assigning publishers to book study groups. It also approves applications for auxiliary pioneer service and other avenues of service. From time to time, the branch office calls upon the Congregation Service Committee to perform other duties. While elders on the service committee have been given certain authority to care for matters, these brothers work under the direction of the body of elders.

CONGREGATION BOOK STUDY OVERSEER

One of the outstanding privileges in the congregation is to serve as a Congregation Book Study overseer. Such overseers have the opportunity to help others in a number of areas. Because this responsibility is a serious one, elders should be used if available. If not, then one elder might care for more than one group, doing so at different times during the week. This, however, would depend on his circumstances. Or a capable ministerial servant can be used until such time as an elder can take over. A ministerial servant working in this capacity is called a Congregation Book Study servant, as he does not function as an overseer in the congregation. Rather, he works under the direction of the elders in caring for his responsibility. How a ministerial servant is used is something for the elders to decide. They also decide to which group the elder or ministerial servant is assigned.

One of the chief responsibilities of the Congregation Book Study overseer is to conduct the Congregation Book Study. In order to do so adequately, he must prepare thoroughly. He should know not only the answers to the study questions but also the reasons behind those answers and the value of the material. It should be his goal to help the group get a clear understanding of what is being considered so that they can apply the truths learned to their own life as well as explain them to others. This requires a conscientious effort on his part, even as emphasized by Paul as found at Romans 12:7: "He that teaches, let him be at his teaching."

Another important feature of the book study overseer's work is that of taking the lead in the field ministry. The regularity, zeal, and enthusiasm that he shows in the field activity will be reflected in the publishers. Because the brothers appreciate the encouragement and help that come through being together, a group witnessing schedule convenient for the majority should be worked out and maintained. (Luke 10:1-16) The overseer needs to plan so that there is always enough territory to work. He will conduct the meeting for field service and organize the publishers for that day's work. When he cannot be there, he should arrange for another elder, a ministerial servant or, if neither is available, a qualified publisher to care for these responsibilities so that the publishers have the good leadership they need.

The service overseer is a real help to the book study overseer and the entire group. A wise book study overseer will plan ahead for the visit of the service overseer, informing his group of the visit and building anticipation for its benefits. When all in the group are kept fully aware of the arrangement, they can enthusiastically support it. There will be a corresponding improvement in their field activity.

Each book study group is purposely kept small. This allows the book study overseer to become well acquainted with all assigned to it. As a loving shepherd, he is keenly interested in each one. He tries to give personal help and encouragement for the field ministry, for support of congregation meetings, and for whatever else is appropriate to help each person keep spiritually strong. Those who become ill or depressed will benefit from a personal visit. An encouraging suggestion or a word of counsel might prompt some to reach out for additional privileges in the congregation and thus become of greater use to their brothers. While most of the book study overseer's efforts will logically be directed toward helping those in his own group, as an elder and a shepherd, he will have the entire congregation in mind. He is lovingly concerned for all and is ready to help any who are in need.—Acts 20:17, 28.

A responsibility of the Congregation Book Study overseer is to assist in collecting field service reports from the publishers and pioneers in his book study group. These reports are then given, along with the book study attendance figures, to the secretary for compiling. Individual publishers can assist the book study overseer by turning in their field service reports promptly. This can be done by submitting their reports directly to the book study overseer at the end of each month or by placing them in the box designated for service reports at the Kingdom Hall.

POSITIONS OF RESPONSIBILITY IN THE ORGANIZATION

At times, selected elders are appointed to serve on Hospital Liaison Committees and as members of Patient Visitation Groups. These men visit hospitals and doctors to encourage continued and expanded treatment of Jehovah's Witnesses without using blood. Other overseers are able to advance Kingdom interests by serving as members of Regional Building Committees, Assembly Hall Committees, or district convention committees. The hard work of these brothers and their willingness to expend themselves in this way are very much appreciated by all in the organization. Indeed, we 'hold men of that sort dear.' —Phil. 2:29.

CITY OVERSEER

The branch office will appoint a city overseer in cities where there is more than one congregation.

WAT.0013.001.0032

Usually, this appointment is made on the recommendation of the circuit overseer or circuit overseers if more than one serves congregations in that city. The city overseer does not exercise jurisdiction in any congregation other than the one in which he serves as an elder. The branch office may wish to communicate with him on various matters, such as arrangements for assemblies and schools that may be held in his city. However, the branch deals directly with each congregation in regard to literature supplies, monthly field service reports, and other matters.

CIRCUIT OVERSEER

The Governing Body arranges for the appointment of qualified elders to serve as circuit overseers. These are assigned by the branch office to visit the congregations that make up their circuits on a regular basis, usually twice a year. They also periodically visit pioneers, special pioneers, or missionaries serving in isolated territory. They plan their routing and notify each congregation sufficiently in advance so that the visit will result in the most benefit.

The presiding overseer takes the lead in organizing matters so that the visit will prove spiritually refreshing to all. (Rom. 1:11, 12) After he receives notification of the visit and information about the needs of the circuit overseer and (if married) his wife, the presiding overseer makes arrangements through various brothers to get literature supplies, accommodations, and other necessary things. He makes sure that all, including the circuit overseer, are informed of these arrangements.

The circuit overseer will contact the presiding overseer regarding the scheduling of meetings, including meetings for field service. These will be arranged in accord with local circumstances and the circuit overseer's suggestions as well as what is directed in Our Kingdom Ministry and in letters from the branch office. All need to be informed in advance concerning the times of the meetings with the congregation, with the pioneers, and with the elders and ministerial servants, as well as the places and times of meetings for field service. This will enable all to adjust their affairs so that they can benefit from the entire week's activities.

Since the circuit overseer will check the congregation records on Tuesday afternoon, such records should be in good order and available before he arrives. The presiding overseer will be sure to have them at the location where they will be checked. It is helpful if a member of the Congregation Service Committee can be present to render any assistance needed. The circuit overseer will examine the Congregation's Publisher Record cards, meeting attendance records, territory records, and the accounts. This will give him some insight into possible needs of the congregation and how he may be of assistance to those responsible for keeping these records.

During his visit, the circuit overseer takes time to speak with the brothers individually as he is able—at meetings, out in the field service, at mealtimes, and otherwise. Additionally, he meets with the elders and ministerial servants, sharing appropriate Scriptural counsel, suggestions, and encouragement that will help them shoulder their responsibilities in serving and shepherding the flock in their care. (Prov. 27:23; Acts 20:26-32; 1 Tim. 4:11-16) He also meets with the pioneers to encourage them in their work and to give personal assistance regarding any problems they may be encountering in their ministry.

If there are other matters that need attention, the circuit overseer will either handle these or assist the elders to the extent possible while he is visiting the congregation. He will strive to help the elders or individuals involved to locate the Scriptural direction that applies. If there has been some serious wrongdoing and the elders need his assistance in handling such, he will set aside time for this purpose. If there is anything that the branch office needs to do in following through, he and the elders will provide the branch with a detailed report on the matter.

While visiting the congregation, the circuit overseer attends the regular congregation meetings. These may be adjusted from time to time in harmony with directions in Our Kingdom Ministry or letters from the branch office. He will give several talks designed to encourage, motivate, instruct, and fortify the congregation. He will strive to foster love and appreciation for Jehovah, Jesus Christ, and the organization. The circuit overseer will also encourage zealous participation in field service, providing practical suggestions on how to do the work effectively.

One of the primary objectives of the circuit overseer's visit is to provide leadership in field service. Many in the congregation may be able to adjust their schedule so that they can have a fuller share in field service that week. Some may be able to arrange to auxiliary pioneer the month of his visit. Those desirous of working with him or his wife can make an appointment through the presiding overseer. Much good can be accomplished by taking the circuit overseer or his wife on Bible studies and return visits. At times, adjustments in your schedule may have to be made, but the benefits are worth it. The circuit overseer is encouraged to arrange for an early start in field service each day, taking local circumstances into consideration. Your extra effort to give full support to this aspect of the week's visit is deeply appreciated.—Prov. 27:17.

Every year a circuit assembly and a special assembly day are arranged for each circuit. The circuit overseer is responsible for the operation of the assembly organization on these occasions. On the circuit overseer's recommendation, the branch office appoints permanent assembly personnel: an assembly overseer and an assistant assembly overseer. They are to work closely with the circuit overseer in caring for the assembly organization. This will enable the circuit overseer to give his primary attention to the assembly program. The circuit overseer designates other capable men to care for various departments. He also arranges for an audit of the circuit accounts after each assembly.

The circuit overseer reports his field service directly to the branch office at the end of each month. He is also reimbursed for certain modest expenses incurred, such as travel, food, lodging, and other necessary items required to carry out his work if the congregations do not cover these. Traveling representatives have confidence that as Jesus promised, material needs will be provided if they seek continually the interests of Jehovah's Kingdom. (Luke 12:31) The congregations will want to be conscious of their privilege to display hospitality to these devoted elders who serve them.—3 John 5-8.

DISTRICT OVERSEER

The district overseer is also an appointed traveling elder. He is assigned by the branch office to serve a number of circuits that make up a district. He serves as chairman of the circuit assembly programs in his district and gives the public discourse on such programs. The first part of each week in which a circuit assembly is held, he works with the host congregation in the circuit being served. He takes the lead in group witnessing and gives an upbuilding Scriptural talk to the host congregation.

The branch office assigns each circuit the dates for its circuit assembly and special assembly day and notifies the district overseer of this schedule, which he then follows as his assigned routing. Because of distances involved for the publishers or the small size of assembly facilities, some circuits are divided into sections with a circuit assembly or a special assembly day held for each section. The district overseer is informed of this and plans to spend a week in the circuit for each circuit assembly to be held. In advance, he works out with the circuit overseer which congregation can appropriately be the host congregation for each circuit assembly.

On Tuesday afternoon of his visit, the district overseer gives encouragement to the circuit overseer and (if married) his wife and offers helpful suggestions to assist them with their work. From time to time, the branch office will outline points to be discussed at this meeting. The circuit overseer and his wife may have matters with which they desire assistance. (Prov. 20:5) The district overseer may have points to share based on things he has learned through experience and observation. Privately, the circuit overseer will discuss the needs of the circuit with the district overseer, who may decide to work some of these points into his talks on the circuit assembly program.

During the first part of the week with the host congregation, usually on Tuesday evening, the district overseer will attend an abbreviated Congregation Book Study and give a talk to the congregation. If the elders need advice or assistance with some congregation matters, they will let him know this in advance, and he will meet with them. Primarily, he will take the lead in group witnessing during the week. He and his wife will have a full schedule of field service. The circuit overseer and his wife will also give full support to the field service activity that week. The presiding overseer will make sure that all are informed of the arrangements for meetings for service. He will also see that adequate territory is available and make appointments on behalf of any who have requested to work with the traveling overseers.

At the conclusion of the circuit assembly (or assemblies), the district overseer will send the branch office a report on how the program was presented and received in that circuit. He will report on the spiritual condition and the needs of the circuit. Once a month, he also reports his field service and expenses. His accommodations and expenses are cared for in the same way as for the circuit overseer.

BRANCH COMMITTEE

In each branch office of Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the world, three or more spiritually qualified and mature brothers serve as a Branch Committee to oversee the preaching work in the country or countries under their jurisdiction. One of the committee members serves as the Branch Committee coordinator.

WAT.0013.001.0038

Those serving on the Branch Committee handle matters pertaining to all the congregations in their territory. They arrange for the distribution of publications furnished by "the faithful and discreet slave" to strengthen all associated with the congregations. (Matt. 24:45) Their primary objective is to see to it that the good news of the Kingdom is preached throughout the territory assigned and that congregations, circuits, and districts are set up to give proper oversight to the needs of the field. The Branch Committee also gives attention to the missionary field and to special, regular, and auxiliary pioneer activity. When there are assemblies and conventions, these brothers make arrangements and assignments to ensure that "all things take place decently and by arrangement."—1 Cor. 14:40.

A Country Committee is appointed in some lands that come under the oversight of a Branch Committee in another land. This allows for closer supervision of the work where the Country Committee serves. It cares for matters in the Bethel Home and office, handles correspondence and reports, and generally cares for the activities in the field. The Country Committee cooperates with the Branch Committee for the advancement of the Kingdom.

The Governing Body makes all appointments of those selected to serve as members of Branch Committees and Country Committees.

ZONE OVERSEER

Periodically, arrangements are made by the Governing Body to have qualified brothers visit each of the branches throughout the earth. Brothers serving in this capacity are known as zone overseers.

WAT.0013.001.0039

Their primary work is to help the Branch Committee with problems or questions they may have in carrying on the preaching and disciple-making work. Wherever practical, the zone overseer also meets with the missionaries who work under the branches he visits. He talks with them about their problems and needs, giving necessary encouragement regarding their most important activity, Kingdom preaching and disciple making.

The zone overseer also examines the various records that are kept for operating a branch office. He is especially interested in what is being accomplished in the field as far as the Kingdom preaching and other congregation activities are concerned. If there is a printery, farm, or other facility, he inspects each of these operations. When the zone overseer visits branches, he also shares to the extent possible in the Kingdom-preaching work.

LOVING OVERSIGHT

Visits by traveling overseers provide an interchange of encouragement, and the congregations are thus made firm in the faith. (Rom. 1:12; Eph. 4:3) The publishers are made aware of their interdependency. They work for the common good of all and cooperate in spreading the Kingdom good news. (1 Cor. 12:12-31) Certainly we have benefited greatly from the hard work and loving care of mature Christian men. We will benefit even further as we continue submitting ourselves to congregation elders and other appointed overseers charged with shepherding the flock and overseeing the work. (1 Cor. 16:15-18; Phil. 2:25, 29) As we do this, we are drawn into unity with the Head of the congregation, Christ Jesus, our Lord, the one appointed by Jehovah as the Fine Shepherd. (Eph. 1:22, 23) As a result, God's spirit permeates the congregations worldwide, and God's Word serves to guide the work throughout the earth. —Ps. 119:105.

CHAPTER 6

MINISTERIAL SERVANTS RENDER VALUABLE SERVICE

TO THE congregation at Philippi, the apostle Paul wrote: "Paul and Timothy, slaves of Christ Jesus, to all the holy ones in union with Christ Jesus who are in Philippi, along with overseers and ministerial servants." (Phil. 1:1) Note that in his salutation, he made mention of the ministerial servants. These men evidently fulfilled an important role in assisting the elders in the congregation back then. The same is true in our time. Ministerial servants render a number of services that help the overseers and that contribute to the good order of the congregation.

Have you become acquainted with the ministerial servants in your congregation? Are you aware of the many fine services they perform for your benefit and for the benefit of the entire congregation? The apostle specifically mentions them and states: "The men who minister in a fine manner are acquiring for themselves a fine standing and great freeness of speech in the faith in connection with Christ Jesus." —1 Tim. 3:13.

SCRIPTURAL REQUIREMENTS FOR MINISTERIAL SERVANTS

Ministerial servants are expected to lead a wholesome Christian life, be responsible men, and give proof that they are able to care for assignments properly. This becomes obvious when we consider what Paul had to say in his letter to Timothy about the qualifications of ministerial servants: "Ministerial servants should likewise be serious, not double-tongued, not giving themselves to a lot of wine, not greedy of dishonest gain, holding the sacred secret of the faith with a clean conscience. Also, let these be tested as to fitness first, then let them serve as ministers, as they are free from accusation. Let ministerial servants be husbands of one wife, presiding in a fine manner over children and their own households. For the men who minister in a fine manner are acquiring for themselves a fine standing and great freeness of speech in the faith in connection with Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. 3:8-10, 12, 13.

The work of ministerial servants generally involves nonteaching responsibilities. By their hard work and exemplary Christian life, they not only perform vital services for the congregation but also set an example to be imitated by others.—1 Tim. 4:11, 12.

The specific Scriptural requirements for ministerial servants mentioned by Paul in his first letter to Timothy indicate that a high standard is set for men who are used in this capacity. Holding to such a standard serves to protect the congregation from any legitimate accusation as to the kind of men to whom it entrusts special responsibilities. Whether younger or older in years, ministerial servants are expected to be active in the ministry each month, setting a fine example. They should be exemplary in their dress, grooming, speech, attitude, and conduct. Such a pattern of living with soundness of mind gains the respect of others and reflects the seriousness with which ministerial servants view their relationship with Jehovah and their privileges of service in the congregation.—Titus 2:2, 6-8.

These are men who have been "tested as to fitness." Even before receiving their appointment, they proved to be truly dedicated men, whose faith has been made manifest in carrying on zealous Kingdom service and in helping others to be made firm in the faith. In their response to the good news, they have demonstrated that they put Kingdom interests first in their life and are reaching out for whatever service privileges may be open to them. They are indeed examples for others in the congregation to imitate. —1 Tim. 3:10.

HOW THEY SERVE

Ministerial servants render a variety of practical services in behalf of their brothers and sisters. In doing so, they are helpful to the overseers, relieving them of detailed work, thus leaving them free to care for teaching and shepherding responsibilities. In making the service assignments, the elders take into account the number of appointed ministerial servants in the congregation as well as their individual abilities.

Just consider some of the services they perform. One ministerial servant may be assigned to take care of the congregation literature, making it convenient for us to obtain the literature we need for our personal use and for the field ministry. Another may care for the magazines. Others are assigned to keep records, such as for congregation accounts or for territory, or they are assigned to handle microphones, to operate sound equipment, to look after the platform, or perhaps to help the elders in other ways. There is much work to be done in maintaining the Kingdom

Hall and keeping it clean, so ministerial servants are often called upon to assist in caring for these responsibilities. Ministerial servants are also assigned to serve as attendants, to welcome new ones, and to help maintain order at congregation meetings.

In some congregations, there may be enough ministerial servants for a different one to be assigned to each of these duties. Elsewhere, a ministerial servant may care for several assignments. In some instances, it is beneficial to have more than one person assigned to do certain work. If there are not enough ministerial servants to care for some of these responsibilities, the body of elders may arrange for other exemplary baptized brothers to care for some of this necessary work. Thus they would gain experience that would be useful later when they, in turn, become qualified to be appointed as ministerial servants. Or if brothers are not available, certain sisters who show godly humility and devotion to Jehovah could be asked to assist with some things even though, of course, they would not be appointed as ministerial servants.

Periodically, if there is good reason, elders may find it beneficial to change some assignments from one ministerial servant to another. However, there is great advantage in having brothers continue to handle the same assignments in order to become more proficient and to gain experience. How the elders work out these assignments handled by ministerial servants would be according to the congregation's needs.

Depending on local circumstances, there may be other services that can be assigned to ministerial servants who are doing as the apostle Paul encouraged young Timothy, 'making their spiritual advancement manifest.' (1 Tim. 4:15) If there are not enough elders to conduct the Congregation Book Studies, some of the more qualified ministerial servants may be used as Congregation Book Study servants to care for assigned groups. They may be assigned to handle parts in the Service Meeting and on the Theocratic Ministry School and to deliver public talks in the local congregation. Other privileges may be extended to some of the ministerial servants when there is a particular need and if they meet the requirements for the assignment.—1 Pet. 4:10.

In assisting the elders, ministerial servants should give of themselves willingly, demonstrating that they have a sense of responsibility and are working for the advancement of Kingdom interests and for the benefit of everyone in the congregation. By taking the lead in the field service, ministerial servants can set a good example for others and reap great satisfaction themselves in a work well-done.

Though their work differs from that of the elders, it is no less a part of sacred service to God and is important to the smooth functioning of the congregation. In time, if ministerial servants discharge their obligations well and also become qualified to serve as shepherds and teachers, they may be recommended to serve as elders.

If you have not done so already, why not make a special effort to get acquainted with the ministerial servants in your congregation? You can show your appreciation for their hard work by cooperating with them as they care for their assigned duties. In this way, you will also be showing appreciation for Jehovah's provision for maintaining an orderly household. (Gal. 6:10) The ministerial servants are appointed by holy spirit for your good.

CHAPTER 7

MEETINGS THAT "INCITE TO LOVE AND FINE WORKS"

HOW fitting that arrangements are made for Christians to meet regularly for worship and to be fed spiritually! It is important for all of us to gather together to hear God's Word so as to learn his requirements and how we may serve him. This applies to both younger and older ones, just as it did in the case of God's ancient covenant people, the nation of Israel. Regarding every seventh Festival of Booths, Jehovah commanded the nation through Moses: "Congregate the people, the men and the women and the little ones and your alien resident who is within your gates, in order that they may listen and in order that they may learn, as they must fear Jehovah your God and take care to carry out all the words of this law."—Deut. 31:12.

Clearly, the purpose for meeting together now, even as it was then, is to listen and to learn and to be "taught by Jehovah." (Isa. 54:13) Assembling for worship in ancient Israel was always a joyous occasion, as reflected in the words of David, who wrote: "I rejoiced when they were saying to me: 'To the house of Jehovah let us go.'" (Ps. 122:1) The apostle Paul referred to an additional cause for joy when meeting with fellow worshipers. He wrote: "Let us consider one another to incite to love and fine works." (Heb. 10:24) Congregation meetings provided early Christians with the opportunity to get to know one another, to impart encouragement, and to gain strength through association. This is also true of Jehovah's Witnesses today as they meet together to worship Jehovah.

CONGREGATION MEETINGS

The Bible emphasizes the value of coming together to worship and praise Jehovah. (Ps. 26:8, 12; Matt. 18:20) Those who embraced the truth at Pentecost 33 C.E. did not treat this matter lightly. They continued devoting themselves to the teaching of the apostles, and "day after day they were in constant attendance at the temple with one accord." (Acts 2:42, 46) Later when Christians came together for worship, they read from inspired writings, including letters written by the apostles and other Christian disciples. (1 Cor. 1:1, 2; Col. 4:16; 1 Thess. 1:1; Jas. 1:1) There was congregation prayer. (Acts 4:24-29; 20:36) At times, experiences from the missionary field were related. (Acts 11:5-18; 14:27, 28) Bible doctrines and the fulfillment of inspired prophecies were considered. Instruction was given in matters of approved Christian conduct and godly devotion. All were encouraged to be zealous proclaimers of the good news.—Rom. 10:9, 10; 1 Cor. 11:23-26; 15:58; Eph. 5:1-33.

In our day Christian meetings in many respects follow the pattern set in apostolic days. We heed the inspired exhortation found at Hebrews 10:25 by "not forsaking the gathering of ourselves together, as some have the custom, but encouraging one another, and all the more so as [we] behold the day drawing near." During the difficult last days of this wicked system of things, we need the added encouragement that comes from regularly meeting together in order to maintain spiritual strength and Christian integrity. (Rom. 1:11, 12) As in Paul's day, Christians today live among a crooked and twisted generation. We have repudiated the ungodliness and worldly spirit of this system of things. (Phil. 2: 15, 16; Titus 2:12-14) Really, where would we rather be than in association with Jehovah's people? (Ps. 84:10) And what could be more beneficial than hearing the Word of God discussed?

Jehovah is the Source of an abundance of satisfying spiritual food. (Ps. 145:14, 15) Through his Son and "the faithful and discreet slave," food at the proper time is being dispensed. (Matt. 24:45) How is such provision served to the individual members of the organization? One means is through the various meetings held each week in the congregation. Consider these meetings and the benefits derived as we regularly 'incite one another to love and fine works.'

THE WATCHTOWER STUDY

The Watchtower Announcing Jehovah's Kingdom is the principal means to keep Jehovah's people well supplied with timely spiritual food. Certain articles published in The Watchtower are specifically prepared for weekly congregation study, with special instruction based on the written Word of God. Information carefully examined in the Watchtower Study stirs the hearts and minds of members of the congregation and builds up their spiritual strength.

The study articles are varied as to subject matter. The material frequently deals with the application of Bible principles in daily living and fortifies Christians against "the spirit of the world" and unclean conduct. (1 Cor. 2:12) Through the columns of The Watchtower come increased light on Bible doctrine and the discussion of fulfillment of prophecy as Jehovah makes this known, thus enabling all to keep abreast of the truth and stay on the path of the righteous ones. (Ps. 97:11; Prov. 4:18) Attending the Watchtower Study and participating in it can help us to rejoice in the hope of Jehovah's righteous new system of things. (Rom. 12:12; 2 Pet. 3:13) It helps us to manifest the fruitage of the spirit in our life and to keep strong our desire to serve Jehovah zealously. (Gal. 5:22, 23) It helps to strengthen our faith to endure trials and to build "a fine foundation for the future" so that we "may get a firm hold on the real life."—1 Tim. 6:19; 1 Pet. 1:6, 7.

It is evident that the material considered week by week at the Watchtower Study is vital. It helps us to grow spiritually, to make the truth of God's Word our own, to bring our life into harmony with the teachings of the Bible, and to be united spiritually with our brothers worldwide. What can each one do to take full advantage of this provision for spiritual feeding? Prepare the lesson in advance, looking up all cited scriptures, and have a share in commenting during the meeting. Such participation will cause the points under discussion to make a deeper impression, sounding down the truth into our heart. At the same time, others benefit as they hear our expressions of faith and hope. Carefully listening to their comments will ensure that we get the most benefit from the lesson each week.

The Watchtower Study helps us to maintain spiritual strength and firmness in the faith. It should not be looked upon as just routine. None should miss this important provision that Jehovah has made for strengthening all associated with the household of faith.

PUBLIC MEETING

The Public Meeting is usually held in conjunction with the weekly Watchtower Study, but it differs as to the method used in presenting information.

WAT.0013.001.0049

Whereas the Watchtower Study is developed as a question-and-answer discussion with audience participation, the Public Meeting features a discourse on a Bible subject. Such meetings play an important part in filling the spiritual needs of both new ones and members of the congregation.—Acts 18:4; 19: 9, 10.

By inviting interested ones as well as the public in general, we may accomplish much in acquainting people with basic Bible information. The Public Meeting helps one and all to remain alert to Christian teachings and encourages steadfastness in Kingdom service.

The subjects considered at the Public Meeting are varied. Talks cover Bible doctrine and prophecy as well as Scriptural principles and counsel regarding family life, marital matters, situations confronting youths, and Christian morals. Some talks center on Jehovah's marvelous works of creation. Others highlight the exemplary faith, courage, and integrity of different Bible characters, focusing on lessons for our day. The Public Meeting is truly an occasion for taking in informative and refreshing spiritual food.

If we are to get the full benefit of the Public Meeting arrangement, it is essential that we attend regularly, pay close attention, look up the scriptures referred to by the speaker, and follow along as he reads and explains them. (Luke 8:18) This will help us to become more familiar with the location of Bible books and will increase our knowledge of the Scriptures. As we thus make sure of the things discussed, we should be determined to hold fast to what we learn and to apply it personally.—1 Thess. 5:21.

If there are a sufficient number of speakers available, the congregation will no doubt have a public talk every week. Frequently, this is made possible by having speakers visit from nearby congregations. If there is a shortage of speakers in an area, arrangements are made to have these talks as often as possible.

Christ Jesus, his apostles, and their associates conducted public meetings similar to those enjoyed today by congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses. Without question, Jesus was the greatest public speaker ever on earth. It was said concerning him: "Never has another man spoken like this." (John 7:46) Jesus spoke with authority, astounding his audiences. (Matt. 7:28, 29) Many were the benefits received by those who took his message to heart. (Matt. 13:16, 17) The apostles followed his example. At Acts 2:22-36, we read of Peter's powerful discourse on the day of Pentecost 33 C.E. Many were motivated to act as a result of what they heard. Later, individuals benefited from Paul's discourse in Athens. (Acts 17:22-34) Similarly, in our day millions have received benefits through the weekly Public Meetings held in congregations as well as public talks presented at circuit assemblies and at district, national, and international conventions. We should give full support to the arrangement for Public Meetings.

SERVICE MEETING

The Service Meeting focuses on our field ministry. It equips us to have a full share in preaching the Kingdom good news, making disciples, and declaring the approaching execution of divine judgment. (Matt. 28:20; Mark 13:10; 2 Pet. 3:7) To a large extent, this work is done by speaking to people individually and providing them with Bible literature. But the application of Jehovah's righteous principles in our life has a direct bearing on the effectiveness of our field ministry and the fruitage that we produce. (Matt. 13:23; John 15:8) We thereby demonstrate the good results that come from applying the Scriptures. Appropriately, the Service Meeting gives attention to all these facets of our service to God.

WAT.0013.001.0051

Each month Our Kingdom Ministry outlines the weekly Service Meetings. You will receive a copy through the congregation. When a new issue of Our Kingdom Ministry is received, the presiding overseer carefully analyzes what it contains and assigns the various meeting parts to qualified brothers. He may arrange for such assignments to be made through one of the other elders.

Elders and well-qualified ministerial servants are assigned to handle the various parts on the Service Meeting program. They should be careful, not to introduce additional material, but to develop the program parts as outlined in Our Kingdom Ministry. This means that they need to study the assigned material carefully to determine what the principal points of instruction are and how to handle them so that the brothers will understand and remember them. Careful thought is also given to application of the material to the situation of the local congregation.

While there are various ways that material can effectively be presented, in no case should the method of presentation overshadow the material presented. Demonstrations should not be dramatic productions with a lot of stage props. Use natural settings, such as a scene at one's secular work, a door-to-door call, a home Bible study, or a family discussion. Settings should fit what is encountered locally so that the publishers can relate to them.

Exemplary baptized publishers and their well-trained minor children may be asked to participate in certain parts, such as demonstrations. They may be interviewed or invited to relate their experiences. If you have an opportunity to participate, cooperate joyfully and conscientiously, recognizing that this is part of your service to Jehovah.

It should be the heartfelt desire of each Christian to live in a way that encourages others to follow Jesus Christ as dedicated Witnesses of Jehovah. To that end, Service Meeting programs are designed to reach the following objectives: (1) to encourage us to participate in the public ministry to the fullest extent possible—whether witnessing from house to house, on the street, or wherever people may be found—and to improve in our presentation of the good news; (2) to teach us how to make return visits on individuals who show interest or accept Bible literature; (3) to motivate us to set aside time for regularly conducting home Bible studies and directing students to the organization; (4) to give us ideas on how to witness informally; (5) to show us how to improve in our efforts to help new ones, our children, and other young people to become dedicated disciples.

You will benefit if before the meeting, you go over the program outlined in Our Kingdom Ministry. At times, articles in various publications of Jehovah's Witnesses are considered. Not only will advance research be informative but such research will also equip you to have a share when parts on the program call for audience participation. The more you absorb from the Service Meeting, the more effective you will be in your ministry.

When all in the congregation attend the Service Meeting regularly, unified activity is the result. Since every baptized Witness is a minister, attending this meeting is essential to help us carry out our commission. It is also very beneficial for anyone who desires to become a dedicated servant of God. Make attendance at this meeting part of your weekly schedule of activity.

Meetings of this sort are nothing new. They are based on sound Scriptural precedent. Before sending his disciples out to preach, Jesus gave them detailed instructions on what to say and do. (Matt. 10:5–11:1; Luke 10:1-16) Later his disciples continued to have such meetings at which they discussed their experiences in the ministry, and this strengthened them for zealous Kingdom activity. (Acts 4:23-31) We continue that same practice today.

THEOCRATIC MINISTRY SCHOOL

The Theocratic Ministry School is an ongoing provision for the education of all in the congregation. The curriculum includes Bible readings, Bible talks, student presentations, and other training for the field ministry. Counsel is given to students to help them progressively improve in their presentations. While offering a variety of information that is of interest and benefit to the entire congregation, the Theocratic Ministry School also gives participants as well as those in the audience opportunity to improve various aspects of their personal ministry. Occasional reviews provide a means of self-examination regarding individual progress in ministerial training.

Each year Jehovah's organization provides a Theocratic Ministry School Schedule setting out the program to be followed. This schedule outlines the material to be used and how the assignments are to be handled. For many years the Theocratic Ministry School has proved its worth in training Jehovah's Witnesses to be effective proclaimers of the Kingdom. All who are actively associated with the congregation, including people newly attending the meetings, may enroll as long as they agree with the teachings of the Bible and their life is in harmony with Christian principles.

By enrolling in the Theocratic Ministry School, we show that we are interested in spiritual advancement. The instruction there can help us to demonstrate "fine works" as public praisers of Jehovah. (Matt. 5:16) It can equip us to accomplish more in the time we have available for the field service and to incite others to action by our fine comments at the congregation meetings. In the case of brothers, this instruction will greatly assist them in qualifying as ministerial servants or elders and eventually in handling major Service Meeting parts and in giving public talks.

Those enrolled will be notified well in advance concerning their student assignments so that they can prepare thoroughly. When we have a part in the school, it is particularly important to be on hand before the meeting starts. We should make every effort to be present to fulfill our assignment. However, if on occasion an emergency arises and it is impossible for us to care for our part, we should immediately notify the school overseer or the brother assigned to assist him so that arrangements can be made for a substitute.

As a regular part of our spiritual feeding program, the Theocratic Ministry School provides many benefits. The prophet Isaiah said: "The Sovereign Lord Jehovah himself has given me the tongue of the taught ones, that I may know how to answer the tired one with a word." (Isa. 50:4) Unquestionably, the school has played an important part in training millions to develop the tongue of one taught by Jehovah. Over the years, this program has helped those enrolled to make spiritual advancement and to learn how better to express themselves in presenting the good news of the Kingdom. Under the direction of holy spirit, such training has enabled God's people to give an answer to everyone demanding a reason for their hope. Being taught to use God's Word in this way is a blessing.

Those enrolled in the Theocratic Ministry School can benefit greatly from the use of the Kingdom Hall library. The library should contain the available publications of Jehovah's Witnesses, Watch Tower Publications Indexes, perhaps a number of Bible translations, a concordance, and other helpful reference works. We should feel free to use any of these publications at the Kingdom Hall before or after the meetings.

CONGREGATION BOOK STUDY

Members of the congregation and others who are associated derive great personal benefit from the Congregation Book Study, a meeting generally conducted with a smaller group than at the other meetings. A few families and a small number of other individuals gather at each of these studies. Study groups meet in convenient locations scattered throughout the congregation territory, usually private homes. The Kingdom Hall may also be used for this purpose.

In some respects, these group studies provide benefits that do not directly come through other provisions of the congregation. Why is this so? It is because the Congregation Book Study arrangement provides not only for making a careful and detailed study of Bible subjects but also for giving more personal attention to the spiritual growth of each individual in these small groups. Such personal assistance may include appropriate Scriptural counsel, encouragement and direction for carrying out the ministry, as well as other vital spiritual help to fit the needs of the individual. This assistance is a reflection of Jehovah's loving-kindness and his tender care for his people.—Isa. 40:11.

The Congregation Book Study overseer is a student of God's Word and is qualified to help others to increase in Bible knowledge and to apply this knowledge in practical ways. Besides conducting the lesson, he shows personal interest in the physical and spiritual well-being of all in the group, assists them in the preaching work, and makes shepherding calls on them and on others in the congregation as the need arises. A capable ministerial servant may conduct the book study if an elder is not available.

This meeting is a group study using the Bible and a textbook provided by Jehovah's Witnesses. Basically, it is conducted in the same manner as the Watchtower Study. The book study is opened and closed with prayer, paragraphs are read, questions are asked on the paragraphs, comments are given, and scriptures are read as time permits. To impress principal thoughts on the mind of each one, the conductor may include a brief oral review at the end of the study. As we attend week by week, we will gain both knowledge and understanding. We will learn the reasons for statements that are made in the publication and how to support them from the Bible as well as how to conduct discussions of the same material with others whom we are able to help in our field ministry. (2 Tim. 2:15) This meeting will do much to equip us to become better teachers of God's Word.

In a small group such as this, there are more opportunities for us to offer comments. Thus, all of us, including new ones, have the opportunity to get accustomed to making a public declaration of our faith before others. (Heb. 13:15) It is good to learn to comment in our own words instead of reading out of the book.

Whereas anyone present may share in the reading of the scriptures, just one person is assigned to read the paragraphs. The Congregation Book Study overseer will arrange in advance for a baptized brother who is a good reader to read the paragraphs. Each week, a different qualified brother may be assigned to read the paragraphs. If no capable brother is available, the overseer himself may read or a capable sister may read.

Having the study groups scattered throughout the congregation territory makes it convenient both for us and for newly interested people in the neighborhood to attend. We should make every effort to bring others with us to the meeting so that they can get a taste of the spiritually upbuilding discussions and the warm association that we enjoy.

WAT.0013.001.0058

In addition to being a place for group study, the Congregation Book Study location may be a meeting place for field service. Here the group may meet at convenient times before going out into the field. By cooperating in all these arrangements, book study groups work together for the twofold purpose of study and service.

MEETINGS FOR FIELD SERVICE

At various times during the week, groups of Jehovah's Witnesses may briefly assemble in preparation for going out in the field ministry. Discussion of a Bible text—preferably the daily text if it is field service related—suggestions for dealing with situations likely to be encountered in the field, or points from Our Kingdom Ministry are usually considered at these meetings. Field service arrangements are made, and one of the group leads in prayer. The group is then ready to go into the field. Such meetings provide practical instruction and real encouragement for those going out in the witness work. Arrangements can be made at this meeting to help newer ones or others who may need assistance in the preaching work. Such meetings last from 10 to 15 minutes.

MEETING ARRANGEMENTS AT NEW OR SMALL CONGREGATIONS

As more become disciples, the number of congregations also increases. Whether a new congregation is formed from an already existing congregation or is made up of publishers in an isolated area, it must consist of baptized publishers and others who recognize the faithful and discreet slave class and desire to work under its direction. The circuit overseer usually submits the application for a new congregation. In some cases, small groups may find it more advantageous to be associated with the nearest congregation.

At times, small congregations may be composed entirely of sisters. When such is the case, a sister who prays in the congregation or conducts meetings does so with her head properly covered, in harmony with the Scriptural arrangement. (1 Cor. 11:3-16) In most cases, they remain seated, facing the group. None of the sisters give actual discourses at meetings. They read and comment on the material provided by Jehovah's Witnesses, or for variety, they may cover it in discussions or demonstrations.

In a newly formed congregation, brothers who qualify for appointment as elders or ministerial servants will be recommended to the branch office. If no one qualifies, as in the case of a group made up entirely of sisters, the branch office will designate one of the sisters to care for correspondence with the office and to carry on meetings. In time, when brothers qualify for appointment, they will care for these responsibilities.

SPECIAL ASSEMBLY DAYS AND CIRCUIT ASSEMBLIES

Meetings of Jehovah's servants may range in size from small gatherings of just two or three individuals to large assemblies of many thousands. Each year arrangements are made for congregations assigned to the same circuit to assemble together for a one-day special assembly day and a two-day circuit assembly. These joyous occasions afford everyone opportunities to "widen out" in Christian association. (2 Cor. 6:11-13) With a special need in mind, "the faithful and discreet slave" prepares the Scriptural themes and various parts of these programs.

WAT.0013.001.0060

The information is presented by means of a variety of methods, such as discourses, discussions, demonstrations, reenactments, and interviews. The programs usually feature parts that deal with local situations or counsel that specifically applies to the particular circuit. Such timely instruction builds up all who attend.

At special assembly days and circuit assemblies, opportunity is provided for new disciples to get baptized in symbol of their dedication to Jehovah. All are encouraged by the reports and experiences related concerning the work of preaching the good news.

DISTRICT CONVENTIONS

Once each year, larger gatherings are held by Jehovah's Witnesses. These are usually organized as three-day district conventions, combining congregations from a number of circuits. However, smaller branches may find it more practical and convenient for all congregations under the branch to assemble in one place. Arrangements for these gatherings in some lands may vary according to circumstances or on the basis of direction from the Governing Body. National conventions are also organized. Periodically, international conventions around the world may be attended by tens of thousands of Witnesses from a number of different lands. Over the years, many people have learned about the good news because of the publicity given to these large gatherings of Jehovah's Witnesses.

District, national, and international conventions are joyous occasions of united worship for Jehovah's dedicated people. Such conventions have provided the setting for revealing increased light on the truth, for releasing new publications for personal and congregational study and use in the field ministry, and for having baptisms. Jehovah's Witnesses consider district conventions to be of particular importance in promoting spiritual growth and in reviewing progress in fulfilling the Christian commission to preach the good news. In some smaller branches, the district convention may actually be a national convention. The larger conventions give evidence that Jehovah's people indeed form an international brotherhood of dedicated Christians bearing the identifying mark of disciples of Jesus Christ.—John 13:35.

By attending local congregation meetings as well as the larger assemblies and conventions of Jehovah's people, we are strengthened to do Jehovah's will and are protected against worldly influences that could undermine our Christian faith. We can all be thankful that Jehovah has provided these periods of spiritual refreshment for his dedicated people in this time of the end.

THE LORD'S EVENING MEAL

Once each year on the anniversary of the death of Jesus Christ, all congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses observe the Memorial of Christ's death, or the Lord's Evening Meal. (1 Cor. 11:20, 23, 24) This is the most important meeting of the year for Jehovah's people. We are specifically commanded to observe this Memorial.—Luke 22:19.

The date of the Memorial corresponds with the date of the Passover, which is clearly marked in the Bible. (Ex. 12:2, 6; Matt. 26:17, 20, 26) The Passover was the annual commemoration of the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt in the year 1513 B.C.E. At that time Jehovah marked the 14th day of their first lunar month as the date for them to eat the Passover lamb and to leave their captivity in Egypt. (Ex. 12:1-51) The date is determined by counting 14 days from the new moon nearest the spring equinox as visible in Jerusalem. Generally, the Memorial observance each year falls on the date of the first full moon following the spring equinox.

Matthew 26:26-28 outlines in Jesus' own words the way the Memorial is observed. It is, not a ritual with mystical overtones, but a symbolic meal that is shared by those who have been called to be joint heirs with Jesus Christ in his heavenly Kingdom. (Luke 22:28-30) All other dedicated Christians and interested people are encouraged to attend the Lord's Evening Meal as observers. By their attendance they show their appreciation for the provision Jehovah God has made for the benefit of all mankind through his Son, Jesus Christ. Jehovah's Witnesses view the Memorial as a special event and make every effort to be in attendance each year.

In the first part of the year, usually near Memorial time, a special public talk is given in the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses. They endeavor to invite all interested ones to attend. The talk provides a timely message for those who want to be pleasing to God and is designed to stimulate further interest in Bible study.

Jehovah's Witnesses joyfully anticipate occasions for assembling together at meetings, where we "consider one another to incite to love and fine works." (Heb. 10:24) "The faithful and discreet slave" is alert to provide such meetings according to our spiritual needs. All of Jehovah's servants as well as interested people are urged to take full advantage of the arrangements for regularly assembling together. By showing due appreciation for Jehovah's provisions through his organization, God's servants are bound together in unity.

CHAPTER 8

MINISTERS OF THE GOOD NEWS

IN SENDING forth his Son, Jehovah gave us a perfect model to follow. (1 Pet. 2:21) When anyone becomes his follower, Jesus helps that person to preach the good news as one of God's ministers. Indicating that this would be spiritually refreshing, Jesus said: "Come to me, all you who are toiling and loaded down, and I will refresh you. Take my yoke upon you and learn from me ["become my disciples," ftn.], for I am mild-tempered and lowly in heart, and you will find refreshment for your souls." (Matt. 11:28, 29) His promise has not failed any who have responded to that invitation!

As God's Chief Minister, Jesus called certain individuals to come and be his followers. (Matt. 9:9; John 1:43) He trained them in the ministry and sent them forth to do the same work he was doing. (Matt. 10:1–11:1; 20:28; Luke 4:43) Later he sent forth 70 others to share in declaring the good news concerning God's Kingdom. (Luke 10:1, 8-11) When Jesus sent his disciples forth, he said to them: "He that listens to you listens to me too. And he that disregards you disregards me too. Moreover, he that disregards me disregards also him that sent me forth." (Luke 10:16) In this way Jesus stressed the serious responsibility that was laid upon the disciples. They were to represent the Most High God! It would be the same with all others who respond to Jesus' invitation to "come be [his] follower," even down to this day. (Luke 18:22) All who respond have a divine commission to preach the good news of the Kingdom and to make disciples. —Matt. 24:14; 28:19, 20.

Having come to Jesus, therefore, in response to his invitation to follow him, we have been blessed with knowledge of Jehovah God and of Jesus Christ. (John 17:3) We have been taught Jehovah's ways. With his help we have been able to make our mind over, change our personality, and harmonize our daily conduct with Jehovah's righteous standards. (Rom. 12:1, 2; Eph. 4:22-24; Col. 3:9, 10) Our heartfelt appreciation has moved us to dedicate ourselves to Jehovah and to symbolize that by baptism in water. Baptism constitutes our ordination as ministers.

Always keep in mind that service to God must be rendered with clean hands and out of a pure heart. (Ps. 24:3, 4; Isa. 52:11; 2 Cor. 6:14–7:1) Through faith in Jesus Christ, we have gained a clean conscience and freeness of speech. (Heb. 10:19-23, 35, 36; Rev. 7: 9, 10, 14) The apostle Paul admonished Christians to do all things for God's glory, so as not to be stumbling others. Also, the apostle Peter pointed out the value of exemplary godly conduct in winning unbelievers over to the truth. (1 Cor. 10:31, 33; 1 Pet. 3:1) How can you help someone qualify to become a minister of the good news?

NEW PUBLISHERS

From the time you begin conducting a home Bible study with an interested person, encourage him to speak to others about what he is learning from the Bible. He could be urged to speak with relatives, friends, work associates, and others on an informal basis. This is an important step in teaching new ones to be followers of Jesus Christ as ministers of the good news. (Matt. 9:9; Luke 6:40) As the new one grows spiritually and becomes adept at informal witnessing, he will no doubt express a desire to have a share in the public ministry with the congregation.

MEETING THE REQUIREMENTS

Before inviting a person to accompany you in the field ministry for the first time and before you suggest that he report any field service to the congregation, there are certain qualifications he should meet. When a person accompanies us in the field ministry, he identifies himself publicly with the congregation of Jehovah's people, so it is understood that he has already brought his life into harmony with Jehovah's righteous standards and can be an unbaptized publisher in the congregation.

Very likely, as you study with a person and discuss Bible principles with him, you will become aware of his circumstances. You may observe that he is living in harmony with the information he has learned from studying the Bible. But there are some aspects of the student's life that the elders will want to discuss with him and you together before you invite him to accompany you in the field service and to share in publicly witnessing to others.

The presiding overseer will arrange to have two elders (one being a member of the Congregation Service Committee) discuss this matter with you and the Bible student. They will consider the following points:

- Do the person's expressions show that he believes that the Bible is the inspired Word of God? (2 Tim. 3:16)

WAT.0013.001.0066

- Does he know and believe the basic teachings of the Scriptures so that when asked questions, he will answer in harmony with the Bible and not according to false religious teachings or his own ideas? (Matt. 7:21-23; 2 Tim. 2:15)
- Is he heeding the Bible's command to associate with Jehovah's people at congregation meetings if he physically and circumstantially can? (Ps. 122:1; Heb. 10:24, 25)
- Does he know what the Bible teaches about fornication, adultery, polygamy, and homosexuality, and is he living in harmony with such teachings? If the person is living with one of the opposite sex, are they properly married? (Matt. 19:9; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; 1 Tim. 3:2, 12; Heb. 13:4)
- Does he heed the Bible's prohibition of drunkenness? (Eph. 5:18; 1 Pet. 4:3, 4) Is he free from all nonmedical use of addictive or mind-altering natural or synthetic substances? (2 Cor. 7:1)
- Does he see the value of avoiding unwholesome association? (1 Cor. 15:33)
- Has he definitely broken off membership in all false religious organizations with which he may have been affiliated, and has he ceased attending their meetings and supporting or sharing in their activities? (2 Cor. 6:14-18; Rev. 18:4)
- Is he free from all involvement in the political affairs of the world? (John 6:15; 15:19; Jas. 1:27)
- Does he believe and live in harmony with what the Bible says at Isaiah 2:4 about the affairs of the nations?
- Does he really want to be one of Jehovah's Witnesses? (Ps. 110:3)

If the elders are not sure how the student feels about some of these matters, they should invite him to look up the scriptures here cited and comment on them in order to see the significance of what they say. It is important that he understand that those who share with Jehovah's Witnesses in their preaching activity must be leading a life that harmonizes with these Scriptural requirements. His expressions will help the elders determine whether he knows what is expected of him and whether he is qualified to a reasonable degree to begin participating in the field ministry.

If he is qualified, the elders can warmly welcome the individual as one who desires to become an active associate of Jehovah's Witnesses. (Rom. 15:7) He should be encouraged to begin sharing in the field ministry as soon as possible and to turn in a field service report at the end of the month. The elders can explain that when a Bible student qualifies as an unbaptized publisher and reports field service for the first time, a Congregation's Publisher Record card is made out in his name and included in the congregation file. They can assure him that all the elders take an interest in the field service reports that are turned in each month.

Getting better acquainted with the new publisher and showing a personal interest in what he has accomplished can have a fine influence on the individual. It may move him to make even greater efforts to serve Jehovah and to turn in field service reports regularly each month.—Phil. 2:4; Heb. 13:2.

Once the elders determine that the Bible student qualifies to engage in the field ministry, he is eligible to receive his own copy of Organized to Do Jehovah's Will. After he reports field service for the first time, a brief announcement should be made to the congregation that he is a new unbaptized publisher.

WAT.0013.001.0068

HELPING YOUNG PEOPLE

Young children may also qualify as publishers of the good news. Jesus received young children to himself and blessed them. (Matt. 19:13-15; 21:15, 16) Although primarily parents are responsible for their own children, others in the congregation may wish to help young ones who are motivated from the heart to share in the Kingdom-preaching work. If you are a parent, your fine example in the field ministry will do much to encourage your children to be zealous in their service to God. When a child is exemplary in his conduct and is moved from the heart to make a personal expression of his faith by speaking to others about the good news, what further help can be given?

It would be appropriate for the parent to approach one of the elders on the Congregation Service Committee to discuss whether the child is qualified to become a publisher. The presiding overseer will arrange to have two elders (one being a member of the Congregation Service Committee) meet with the child and his parent(s). If the child has a basic knowledge of Bible truth and gives evidence of wanting to share in Kingdom service, this would indicate good progress has been made. After considering these and other factors similar to those that apply to adults, the two elders can determine whether the child may be recognized as an unbaptized publisher.—Luke 6: 45; Rom. 10:10.

DEDICATION AND BAPTISM

If you have taken in accurate knowledge and have shown love for God by conforming your life to divine requirements and by sharing in the field ministry, you need to solidify your personal relationship with Jehovah. How? By making a dedication to him in whole strength." (Mark 12:30) All of us are required to be whole-souled in our service to God. This means that we can individually demonstrate the depth of our devotion and the genuineness of our dedication by doing our utmost in the ministry. (2 Tim. 2:15) There are many opportunities open to each of us, according to our individual circumstances and abilities. Just consider what some of these opportunities are, and decide what theocratic goals you will pursue in fulfilling your ministry.

SERVING AS A CONGREGATION PUBLISHER

All who embrace the truth have the privilege of publishing the good news. This is the basic work that Jesus gave his disciples to do. (Matt. 24:14; 28:19, 20) A disciple of Jesus Christ usually begins speaking to others about the good news just as soon as he recognizes its value. This is what Andrew, Philip, Cornelius, and others did. (John 1:40, 41, 43-45; Acts 10:1, 2, 24; 16:14, 15, 25-34) Does this mean that a person may participate in telling others about the good news even before he gets baptized? Yes. As soon as an individual qualifies as an unbaptized publisher in the congregation, the opportunity to participate in the house-to-house preaching is open to him. Also, according to his ability and circumstances, he may regularly share in other features of the Christian ministry.

As a baptized member of the congregation, you are no doubt interested in doing all you can to help others learn the good news. Men and women alike have the privilege of sharing in the God-ordained preaching work. All should set a fine example in fulfilling their respective roles within the congregation. (1 Tim. 2:9-15; Titus 2:1-10; 1 Pet. 5:5) Male members of the congregation who make spiritual advancement and qualify may be appointed as ministerial servants. (1 Tim. 3:8-10, 12, 13) Such ones who reach out for the responsibilities of an overseer and who meet the Scriptural requirements are appointed to this office. They teach in the congregation and serve as shepherds of the flock. (1 Tim. 3:1-7; Titus 1:5-9) It is certainly a privilege to have even a small part in advancing the interests of God's Kingdom. Anyone who can expand his ministry to attain additional privileges of service is happy indeed.

SERVING WHERE THE NEED IS GREATER

It may be that you serve in a congregation where the territory is frequently worked and a fine witness is being given. If such is the case, you may feel that you could expand your ministry by moving to an area where there is a greater need in the field. (Acts 16:9) Your circuit overseer may have suggestions on how you can assist another congregation within the circuit. If you wish to serve in another area of your own country, you may write to the branch office for information. If you presently serve as an elder or a ministerial servant, there may be another congregation in your country that would appreciate having your assistance in caring for congregation needs.

Would you like to advance Kingdom interests in a foreign country? If so, you need to consider such a move carefully. It will certainly have an impact on you and any who accompany you. (Luke 14:28) If you are not planning to stay a long time, it may be best to consider serving in areas within your home country.

Before the branch office in your country or in another land can provide you with names of congregations that could benefit from your assistance, your Congregation Service Committee will need to provide a letter of recommendation. This letter is required whether you are serving as an elder, a ministerial servant, a pioneer, or a publisher. The service committee will send a letter of recommendation along with your inquiry directly to the branch office of the country where you desire to serve.

If serving where the need is greater is something that you would like to do, why not discuss the matter with the elders in your congregation? They may be able to help you determine how to go about making such a move or how to qualify for such service sometime in the future.

WORKING WITH A FOREIGN-LANGUAGE CONGREGATION

In order to expand your ministry, you may wish to consider learning another language, including a sign language. In some bilingual families, both parents and youths are serving in foreign-language congregations to care more fully for Kingdom interests. If you have the goal of learning to preach in another language, why not speak with the elders and the circuit overseer? They may be able to offer suggestions and needed encouragement. In some cases, under the direction of the branch office, circuits have organized language classes to help reach the local immigrant population.

AUXILIARY, REGULAR, AND SPECIAL PIONEER SERVICE

All publishers should be acquainted with the general requirements for auxiliary, regular, and special pioneer service as well as other branches of full-time service. From time to time, Our Kingdom Ministry sets out additional specific information. A pioneer publisher must be an exemplary baptized Christian whose personal circumstances allow him or her to spend the specified number of hours each month in publicly preaching the good news. The Congregation Service Committee approves applications for auxiliary pioneer service, whereas regular and special pioneers are appointed by the branch office.

Auxiliary pioneers may be appointed for a minimum of one month, for any number of consecutive months, or on a continuous basis, according to their circumstances. Many Kingdom publishers enjoy serving as auxiliary pioneers on special occasions, such as during the Memorial season or the month of the circuit overseer's visit. Some choose vacation months. Baptized, school-age publishers may wish to enroll as auxiliary pioneers during months they have time off from school. Whatever your personal circumstances, if you are maintaining a clean moral standing, can arrange to meet the specified hour requirement in the field ministry, and believe that you could serve one or more months as an auxiliary pioneer, the congregation elders will be pleased to consider your application for this privilege of service.

To qualify for appointment as a regular pioneer, you must currently be in a position to reach the yearly field service requirement. Our Kingdom Ministry suggests a monthly goal of hours that will assist you in fulfilling this responsibility. As a regular pioneer, you must always work in close cooperation with the congregation where you are serving. Zealous pioneers are a real blessing to a congregation, generating enthusiasm for the field ministry and even encouraging others to take up the pioneer service. Before the elders recommend that you be appointed as a regular pioneer, however, you must be baptized for at least six months, have good morals, and show yourself to be an exemplary publisher. You must be able to follow a practical schedule that will enable you to spend the required number of hours in field service.

Special pioneers are usually selected from among regular pioneers who have demonstrated their effectiveness in the ministry and who are able to serve wherever the branch office chooses to assign them. Often this is an isolated area where they can find interest and form new congregations. At times, special pioneers are assigned to congregations that need help in covering their territory regularly. Some special pioneers who are also elders have been assigned to help small congregations, even where there is not a particular need for more workers in the field. Special pioneers receive a modest reimbursement for necessary living expenses.

MINISTERIAL TRAINING SCHOOL

The steady increase in new congregations being formed each year gives evidence of Jehovah's blessing upon the efforts of his people to preach the good news of the Kingdom. (Acts 16:5) With the increase in congregations, the need for additional elders and ministerial servants also grows. Single brothers who qualify are encouraged to fill this need by saying to Jehovah: "Here I am! Send me." (Isa. 6:8) Many have responded in this way by applying to attend the Ministerial Training School, which is reserved for single ministerial servants and elders who are willing and able to serve where the need is greater. Such ones can learn more about the requirements by attending the meetings for brothers interested in the Ministerial Training School when these are held at circuit assemblies.

WAT.0013.001.0074

This school gives instruction in Bible teachings and in organizational matters so as to equip qualified men to handle congregational shepherding and other responsibilities. (Jer. 23:4) As a result of such training, some are assigned to serve where the need is greater in their own countries, whereas others receive assignments in foreign countries. Some are asked to return to their home congregations to help and encourage the local brothers and sisters. Those trained are better equipped to render spiritual and organizational help to God's people.—2 Tim. 3:16, 17.

MISSIONARY SERVICE

In order for the Kingdom good news to be preached "to the most distant part of the earth" before the end comes, it has been necessary to send missionaries forth into many lands. (Acts 1:8; Matt. 24:14) This has opened up opportunities for expanded service privileges for thousands of Jehovah's Witnesses, especially those who have already proved themselves to be zealous, whole-souled in their devotion, and effective in Kingdom service. Those invited to share in missionary work are usually given specialized training at the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead.

A person must have good physical health and stamina to qualify for missionary work, since many missionaries are assigned to countries where living conditions are difficult. Besides being exposed to diseases, a missionary may be required to adjust to a different standard of living and an entirely new culture.

If you are already in full-time service and would like to reach out for additional privileges as a missionary, you can learn more about the requirements by attending the meetings for those interested in missionary service when these are held at district conventions. Your circuit overseer may also be able to give you good advice. If you qualify, you may be privileged to take up this avenue of service that has contributed so much to the worldwide expansion of true worship.

BETHEL SERVICE

Serving at one of the many Bethel homes around the world is a special privilege. The name Bethel means "House of God," and that designation is certainly appropriate for these centers of theocratic activity. Brothers and sisters in Bethel service do a vital work in connection with producing and distributing literature used by Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide. From Brooklyn Bethel, the Governing Body provides oversight and direction for congregations throughout the earth.

Much of the service performed at Bethel is hard physical work. For this reason, those called into Bethel service are mainly dedicated, baptized brothers who are young in years, in good health, and physically strong. If there is a need in your country and you would like to serve at Bethel, you can learn more about the requirements by attending the special meetings for those interested in Bethel service when these are held at district conventions. Your circuit overseer can also be of assistance in this regard.

CONSTRUCTION VOLUNTEER

The construction of Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls is a form of sacred service, similar to the work of constructing Solomon's temple. (1 Ki. 8:13-18) Many brothers and sisters show outstanding zeal for Jehovah's organization by volunteering their time and assets to support and have a part in this work.

WAT.0013.001.0076

Are you in a position to assist in this aspect of sacred service? If you are a baptized publisher and are willing to share in such activity, the Regional Building Committee would very much appreciate your offering to assist. If you are unskilled in building trades or are an unbaptized publisher in good standing in the congregation, you may be able to assist with the building of a Kingdom Hall in your area. Why not let the local elders and circuit overseer know of your availability to help? Some baptized publishers who qualify have even been in a position to volunteer for international construction work on Kingdom Hall and Assembly Hall projects in other countries.

WHAT ARE YOUR SPIRITUAL GOALS?

If you have dedicated your life to Jehovah, your expressed desire is to serve Jehovah forever. But what are your spiritual goals along the way? Having spiritual goals will help you to direct your energies and other resources wisely. (1 Cor. 9:26) You will be able to aim for something worthwhile. Such goals are conducive to spiritual growth and will help you to concentrate on the more important things as you reach out for additional service privileges.—Phil. 1: 10; 1 Tim. 4:15, 16.

In his illustration of the sower, Jesus emphasized that good soil produces varying amounts of fruitage. He said: "As for the one sown upon the fine soil, this is the one hearing the word and getting the sense of it, who really does bear fruit and produces, this one a hundredfold, that one sixty, the other thirty." (Matt. 13:23) If we have got the sense of the word in our heart, should we not exert ourselves so as to produce abundant fruitage to Jehovah's praise? Do we not want to bear much Kingdom fruitage as we zealously to assemble in public places. (Acts 19:8, 9) Private homes were also used to teach the Scriptures and to enjoy association with true believers. (Rom. 16:3, 5; Col. 4:15; Philem. 2) Sometimes it was necessary for the early Christians to meet in isolated or secluded places to avoid detection by persecutors. Indeed, faithful servants of God in the past had a sincere desire to assemble in places of worship in order to be "taught by Jehovah."—Isa. 54:13.

Today, too, private homes and public places are used as Christian meeting places. Private homes often serve as locations of Congregation Book Studies or meetings for field service. Those who offer their home for such meetings, as circumstances require, view this as a privilege. Many report that they have benefited spiritually by opening their home in this way.

KINGDOM HALL

The principal meeting place of Jehovah's Witnesses is the Kingdom Hall. In some localities, it is more convenient to rent a hall than to buy or to build one. However, many congregations have chosen to purchase property and build their own Kingdom Hall suited to their needs. Or they have bought and renovated an existing building. In such cases, it is appropriate to have a dedication program. If only minor changes or renovations are made to an existing Kingdom Hall, there is no need to have a dedication program again.

The Kingdom Hall should not be an elaborate building made to impress others. While its design may vary from place to place, its purpose is functional. (Acts 17:24) In accord with local circumstances, it should be a comfortable and convenient place for holding Christian meetings.

WAT.0013.001.0078

Each Kingdom Hall is financed by the local congregation(s) of Jehovah's Witnesses. No collection plate is passed, nor is solicitation for funds made. A contribution box is provided, and those attending meetings have the privilege of caring for necessary expenses in connection with the use of the hall. They do so willingly, from the heart. (2 Cor. 9:7) Elders are generally familiar with information regarding ownership and operation of the Kingdom Hall as set out in Our Kingdom Ministry, memorandums, and letters provided by the branch office.

Those in the congregation should consider it a privilege to support the Kingdom Hall financially and to volunteer their services in keeping it clean, presentable, and in good repair. Both inside and out, the Kingdom Hall should properly represent Jehovah's organization. An elder or a ministerial servant is usually assigned to see that necessary work is cared for in accord with a list of things to be done each week. Generally, cleaning is arranged according to Congregation Book Study groups, with the book study overseer or his assistant taking the lead.

Where more than one congregation meets in a hall, the elders of the congregations involved will set up a Kingdom Hall Operating Committee to see that necessary maintenance is done on the building and property. The bodies of elders will designate a chairman. Working under the direction of the bodies of elders, the operating committee monitors the hall cleaning, making sure that the hall is kept in good repair and that sufficient supplies are on hand. Basically, the committee does the work that would be done by just one elder or ministerial servant if only one congregation met in the hall. Close cooperation among all involved is required.

When several congregations meet in one Kingdom Hall, any schedule of meeting times that involves rotation is worked out through the elders in a spirit of mutual concern and brotherly love. (Phil. 2:2-4; 1 Pet. 3:8) Whether the rotation is done once a year or once every few years is left up to the local congregations to decide. No one congregation should take it upon itself to make such decisions on behalf of other congregations. The rotation of meeting times should take place during the first week of the calendar year. When the circuit overseer visits one of the congregations in the Kingdom Hall, the other congregation(s) will adjust their meeting times as needed for that week.

The Kingdom Hall may be used for weddings and funerals with the permission of the Congregation Service Committee. These elders carefully consider what is requested and base their decision on direction provided by the branch office.

Those who are granted use of the Kingdom Hall for such purposes are expected to conduct themselves in a way that befits a place of true worship. All involved should be sure that nothing is done that would offend the congregation or bring reproach upon Jehovah and the good name of the congregation. (Phil. 2:14, 15) At times, use of the Kingdom Hall may be granted for other spiritual functions under the direction of the branch office, such as the Kingdom Ministry School and the Pioneer Service School.

The congregation should always treat their meeting places with respect. Dress, grooming, and decorum should bespeak the dignity associated with worshiping Jehovah. (Eccl. 5:1; 1 Tim. 2:9, 10) Applying counsel in this regard is a way of showing appreciation for our Christian meetings.

WAT.0013.001.0080

At meetings in the Kingdom Hall, qualified brothers are assigned to serve as attendants. They should be alert, have friendly personalities, and use good judgment. Their responsibilities include greeting newcomers and making them feel welcome, helping latecomers to find seats, recording attendance figures, and giving necessary attention to proper heating and ventilation of the hall. Maintaining order during the meetings is essential. It is recommended that children sit with their parents. When a child becomes unruly, an attendant might ask the parent in a kind and tactful way to take the child out, so that the audience will not be unduly distracted. Parents with young children can be encouraged to sit where they will cause the least distraction if it becomes necessary to take the children out to discipline them or to care for other needs.

Since the conduct of children inside the Kingdom Hall as well as outside can reflect favorably or unfavorably on the congregation, attendants should, where necessary, remind parents to give proper supervision, so that children do not run in the building or around the property before and after the meetings. The service performed by attendants obviously contributes much to everyone's enjoyment of the meetings. It is preferable that ministerial servants be used as attendants, particularly those who have had experience handling situations that arise in family life.—1 Tim. 3:12.

KINGDOM HALL CONSTRUCTION

At Kingdom Halls in many lands, there is a contribution box for the Kingdom Hall Fund. This fund is used to help finance the building of new Kingdom Halls and the renovation of those in need of repair.

WAT.0013.001.0081

gatherings, not with a troubled conscience, but with the satisfaction of having been spiritually refreshed.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES

Children of Jehovah's Witnesses benefit from getting a basic secular education. While attending school, they are interested in learning how to read and write well. Other subjects taught in primary school as well as in high school can be of value to young people as they pursue spiritual goals. During their school years, they want to make a diligent effort to 'remember their Creator' by putting spiritual things first.—Eccl. 12:1.

If you are a Christian youth attending school, you need to exercise special care. When worldly youths go unrestrained in their rebellious conduct, you must not side with them. (2 Tim. 3:1, 2) Under these circumstances, there is much you can do to ward off worldly influences. Jehovah has not left any of us exposed to dangers without providing the necessary protection. (Ps. 23:4; 91:1, 2) So take advantage of Jehovah's provisions; this will serve to safeguard you.—Ps. 23:5.

To keep separate from the world while in school, young Witnesses should consider the danger of becoming involved in extracurricular activities. Classmates and teachers may not always understand your decision not to participate. However, pleasing God is what counts. This requires that you exercise your Bible-trained conscience and stand firm in the resolve not to become involved in worldly competition or nationalistic practices, which violate Bible principles. (Gal. 5:19, 26) By listening to the Scriptural counsel of godly parents and benefiting from the good association and instruction of the congregation, you young ones will be aided in holding to Jehovah's righteous standards.

SECULAR WORK AND ASSOCIATES

Family heads have a Scriptural obligation to provide for the needs of their own household. (1 Tim. 5:8) Even so, as ministers they recognize that their secular work is secondary to the pursuit of vital Kingdom interests. (Matt. 6:33; Rom. 11:13) By practicing godly devotion and being content with sustenance and covering, they avoid the anxieties and snares of the materialistic way of life so common in the world.—1 Tim. 6:6-10.

Not only family heads but all dedicated Christians who find it necessary to be secularly employed should have Scriptural principles in mind. Making honest provision for ourselves means that we refuse to engage in activities that violate God's law or that are against the law of the land. (Rom. 13: 1, 2; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10) Also, there is a need to be constantly aware of the dangers of bad association. As soldiers of Christ, we refrain from engaging in commercial endeavors that violate Christian standards or jeopardize our spirituality. (2 Tim. 2:4) Neither do we have connections with God's religious enemy, "Babylon the Great."—Rev. 18:2, 4; 2 Cor. 6:14-17.

Observing God's righteous standards will prevent us from taking advantage of our theocratic association in order to promote personal or other business interests. The purpose of our association with others at Christian meetings in the local congregation and when attending circuit assemblies and conventions is exclusively to worship Jehovah, feeding at his spiritual table and enjoying an interchange of encouragement. (Rom. 1:11, 12; Heb. 10:24, 25) Such association should be kept on a spiritual level.

can usually dispose of minor offenses by forgiving and forgetting.—Matt. 7:12.

But if something has disturbed your relationship with someone in the congregation so much that you feel that another approach is needed, wisdom dictates that you do not delay in resolving the matter, knowing that your relationship with Jehovah is also involved. Jesus counseled his disciples: "If, then, you are bringing your gift to the altar and you there remember that your brother has something against you, leave your gift there in front of the altar, and go away; first make your peace with your brother, and then, when you have come back, offer up your gift." (Matt. 5:23, 24) There may have been a misunderstanding. If so, it should be cleared up by giving priority to Christian unity and keeping the lines of communication open. Good communication among all in the congregation goes a long way toward preventing misunderstandings and resolving problems that arise because of human imperfection.

PROVIDING NEEDED SCRIPTURAL COUNSEL

At times, overseers may find it necessary to counsel someone, trying to readjust his thinking. This is not always easy. To the Christians in Galatia, the apostle Paul wrote: "Brothers, even though a man takes some false step before he is aware of it, you who have spiritual qualifications try to readjust such a man in a spirit of mildness."—Gal. 6:1.

By lovingly caring for the flock, overseers protect the congregation from many spiritual dangers and prevent serious problems from developing. Shepherds of the flock should strive to make their service to the congregation measure up to Jehovah's promise through Isaiah: "Each one must prove to be like a hiding place from the wind and a place of concealment from the rainstorm, like streams of water in a waterless country, like the shadow of a heavy crag in an exhausted land."—Isa. 32:2.

RESOLVING CERTAIN SERIOUS WRONGS

Willingness to overlook offenses and to forgive does not mean that we are unconcerned about wrongdoing or that we approve of it. Not all wrongs can be charged to inherited imperfection; nor is it for our brother's good or for the good of the congregation to overlook wrongs that go beyond minor offenses. (Lev. 19:17; Ps. 141:5) The Law covenant recognized degrees of seriousness of sins and transgressions. This is also true in the Christian arrangement.—1 John 5:16, 17.

Jesus outlined some specific procedures for resolving problems involving serious wrongdoing that may arise between fellow Christians. Note the steps that he set out: "If your brother commits a sin, [1] go lay bare his fault between you and him alone. If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. But if he does not listen, [2] take along with you one or two more, in order that at the mouth of two or three witnesses every matter may be established. If he does not listen to them, [3] speak to the congregation. If he does not listen even to the congregation, let him be to you just as a man of the nations and as a tax collector."—Matt. 18:15-17.

The illustration that Jesus subsequently gave, recorded at Matthew 18:23-35, shows that the sins considered at Matthew 18:15-17 are evidently such sins as those involving financial or property matters —failure to make proper payment for something or some action involving a measure of fraud—or the damaging of someone's reputation by actual slander.

If you have solid evidence that someone in the congregation has committed such a serious sin against you personally, do not be hasty to turn to the overseers or others, asking them to intervene on your behalf. As Jesus counseled, speak first with the one against whom you have a complaint. Try to resolve the matter between just the two of you without involving anyone else. If he does not respond favorably to your efforts, you may let a little time pass before taking the matter further. Keep in mind that Jesus did not say 'go only once, and lay bare his fault.' Therefore, if the person does not initially admit the wrong and ask forgiveness, it may be good to consider approaching him again later. If the matter can be straightened out in this way, the one who sinned will certainly appreciate that you have not told others about his sin or marred his good reputation in the congregation. You will have achieved your objective of 'gaining your brother.'

If the one who committed the offense accepts responsibility, seeks forgiveness, and straightens the matter out, there is no need to carry the matter further. This shows that although serious, the offenses here discussed are limited to those that can be settled between the individuals involved. This does not include such offenses as fornication, adultery, homosexuality, blasphemy, apostasy, idolatry, and similar gross sins. (1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Gal. 5:19-21) These sins require more than forgiveness from an offended individual. Since the spiritual and moral cleanness of the congregation may be threatened, such matters should be reported to the elders and handled by them.—1 Cor. 5:6; Jas. 5:14, 15.

If you are not able to gain your brother by 'laying bare his fault between you and him alone,' then you may do as Jesus said—take along one or two others and speak with your brother again. Those you take with you should also have the objective of gaining your brother. Preferably, they would be witnesses of the alleged wrongdoing, but if there are no eyewitnesses, you may choose to take along brothers to be witnesses to the discussion. They may have experience in the matter at issue and may be able to establish whether what occurred was truly a wrong. Elders chosen as witnesses do not represent the congregation, since the body of elders has not specifically assigned them in the matter.

If you are convinced that your brother has committed a serious sin against you and you have evidence to prove it and the matter has not been resolved after repeated efforts—when you spoke with him alone and when you went to him with one or two others—and you feel that you cannot let it pass, then you should report the matter to the overseers of the congregation. Remember that their goal too is to maintain the peace and cleanness of the congregation. Having approached the elders, you will have taken the matter as far as you can. Leave the problem in their hands, and trust in Jehovah that it will be resolved. Never should you allow the conduct of someone else to stumble you or to rob you of your joy in Jehovah's service.—Ps. 119:165.

If upon investigation it becomes evident to the shepherds of the flock that the brother has indeed committed a serious sin against you and yet has been unwilling to repent and try to make reasonable and appropriate amends, it may become necessary for the overseers to expel the unrepentant wrongdoer.

In that way they protect the flock and safeguard the cleanness of the congregation.—Matt. 18:17.

MARKING DISORDERLY ONES

In his second letter to the Thessalonians, Paul warned of certain ones who were walking disorderly and who if accorded good standing in the congregation could exert an unhealthy influence. Paul admonished the Thessalonian Christians "to withdraw from every brother walking disorderly and not according to the tradition you received from us." He further clarified that statement by writing: "If anyone is not obedient to our word through this letter, keep this one marked, stop associating with him, that he may become ashamed. And yet do not be considering him as an enemy, but continue admonishing him as a brother."—2 Thess. 3:6, 14, 15.

Occasionally, someone not known to be guilty of practicing a grave sin for which he could be expelled nevertheless displays flagrant disregard for theocratic order. This could include such things as being grossly lazy or critical, being a profitless talker who is a constant 'meddler with what does not concern him.' (2 Thess. 3:11) Or this could include one who is scheming to take material advantage of others or indulging in entertainment that is clearly improper. The disorderly conduct is not so minor that it can be handled by applying Bible counsel and manifesting love; rather, it is serious enough to reflect badly on the congregation and potentially to spread to other Christians.

After giving repeated admonition to such an individual and finding that he persists in disregarding well-established Bible principles, the elders may decide that a talk should be given to the congregation providing appropriate counsel concerning such disorderly conduct. Elders will use reasonableness and discernment in determining whether a particular situation is sufficiently serious and disturbing to require a warning talk. This talk will not name the disorderly one. However, those who are aware of the situation described in the talk will take heed and limit their social contacts with such individuals.

The loving concern and firm stand of faithful members of the congregation could indeed move the disorderly one to shame and repentance. When it is clearly evident that the individual has abandoned his disorderly course, it would no longer be necessary to treat him as a marked individual.

HANDLING CASES OF SERIOUS WRONGDOING

After taking the steps outlined at Matthew 18:15, 16, some individual brothers or sisters may report to the elders cases of unresolved serious wrongdoing. (Matt. 18:17) On the other hand, individuals may also approach the elders either to confess their own sin or to report what they know regarding the wrongdoing of others. (Lev. 5:1; Jas. 5:16) Regardless of the manner in which the elders first hear reports of serious wrongdoing on the part of a baptized member of the congregation, an initial investigation will be made by two elders. If it is established that there is substance to the report and that evidence is available showing that a serious sin actually has been committed, the body of elders will assign a judicial committee of at least three elders to handle the matter. Regarding serious wrongdoing by one who is unbaptized, see pages 157-8.

While exercising watchful care of the flock, seeking to protect it from any elements that would be spiritually damaging, the elders will also endeavor to use God's Word skillfully to reprove any who have erred and will try to restore them. (Jude 21-23) This is in harmony with instructions given to Timothy by the apostle Paul, who wrote: "I solemnly charge you before God and Christ Jesus, who is destined to judge the living and the dead, . . . reprove, reprimand, exhort, with all long-suffering and art of teaching." (2 Tim. 4:1, 2) Doing so may take much time and effort, but this is part of the hard work of the elders. The congregation appreciates their endeavors and gives them double honor.—1 Tim. 5:17.

In every situation where guilt is established, the primary endeavor of the overseers is to restore the wrongdoer if he is genuinely repentant as indicated, for example, by his producing "works that befit repentance." (Acts 26:20) If he is repentant and they are able to help him, their administering reproof either in private or before onlookers with knowledge of the case serves to discipline him and instill a wholesome fear in any such onlookers. (2 Sam. 12: 13; 1 Tim. 5:20) In all cases of judicial reproof, restrictions are imposed. Thus the wrongdoer may be helped to 'make straight paths for his feet' thereafter. (Heb. 12:13) In due course these restrictions are removed as the individual's spiritual recovery becomes manifest.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REPROOF

If a judicial committee determines that an individual is repentant but that the matter is likely to become known in the congregation or in the community or if for other reasons the elders believe that the congregation needs to be advised, a simple announcement will be made during the Service Meeting. It should read: "[Name of person] has been re-proved." The presiding overseer should approve this announcement.

WAT.0013.001.0090

IF THE DECISION IS TO DISFELLOWSHIP

In some cases the wrongdoer may become hardened in his course of sinful conduct and thus fail to respond to efforts to help him. Fruitage, or works, befitting repentance may not be in evidence, nor may genuine repentance be apparent at the time of the judicial hearing. What then? In such cases, it is necessary to expel the unrepentant wrongdoer from the congregation, thus denying him fellowship with Jehovah's clean congregation. This is done to remove the bad influence of the wrongdoer from the congregation, thereby safeguarding the moral and spiritual cleanness of the congregation and protecting its good name. (Deut. 21:20, 21; 22:23, 24) When the apostle Paul became aware of the shameful conduct of a member of the congregation in Corinth, he admonished the elders to "hand such a man over to Satan . . . in order that the spirit [of the congregation] may be saved." (1 Cor. 5:5, 11-13) Paul also reported the disfellowshipping of others who had rebelled against the truth in the first century.—1 Tim. 1:20.

When a judicial committee concludes that an unrepentant wrongdoer should be disfellowshipped, it should let him know of the decision, clearly stating the Scriptural reason(s) for the disfellowshipping. When informing the wrongdoer of their decision, the judicial committee should tell him that if he believes that a serious error in judgment has been made and he wishes to appeal the decision, he may do so by writing a letter clearly stating the reasons for his appeal. He will be allowed seven days for this, from the time he was notified of the committee's decision. If such written appeal is received, the body of elders should contact the circuit overseer, who will designate elders to serve on an appeal committee to rehear the case. The elders selected to care for this weighty responsibility should be men who are experienced and qualified. Every effort should be made to conduct the appeal hearing within one week after the written appeal is received. If there is an appeal, announcement of the disfellowshipping will be held in abeyance. In the meantime, the accused person will be restricted from commenting and praying at meetings or from special privileges of service.

An appeal is granted as a kindness to the accused and allows him a further hearing of his concerns. Thus, if he deliberately fails to appear at the appeal hearing, the disfellowshipping should be announced after reasonable efforts have been made to contact him.

If the wrongdoer does not wish to appeal, the judicial committee should explain to him the need for repentance and what steps he can take toward being reinstated in due time. This would be both helpful and kind and should be done in the hope that he will change his ways and in time qualify to return to Jehovah's organization.—2 Cor. 2:6, 7.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DISFELLOWSHIPPING

When it is necessary to disfellowship an unrepentant wrongdoer from the congregation, a brief announcement is made, simply stating: "[Name of person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses." There is no need to elaborate. This will alert faithful members of the congregation to stop associating with that person. (1 Cor. 5:11) The presiding overseer should approve this announcement.

WAT.0013.001.0092

DISASSOCIATION

The term "disassociation" applies to the action taken by a person who, although a baptized member of the congregation, deliberately repudiates his Christian standing, rejecting the congregation by his actions or by stating that he no longer wants to be recognized as or known as one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Because he is disassociated, his situation before Jehovah is far different from that of an inactive Christian, one who no longer shares in the field ministry. An inactive person may have failed to study God's Word regularly, or because of experiencing personal problems or persecution, he may have lost his zeal for serving Jehovah. The elders as well as other concerned members of the congregation will continue rendering appropriate spiritual assistance to an inactive brother. (Rom. 15:1; 1 Thess. 5:14; Heb. 12:12) However, the person who disassociates himself by repudiating the faith and deliberately abandoning Jehovah's worship is viewed in the same way as one who is disfellowshipped. A brief announcement is made to inform the congregation, stating: "[Name of person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses."

Concerning those who renounced their Christian faith in his day, the apostle John wrote: "They went out from us, but they were not of our sort; for if they had been of our sort, they would have remained with us." (1 John 2:19) For example, a person might renounce his place in the Christian congregation by his actions, such as by becoming part of a secular organization that has objectives contrary to the Bible and, hence, is under judgment by Jehovah God. (Isa. 2:4; Rev. 19:17-21) If a person who is a Christian chooses to join those who are disapproved by God, a brief announcement is made to the congregation, stating: "[Name of person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses." Such a person is treated in the same way as a disfellowshipped person. The presiding overseer should approve this announcement.

REINSTATEMENT

A disfellowshipped person may be reinstated when he gives clear evidence of repentance, demonstrating over a reasonable period of time that he has abandoned his sinful course and is desirous of having a good relationship with Jehovah and His organization. The elders are careful to allow sufficient time, perhaps many months, a year, or even longer, for the disfellowshipped person to prove that his repentance is genuine. When the body of elders receives a written plea for reinstatement, the judicial committee that disfellowshipped the person should, if possible, be the committee that speaks with the individual. The committee will evaluate the evidence of works of godly repentance on his part and decide whether to reinstate him at that time or not.

If the person requesting reinstatement was disfellowshipped by another congregation, a local judicial committee may meet with the person and consider the plea. Thereafter, the local judicial committee will communicate with the body of elders of the congregation that disfellowshipped the individual, giving them its recommendation. The involved committees will work together in unity to ensure that all the facts are gathered and a just decision is made. However, the decision to reinstate is made by the original judicial committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action. If some members of the original committee are no longer in the congregation or qualified to serve, other elders from the original congregation can be chosen to replace them.

When the judicial committee is convinced that the disfellowshipped person is genuinely repentant and should be reinstated, an announcement of the reinstatement is made in the congregation where the individual was disfellowshipped. If the person is now in another congregation, the announcement will be made there as well. It should simply state: "[Name of person] is reinstated as one of Jehovah's Witnesses."

WHEN UNBAPTIZED PUBLISHERS ARE WRONGDOERS

What of unbaptized publishers who become involved in serious wrongdoing? Since they are not baptized members of the congregation, they cannot be formally disfellowshipped. However, they may not fully understand the Bible's standards, and kind counsel may help them to make straight paths for their feet.

If an unbaptized wrongdoer is unrepentant after two elders have met with him and have tried to help him, then it is necessary to inform the congregation. A brief announcement is made, stating: "[Name of person] is no longer recognized as an unbaptized publisher." The congregation will then view the wrongdoer as a person of the world. Although the offender is not disfellowshipped, Christians exercise caution with regard to any association with him. (1 Cor. 15:33) No field service reports would be accepted from him.

In time, an unbaptized person (adult or minor) who was removed as a publisher may wish to renew his association with the congregation and become a publisher again. In that situation, two elders would meet with him and ascertain his spiritual progress. If he has a good attitude, a Bible study may be held with him. If he progresses spiritually and eventually qualifies, a brief announcement can be made, stating: "[Name of person] is again recognized as an unbaptized publisher."

CASES INVOLVING MINOR BAPTIZED CHILDREN

Serious wrongdoing on the part of minor children who are baptized should be reported to the elders. When the elders handle cases of serious sins involving a minor, it is preferable that the baptized parents of the young person be present and cooperate with the judicial committee, not attempting to shield the erring child from necessary disciplinary action. Just as in dealing with adult offenders, the judicial committee endeavors to reprove and restore the wrongdoer. However, if the young person is unrepentant, disfellowshipping action is taken.

JEHOVAH BLESSES UNITED, CLEAN WORSHIP

All who are associated with the congregation of God today can certainly rejoice in the rich spiritual estate that Jehovah has given to his people. Our spiritual pastures have indeed been made lush, and we have been provided with an abundance of refreshing waters of truth. We have experienced Jehovah's protective care through his theocratic arrangement under the headship of Christ. (Ps., 23; Isa. 32:1, 2) Being in the spiritual paradise in these troublesome last days has given us a feeling of security.

By maintaining fine conduct and Christian unity as ministers of God's good news, we will continue to let the light of Kingdom truth shine forth. (Matt. 5:16) With Jehovah's blessing, we will have the joy of seeing many more people come to know Jehovah and serve with us in doing God's will.

CHAPTER 15

BENEFITING FROM THEOCRATIC SUBJECTION

BEING in subjection to God, the Universal Sovereign, is essential if we are to be organized to do Jehovah's will. Our recognizing his Son's headship over the Christian congregation is also necessary. And it is important that we observe the headship principle in other areas of life. Such theocratic subjection benefits everyone concerned.

The idea of subjection to constituted authority was introduced to mankind in the garden of Eden. It is embodied in God's commands found at Genesis 1:28 and 2:16, 17. Lower creatures were to be in subjection to humans, and Adam and Eve were to submit to God's will and authority. Obedience to this divine authority would result in peace and good order. The headship principle is later highlighted at 1 Corinthians 11:3. The apostle Paul wrote: "I want you to know that the head of every man is the Christ; in turn the head of a woman is the man; in turn the head of the Christ is God." So this indicates that other than Jehovah, everyone is subject to headship in this overall arrangement.

Most people today do not recognize or observe the headship principle. Why? The trouble started in Eden when mankind's parents deliberately chose to take themselves out from under God's sovereign headship. (Gen. 3:4, 5) However, they did not attain to greater freedom. Instead, they became subject to a wicked spirit creature, Satan the Devil. The first rebellion alienated mankind from God. (Col. 1:21) As a result, today the majority of mankind remain in the power of the wicked one.—1 John 5:19.

By learning the truth of God's Word and acting upon it, we have come out from under Satan's influence. As dedicated, baptized Witnesses, do we not accept Jehovah as the Sovereign of our life? Do we not agree with loyal King David, who acknowledged Jehovah as "head over all"? (1 Chron. 29:11) Certainly we do! We humbly confess: "Jehovah is God. It is he that has made us, and not we ourselves. We are his people and the sheep of his pasturage." (Ps. 100:3) We recognize Jehovah's greatness and his worthiness of total submission, since he created all things. (Rev. 4:11) As ministers of the true God, we follow Jesus Christ, who set the perfect example of subjection to God.

What did Jesus learn by the things he suffered while on earth? Hebrews 5:8 answers: "Although he was a Son, he learned obedience from the things he suffered." Yes, Jesus remained in loyal subjection to his heavenly Father even under adversity. Furthermore, Jesus did not do a single thing of his own initiative; he did not speak of his own originality, nor did he seek his own glory. (John 5:19, 30; 6:38; 7:16-18) During his ministry, he found delight in doing his Father's will, even though this course brought opposition and persecution. (John 15:20) Nonetheless, Jesus showed subjection to God by 'humbling himself' even to the point of "death on a torture stake." The outcome of his complete subjection to Jehovah was rewarding in many ways, resulting in everlasting salvation for mankind, exaltation for himself, and glory to his Father.—Phil. 2:5-11; Heb. 5:9.

AREAS OF THEOCRATIC SUBJECTION

Because Jehovah is the Universal Sovereign, we owe him our total subjection. (Isa. 33:22) Briefly reflecting on our everyday life as Jehovah's dedicated worshipers should make this evident. By putting God first in our life, doing his will, we are directed in the right way. (Ps. 16:8) We escape many of the anxieties and frustrations that overtake those who refuse to submit to Jehovah's sovereignty. Our Adversary, the Devil, constantly seeks to ensnare and devour us. We will experience deliverance from that wicked one provided we take a stand against him and humble ourselves before Jehovah in willing subjection. —Matt. 6:10, 13; 1 Pet. 5:6-9.

WAT.0013.001.0098

The benefits of subjecting ourselves to God extend to our relationships with others, which are measurably improved. We are spared problems that beset those who reflect this world's spirit of independence. Thanks to Jehovah God, we enjoy a happy marriage and family life as well as better relationships with fellow workers and employers. We conduct ourselves lawfully and with a good conscience toward governmental authorities. We also have the best associates, our Christian brothers.

Within the Christian congregation, we recognize Christ's headship and the authority he has given to the faithful and discreet slave class. This affects our attitude and conduct toward one another. Godly subjection in the congregation will move us to be obedient to God's Word in all aspects of our worship. This includes our ministry, meeting attendance and participation, relationship with the elders, and cooperation with organizational arrangements.—Matt. 24:45-47; 28:19, 20; Heb. 10:24, 25; 13:7, 17.

Our subjection to God allows us to enjoy the peaceful security of theocratic order. Such theocratic order is not oppressive. (1 John 5:3) Jehovah's divine qualities are reflected in the harmonious society of his godly subjects. (1 Cor. 14:33, 40) Our own observations and our experience with Jehovah's organization have led us to express sentiments similar to those of God's servant David. After noting the contrast between Jehovah's servants and the wicked, who boast in their own power and riches, David joyfully exclaimed: "Happy is the people whose God is Jehovah!" —Ps. 144:15.

Within marriage and the family structure, "the head of a woman is the man." At the same time, men are to be in subjection to Christ, while the Head of Christ is God. (1 Cor. 11:3) Wives are to be in subjection to their husbands, and children, to their parents. (Eph. 5:22-24; 6:1) Peace results when each family member follows the headship principle.

This requires that husbands exercise headship in a loving way, imitating Christ. (Eph. 5:25-29) When they do not abuse or abdicate their headship, it is a delight for the wife and the children to be in subjection. The wife's role is that of a helper, or complement. (Gen. 2:18) By patiently supporting and respecting her husband, she gains his favor and brings praise to God. (1 Pet. 3:1-4) When husbands and wives follow the Bible's counsel on headship, they set an example for their children in showing subjection to God.

Our being in subjection to God also affects how we view "the superior authorities," which have been "placed in their relative positions by God." (Rom. 13:1-7) As law-abiding citizens, Christians pay taxes; they pay back "Caesar's things to Caesar, but God's things to God." (Matt. 22:21) Being submissive and obedient to the duly constituted authorities in everything that is not in conflict with Jehovah's righteous law, we are able to direct our efforts, applying our energies to the important work of preaching the good news of God's established Kingdom.—Mark 13:10; Acts 5:29.

By adhering to Bible principles, Christians seek to improve their employer-employee relationships. Even though at times this may be difficult, servants of God strive to be at peace with all men. They serve honestly and reliably at their secular jobs. (Rom. 12: 18; 1 Pet. 2:18) Thus, they do not become involved in controversies or violate their Bible-trained conscience.

Theocratic subjection affects all aspects of life. With eyes of faith, we see the day when all mankind will be subject to Jehovah God. (1 Cor. 15:27, 28) How blessed and favored those who joyfully acknowledge Jehovah's sovereignty will be, as they remain in subjection to him for all eternity!

CHAPTER 16

A UNITED BROTHERHOOD

AFTER dealing with one man, Abraham, and his descendants the Israelites exclusively for some 2,000 years, Jehovah God "turned his attention to the nations to take out of them a people for his name." (Acts 15:14) People for Jehovah's name would be his witnesses, gathered in unity of thought and action regardless of their physical location on earth. This uniting of a people for God's name would result from the fulfillment of the commission that Jesus gave to his followers. He said: "Go therefore and make feel free to ask for assistance from the one who is studying the Bible with you or from the elders.

In your discussions with the elders, do not feel that you have to give lengthy or complicated answers to the questions. A simple, direct answer in your own words will usually suffice. For many of the questions, it is also beneficial to refer to one or two Bible texts that show the Scriptural basis for your answer.

If you have not yet gained sufficient knowledge of basic Bible teachings, the elders will arrange for you to receive assistance so that you will be able to express in your own words a proper understanding of the Scriptures and qualify to be baptized at a later time.

[Note to congregation elders: Instructions for handling discussions with baptism candidates appear on pages 217-18.]

QUESTIONS FOR THOSE DESIRING TO BE BAPTIZED

ELEMENTARY BIBLE TEACHINGS

Unless you were raised by Christian parents, your study of the Bible with Jehovah's Witnesses has acquainted you with the pattern of truth, and very likely, you find that it is quite different from what you formerly believed. (2 Tim. 1:13) What you have learned has brought you great spiritual refreshment and has no doubt given you the hope of future life and blessings on a paradise earth under God's Kingdom. Your faith in God's Word has been strengthened, and through association with the Christian congregation, you have already experienced many blessings. You have come to appreciate how Jehovah is dealing with his people today.—Zech. 8:23.

Whether you were raised in a Christian household or not, as you prepare for water baptism in symbol of your personal dedication to Jehovah God, you will benefit from a review of elementary Bible teachings, conducted by the congregation elders. (Heb. 6:1-3) May Jehovah continue to bless all your endeavors to take in knowledge of him, and may he grant you the promised reward.—John 17:3.

12. What Christian quality should outstandingly characterize our relationship with our spiritual brothers and sisters?

I am giving you a new commandment, that you love one another; just as I have loved you, that you also love one another. By this all will know that you are my disciples, if you have love among yourselves.—John 13:34, 35.

Clothe yourselves with love, for it is a perfect bond of union.—Col. 3:14.

Additional reference: 1 Cor. 13:4-7.

13. How should Christians view the shortcomings of fellow believers?

Continue putting up with one another and forgiving one another freely if anyone has a cause for complaint against another. Even as Jehovah freely forgave you, so do you also.—Col. 3:13.

Above all things, have intense love for one another, because love covers a multitude of sins.—1 Pet. 4:8.

Additional references: Prov. 17:9; 19:11; Matt. 7:1-5.

14. If your brother's sin against you is of a serious nature, what should you do?

If your brother commits a sin, go lay bare his fault between you and him alone. If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. But if he does not listen, take along with you one or two more, in order that at the mouth of two or three witnesses every matter may be established. If he does not listen to them, speak to the congregation. If he does not listen even to the congregation, let him be to you just as a man of the nations and as a tax collector.—Matt. 18:15-17.

15. What is the fruitage of the spirit, and how will cultivating it help us to maintain a fine relationship with others?

The fruitage of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faith, mildness, self-control.—Gal. 5:22, 23.

WAT.0013.001.0103

37. What birthday celebrations are mentioned in the Bible? How does this affect your view of birthday celebrations?

When Herod's birthday was being celebrated the daughter of Herodias danced at it and pleased Herod so much that he promised with an oath to give her whatever she asked. Then she, under her mother's coaching, said: "Give me here upon a platter the head of John the Baptist." Grieved though he was, the king out of regard for his oaths and for those reclining with him commanded it to be given; and he sent and had John beheaded in the prison. And his head was brought on a platter and given to the maiden, and she brought it to her mother.—Matt. 14:6-11.

Additional references: Gen. 40:20-22; Eccl. 7:1, 8.

PART III
JEHOVAH'S ARRANGEMENT OF THINGS

Through your study of the Bible, you have learned that Jehovah has a purpose to bring all things back into subjection to himself, just as they were in the beginning. (1 Cor. 15:24-28; Eph. 1:8-10) Having reached this point in your study, you are no doubt eager to find your place in Jehovah's arrangement and to be submissive to his rule. The following questions and Scripture references will help you examine your own understanding of submission to Jehovah's arrangements regarding congregation organization, Christian family life, and the political elements of this system of things. You will be able to examine your appreciation for Jehovah's arrangement for educating and building up his people spiritually. That includes your attending and participating in congregation meetings to the extent of your circumstances and ability.

Additionally, this section will focus on the importance of having a regular share in the Kingdom-preaching work, helping others to come to know Jehovah and what he is doing for mankind. (Matt. 24:14; 28:19, 20) Finally, it will impress upon your mind the seriousness of dedicating yourself to Jehovah God before submitting to water baptism. You can be certain that Jehovah appreciates your sincere response to his undeserved kindness expressed in your behalf.

WAT.0013.001.0104

1. In God's arrangement of things, who is the head of the married woman?

You wives, be in subjection to your husbands, as it is becoming in the Lord.—Col. 3:18.

Let wives be in subjection to their husbands as to the Lord, because a husband is head of his wife as the Christ also is head of the congregation, he being a savior of this body.—Eph. 5:22, 23.

2. How should a husband exercise headship over his wife?

Husbands ought to be loving their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself, for no man ever hated his own flesh; but he feeds and cherishes it, as the Christ also does the congregation.—Eph. 5:28, 29.

You husbands, keep on loving your wives and do not be bitterly angry with them.—Col. 3:19.

3. Is the wife whose husband is not a believer freed from his headship?

You wives, be in subjection to your own husbands, in order that, if any are not obedient to the word, they may be won without a word through the conduct of their wives, because of having been eyewitnesses of your chaste conduct together with deep respect.—1 Pet. 3:1, 2.

4. Who is primarily responsible before God for the training and disciplining of children?

Fathers, do not be irritating your children, but go on bringing them up in the discipline and mental-regulating of Jehovah.—Eph. 6:4.

5. What responsibility do children have in the family arrangement?

Children, be obedient to your parents in union with the Lord, for this is righteous: "Honor your father and your mother"; which is the first command with a promise: "That it may go well with you and you may endure a long time on the earth."—Eph. 6:1-3.

WAT.0013.001.0105

You children, be obedient to your parents in everything, for this is well-pleasing in the Lord.—Col. 3:20.

6. What is the proper attitude for Christians to maintain toward worldly rulers?

Let every soul be in subjection to the superior authorities, for there is no authority except by God; the existing authorities stand placed in their relative positions by God. —Rom. 13:1.

Continue reminding them to be in subjection and be obedient to governments and authorities as rulers.—Titus 3:1.

7. Must a Christian pay all taxes and assessments demanded by law?

Render to all their dues, to him who calls for the tax, the tax; to him who calls for the tribute, the tribute; to him who calls for fear, such fear; to him who calls for honor, such honor.—Rom. 13:7.

Additional reference: Luke 20:21-25.

8. Are there any circumstances under which a Christian would refuse to obey worldly rulers?

With that they called them and charged them, nowhere to make any utterance or to teach upon the basis of the name of Jesus. But in reply Peter and John said to them: "Whether it is righteous in the sight of God to listen to you rather than to God, judge for yourselves. But as for us, we cannot stop speaking about the things we have seen and heard."—Acts 4:18-20.

In answer Peter and the other apostles said: "We must obey God as ruler rather than men."—Acts 5:29.

9. Should Christians comply with legal requirements that do not conflict with God's laws, such as registering marriages and births, responding to census inquiries, or obtaining required licenses and permits?

In those days a decree went forth . . . for all the inhabited earth to be registered . . . Of course, Joseph also went up from Galilee . . . to get registered with Mary, who had been given him in marriage.—Luke 2:1-5.

Continue reminding them to be in subjection and be obedient to governments and authorities as rulers.—Titus 3:1.

10. What is the headship arrangement in the Christian congregation?

I want you to know that the head of every man is the Christ; in turn the head of a woman is the man; in turn the head of the Christ is God.—1 Cor. 11:3.

11. Who is the Head of the Christian congregation?

He is the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of all creation; because by means of him all other things were created in the heavens and upon the earth, the things visible and the things invisible, no matter whether they are thrones or lordships or governments or authorities. All other things have been created through him and for him. Also, he is before all other things and by means of him all other things were made to exist, and he is the head of the body, the congregation.—Col. 1:15-18.

12. How can you identify "the faithful and discreet slave" today?

Who really is the faithful and discreet slave whom his master appointed over his domestics, to give them their food at the proper time? Happy is that slave if his master on arriving finds him doing so. Truly I say to you, He will appoint him over all his belongings.—Matt. 24:45-47.

13. What is the Governing Body of the Christian congregation?

Certain men came down from Judea and began to teach the brothers: "Unless you get circumcised according to the custom of Moses, you cannot be saved." But when there had occurred no little dissension and disputing by Paul and Barnabas with them, they arranged for Paul and Barnabas and some others of them to go up to the apostles and older men in Jerusalem regarding this dispute.—Acts 15:1, 2.

WAT.0013.001.0107

As they traveled on through the cities they would deliver to those there for observance the decrees that had been decided upon by the apostles and older men who were in Jerusalem. Therefore, indeed, the congregations continued to be made firm in the faith and to increase in number from day to day.—Acts 16:4, 5.

14. By what visible means is Christ's headship represented in the congregation?

Pay attention to yourselves and to all the flock, among which the holy spirit has appointed you overseers, to shepherd the congregation of God, which he purchased with the blood of his own Son.—Acts 20:28.

To the older men among you I give this exhortation . . . Shepherd the flock of God in your care, not under compulsion, but willingly; neither for love of dishonest gain, but eagerly; neither as lording it over those who are God's inheritance, but becoming examples to the flock.—1 Pet. 5:1-3.

15. How do members of the congregation demonstrate submission to the headship of Christ in the congregation?

Remember those who are taking the lead among you, who have spoken the word of God to you, and as you contemplate how their conduct turns out imitate their faith. —Heb. 13:7.

Be obedient to those who are taking the lead among you and be submissive, for they are keeping watch over your souls as those who will render an account; that they may do this with joy and not with sighing, for this would be damaging to you.—Heb. 13:17.

16. Whose ideas are recorded in the Bible? Why should you regularly study God's Word?

All Scripture is inspired of God and beneficial for teaching, for reproving, for setting things straight, for disciplining in righteousness, that the man of God may be fully competent, completely equipped for every good work. —2 Tim. 3:16, 17.

The Purpose of the Textbook

The revised edition of "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock" is presented as a practical and convenient handbook for congregation elders and traveling overseers to use in caring for responsibilities as shepherds of the flock of God.—Acts 20:28; 1 Pet. 5:2.

As appointed elders and Christian overseers, you have been given the responsibility to ensure that the flock is well fed. (Compare John 21:15-17.) Among other things, this calls for teaching the congregation as a whole through instructive meetings. It also involves appropriate teaching on a personal basis to enlighten, give counsel, exhort, and reprove. Improving your ability as teachers is given special consideration in this publication.

Another important part of an overseer's work involves taking the lead in field service. Therefore, emphasis is placed on your regular participation in the public ministry and on how you can help others to have a meaningful share.

With so many outside pressures bearing on the brothers, you are often faced with matters involving counsel and judgment. How can you be sure that you are viewing matters from Jehovah's standpoint? When judging cases that come to your attention, how can you be balanced in showing loving concern for the brothers involved while making sure that Jehovah's righteousness is upheld? This publication gives these matters careful consideration.

Material from the three original segments of "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock," published in 1977, 1979, and 1981, has been combined and updated. The outline presentation of the information has been retained. This facilitates locating particular points that you may need to find quickly. Thus the book will continue to serve as a handbook to be used in connection with elders' meetings, judicial matters, and the periodically conducted Kingdom Ministry School.

The wide margins and other blank spaces and pages have been provided so that you can make appropriate notes for your personal use and can add references as related information is published or otherwise brought to your attention. If it should become necessary to make substantial revisions at a future date, the Society will issue revised information on individual pages that can be conveniently inserted, thus keeping the information in the book up-to-date.

We are confident that you greatly appreciate your privilege of serving Jehovah's people as undershepherds of God's flock. Your life is filled with many responsibilities; you are also subject to many pressures. On the other hand, you receive many blessings and much joy. May you find the information in this handbook to be helpful in caring for your assigned duties. And may your faithful service continue to bring refreshment and strength to the flock of God, your brothers.—Isa. 32:2.

Train all the brothers and sisters to take the initiative in approaching new ones and getting acquainted with them.

So that you may encourage and help others, be sure to arrive at the meetings early and stay for a while after the program.

You can associate with new ones at other times also, perhaps visiting with them in their home or yours.

Such personal interest lets them see that genuine love exists among Jehovah's people. (John 13:35)

It also fills the void created when they cut off former associations and worldly entertainment.

Young members of the congregation need to be strengthened to resist "the desires incidental to youth." (2 Tim. 2:22)

Parents have the primary responsibility to care for the needs of their children. (Eph. 6:4; Col. 3:21)

However, the young ones are a part of the congregation, and elders have a responsibility toward them also and should show genuine interest in them.

Why is knowing the full names of all the youth in your congregation helpful?

Many youths do not have a father or a mother in the truth, and some have no relatives in the truth.

They deserve the consideration that is to be shown to "the fatherless boy." (Job 29:12; Jas. 1:27)

EXPERIENCE: One teenager was given attention by an elder. He would pick the boy up every time he was going to help with the building of the Kingdom Hall. Each day after they finished their work on the hall, they would go to get some refreshments and take time to converse. The boy grew up and became a circuit overseer. He remembered this elder's concern as a major factor in his spiritual development.

Take note of ways that you and others can assist and encourage young ones in the congregation, and continually assure them of your interest.

Seek them out to engage them in conversation at the Kingdom Hall and elsewhere.

Encourage them to express themselves.

Eagerly listen to their viewpoints and their problems; be slow to criticize, quick to commend.

Help young ones build confidence in Jehovah, and help them to esteem highly the privilege of being Jehovah's Witnesses. (*w*85 8/15 pp. 11-21)

Develop helpful interest in their schooling.

Show a keen concern for youth who have difficulty adjusting to adulthood.

Make them feel wanted and needed in the congregation.

Help them to see how they can be helpful and encouraging to others by their presence and participation at the meetings and in the field service.

Use ingenuity in devising assignments for exemplary ones, such as using them to assist with roving microphones, tidy up the restrooms after each meeting, and straighten up the chairs.

List some responsibilities appropriate to your congregation.

Suggest attainable goals for them, such as weekly participation in field service or commenting at every meeting.

Talk with them about pioneer work, Bethel and missionary service, auxiliary pioneering, and so forth.

Work with them in the field service.

Help them to make progress in various features of this activity, such as in filling out house-to-house record slips, organizing their book bags, and learning how to make return visits and start Bible studies.

Examine what is being done to encourage and assist young ones in your congregation.

Pioneers* need encouragement and help in many ways.

Make a periodic check to see what encouragement pioneers need, and assist them in practical ways.

Are meetings for field service begun and ended on time?

How the Elders Work Together as a Body

"In the multitude of counselors there is accomplishment," states Proverbs 15:22. A congregation having a body of older men who work closely together is indeed blessed. But what is the key to their being able to work in unity? Primarily, it is their recognizing Jesus Christ as Head of the Christian congregation.

When elders meet together, Christ's headship should dominate. (1 Cor. 11:3) Their meetings should be well arranged. (1 Cor. 14:40) They should try to reach decisions on matters discussed. Definite arrangements should be made for someone to follow through on the decisions that are made. How can the presiding overseer conduct meaningful elders' meetings? What must each individual elder do to make a positive contribution to these meetings? But first, what is involved in recognizing Christ's headship, and how does this unite a body of elders?

Recognizing the Headship of Christ Unites the Body

Although Jehovah God is the Shepherd and Overseer of our souls, he has appointed Jesus Christ as Head of the Christian congregation. (Eph. 1:22, 23; 1 Pet. 2:25)

By genuinely accepting Jesus Christ as Head of the Christian congregation, elders will be motivated to do the following:

Let the Bible be the guide in making decisions. (John 7:16, 17)

Respect information and direction coming from agencies used by "the faithful and discreet slave." (Matt. 24:45-47)

Treat the congregation as God's inheritance, not lording it over them. (1 Pet. 5:1-3)

Avoid imposing personal viewpoints, opinions, or arbitrary rules on the congregation or the body of elders.

Deal in a kind and loving manner regarding each individual in the congregation. (Matt. 11:28-30; John 21: 15-17)

Listen carefully to the expressions of fellow elders. (Matt. 18:20; Rom. 12:10b)

Pray when a discussion among elders seems to falter.

(For additional information, see The Watchtower, December 1, 1986, pages 10-20.)

Jesus Christ controls all bodies of elders. At Revelation 1:20 they are likened to seven stars upon his right hand. (re pp. 28-9)

Jesus, by means of God's holy spirit, can influence any elder on the body to provide the Bible-based suggestions needed for any given situation. (Matt. 18:20; Acts 15: 13-17)

By accepting this fact, elders will be helped to work together as a body.

Each elder should listen carefully to the Scriptural suggestions of the other elders.

We should not make an independent decision for the congregation if a matter is one on which we should consult other elders.

What Enables Elders to Display the Spirit of Cooperation

Jehovah, through his Son, unifies the congregation for harmonious cooperation. (Eph. 4:16; compare Romans 8:28.)

Elders are really cooperating with Jehovah when they cooperate as a body for the good of the congregation. (Col. 2:19; 1 Cor. 12)

Cooperation is a result of displaying the fruitage of the spirit, which every elder should cultivate in his personal life, both publicly and privately. (Gal. 5:22, 23)

WAT.0013.002.0010

In the following ways, elders show that they are cooperating together and striving to maintain the unity referred to at Psalm 133:1:

Keeping communication among elders open and free, especially if there are differences in background.

Sharing pertinent information with fellow elders.

Not shielding elders or their relatives from needed counsel.

Seeking assistance and suggestions from elders who have much experience.

Not campaigning among fellow elders to undermine decisions of the body that do not meet personal preference.

Accepting fellow elders' excelling qualities, as well as their limited abilities.

Not finding fault with fellow elders as they are learning new duties.

Making sure that reports and records that other elders need to refer to are available and up-to-date.

Promptly following through to completion on assignments given by the body.

It should be possible for bodies of elders to be unanimous in most of their decisions. (Acts 15:25)

If Bible principles are involved, the elders should make their decision in harmony with these.

When there is counsel from the faithful and discreet slave on the matter, either by letter or from the Society's publications, the elders will want to take that counsel to heart. (Matt. 24:45)

Other matters may generally be decided by the majority of the elders on the basis of their sound judgment and of their concern for providing the best guidance and direction for the congregation.

Even the majority should not insist on a personal viewpoint if such does not take into consideration

Scriptural principles and the peace, unity, and spiritual welfare of all members of the congregation.

At Romans 12:10, Paul exhorts: "In showing honor to one another take the lead."

If elders honor one another, they will not insist that their personal viewpoints be adopted when matters are discussed.

Individual elders will cooperate closely with what the body of elders as a whole determines is in the best interests of the congregation.

If the majority decide that a matter should be handled in a certain way, then the minority should give willing support to such a decision.

However, if those in the minority have a Bible reference and comments in print on the matter from the faithful and discreet slave, the majority should recognize such corrective information so that a Bible-based decision can be reached.

If in the opinion of the minority a Bible-based decision is still not reached, the minority should continue to cooperate with the rest of the body and bring the matter to the attention of the circuit overseer during his regular visit.

The congregation will cooperate if they sense that all the elders base their decisions on God's Word. (2 Tim. 3: 16, 17)

Working Together as a Body of Elders

Working together as a body does not mean that all share in performing each task or making each decision.

Individual members of the human body carry out certain functions without direct participation by other body members. (1 Cor. 12:12-31)

Honoring one another, elders will allow the presiding overseer and other assigned elders the initiative to make decisions that will enable them to carry out their respective responsibilities.

Consider the following examples of decisions that individual elders may make without always consulting with other elders.

Weekly announcements made to the congregation. Items posted on the information board. Service Meeting assignments. (presiding overseer)

Organization of congregation files. General letters of introduction and transfer of records when publishers move. (secretary)

Magazine order changes. (service overseer)

Good communication and close cooperation are necessary among the elders themselves as well as in their relationship with the ministerial servants.

Be ready to offer helpful suggestions and to listen to thoughtful recommendations.

Genuinely honoring one another sets a fine example and serves as a good influence on the congregation.

It promotes peace and encourages all to work with greater enthusiasm and happiness.

Discouragement will be diminished. (Prov. 24:10)

When Elders' Meetings May Be Held

Meetings are held each year in conjunction with visits of the circuit overseer.

Three months after each visit of the circuit overseer, a meeting can be scheduled. (om p. 42)

Other meetings should be arranged at any time that circumstances necessitate.

Keep additional meetings limited to their purposed objectives.

If elders do not become bogged down with unnecessary meetings, they will have more time for their family, for field service activities, and for shepherding the congregation. (Matt. 24:14; 1 Tim. 3:4; 1 Pet. 5:2)

How the Presiding Overseer Can Prepare for Elders' Meetings

Romans 12:8 says, "He that presides, let him do it in real earnest."

The presiding overseer compiles an agenda of matters that need discussion by the whole body of elders.

He contacts the other elders individually beforehand to determine what matters they feel need to be added to the agenda and discussed.

If practical, in harmony with Proverbs 21:5, he gives a copy of the agenda to each elder far enough in advance of the meeting to allow him to give the points due thought. (1 Cor. 14:40)

In some cases the elder who recommended an item for the agenda may be asked to take the lead in presenting it for discussion.

Letting the brother know ahead of time will give him opportunity to prepare a clear presentation of the facts.

Diligent preparation will keep the length of elders' meetings to a minimum, allowing more time for other essentials.

How You Can Prepare for Elders' Meetings

When you receive the agenda prepared by the presiding overseer, you should give careful and prayerful thought to each point itemized.

Listed below are some questions that each elder may want to ponder in connection with major items on the agenda:

How did this situation come about?

What Scriptural principles should guide us in deciding what to do?

What direction has been provided by the faithful and discreet slave?

There is need to do research in the Society's publications. (Where available, use the Watch Tower Publications Indexes.)

Is there more that I can do to deal effectively with this matter?

In what way can the entire body of elders improve its handling of this matter?

Should this suggestion be put into operation? Why?

What Matters Might Be Included on the Agenda for Elders' Meetings

Spiritual matters should be of principal concern. (Phil. 1:9-11)

Appropriate ideas can be obtained by thinking on the shepherding counsel found in the letters to Timothy and Titus and in such passages as Acts 20:17-35 and 1 Peter 5:1-11.

Time may be allowed on the agenda for matters of a mechanical, nonspiritual nature also.

These should be discussed only when they involve problems that an individual elder, the building committee, or the maintenance committee cannot care for on their own initiative.

Make Meaningful Expressions During Your Elders' Meetings

The presiding overseer should set the pace of the discussion by keeping the main points to the fore; keep to the agenda.

Conclude each matter before another is opened for discussion so that the meeting does not bog down or ramble.

Make sure that either you or another elder takes notes as to decisions made and who will carry them out.

Applying the Scriptural principles embodied in the following will result in more productive elders' meetings:

Speak on the points under discussion only when you have something meaningful to add. (Prov. 10:19)

There should be no wrath or debates evident in elders' meetings. (1 Tim. 2:8)

Speak up, use "freeness of speech." Much time can be wasted if there are long pauses due to a hesitancy to speak. (1 Tim. 3:13)

See the listing at the end of this unit. In it are some items that you may wish to include on an agenda for consideration by the elders in your congregation.

(For more information, see The Watchtower, October 1, 1988, pages 15-20, and August 1, 1975, pages 471-4.)

Presiding Overseer

The presiding overseer is appointed by the Society for an indefinite period of time. He serves as chairman of the body of elders. He should be a kindly, loyal man with experience in handling congregation matters. He must be orderly and diligent, not a procrastinator in caring for responsibilities. (1 Tim. 3:2)

His duties include the following:

Serves as chairman of the body of elders at their meetings.

Receives congregation mail and passes it along to the secretary for circulation and filing.

Signs most correspondence sent to the Society.

Compiles Scriptural and practical agendas outlining points for discussion at regular elders' meetings throughout the year. May suggest points for elders' meetings during the visit of the circuit overseer.

Seeks to distinguish between items that can be handled by individual elders and those needing attention by the entire body of elders, so as to avoid unnecessarily taking the time of the entire body.

Makes sure that there is appropriate follow-through on decisions made by elders.

Modestly seeks and accepts suggestions from other elders.

Arranges for monthly Service Meeting schedule, and makes sure of appropriate rehearsals of demonstrations, interviews, and so forth.

May ask other elders to assist.

Arranges for public talks.

Might be assisted by another elder or a well-qualified ministerial servant, if needed.

Approves all announcements made to the congregation, especially those of a judicial nature.

Takes the lead in caring for details in preparation for the circuit overseer's visit.

Serves as chairman of the service committee when considering regular or auxiliary pioneer applications, unassigned territory applications, or similar matters as required by the Society.

Calls a meeting of the body of elders when judicial matters arise. (See Unit 5 (b), pages 108-10.)

Arranges for two elders to meet with each person desiring to become a new publisher. The publisher conducting the study is included in the meeting. (*w*88 11/15 p. 17)

Arranges for elders to consider questions with baptismal candidates.

Arranges for quarterly audit of congregation accounts.

Makes certain there is a written record of such and that an appropriate announcement regarding the audit is made to the congregation.

Authorizes payment of all normal operating expenses of the congregation.

Recommendation for appointment of the presiding overseer is submitted in conjunction with the regular visit of the circuit overseer.

If a temporary adjustment is made apart from the circuit overseer's visit, the Society should be notified immediately by letter signed by the service committee on behalf of the body of elders.

The Presiding Overseer Change of Address form (S-29) should accompany the letter.

Congregation Secretary

Sees to it that correspondence received by the congregation and the body of elders from the Society and others is attended to promptly and proper response is made when necessary.

The secretary's duties include the following:

Maintains the vital congregation records in an orderly way.

Circulates among the elders all letters from the Society and traveling overseers and then files them for reference.

Keeps records concerning Kingdom Hall ownership, legal corporation, loans, insurance, deeds, and other documents.

Files records on disciplinary cases, including reports made up by the judicial committees. (See Unit 5 (c), page 122.)

Keeps a diary of business items that elders or congregation must handle in the future, such as utility bills and tax and government items.

Sends orders to the branch office; sends reports promptly; sends communications prepared by other brothers.

Keeps Congregation's Publisher Record cards; compiles field service reports.

Gives report to Congregation Book Study conductors as to who is irregular in field service.

Sends Congregation's Publisher Record card to congregation to which a publisher moves or initiates correspondence if a publisher moves into his congregation. (km 2/91 p. 7)

Secretary will personally care for these duties.

If necessary, an elder or a capable ministerial servant may be assigned to assist in caring for some routine matters.

Service Overseer

As evangelizer and teacher, the service overseer is keenly interested in his fellow servants. He is one who loves the field ministry and is capable and alert to train others. He is respected in the congregation as one who takes the lead in the field and who has demonstrated his effectiveness in various aspects of the field ministry.

The service overseer's duties include the following:

Schedules regular visits to all Congregation Book Study groups, so that once each month he visits a different group. (In smaller congregations with perhaps only one or two book studies, he may arrange to visit each one twice during the year.)

Following a 45-minute book study, he will give a 15-minute service talk.

On that weekend he will work with the group in the field ministry from house to house and help publishers with their return visits and Bible studies.

Other weeks of the month are spent with the group where he is assigned along with his family. (km 6/90 p. 7)

Takes the lead in arranging meetings for field service at convenient times during weekdays; he is alert to organize witnessing on holidays.

Shows genuine interest in Bible Study activity, making sure that effective studies are being conducted and that students are being directed to the organization.

Takes keen interest in irregular and inactive publishers living in the congregation territory and works along with the body of elders in providing spiritual assistance toward recovery. (km 4/82 p. 3)

Directly oversees the work of ministerial servants assigned to handle literature, magazines, and territory.

Congregation Service Committee

Comprises the presiding overseer, the secretary, and the service overseer. (om p. 43)

The duties of the Congregation Service Committee involve the following:

Signing correspondence regarding appointment or deletion of elders, ministerial servants, and pioneers.

They process applications for auxiliary and regular pioneer work, for Bethel service, and for other special service privileges.

If one member is absent, another elder may be asked to substitute in order to expedite matters.

May be called on by the Society for other designated work as needed.

One member of the service committee is included in the meeting with each Bible student desirous of becoming an unbaptized publisher. (*w*88 11/15 p. 17)

The Watchtower Study Conductor and the Theocratic Ministry School Overseer

The Watchtower Study conductor and the Theocratic Ministry School overseer conduct their respective meetings in harmony with counsel from the organization as outlined in Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry, Our Kingdom Ministry, other special instructions, and this textbook.

It is important that these brothers prepare diligently and use effective teaching methods, since these meetings are primary provisions of the faithful slave to give vital instruction to the congregation.

The Watchtower Study conductor and the Theocratic Ministry School overseer should set an outstanding example as zealous ministers of the good news, working regularly with the publishers in the field service.

In the absence of either of these brothers, a qualified elder may be asked to conduct the meeting.

Circuit Overseer's Visit

The schedule of the circuit overseer has been arranged to be beneficial to the congregation. There may be a need to adjust this schedule when several congregations use the same Kingdom Hall or when other local circumstances would make an adjustment advisable.

Tuesday evening at the Kingdom Hall.

The Theocratic Ministry School will be 30 minutes in length, followed by a Service Meeting of 30 minutes.

The circuit overseer will then present a 30-minute closing service talk.

Thursday (or Friday) evening at the Kingdom Hall.

One combined Congregation Book Study.

A designated elder will conduct the study and endeavor to cover the assigned portion for that week in 45 minutes.

This will be followed by "Continue in the Things That You Learned," a 30-minute feature with audience participation, conducted by the circuit overseer.

The circuit overseer will then give a concluding 30-minute service talk. (km 5/90 p. 2)

Sunday at the Kingdom Hall.

The circuit overseer will give the public talk, usually 45 minutes in length.

This will be followed by a 30-minute Watchtower Study, without the reading of paragraphs.

Finally, the circuit overseer will present his concluding remarks for 30 minutes.

Elders should exhibit an enthusiastic spirit before and during the circuit overseer's visit.

Elders should allow the circuit overseer's visit to infuse them with renewed vigor to carry out their responsibilities and should help stimulate the congregation to greater activity and faithfulness.

Suggestions for Agendas Used for Elders' Meetings

Overall spirit of the congregation.

Is love manifest by warmth among the brothers?

Is there a joyful spirit?

Are hospitality and friendliness being exhibited?

Do the friends get together for mutual encouragement at times other than at meetings?

Is there freedom from class distinctions?

Do the teenagers and young adults feel accepted?

Do the elderly display cheerfulness because of receiving kindly attention?

Are the elders helpful in cases of need?

Do the publishers show a readiness to help one another in cases of illness or accident, or under other circumstances?

Are the brothers taking the truth seriously as a way of life?

Is there a healthy pioneer spirit?

Do the publishers show a spirit of willingness to work together in field service?

Being well acquainted with the flock.

What individuals or families need encouragement?

Have there been any deaths in the families of publishers?

Who are the new ones, and how are they progressing?

Overseers 'Ruling for Justice Itself'

Jehovah, as a loving Shepherd, has directed overseers to "rule as princes for justice itself." (Isa. 32:1, 2) Since Jehovah God is holy, he requires that all those who worship him be spiritually and morally clean. (1 Pet. 1:14-16) As appointed overseers, you have a large part in safeguarding the cleanness of the congregation.

Protective care is a basic idea embraced in the word "overseer" (e·pi'sko·pos), which carries also the thought of one who watches over, a guardian, a shepherd of the flock. You have the responsibility to cultivate in the hearts of the brothers a love for what is good and a hatred for what is bad, wicked. (Rom. 12:9) By holding to God's Word and by effectively using the art of teaching, you will be able to help your brothers not only to understand what is right and what is wrong but also to have an active part in keeping the congregation clean and chaste for public service to Jehovah.

How Elders Promote Justice

All elders are responsible to shepherd the flock, to teach, reprove, reprimand, and exhort as necessary. (Titus 1: 9-14)

When teaching, state clearly what God requires, and encourage faithful adherence to his righteous principles.

Help fellow believers to appreciate their responsibility to keep the congregation clean.

Assist them to understand that this involves:

Keeping their own personal conduct chaste.

Listening to their Bible-trained conscience.

Relentlessly resisting temptations.

Refusing to feed their minds on immoral ideas; perceiving how wrong thoughts lead to wrong actions.

Parents' instilling moral character in their children.

Younger ones' obeying their parents.

Refusing to imitate the world and its unscriptural ways.

Teaching interested persons the Bible's high moral standards.

Set a fine example yourself in attitude, conduct, and speech so that the congregation can imitate your faith. (Heb. 13:7)

Display the traits of a spiritual man; do not give way to unclean practices of a physical man. (1 Cor. 2:14, 15)

Your example will help your brothers to have "the mind of Christ." (1 Cor. 2:16)

Take the initiative to help anyone in the congregation who has taken some false step; do your best to readjust him. (Gal. 6:1)

Encourage good associations; warn the brothers to guard against bad associations both inside and outside the congregation. (1 Cor. 15:33)

Yet, do not create ill will toward a weak one in the congregation who is being helped.

Some may not yet have their perceptive powers trained to distinguish right and wrong. (Heb. 5:14)

Keep watch over their souls, since you will render an account for them too. (Heb. 13:17)

Discern the difference between a weak person and a wicked person.

Deal with your brothers as Jehovah would deal with them. (Eph. 5:1)

Always give them direction from God's Word; avoid giving your own opinions. (2 Tim. 4:2)

Be just yet kind in all your dealings. (Mic. 6:8)

Manifest humility by showing empathy, since you are also a mere human made of dust. (Ps. 103:13, 14)

Act as qualified judges.

Keep the spirit of the world out of the congregation. (1 Cor. 2:12; Eph. 2:1, 2)

Reprove and readjust wrongdoers. (Titus 1:9)

Remove unrepentant wrongdoers. (1 Cor. 5:7, 13)

Uphold Jehovah's Righteousness

Wrongdoing is increasing in frequency and in depravity; such can infiltrate and affect the Christian congregation. (2 Tim. 3:1-5, 13; Jude 3, 4, 11-13)

The Scriptures clearly show that Jehovah forbids certain conduct among his clean people; brothers need to uphold Jehovah's righteous standards regarding the following:

Manslaughter.

A degree of guilt could result from careless driving, careless maintenance of one's automobile, or other careless or thoughtless action that causes injury or death. (Compare Deuteronomy 22:8.)

Being a professional boxer may be viewed in a similar way. (*w*81 7/1 pp. 30-1)

Attempted suicide may be the result of deep despair or major depression; deal carefully and compassionately with such a person. In most cases a judicial hearing is not required. (Ps. 88:3, 17, 18; Prov. 15:13; Eccl. 7:7; *g*90 9/8 pp. 22-3; *w*90 3/15 pp. 26-30; *w*90 3/1 pp. 5-9; *w*83 8/1 pp. 3-11)

Sexual misconduct, including adultery, fornication, and other forms of "por·nei'a."

Uncleanness includes an intentional momentary touching of sexual parts or caressing of breasts. (1 Thess. 4:7, 8; 1 Tim. 5:1, 2)

Such minor uncleanness can be handled at the discretion of an elder or two; it does not require a judicial hearing.

There is a need for strong counsel, admonition, and assistance to help the individual to maintain chaste conduct in the future.

If not corrected, such conduct may escalate in gravity and by frequent repetition become loose conduct.

Loose conduct is a shocking, flagrant disregard for Jehovah's moral standards. (Gal. 5:19; *w*83 3/15 p. 31; *w*73 9/15 pp. 574-6)

It may include the willful practice of heavy petting or the fondling of breasts.

The nature, circumstances, and actual extent of what has occurred may indicate loose conduct, which would require judicial action.

Such practices can easily lead to por·nei'a.

"Por·nei'a" involves immoral use of the genitals of at least one human (whether in a natural or a perverted way), and there must have been another party to the immorality—a human of either sex or a beast; willing participation incurs guilt and requires judicial action. It is not a casual touching of the sex organs between persons but involves the manipulation of the genitals. (*w*83 6/1 pp. 23-6; *w*83 3/15 pp. 30-1)

It includes oral and anal sex or mutual masturbation between persons not married to each other, homosexuality, lesbianism, fornication, adultery, incest, and bestiality. (Lev. 20:10, 13, 15, 16; Rom. 1:24, 26, 27, 32; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10)

Also included are sexual abuse of children, including practices involving a catamite (a boy kept for purposes of sexual perversion). (Deut. 23:17, 18, Ref. Bi., ftns.)

Victims of sexual abuse need to be treated with extreme thoughtfulness and kindness. Elders should always do what they reasonably can to protect children from further abuse; follow the Society's directives on such matters. (*g*85 1/22 p. 8)

Self-abuse, or masturbation, is not "por·nei'a," nor would one who was raped be guilty of por·nei'a. (*w*83 3/15 p. 30; *w*74 3/1 p. 160; it-1 pp. 862-4; tp p. 144)

The term por·nei'a lays emphasis on both the lewd nature and the intent of the person's conduct, and it embraces all illicit sexual activity characteristic of that found in a house of prostitution.

Copulation (as in penetration) is not necessary to constitute por·nei'a, and neither is sexual climax.

In borderline cases, it is the responsibility of the judicial committee to weigh carefully the Scriptures and the particular facts in the case to determine whether por·nei'a was involved.

This responsibility should not be taken lightly, especially when Scriptural freedom to remarry is involved. (Mal. 2:16a)

Apostasy.

Apostasy is a standing away from, a falling away, defection, rebellion, abandonment; it involves teaching false doctrines, supporting or promoting false religion and its holidays or interfaith activities. (Deut. 13:13, 15; Josh. 22:22, ftn.; Acts 21:21, ftn.; 2 Cor. 6:14, 15, 17, 18; 2 John 7, 9, 10; Rev. 18:4)

Those with sincere doubts should be helped, dealt with mercifully. (Jude 22, 23; *w*82 9/1 pp. 20-1; *w*80 8/1 pp. 21-2)

Apostasy includes action taken against true worship of Jehovah or his established order among his dedicated people. (Jer. 17:13; 23:15; 28:15, 16; 2 Thess. 2:9, 10)

Persons who deliberately spread (stubbornly hold to and speak about) teachings contrary to Bible truth as taught by Jehovah's Witnesses are apostates.

If it is learned that a person has taken up association with another religious organization, the matter should be investigated, and if verified, a committee should be formed.

If it is clearly established that the person has joined another religion and intends to remain with it, the elders would make a brief announcement to the congregation that such one has disassociated himself. (*w*86 10/15 p. 31)

Working secularly for a false religious organization could put one in a position similar to that of one preaching false doctrine. (2 Cor. 6:14-16)

Celebrating a false religious holiday would be similar to performing any other act of false worship. (Jer. 7:16-19)

The Bible condemns the following:

Causing divisions and promoting sects.

This would be deliberate action disrupting the unity of the congregation or undermining the confidence of the brothers in Jehovah's arrangement.

It may involve or lead to apostasy. (Rom. 16: 17, 18; Titus 3:10, 11)

The practice of spiritism. (Deut. 18:9-13; 1 Cor. 10: 21, 22; Gal. 5:20)

Idolatry. (1 Cor. 6:9, 10; 10:14)

Idolatry includes the possession and use of images and pictures that are employed in false religion.

Drunkenness. (1 Cor. 5:11; 6:9, 10; it-1 p. 656)

Stealing, thievery, fraud. (Lev. 6:2, 4; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Eph. 4:28; it-1 p. 870)

Deliberate, malicious lying; bearing false witness. (Prov. 6: 16, 19; Col. 3:9; Rev. 22:15; it-2 pp. 244-5)

Reviling, slander. (Lev. 19:16; 1 Cor. 6:10; it-1 pp. 989-91; it-2 pp. 801-2)

Obscene speech. (Eph. 5:3-5; Col. 3:8)

Failure to abstain from blood. (Gen. 9:4; Acts 15:20, 28, 29)

Greed—gambling, extortion. (1 Cor. 5:10, 11; 6:10; 1 Tim. 3:8; it-1 pp. 1005-6)

Adamant refusal to provide materially for one's own family—leaving wife and children destitute when having the means to provide. (1 Tim. 5:8; *w*88 11/1 pp. 22-3; km 9/73 p. 8)

Nonneutral activities. (Isa. 2:4; John 6:15; 17:16)

Fits of anger, violence. (Prov. 22:24, 25; Mal. 2:16; Gal. 5:20)

Misuse of tobacco or addictive drugs. (2 Cor. 7:1; Mark 15:23; Rev. 21:8, Int.; 22:15, Int.)

Loose conduct. Term not restricted to sexual immorality. (Gal. 5:19, Ref. Bi., ftn.; 2 Pet. 2:7, Ref. Bi., ftn.; *w*83 3/15 p. 31; *w*73 9/15 pp. 574-6; it-2 p. 264)

SUMMARY: There are varying degrees of wrongdoing. At times there may have been an overlapping of sins, and this must be discerned in order to determine the proper Scriptural view of a person's conduct. In all cases, elders should carefully weigh each situation or circumstance. They need to find out what actually occurred, the extent and nature of misconduct, intent and motive, frequency or practice, and so forth. Good judgment, reasonableness, and balance are necessary as elders assess conduct in the light of the Scriptures.

Your Aim Should Be to Help the Person

We want to help individuals to stay within Jehovah's spiritual paradise.

When elders are approachable and display a genuine interest in the spiritual welfare of the congregation, they will keep themselves informed and alert to any special needs within the congregation.

In some cases an erring individual will come to the elders voluntarily, seeking aid and confessing his wrongdoing. (Prov. 28:13)

If the person is guilty of serious wrongdoing, it is wise for him to speak to one or more of the elders about the matter. (Jas. 5:16)

For gross sins committed, a judicial committee should be formed.

In other cases an accusation may be brought against a member of the congregation. (1 Cor. 1:11)

If a person has definite knowledge of wrongdoing that could contaminate the congregation, he is obligated to report the matter in order to keep the congregation clean. (Lev. 5:1; Num. 15:32-34; Prov. 29:24)

A judicial committee is not automatically formed even when a person is accused of serious sin.

Some matters may be handled by the elder who hears of the wrongdoing. (Gal. 6:1)

Although you may feel that your counsel will suffice to restore the individual, it is advisable to inform the presiding overseer of the matter; there may be other factors involved.

The matter may have come up before, or there may have been other acts of wrongdoing concerning which he has knowledge.

Some matters may be investigated and handled by two elders assigned by the body of elders.

There are certain cases that the body of elders is responsible to investigate and, when necessary, appoint a judicial committee to handle:

Gross sins—either those that have brought the congregation into public disrepute or those of a more private nature. (Rom. 2:21-24; 1 Cor. 5:1; 2 Cor. 7:11)

Any serious sin that constitutes a clear threat of contaminating the congregation. (1 Cor. 5:6, 9-11; Gal. 5:19-21; 1 Tim. 1:9, 10)

When an elder or a ministerial servant commits a gross wrong, he is morally obligated to inform the body of elders of his being reprehensible.

He would not qualify to continue in his appointed position of service.

The same would be true concerning a pioneer who becomes involved in serious sin.

Elders, ministerial servants, and pioneers should be irreprehensible and serve with a clean conscience. (1 Tim. 3:2, 8, 9; Titus 1:6)

Baptized minors.

When a baptized minor becomes involved in wrongdoing that threatens the cleanness of the congregation, the assigned committee should meet with such individual just as they would with any other member of the congregation.

It would be best to meet with the youth and his or her Christian parents; the parents have the responsibility to raise him and train him.

Try to restore the individual, if this is possible. (Gal. 6:1, ftn.)

If efforts to restore bring no response, disfellowshipping is in order.

When minors are disfellowshipped, parents are still responsible for raising, training, and teaching them, even studying with them if the minors are in their home. (*w*88 11/15 p. 20)

Married people.

If the wrongdoer is a married woman, it would be best to meet with her and her believing husband.

He is her head, and his efforts to restore her and direct her can be very helpful.

If there is no response to efforts to bring about repentance, the wrongdoer should be disfellowshipped. (*w*81 9/1 pp. 22-7)

The disfellowshipping of a mate does not end marriage responsibilities.

Unbaptized publishers.

Unbaptized publishers who engage in serious wrongdoing may be readjusted.

Two elders will talk with the wrongdoer and determine what action should be taken. (*w*88 11/15 pp. 18-20)

They may instruct him not to share in the public ministry or comment at meetings, and they may restrict him from being in the Theocratic Ministry School until he has made more spiritual progress.

If the wrongdoing is widely known but the person is repentant, the Congregation Service Committee may arrange for an announcement to the congregation as follows: "A matter involving [name of person] has been handled, and he [she] continues to serve as an unbaptized publisher with the congregation." (*w*88 11/15 p. 18)

When the unbaptized publisher who is a wrongdoer is a minor, his or her Christian parents should be consulted to determine what they are doing to correct the wrongdoer. It may also be necessary to meet with the youth together with his parents.

In the case of unbaptized publishers who unrepentantly continue in wrongdoing despite all efforts to help them, an announcement can be made saying: "[Name of person] is no longer a publisher of the good news." (*w*88 11/15 p. 19)

Your goal in dealing with unbaptized publishers, whether youths or adults, is to help them. (1 Thess. 5:14)

Baptized persons who have not associated for some time.

If you learn of serious wrongdoing on the part of such a person, the matter should be investigated if it poses a threat to the congregation's cleanness and welfare or causes a public scandal.

Consider the following:

Does he still profess to be a Witness?

Is he generally recognized as such in the congregation and/or the community?

Does the person have a measure of contact or association with the congregation so that a leavening, or corrupting, influence exists?

How did the matter become known to the elders?

Is the person willing to meet with a committee, thus admitting accountability to the Christian congregation?

Depending upon length of inactivity and other factors suggested above, elders may determine to hold the matter in abeyance.

In such a case, a record of the person's questionable conduct should be made for the congregation file so that everything noted might be clarified when the person shows interest in becoming active again.

If the sinful conduct is known only to believing family members and no congregation action is taken because of the factors outlined above, believing relatives will likely determine to curtail family association severely, viewing the relative as bad association. (1 Cor. 15:33)

If the individual still professes to be a Witness and is willing to meet with the judicial committee, the matter should be handled in the normal way. However, when factors such as possible legal action exist, it is best to consult the Society before proceeding. (*w*87 9/1 p. 14)

If individuals persist in "walking disorderly" in serious violation of well-established Bible principles, but not yet to a degree warranting judicial action, they may be "marked" by members of the congregation. (2 Thess. 3: 6, 14, 15; *w*85 4/15 pp. 30-1; om pp. 152-3)

However, this would occur only after repeated efforts to provide authoritative Scriptural counsel and admonition have been ignored and in many cases after a warning talk has been given to the congregation. (*w*85 4/15 pp. 30-1; *w*81 9/1 pp. 19-21)

If a person who has been marked continues his wrongful course in brazen defiance of Christian standards, adamantly rejecting loving Scriptural counsel, judicial action may be taken if the situation becomes scandalous loose conduct.

Propriety of Disfellowshipping

When making decisions or answering questions about judicial reproof, disfellowshipping, disassociation, or reinstatement, elders should be certain that their decisions and answers are based solidly on the Bible and are in harmony with the most recent statements by the Society. (Compare 1 Corinthians 4:6.)

Before initiating a judicial hearing, elders assigned to serve on the judicial committee should review guidelines set out in Units 5 (a), 5 (b), and 5 (c) as well as examine pertinent scriptures and references in the Society's publications.

They should also be sure to proceed in harmony with current information published in The Watchtower and in letters from the Society.

Purposes served by disfellowshipping:

Upholds Jehovah's name and standard of righteousness. (Acts 15:14; 1 Pet. 1:14-16; compare Isaiah 52:5.)

Protects the purity of the congregation. (1 Cor. 5:1-13; 2 Cor. 7:11)

May correct the unrepentant wrongdoer, bringing him to his senses. (2 Cor. 2:6-8)

Implications of Disassociation

Whereas disfellowshipping is an action taken by a judicial committee against unrepentant wrongdoers, disassociation is an action taken by an individual who has decided that he no longer desires to be one of Jehovah's Witnesses. (1 John 2:19)

God's Word speaks of those who renounce the way of the truth; they may do this either by written notice or by action. (*w*81 9/15 p. 23)

If an individual takes a course contrary to the neutral position of the Christian congregation, the congregation is compelled to view him as one who has chosen to separate from us. (Isa. 2:4; John 15:17-19)

A brief announcement should be made to notify the congregation that this individual, by his chosen course, no longer desires to be one of Jehovah's Witnesses. (The Society should be notified using the S-77 and S-79 forms.)

If a baptized person insists that he does not want to be part of the congregation and requests that his name be removed from all our records, we should comply with his request.

Since he takes such an adamant position, encourage him to put his request in writing.

If he refuses to do this but states resolutely before witnesses his decision to disassociate himself and not be known as one of Jehovah's Witnesses, the witnesses to his statement would be asked to put this in writing and sign it.

In all cases of disassociation, a committee would consider the evidence regarding the matter.

If the person has definitely terminated his status as a member of the congregation, the elders will make a brief announcement of his disassociation. (*w*86 10/15 p. 31)

The Society should be notified using the S-77 and S-79 forms.

He would be viewed as one who has disassociated himself.

It will not be necessary for a committee to continue the investigation into alleged wrongdoing if the accused person makes known his decision to disassociate himself. (*w*84 7/1 p. 31)

However, the committee would prepare a summary of the alleged offense(s) and the evidence of such.

This would be kept along with information regarding the disassociation.

If the person later requests reinstatement, these matters would need to be considered with him at that time.

Those who disassociate themselves should be viewed and treated the same as disfellowshipped persons. (*w*85 7/15 pp. 30-1)

If one disassociates himself and later wants to return to the congregation, he must request a hearing for reinstatement, the same as one who has been disfellowshipped.

Proper View of Disfellowshipped and Disassociated Persons

If an individual is trying to influence others to take an unscriptural course or is trying to deceive others, all should avoid him; he is described at 2 John 9-11.

Disfellowshipped and disassociated ones are shunned by those who wish to have a good relationship with Jehovah.

Basic Scriptural counsel on the proper view of those who have been expelled from the congregation is set out in the apostle Paul's words at 1 Corinthians 5:11-13.

John counsels against speaking to or associating with a disfellowshipped or disassociated person so as not to be "a sharer in his wicked works." (2 John 11)

Scriptural and historical guidelines on how to view disfellowshipped and disassociated persons are found in The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, pages 20-31.

We need to be especially cautious about contact with disfellowshipped persons who have apostatized and those who continue in their immoral conduct. (Titus 3: 10, 11; 1 John 2:19)

These can contaminate the congregation like gangrene. (2 Tim. 2:16-18)

The principle set forth in Jesus' words at Matthew 10: 34-38 has a bearing on situations involving disfellowshipped or disassociated relatives.

Special and difficult problems may arise in relation to social gatherings.

Loyal worshipers of Jehovah will want to adhere to the inspired counsel at 1 Corinthians 5:11.

Normally, a close relative would not be disfellowshipped for associating with a disfellowshipped person unless there is spiritual association or an effort made to justify or excuse the wrongful course.

How funeral arrangements for a disfellowshipped person may be handled:

If the disfellowshipped person had been giving evidence of repentance, some brother's conscience might allow him to give a Bible talk at the funeral home or grave site. However, the Kingdom Hall should not be used. (*w*81 9/15 p. 31; *w*77 6/1 pp. 347-8)

If the deceased still advocated false teachings or ungodly conduct, it would not be appropriate to give a funeral talk for him. (2 John 9-11)

Keep in mind that all the related hardships and tests generated in this regard are an outgrowth of the wrong conduct of the disfellowshipped person.

Cooperation Between Congregations

When a case being considered requires the cooperation of two or more congregations, do not hesitate to provide the assistance needed.

If a person has moved from one congregation to another, do not make the matter of jurisdiction an issue.

Do you have the facts? Can you handle the case most effectively?

Then it may be appropriate for you to follow through without delay.

If the wrongdoing involves persons who attend different congregations, seek assistance from elders in the other congregation(s) and benefit from their observations.

The judicial committees can interview individuals separately and/or jointly to ascertain the facts and clarify discrepancies. (Prov. 18:13, 17)

If a joint meeting is held, thereafter the judicial committee of each congregation will withdraw and handle the case(s) of the person(s) from its own congregation.

Good communication and cooperation will minimize inconsistencies in the judgments rendered.

Do not let a matter remain unhandled.

Confidentiality

Do not discuss private or judicial matters with members of your family, including your wife, or with others who are not involved. (*w*71 4/1 pp. 222-4)

Think before you speak.

Be extremely careful that you do not inadvertently disclose private information when speaking on the telephone while others are listening in or when people are nearby where they could possibly hear the conversation.

At times, complicated judicial cases may necessitate consultation with an experienced mature elder in another congregation or with the circuit overseer.

Generally, the pertinent details should be discussed, but names should not be used.

However, when the circuit overseer is the elder consulted or when circumstances require that you contact the Society, use of names may be necessary. (*w*87 9/1 pp. 12-15; km 9/77 p. 6)

Be careful to maintain confidentiality. (Prov. 11:13; 15:22)

Be "Imitators of God"

Jehovah is a God of justice; he is merciful, kind, loving, and patient. (Ex. 34:6, 7; Ps. 37:28)

As you deal with your brothers, imitate Jehovah in displaying these qualities, and you will bring honor to him and be a blessing to your brothers. (Eph. 5:1)

UNIT 5 (b)

Sharing on a Judicial Committee

"When having a hearing between your brothers, you must judge with righteousness." (Deut. 1:16) It is a serious responsibility to judge matters that affect people's lives and relationships with others. Elders must have a reasonably complete picture when judging a matter so that their decisions will not be based on partial knowledge or on personal feelings. They also need heavenly wisdom in order to make proper application of God's Word and to determine how far their showing mercy should extend. (Prov. 28:13; Jas. 2:13) They must treat every person with impartiality at all times and desire that the spiritually ill become well again, since a failure in this regard is unjust and violates the law of love.—1 Tim. 5:21; Jas. 2:1-9; 5:14, 15; w77 3/1 pp. 146-52.

Elders Are Teachers and Judges

As "Judge of all the earth," Jehovah provides fatherly correction and discipline whenever needed. (Gen. 18: 25; Heb. 12:5, 6)

He has raised up elders to serve as counselors and judges. (Isa. 1:26)

By judging in righteousness, you may turn others back from a sinful course. (Prov. 14:12; Jer. 10:23, 24)

God's Word is the basis for needed correction. (2 Tim. 3:14-17)

The responsibility of elders involves more than handling judicial matters.

You must also teach, making clear what God requires.

Encourage the rendering of whole-souled service to God and faithful obedience to his righteous principles.

Applying Jesus' Counsel on Handling Certain Wrongs

Some accusations involve minor misunderstandings that should be handled on a personal basis. (Matt. 5:23, 24; 6:12, 14; Eph. 4:25-27)

At Matthew 18:15-17 Jesus gave counsel on handling serious wrongs that might be settled on a personal basis. (*w*81 9/15 pp. 17-20; om pp. 142-5)

Jesus' counsel concerns serious sins committed against one personally, such as fraud or slander—sins serious enough to lead to a person's being expelled from the congregation.

The person who believes he has been wronged takes the first step toward resolving the matter; elders may encourage him to do this. (Matt. 18:15)

The second step involves taking one or two persons with him to speak with the individual. (Matt. 18:16)

These should preferably be witnesses of the alleged wrongdoing or respected brothers, usually elders, who can examine the evidence and offer counsel for resolving the matter.

They also become witnesses to the evidence presented in the discussion.

The person who believes he has been wronged takes the third step, bringing the matter to the congregation, as a last resort. (Matt. 18:17)

If the congregation elders are unable to bring a wrongdoer to his senses, he is to be treated "as a man of the nations and as a tax collector."

The unrepentant wrongdoer would be expelled (disfellowshipped) from the congregation.

The Judicial Committee

Other cases of serious wrongdoing require special attention by the elders in order to determine what is needed to help the repentant wrongdoer and to preserve the spiritual health of all in the congregation.

These include such sins as adultery, fornication, apostasy, and drunkenness. (See Unit 5 (a), pages 92-6.)

Before forming a committee, elders determine if the accusation has substance.

It must Scripturally be an offense serious enough to result in disfellowshipping.

There must be either two witnesses or a confession of wrongdoing.

If there is not enough evidence to form a committee but serious questions have been raised, two elders may be assigned to investigate the matter.

If a judicial committee is needed, elders who are present at the Kingdom Hall should determine which elders will serve on the committee and which one will be chairman.

The elders will take into consideration which elders are best qualified to handle the particular type of case that has arisen. (km 9/77 pp. 5-6)

It is usually best for newer elders to serve first with more experienced ones.

In a complex case, a judicial committee need not be limited to three members; it may warrant having four or even five experienced elders serve.

More than one judicial committee may be operating at the same time in a congregation, depending on cases that arise.

Elders called upon to care for this responsibility must exercise heavenly wisdom, have good judgment, and be impartial. (Deut. 1:13, 16-18)

A sound knowledge of Jehovah's righteous laws and principles is necessary. (Ps. 19:7-11)

They must weigh matters carefully, realizing that certain factors make situations differ from one another.

Instead of looking for rigid rules for guidance, elders should think in terms of principles; judge each case on its own merits.

Before handling a judicial case, elders should carefully review Units 5 (a), 5 (b), and 5 (c).

They may also need to do research in the Society's publications and recent correspondence from the Society to find information that may apply or be helpful.

Elders can be confident that with accurate knowledge, with experience and discernment, and with the help of God's spirit, they can judge in righteousness, wisdom, and mercy.

Handling Judicial Cases

Do not send an individual any kind of correspondence that directly accuses him of specific wrongdoing.

It is best for two elders to speak with the individual and invite him to meet with the judicial committee.

Suitable arrangements should be made as to the time and place of the hearing.

State what the person's course of action is supposed to have been.

If it is necessary to send a written invitation, you should simply state what the individual's course is alleged to have been, the time and place of the hearing, and how the person can contact the chairman if the arrangements are inconvenient for him.

If the accused wishes to bring witnesses who can speak in his defense regarding the matter, he may do so.

However, observers are not permitted.

No tape-recording devices are allowed.

If the accused repeatedly fails to come to the hearing, the committee will proceed with the hearing but will not make a decision until evidence and any testimony by witnesses are considered.

The committee should not take action against a person unless the evidence clearly proves this necessary.

Failure to appear before the committee is not in itself proof of guilt.

What kind of evidence is acceptable?

There must be two or three eyewitnesses, not just persons repeating what they have heard; no action can be taken if there is only one witness. (Deut. 19:15; John 8:17)

Confession (admission of wrongdoing), either written or oral, may be accepted as conclusive proof without other corroborating evidence. (Josh. 7:19)

Strong circumstantial evidence, such as pregnancy or evidence (testified to by at least two witnesses) that the accused stayed all night in the same house with a person of the opposite sex (or in the same house with a known homosexual) under improper circumstances, is acceptable.

The testimony of youths may be considered; it is up to the elders to determine if the testimony has the ring of truth.

The testimony of unbelievers may also be considered, but it must be carefully weighed.

If there are two or three witnesses to the same kind of wrongdoing but each one is witness to a separate incident, their testimony can be considered.

Such evidence may be used to establish guilt, but it is preferable to have two witnesses to the same occurrence of wrongdoing.

Judging With Righteousness, Wisdom, and Mercy

Elders must exercise wisdom in their questioning and godly qualities in their judging.

In giving counsel or rendering decisions, avoid expressing opinions; be sure to judge in righteousness. (Deut. 1: 16, 17)

You must ask pertinent, discreet questions to isolate main issues and determine how or why a problem developed.

Probing questions should not go into needless details, especially in regard to sexual misconduct, unless this is absolutely necessary, such as in determining whether por·nei'a had been committed.

Elders need to treat the accused kindly and respectfully, never harshly. (*w*89 9/15 p. 19)

Seek divine wisdom to help you relate Bible laws to the issues raised or the charges being considered. (Jas. 1:5; 3: 17, 18)

You must exercise mercy in matters of judgment, not only by showing compassion in the judgment rendered but also by expressing kind consideration and pity in your efforts both to bring wrongdoers to repentance and to heal and restore those who are repentant. (Rom. 2:4; Jas. 5:14-16; Jude 22, 23)

In cases where it is established that a serious sin was actually committed, the judicial committee should consider such factors as these:

Is there evidence of the person's craving wrongful things or courting trouble? Or did the person momentarily succumb to weakness? (Jas. 4:1)

Was he aware of the gravity of his sin? (Gal. 6:1)

Had he been admonished that his course was leading toward danger? (1 Thess. 5:14)

What were the circumstances leading up to the wrongdoing?

Are there extenuating factors, such as emotional or mental disorders or having been a victim of some type of abuse in the past, that should be considered?

Was it a single offense, or was it committed more than once?

Was his confession voluntary, or did he have to be accused by others before confessing?

Was his reluctance to speak more a result of deep shame than of lack of repentance?

Above all, does he show true repentance and manifest a heartfelt desire to avoid repetition of the wrong?

Even though the wrongdoer is guilty of a serious offense, elders on the judicial committee realize that their aim is to recover the one who has fallen into a wrong course, whenever this is possible. (Jude 23)

If he listens to them, showing true repentance, it may be that he can be retained as a brother and thus be spared being disfellowshipped. (Prov. 19:20; compare Matthew 18:15-17.)

Neither the gravity of the wrong nor bad publicity finally determines whether the person should be disfellowshipped; rather, the determining factor is the individual's sincere repentance or the lack of it.

Some manifest repentance right after their sin by taking steps immediately to confess; others manifest repentance later, even during the meeting with the judicial committee. (*w*83 1/1 pp. 30-1)

It is in the person's favor if he voluntarily confesses, but the determining factor is: Is he repentant?

There is good reason for you to weigh carefully claims of repentance when the individual has shown himself to be guilty of hypocrisy, lying, or making deliberate efforts to deceive.

Also be cautious when it is apparent that the wrong act was preceded by deliberate scheming, perhaps in a cold, calculating way.

This is quite different from when an individual, under the unexpected pressure of certain tempting circumstances, gives in because of human weakness.

Judgment Related to Repentance

Elders must be able to discern genuine repentance on the part of the wrongdoer. (*w*81 9/1 pp. 24-6; it-2 pp. 770-4)

Genuine repentance is vital for wrongdoers because it is the first step leading back to God. (Rom. 2:4)

It is particularly important to be sure genuine repentance exists in cases of repeated sin, a practice of sin.

If gross sin extended over a long period of time, particular care should be exercised in determining the genuineness of the repentance. (*w*81 9/1 p. 26)

Is the person cooperative? When questioned, are his answers forthright?

Was fear and weakness the reason he did not come forward and confess, or is he wicked, trying to fool the congregation?

Has he been counseled before for this sin?

Repentance is generally manifested by works that befit repentance either before or during the committee hearing. (Compare Acts 26:20.)

How true repentance can be recognized:

Has the individual contritely prayed to Jehovah and sought His forgiveness and mercy?

Caution: Some wrongdoers, though repentant, find it difficult to pray. (Jas. 5:14)

Has he admitted his wrongdoing, either voluntarily to some of the elders before the hearing or when confronted by his accusers?

Caution: Some people are so deeply ashamed that they are reluctant to speak. Or they have difficulty expressing themselves.

Has he made restitution, expressed willingness to do so, or apologized to offended persons, those damaged by his sinful course?

What seems to motivate the sadness, remorse, and regret he shows? Is it worldly sadness (sorrow over being caught) or heartfelt godly sadness? (2 Cor. 7: 8-11)

Does he have deep regret over a damaged relationship with Jehovah, remorse over the reproach he has brought upon Jehovah's name and people, and sincere longing to come back into God's favor?

Does his attitude include a heart-motivated rejection of the bad course as something repugnant, hated? (Rom. 12:9)

On occasion it may take more than one meeting for reproof to reach the wrongdoer's heart and move him to repentance.

However, the judicial committee is not obliged to meet repeatedly with the wrongdoer or put words in his mouth, trying to force him to repent, if it is obvious that he lacks godly sorrow.

In all cases, the elders on the judicial committee must weigh such factors as the following:

The seriousness of the wrong committed.

The time that has passed since it occurred.

The circumstances that led up to it.

The measure of willfulness shown.

Whether there was deliberate failure to heed earlier warning counsel.

If all reasonable efforts have been made to readjust the one who has committed serious sins and yet he remains unrepentant, he must be disfellowshipped. (1 Cor. 5:1, 9-13)

You must show respect for Jehovah's standard of righteousness and holiness.

You must also protect the congregation from willful sinners.

The same principles will govern the judgment on the part of a judicial committee in cases of reinstatement.

The Responsibility of Judgment Is a Weighty One

Judging matters that affect people's lives and relationships is a serious responsibility; it calls for balance, discernment, and understanding. Rely on Jehovah's guiding spirit.

Elders on a judicial committee must weigh carefully both the interests of the individual and those of the congregation as a whole. (Jude 3, 4, 22, 23)

You must feel keenly your obligation before God to prevent wrongdoing from infiltrating the congregation.

At the same time, your manner of dealing with your brothers must always reflect Jehovah's wise and merciful ways.

UNIT 5 (c)

Handling Cases of Wrongdoing With Wisdom and Mercy

When man rebelled in Eden, Jehovah took prompt action. (Gen. 3:8-19, 23, 24) Today, elders must handle cases of wrongdoing and thus safeguard the spiritual environment of the congregation. Hence, they should be well-informed with regard to the application of Bible laws and principles.

When you as elders are assigned to care for a judicial problem, it is beneficial to take the necessary time to do research in the Bible, the Society's publications, and any special letters from the Society that may contain information applicable to the particular case. Prayerful consideration of such information would be appropriate before the committee initiates the hearing itself.

Before Forming a Judicial Committee

A person who becomes a witness to a serious sin should encourage the wrongdoer to report the matter to the elders.

He may encourage the wrongdoer to seek help from the elders and confess; and if the wrongdoer does not do so, the witness will then inform the elders. (*w*85 11/15 pp. 19-21)

If there is no response from the accused, two elders should attempt to discuss the matter with him. If he denies wrongdoing, so that it is only one brother's word against another's, leave the matter in Jehovah's hands. (1 Tim. 5:19, 24, 25)

However, having the witness confront the accused alone may not be advisable in all cases.

For example:

When the witness is party to wrongdoing, such as in cases of fornication or adultery.

When the witness is a victim of the wrongdoer as in cases of incest or rape.

When the witness is extremely timid.

In such cases, or when other extenuating circumstances exist, two elders may discuss the matter with the accused, or an elder may accompany the witness to discuss the matter with the accused.

Of course, if it is determined that a judicial committee should be formed, the witness may need to testify at the hearing if the accused denies wrongdoing.

If there is another witness to the same type of sin on the part of the accused, this would be basis for forming a judicial committee. (See Unit 5 (b), page 111.)

Judicial Committee Hearing Procedure

After opening with prayer, the chairman states the reason for the meeting.

He may offer a Scriptural point at the outset, such as from Proverbs 28:13 or James 5:14, 15.

Elders, by expressing the desire to be helpful, can do much to put the accused at ease. (*w*89 9/15 pp. 19-20)

The chairman invites the accused to make a personal statement.

Present the witnesses one at a time unless the wrongdoer confesses.

If the accused does not admit guilt, he should be informed as to the source of the charge(s) made against him.

Accusers should be willing to assume their responsibility, as was required in Israel. (Deut. 17:6, 7; 19:16-21)

The accused may also present witnesses whose testimony would have a bearing on the case.

The witnesses should not be present for the entire hearing, since they do not need to hear details and testimony that do not affect them.

However, witnesses to the wrongdoing should be present if it becomes necessary to continue the reproof of the accused "before all onlookers." (1 Tim. 5:20)

The committee probes with pertinent questions in an effort to establish facts and ascertain the attitude of the accused.

Is there sufficient evidence to establish by two witnesses or otherwise that the person is clearly guilty of serious wrongdoing? (Unit 5 (b) p. 111) Isolate specific offenses and available evidence.

While it is not appropriate to make extraordinary efforts or to prolong the case unnecessarily, skillful use of God's Word may reach the person's heart and bring him to repentance.

Elders should be quick to listen but slow to indicate a preference or a leaning one way or the other.

Wait until you have heard all the facts before reaching conclusions and making decisions. (Prov. 18:13)

If guilt is established, use God's Word to reprove the wrongdoer, showing the wrongness of the sin and of the steps that may have led to it.

You may need to do so in front of the witnesses of the sin ("onlookers") who have testified.

After Scriptural discussion and after all evidence has been presented, dismiss the accused and any witnesses, and carefully review evidence and the attitude of the accused.

If the accusation, or charge, has been proved true, is the wrongdoer repentant? If repentance is manifest, how was it demonstrated? (Unit 5 (b) pp. 112-15)

Depending on whether guilt is established and repentance shown, determine what action, if any, needs to be taken.

In complex cases, defer making a decision if you are not sure of the Bible's direction and the Society's counsel.

However, do not unduly prolong making a decision, as this can have a detrimental effect on the accused and the congregation.

Seek Jehovah's wisdom through prayer.

If the wrongdoer is guilty of gross sin but gives evidence of godly repentance, even as recently as at the hearing, the judicial reproof given by the committee may suffice; disfellowshipping may not be necessary. (2 Tim. 4:1, 2; Titus 1:9; *w*83 1/1 pp. 30-1)

Some wrongdoers have gone so far into a practice of sin or have been so persistently deceptive that it may be difficult to accept a claim of repentance. (1 Cor. 5: 3-5, 13)

If the person is guilty of a serious sin such as those listed in Unit 5 (a), pages 92-6, and is unrepentant, having a truly bad heart, and/or is determined to pursue a God-dishonoring course, he must be disfellowshipped, expelled.

When the decision is made, inform the individual of it orally.

If disfellowshipping is necessary, proceed as outlined under the next heading.

If disfellowshipping is not necessary, yet the accused is guilty of gross sin, see "Matters Regarding Judicial Reproof," pages 123-4.

If the Decision Is to Disfellowship

Tell the guilty person the Scriptural reason(s) for the action.

Inform the wrongdoer that he may appeal in writing within seven days if he feels a serious error in judgment has occurred. (om p. 147; km 1/80 p. 4)

Outline steps necessary for future reinstatement.

Be positive, assuring him that forgiveness is possible if he truly repents; the person may be in a distressed state of mind.

If an appeal is lodged within the allotted time, no announcement is made pending the outcome of the appeal.

In the meantime the accused person will be restricted

WAT.0013.002.0054

from commenting and praying at meetings or enjoying special privileges of service. (om pp. 147-8)

If the accused lodges an appeal but then deliberately fails to appear for the appeal hearing, the disfellowshipping action should be announced after reasonable efforts to contact the individual have been made either in person or by telephone.

If an appeal is not made within seven days, announce the disfellowshipping.

Allow the seven-day appeal period to elapse even if the person states he does not wish to appeal.

The presiding overseer should check the announcement to make sure that it conforms to the guidelines outlined by the Society.

An elder, perhaps the chairman of the judicial committee, should read the announcement.

Disfellowshipping takes effect when the announcement is made to the congregation.

Using the forms provided by the Society, the branch office should be notified of the person's name, the Scriptural reason for the disfellowshipping, and the date of the action. (S-77 and S-79 forms)

A brief review of the evidence that was presented should also be given.

A similar report is made when a person disassociates himself from the organization. (S-77 and S-79 forms)

A written summary of the case should be prepared by the committee and put in a sealed envelope to be placed in the congregation file.

If a disfellowshipped individual moves to a different area, no announcement of his disfellowshipped status should be made from the platform of the new congregation.

Publishers can be advised individually if they are inadvertently having association with such a one.

Matters Regarding Judicial Reproof

Reproof involves establishing wrongdoing and convincing the wrongdoer of the error.

Thus, administering judicial reproof includes more than just making a decision or announcing it. (*w*77 11/15 pp. 691-2)

The aim is to help the person stop doing what is bad and establish himself as a practicer of what is good.

Help him to understand how there may have been related sins, which were less serious, that led to his serious deflection from Jehovah's law.

Some wrongdoers may need to be judicially reproved with severity to bring them to repentance. (Titus 1:13)

At times it is appropriate to administer judicial reproof "before all onlookers." (1 Tim. 5:20)

Be sure to adhere to Scriptural and organizational guidelines when this is done. (*w*81 9/1 pp. 24, 26)

The "onlookers" may be those present as witnesses at the committee hearing or those who know of the sin.

If there are good reasons for it, an announcement of judicial reproof may be made to the congregation. (*w*88 11/15 p. 18; *w*81 9/1 pp. 26-7)

The degree or seriousness of the sin is not the determining factor for an announcement regarding judicial reproof.

In cases where sin is widely known or will no doubt become known, an announcement may be needed to safeguard the reputation of the congregation.

The committee may have specific reasons why the congregation needs to be somewhat on guard concerning the repentant wrongdoer. Perhaps he had been counseled several times concerning steps leading to the same wrongdoing.

In some cases the elders may feel it is necessary to warn the congregation about the type of conduct practiced.

If so and if no announcement is made, a talk may be given at any time outlining clearly what the Scriptures have to say on the subject.

WAT.0013.002.0056

If an announcement regarding judicial reproof is made, a few weeks after the announcement such a talk may be given.

Nothing should be said that would connect anyone with the type of sin being discussed. Rather, cover Scriptural principles outlining the seriousness of such sinful conduct and how to avoid it.

In all cases of judicial reproof, restrictions will be imposed.

If the wrongdoer is an elder, a ministerial servant, or a pioneer, he should be removed. (*w*77 11/15 pp. 697-8)

It is important that the judicial committee monitor the spiritual progress of a person who has been judicially restricted; appropriate counsel and spiritual encouragement should be given periodically. (*w*81 9/1 p. 27; km 3/75 p. 4)

Restrictions should be removed in due course as warranted by the individual's observed spiritual recovery.

If a brother who has recently been judicially reproved moves to another congregation, it is necessary to inform the elders of that congregation about any restrictions that may be in effect.

This will enable the elders in his new congregation to continue supervising the restoration of his privileges and help him toward full spiritual recovery.

No announcement of such previous judicial reproof is made in the new congregation. (km 3/75 p. 4)

Appealing Judicial Decisions

If the accused believes that an error in judgment was committed, he should make known in writing his reason for requesting an appeal, doing so within seven days from the time he was notified of the decision of the committee.

His written statement should be addressed to the judicial committee that decided the matter.

The judicial committee chairman will promptly contact the circuit overseer, who will then designate elders to serve on the appeal committee.

If possible, elders selected by the circuit overseer for hearing the appeal should not be from the same congregation as the original committee.

If the basis for the appeal is not clear in the written statement, try to determine which of the following is claimed:

He contends that a disfellowshipping offense was not committed.

He denies committing the alleged wrong.

He admits to wrongdoing but believes he was repentant.

The appeal should be heard even if the basis for it may not appear sound. (km 1/80 p. 4)

If the person should appeal after seven days, immediately contact the Society for direction.

The hearing is conducted in a manner similar to the first judicial committee hearing.

It may be necessary to rehear all the evidence relevant to the case, including that which was presented originally and any new evidence now available.

The judicial committee that heard the original case should be present at the appeal hearing(s).

Prior to the appeal hearing, the original committee should furnish the appeal committee with the completed S-77 and S-79 forms along with whatever written records it has from the first hearing(s).

If either the original committee or the accused believes that earlier testimony or evidence is being changed, this can be so stated following the presentation of the alleged altered evidence.

Following the presentation of the evidence, the appeal committee should deliberate in private.

The appeal committee may need to question either the original committee or the accused separately.

WAT.0013.002.0058

The appeal committee is to determine whether there was an error in judgment or the decision was basically sound according to information available; it should also determine the attitude of the accused at the original committee hearing(s).

The appeal committee is to ascertain whether there was a Scriptural basis for the original action taken and whether the individual was repentant at the time of the hearing by the original judicial committee.

There may be mitigating circumstances the committee overlooked, such as a history of some type of abuse when a child, emotional or mental disorders, or other.

While these do not justify wrongdoing, understanding the underlying reason or causes of emotional or mental problems can help the committee to reach a balanced and compassionate judgment. (*w*90 2/15 pp. 21-3; *w*83 10/1 pp. 27-31)

The wrongdoer may admit guilt on a disfellowshipping charge but claim that at the time of the original judicial committee hearing, he was repentant. (*w*83 1/1 pp. 30-1)

The appeal committee will examine evidence to see if he had genuinely repented. (Unit 5 (b) pp. 112-15; *w*81 9/1 pp. 25-6)

The appeal committee may find that while the original basis for disfellowshipping was invalid, other valid grounds for disfellowshipping exist.

If this happens, the individual should be given sufficient time, even several days if needed, to present any evidence or witnesses that he feels will disprove the new allegations.

If the new allegations are nonetheless established and if the person does not demonstrate genuine repentance, the appeal committee may decide to disfellowship on these new grounds.

The appeal committee should then inform the accused of its decision to uphold the disfellowshipping and should also inform him of the steps he needs to take to gain reinstatement.

New S-77 and S-79 forms should be made out giving the proper information, and these along with the original forms and correspondence related to the case should be sent to the branch office.

When the disfellowshipping is upheld by the appeal committee, there is no further right to appeal. However, if an individual persists in believing a serious error in judgment has occurred, the appeal committee should inform him that he may submit his allegations in writing to the appeal committee within seven days for transmittal to the branch office.

The appeal committee will include this statement along with the information being sent to the branch office.

No announcement of disfellowshipping should be made until observations are received from the branch office.

If no written claim of a serious error in judgment has been provided to the appeal committee within seven days (as outlined above), the appeal committee should send in the S-77 and S-79 forms and tell the original committee to announce the disfellowshipping.

If the appeal committee disagrees with the decision to disfellowship, the decision should be discussed with the original judicial committee privately.

If both committees agree that the person should not be disfellowshipped, the individual should be so advised.

The appeal committee will send the branch office a brief explanation of the mutual conclusion not to disfellowship reached by both committees, which should clearly state that the original judicial committee agrees with the decision.

The original committee will receive a copy of the letter, which will be kept in a sealed envelope in the congregation's confidential file.

WAT.0013.002.0060

Where there is evidence of conspiracy between individuals to put away their mates and marry each other, considerable time should elapse before a hearing for reinstatement may be held. (*w*79 11/15 pp. 31-2)

If it is determined that the wrongdoer is sincerely repentant, has discontinued his former wrong conduct, and is doing works that befit repentance, he can be reinstated. (Compare Acts 26:20.)

The decision to reinstate is made by a judicial committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action. The secretary should sign and return the S-79b card to the Society immediately. (om pp. 149-50)

If the disfellowshipped person has moved, his request for reinstatement may be heard by a local judicial committee where he is now attending meetings. Thereafter, that committee will give the body of elders of the congregation that disfellowshipped the individual its recommendation.

If the two congregations are reasonably close to each other, the judicial committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action should meet with the disfellowshipped individual after receiving the recommendation of the committee of the congregation where he made his plea for reinstatement.

Reinstatement is announced in the congregation where the person was disfellowshipped as well as in the congregation where he now attends.

When an individual is reinstated, he will still need much spiritual assistance.

The elders should see that definite arrangements are made to help the person regain spiritual health and strength. (Col. 2:7; Titus 2:1, 2)

They may arrange for a Bible study to be conducted, which would be reported as field service.

Restrictions should be imposed to help the person see the need of continuing to make 'straight paths for his feet' and also out of consideration for the congregation's conscience. (Heb. 12:13)

The privilege of sharing in the field service is restored when the individual is reinstated.

Other privileges, such as commenting at meetings, handling parts on the program, and offering prayer at meetings, can be restored progressively when it is determined that the individual has progressed spiritually to the point that he is qualified and when it is judged by the elders that the extending of such privileges will not be offensive to the congregation.

It will be up to the elders of the congregation where he now is located to decide when certain privileges may be restored.

Circumstances of each case govern the length of time that should elapse before recommending a reinstated brother for additional privileges and responsibility.

Carefully consider possible effects if the individual were to be appointed. Would it be a cause for stumbling among the brothers?

The privilege of serving as ministerial servant or elder can be recommended only after he has had ample time to prove himself to be irreprehensible and is again "free from accusation" and has "freeness of speech." (1 Tim. 3:2, 9, 10, 13)

He must live down the reproach and build up a convincing record of righteousness, which may take a number of years.

If wrongdoing occurred in another congregation, the feelings of members of that congregation should be considered.

In cases of scandal, he might not be able to live down his wrongdoing sufficiently to qualify for an appointment to serve as a ministerial servant or an elder for a very long time.

An individual continuing employment directly involved with gambling or employment making him a clear accomplice or promoter of a wrong practice would be subject to disfellowshipping after being allowed time, usually 90 days, to make the needed adjustment. (km 9/76 pp. 3-6)

God's Word counsels all Christians to be law-abiding. (Rom. 13:1; Titus 3:1)

Christians are to pay to Caesar what is Caesar's and should obey the laws of the land in all matters where there is no conflict with God's law. (Matt. 22:21; Rom. 13:1; *w*90 11/1 pp. 10-15, 18-28)

By doing this, they have no need to fear being punished by the authorities as lawbreakers, and each one can maintain a good conscience. (Rom. 13:3-5; 1 Pet. 3:16)

When human laws conflict with God's law, true Christians follow the example of the apostles of Jesus Christ. (Acts 4:19, 20; 5:29-32)

In all business matters, Christians should endeavor to maintain a fine reputation.

They should not be a part of any business that is forbidden by Caesar's law or engage in business practices that are illegal.

It is wise to avoid making purchases from or employing the services of individuals or businesses known to be illegal in their operation.

A person's employment should also be honorable so that it will not become a cause for reproach or stumbling.

Following Scriptural counsel protects a Christian from consequences of lawbreaking and protects his conscience. (Rom. 13:3, 5)

If the elders learn of illegal activity or of some serious crime on the part of a member of the congregation, they may not be obliged by law to report the offender or the offense to secular authorities.

Though it is not the responsibility of the Christian congregation to enforce Caesar's laws, yet the very nature of some crimes demands that they be reported to secular authorities.

It may be necessary to encourage the wrongdoer to turn himself in to secular authorities. Before any steps are taken in this regard, contact the branch office. Of course, review the latest Society directives on such matters before proceeding.

Although not enforcers of Caesar's laws, in cases that also involve the breaking of God's law, elders must give consideration to what has taken place.

Depending on the wrongdoing committed, a judicial committee hearing may be needed.

As suggested by the apostle Paul's comments regarding Onesimus, a person who was guilty of illegal activities before coming to a knowledge of the truth is not required to settle these things with the authorities prior to baptism. (Philem. 10-18; *w*78 9/15 pp. 30-1)

A former thief would not be required to make restitution to all from whom he stole before baptism, although in some cases his conscience may move him to do so. (Luke 19:8)

The blood of Jesus Christ covers the sins of such new ones. They may get baptized. However, it is best to be judicious as to extending additional privileges. (Isa. 1:18; 1 Tim. 2:5, 6; 1 John 1:7)

If a person approaching baptism is an illegal alien, he should be urged to do what he can to rectify his status with regard to the law of the land. (*w*77 3/15 pp. 191-2)

The Christian congregation today follows a course harmonious with the Biblical pattern of the apostle's dealing with the case of Onesimus. (Philem. 8-22)

Overseers are not to police the lives of the brothers, nor are they obligated to become acquainted with all the details of civil and criminal law so as to enforce these. Just as they do not check to see if someone's home meets every detail of the building code, they do not investigate in order to determine whether a person has satisfied every detail as to his legal situation in the country before allowing him to get baptized or to continue in the congregation.

Baptism would not be denied such a person, but he would not be viewed as exemplary and would not be used in any responsible position in the congregation. The same would apply to a person who uses fraudulent or illegal identification.

A brother who has notified the authorities of his illegal status and filed papers to resolve his situation would not be restricted as to representing the congregation in prayer, sharing in teaching, or being appointed as a pioneer, a ministerial servant, or an elder if otherwise qualified.

Such privileges may be extended even though the authorities do not act promptly on his request for permission to remain in the country. He is no longer a fugitive.

Certain disputes between brothers should not be taken to secular courts but should be resolved in harmony with Jesus' counsel at Matthew 18:15-17. (Unit 5 (b) p. 108)

At 1 Corinthians 6:1-8, the apostle Paul gave strong counsel that Christians should not take other Christians before secular courts to settle personal disputes that should be settled with the help of the congregation elders. (*g*83 2/8 pp. 13-15; *w*77 3/1 p. 147; *w*73 11/15 pp. 703-4)

For some disputes, a neutral brother, or elders, may act as arbitrator.

If an individual ignores God's Word on this matter, it may affect his congregation privileges.

However, there are legal matters over which the congregation does not have authority and which may therefore be taken to a secular court for judgment without violating the principle or the spirit of 1 Corinthians 6:1-8. These include:

Getting a divorce decree, child custody and support, alimony.

Obtaining insurance compensation.

If a person suffers loss or is injured in or by an automobile owned by a spiritual brother, it might be necessary legally to sue the brother in order to obtain compensation from the brother's insurer.

Being listed among creditors in bankruptcy procedures.

Probating wills.

Certain countersuits. For example:

If a worldly creditor sues a brother, it might be necessary for the brother, for his own protection, to file a countersuit even though spiritual brothers are included in the action.

If a brother takes legal action against another baptized Witness, it would not be a violation of 1 Corinthians 6:1-8 for the one being sued to defend himself or to countersue. (This is true whether the matter was first taken before the elders or not.)

Jehovah's Witnesses maintain neutrality with regard to the political and military affairs of the nations. (John 17:16; rs pp. 269-76)

They do not interfere with what others do as to voting in political elections, running for or campaigning for political offices, joining nonneutral organizations, shouting political slogans, and so forth. (*w*86 9/1 pp. 19-20; *w*68 6/1 pp. 351-2)

Since true dedicated Christians are "no part of the world," if a member of the congregation unrepentantly pursues a course in violation of his Christian neutrality, he thereby disassociates himself from the neutral Christian congregation. (John 15:19; 17:14-16; *w*82 1/15 p. 31)

Elders should talk to one known to be contemplating taking such a course, since he may be doing so in ignorance. (Ps. 119:67; Gal. 6:1; 1 Tim. 1:13)

If he disregards the help proffered and pursues a course in violation of Christian neutrality, a committee should send the facts substantiating the disassociation to the branch office on the S-77 and S-79 forms.

Illustration: A plumb line must be carefully used if a building is to be erected properly. (Amos 7:7, 8; compare Zechariah 4:10.)

If any of Jehovah's people do not meet the test of uprightness in a spiritual way, Jehovah will mete out discipline with justice.

Decisions of elders must reflect justice in imitation of Jehovah's ways. (Isa. 32:1)

Jehovah tempers justice with mercy when this is warranted. (Ezek. 33:14-16)

Mercy is not limited to the withholding of measured punishment when justly due; it also expresses kind consideration or pity that brings relief to those who are disadvantaged and in need of help. (it-2 p. 376)

Mercy lightens judgment, or punishment, and brings relief when circumstances allow for it. (Ps. 103:8-10; Jas. 2:13)

Mercy also involves the way in which needed correction and discipline are given.

Mercy takes into consideration such matters as motive, provocation, willingness to confess, temptation, mental and emotional condition, degree of spiritual progress made, past conduct, and present attitude of the offender.

Elders must guard against automatic or letter-of-the-law application of punishment for breaking God's laws.

Administering Christian law in justice and with mercy requires:

Decisions that are fair and appropriate to the need. (Isa. 28:24-28; *w*76 12/1 p. 719; *w*75 9/1 pp. 517-18)

Applying punishment to fit the violation.

Allowance for mercy when there are extenuating circumstances.

Enforcing with impartiality the laws that carry sanctions. (Deut. 1:16, 17)

Getting all the facts before making a decision. (Prov. 18: 13, 17)

Avoiding becoming unnecessarily involved in personal disputes. (Prov. 26:17; see Unit 5 (b), page 108.)

Expelling (by disfellowshipping) those who flout God's household law and unrepentantly contaminate the congregation. (1 Cor. 5:9, 13; Titus 3:10)

Making clear to disfellowshipped ones that upon displaying works befitting repentance and turning around, they may apply for reinstatement. (2 Cor. 2:6-8)

Each judicial case is different and must be judged on its own merits.

Some people have inherited or acquired stronger faulty inclinations than others have and may therefore need more than the usual direction or counsel to correct their course. (Jonah 4:11; Mark 6:34)

Need for a Righteous Judiciary

Elders should make serious efforts to expand their ability to be righteous judges.

Use direction provided by the Society.

Be sure all decisions are solidly based on the Scriptures.

Before handling any judicial matter, wisely make a practice of carefully reviewing Units 5 (a), 5 (b), and 5 (c), taking special note of the cited scriptures.

When elders rely primarily on past experience or fail to review this material before handling a judicial matter, they frequently overlook important points.

Since the lives of all Christians are precious to Jehovah, the elders cannot afford to be careless or indifferent. You must "render an account." (Heb. 13:17)

Elders selected to serve on judicial or appeal committees should be outstandingly discerning and trustworthy men.

If the wrongdoer or one accused is known to have strong feelings respecting an elder being considered to serve, it would be better that the elder not serve.

An elder who is related to the accused person, has been in business with him, or has had a special friendship with him should not normally serve on the committee. (km 9/77 p. 6)

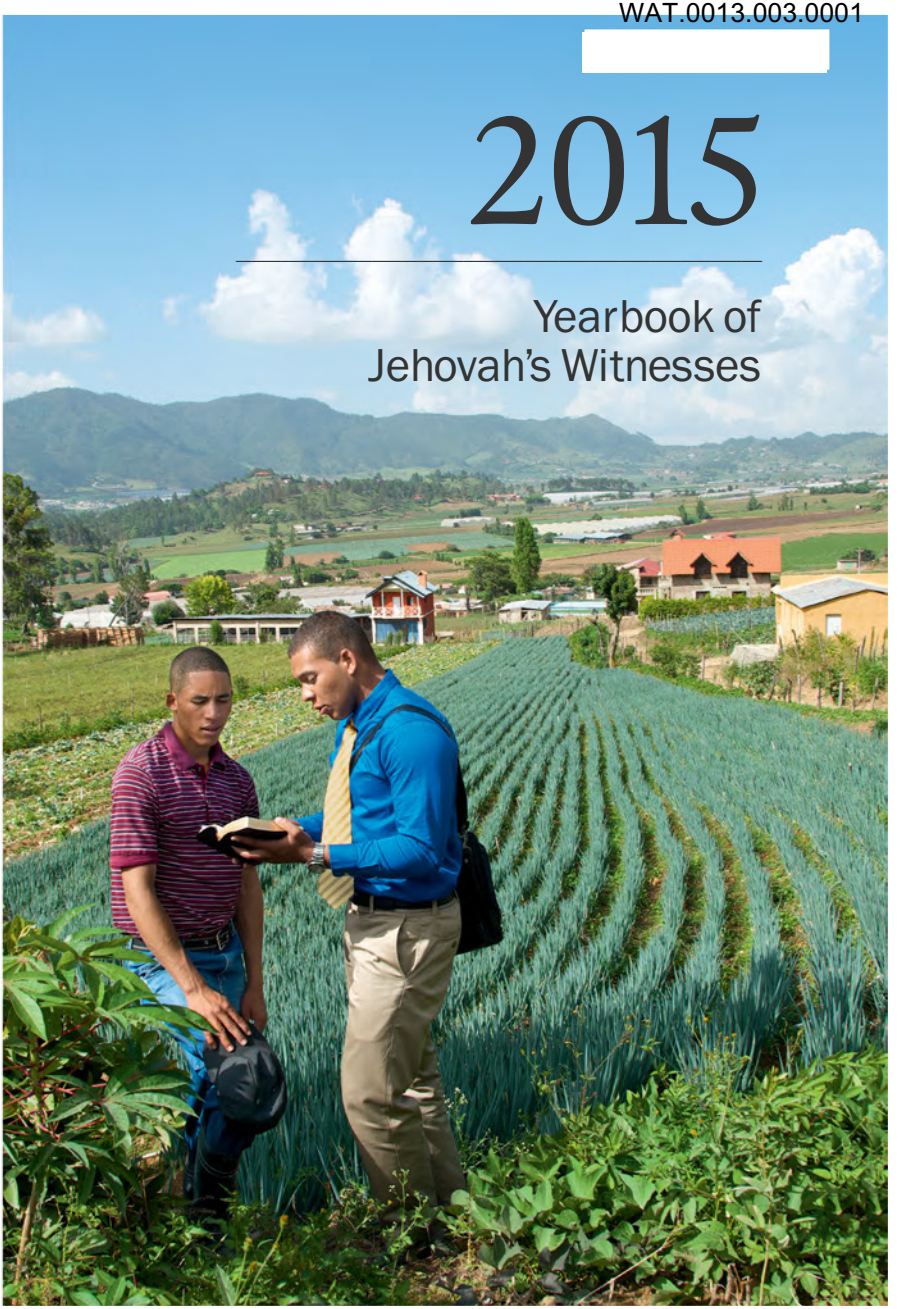
The judicial committee needs to be consistent, firm, and loving in its dealings and decisions.

Work interdependently as a committee. (1 Cor. 12: 21-25)

Listen to fellow members on the judicial committee; benefit from one another's observations.

God's spirit can direct any one of the elders to make a valuable contribution to the thinking of the judicial committee. (Prov. 27:17; Eccl. 4:9)

When questions arise, do not be hasty in deciding the matter. Do research in the Society's publications. If answers cannot be found and further direction is really needed, write to the Society; if the matter is urgent, telephone during business hours.



Elders serving as a committee of judges should imitate the example of Jehovah and Jesus, dealing impartially and justly with all persons. (Lev. 19:15; John 5:30; 8:28)

By your conscientiously exercising justice tempered by mercy, you give evidence that Jehovah's organization is governed by him. His theocratically organized people will therefore continue to grow in righteousness. (1 Sam. 12:22)

Dear Brothers:

1. This letter replaces the letter dated October 1, 2014, to all bodies of elders on the same subject. That letter should be removed from the congregation permanent file of policy letters and be destroyed. The only significant adjustment is found in paragraph 7 with regard to broadcasting confidential meetings.

2. Elders carry a heavy responsibility in these "critical times." (2 Tim. 3:1) You must teach and shepherd the flock, set a good example in field service, maintain good spiritual habits, and care for your families' spiritual, emotional, and physical needs. We very much appreciate and commend you for your sincere efforts to care for each of these responsibilities.

3. Your task is made more challenging by the fact that we live in a complex society in which people have become increasingly proud, greedy, and litigious. (2 Tim. 3:2-4) Further, in response to growing social problems, governments at times enact laws that impose additional responsibilities on the ministers of all religions. As Christians, we recognize Jehovah's supreme authority and obey laws of the land that do not conflict with God's law. (Matt. 22:21; Rom. 13:1, 2) It is therefore important that as elders you act wisely and with discernment and always follow the organization's procedures and directions for handling congregation matters that involve legal issues.—Prov. 2:6-9.

4. Direction on handling child abuse matters can be found in separate correspondence. However, we are pleased to provide consolidated direction on handling other congregation matters involving legal issues. Please give this information your prayerful consideration.

CONFIDENTIALITY

5. As overseers, you are often entrusted with knowledge of sensitive and confidential information. Elders must be careful never to divulge confidential information to persons who are not authorized to receive it. There is "a time to be silent" and a time when "your words should be few." (Eccl. 3:7; 5:2) Proverbs 10:19 warns: "When words are many, transgression cannot be avoided, but whoever controls his lips acts discreetly." Unnecessary spiritual and legal problems result when elders unwisely reveal matters that should be kept confidential. You must therefore give special heed to the counsel: "Do not reveal what you were told confidentially." (Prov. 25:9) When elders disregard this counsel, trust in the elder body is threatened.—w96 3/15 p. 18 par. 12; w91 11/15 p. 23 par. 19; w87 9/1 pp. 12-15.

6. If an elder were to breach confidentiality, he could subject himself and the organization to civil liability. In addition, an elder's breach of confidentiality could result in a legal waiver of the minister-communicant privilege or the solicitor-client privilege. The minister-communicant privilege generally prevents an elder, under specific circumstances, from having to disclose confidential communications between the elder and a member of the congregation, and the solicitor-client privilege generally protects an elder from having to disclose confidential communications between the elder and his solicitor.

7. Wireless communication: It is also important to avoid inadvertently revealing confidential information. While what is presented at our meetings and assemblies is generally not confidential, on occasion meetings are held that are of a confidential nature. For example, the branch office may sponsor schools for congregation elders and ministerial servants held at a Kingdom Hall. On such occasions, we have no objection to the use of wireless microphones as long as the broadcast range does not go beyond the classrooms and/or the intended audience. If the Kingdom Hall uses an FM transmitter, be sure this is turned off during confidential meetings.

8. When calling the branch office or when otherwise discussing confidential matters by phone with persons entitled to such information, make sure that no one—including family members—can overhear the conversation. For such conversations, it is permissible to use a cordless digital telephone. Cordless analog telephones do not provide adequate privacy and should not be used. If you are not certain whether you have a digital cordless telephone, it may be best to use a landline telephone. Therefore, please make sure that your telephone is not a cordless analog telephone.

9. Most cellular telephone providers today have replaced older analog networks with more secure digital networks. These signals are encrypted and considered to be secure from people seeking to monitor conversations. Therefore, cellular telephones may be used when calling the branch office or when discussing confidential matters with fellow elders.

10. When someone seeks confidential information: You should never reveal confidential information to anyone unless theocratic procedure requires it or the branch office has instructed you to do so. (Persons seeking confidential information may include an investigator, a solicitor, a policeman, a detective, other law enforcement officers or government officials, school personnel, parties to a lawsuit, family members [whether they are Jehovah's Witnesses or not], and even other elders or other persons who may not be entitled to the information.) This applies to written materials and unwritten knowledge possessed by the elders. It applies to records pertaining to a particular case and general materials, such as letters from the organization, the Shepherding textbook, and the Organized book. Even when secular authorities request confidential information, you are not obligated to answer questions before consulting the branch office. (ks10 chap. 6 par. 19) You should then ask to speak to the Legal Department. Oftentimes secular authorities request confidential information to which they are not legally entitled. Thus, you could subject yourself and the organization to civil liability if you reveal such confidential information.

11. If any unauthorized person seeks confidential information from you, simply state: "As a minister I have a duty to keep certain matters confidential and need to obtain legal advice concerning my position before answering any questions." There is no need to state that you will be contacting the Legal Department. If the inquiring party presses for more information about a confidential matter or for the identity of your solicitor, do not be intimidated by threats and do not make any other statements. Simply ask for the person's name, telephone number, title, and the office he represents, and tell him that you will need to talk to your solicitor before you respond to his request. Then, call the Legal Department immediately for legal direction.

12. Subpoenas: A subpoena is an official written demand for oral testimony or records. If you receive a subpoena, or if you hear that one may be issued seeking oral or written information from someone concerning a congregation matter, call the Legal Department immediately. If possible, have the subpoena that has been served on hand when you make the call, and be prepared to fax a copy of it. Never turn over records, notes, or other documents or reveal any confidential matter sought by subpoena without first receiving legal direction from the Legal Department. Many documents and records in congregation files may be protected from disclosure based on the minister-communicant privilege or the solicitor-client privilege. If you receive a subpoena intended for someone else, call the Legal Department immediately, even before you contact the party for whom the subpoena was intended. If someone threatens to get a subpoena for congregation-related records or testimony, call the Legal Department immediately, even if no actual subpoena has yet been served.

CRIMES AND CRIMINAL INVESTIGATIONS

13. Handling reports of the abuse of elderly and disabled persons: At times, the law may require ministers to report the abuse of elderly and disabled persons to the authorities. Elders should therefore call the Legal Department for legal advice whenever they receive an allegation that an elderly or disabled person has been abused. Adult abuse can be physical, sexual, or emotional and can include neglect or abandonment by a caretaker, self-neglect, forced labor, and financial or other types of exploitation. We want to do all we can to protect elderly and disabled persons from harm, in harmony with the principles of God's Word that direct us to have tender compassion for disadvantaged ones.—Ps. 72:13, 14.

14. Handling reports of crimes: When the elders learn of alleged criminal activity on the part of one of Jehovah's Witnesses or someone associated with the congregation as the accused or the victim, they should immediately call the Legal Department. In some cases, the elders will form a judicial committee to handle alleged wrongdoing that may also constitute a violation of criminal law (e.g., murder, rape, child abuse, fraud, theft, assault). Generally, the elders should not delay the judicial committee process, but the branch office should be contacted for direction before doing so. Strict confidentiality must be maintained to avoid unnecessary entanglement with secular authorities who may be conducting a criminal investigation of the matter. For example, even the fact that a judicial committee has been formed should not be disclosed to persons not entitled to know. (ks10 chap. 6 par. 18) In addition, the Legal Department should be contacted for legal advice on how to protect confidentiality that is specific to the circumstances of the case.

15. Search warrants: Elders should never give consent for anyone to search a Kingdom Hall or any other place where confidential records are stored. Conscientious elders do all they reasonably and peaceably can to preserve the confidentiality of the congregation in harmony with the principle set out in Acts 5:29. However, law enforcement officers do not need your consent if they have a search warrant. A search warrant is a court order authorizing the authorities to search certain premises to locate evidence that may be used in a criminal prosecution.

16. If a law enforcement officer claims to have a search warrant, ask to see and read it. If your request is denied, tell the officer that you do not consent to the search, but do not try to physically stop him. Then, whether you have been allowed to read the search warrant or not, call the Legal Department immediately for legal advice. If for some reason you are not allowed to call or you are unable to contact the Legal Department at that moment, call as soon as possible. If the authorities threaten to get a search warrant to look for congregation records or other confidential information, call the Legal Department immediately, even if the warrant has not yet been issued.—ks10 chap. 6 par. 19.

17. Restraining orders or orders of protection: At times an individual will obtain a restraining order or apprehended violence order. The elders should not try to read, understand, or enforce a restraining order between private parties, and neither should an elder try to provide legal advice. If anyone asks the elders any questions about the restraining order, politely tell the person that a restraining order is a personal legal matter that does not involve the congregation. Thereafter, the elders should call the Legal Department immediately for direction.

DISRUPTIVE INDIVIDUALS AT CONGREGATION MEETINGS

18. It is best to ignore trivial or minor disturbances created by individuals at congregation meetings. But if an individual persists in this course of action and is distracting others, two elders should ask him to leave. If a second elder is not readily available, a mature ministerial servant can be asked by an elder to join him. If the disruptive individual refuses to leave, you should inform him that if he does not leave and continues to distract others, you will contact the police to have them deal with him. If the individual does not cooperate, you should telephone the police. When the police arrive, you may inform them that the individual is causing a disturbance and that his implied invitation to attend the meeting has been revoked. You may also inform the police that you are willing to file trespassing charges if it seems prudent and necessary under the circumstances. If you feel the need for further direction, please contact the Service Department.

19. Elders wisely avoid being provoked into physically removing a disruptive person from the premises, as the individual may be attempting to create a basis for legal action. Thus, the elders should generally not try to forcibly remove a disruptive individual from the Kingdom Hall. If an individual is violent from the outset, the police can be called immediately. There is no need to warn him. In the event that a person is physically attacked, that person has the right to defend himself from harm, and the elders should do what they reasonably can to help protect the individual. If those who are being physically attacked are unable to flee from an assailant who appears determined to cause injury, a Christian may try to ward off such attacks and even strike out in defense if necessary. Of course, any such defensive action would be solely to protect oneself or others from the attacker until the police arrive.—g91 7/8 p. 13; g87 11/22 p. 28.

SUICIDES AND ATTEMPTED OR THREATENED SUICIDES

20. At times, judicial committees may deal with someone who is so distraught that he attempts or threatens to commit suicide. In such cases it may be best for the committee to suspend the hearing and focus on helping the person to regain his balance. In any event, the elders should treat the person with extreme thoughtfulness and kindness. (ks10 chap. 5 par. 4; chap. 6 par. 16) Whether a family member or close friend with knowledge of the suicide threat or suicide attempt reports it to authorities is a personal decision for him to make. (Gal. 6:5) Elders should not discourage anyone from reporting the matter. Family members who are aware of the suicide threat or attempt should be encouraged to take positive steps to prevent the person from harming himself.

WHEN LAWSUITS ARE THREATENED

21. Elders should call the Legal Department immediately when they learn of any threatened legal action or actual lawsuit against the organization, congregation, or elders. If you are contacted by a solicitor or the media regarding a threatened or actual lawsuit before you have had an opportunity to call the Legal Department, get the caller's name, law office name, telephone numbers, deadline, and cause of action, and let the caller know you will try to call them back before that deadline. Then call the Legal Department immediately for assistance. No elder should make any statement about the merits or validity of an actual or threatened lawsuit before calling the Legal Department.—ks10 chap. 6 par. 18.

CONFIDENTIAL (RCY)

CHILD CUSTODY

22. The Legal Department may be in a position to provide some assistance to publishers who are involved in lawsuits over child custody and access matters where our religious beliefs are under attack. For those facing secular issues on child custody or visitation, helpful information can be found in the October 2009 Awake!, pages 21 and 27; the December 8, 1997, Awake!, pages 3-12; the chart found in the April 22, 1991, Awake!, page 9; and the October 22, 1988, Awake!, pages 2-14.

23. Elders should not make any promises to publishers about the organization's involvement, but should initially contact the Legal Department and explain the details involved with the matter. Once this has been done, a decision can be made whether or not assistance is appropriate and, if so, how best to provide it.

WHEN A PUBLISHER HAS A PERSONAL LEGAL QUESTION

24. At times, publishers may approach elders with personal legal questions. Elders should not give legal advice to publishers. Kindly tell the publisher that you are not qualified to give legal advice and suggest that he consult his own legal counsel. Of course, if an elder happens to be a lawyer, he may have clients who are Jehovah's Witnesses. In such cases, it is the elder's professional qualifications, and not his position as an elder in the congregation, that enable him to provide legal advice in his professional capacity to a fellow Witness. Any professional services that he renders would not be sponsored by the congregation but would be a private arrangement between a legal professional and his client. Additionally, elders should never direct or suggest that publishers call or write the Legal Department to receive legal advice and direction regarding personal matters.

NONNEUTRAL ACTIVITY

25. When reporting to the branch office that an individual has disassociated himself by engaging in nonneutral activity, the wording on the report should be in harmony with Scriptural guidelines. Please use such expressions as "violated neutrality" or "took a nonneutral course." Isaiah 2:4 and John 15:17-19 support these descriptions. Other expressions should not be used. The same caution is to be exercised in all correspondence with the branch office or with other congregations.—Each elder should adjust the notation next to the last bullet in paragraph 3 of chapter 9 in the Shepherding textbook to read as follows: "See letter dated November 6, 2014, regarding procedures when legal issues are involved."

DO NOT CALLS

26. If a householder insists that no further visits be made by Jehovah's Witnesses, a dated note should be placed in the territory envelope so that publishers working the territory in the future do not call at that address. Such direction would apply whether or not the householder has posted a sign indicating his wishes. Under the direction of the service overseer, elders should be assigned to visit these homes every two years. It could be explained that we are calling to inquire if the same householder still lives there. If there is a reasonable response, future calls can be made in the usual way. If the householder continues to insist that no further visits be made by Jehovah's Witnesses, no further visits should be made until two years pass. The local body of elders can decide if the circumstances in a particular case make it advisable to handle things differently.

27. Elders bear a heavy responsibility in ministering to the needs of the Christian congregation while observing confidentiality and complying with Caesar's laws. (Rom. 13:1-4) We trust that the information in this letter will help you carry out this responsibility. Please be assured of our love and prayers, and may Jehovah continue to bless you as you shepherd his flock.—1 Pet. 5:1-3.

Dear Mr Guigni

Re: Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse ("Commission") – Analysis Summary – Comments and Verification

Thank you for your letter dated 16 July 2015, attaching your Analysis Summary of the Case Files.

In your letter, you asked my client to consider whether the Analysis Summary you attached "is inaccurate or incomplete" and asked my client to provide you with its assessment by 9.00 am today. As you will no doubt appreciate, although you provided us with the electronic database, the task that you asked my client to undertake was complex and required considerable work over the weekend.

While my client's response is set out under the heading "Verification of Analysis Summary" below, we make the following preliminary comments as to how Counsel Assisting intends to use the data.

Preliminary Comments

From paragraph 3 of your letter, it appears that the purpose of the exercise is to allow Counsel Assisting to "put some of the figures recorded in the Analysis Summary to witnesses from [our] client". It is not clear from your letter which figures you wish to use and for what purpose. Your letter is silent as to these aspects.

It will, however, greatly assist my client's witnesses' ability to answer such questions if you could indicate which of the 29 areas referred to in the Analysis Summary ("Analysis") will be the subject of questioning. We say this for the following two reasons.

First, if the purpose is to assist the Commission in its deliberations regarding Case Study 29, then that assistance will be enhanced if proper preparation is able to be given to the questions in order to ensure that considered, fact-based answers are provided. Otherwise, there is every chance my client's witnesses will be taken by surprise with the likely result that incomplete answers will be given.

The second, and more significant issue, is that my client is concerned that part of the Analysis steps outside the Terms of Reference which, of course, is into "institutional responses to child sexual abuse".

Familial Cases

It is apparent, for instance, from paragraph 3 of your Analysis, that the summary deals also with familial child abuse. It would appear to us that, on any view, the 564 cases falling into this category are matters unrelated to my client, in the sense that they are not related to the "institution" of my client's faith.

Further, this fact possibly distorts the analysis and presents an incomplete picture. For example, in relation to paragraph 2, no attempt is made to distinguish between the familial and non-familial cases (and thus possibly involving the Jehovah's Witnesses as a faith) in the 270 New South Wales cases set out or in the 306 Queensland cases etc. The same point may be made in relation to each of the paragraphs. Even with the paragraphs that deal specifically with positions held within my client's faith, the distinction is not drawn: for instance, paragraph 6 states "135 alleged perpetrators were elders or ministerial servants ….". Yet, it is entirely silent as to whether the alleged abuse was of a family member.

As is apparent from the Case Files, my client has taken complaints of child abuse very seriously for a number of decades (even prior to the requirements for mandatory reporting) and has kept careful records of such cases including familial abuse where the alleged abuser was a Jehovah's Witness. To elaborate on this point: as you will have seen from the extensive material provided by my client that forms the basis of your Analysis, my client's definition of abuse is very wide (and includes such behaviour as "sexting"). Moreover, every allegation of abuse is investigated.

As you will appreciate, however, and as indicated above, intra-family abuse has nothing to do with a person's religion and everything to do with the family. All Jehovah's Witnesses are free and, indeed, encouraged to report to the elders any child sexual abuse. The elders are then obliged to report matters to the Branch Office and, where required under mandatory reporting legislation, to the secular authorities. This includes familial abuse cases.

My client is concerned that unless the factors referred to above are incorporated into the Analysis, an incomplete picture will be provided to the Commission.

Verification of Analysis Summary

As indicated above, it has not been possible for my client to provide comprehensive assurances as to the accuracy or completeness of the Analysis in the time stipulated for such a response. As a result, it has concentrated on those areas it assumes are of most importance to the Commission, namely the non-familial cases and allegations against those who were elders and ministerial servants at the time of the abuse. It has therefore concentrated on the data summarised in paragraphs 6 - 7 and 25 - 29 of your letter.

My client is happy to provide further analysis but we will need further time to do so, if requested. In the meantime, my client does wish to make the following comments using your paragraph numbering:

1. Paragraph 1 – You have determined that, since 1950, Watchtower Australia has recorded in the Case Files allegations, reports or complaints of child sexual abuse against 1006 members of Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia ("alleged perpetrators"). It is important to note that the total number of case files include details of allegations received over the past 65 years, whether or not they could be established.

For decades, as you are aware, my client has retained all records where it has come to my client's attention that a person may have at some time in their past had an allegation of child sexual abuse levied against them, even where that allegation had no connection with the activities of the institution.

2. Paragraphs 2-5 – Given the limited time within which to respond to your letter, my client is unable to provide any assurances as to the accuracy or completeness of information contained in paragraphs 2-5.

3. Paragraph 6 – In the time my client has been able to consider your Analysis, it has undertaken a comprehensive review of all of the 135 Case Files that you identify in your electronic spreadsheet under the heading 'Role in church at time of first abuse' (Column G) as being elders or ministerial servants at the time of the first alleged incident of abuse.

   As a result of that review, my client has identified the following alleged perpetrators who were incorrectly classified as to their role in the congregation at the time of the first alleged incident of abuse. We list those records below in Table 1 for your reference:

Table 1

This review identified 31 persons who were not elders or ministerial servants at the time of the alleged abuse and clarified the role of a further 8 alleged perpetrators. As a result of these changes, my client was able to determine that an adjusted number of 104 alleged perpetrators held the position of either elder or ministerial servant at the time an allegation was made.

After adjusting the spreadsheet for accuracy in light of the above changes, and filtering the data at Columns G & H in order to differentiate the 104 alleged perpetrators between familial, elders and ministerial servants at the time of alleged abuse, my client notes the following further information:

Table 2

Alleged Incidents of Abuse (Elders and Ministerial Servants) (1950-2015)
Status	Comment (Inc Case Analysis #)	**#
Familial		54
Elders	#163,#197, #239, #321, #385, #395, #505, #575, #580, #606, #673, #752, #868, #889, #928, #934, #938, #942	18

	Total	104

When applying a further filter using Column K (headed 'Year of first abuse'), my client was able to identify the following cases relevant to a period covering the last 10 years. This information, along with supplementary information is summarised below:

Table 3

Alleged Incidents of Abuse (Elders and Ministerial Servants) (2005-2015)
	Number of Alleged Incidents over past 10 years	Familial	Number of Alleged Perpetrators handled by secular authorities	Number of those Serving as an Elder or Ministerial Servant over the past 10 years
Elders	2 (#239,#934)	0	2	8,507
Ministerial Servants	3 (#98,#202,#1004)	1 (#834)	3	7,438

4. Paragraph 7 – From the adjusted case data analysis my client has also been able to ascertain the following from filtering the electronic spreadsheet at Columns G & H:

Table 4

Alleged Perpetrators 'Role in Church at time of first abuse' (1950-2015)
Status	Comment	**#
Not Jehovah's Witness, Unbaptised or Status Unclear at the time of alleged abuse	No discernible link to the institution	199

Parishioners	Only connection with the institution is that they were members of the same faith	287
Elders		18
Ministerial Servants		32
	Total	1006

Therefore, over a period of 65 years, the data shows that only 50 alleged perpetrators fall within the Commission's Terms of Reference.

5. Paragraphs 8-24 – Unfortunately, given the time available, my client is accordingly unable to provide any assurances as to the accuracy or completeness of information contained in paragraphs 8-24.

My client wishes to comment, however, on paragraphs 20 and 22, as follows:

(a) As will be clear from your Analysis, where an alleged perpetrator does not fully disclose the nature or extent of their abuse during the original judicial hearing, and subsequent to that hearing further information is uncovered,[1] the alleged perpetrator will again be dealt with judicially, either for the same instance or for an additional allegation of child sexual abuse that may pre-date the event previously dealt with.

(b) My client was unable to determine whether some of the instances mentioned in paragraphs 20 or 22 fall into this category.

It may be inaccurate to present these numbers as a reference of further sexual abuse by an alleged perpetrator.

6. My client also wishes to make a correction to a comment made in Column Y of the supplied electronic spreadsheet (at #477 REDACTED - "reproved and continued to abuse"). This is incorrect according to my client's records. The Case File indicates that any dealings with the alleged perpetrator after he was reproved were for allegations of prior historical abuse.

[1] This further information could include where another victim of historical child abuse makes an allegation or the extent of the abuse was not originally disclosed to the judicial committee.

7. Paragraph 25 – Appointment as Elder or Ministerial Servant – My client notes from your Analysis that you have identified 29 alleged perpetrators who were appointed as elders or ministerial servants after having been the subject of an allegation of child sexual abuse. After reviewing each of the relevant Case Files, my client is able to provide the following additional information:

Table 5

Of the 29 listed as appointed, there has been no report of any further allegations of child sexual abuse with the exception of one person (#938) who was subsequently re-removed as an elder and is now deceased.

8. Paragraph 26 – Deletion as Elder or Ministerial Servant - In applying the relevant filters on Columns G, H and R in the electronic format you supplied, my client is able to make the following observations:

9. Paragraph 27 – Reappointment - My client is able to provide the following additional information that explains the context of the 17 alleged perpetrators you identify who were later reappointed as either an elder or ministerial servant:

	Total	17
Of the 17 listed as reappointed, there has been no report of any further allegations of child sexual abuse with the exception of one person (#938) who was subsequently re-removed as an elder and is now deceased.

10. Paragraph 28 – Convictions - My client is unable to provide any assurances as to the accuracy or completeness of the number (161) that you indicate have been convicted of a child sexual abuse offence. Nevertheless, by searching key words (ie. police, child services, authorities, charge, court, welfare etc) in the Case Files and upon careful review of the information contained therein, my client was able to establish that 383 alleged perpetrators have been dealt with by either the police or secular authorities in the respective States or Territories in which they reside.

11. Paragraph 29 – Mandatory Reporting - My client makes the following clarifications:

    (a) In many instances when elders become aware of an allegation of child abuse, the police or other secular authorities are already involved. This would include many of the 383 instances where the Case Files indicate that the police or other secular authorities have become involved in matters involving allegations of child sexual abuse.

    (b) Where elders are not subject to mandatory reporting obligations, they are directed to support the victim and/or the parent/guardian's right to decide whether or not to report the matter to the police or secular authorities.

    (c) My client understands that from 1984 until December 2006, the Northern Territory was the only jurisdiction that imposed a mandatory reporting obligation that applied to ministers of religion. The duty to report sexual abuse in the Northern Territory was limited to cases where a person not only believed on reasonable grounds that a child had been sexually abused, but also that the child's parents, guardians or custodians are unable or unwilling to protect the child.

(d) In South Australia, mandatory reporting was extended to include ministers of religion (as well as employees and volunteers in organisations formed for religious or spiritual purposes) in December 2006. In Victoria, mandatory reporting obligation was extended to all adults, including ministers of religions in June 2014.

(e) It has also been my client's understanding that in both the Northern Territory and South Australia, mandatory reporting obligations only apply where the victim is under 18 years of age at the time elders hear the allegation or learn of the sexual abuse. When the victim becomes an adult, any mandatory reporting obligation ceases and it is up to the adult to decide whether or not to report any sexual abuse he or she suffered as a child.

(f) In comparing Columns K and L in the Case File data that you provided in electronic format, namely the elapsed time between the alleged incident of child sexual abuse and the date at which it was reported, it would indicate that a large percentage of the reports are received by local congregation elders when victims are adults.

(g) The mandatory reporting legislation recently extended in Victoria specifies that the obligation to report does not apply if the victim of child sexual abuse was over 16 years of age on 3 June 2014 and he or she requests that the offence not be reported.

(h) In the last six months in South Australia, elders have been directed to report three separate instances of alleged child sexual abuse (two of which concerned sexting) to the secular authorities using the Child Abuse Report line.

(i) In Victoria, the elders were directed to report a matter to the police involving a sexual offence committed against a 15 year old. Additionally, last year in Victoria, the elders were directed to report a matter involving child sexual abuse unless they could satisfy themselves that the matter had already been reported to the police. [WAT.0001.002.6356 - WAT.0001.002.6358]

(j) In checking the Case Files in preparation for the upcoming Public Hearing, my client has identified three cases which it is presently reviewing to determine whether reporting should have occurred at the relevant time [#539 - WAT.0001.002.3578 - WAT.0001.002.3579; #549 -WAT.0001.002.6026; #908 - WAT.0001.002.6189 - WAT.0001.002.6191].

(k) With regard to the REDACTED case (which also involved sexting [WAT.0001.002.6189 - WAT.0001.002.6191]), it appears likely that a misunderstanding may have occurred when the elders in Victoria, where the accused resided, contacted the Legal Department about the matter. In 2012, ministers of religion did not have a mandatory reporting obligation in Victoria and the advice provided about their mandatory reporting obligations likely related to the law in that State even though the victim was in South Australia.

(l) Regarding each of these matters, my client is taking advice from Senior Counsel to determine the obligation that the elders presently have to report the matters given that the victims are now adults. If, unfortunately, there was an obligation to report the matter at the time, this was an omission on my client's part for which it accepts full responsibility.

Please let me know if you require any further information.

Yours sincerely

Explanation of School Course

(Introduction)

The material in this Kingdom Ministry School Textbook (*ks*81) has been prepared for use in training and benefiting Christian overseers. In keeping with our objective it retains the title of the previous two textbooks, "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock." —Acts 20:28.

The 1981-1982 Kingdom Ministry School Course for overseers will include a lecture at the beginning of each day. As was true with the two previous courses, the program covers 15 hours of training and instruction. Following is the 1981-1982 schedule.

		Conducted by Instructor
Opening Comments	¼ hour	A
Lecture	½ hour	B
Unit 8(a) (*ks*81)	3 hours	A
Unit 8(b) (*ks*81)	3 hours	B
Unit 8(c) (*ks*81)	1¼ hours	A
Lecture	½ hour	A
Unit 9(a) (*ks*81)	3 hours	B
Unit 9(b) (*ks*81)	3 hours	A
Concluding Talks by Instructors	½ hour	B & A
TOTAL	15 hours

WAT.0019.001.0005

TO THE STUDENT: The information that is found in this textbook has been prepared under the direction of the Governing Body. The course provides a basis for Scriptural discussion of material that deals with features of God's law and its administration, judicial matters and a review of the ministry, with special emphasis on the role of overseers who are expected to take the lead. It is strongly recommended that each overseer carefully read over the assigned portion for each day and be prepared to share in classroom discussions. The instructors will analyze with the class the examples provided for them by the Society and which are called for on specific points. Where it is possible, instructors will see that the textbooks are made available ahead of time. While some of the material in this course is of a serious nature and may seem weighty, do not be unduly anxious or apprehensive. Remember, we are all interested in helping one another, to the end that we may 'hold firmly to the faithful word' and show genuine concern for the flock by setting a good example.—Titus 1:9; 1 Pet. 5:2, 3.

TO THE INSTRUCTORS: It has been found practical for two instructors to conduct each school for elders. Wherever possible, arrangements should be made for this to be done. Both instructors will be present during each of the class sessions. As a rule, instructors will alternate as classroom chairman, each conducting the classroom sessions as indicated on page 132. They will share in giving the concluding talks for the final half-hour of the special school. When the school is conducted on the weekend, fifteen-minute recesses are suggested during the mid-morning and mid-afternoon sessions of each day.

There are a few portions in Unit 8(c) that will allow for some in the class to appear before the group to explain, discuss or demonstrate certain points that are called for in this unit of instruction. Advance notice of such assignments will be given out by the instructor to some of the students so that they can be properly prepared and have something practical and meaningful to present.

The scheduling of the school sessions can be somewhat flexible where this appears necessary. In most cases where a weekend is set aside for the school program, eight hours of instruction will be featured on Saturday and seven hours on Sunday. The Saturday-morning session would run from 8 to 12, and following a one-hour break for the noon meal, the afternoon session will resume at 1 and run until 5:30 p.m. On Sunday the morning session could begin at 8:15 and run to 12 noon. After a one-hour noon break the afternoon session would resume at 1 and conclude at 4:45 p.m. Where the school is conducted during the five evenings of a week, the course could be divided so that there would be about three hours of classroom training and instruction each evening. It will be up to the branch office in each country to schedule school sessions in harmony with what may be the most convenient and best for the brothers according to local circumstances.

NOTE

This Kingdom Ministry School Textbook (*ks*81), together with previous issues (*ks*77 and *ks*79), are provided SOLELY for the use of traveling overseers and congregation elders, and are not to be given or loaned out to other persons, including family members. New elders will receive a copy of this latest textbook from the circuit overseer. Elders who are deleted for any reason should turn in their copies of these textbooks to the current chairman of the local body of elders, who will, in turn, pass them on to the circuit overseer.

Jehovah's People Theocratically Organized for His Name (Acts 15:14)

Jehovah has an earthly organization to accomplish his work, an organization that appreciates the importance of his name and in every way seeks to honor it. Some have said, all that is necessary is for each Christian to enter a personal relationship with God and then seek to maintain such in faithfulness. Such view is contrary to Biblical historical facts. Jehovah brings together his chosen ones as an organized people, as in the case of natural Israel, directed by an appointed leadership to administer God's will. (Ex. 19:5, 6) Ancient Israel served as a pattern indicating that the worldwide brotherhood of Jehovah's Christian witnesses in these last days would also be an organized, God-governed people. (Heb. 10:1) It requires an orderly arrangement to gather the "great crowd" from the four corners of the earth, so that they may declare unitedly: "Salvation we owe to our God, who is seated on the throne, and to the Lamb."—Rev. 7:9, 10; Isa. 11:10.

WORLDWIDE ASSOCIATION, GOD-GOVERNED

Today Jehovah's Witnesses are a distinct people.

Gathered from all nations, yet unified as one flock.

Form an international association of brothers. (1 Pet. 2:17; 5:9)

WAT.0019.001.0008

Have learned to speak in one language of truth, calling on the name of Jehovah, recognizing his authority and way of doing things. (Zeph. 3:9, 13)

Christian congregation of anointed ones on earth operate as "God's household" with a "great crowd" of helpers. (1 Tim. 3:15)

Members of a household serve together as an organization.

Over past 100 years a global association of more than 43,000 congregations has developed.

Local congregations not under democratic control but God-governed, theocratic.

All congregations under one administration directed by Christ Jesus. (Heb. 3:6)

"Administration" translates Greek word oikonomia (Eph. 1:10), which basically means "household (organizational) management" of affairs. (See The Watchtower, October 15, 1974, pages 616, 617.)

Congregations receive guidance from Jehovah through Christ Jesus, his appointed Administrator. (Heb. 1:1, 2)

As Jehovah's Chief Servant, he brings about justice. (Matt. 12:18)

AS A HOLY PEOPLE, MUST BE GUIDED BY GOD-GIVEN STANDARDS

Those of the household, as well as all those who work closely with it, must be "holy." (Eph. 2:19; 1 Pet. 1:14-16)

WAT.0019.001.0009

"Holiness" includes cleanness, purity, separateness.

Involves also love of justice and mercy. (Ps. 33:5; Jas. 2:13; 3:17)

As Statute-Giver, Jehovah sets righteous standards and delegates authority to enforce them. (Isa. 33:22)

His laws are stated in our guidebook, the Bible. (2 Tim. 3:16)

Why must we recognize this form of theocratic governance? (Isa. 2:3)

Administration of laws entrusted to His anointed king. (Isa. 32:1)

Enthroned since 1914, ruling 'in midst of enemies.' (Ps. 110:2; Dan. 7:14)

Invisible control exercised from heaven.

Uses earthly visible agency.

Evidenced by over two million subjects submitting to Christ's kingship. (Phil. 2:9-11)

Such invisible administration requires visible representatives.

Visible anointed remnant entrusted with all Master's belongings. (Luke 12:42-44)

"Steward" class faithful in dispensing "food."

Overseers serve as earthly representatives, under direction of the "steward" class. (Isa. 32:1, 2)

Theocratic control requires recognition of this orderly arrangement. (Zech. 8:23)

Are we assured guidance until the 'conclusion of the system of things'? (Matt. 28:20)

GOVERNING IN RIGHTEOUSNESS REQUIRES OBSERVANCE OF JEHOVAH'S LAWS AND PRINCIPLES

Laws are defined as rules of conduct. Necessary for order. (Gal. 6:16)

A God of order. (1 Cor. 14:33) God's laws are perfect. (Ps. 19:7)

Laws are based on principles that are made enforceable by an organization.

Principles are settled guidelines for conduct based on fundamental truths. (See The Watchtower, September 1, 1952, page 407; September 1, 1957, page 524.)

Example of principles based on fundamental truth:

Fundamental truth: Jehovah God is the Sovereign Lord of heaven and earth. (Acts 4:24)

Principles based on the above fact, truth:

We owe Jehovah full obedience in everything. (Jer. 7:23; 1 Sam. 15:22)

Where there is a conflict, we must obey God as Ruler rather than men. (Acts 5:29)

Observation: Principles are eternal, while rules may apply to limited times or conditions.

Need laws, judicial decisions and instructions from Jehovah through various levels of household (organizational) management. (Gen. 9:1-7)

WAT.0019.001.0011

1. Jesus Christ, the King and High Priest. (Matt. 28:19, 20)

2. "Faithful and discreet slave" and its governing body. (Matt. 24:45-47; Acts 15:23, 28, 29; 16:4)

3. Congregation elders. (Heb. 13:17)

4. Husbands and parents. (Eph. 5:22, 23; 6:1, 4)

Human overseers must be careful that their instructions do not violate God's Word.

Should imitate Jesus. (John 5:30; 12:49)

Otherwise, lawlessness prevails. (Matt. 24:12)

ADMINISTERING ORGANIZATIONAL LAW WITH JUSTICE AND MERCY

Justice is the administration of what is right in a fair and impartial way. (Lev. 19:15)

Jehovah manifests justice in all his dealings. (Deut. 32:4; Heb. 2:2-4)

Justice is illustrated by a plummet line, which must be fully adhered to, without variation. (Amos 7:7, 8; Zech. 4:10)

Justice involves more than deciding right or wrong; it is balanced with mercy where warranted. (Ezek. 33:14-16)

Decisions of elders must reflect justice. (Isa. 32:1)

WAT.0019.001.0012

Mercy is not only the withholding of punishment when justly due, but also an expression of kind consideration or pity that brings relief to those who are disadvantaged, in need of help. (ad p. 1139)

Mercy needed to temper justice.

Mercy brings relief when circumstances allow for it.

Mercy also involves giving needed correction and discipline.

Mercy takes into consideration motives, provocation, willingness to confess, temptation, mental and emotional condition, past conduct, present attitude, etc., of the offender. Must guard against automatic or "letter of the law" application; there are some areas not specifically defined.

Applying Christian law in justice and with mercy requires:

1. Decisions that are fair, equal to the need.
2. Allowance for mercy when circumstances are extenuating.
3. Enforcing with impartiality laws that carry sanctions. (Deut. 1:16, 17) Punishment applied should fit the violations.
4. Getting all the facts before making a decision. (Prov. 18:13)
5. Avoiding becoming involved in personal disputes. (Prov. 26:17)
6. Expelling (by disfellowshipment) those who flout God's household law and contaminate the congregation. (1 Cor. 5:9, 10; Titus 3:10)

WAT.0019.001.0013

7. Making clear to disfellowshipped ones that, upon displaying works befitting repentance, turning around, reinstatement can be applied for. (2 Cor. 2:6-8)

Every case is different and must be judged on its own merits.

Some persons have wrong tendencies and may just need direction as to the right way to go or how they should correct their course. (Mark 6:34)

FOREGOING EMPHASIZES NEED FOR A RIGHTEOUS JUDICIARY

Elders need to be trained to become righteous judges.

How is this accomplished?

Use directions provided by the Society. (See Kingdom Ministry School Textbook, 1977, Unit 4.)

Be sure all decisions are solidly based on the Scriptures.

[Example: Elders wisely make a practice of carefully reviewing Units 4 (a) and (b) in the *ks*77 and Units 9 (a) and (b) in *ks*81 and the scriptures cited before handling any judicial matter. They have found that when they rely on their memory of the past review of this material, they overlook important points. They know that the lives of their brothers are precious, so they cannot afford to be careless.]

Elders serving on a judicial committee should be discerning and trustworthy men.

The body of judges need to be consistent, firm, loving.

Work interdependently as a body. (1 Cor. 12:21-25)

WAT.0019.001.0014

They should listen to fellow members on judicial committee, benefit from one another's mature thinking.

God's spirit can direct any one of the elders to make a valuable contribution to the thinking of the judicial body. (Eccl. 4:9; Prov. 27:17)

When questions arise, they should not be hasty in deciding. Do research in the Society's publications. Then, only if necessary, write the Society.

Jehovah and Jesus deal impartially and justly with all.

Elders serving as a body of judges should imitate their example. (John 5:30; 8:28; Lev. 19:15)

May Jehovah's people as a theocratic organization continue to grow in righteousness, exercising justice with mercy. (1 Sam. 12:22)

Under "the Law of the Christ" (Gal. 6:2)

Jehovah's people today are not under the control of the body of law known as the Mosaic law of ancient Israel. (Col. 2:13, 14) Paul showed that since there has been a change in the priesthood from Aaron to that of Jesus Christ in the manner of Melchizedek, Christians are under a new legal arrangement of control. (Heb. 5:4-6; 7:12) Some rules of conduct found in the old law of Moses have been restated under the law of the Christ and are enforceable upon Christians. (Acts 15:19-21) Other rules of conduct from the law of Moses with their underlying principles, though not enforceable in the Christian congregation, are nevertheless useful to Christians as they walk in the way of holiness. (Jas. 2:8, 9) It is well for elders to consider some of these guidelines that are intended to protect the Christian congregation and keep it clean in Jehovah's sight.—Eph. 5:25-27.

LAW OF THE CHRISTIAN CONGREGATION

Christians are not under the Mosaic law, but under "the law of the Christ." (Gal. 6:2; 1 Cor. 9:21)

Consists of a body of rules for Christian conduct. (Gal. 6:16)

This "law of the Christ" embraces the whole scope of a Christian's life and work and focuses attention on:

1. Our relationship to Jehovah. (Matt. 4:10; 22:37; 1 John 5:3)

2. Faith in Jesus Christ and submission to him. (Col. 1:18; 1 John 3:23)

3. Our relationship with fellow Christians. (John 13:34, 35; 1 John 3:16-18)

4. Our obligations toward unbelievers. (Matt. 24:14; Gal. 6:10; 1 Pet. 2:13, 14)

Law of the Christian system of things involves the heart. (Jer. 31:33; Heb. 10:16)

GUIDELINES FOR PROPER CHRISTIAN ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE WITH MERCY

(1) Gambling

Why should Christians avoid gambling in all of its various forms? (See Isaiah 65:11.)

What view do Christians take of such traits as greediness and covetousness, generally manifested by gamblers? (See Romans 13:9, 10; 1 Corinthians 6:9, 10; Colossians 3:5.)

Such persons who do not respond to counsel and help could be disfellowshipped from the Christian congregation.

Additional bad results from gambling and association with gamblers give true Christians further reasons for avoiding it. (1 Cor. 15:33; w72 pp. 593, 594; w80 9/1 pp. 29, 30)

WAT.0019.001.0018

Why must one guard against the view that petty gambling solely for entertainment is harmless? (See Galatians 6:7, 8.)

If a business concern gives out prizes to customers by drawing out names from their customer list, it may not be wrong to receive such prize, if no money has to be paid for participation. But other factors need to be considered.

The language used in advertising the contest, or the kind of sponsors, may involve elements with which a Christian would not want to be identified, for personal reasons, or for fear of stumbling others. (Rom. 14:21; 1 Cor. 10:31-33; g75 7/8 p. 28)

Consider example.

(2) Activities Illegal According to Caesar's Law

God's Word counsels all Christians to be law-abiding. (Matt. 22:21)

What must one do when human laws conflict with or prohibit what God commands or when they require things that God forbids? (See Acts 4:19, 20; 5:29-32.)

Why be careful when making purchases from someone engaged in an illegal business, or if such a person seeks to employ your services, or if you personally see opportunities to engage in business or practices prohibited by Caesar's law? (See Romans 13:1-7; Titus 3:1; 1 Peter 2:13, 14.)

How does the above Scriptural counsel protect a Christian and serve as a guide for his conscience?

WAT.0019.001.0019

If the elders learn of illegal activity or of some serious crime on the part of a congregation member, the law on ecclesiastical privilege in many countries does not require elders to report the offender or the offense to the secular authorities.

In cases involving the breaking of God's law, elders must give consideration to the case.

Would one approaching baptism who was guilty of illegal activities before coming to a knowledge of the truth be required to settle these things with the authorities prior to baptism? Why not? (See Philemon 15-18.)

Neither would a thief be required to make restitution to all from whom he stole before baptism, although, in some cases, his conscience may move him to do so. (See Luke 19:8.)

The blood of Jesus Christ covers the sins of such new ones. They may get baptized. (Isa. 1:18; 1 Tim. 2:5, 6; 1 John 1:7)

(3) Legal Matters Involving Secular Courts

While all legal cases between brothers should be brought to the attention of the elders (1 Cor. 6:1-8), there are legal matters over which the congregation does not have authority. These can be taken to secular court for judgment, such as:

a. Issuing a divorce decree when Scriptural basis exists.

b. Obtaining insurance compensation.

c. Being listed among creditors in bankruptcy procedures.

d. Foreclosing liens.

e. Probating wills.

However, 1 Corinthians 6:1-8 covers a wide range of domestic and personal disputes that should be settled by the congregation elders.

Here note some examples:

a. If a worldly creditor sues a brother who is not guilty of wrongdoing, it might be necessary for the brother, for his own protection, to file a counter-suit even if it might include other spiritual brothers in the action.

b. If a dedicated person takes legal action against another dedicated person, it would not be a violation of 1 Corinthians 6:1-8 for the one being sued to defend himself, or to counter-sue. (This is true whether the matter was first taken before the elders or not.)

c. If a person is injured in an automobile owned by a spiritual brother, it might be necessary to sue the brother in order to obtain insurance compensation.

If the brother is not insured, the injured brother may share responsibility for his own injuries. To sue under such circumstances could possibly violate the spirit of what is counseled at 1 Corinthians 6:1-8.

In exceptional cases each individual must make his own decisions.

WAT.0019.001.0021

There may be other circumstances where the congregation would need to take action. (See w73 11/15 pp. 703, 704; w77 3/1 pp. 146-148.)

(4) Neutrality (John 17:16)

Jehovah's Witnesses are neutral with regard to the political and military affairs of the nations. (ms "Neutrality")

They do not interfere with what others do as to voting in political elections, running for or campaigning for political offices, joining the military, etc.

Since true dedicated Christians are "no part of the world," if one pursues a course in violation of his Christian neutrality, he disassociates himself from the neutral Christian congregation. (John 15:19; 17:14-16)

It would be a kindness for the elders to talk to one who they know is thinking about taking such a course, since his plans may have been made in ignorance.

If the individual pursues this course regardless of the proffered help, he thereby disassociates himself, and his card would be removed from the file of active associates.

An announcement is usually made that the individual has withdrawn from the congregation, and the person can be told orally about his position. Persons in the congregation that might be visited by the disassociated person can be informed orally, and the individual treated as one disfellowshipped.

If a government requests temporary use of Kingdom Halls or equipment, in times of emergency, it would not be a violation of neutrality to comply. In some lands, all individuals are required to build roads or work in the field. Where this is not a form of military service, but is viewed as a tax, there would be no objection, as long as the work itself is not in violation of Bible principles. (Matt. 5:41; 22:21)

(5) Self-Defense

By following balanced Bible counsel, Christians can usually avoid getting into situations that might involve physical acts of self-defense. (Prov. 15:1; 17:14; 26:17)

If assaulted, a Christian could ward off blows, or even escape from the attacker by temporarily incapacitating him.

A Christian woman threatened with rape should resist by screaming and physically resisting. (Deut. 22:23-27; 1 Cor. 6:18) Other details are given in w68 6/1 pp. 345-350; g73 4/22 pp. 16, 17.

It is not in harmony with the spirit of John 13:35 or Isaiah 2:4 for a Christian to learn karate, judo or other martial arts. (g75 12/8 pp. 28, 29)

A brother would be disqualified as an elder or ministerial servant, if he took up the study of and practiced these violent measures. One publicly advocating such could be handled in line with 2 Thessalonians 3:13-15, or in accord with the judgment of the local elders. (See w81 7/1 pp. 30, 31 on professional boxing where it is shown that if one continues in such course he would be excluded from the congregation.)

WAT.0019.001.0023

(6) Sexual Conduct

While the Christian congregation is not in a position to direct individuals as to all sexual matters concerning the marriage bed, individuals can, however, be advised that in their intimate relations, as in all other aspects of Christian life, they need to display kindness, love and concern for each other.

Each one should have a hatred for all perverted practices, including homosexuality, bestiality, oral sex and the like. (Lev. 18:22, 23; Ps. 97:10; Amos 5:15; Rom. 12:9; Eph. 5:3, 10-12; Col. 3:5, 6)

Persons should be urged to act in such a way as to leave them with a clean conscience, and the marriage bed undefiled. (Heb. 13:4)

Consider example.

Summary

For our protection and spiritual security it is essential to be obedient to "the law of the Christ." Only in this manner can those who desire to be guided by Jehovah's word of truth walk unitedly and harmoniously in the path of righteousness.

This makes it incumbent upon us to lay aside personal or preconceived ideas of what is right and wrong, and wholeheartedly accept Jehovah's directions.

In this way we are kept separate from the world and can prove ourselves loyal to the Sovereign Lord Jehovah and his king Christ Jesus.

Fulfilling and Glorifying Our Ministry (Rom. 11:13)

Serving as a minister (diákonos) of God is an honorable and dignified assignment. In the Christian Greek Scriptures the noun diákonos is used in three different ways or senses: (1) Serving in a secular sense such as a household servant; (2) in a congregational sense such as a ministerial servant; and (3) in a broad sense referring to anyone who performs sacred service to God. Diákonos is translated "minister" in several languages. All active, dedicated servants of God, whether of the anointed or of the "other sheep," male or female, may lay claim to being ministers. As such they serve as ambassadors or envoys of the Kingdom government. Paul was speaking of this lofty service when he wrote: "I glorify my ministry [diakonía]." (Rom. 11:13) The word "glorify" includes such meanings as "honor," "make much of," "take pride in," "magnify," "lay great stress on" and "prize." This helps us to have the right evaluation of our assignments as God's dedicated ministers.—See w81 3/15, pp. 14-29.

ORDAINED MINISTERS WORKING WITH GOD

(See English Watchtower of March 15, 1981.)

How does one become an ordained minister? (See pages 15, 16.)

WAT.0019.001.0026

Can one who works at a secular job be an ordained minister? (See pages 26, 27.) Scriptural examples. (See page 29.)

How can such one glorify and fulfill the ministry?

Does fulfilling one's ministry reduce anxiety and personal problems? (1 Cor. 15:58)

Can one glorify his ministry in unproductive territory?

Whose responsibility is it to bring the increase, and how does this knowledge keep us content when results are few? (1 Cor. 3:6)

OVERSEERS TAKE LEAD IN FULLY ACCOMPLISHING MINISTRY

Overseers charged to "pay attention . . . to all the flock." Subject under discussion was Paul's house-to-house ministry, how he bore "thorough witness" and was thus "clean from the blood of all men." It was within this context that he spoke at Acts 20:28. (Note Acts 20:20, 24, 26.)

Christ set example for elders in fully accomplishing ministry.

Preaching was his principal work. (Matt. 4:17) This is what he trained his followers to do. (Luke 8:1; 9:1, 2; 10:1, 8, 9) Undershepherds, yoked to Jesus, should have same goal. (Matt. 11:29, 30; John 18:37) (See English Watchtower of July 1, 1976, pages 410, 411.)

What other responsibilities make this a problem for some elders?

WAT.0019.001.0027

Have two elders, assigned in advance, explain how taking the lead in the field ministry and still spending time with their families sets a good example.

Name some advantages of making shepherding calls after field service.

Give examples of how shepherding calls can be made while caring for other responsibilities.

Have a group of elders relate before the class the good results of their being observed working consistently with the publishers in the field.

How is the congregation affected when elders and/or their wives are able to pioneer or occasionally auxiliary pioneer? (2 Cor. 9:2b)

Second Timothy 4:2 includes counsel to elders on handling problems in a congregation; even under such circumstances, what is not to be neglected according to verse 5?

According to Hebrews 13:7, whose is the faith to be imitated? (Phil. 3:17)

For whose blood do overseers show concern when they take the lead in the field ministry?

How is the overall ministry of the congregation to be viewed as we draw closer to the end of the system of things? (1 Pet. 4:7-11)

HELPING ALL TO KEEP ACTIVE IN GLORIFYING JEHOVAH AND THE MINISTRY

Discussion between two elders on the need to help others keep active in glorifying Jehovah and in the ministry. (4 min.)

Include the following points: (1) Good personal example in field ministry (1 Tim. 4:12b); (2) should meet requirements outlined by Jesus at Luke 12:48b; (3) should remember faith dead without works (Jas. 2:14-26; cj, p. 82, par. 1); (4) in association with brothers and sisters, speak positively, not negatively, about the field ministry and its value.

KEEPING PROPER PERSPECTIVE OF WORK TO BE DONE

Elders need proper attitude toward the work and the results obtained, if they are to help others keep active.

Jesus gave us proper view regarding our attitude. (Matt. 10:12-14)

Apostle Paul also outlined the need to do what we are commissioned to do, namely, planting and watering, or, stated another way, preaching and teaching. (1 Cor. 3:6, 7)

Evident, when it comes to results, it is God that brings growth.

This attitude vital if we are to be successful. Otherwise, tend to become downhearted, equating success with number who accept the "good news."

How do we know this is right attitude? Consider results in Noah's day, in Sodom and Gomorrah, from Jeremiah's preaching. Faithfulness in doing as commanded meant success, though tangible results few. (Matt. 7:13, 14)

Consider this modern-day example and whether those a part of it are successful: In one Moslem country after 32 years of preaching and teaching, growth has been from 23 Kingdom proclaimers to 188, an average of five new ones each year. Some missionaries there for 20 and more years helped perhaps 10 or so; others there seven to nine years helped no one take a stand for truth. Successful? Yes! The growth lies with Jehovah, who reads hearts. Does not ask us to do the impossible, only to sound warning, preach and teach.

Apostle Paul spoke of himself as a 'public servant of Christ Jesus, engaging in the holy work of the good news of God.' (Rom. 15:16)

That is our work. We are public servants, engaging in holy work of the good news of God. To be successful we need to carry on this work and encourage others to do so also.

By recommending ourselves as God's ministers we reap benefits and blessings now and in trying times ahead. (2 Cor. 6:3, 4; 1 Pet. 3:15)

WHAT LIES AHEAD

Generally, our field activity performed in face of mounting problems. (Rev. 12:12) Will continue to need holy spirit to keep on.

Difficult days ahead. Some of the generation of 1914 will see the "year of goodwill on the part of Jehovah" end; then the "day of vengeance on the part of our God" will be upon us. (Isa. 61:1, 2; Matt. 24:34; Rom. 9:28; kc p. 140)

> What does this mean? Even after the despoiling of Babylon the Great, Jehovah's servants must steadfastly carry on with proclamation, not of "goodwill" but of "vengeance." (w81 3/15 p. 23, par. 15)

Now is the time for elders to "carry on as men." (1 Cor. 16:13, 14)

Let us fulfill and glorify our ministry!

WAT.0019.001.0032

Handling Cases of Wrongdoing

Wrongdoing dates from man's rebellion in Eden. We have Jehovah's example of prompt action in handling the case. (Gen. 3:8-19) How are cases of wrongdoing handled today? Appointed elders serve as qualified judges:

(a) To keep out spirit of the world. (1 Cor. 2:12; Eph. 2:1, 2)

(b) To readjust or reprove wrongdoers. (Titus 1:9)

(c) To preserve the cleanness of the congregation by removing unrepentant wrongdoers. (1 Cor. 5:7, 13)

What qualifications must elders have to care for this responsibility? (Deut. 1:13, 16-18) Heavenly wisdom, good judgment, impartiality; must be acquainted with Jehovah's righteous laws and principles.—Ps. 19:7-11.

PROCEDURE IN HANDLING CASES

Individual elder, or elders, who may be informed of wrongdoing approaches presiding overseer, who in turn arranges for meeting with body of elders.

Body of elders now determines whether accusation gives evidence of having substance. Is judicial committee necessary? (*ks*77, p. 68, par. 1)

If committee is needed, body determines which elders should serve and also designates chairman. (km 9/77, pp. 5, 6)

WAT.0019.001.0033

Chairman of judicial committee invites accused to meet with them. (*ks*77, pp. 68, 69)

If he repeatedly fails to appear, action should be taken if there is sufficient evidence. (*ks*77, p. 69)

Conducting the Hearing:

Open with prayer.

Chairman states reason for meeting and invites accused to make personal statement.

Present witnesses, unless wrongdoer confesses.

Committee probes in effort to establish facts and ascertain attitude of accused. Is there evidence to establish serious wrongdoing? Isolate specific offenses and evidence available.

When it is appropriate, dismiss wrongdoer and carefully review evidence and attitude of accused.

Has accusation or charge been established?

If so, is wrongdoer repentant? There must be works befitting repentance. If repentance is manifest, how was it demonstrated?

Depending on whether guilt established and repentance shown, determine whether reproof or disfellowshipping necessary. If in doubt, convene at later date. Seek Jehovah's guidance and wisdom through prayer.

When decision is finalized, inform individual orally. Inform of his or her right to appeal and steps necessary for future reinstatement. (km 1/80 p. 4) If appeal not made within 7 days, inform congregation. If appeal is lodged within the alloted time, no announcement is made.

WAT.0019.001.0034

When disfellowshipping action is taken, notify Branch Office, supplying the necessary details as outlined in *ks*77, page 62.

Where appointed servants or pioneers commit serious wrongs, the Branch Office should also be notified, even if no disfellowshipping ensues. (or, p. 170, par. 3)

Prepare written summary of case that can be put in an envelope and placed in congregation file. (See letter dated April 12, 1978, addressed to "All Bodies of Elders.")

PROBLEMS THAT ARISE IN HANDLING CASES OF WRONGDOING

What is Scriptural view on reporting serious wrongdoing? (Lev. 5:1; Prov. 28:13; 29:24; compare 1 Corinthians 1:11.)

Consider example.

Not every case of wrongdoing requires a judicial committee.

[Example: A highly respected elder and a sister in the congregation failed to put in writing a business transaction. Each later charged the other with lying, slander and fraud. The body of elders wanted to convoke a judicial committee to act against the sister, siding with their fellow elder. The matter was handled in line with Matthew 18:15, 16 with the help of a traveling overseer who provided counsel not to get involved prematurely. Judicial committee never had to come into picture.]

WAT.0019.001.0035

Judicial committee not automatically formed even when one is accused of serious sin.

What should be done if there is only one witness to a serious sin?

Witness should confront the accused to encourage him to confess.

If there is no response, one or two elders can discuss the matter with the individual. If he denies it, leave matter in Jehovah's hands. (1 Tim. 5:19, 24, 25)

If there is another witness to the same type of sin on the part of the accused person, this would be basis to convoke a judicial committee.

Why is it important to let the accused FACE his accusers?

Reasonable for accused to know source of charge.

Accusers should be willing to assume their responsibility, as was the case in Israel. (Deut. 17:6, 7; 19:16-21)

Why would witnesses not need to be present for the entire hearing?

No need for them to hear details and testimony that does not affect them. However, witnesses to the wrongdoing should be present later if it becomes necessary to reprove the accused "before all onlookers." (1 Tim. 5:20)

Elders should be quick to listen, but slow to commit themselves.

WAT.0019.001.0036

Wait until you have heard all the facts before reaching conclusions and making decisions. (Prov. 18:13)

Defer making a decision if not sure of Bible's direction and the Society's counsel.

[Example: Elders directed brother who had been legally divorced before baptism that he was free to remarry even though he had not committed adultery, nor had proof of his former wife's committing adultery. Do you see any problem here? (Matt. 19:9)]

CLARIFICATIONS IN HANDLING CASES OF WRONGDOING

If there is question about the mental state of a baptized individual who commits some deed for which he might be disfellowshipped, a judicial committee should consider the facts of the case. Weigh the evidence and extent of mental incompetence and then decide whether some announcement should be made or whether disfellowshipping should occur.

Though there may be a basis for showing more than ordinary consideration and patience, the elders must protect the cleanness and spiritual well-being of the congregation. (1 Thess. 5:14)

In the case of unbaptized persons, regularly associating with congregation, who unrepentantly continue in wrongdoing despite all efforts to help them, an announcement can be made that the congregation should avoid associating with such persons. (1 Cor. 15:33) They would be treated as disfellowshipped persons.

WAT.0019.001.0037

When an appeal committee reverses the decision of the original judicial committee, the matter should be referred to the Branch Office for review. Both the original committee's letter regarding its decision to disfellowship and the appeal committee's reasons for reversing that decision should be submitted.

The appeal committee should not inform the disfellowshipped person of its decision.

The final decision, as approved by the Branch Office, will be transmitted to the parties involved by the original judicial committee.

However, when the decision of the appeal committee is to uphold the disfellowshipping, the letter from the original committee telling of its decision to disfellowship as well as the appeal committee's letter upholding the decision should come to the Branch Office together, so that the records of the Branch Office will be complete. In such a case there is no need to wait to hear from the Branch Office before the decision of the two committees is revealed to the wrongdoer.

While there should be no hasty action in reinstating individuals, consideration should be given to a plea for reinstatement when repentance is definitely shown.

When could a reinstated brother be recommended for responsibility?

Circumstances of each case govern length of time that should elapse before a recommendation could be made.

WAT.0019.001.0038

Good judgment required on the part of the elders. Determine the standing of the individual with the congregation after he has had ample time to prove himself. (Compare Acts 16:1, 2.)

Carefully consider possible effect if individual were to be appointed.

Would it be a cause for stumbling among the brothers? (2 Cor. 6:3)

In cases of scandal, he might never be able to live down his wrongdoing sufficiently so as to qualify.

PROGRESSING IN UPHOLDING JEHOVAH'S RIGHTEOUSNESS

We are surrounded with increasing wrongdoing. Such can infiltrate and have bad effect on Christian congregation. (2 Tim. 3:1-5, 13; Jude 3, 4, 11-13)

Brothers need to tighten up in holding to Jehovah's righteous standards regarding the following:

Causing Division: Deliberate action disturbing unity of congregation or undermining confidence of brothers in Jehovah's arrangement. May involve or lead to apostasy. (Rom. 16:17, 18)

Apostasy: A "standing away from," "a falling away, defection," "rebellion, abandonment."

Action taken against true worship of Jehovah or his established order among his dedicated people. (Jer. 17:13; 23:15; 28:15, 16; compare 2 Thessalonians 2:9, 10.)

WAT.0019.001.0039

Apostates: Persons stubbornly holding to and speaking about or deliberately spreading teachings contrary to Bible truth as taught by Jehovah's Witnesses, or who join another religious organization.

Outcome of such a course could be very serious. (2 Pet. 2:1-3)

How should apostates be viewed? (See Titus 3:10, 11; 1 John 2:19.)

Those with sincere doubts should be helped, dealt with mercifully. (Jude 22, 23; see Watchtower, August 1, 1980, pages 21, 22.)

Conduct with Opposite Sex: Should never bring reproach upon Jehovah or the Christian congregation. (1 Pet. 2:11, 12)

Sexual misconduct would include: (1) Touching sexual parts or caressing breasts. Calls for strong counsel, warning and needed help. (2) Porneia, involving misuse of another's genitals. Requires judicial action. (w73, pp. 574-576)

Courting or dating when one party is not Scripturally free to marry is wrong.

Strong counsel should be given, and, if ignored, individuals should be marked.

Could lead to denial of special privileges in the congregation if repeated warnings and reproofs not heeded by those involved. (2 Thess. 3:14, 15; w68, pp. 255, 256; w80 8/1, pp. 30, 31; w81 9/1, pp. 19-21)

WAT.0019.001.0040

Divorce and Related Matters: The Scriptures urge married persons to remain together as "one flesh." (Gen. 2:22-24; Matt. 19:4-6; 1 Cor. 7:10-16)

Many marital problems can be resolved by following principle of Matthew 18:15.

What divorce concession did the law of Moses allow?

The husband, not the wife, had power to divorce on broad grounds of "something indecent." (Deut. 24:1)

What about divorce for Christians?

Only for "fornication," or porneia. (Matt. 5:32; 19:9)

So Jesus tightened up marriage for Christians.

Equal power of divorce for wife. (Mark 10:11, 12)

Sex relations outside marriage union: Marriage bond not automatically broken in God's eyes.

Innocent mate can forgive. (1 Cor. 13:4-8; Hos. 3:1-3)

While elders should be informed one way or the other, it is up to innocent mate to decide on whether to divorce or not.

The innocent mate should be informed that resuming sexual relations would indicate forgiveness and cancel Scriptural ground for divorce.

Forgiven adultery could not later be used as a basis for divorce, but unrevealed instances of adultery, if later brought to light, could be so used.

WAT.0019.001.0041

A divorce freeing a Christian for remarriage should be obtained by innocent mate if possible, or by guilty mate with innocent mate's consent; both now free to remarry.

If the guilty one unilaterally obtains a divorce, does this of itself free that one to remarry?

No; if he does, it is an adulterous marriage. (Luke 16:18)

Calls for congregation action in addition to any already taken.

However, this frees the innocent mate to remarry.

In all cases of adulterous marriages in the future, even after reinstatement, it will be a rare case if one is recommended to serve in an official position in the congregation—at least until the death or remarriage of the first mate.

In any event, a considerable number of years should have passed. (1 Tim. 3:2, 12; w80 9/15, p. 31)

Where there is evidence of conspiracy between individuals to put away their mates and marry each other, considerable time should elapse before any request for reinstatement is even entertained. (w79 11/15, pp. 31, 32)

A divorced couple having sex relations with each other commit fornication. (Heb. 13:4)

Marriage: Of divine origin.

Engagement is a serious commitment and normally a personal matter. (Matt. 5:37)

WAT.0019.001.0042

However, breaking an engagement may require inquiry if the one concerned has an organizational position of responsibility. (See The Watchtower, June 15, 1975, pages 382-384.)

Marrying an unbeliever: This would result in disqualification from all special privileges for the time being. If the parent is an elder, ministerial servant or pioneer and allows the marriage, this raises questions regarding his qualifications. (1 Tim. 3:2, 4, 5, 12, 13)

Use of Kingdom Halls: Would not be used for marriages of unbelievers, non-baptized Christians or the reenactment of marriages such as on occasions of anniversaries. (w74, p. 276; km 1/77, p. 4)

In each case, the body of elders will decide when the Kingdom Hall can be used for a wedding.

Wedding vows: See May 1, 1974, issue of The Watchtower, page 275.

These vows, or a modification of them according to the local law, should be used, and not privately chosen and worded vows.

TREATMENT OF DISFELLOWSHIPPED AND DISASSOCIATED PERSONS

Members of the Christian congregation should avoid contact and have no spiritual association with disfellowshipped and disassociated persons. (1 Cor. 5:11)

We need to be especially cautious about contact with disfellowshipped persons who have apostatized and those who continue practicing their immoral conduct.

WAT.0019.001.0043

These can affect the congregation like gangrene. (2 Tim. 2:16-18)

Whereas disfellowshipping is an action taken by a judicial committee against unrepentant wrongdoers, disassociation is an action taken by an individual who has decided that he no longer desires to be one of Jehovah's Witnesses. (1 John 2:19)

A person would be viewed as one who has disassociated himself when he advises the congregation, usually in writing, that he no longer desires to be recognized as one of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Or, if the individual takes a course contrary to the neutral position of the Christian congregation, then the congregation is compelled to view him as one who has chosen to separate from us. (Isa. 2:4; John 15:17-19; see Kingdom Ministry School Textbook, 1977, pp. 61, 62.)

Those who disassociate themselves should be viewed and treated the same as disfellowshipped persons.

A brief announcement should be made to the congregation that this individual is, by his chosen course, no longer desirous of being one of Jehovah's Witnesses, and the Branch Office should be notified.

If one who disassociates himself wants to return to the congregation, he must request a hearing for reinstatement just like one who has been disfellowshipped.

Judging with Righteous Judgment

It is important to judge impartially and with righteous judgment. (1 Pet. 1:17; John 7:24) Individual overseers and elders making up judicial committees are called upon to counsel, correct, reprove and take disfellowshipping action where necessary. By following principles and laws set out in God's Word they judge for Jehovah and he is with them in the matter of judgment.—2 Chron. 19:6.

JEHOVAH MAKES PROVISION TO CORRECT HIS PEOPLE

Why is correction needed? (Prov. 14:12; Jer. 10:23, 24)

As a loving heavenly Father, He provides correction and discipline whenever needed. (Heb. 12:4-6)

Human instrumentalities among the various agencies used to correct.

In Israel, prophets and kings spoke in name of Jehovah and in accord with his Word. (1 Sam. 15:22, 23; 2 Sam. 23:2; Jer. 2:1, 20, 29-31)

Overseers used in early Christian congregation and modern-day visible organization. (Titus 1:5; Heb. 13:17)

God's Word is basis for giving needed correction. (2 Tim. 3:14-17)

If authoritative Scriptural counsel and admonition are ignored and individuals persist in walking disorderly or in course not yet serious enough for judicial action, such may be "marked." (2 Thess. 3:14, 15)

What are some situations where such 'marking' would be appropriate? (See The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, pages 19-21, pars. 12-21.)

JUDGMENT RELATED TO REPENTANCE

What is genuine repentance in situations where dedicated Christians are concerned? (See ad, p. 1385, pars. 12-14; *ks*77, p. 72.)

Consider example.

Why is it so vital for wrongdoers?

First step leading back to God. (Rom. 2:4)

In handling cases of wrongdoing, why should elders be careful in deciding whether someone is repentant? (See The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, pages 24-26, paragraphs 13-19 and 24.)

Distinguish between genuine and seeming repentance. (See The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, pages 24, 25, paragraphs 16, 17.)

Seeming repentance in relation to repeated sin.

Does one's pattern of life really give evidence of 'producing fruit that befits repentance'? (Matt. 3:8) If gross sin extended over period of time, would be questionable whether wrongdoer belongs in God's congregation. (See The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, page 26, paragraphs 23, 25.)

Consider example.

What is involved in "works that befit repentance"? (Acts 26:20) (See The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, pages 25, 26, pars. 20-22.)

WAT.0019.001.0047

QUESTIONS REGARDING REPROOF

Who has the responsibility to reprove wrongdoers in the congregation? (2 Tim. 4:1, 2; Titus 1:9)

How is reproof administered "before all onlookers"? Under what circumstances? (1 Tim. 5:20; see The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, pages 24, 26, paragraphs 11, 12, 26.)

In cases where sin is widely known or will no doubt become known, what steps are taken to safeguard entire congregation from corrupting influence? (See The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, pages 26, 27, paragraphs 27-30.)

APPLYING JESUS' COUNSEL ON HANDLING CERTAIN WRONGS

Consider steps outlined in Matthew 18:15-17.

These could be serious sins that might be settled initially on personal basis.

Under what circumstances would first step be taken? (Matt. 18:15)

Petty, personal offenses or differences not meant here.

What cases of sinning are handled directly by judicial committee? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 17, footnote on paragraph 9.)

What is involved in second step, if necessary? (Matt. 18:16)

Who qualify as witnesses in such procedure?

WAT.0019.001.0048

When would third step be taken, and how? (Matt. 18:17)

What is meant if one is to be treated "as a man of the nations and as a tax collector"? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, pages 18-20, paragraphs 15-21.)

PROPRIETY OF DISFELLOWSHIPPING

Purposes served by such action:

1. Upholds Jehovah's name and standard of righteousness. (Acts 15:14; 1 Pet. 1:14-16; compare Isaiah 52:5.)
2. Protects purity of congregation. (1 Cor. 5:1-5; 2 Cor. 7:11)
3. Can affect wrongdoer, jolting him to his senses.

Implications of disassociation.

What does God's Word say about those who renounce way of truth, either by written notice or by actions? (1 John 2:19; Rev. 19:17-21; Isa. 2:4; see The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 23, paragraphs 14-16.)

How should disfellowshipped and disassociated ones be treated?

What Scriptural and historical guidelines do we have? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, pages 22, 23, paragraphs 9-12.)

Explain the full import of Paul's words at 1 Corinthians 5:11-13. (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 24, paragraphs 18-20.)

WAT.0019.001.0049

What about speaking to or associating with disfellowshipped or disassociated person? (2 John 9-11; see The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, pages 24, 25, paragraphs 21-24.)

Why should we adhere to John's counsel about not being a 'sharer in their wicked works'? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, pages 25, 26, paragraphs 26-28.)

Consider example.

If someone asks about being restored to God's favor or gives evidence of repentance and desires to be reinstated, who initiates action? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 25, paragraph 24.)

How might problems result where relatives are concerned?

Name some situations. (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 27, paragraphs 5-7.)

How do Jesus' words at Matthew 10:34-38 have a bearing on this matter?

What special problems may arise in relation to family and social gatherings? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 30, paragraphs 22-24.)

How are funerals involved, and what governs arrangements that might be made? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 31, paragraph 26.)

What tests do these matters bring on all involved? (See The Watchtower, September 15, 1981, page 31, paragraphs 27, 28.)

The Bible speaks of reproving "with severity, that they may be healthy in the faith." (Titus 1:13) When? How?

WAT.0019.001.0050

Remember, administering reproof is not just making a decision or even announcing it; rather, it requires convicting, convincing the wrongdoer of the error of his way, so that he stops doing all that is bad and establishes himself as a practicer of good. This includes helping him to see how lesser sins led to serious deflection from Jehovah's law.

Some wrongdoers have gone so far into a practice of sin that it may be difficult for them to show sufficient fruitage of repentance to justify allowing them to remain in the congregation. (Consider Paul's command concerning the man at Corinth, 1 Corinthians 5:3-5, 13.)

Deciding the case.

If the person is guilty of gross, serious sins, such as those listed in *ks*77, pages 57-59, and he is unrepentant, he must be disfellowshipped.

If, although guilty of such a sin, he has truly repented and is producing fruitage of repentance, thus no longer posing a threat to the cleanness of the congregation or bringing it into public disrepute, then he should be reproved rather than disfellowshipped.

In the case of reproof, there may be good reasons why an announcement of the reproof should be made to the congregation. (See The Watchtower, December 1, 1976, page 734; September 1, 1981, pages 26, 27, paragraphs 27-29.)

In almost all cases of reproof, restrictions should be imposed. (See Organization, page 167; Our Kingdom Service, March 1975, page 4; The Watchtower, September 1, 1981, page 27, paragraph 29.)

WAT.0019.001.0051

APPEAL HEARINGS

Consider reasons for appeal. (km 1/80 p. 4)

If the disfellowshipped person believes a serious error in judgment was committed:

He should make known in writing his reason for requesting an appeal, doing so within one week from the time he was notified of the committee's decision and addressing it to the body of elders of the congregation which took the action.

Does he deny that he is guilty of committing a disfellowshipping offense?

If he admits guilt on a disfellowshipping charge, does he claim that at the time of the hearing he was repentant? If he does, had he produced "works that befit repentance" to a sufficient degree so as to offset the sin(s) committed, thus establishing that he was no longer a threat to the cleanness of the congregation? (Acts 26:20)

When an appeal is heard, it is necessary to rehear all the evidence relevant to the case, including that which was presented originally and any new evidence now available.

Wherever possible, the judicial committee that heard the original case should be present at the appeal hearing(s) and should furnish the appeal committee whatever written records they have on the first hearing(s).

If they believe that earlier testimony is being changed, they can so state.

The appeal committee may also wish to question them privately as to their reasons for reaching the conclusion they did.

WAT.0019.001.0052

Was there an error in judgment or was decision of original committee basically sound according to evidence, factors available and attitude of accused at their hearing(s)?

Major goals are to ascertain whether there was a Scriptural basis for the original action taken and whether the individual was repentant at the time the action was taken.

If the appeal committee determines that really it was a "matter of judgment" and there was a basis for the action taken, although it might have been decided another way, they would likely decide to leave the decision as it is, trusting the judgment of the committee that was on the scene when the case was first heard.

It may be found that there is no valid basis for the disfellowshipping on the ground the initial committee used, but there is another ground for taking action to disfellowship, so that there is no reason to rescind the disfellowshipping.

Consider example.

If the appeal committee decides to reverse the disfellowshipping, they should first refer their decision to the Branch Office for review, supplying reasons for their decision and giving a copy to the original judicial committee. If, for some reason, the original committee does not concur with the appeal committee, they should submit their observations as well as their original letter outlining their disfellowshipping decision along with the letter from the appeal committee.

WAT.0019.001.0053

The disfellowshipped party should not be given, at this time, any intimation of the decision to rescind the disfellowshipping.

After the Branch Office has approved which decision applies, the original judicial committee will be advised and will inform the parties involved accordingly.

Examples and problems:

1. A youth disfellowshipped for drug abuse appeals because he has 'the right to do so' and desires another committee to hear the case. (See km 1/80, p. 4.)

2. A sister, appealing her disfellowshipping, admitted she celebrated a religious holiday with her relatives but claims to have been reached by the counsel given during the hearings. She states that she will never again become involved in the sin and has informed her relatives of her decision.

3. This man lied about his sins and tried to cover them over by bringing accusations against others, until finally the necessary witnesses were found. After being informed of the decision to disfellowship, he came to his senses, corrected the problems (sins), producing fruitage of repentance, and on this basis appealed.

REINSTATEMENT

(See Kingdom Ministry School Textbook, 1977, pp. 63, 64; Organization, pp. 176-178; The Watchtower, March 1, 1977, page 152.)

In hearing pleas for reinstatement, elders need to be balanced.

It is not just a matter of accepting a person back simply because of his request and the passing of some time.

Before making a decision the elders must determine whether the wrongdoer is truly repentant.

Consider the overall pattern, whether the person is repentant over wrongdoing of which he really was guilty and for which clear evidence existed.

Generally, the elders of the congregation that originally disfellowshipped the person will consider the plea and decide whether there are grounds for reinstatement.

Consider example.

Much is involved in judging with righteous judgment.

By following Scriptural principles and procedures outlined, elders will be able to discharge their responsibility to Jehovah and toward the flock. (2 Tim. 4:1, 2)

NOTE: Bible quotations in this book are from the New World Translation of the Holy Scriptures, 1981 edition, unless otherwise indicated.

Dear Fellow Ministers:

Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry is published for Jehovah's Witnesses. It draws attention to our basic Scriptural responsibilities. By reading it you will get an overall view of how the Christian congregation operates today. Its counsel and direction will help us to remain at unity with our brothers everywhere, who are busily 'engaged in the holy work of the good news of God.'—Rom. 15:16.

In addition to preaching the good news of the Kingdom worldwide, our aim is to help those thousands of people newly associating with us. Many of them desire to meet the Scriptural requirements for becoming dedicated and baptized witnesses of Jehovah. They, too, need to become familiar with Jehovah's organization and how to share the Kingdom good news with others. To that end, information has been included in this book that is especially beneficial to such persons.

General information is here published concerning the duties of elders and ministerial servants, judicial procedures and various features of congregation organization. Details regarding these matters are reviewed from time to time in The Watchtower, Our Kingdom Ministry and other publications of the Society.

It is our prayer that the reading and application of what is contained in this publication will bring Jehovah's blessing and will play a vital role in helping all of us to be theocratically organized to 'fully accomplish our ministry.'—2 Tim. 4:5.

proved himself to be like his heavenly Father, Jehovah God.—Isa. 40:11.

World events fulfilling Bible prophecy prove beyond doubt that since 1914 Jesus Christ has been entrusted with Kingdom power. He is now ruling in the midst of his enemies. (Ps. 110:1, 2; 2:1-12) What does this portend for those now living on earth? As to his enemies, his role as King of kings and Lord of lords will be powerfully demonstrated when he executes divine judgment against them. (Rev. 11:15; 12:10; 19:16) Jehovah's promise of deliverance expressed at the beginning of man's rebellion will soon be fulfilled toward those on his right hand of favor. (Rom. 16:20) How happy we are to have recognized Christ's role in God's arrangement and to be organized to accomplish a worldwide ministry under his leadership during these last days!

HOW THE CONGREGATION IS ORGANIZED AND GOVERNED

AN IMPORTANT basic truth about God was expressed by the apostle Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians when he wrote: "For God is a God, not of disorder, but of peace." Then, commenting further with regard to congregation meetings he said: "But let all things take place decently and by arrangement."—1 Cor. 14:33, 40.

At the very beginning of this same letter the apostle gave admonition concerning reported dissensions within the Corinthian congregation. Paul exhorted the brothers there to "speak in agreement" and to be "fitly united in the same mind and in the same line of thought." (1 Cor. 1:

CHAPTER 4

HOW THE CONGREGATION IS ORGANIZED AND GOVERNED

AN IMPORTANT basic truth about God was expressed by the apostle Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians when he wrote: "For God is a God, not of disorder, but of peace." Then, commenting further with regard to congregation meetings he said: "But let all things take place decently and by arrangement."—1 Cor. 14:33, 40.

At the very beginning of this same letter the apostle gave admonition concerning reported dissensions within the Corinthian congregation. Paul exhorted the brothers there to "speak in agreement" and to be "fitly united in the same mind and in the same line of thought." (1 Cor. 1:

10, 11) He then proceeded to give counsel with regard to various matters that were affecting the unity of the congregation. Using the illustration of a perfect human body, he showed clearly the need for unity and cooperation. Hence all those making up the Christian congregation, regardless of their position, are urged to care for one another in a loving way. (1 Cor. 12:12-26) Such harmonious cooperation among the various members of the congregation implies an orderly arrangement—organization.

But how was the Christian congregation to be organized? Who would organize it? What kind of organization would it have and who would be in charge? A key thought for our protection today, as it was for the first-century Christians in Corinth, is what the apostle stated at 1 Corinthians 4:6. There he gave the rule: "Do not go beyond the things that are written." By letting the Bible be our guide, we can get clear answers to our questions.

ORGANIZED THEOCRATICALLY

The Christian congregation was established in 33 C.E. on the Jewish festival day of Pentecost. It was organized and governed theocratically, that is, under God (theos) rule (kratos). The inspired account of what took place there in Jerusalem nearly 2,000 years ago leaves no doubt that the congregation of anointed ones was established by God. (Acts 2:1-47) It was his building, his household. (1 Cor. 3:9; Eph. 2:19) It is important for us to learn what we can about the congregation back there because the same pattern of organization and operation that was established during the first century is adhered to by the Christian congregation of God today, which has now been enlarged by the addition of the "great crowd." —Rev. 7:9, 10.

The early congregation began with about 120 members. Holy spirit was poured out first upon these in fulfillment of Joel 2:28, 29. (Acts 2: 16-18) But that same day 3,000 others were baptized in water and brought into the spirit-begotten congregation. They had embraced the word about the Christ and "continued devoting themselves to the teaching of the apostles." After that, "Jehovah continued to join to them daily those being saved."—Acts 2:41, 42, 47.

The growth of the anointed congregation in Jerusalem became such that the Jewish high priest accused the disciples of having filled Jerusalem with their teaching. The new disciples in Jerusalem included many Jewish priests who became part of the congregation.—Acts 5:28; 6:7.

Jesus had said: "You will be witnesses of me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea and Samaria and to the most distant part of the earth." (Acts 1:8) And so it was that when a great persecution arose in Jerusalem following the death of Stephen, the disciples living there were scattered throughout Judea and Samaria. But wherever they went they continued declaring the good news and making more disciples, including some from among the Samaritans. (Acts 8:1-13) Still later the good news began to be preached with good success among the uncircumcised non-Jewish nations. (Acts 10:1-48) All this preaching activity and the making of many disciples resulted in new Christian congregations being formed outside Jerusalem.—Acts 11:19-21; 14:21-23.

Arrangements were made for each newly established congregation to be organized and governed God's way, hence theocratically. This involved the appointment of older men to care for the flock. Paul and Barnabas made such appointments in the congregations that were organized during their first missionary journey. (Acts 14: 23) Acts chapter 20 relates information about the apostle Paul's meeting with the older men of the congregation in Ephesus. Paul said to them: "Pay attention to yourselves and to all the flock, among which the holy spirit has appointed you overseers, to shepherd the congregation of God, which he purchased with the blood of his own Son." (Acts 20:28) These were older men in a spiritual sense who qualified for appointment because of their spiritual qualifications. (1 Tim. 3: 1-7) Paul's fellow worker Titus was authorized to make appointments of older men in the congregations of Crete.—Titus 1:5.

As more congregations were formed, the apostles and the older men in the Jerusalem congregation continued to serve as the principal overseers of the expanded international congregation of the first century. From their position in the Jerusalem congregation they served as a governing body for the entire Christian congregation. It was their responsibility to consider matters affecting Christians everywhere. They sent out letters and decrees, all of which strengthened the congregations and made it possible for the disciples to remain united in thought and action. The congregations followed the direction of the governing body and, as a result, they received Jehovah's blessing and prospered.—Acts 8:1, 14, 15; 15:1, 2, 22-31; 16:4, 5.

The apostle Paul, in writing to the congregation in Ephesus, explained that the unity of the Christian congregation would be maintained through adherence to the headship of Jesus Christ and by the operation of holy spirit. He urged Christians there to cultivate humility and to observe a oneness of the spirit in peaceful association among all members of the congregation. (Eph. 4:1-6) Then he quoted Psalm 68:18 and applied it to Jehovah's provision for spiritually qualified men to serve the needs of the congregation as apostles, prophets, evangelizers, shepherds and teachers. Such men, as gifts from Jehovah, would build up the entire congregation to a spiritual fullness that would be pleasing to God.—Eph. 4:7-16.

CONGREGATION TODAY FOLLOWS APOSTOLIC PATTERN

Today a similar pattern of organization is followed in all the congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses. These collectively form a united worldwide congregation built around the nucleus of spirit-anointed ones. (Zech. 8:23) This is possible because Jesus Christ, true to his promise, has loyally remained with his anointed disciples "all the days until the conclusion of the system of things." (Matt. 28:20) They dedicate their life unreservedly to Jehovah God and faithfully do his will. Those brought into the growing congregation today embrace the good news of God and are baptized as disciples of Jesus Christ. (Mark 1:14; Acts 2:41) They recognize the headship of Jesus Christ not only over the anointed members of the congregation but also over the entire flock which includes the "other sheep."—John 10:16; Eph. 1:22, 23.

Unity is maintained by loyally recognizing the headship of Christ and also by submitting to an organizational channel, "the faithful and discreet slave." What has the Master appointed this "slave" to do? Jesus answered that the "slave" was to provide spiritual food at the proper time and to care for all His "belongings," or Kingdom interests on earth. (Matt. 24:45-47; Luke 12:42-44) Rather than being an individual Christian, the 'faithful slave' today is the remnant, still living on earth, of the composite body of Christ's anointed footstep followers. Such remaining ones are a part of spiritual Israel, the anointed congregation of God. (Gal. 6:16; compare Isaiah 43:10.) This remnant is faithfully discharging the responsibilities of the "slave" during this time of the end by taking the lead in the preaching of "this good news of the kingdom" throughout all the earth and by providing spiritual food at the proper time for the household of faith.—Matt. 24:14.

USE OF RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS

During these last days of the present wicked system of things, the "belongings" of the Master have increased abundantly throughout all the earth. This has placed a heavy responsibility on the 'faithful slave.' In discharging its responsibility to provide spiritual food at the proper time and in order to get the good news of the Kingdom preached before the end comes, the remnant on earth, as "the faithful and discreet slave" class, has formed certain agencies, or legal entities. It has proved to be the course of wisdom for the 'faithful slave' to organize certain corporations that are recognized by the laws of various countries. These religious corporations own and operate printing facilities that produce and distribute Bibles and Bible literature on a worldwide basis for use in the Kingdom ministry.

The first in time and the principal corporation used in this way is the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania. This nonprofit religious society was incorporated in 1884, is made up of dedicated, baptized Christians and is exclusively devoted to advancing the interests of true worship in the earth. The Watch Tower Society has extended its works worldwide, establishing branch offices in various countries. Also, in compliance with local governmental regulations, a number of other religious societies have been legally formed, such as the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of New York, Inc. (1909) and the International Bible Students Association in London, England (1914). All these legal instrumentalities cooperate with one another. These and other legal corporations are used by the modern-day Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses to facilitate the preaching of the good news worldwide and to care for the spiritual needs of the entire congregation of God in all parts of the earth.

STRUCTURE UNDER BRANCH ORGANIZATION

Whenever a branch office is established, a Branch Committee of three or more elders is appointed to care for the various responsibilities involved in looking after the work in the country or countries under the jurisdiction of that particular branch. One member of the committee serves as the coordinator of the Branch Committee.

Local congregations under each branch organization are arranged into circuits and a number of circuits make up a district. Circuits and districts may be of various sizes depending on geographical and language considerations, as well as the number of congregations within the area assigned to a branch. A circuit overseer is appointed to serve the congregations in each circuit. District overseers visit the different circuits, serve at circuit assemblies and spend some time serving congregations, usually with the circuit overseer present. The duties of traveling overseers are set out from time to time in Our Kingdom Ministry as well as in correspondence addressed to them by the Society.

All in the organization recognize God's way of theocratic control. The congregations acknowledge and conform to the guidance of the Governing Body as it outlines organizational arrangements for the benefit of all. They accept the appointments made of older men to oversee the branches, districts, circuits and congregations. They look to "the faithful and discreet slave" for spiritual food at the proper time. (Matt. 24:45-47) The 'faithful slave' remnant and its Governing Body, in turn, adhere strictly to the headship of Christ, hold to Bible principles and submit to the direction of holy spirit. As all work together in unity, the results are the same as those experienced by the congregations in the first century. We are told at Acts 16:5: "Therefore, indeed, the congregations continued to be made firm in the faith and to increase in number from day to day."

CHAPTER 5

OVERSEERS TO SHEPHERD THE FLOCK

DURING his earthly ministry Jesus proved himself to be the Fine Shepherd. (John 10:11) We are told that once, upon viewing the crowds following him, "he felt pity for them, because they were skinned and thrown about like sheep without a shepherd." (Matt. 9:36) Peter and the other apostles observed closely his loving concern. How different he was from the false shepherds of Israel who neglected the flock to such an extent that the sheep were scattered and spiritually starved! (Ezek. 34:7, 8) By observing Jesus' fine example of teaching and caring for the sheep, even to the point of laying down his life for them, the apostles learned how to help those with faith return to Jehovah, the Shepherd and Overseer of their souls.—1 Pet. 2:25.

By precept and example Jesus reinforced the serious responsibility he had laid upon the apostles to care for the sheep. They never lost sight of it. On one occasion Jesus impressed very strongly upon Peter's mind and heart the importance of feeding and shepherding the sheep. (John 21: 15-17) Peter was deeply moved by this as indicated later in his exhortation to older men. In his first inspired letter he wrote: "Therefore, . . . shepherd the flock of God in your care, not under compulsion, but willingly; neither for love of dishonest gain, but eagerly; neither as lording it over those who are God's inheritance, but becoming examples to the flock."—1 Pet. 5:1-3.

Peter's words apply with equal force to overseers in the congregation today. The need for having overseers in the congregations today is the same as it was back there in the first century, namely, to shepherd the flock of God. In his letter Peter emphasized the proper attitude that overseers should have in caring for such responsibility. Imitating Jesus, they should serve willingly, eagerly and as examples to the flock, taking the lead in Jehovah's service.

We can indeed be grateful for having spirit-appointed overseers in the congregation today. The benefits we receive are many. For example, overseers give spiritual encouragement and personal attention to the needs of individual members of the congregation. Each week with earnestness they preside at congregation meetings where all are nourished in the faith. (Rom. 12:8) Their efforts to protect the flock from harmful elements and wicked men contribute to our spiritual security. (Isa. 32:2; Titus 1:9-11) Moreover, by their example and lead in the field ministry we are encouraged to keep active in preaching the good news regularly each month. (Phil. 3:16, 17; Heb. 13:15-17) Through these "gifts in men" Jehovah has provided well for the building up of the congregation.—Eph. 4:8, 11, 12.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR OVERSEERS

To ensure proper care of the congregation, men appointed to serve as overseers must meet the requirements set out in God's Word. Only if they do qualify could it be said that they have been appointed by holy spirit. (Acts 20:28) The Scriptural standards for Christian overseers are admittedly high, since these men have the serious responsibility of taking the lead in Jehovah's worship and being exemplary in Christian conduct. (1 Cor. 11:1; Heb. 13:7; 1 Pet. 5:3) But the standards are not so high that they cannot be met by Christian men who have a real love for Jehovah and a willingness to be used by him. The high standards provide a guarantee that those appointed as elders will be good examples in the congregation. It should be obvious to all that the overseers are individuals who apply the counsel from the Bible in all affairs of life.

The apostle Paul wrote down the basic Scriptural requirements for overseers in his first letter to Timothy and in his letter to Titus. At 1 Timothy 3:1-7 he wrote: "If any man is reaching out for an office of overseer, he is desirous of a fine work. The overseer should therefore be irreprehensible, a husband of one wife, moderate in habits, sound in mind, orderly, hospitable, qualified to teach, not a drunken brawler, not a smiter, but reasonable, not belligerent, not a lover of money, a man presiding over his own household in a fine manner, having children in subjection with all seriousness; (if indeed any man does not know how to preside over his own household, how will he take care of God's congregation?) not a newly converted man, for fear that he might get puffed up with pride and fall into the judgment passed upon the Devil. Moreover, he should also have a fine testimony from people on the outside, in order that he might not fall into reproach and a snare of the Devil."

Paul's words to Titus state: "For this reason I left you in Crete, that you might correct the things that were defective and might make appointments of older men in city after city, as I gave you orders; if there is any man free from accusation, a husband of one wife, having believing children that were not under a charge of debauchery nor unruly. For an overseer must be free from accusation as God's steward, not self-willed, not prone to wrath, not a drunken brawler, not a smiter, not greedy of dishonest gain, but hospitable, a lover of goodness, sound in mind, righteous, loyal, self-controlled, holding firmly to the faithful word as respects his art of teaching, that he may be able both to exhort by the teaching that is healthful and to reprove those who contradict." (Titus 1:5-9) Paul's counsel quoted above emphasizes the need for overseers to maintain a proper attitude toward carrying out their responsibilities, being willing and eager, taking the lead. Other Bible writers more indirectly or by implication set out what would be required of Christian men in order for them to qualify for appointment as overseers, or shepherds, of the congregation.—Jas. 3:13, 17, 18.

Although a first consideration of the Scriptural requirements may prove to be somewhat overwhelming, there should be no reason for Christian men to shy away from desiring the fine work associated with the office of overseer. The fact is that all dedicated Christians should strive to measure up to these high standards. By taking the lead in exhibiting fine Christian qualities, overseers encourage other members of the congregation to do the same. This is indicated by what the apostle Paul wrote in describing how "gifts in men" are provided "with a view to the readjustment of the holy ones, for ministerial work, for the building up of the body of the Christ, until we all attain to the oneness in the faith and in the accurate knowledge of the Son of God, to a full-grown man, to the measure of stature that belongs to the fullness of the Christ." (Eph. 4:8, 12, 13) Since all Christians are to strive to attain spiritual maturity, those standing before the congregation as appointed overseers are required to be exemplary in taking the lead.

As indicated by what Paul wrote to Timothy and Titus, overseers would be selected from among the older men of the congregation. They would not be mere boys or newly converted men, but they would be individuals with experience in Christian living, having a broad knowledge of the Bible, a deep understanding of it and a genuine love for the congregation. They would be individuals who have the courage to speak up when wrongdoing exists and to take the needed action to correct it and thus protect the flock from any who would selfishly exploit them. (Isa. 32:2) They would be men readily recognized by all in the congregation as spiritually mature men with a genuine concern for the flock of God. Their overall way of life would show this.

Those qualifying for appointment as overseers of the flock of God would be men experienced in life who had demonstrated a measure of practical wisdom in carrying on their own affairs. If married, they would be adhering to the Christian standard for marriage, namely, husband of one wife, and would have demonstrated their ability to preside over their own household in a fine manner. Because of their having believing children who are not under a charge of debauchery nor unruly but who are in subjection with all seriousness, other members of the congregation could confidently approach overseers for counsel and advice on a wide range of personal matters having to do with Christian living. Having conducted themselves properly within the family arrangement as well as within the community in general, these men would also be irreprehensible, free from accusation and have a fine testimony even from people on the outside. No valid charge of improper conduct could be brought against them to mar the reputation of the congregation. They would not have been reproved recently for serious wrongdoing. Others in the congregation would be moved to imitate their fine example and entrust their spiritual life to their care.—1 Cor. 11:1; 16:15, 16; Phil. 2:25, 29; Heb. 13:7.

Such qualified men would be able to serve the Christian congregation in a role similar to that of the older men of Israel who were described as "wise and discreet and experienced." (Deut. 1:13) They would not be without sin. (Rom. 3:23) But they would be known in the congregation and in the community as being upright and God-fearing, men who had demonstrated over a period of time that they conduct their life entirely on the basis of God's principles. Their blamelessness would give them freeness of speech before others in the congregation.

Men qualifying for appointment as overseers would display moderation in personal habits and in their dealing with others. They would not be fanatics, but their way of life would be characterized by balance, orderliness and self-control. Moderation would be demonstrated in such things as eating, drinking, recreation, hobbies and entertainment. They would not be given to a lot of wine but would be moderate in the use of alcoholic beverages so as not to leave themselves open to charges of drunkenness or of being a drunken brawler. One whose senses have been dulled by intoxicating drink easily loses self-control and so is not in a position to watch over the spiritual interests of the congregation.

Exercising oversight of the affairs of the congregation requires one to demonstrate a measure of orderliness, being systematic in life, habits and work. This includes his personal appearance, his home and his activities. Such one avoids procrastination, is able to see what is required and plans accordingly. He adheres to theocratic order. All of this is what is meant by being moderate in habits and self-controlled.

An overseer must be reasonable. He must be able to work in unity and cooperate with others within the body of older men who are charged with the oversight of the congregation. He should have a proper view of himself in relation to others both within the congregation and outside. As a reasonable person, the overseer would not be opinionated, considering his views and opinions as always superior to those of his fellow elders. Others may excel in qualities or abilities that he may lack. Reasonableness comes as a result of basing one's conclusions solidly on the Scriptures and striving to imitate the example of Jesus Christ. (Phil. 2:2-8) By showing proper respect for others and considering others as superior to himself, an elder would not become belligerent or be a smiter of others with either physical or verbal abuse. He would not be self-willed, always insisting on his own way or that his point of view must be accepted as best. He would not be prone to wrath but would be peaceable in his dealings with others.

Similarly, one qualifying to serve as an overseer in the congregation should be sound in mind. This means that he should have a good comprehension of Jehovah's principles and their application. He should be levelheaded, not hasty in judgment. He should be receptive to counsel and direction. He should not be double-minded or hypocritical, not fanatical.

The apostle reminded Titus that an overseer should also be a lover of goodness. He should be righteous and loyal. These qualities would be reflected in his dealings with others and in his firm stand for what is right and good. He would be known as one who is unwavering in his devotion to Jehovah and consistent in upholding righteous principles when making judgments. He would be one who is able to keep a confidence.

As one who is sound in mind, of course, he would not be overly demanding in what he expects of others. Neither would the overseer be unduly concerned about material advantages for himself, not greedy of dishonest gain, not a lover of money. He would not use his office to take material advantage of the brothers under his care nor would he hold back because of the reasonable material sacrifices he may be required to make in order to give generously of his time in caring for the needs of the congregation. His love for the brothers, as well as for strangers, and his self-sacrificing endeavors in their behalf would make him as one who is genuinely hospitable, freely giving of himself and his belongings for the benefit of others.—Acts 20:33-35.

In order to carry out his assignment effectively, one appointed as an overseer, or shepherd, of the congregation would need to be qualified to teach. Paul's words to Titus were that the overseer would be one "holding firmly to the faithful word as respects his art of teaching, that he may be able both to exhort by the teaching that is healthful and to reprove those who contradict." (Titus 1:9) In exhibiting his art of teaching the overseer should have the ability to reason with others, produce evidence, overcome objections and set out with clearness the teaching of the Scriptures in such a way that others would be convinced and have their faith strengthened. The overseer would need to exercise such teaching ability under circumstances both favorable and unfavorable. (2 Tim. 4:2) He would need to have the patience to reprove with mildness one who is in error or convince a doubter and move him to profitable works on the basis of faith. His being qualified to teach either before an audience or on a person-to-person basis would give evidence of his meeting this important requirement.

The apostle Peter wrote that the older men of the congregation who serve in a representative capacity should do so willingly and with eagerness, not under compulsion nor begrudgingly. They should be enthusiastic in their endeavors. They should be taking the lead, becoming examples to the flock.—Heb. 13:17; 1 Pet. 5:3.

All of this may look like a great deal to expect from one who would serve as an overseer. Certainly none would measure up perfectly to the high standard that has been set forth in the Bible, as outlined here, but none of the appointed elders in the congregation should be so significantly deficient in any one of these qualities that the deficiency could be considered a serious flaw. Some elders will be more outstanding in one quality than in another, whereas others of the body will excel in those qualities in which some may be weak. The effect then is that, generally speaking, as a whole, the body will have within itself all the fine qualities that are necessary for exercising proper oversight of the congregation of God.

When recommending men for appointment as overseers, the body of elders will want to keep in mind their own standing before Jehovah and their relationship with fellow Christians. Romans 12:3 counsels that each one should in no way "think more of himself than it is necessary to think; but to think so as to have a sound mind, each one as God has distributed to him a measure of faith." Each should consider himself as a lesser one. None should prove to be "righteous overmuch" when examining the qualifications of another. (Eccl. 7:16) Having clearly in mind the Scriptural requirements for elders, they would want to determine whether or not one being considered measures up to those standards to a reasonable degree or whether he is so seriously deficient in one or more of the Scriptural requirements that he would not qualify to serve. Allowing for human imperfections and being free from biased leanings and hypocrisy, appointed elders will make their recommendations in a manner showing due respect for Jehovah's righteous standards and for the good of the congregation. Just as with Timothy and Titus, elders today need to give prayerful consideration to each recommendation and follow the direction of holy spirit. This is one of the serious responsibilities they shoulder, and they must do so in accord with Paul's admonition 'never to lay your hands hastily upon any man.'—1 Tim. 5:21, 22.

Men meeting these high Christian standards are able to protect the congregation from spiritual dangers, and they serve as fine examples of Christian conduct for all to imitate. They have freeness of speech enabling them to be bold in giving needed counsel to those within the congregation as well as being zealous to proclaim the good news in the field ministry.—Heb. 10: 19-23, 35; Acts 4:29; 1 Tim. 3:13.

FRUITAGE OF THE SPIRIT

Such spiritually qualified men would give evidence in their life that they were directed by holy spirit. They would be producing the fruitage of the spirit, described at Galatians 5:22, 23 as "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faith, mildness, self-control." Their oversight of the congregation would be refreshing to the brothers and would serve to unite the congregation in rendering sacred service. Their course of conduct and the fruitage of their labors would give evidence that they are appointed by holy spirit. (Acts 20:28) Having the spiritual requirements for overseers and shepherds stated so precisely in the inspired Scriptures has made it possible for us to have qualified appointed overseers to shepherd the flock today.

WAT.0020.001.0024

REACHING OUT

The office of overseer is to be desired by mature Christian men. (1 Tim. 3:1) However, the appointment means work, self-sacrifice and making oneself available to serve the needs of the brothers, caring for their spiritual interests. Reaching out for the office means striving to meet the qualifications set out in the Scriptures. The overseers of the congregation have a great responsibility as well as an accountability in caring for the souls of those entrusted to their care. Members of the congregation are told: "Be obedient to those who are taking the lead among you and be submissive, for they are keeping watch over your souls as those who will render an account; that they may do this with joy and not with sighing, for this would be damaging to you." (Heb. 13:17) Although the overseers are imperfect men, there is no need for anyone in the congregation to hold back from being submissive since it is Jehovah's arrangement and he will hold the overseers responsible for their actions. They are representing him and his theocratic rule. He will remove from office those overseers who fail to manifest the fruitage of the spirit and whose pattern of life falls short of the Scriptural requirements.

Overseers themselves must also take very seriously what is stated at Hebrews 13:17. They are referred to as "those who are taking the lead," "keeping watch over" the souls of the brothers and as "those who will render an account." Overseers must exercise special care not to 'lord it over' the flock of God, not to use their position of responsibility for selfish advantage or even serve because they feel that they are compelled to do so. The overseers must prove themselves to be loving shepherds of the flock of God.—1 Pet. 5:2, 3; Prov. 27:23.

Do we not truly appreciate the hard work and fine example of the congregation overseers? In writing to the congregation in Thessalonica Paul admonished the brothers: "Now we request you, brothers, to have regard for those who are working hard among you and presiding over you in the Lord and admonishing you; and to give them more than extraordinary consideration in love because of their work." (1 Thess. 5:12, 13) Much of the hard work of the congregation overseers serves to make our service to God easier and more enjoyable. Also, in his first letter to Timothy, Paul makes mention of the attitude that members of the congregation should cultivate toward the overseers, saying: "Let the older men who preside in a fine way be reckoned worthy of double honor, especially those who work hard in speaking and teaching."—1 Tim. 5:17.

PERSONAL CIRCUMSTANCES MAY CHANGE

Of course, a brother who has served faithfully for a period of time may become physically ill or otherwise incapacitated, perhaps due to advancing age, and may no longer be able to care for all the responsibilities of an overseer as he once did or in the way that other overseers do. Even so, he should still be viewed and respected as an older man as long as he is appointed. There would be no need for him to step aside due to his limitations. He is still due the double honor paid to all hardworking older men who are serving to the best of their respective abilities in shepherding the flock.

[redacted]

But if a brother should feel that it would be best for him to step aside due to changed personal circumstances that limit his ability to serve, he may choose to do so. He should still be held in respect and be able to do much good in the congregation, even though no longer having assignments and duties given to elders.

POSITIONS OF RESPONSIBILITY

Generally, men appointed as overseers are recommended for appointment by the local body of elders. This is done during regular visits of the circuit overseer. However, the Governing Body may appoint men who qualify to serve as overseers in any locality at any time. The Governing Body is not bound by the recommendations of any local group. Such recommendations serve merely as a guide and may even be rejected for reasons well known to the Governing Body. Also, at times, the Governing Body may authorize certain representatives to make appointments of overseers.—1 Tim. 1:3; Titus 1:5.

In each congregation there is a presiding overseer who serves for an indefinite period of time. The same is true of the secretary, service overseer, Watchtower Study conductor and Theocratic Ministry School overseer. The elders do not serve in these positions on a rotational basis. Of course, if a brother holding any of these positions moves, is unable to care for his responsibilities due to health reasons or becomes disqualified for failure to measure up to Scriptural requirements, another elder is selected to handle the assignment. In congregations where the number of overseers is limited, it may be necessary for an elder to handle more than one assignment until such time as other brothers qualify to be appointed as elders.

The presiding overseer serves as chairman at meetings of the body of elders. Communications and important records of the congregation are handled by the secretary who keeps the elders informed about important communications. Arrangements for field activity and other service-related matters come under the direction of the service overseer. The specific duties of these brothers, along with the Watchtower Study conductor, Theocratic Ministry School overseer and others who make up the body of elders, are set out from time to time in Our Kingdom Ministry and letters from the Society. Whenever appointments, deletions or removals of overseers and ministerial servants take place, appropriate announcements are made to the congregation. This enables all concerned to know who are currently serving within the local congregation and they can thus cooperate with the arrangement that is in effect.

It is suggested that the body of elders in each congregation meet periodically to discuss matters related to the spiritual progress of the congregation. Two such meetings are held each year in conjunction with the regular visits of the circuit overseer. About three months after each visit of the circuit overseer, a meeting can be scheduled. These four meetings during the year would most likely be sufficient for resolving any matters requiring the attention of the entire body of elders. Of course, the elders may convene at any time circumstances make it advisable. But if each one gives proper attention to his assigned duties and if the work of the elders is being adequately supervised and coordinated through the presiding overseer, meetings involving the entire body of elders can be kept to a minimum. Additionally, all the elders in the circuit meet with the circuit and district overseers during the week of the semiannual circuit assembly.

CONGREGATION SERVICE COMMITTEE

There are certain duties that are cared for by the Congregation Service Committee, made up of the presiding overseer, secretary and service overseer. Members of this committee are involved in handling and signing various forms, such as those used in connection with literature inventories, orders, field reports and recommendations for appointment or removal of overseers, ministerial servants or regular pioneers. From time to time the Society calls upon the Congregation Service Committee to perform other duties.

OTHER RESPONSIBILITIES OF ELDERS

The presiding overseer is responsible for overseeing the Service Meeting. Periodically, however, he may invite another elder to look after this assignment for a certain month. Depending on the number available and their individual abilities, various elders handle assignments in connection with the other congregation meetings each week. These meetings are planned, outlined and prepared in advance so that they will be instructive and spiritually upbuilding. The elders are responsible for presenting instructive public talks. These also take much time in preparation. Besides teaching in the congregation, the elders also take the lead in the field ministry. They work along with the publishers, setting the example.—Heb. 13:17; 1 Pet. 5:3.

CONGREGATION BOOK STUDY CONDUCTOR

One of the outstanding privileges in the congregation is to serve as a Congregation Book Study conductor. Such conductor has the opportunity to help others in a number of areas. Because this responsibility is a serious one, elders should be used, if available. If not, then one elder might care for more than one group, doing so at different times during the week. This, however, would depend on his circumstances. Or, capable ministerial servants could be used until such time as an elder can take over. This is something for the elders to decide. They would also decide to which group the conductor would be assigned.

One of the chief responsibilities of the Congregation Book Study conductor is teaching. In order to do so adequately, thorough preparation is necessary. He should know not only the answers to the study questions but also the reasons behind those answers and the value of the material. It should be his goal to help the group get a true understanding of what is being considered, so that they can apply the truths learned to their life and explain them to others. This would require a genuinely conscientious effort on his part, even as emphasized by Paul at Romans 12:7, where he wrote: "He that teaches, let him be at his teaching."

Another important feature of the book study conductor's work is that of taking the lead in the field ministry. The regularity, zeal and enthusiasm that he shows for the field activity will be reflected in the publishers. Because the brothers appreciate the encouragement and help that come through being together, a group witnessing schedule convenient for the majority should be worked out and maintained. (Luke 10:1-16) The conductor needs to plan so there is always enough territory to work. He will conduct the meeting for field service and organize the publishers for that day's work. When he cannot be there, he can arrange for another elder, ministerial servant or, if neither is available, another publisher in good standing to care for these responsibilities so that the publishers enjoy the good leadership they need.

A real help to the study conductor and the entire group is the service overseer. It is a wise conductor who plans ahead for the visit of the service overseer, keeping his group informed of the time of the visit and anticipating its benefits. As all in the group are kept fully aware of the arrangements and enthusiastically support them, there is a corresponding improvement in the field activity.

Each study group is purposely kept small. This allows for the study conductor to become well acquainted with all assigned to it. As a loving shepherd he is warmly interested in each one and will try to give personal help and encouragement for the field ministry, support of congregation meetings and whatever else is appropriate to assist in keeping each person spiritually strong. Some will benefit from a personal visit when ill or depressed. An encouraging suggestion or a word of counsel might prompt some to reach out for additional privileges in the congregation, thus becoming of greater use to their brothers. While most of his efforts logically will be directed toward helping those in his own group, as an elder and shepherd he will have the entire congregation in mind. He is lovingly concerned for all in the congregation and will be ready to help others who are in need.—Acts 20:17, 28.

BENEFITING INDIVIDUALLY

The hard work of the overseers includes many things that contribute to the spiritual well-being of the congregation as a whole and of its members individually. Much time is also used by these mature men in making visits to the homes of the brothers for the purpose of giving spiritual encouragement. While visiting the brothers privately in their home, or talking with them personally at the Kingdom Hall when home visits are not convenient or possible, the elders are able to give attention to the special needs of each one, just as a loving shepherd looks to the individual needs of each one of the many sheep in his flock.

At times it may appear that the overseers are so very busy that they really do not have time to give you the personal attention that is needed. Or you may hesitate to approach one of the overseers because you do not want to add to his burden. Although overseers do have many responsibilities and are kept busy not only with congregational matters but also with their own families and personal matters, members of the congregation should always feel free to approach them whenever they need help. It is unwise to allow a problem to remain unattended until it becomes serious. Also, it is not wise to reason that the overseers will learn of the problem by themselves if you do not bring it to their attention. Some matters causing disturbance may be more easily handled at an early stage before they grow into problems of major proportions.

CITY OVERSEER

A city overseer is appointed in cities where there is more than one congregation. Usually this appointment is made on the recommendation of the circuit overseer or circuit overseers, if more than one serves congregations in that city. This is not an appointment that changes each year. The city overseer does not exercise jurisdiction in any congregation other than the one in which he serves as an elder. The Society's branch office may wish to communicate with him on various matters, such as expired subscriptions or arrangements for assemblies and schools that may be held in his city. However, the branch deals directly with each congregation in regard to literature supplies, monthly field service reports and other matters.

CIRCUIT OVERSEER

The Governing Body appoints qualified elders to serve as circuit overseers. These are assigned by the branch office to visit, on a regular basis, the congregations that make up their circuits, usually twice a year. They also periodically visit pioneers, special pioneers or missionaries serving in isolated territory. They plan their routing and notify each congregation sufficiently in advance so the visit will result in the most benefit.

The presiding overseer takes the lead in organizing matters so the visit will prove spiritually refreshing to all. (Rom. 1:11, 12) After he receives notification of the visit and information about the needs of the circuit overseer and his wife, if married, he makes arrangements through various brothers to get the needed literature supplies, accommodations and other necessary things. He makes sure all, including the circuit overseer, are informed of these arrangements.

The circuit overseer will contact the presiding overseer regarding the scheduling of meetings, including meetings for field service. These will be arranged in accord with what is directed in Our Kingdom Ministry, letters from the branch, local circumstances and the circuit overseer's suggestions. All need to be informed in advance concerning the time of the meetings with the congregation, with the pioneers and with the elders and ministerial servants, as well as the places and times of meetings for field service. This will enable all to adjust their affairs so they can benefit from the entire week's activities.

Since the circuit overseer will check the congregation's records on Tuesday afternoon, such records should be in good order and available before he arrives. The presiding overseer will be sure to have them at the location where they will be checked. It is helpful if the presiding overseer or the secretary is available to render any assistance needed. The circuit overseer checks the Congregation's Publisher Record cards, monthly field service reports, meeting attendance records, territory records and the accounts. This will give him some insight as to possible needs of the congregation and how he may be of assistance to those responsible for keeping these records.

During his visit the circuit overseer takes time to speak with the brothers individually as he is able—at meetings, out in the field service, while enjoying their hospitality at mealtimes and otherwise. Additionally, he meets with the elders and ministerial servants, sharing appropriate Scriptural counsel, suggestions and encouragement that will help them shoulder their responsibilities in serving and shepherding the flock in their care. (Prov. 27:23; Acts 20:26-32; 1 Tim. 4:11-16) He also meets with the pioneers to encourage them in their work and give personal assistance with any problems they may be encountering in their ministry.

If there are problems that need attention, the circuit overseer will either handle these or assist the elders to the extent possible while he is with the congregation. He will strive to help the elders or individuals involved to locate the Scriptural direction that applies. If there has been some serious wrongdoing and the elders need his assistance in handling such, he will set aside time for this purpose. If there is anything that the branch office needs to do in following through, he and the elders will provide the office with a detailed report on the matter.

While with the congregation the circuit overseer attends the regular congregation meetings. These may be adjusted from time to time in harmony with directions in Our Kingdom Ministry, letters from the branch office or other directives from the Society. He will give several talks to the congregation. His objective will be to encourage, fortify and motivate the congregation. He will strive to build in each one love and appreciation for Jehovah, Jesus Christ and the organization. He will encourage zealous participation in field service, providing practical suggestions on how to do the work effectively.

One of the primary objectives of the circuit overseer's visit is to provide leadership in field service. Many in the congregations have been able to adjust their schedule so that they could have a fuller share in field service that week. Some have been able to arrange to be auxiliary pioneers the month of his visit. Could you do so? Those desirous of working with him or his wife can make an appointment to do so through the presiding overseer. Much good has been accomplished by taking the circuit overseer or his wife on Bible studies and return visits. At times adjustments have to be made to do this during his visit, but the benefits are worth it. The circuit overseer is encouraged to arrange for an early start in field service each day and to spend full days in service, taking into consideration local circumstances. Your extra effort to give full support to this aspect of the week's visit is deeply appreciated.—Prov. 27:17.

Circuit assemblies are arranged twice a year for each circuit. The circuit overseer is responsible for the operation of the assembly organization on these occasions. On the circuit overseer's recommendation the Society appoints permanent assembly personnel: an assembly overseer, an assistant assembly overseer and a news representative. They are to work closely with the circuit overseer in caring for the assembly organization. This will enable the circuit overseer to give his primary attention to the assembly program. The circuit overseer designates other capable men to care for various departments. He also arranges for an audit of the circuit accounts after each circuit assembly.

The circuit overseer reports his field service directly to the Society at the end of each month. He also submits a report on certain necessary expenses incurred, such as for travel, food and lodging, if these are not covered by the congregations. Additionally, the Society provides him with a small allowance for personal things and he receives literature and magazines at pioneer rates. These traveling representatives have confidence that, as Jesus promised, material needs will be provided if they seek continually the interests of Jehovah's Kingdom. (Luke 12:31) The congregations will want to be conscious of their privilege to display hospitality to these devoted elders who serve them.—3 John 5-8.

DISTRICT OVERSEER

The district overseer is a traveling elder who is also appointed by the Governing Body and assigned by the branch office to serve a number of circuits that comprise a district. He serves as chairman of the circuit assembly programs in his district and gives the public discourse on such programs. He works the first part of each week with a host congregation in the circuit being served. He takes the lead in group witnessing and gives an upbuilding Scriptural talk to the host congregation.

The branch office assigns each circuit the dates for its circuit assembly, and when the circuit overseer has secured assembly facilities for these dates he notifies the branch office. The branch office notifies the district overseer of this schedule, which he now follows as his assigned routing. Due to travel distances for the publishers and the small size of assembly facilities, some circuits have to be divided into sections with a circuit assembly held for each section. The district overseer is informed of this and spends a week in the circuit for each circuit assembly to be held. In advance he works out with the circuit overseer which congregation can appropriately be the host congregation for each circuit assembly.

The district overseer gives encouragement to the circuit overseer and his wife (if married) and offers helpful suggestions to assist them with their work. This he does on Tuesday afternoon of his visit. From time to time the branch office will outline points that they can beneficially discuss in this meeting. The circuit overseer and his wife may have questions on which they desire assistance. (Prov. 20:5) The district overseer, too, may have points to share due to things he has learned through experience and observation. Privately, the circuit overseer may want to discuss the needs of the circuit and points that the district overseer may be able to work into his talks on the circuit assembly program or at his meeting with the elders of the circuit.

While working with the host congregation during the first part of the week, the district overseer will give a talk to the congregation and attend an abbreviated Congregation Book Study on Tuesday evening. If the elders need advice or assistance with some congregation matters, they will let him know this in advance and he will meet with them. Primarily, during the week he will take the lead in group witnessing. He and his wife will have a full schedule for field service. The circuit overseer and his wife will also give full support to the field service activity that week. The presiding overseer will make sure all are informed of the arrangements for meetings for service. He will also see that adequate territory is available and make appointments in behalf of any who have requested to work with the traveling overseers.

At the conclusion of the circuit assembly (or assemblies) the district overseer will send the branch a report on how the program was presented and received in that circuit. Also, he will report on the spiritual condition and the needs of the circuit. Once a month he also reports his field service and expenses. His accommodations and expenses are cared for in the same way as those for the circuit overseer.

BRANCH COMMITTEE

In each of the branch offices of the Watch Tower Society throughout the world, three or more spiritually qualified and mature brothers serve as a Branch Committee to oversee the preaching work in the country or countries under their jurisdiction as assigned by the Society. One of the committee members serves as the Branch Committee coordinator.

Those serving on the Branch Committee handle matters pertaining to all the congregations in their territory. They arrange for the providing of publications furnished by "the faithful and discreet slave" to strengthen all associated with the congregations. Their primary objective is to see to it that the good news of the Kingdom is preached throughout the territory assigned, and that congregations, circuits and districts are set up to give proper oversight to the needs of the field. The Branch Committee also gives attention to missionaries and to special, regular and auxiliary pioneer activity. When there are assemblies and conventions, these brothers see to it that arrangements and assignments are made so as to ensure that everything takes "place decently and by arrangement."—1 Cor. 14:40.

The Governing Body makes all appointments of those selected to serve as members of Branch Committees throughout the world.

ZONE OVERSEER

Periodically, arrangements are made by the Governing Body to have qualified brothers serve each of the branches throughout the earth. Brothers used in this capacity are known as zone overseers. Their primary work is helping the Branch Committee with problems or questions they have to face in carrying on the preaching and disciple-making work. Wherever practical, the zone overseer also serves the missionaries who work under the many branches of the organization worldwide. He talks with them about their problems and needs, giving necessary encouragement in their most important Kingdom-preaching activity.

The zone overseer also examines the various records that are kept for operating a branch office. He is especially interested in what is being accomplished in the field as far as the Kingdom preaching and other congregational activities are concerned. If there is a printery, farm or other facility, he inspects each of these operations. When the zone overseer visits branches he also shares to the extent possible in the Kingdom-preaching work.

LOVING OVERSIGHT

Visits by traveling overseers provide an interchange of encouragement, and the congregations are thus strengthened and made firm in the faith. (Rom. 1:12; Eph. 4:3) All are made aware of their interdependency. Each one serving in the organization works for the common good of all and in spreading the Kingdom good news. (1 Cor. 12:12-31) Certainly we have all benefited greatly from the hard work and loving care of these mature Christian men. We will benefit even further as we continue submitting ourselves to congregation elders and other appointed overseers charged with shepherding the flock and with oversight of the work. (1 Cor. 16:15-18; Phil. 2:25, 29) As we all cooperate together we are drawn into unity with the head of the congregation, Christ Jesus, our Lord, the one appointed by Jehovah as the Fine Shepherd of the sheep. (Eph 1:22, 23) So it is that God's spirit permeates the congregations worldwide and his Word serves to guide the operation of the work throughout the earth. —Ps. 119:105.

CHAPTER 6

MINISTERIAL SERVANTS RENDER VALUABLE SERVICE

IN WRITING to the congregation at Philippi the apostle Paul said: "Paul and Timothy, slaves of Christ Jesus, to all the holy ones in union with Christ Jesus who are in Philippi, along with overseers and ministerial servants." (Phil. 1:1) Note, he made particular mention of the ministerial servants in his salutation. These men evidently fulfilled an important role in assisting the elders in the congregation back there. The same is true in our time. Ministerial servants render a number of services that are most helpful to overseers and contribute to the good order of the congregation.

Have you become acquainted with the ministerial servants in your congregation? Are you aware of the many fine services they perform for your benefit and for the benefit of the entire congregation? Perhaps you have not thought of their assigned duties as being of great consequence. But the apostle specifically mentions them and states that "the men who minister in a fine manner are acquiring for themselves a fine standing and great freeness of speech in the faith in connection with Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. 3:13.

SCRIPTURAL REQUIREMENTS FOR MINISTERIAL SERVANTS

Ministerial servants are expected to lead a wholesome Christian life, be responsible men and give proof that they are able to care for assignments properly. This becomes obvious when we consider what Paul had to say in his letter to Timothy about the qualifications of ministerial servants: "Ministerial servants should likewise be serious, not double-tongued, not giving themselves to a lot of wine, not greedy of dishonest gain, holding the sacred secret of the faith with a clean conscience. Also, let these be tested as to fitness first, then let them serve as ministers, as they are free from accusation. Let ministerial servants be husbands of one wife, presiding in a fine manner over children and their own households. For the men who minister in a fine manner are acquiring for themselves a fine standing and great freeness of speech in the faith in connection with Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. 3:8-10, 12, 13.

So whereas their work within the congregation generally involves nonteaching responsibilities, ministerial servants are nonetheless spiritual men who by their hard work and exemplary Christian life not only perform vital services for the congregation but also set an example to be imitated by others.—Compare 1 Timothy 4:11, 12.

The specific Scriptural requirements for ministerial servants mentioned by Paul in his first letter to Timothy indicate that a high standard is set for men who are used in this capacity. Holding to such a standard serves to protect the congregation from any legitimate accusation as to the kind of men to whom it entrusts special responsibilities. Whether young or older in years, ministerial servants are expected to be active in the ministry each month, setting a fine example. They should be exemplary in their dress, grooming, speech, attitude and conduct. Such a pattern of living with soundness of mind gains the respect of others and reflects the seriousness with which ministerial servants view their relationship with Jehovah and their privileges of service in the congregation.—Compare Titus 2:2, 6-8.

These are men who have been "tested as to fitness." Even before receiving their appointment they have demonstrated themselves to be truly dedicated men whose faith has been made manifest in zealous Kingdom service and in helping others to be made firm in the faith. In their response to the good news they have demonstrated that they put Kingdom interests first in their life and are reaching out for whatever service privileges may be opened to them. They are indeed examples for others in the congregation to imitate.—1 Tim. 3:10.

HOW THEY ARE USED

Ministerial servants render a great variety of practical services in behalf of their brothers and sisters. In doing so they are very helpful to the overseers, relieving them of much detailed work, thus leaving them free to care for important teaching and shepherding responsibilities. In making such service assignments the elders take into account the number of appointed ministerial servants in the congregation as well as their individual abilities.

Just consider some of the services they handle. One ministerial servant may be assigned to take care of the congregation literature, making it convenient for all of us to obtain the literature we need for our personal use and for field service. Another may care for the magazines in the congregation. Others are assigned duties to keep records such as for the congregation accounts or for the assigning of territory, or they are used to handle microphones, operate sound equipment, look after the platform or perhaps help the elders in other ways. There is much work to be done in maintaining the Kingdom Hall and keeping it clean, so ministerial servants are often called upon to assist in caring for such responsibilities. Ministerial servants are also assigned to serve as attendants, welcome new ones and help maintain order at congregation meetings.

In some congregations there may be enough ministerial servants so that a different one can be assigned to each of these duties. Elsewhere, a ministerial servant may care for several assignments. In some instances it is beneficial to have more than one person assigned to share in certain work. (If there are not enough ministerial servants to care for some of these responsibilities, the body of elders may, in these cases, arrange for other dedicated exemplary brothers to help take care of some of this necessary work. Thus, they would gain experience that would be useful later when they, in turn, become qualified to serve as ministerial servants. Or, if brothers are not available, certain sisters who show godly humility and devotion to Jehovah could be asked to assist with some things, though, of course, they would not be appointed as ministerial servants.)

Periodically, if there is good reason, elders may find it beneficial to shift some ministerial servants from one assignment to another. However, there is great advantage in having brothers continue to handle the same assignments so as to become more proficient and gain experience. Much depends on local needs as to how elders work out these assignments handled by ministerial servants.

Depending on local circumstances in each congregation, there may be other services that can be assigned to ministerial servants who are doing as the apostle Paul encouraged young Timothy, 'making their spiritual advancement manifest.' (1 Tim. 4:15) If there are not enough elders to conduct the Congregation Book Studies, some of the more qualified ministerial servants are used as study conductors to care for assigned groups. They may be assigned to handle parts in the Service Meeting and the Theocratic Ministry School and to deliver public talks in the local congregation. Other privileges may be extended to some of the ministerial servants where there is particular need and they meet the requirements for the assignment.—Compare 1 Peter 4:10.

In assisting the elders they should give of themselves willingly, demonstrating that they have a sense of responsibility and are working for the advancement of Kingdom interests and the benefit of everyone in the congregation. By taking the lead in the field service, ministerial servants can set a good example for others and reap great satisfaction themselves in a work well done.

Though their work differs from that of the elders, it is no less a part of their sacred service to God and is important to the smooth functioning of the congregation. In time, if ministerial servants discharge their obligations well and also become qualified to serve as shepherds and teachers, they may be recommended as elders in the congregation.

If you have not done so already, why not make special effort to get acquainted with the ministerial servants in your congregation? You can show your appreciation for their hard work by cooperating with them as they care for their assigned duties. In this way you will also be showing appreciation for Jehovah's provision for maintaining an orderly household. (Gal. 6:10) The ministerial servants are appointed by holy spirit for your good.

CHAPTER 7

ARRANGEMENTS FOR REGULARLY ASSEMBLING TOGETHER

THE congregation of God is referred to in the Bible as his household. (1 Tim. 3:15) How fitting that arrangements are made for its members and their companions to assemble regularly for worship and to be fed spiritually! It is important for each one of us to gather together to hear God's Word, so as to learn his requirements and how we may serve him. This applies to both young persons and those of older years, just as it did in the case of God's ancient covenant people, the nation of Israel. His command to them through Moses was to "congregate the people, the men and the women and the little ones and your alien resident who is within your gates, in order that they may listen and in order that they may learn, as they must fear Jehovah your God and take care to carry out all the words of this law." (Deut. 31:12) A command exhorting all Christians to assemble together regularly is expressed in similar terms.—Heb. 10:23-25.

Clearly, the purpose for assembling together now, even as then, is to listen and learn and to be "taught by Jehovah." (Isa. 54:13) Assembling for worship in ancient Israel was always a joyous occasion, as reflected in the words of David who wrote, "I rejoiced when they were saying to me: 'To the house of Jehovah let us go.' " (Ps. 122:1) This is also true of Jehovah's Witnesses today as they assemble together to worship Jehovah.

WAT.0020.001.0046

KINGDOM HALL

The Bible account and secular history tell us that the first-century Christians assembled together in private homes as well as in public places. (Rom. 16:3, 5; Col. 4:15; Acts 19:8, 9) At times it was necessary for them to meet in isolated, or secluded, places to avoid detection by persecutors. Today, also, private homes and public places are used for Christian meetings, but the principal meeting place used by congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses is the Kingdom Hall.

In some localities it is more convenient to rent a hall than it is to buy or to build one. However, large numbers of congregations have chosen to purchase property and build their own Kingdom Halls, suited to their needs. Or they have bought and renovated existing buildings. In such instances it is appropriate to have a dedication program. Elders are generally familiar with information regarding ownership and operation of Kingdom Halls as set out in Our Kingdom Ministry, memorandums and letters provided by the Society. The Kingdom Hall, as a place of worship, should not be a pretentious building designed to impress others. While its architecture may vary from place to place, its purpose is functional. (Compare Acts 17:24.) It should be a comfortable and convenient place for conducting Christian meetings that help us to grow spiritually and to learn about Jehovah, and that encourage us to share in his Kingdom service.

Each Kingdom Hall is arranged for, financed and maintained by the local congregation(s) of Jehovah's Witnesses. The brothers should consider it a privilege not only to support the Kingdom Hall financially but also to volunteer their services in keeping it clean, presentable and in good repair. Both inside and out, the Kingdom Hall should be a proper representation of Jehovah's organization. An elder or a ministerial servant is usually assigned to see that necessary work is cared for according to an equitable, convenient schedule. Book study groups may take turns in cleaning the Hall, following the list of things to be done each week. At times several congregations may share the use of a Kingdom Hall. This requires close cooperation among all the brothers with regard to financing and maintaining the Kingdom Hall. When it is necessary for two or more congregations to use the same Kingdom Hall, the elders of all the congregations involved set up a committee of brothers to care for the responsibility of working out convenient and practical arrangements for the proper care of the building and the property.

Meeting times are arranged for each congregation, having in mind what is convenient for the majority of publishers. Consideration should also be given to interested persons in the territory since we want them to attend. This may be worked out through the elders in a spirit of mutual concern and brotherly love.—Phil. 2:2-4; 1 Pet. 3:8.

In addition to its use for regular congregational meetings and as a meeting place for field service, the Kingdom Hall may be used for wedding ceremonies and funerals with the permission of those members of the body of elders who are present at the time the decision is made. They carefully consider what is desired and whether the individuals involved are in good standing with the congregation and otherwise qualified. Those who are granted the use of the Kingdom Hall for such purposes are expected to conduct themselves in a way that befits such a place of worship. All involved should be sure that nothing is done that would offend the brothers or bring reproach upon Jehovah and the good name of the congregation. (Phil. 2:14, 15) At times use of the Kingdom Hall may be granted for other spiritual functions under the Society's direction, such as conducting the Kingdom Ministry School for elders and the Pioneer Service School.

Private homes of the brothers may also serve as meeting places. Those who are able to offer their home as a convenient place for some of or all the congregation meetings, as circumstances require, should view this as a privilege.

Meeting places of the congregation should always be viewed with respect by members of the congregation. Our dress, grooming and decorum should bespeak the dignity associated with worshiping Jehovah at his house. (Eccl. 5:1; 1 Tim. 2:9, 10) Ignoring such counsel would be showing a lack of appreciation for our Christian meetings.

At meetings in the Kingdom Hall qualified brothers should be assigned to serve as attendants. They should be alert, have friendly personalities and use good judgment. Their responsibilities include greeting newcomers and making them feel welcome, helping any latecomers to find seats and giving necessary attention to proper heating and ventilation of the Hall. Maintaining order during the meetings is essential. It is recommended that children sit with their parents. When a child becomes unruly, an attendant might ask the parent in a kind and tactful way to take the child out so the audience will not be unduly distracted. Even before the meeting, parents with young children can be encouraged to sit where they will cause the least distraction if it is necessary to take the children out to discipline them or care for other needs.

Since the conduct of children inside the Kingdom Hall as well as outside can reflect favorably or unfavorably on the congregation, attendants can, where necessary, remind parents to give proper supervision so that the children will not be running in the building or around the property, especially when those in attendance are visiting with one another after the meeting is concluded. The service performed by attendants obviously contributes much to everyone's enjoyment of the meetings. It is desirable for ministerial servants to be used as attendants, particularly those who themselves have had experience in handling situations that arise in family life.—1 Tim. 3:12.

CONGREGATION MEETINGS

The Bible emphasizes the need and the value of coming together to worship and praise Jehovah. (Ps. 26:8, 12; Matt. 18:20) Faithful Nehemiah recognized this and so he urged his fellow Israelites: "We should not neglect the house of our God." (Neh. 10:39b) Those who embraced the truth at the time of Pentecost, 33 C.E., did not treat this matter lightly. They continued devoting themselves to the teachings of the apostles, "and day after day they were in constant attendance at the temple with one accord." (Acts 2:42, 46) Later, we know, when Christians came together for worship they read from the Scriptures, including inspired letters written by the apostles and other Christian disciples. (Col. 4:16; 1 Cor. 1:1, 2; 1 Thess. 1:1; Jas. 1:1) There was congregation prayer. (Acts 4:24-29; 20:36) They also related experiences from the missionary field. (Acts 11:5-18; 14:27, 28) They considered Bible doctrines and the fulfillment of inspired prophecy. Instruction was given in matters of approved Christian conduct and godly devotion. They were encouraged to be zealous proclaimers of the good news.—1 Cor. 11:23-26; Eph. 5:1-33; Rom. 10:9, 10; 1 Cor. 15:58.

In our day Christian meetings in many respects follow the pattern set in apostolic days. We give heed to the inspired exhortation at Hebrews 10: 25 by 'not forsaking the gathering of ourselves together, as some have the custom, but encouraging one another, and all the more so now as we behold the day drawing near.' During these difficult last days of the wicked system of things, we need added encouragement that comes from regularly assembling together in order to maintain spiritual strength and Christian integrity. (Rom. 1:11, 12) As in Paul's day, we live among a crooked and twisted generation, a system of things whose ungodliness and worldly spirit we have repudiated. (Phil. 2:15, 16; Titus 2:12-14) Really, where would we rather be than in association with Jehovah's people? (Compare Psalm 84:10.) And what could be more beneficial than hearing the Word of God discussed?

Jehovah is the source of an abundance of satisfying spiritual food. (Ps. 145:14, 15) Through his Son and the earthly channel, "the faithful and discreet slave," food at the proper time is being dispensed. How is such provision served to the individual members of the organization? One means is through the various meetings arranged each week in the congregation. Consider each of these occasions and the benefits derived as our brothers regularly assemble together.

THE WATCHTOWER STUDY

For over 100 years now The Watchtower Announcing Jehovah's Kingdom has been the principal journal to keep Jehovah's people well supplied with timely spiritual food. Certain articles published in The Watchtower are specifically prepared for weekly congregational study where instruction based upon the written Word of God is featured. Information carefully examined in the Watchtower Study stirs the heart and the mind of the members of the congregation and builds up their spiritual strength.

WAT.0020.001.0051

The study articles are varied as to subject matter. They deal with Bible prophecy, godly conduct, Christian morals, Bible doctrine, encouragement in the Christian ministry, admonition to cope with spiritual dangers, and Scriptural counsel on many other matters. Also, a variety of general Biblical information vital for continued spiritual growth is considered.

How do all associated with the congregation benefit from such a variety of timely spiritual food? Study material frequently deals with the application of Bible principles in daily living and fortifies against "the spirit of the world" and unclean conduct. (1 Cor. 2:12) Through the columns of The Watchtower comes increased light on Bible doctrine and the discussion of fulfillment of prophecy as Jehovah makes this known, thus enabling all to keep abreast of the truth and stay on the path of the righteous. (Ps. 97: 11; Prov. 4:18) Attending and sharing in the Watchtower Study helps us always to rejoice in the hope of Jehovah's righteous new system of things. (Rom. 12:12; 2 Pet. 3:13) It helps us to manifest the fruitage of the spirit in our life and to keep strong our desire to serve Jehovah zealously. (Gal. 5:22, 23) It strengthens our faith to endure the trials ahead and to 'build a fine foundation for the future so that we may get a firm hold on the real life.'—1 Tim. 6:19; 1 Pet. 1:6, 7.

It is evident that the material considered at the Watchtower Study week by week is vital. It helps us to grow spiritually, to make the truth of God's Word our own, to bring our life into conformity with the teachings of the Bible and to be united spiritually with our brothers worldwide. What can each one do to take fuller advantage of this provision for spiritual feeding? Prepare the lesson in advance, looking up all the cited scriptures. Have a share in commenting during the meeting. Such participation will make a deeper impression of the points under discussion, sounding down the truth into our heart and our mind. At the same time others benefit as they hear our expressions of faith and hope. Carefully listening to their comments, and especially the points emphasized by the Watchtower Study conductor, will ensure our getting the most benefit from the lesson each week.

The Watchtower Study should not be looked upon as just a routine meeting. If we are to maintain spiritual strength and firmness in the faith it is necessary to be present each week. None should miss this important provision for strengthening all associated with the household of faith.

PUBLIC MEETING

Usually the Public Meeting is held in conjunction with the weekly Watchtower Study. Regular public talks in the congregation are 45 minutes in length. The Watchtower Study takes one hour. These two meetings together with the songs and the opening and closing prayers should cover no more than two hours. Public Meetings complement the Watchtower Study, differing as to the method used in presenting information. Whereas the Watchtower Study is developed as a discussion with audience participation in answering prepared questions, the Public Meeting features a discourse on a Bible subject. Such meetings featuring the spoken word play an important part in filling a spiritual need for new ones and members of the congregation.—See Acts 18:4; 19:9, 10.

By inviting interested persons and even the public in general, we may accomplish much in acquainting people with basic Bible information. The Public Meetings should help one and all to remain alert to Christian teachings and encourage steadfastness in Kingdom service.

The subjects that may be considered at Public Meetings are varied. Talks may cover Bible doctrines and prophecy, Scriptural principles and counsel regarding family life, marital problems, the difficult situations that confront youths in this wicked world, requirements regarding Christian morals, as well as Jehovah's marvelous works of creation and the way in which science confirms Biblical facts and statements. Other talks may enhance our appreciation of accounts and activities of different Bible characters, commenting on their significance for our day. Truly the Public Meeting is an occasion for taking in informative and refreshing spiritual food.

If we are to get the full benefit of the Public Meeting arrangement it is essential for us to attend regularly, pay close attention, look up the scriptures referred to by the speaker and follow along as he reads and explains them. (Luke 8: 18) This will help us to become more familiar with the location of Bible books and increase our knowledge of the Scriptures. As we thus make sure of the things discussed, we should be determined to hold fast to what we learn and personally apply it.—1 Thess. 5:21.

If there are sufficient speakers available, the congregation will no doubt have a public talk every week. Frequently this is made possible by arranging for visiting speakers from nearby congregations. But even if there is a shortage of speakers in an area, arrangements are usually made to have these talks as often as possible.

Christ Jesus, his apostles and their associates conducted public meetings similar to those enjoyed today by congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses. Without question, Jesus was the greatest public speaker ever on earth. Officers said concerning him: "Never has another man spoken like this." (John 7:46) Jesus spoke with authority, astounding his audiences. (Matt. 7:28, 29) Many were the benefits received by those who took his message to heart. (Matt. 13:16, 17) The apostles followed his example. At Acts 2:22-36 we read of Peter's powerful discourse on the day of Pentecost, 33 C.E. Many were motivated to act as a result of what they heard. Later, individuals benefited from Paul's discourse in Athens. (Acts 17:22-34) Similarly, in our day millions have received benefits through the Public Meetings held in congregations, at circuit assemblies and at district, national and international conventions. We should give full support to the arrangement for Public Meetings.

THE SERVICE MEETING

This meeting stresses service, which is what our ministry is all about. It equips us to have a full share in preaching the Kingdom good news, making disciples and declaring the approaching execution of divine judgment. (Mark 13:10; Matt. 28:20; 2 Pet. 3:7) To a large extent this work is done by speaking to other people and providing them with Bible literature. But the application of Jehovah's righteous principles in our life has a great bearing on the effectiveness of our field ministry and the fruitage that we produce. (Matt. 13:23; John 15:8) Thereby we demonstrate the good results that come from applying the Scriptures. Appropriately, the Service Meeting gives attention to all these facets of our service to God.

Each month the Society publishes Our Kingdom Ministry, which outlines the weekly Service Meetings. You will receive a copy through the congregation. When a new issue of Our Kingdom Ministry is received, the presiding overseer can carefully analyze what it contains and he either personally assigns the various meeting parts to qualified brothers or arranges for such assignments through one of the other elders.

Elders and the more qualified ministerial servants are assigned to handle the various parts on the Service Meeting program. They need to study the assigned material carefully to determine what the principal points of instruction are and how to handle them so that the brothers will understand and remember them. Careful thought is also given to application of the material to the situation of the local congregation.

While there are a variety of ways in which material can effectively be presented, in no case should the method of presentation be allowed to overshadow the material presented. The objective of demonstrations is not to have a great dramatic production with a lot of stage props. Use natural settings such as a scene at one's secular work, the door-to-door work, a home Bible study or a family discussion. Settings should fit what is encountered locally so that publishers can relate to them.

If each one on the program sticks to the allotted time the Service Meeting will conclude in 45 minutes, not including the songs and closing prayer. Everyone who shares in the program should cooperate to that end.

Exemplary dedicated publishers, and their well-trained children, may be asked to participate in certain parts, such as demonstrations. They may be interviewed or invited to relate their experiences under the direction of responsible brothers. If you have an opportunity to participate, cooperate joyfully and conscientiously, recognizing that this is part of your service to Jehovah.

It should be the heartfelt desire of each Christian to live and accomplish things in his life in a way that influences others to follow Jesus Christ as dedicated witnesses of Jehovah. To that end, the Service Meeting programs are designed to help us in a number of ways, such as by (1) encouraging us to engage to the fullest extent possible in the house-to-house work or in street work and to improve in our presentation of the good news; (2) helping us to see the need of making return visits on individuals who display interest or accept Bible literature (this involves keeping good records and improving our ability to teach such persons); (3) moving us to set aside time for regularly conducting home Bible studies and directing students to the organization; (4) providing us with ideas on how to give an informal witness and alerting us to speak about the truth whenever we have opportunity; (5) improving our efforts to help new ones, our children and other young people to become dedicated disciples.

To get the fullest benefit from the Service

Meeting, why not prepare beforehand? You will benefit more if, prior to the meeting, you go over the program outlined in Our Kingdom Ministry. At times articles in various publications of the Society are considered. Not only will advance research be informative but such research will equip you to share when parts on the program call for audience participation. The more you absorb from the Service Meeting the more effective you will be in your ministry.

Regularity in attending the Service Meeting results in unified activity on the part of the entire congregation. Since every baptized Witness is a minister, this meeting is essential in helping us to carry out our commission. It is also very beneficial for anyone else who desires to become a dedicated servant of God. Make attendance at this meeting a part of your weekly schedule of activity.

Meetings of this sort are nothing new. They are based on sound Scriptural precedent. Before sending his disciples out to preach, Jesus gave them detailed instructions on what to say and do. (Matt. 10:5–11:1; Luke 10:1-16) Later his disciples continued to have such meetings where they discussed experiences in their ministry and this strengthened them for zealous Kingdom activity. (Acts 4:23-31) We continue that same practice today.

THEOCRATIC MINISTRY SCHOOL

The Theocratic Ministry School, held also at the Kingdom Hall, is an ongoing provision for the education of the entire congregation. Its curriculum includes Bible talks, student presentations and other training useful for the field ministry. Counsel is given to students to help them progressively improve in their presentations. While presenting a great variety of information that is of interest and benefit to the entire congregation, the Theocratic Ministry School also gives opportunity for participants as well as the audience to improve various aspects of their personal ministry. Occasional written reviews provide a means of self-examination as to one's own progress in ministerial training.

Each year the Society provides a Theocratic Ministry School Schedule setting out the program to be followed. It outlines the material to be used and how the assignments are to be handled. The Theocratic Ministry School for many years has proved its worth in training Jehovah's Witnesses to be effective proclaimers of the Kingdom. All who are actively associated with the congregation may enroll, including people newly attending the meetings, as long as they are not leading a life that is out of line with Christian principles.

By enrolling in the Theocratic Ministry School we show that we are interested in advancement. Such instruction can help us to be finer public praisers of Jehovah. It can equip us to accomplish more in the time we have available for the field service, as well as to give fine comments in the congregation meetings. In the case of brothers, this instruction will assist them greatly toward qualifying as ministerial servants or elders and eventually handling major Service Meeting parts and giving public talks.

Those enrolled will be notified well in advance concerning their student assignments so that they can prepare thoroughly. When we have an assigned part in the school it is particularly important to be on hand before the meeting starts. If an emergency situation arises and it is impossible to be present to fulfill an assignment we should be sure to notify the school overseer, just as early as possible, so that he can arrange for a replacement.

As a regular part of our spiritual feeding program, the Theocratic Ministry School provides many benefits. It was Isaiah who said: "The Sovereign Lord Jehovah himself has given me the tongue of the taught ones, that I may know how to answer the tired one with a word." (Isa. 50:4) Unquestionably the school has played an important part in training literally tens of thousands to develop the tongue of one taught by Jehovah. Over the years the program has been designed to help those enrolled to make spiritual advancement and to learn how better to express themselves in presenting the good news of the Kingdom. Under the direction of holy spirit such training has enabled God's people to give an answer to everyone demanding a reason for their hope. Being taught to use God's Word in this way is a blessing.

The congregation usually provides a Theocratic Ministry School library at the Kingdom Hall. This may contain the available publications of the Society, perhaps a number of Bible translations, a concordance and other helpful reference works. We should feel free to use any of these publications at the Kingdom Hall before or after meetings.

CONGREGATION BOOK STUDY

Members of the congregation, and others who are associated, derive great personal benefit from the Congregation Book Study, which is generally conducted with a group smaller than at the other meetings. There are just a few families, or a comparatively small number of individuals, who gather at each of these studies. Instead of having the entire congregation come together at one place, arrangements are made for the study groups to meet in convenient locations scattered throughout the congregation's territory. One group may meet at the Kingdom Hall. Others assemble in private homes.

In some respects these group studies provide benefits that do not directly come through other provisions of the congregation. Why is this so? It is because the Congregation Book Study arrangement not only provides for a careful and detailed study of Bible subjects but, in these small groups, makes it possible for more personal attention to be given to the spiritual growth of each individual. Such personal assistance may include appropriate Scriptural counsel, encouragement and direction for carrying out our ministry, as well as other vital spiritual help to fit the needs of the individual. Here is a reflection of Jehovah's loving-kindness and his tender care for his people.—Isa. 40:11.

This meeting is a one-hour group study using the Bible and a textbook provided by the Watch Tower Society. The brother assigned as conductor is usually an elder. He is himself a student of God's Word and qualified to help each one not only to increase in Bible knowledge but also to apply this knowledge in practical ways. Basically, the meeting is conducted in the same manner as the Watchtower Study. It is opened and closed with prayer. Paragraphs are read. Questions are asked on the paragraphs. Comments are invited. Scriptures are read. To impress principal thoughts on the mind of each one, a brief oral review may be conducted at the end of the study. As we attend week by week we will gain not only knowledge but understanding. We will learn the reasons for statements that are made and how to support them from the Bible, as well as how to conduct discussions of the same material with others that we are able to help in our field ministry. (2 Tim. 2:15) So this meeting will do much to equip us to become better teachers of God's Word.

With a small group such as this there is more opportunity for all of us to offer comments. It is not at all difficult to participate freely at this meeting, and thus we have the opportunity to get accustomed to making a public declaration of our faith before others. (Heb. 13:15) It is good to learn to make our comments in our own words instead of reading them out of the book.

Although anyone present may be encouraged to share in the reading of the scriptures, just one person reads the paragraphs at any one study. If possible, arrangements are made a week in advance for a baptized brother who is a good reader to read the paragraphs.

Having the study groups scattered throughout the congregation territory makes it convenient for both ourselves and newly interested people in the neighborhood to attend. We should make every effort to bring others with us to the meeting so that they can get a taste of the spiritually upbuilding discussions and the warm association that we enjoy.

In addition to providing a place for group study, the location of the Congregation Book Study may be a meeting place for field service. Here the group can meet at convenient times prior to going out into the field. Cooperating in all these arrangements results in groups that are closely knit together for the twofold purpose of study and service.

WAT.0020.001.0062

MEETINGS FOR FIELD SERVICE

At various times during the week, groups of Jehovah's Witnesses may briefly assemble together in preparation for going out in the field ministry. Discussion of a Bible text, suggestions for dealing with situations likely to be encountered in the field or other points from Our Kingdom Ministry are usually considered at these meetings. Field service arrangements are made and one of the group leads in prayer. Then they are ready to go into the field. Such meetings provide not only the practical instruction but also real encouragement for those going out in the witness work. Arrangements can be made at this meeting to help newer ones or others that may need assistance in the preaching work. Such meetings last from 10 to 15 minutes.

NEW OR SMALL CONGREGATIONS

As more disciples are made, the number of congregations also increases. Whether a new congregation is formed from an already existing congregation or it is made up of publishers in an isolated area, it must be a group of baptized publishers and others who recognize "the faithful and discreet slave" class and desire to work under its direction. The application for a new congregation is usually submitted by the circuit overseer. In some cases small groups may find it more advantageous to be associated with the nearest congregation.

At times small congregations may be composed entirely of sisters. When such is the case, a sister who prays or conducts meetings does so with head properly covered, in harmony with the Scriptural arrangement. (1 Cor. 11:3-16) In most cases they remain seated, facing the group. None of the sisters give actual discourses at meetings, but they read and comment on the material provided by the Watch Tower Society or, for variety, they may cover it in discussions or demonstrations.

Those brothers in a newly formed congregation who qualify for appointment as elders or ministerial servants will be recommended to the Society's branch office. If none qualify, as in the case of a group made up entirely of sisters, the branch office will designate one of them to care for correspondence with the office and to carry on meetings. In time, when brothers qualify for appointment, they will care for these responsibilities.

CIRCUIT ASSEMBLIES

Meetings of Jehovah's servants may range in size from just two or three individuals to large assemblies of many thousands. From time to time arrangements are made for congregations assigned to the same circuit to assemble together at a circuit assembly. The Scriptural theme and various parts of the program are prepared by "the faithful and discreet slave" with a special need in mind. A variety of methods are used to present the information, such as discourses, discussions, demonstrations and interviews. Also, a part of the program usually deals with local situations or counsel that specifically applies to the particular circuit. Such timely instruction builds up all who attend.

At the circuit assembly, opportunity is provided for new disciples to get baptized in symbol of their dedication to Jehovah. Circuit assemblies are always joyous occasions that afford opportunity for the brothers to "widen out" in their Christian association. (2 Cor. 6:11-13) All are encouraged by the reports and experiences related concerning the work of preaching the good news.

DISTRICT CONVENTIONS

Once each year larger assemblies are held by Jehovah's Witnesses. Usually these are organized as district conventions combining congregations from a number of circuits. However, in smaller branches it may be more practical and convenient for all the Witnesses to assemble together in one place. These arrangements may vary due to circumstances in some lands or on the basis of direction from the Governing Body. National and international conventions are also organized periodically around the world. These conventions may be attended by tens of thousands of Witnesses from many different lands. Over the years many people have come to learn about the good news because of the publicity given to these large gatherings of Jehovah's Witnesses.

District, national and international conventions are joyous occasions of united worship for Jehovah's dedicated people. Such conventions have provided the setting for revealing increased light on the truth, releasing new publications for personal and congregational study and for use in the field ministry, and for mass baptisms. Jehovah's Witnesses consider district conventions to be of particular importance in promoting their spiritual growth and in reviewing progress in fulfilling their Christian commission. The larger conventions give evidence that Jehovah's people indeed form an international brotherhood of dedicated Christians bearing the identifying mark of disciples of Jesus Christ.—John 13:35.

By becoming involved in local congregation meetings, as well as in the larger assemblies and conventions of Jehovah's people, we are strengthened to do Jehovah's will and are protected against outside worldly influences that would undermine our Christian faith. We can all be thankful that Jehovah has provided these periods of spiritual refreshment for his dedicated people in this time of the end.

THE LORD'S EVENING MEAL

Once each year on the anniversary date of the death of Jesus Christ, all congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses celebrate the Memorial of Christ's death, or the Lord's Evening Meal. (1 Cor. 11: 20, 23, 24) This is the most important meeting of the year for Jehovah's people. We are specifically commanded to keep this Memorial celebration. —Luke 22:19.

The Memorial date is clearly marked in the Bible as the anniversary of the Biblical Passover. (Matt. 26:17, 20, 26) The Passover was the annual celebration of the exodus of the Israelites from captivity in Egypt in the year 1513 B.C.E. At that time Jehovah marked the 14th day of their first lunar month as the date for them to eat the Passover lamb and leave their captivity in Egypt. (Ex. 12:1-51) The date is determined by counting 14 days from the new moon nearest the spring equinox, March 21-22, as it would be visible at Jerusalem in the land of Palestine. Generally, this would make the Memorial celebration each year fall on the date of the first full moon following the spring equinox.

Matthew 26:26-28 outlines in Jesus' own words the way the Memorial is celebrated. It is not a ritual with mystical overtones, but it is a symbolic meal that is shared by those who have been called to be fellow heirs with Jesus Christ in his heavenly Kingdom. (Luke 22:28-30) All other dedicated Christians and interested people are invited and encouraged to attend the Lord's Evening Meal as observers and in this way show their appreciation for the provision Jehovah God has made for the benefit of all mankind through his Son, Jesus Christ. Jehovah's Witnesses today endeavor to make the Memorial a special event in their life each year.

Usually in the spring of the year, near Memorial time, a special public talk is given in all the congregations. Jehovah's Witnesses endeavor to invite all interested persons to attend. The talk provides a timely message for those who want to be pleasing to God and it is designed to stimulate further interest in Bible study.

Jehovah's Witnesses joyfully anticipate occasions for meeting together to be built up and encouraged spiritually. The Governing Body is alert to provide occasions for assembling together according to our spiritual needs. All of Jehovah's servants and other interested people are urged to take full advantage of all arrangements for regularly assembling together and show due appreciation for Jehovah's provisions through his earthly organization.

CHAPTER 8

MINISTERS OF THE GOOD NEWS

IN SENDING forth his Son, Jehovah gave us a perfect model to follow. (1 Pet. 2:21) When anyone becomes his follower, Jesus helps that one to preach the good news as one of God's ministers. Indicating that this would be spiritually refreshing, he said: "Come to me, all you who are toiling and loaded down, and I will refresh you. Take my yoke upon you and learn from me [become my disciples, 1971 edition], for I am mild-tempered and lowly in heart, and you will find refreshment for your souls." (Matt. 11:28, 29) His promise has not failed any who have responded to that invitation!

As God's Chief Minister, Jesus called certain individuals to come and be his followers. (Matt. 9:9; John 1:43) He trained them in the ministry and sent them forth to do the same work he was doing. (Matt. 10:1–11:1; 20:28; Luke 4:43) Later he sent forth 70 others to share in declaring the good news concerning God's Kingdom. (Luke 10: 1, 8-11) When Jesus sent his disciples forth he said to them: "He that listens to you listens to me too. And he that disregards you disregards me too. Moreover, he that disregards me disregards also him that sent me forth." (Luke 10:16) In this way he stressed the serious responsibility that was laid upon the disciples. They were to represent the Most High God! So it would be with all others who respond to Jesus' invitation to "come be my follower," even down to this day. (Luke 18:22) All who respond have a divine commission to preach the good news of the Kingdom and to make disciples.—Matt. 24:14; 28:19, 20.

Having come to Jesus, therefore, in response to his invitation to follow him, we have been blessed with knowledge of Jehovah God and of Jesus Christ. (John 17:3) We have been taught Jehovah's ways. With his help we have been able to make over our mind, change our personality and harmonize our daily conduct with Jehovah's righteous standards. (Rom. 12:1, 2; Eph. 4:22-24; Col. 3:9, 10) Out of heartfelt appreciation, we have also been moved to follow our Exemplar and to present ourselves to God just as was expressed by the psalmist: "Here I have come . . . To do your will, O my God, I have delighted." (Ps. 40:7, 8; Heb. 10:7-9) Our baptism in water is a symbol of our dedication to Jehovah and constitutes our ordination as ministers.

Always keep in mind the fact that service to God must be rendered with clean hands and out of a pure heart. (2 Cor. 6:14–7:1; Isa. 52:11; Ps. 24:3, 4) Through faith in Jesus Christ we have gained a clean conscience and freeness of speech. (Heb. 10:19-23, 35, 36; Rev. 7:9, 10, 14) The apostle Paul admonished Christians to do all things for God's glory so as not to be stumbling others. Also, the apostle Peter pointed out the value of exemplary godly conduct in winning unbelievers over to the truth.—1 Cor. 10:31, 33; 1 Pet. 3:1.

Jesus Christ took very seriously his commission as Jehovah's sent-forth One, and as a vigorous proclaimer of the good news of God's Kingdom he set the example for all his followers. He took the initiative and went out among the people, speaking and teaching in their homes and in public places. (Matt. 9:35; Luke 8:1) He spoke intimately with individuals, taught his disciples privately and addressed groups numbering into the thousands. (John 3:2-21; Matt. 13:36; Mark 4:10-13; 6:35-44) He took advantage of every appropriate occasion to speak words of encouragement and hope. (Luke 4:16-19) He did not pass up opportunities to witness even when he himself was in need of rest and refreshment. (Mark 6:30-34; John 4:4-34) When we read the inspired accounts of his ministry, are we not impelled to follow in his footsteps and to imitate closely his example? Certainly we are, just as the apostles were.—Matt. 4:19, 20; Luke 5:27, 28; John 1:43-45.

Consider the opportunities that are open to Christians today to share in the work initiated by Jesus Christ nearly 2,000 years ago.

PREACHING FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE

Jehovah's modern-day witnesses recognize the value of preaching the good news systematically from house to house. This method of reaching people with the Kingdom message has been used so extensively by Jehovah's Witnesses that it has virtually become their trademark in many lands. The good results obtained give proof of Jehovah's approval and blessing. Also, the wisdom of using this method to reach millions of people effectively with the good news during a short period of time has been confirmed by most gratifying results. (Matt. 11:19; 24:14) Our field ministry has proved to be a most practical way for us to demonstrate love for Jehovah and love for our neighbors.—Matt. 22:34-40.

House-to-house preaching is not a modern innovation of Jehovah's Witnesses. It was firmly established in theocratic history long ago in the days of the apostles. Outstandingly, the apostle Paul refers to his teaching in the homes of people. Defending his ministry before the overseers in Ephesus, he said: "From the first day that I stepped into the district of Asia I . . . did not hold back from telling you any of the things that were profitable nor from teaching you publicly and from house to house." In this and other ways he "thoroughly bore witness both to Jews and to Greeks about repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus." (Acts 20:18, 20, 21) At that time there was an urgent need to reach all the people with the good news, since the Roman emperors were encouraging idolatry and many peoples were "given to the fear of the deities." There was a pressing need to seek "the God that made the world and all the things in it," the one who was then "telling mankind that they should all everywhere repent."—Acts 17:22-31.

Today the need for reaching people with the good news is even more urgent. The end of the present wicked system of things is approaching at a rapid pace. Life itself is in the balance for all mankind. So there is need for intensive effort on our part, now, before the great tribulation strikes. Seeing the great need, we are moved to increase our efforts in the house-to-house ministry, realizing that no better way has been found to replace this time-tested method of finding those who are hungering for the truth. It is as effective today as it was in the days of Jesus and the apostles. It is a most satisfying way for all of us to have a share in the ministry.—Mark 13:10.

According to your personal circumstances, are you having a full share in the house-to-house ministry? If you are taking advantage of every opportunity to do so we know that you are also reaping a rich reward of great joy and personal satisfaction in your service to God. (Acts 20:35; compare Ezekiel 9:11.) The house-to-house ministry may not be easy for you. You may be hindered by physical limitations or you may be assigned to work in territory where many people are not inclined to listen. There may even be governmental restrictions with which to cope. Because of your personality makeup you may also find it very difficult to initiate conversations with total strangers and therefore you must overcome a measure of nervous anxiety each time you engage in the house-to-house ministry. Do not be discouraged. (Compare Exodus 4:10-12.) Your circumstances are not unlike those of your brothers in many other places.

Do you remember Jesus' promise that he would be with those whom he sent forth to preach and make disciples? And do you remember that Jehovah has given his spirit to those carrying his message to the people? (Matt. 28:20; Isa. 61:1, 2) Take courage and have the same confidence as expressed by Paul at Philippians 4:13. He said: "For all things I have the strength by virtue of him who imparts power to me." Take full advantage of congregation arrangements made each week for engaging in house-to-house witnessing. By working with others in field service you will receive needed encouragement and personal assistance to talk more effectively with people and present Bible literature. Pray for greater faith to overcome whatever obstacles or discouragement you may face and exert yourself vigorously as a preacher of the good news.—Luke 17:5.

There are many benefits you will personally receive from being zealous in the house-to-house ministry. As you speak to others about the good news there will be many opportunities to give a reason for your hope, and your own hope will be made more firm. (1 Pet. 3:15) You will constantly remain aware of the sharp contrast between those who are firmly established in the Kingdom hope and those who are without hope in the world. Finding those deserving of the Kingdom message and noting the reactions of those who are not will enable you personally to experience what Jesus told his disciples at Matthew 10: 11-14. You will have the joyful satisfaction of knowing that you have been obedient to Jesus' command to "let your light shine," and you may even be privileged to help someone else to come to a knowledge of the truth that leads to everlasting life.—Matt. 5:16; John 17:3; 1 Tim. 4:16.

To make it convenient for publishers to share in the house-to-house activity, arrangements are made for witnessing on weekends as well as for during the week. In some areas it has become very difficult to find people in their homes during the daytime. When faced with this situation, some congregations have met with good success by arranging for evening witnessing in their territories. Some people are more inclined to receive visitors in the late afternoon or early evening rather than in the morning hours. Also, there are the following features of the ministry that may prove to be particularly effective in your area.

STORE-TO-STORE AND STREET WITNESSING

Concerning Paul's ministry in Athens, Acts 17: 17 tells us: "Consequently he began to reason in the synagogue with the Jews and the other people who worshiped God and every day in the marketplace with those who happened to be on hand." Yes, in addition to teaching from house to house, Paul taught the people he found in public places, where they went to shop or to carry on business.

In modern times Jehovah's Witnesses have met with good success in calling on people at their places of business or employment. In this way it has been possible to witness to individuals for the first time even though regular visits had been made to their homes. Presenting the latest issues of The Watchtower and Awake! has proved to be an effective way of witnessing to business people, but it is also appropriate to make other literature offers from time to time, using Topics for Conversation or discussions as suggested and outlined in Our Kingdom Ministry.

Street witnessing is done in many countries and usually entails offering the latest copies of

WAT.0020.001.0073

The Watchtower and Awake! to passersby in business areas. This can be done in a kind and tactful manner by approaching people with brief comments on a timely subject featured in one of the magazines. Other literature may also be offered to interested people, and arrangements can then be made to call on these people at their homes. Periodically, Our Kingdom Ministry offers suggestions and encouragement for us to share in this effective feature of the ministry. You may find store-to-store and street witnessing effective and enjoyable ways for you to be fulfilling your ministry.

However, just sounding a warning and proclaiming the good news is not all that is involved in the work assigned to Christians today. If you are to succeed in helping others embrace the truth that leads to life, there is a need for you to make repeated calls to help interested ones progress toward becoming mature Christians.

MAKING RETURN VISITS

Jesus said to his followers: "You will be witnesses of me . . . to the most distant part of the earth." (Acts 1:8) But he also told them to "go therefore and make disciples of people of all the nations, . . . teaching them to observe all the things I have commanded you." (Matt. 28:19, 20) Once the seeds of truth have been planted, there is a need to make return visits. Those people who manifest interest in the Kingdom message need further help if they are to grow to Christian maturity.—Heb. 6:1, 2.

Making return visits can also be a source of much joy for you in Jehovah's service. Those people who expressed interest in the good news when you first called on them will very likely be happy to receive you again. By sharing additional

Bible information with them, you may be able to strengthen their faith in God and help them to become more fully aware of their spiritual need. (Matt. 5:3) If you plan ahead, prepare well and arrange to make the return visit at a convenient time, you may be able to start a regular home Bible study. Usually this will be your objective in making return visits.

Making return visits may present a challenge for some. Perhaps you have become quite efficient in making a brief presentation of the good news from house to house and you enjoy that particular feature of the ministry. But then when you think of going back for the purpose of engaging the householder in a more detailed discussion of a Bible subject, the challenge seems to be overwhelming. You need not feel that way. Very likely on your first call you placed some Bible literature with the interested person. Why not discuss information contained in that publication? You can prepare ahead of time for that. Also, if you do not feel entirely qualified, arrange to take a more experienced publisher along to help you make the return visit.

Jehovah's organization provides the personal assistance you need to help you become effective in making return visits. Be sure that you are taking full advantage of opportunities to improve your own knowledge and understanding of the Scriptures. Trust in Jehovah and accept the assistance of your more experienced brothers and sisters. If you do, you too will improve your ability to make effective return visits and your joy in service will increase accordingly.

HOME BIBLE STUDIES

When the evangelizer Philip spoke to a man who was interested in the message of God's Word, Philip asked: "Do you actually know what you are reading?" The man's response was: "Really, how could I ever do so, unless someone guided me?" The Bible account in Acts chapter 8 then tells us that, starting with the scripture the man was reading, Philip "declared to him the good news about Jesus." (Acts 8:26-36) We do not know how much time Philip spent with the man, but he explained the good news thoroughly so that the man believed and requested water baptism. He became a disciple of Jesus Christ.

An interested person we find today may not be at all familiar with the Bible at first, and so it may require a number of return visits and a detailed study of the Bible over a period of time (weeks, months or even a year or more) before he is able to manifest faith to the extent of requesting baptism. But your patient and loving assistance in helping honest-hearted ones become disciples has its own reward, even as Jesus said: "There is more happiness in giving than there is in receiving."—Acts 20:35.

You will no doubt find it most convenient to conduct a home Bible study by using one of the Society's publications that is especially designed for that purpose. By following the example of the one who studied with you, or by receiving the help of other capable teachers in the congregation, you can learn to conduct productive studies and contribute to the work of making disciples of Jesus Christ.

If you need personal assistance in starting and conducting a home Bible study, you should feel free to speak about your need with one of the overseers or with a fellow Witness who is known to be effective in the Bible study work. You can get personal assistance to help you put into practice the suggestions appearing in Our Kingdom Ministry and demonstrated at the Service Meeting from time to time. Again, reliance on Jehovah and making your desire a matter of prayer will bring results. (1 John 3:22) So share in making disciples and, if at all possible, make it your aim to conduct at least one home Bible study regularly in addition to any study you may conduct with children in your family. By conducting Bible studies, you will again increase your joy in the ministry.

DIRECT INTERESTED ONES TO JEHOVAH'S ORGANIZATION

When we conduct Bible studies and help people become disciples of Jesus Christ, they have the prospect of coming to know Jehovah God and of being brought into his household. That household, God's congregation, is organized theocratically to accomplish Jehovah's will. Our Bible students will make better spiritual progress and grow to maturity more rapidly if we help them to recognize and cooperate with Jehovah's organization. It is important to teach them how they can do that.

To accomplish this you can use material recommended in Our Kingdom Ministry. Also, some of the information found in chapter 4 of this publication may be helpful. From the very beginning of your Bible discussions with interested people you can help them to see that Jehovah is using an organization to get his work done on the earth today. Point out the value of the Bible study aids used by Jehovah's Witnesses and explain how they are produced and distributed worldwide by volunteer workers who are dedicated to Jehovah God. Invite your Bible students to accompany you to the Congregation Book Study.

Introduce them to the brothers there and explain how meetings at the Kingdom Hall are conducted. Encourage them to attend. Help them to get acquainted with more of Jehovah's Witnesses at circuit assemblies and district conventions. On these and other occasions let new ones observe for themselves how Jehovah's servants display the identifying mark of true Christians, love among themselves.—John 13:35.

If your own deep appreciation for Jehovah's organization is reflected in your conversations with interested people, it will be easier for them to grow in appreciation and will move them to make greater advancement in getting to know Jehovah.

USING BIBLE LITERATURE

The early Christians became zealous publishers of the Word of God. They made copies of the Scriptures for their own personal use and for congregational study. They recommended the word of truth to others. Their handwritten copies were few in number and highly treasured. (Col. 4:16; 2 Tim. 2:15; 3:14-17; 4:13; 1 Pet. 1:1) Today, with the aid of modern printing methods, Jehovah's Witnesses have been able to publish millions of Bibles and hundreds of millions of Bible study aids such as bound books and magazines in scores of languages, making them available to people worldwide.

As you share the good news with others be sure to make good use of the numerous Bible study aids provided by "the faithful and discreet slave" and published by the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society. Service campaigns are outlined for each month in Our Kingdom Ministry, suggesting publications to be featured in public witnessing. You also have opportunity to share regularly in distributing magazines at different times each month including magazine days, especially those Saturdays designated for making a special effort.

Although the primary concern of the 'faithful slave' has been to provide spiritual food at the proper time for the household of God, that "slave" has reflected the generosity of Jehovah God himself in providing an abundance of spiritual food for all mankind that hunger for knowledge of God. Knowing how much you personally have benefited from reading and studying the Society's publications, you will no doubt want to share with others the things you have learned. (Heb. 13:15, 16) With the use of the Society's publications, even new ones can accomplish much good in preaching the good news from house to house.

INFORMAL WITNESSING

Jesus told those who were paying attention to his word: "You are the light of the world. . . . Let your light shine before men, that they may see your fine works and give glory to your Father who is in the heavens." (Matt. 5:14-16) The very life of these disciples should reflect God's ways by imitating Jesus Christ, who also said: "I am the light of the world." Jesus set the example for all Christians in letting the "light of life" shine forth for the benefit of all who came in contact with him.—John 8:12.

The apostle Paul likewise became an example for us to follow. (1 Cor. 4:16; 11:1) The Christians in Philippi had followed his example and he addressed them as 'illuminators in the world, shining among a crooked and twisted generation.' (Phil. 2:15) We today can also let the Kingdom truth shine forth by our words and actions whenever there is opportunity for us to tell others about the good news. True, our good example as honest and upright people may in itself draw attention to the fact that we are different from the majority of mankind today. However, if we do not open our mouth to speak the good news to those who see our good example, they may never get to know why we are different from the rest.—Matt. 5:15, 16.

Many of Jehovah's Witnesses have fine opportunities to present the good news to people they meet daily in their secular work, at school or otherwise while going about their normal affairs. At times we have the opportunity to talk with fellow travelers when on a journey. There are many opportunities that present themselves, but individually we must be alert to turn ordinary conversation into a witness and be prepared to speak with others on every appropriate occasion.

We will be encouraged to take advantage of every opportunity to share the good news with others if we keep in mind that whenever we do so we are praising our Creator and bringing honor to his name. At the same time we may be able to help honest-hearted ones come to know Jehovah so that they too can serve him and gain the hope of life that comes through faith in Jesus Christ. All of this is sacred service and it is pleasing to God.—Heb. 12:28; Rev. 7:9, 10.

TERRITORY ASSIGNED FOR EFFECTIVE WITNESSING

It is Jehovah's purpose to have the Kingdom message preached worldwide in an orderly manner. To this end congregations, as well as individuals who witness in isolated areas, receive assignments of territory, in both city and rural areas, from the branch office directing the work in their respective lands. (1 Cor. 14:40)

This is consistent with the God-directed arrangement existing in the first century among some of the apostles. (2 Cor. 10:13; Gal. 2:9) With the rapid expansion of the Kingdom work in these last days, much overlapping of effort is avoided by having well-organized territory assignments. This affords opportunity for more people to hear the good news.

The overall arrangement for working congregation territory comes under the service overseer's supervision. A ministerial servant may do the actual assigning of territory and keep a record concerning it up-to-date. Where the territory is limited, the Congregation Book Study conductors usually hold territory in which publishers in their group may share in field service.

If you are in a congregation where territory is plentiful, however, you may wish to have a territory of your own, perhaps one near where you live. Having such a conveniently located personal territory would enable you to make the most of the time you can devote to field service. Also, you may wish to invite other publishers to work with you in your personal territory.

When such personal territory is available, you may approach the one who assigns territory in your congregation and request any portion of territory that has not already been assigned to someone else. He should be kept informed as to the coverage of that territory. As you work your personal territory you will get acquainted with many people and, with patience, you may have the joy of helping some of them to come to appreciate God's provision for salvation.

Of course, if you have a personal territory it will be your responsibility to get in touch with as many people in that territory as you can. This will entail calling back where no one was at home and rendering continued spiritual assistance to those who show interest in the good news of the Kingdom. From time to time Our Kingdom Ministry makes specific suggestions as to how territory can be worked thoroughly with the use of Bibles and books, magazines, tracts, handbills and other similar provisions of the Society. It may be that some of the people in your territory, such as those living in apartments, will have to be reached by letter, telephone or other means, such as street witnessing. The service overseer and your Congregation Book Study conductor can offer appropriate suggestions in accord with local conditions and individual circumstances.

When all of those associated with the congregation cooperate, the territory can be worked in a thorough and effective manner. We also avoid confusion as well as irritation on the part of householders due to simultaneous coverage of the same area by two or more Witnesses. In this way consideration is shown both for our brothers and for the people in the territory.

GROUP WITNESSING

Dedicated Christians have a personal responsibility to share the good news with others. There are many ways in which this can be done, but most of us appreciate being able to go out in field service accompanied by others. (Luke 10:1) For this reason congregations have meetings for field service on weekends as well as during the week. Worldly holidays also provide fine opportunities for group witnessing arrangements, since many brothers are free from secular employment on such days. Meetings for field service are scheduled for the convenience of the publishers. These may be held at the Kingdom Hall, at homes where Congregation Book Studies are conducted or at other convenient places.

WAT.0020.001.0082

At meetings for field service, arrangements can be made to give assistance to newer or less experienced ones. Also, in some areas it may be advisable to assign two or more publishers to work together for other reasons. Those working together can always be helpful and encouraging to one another. Even if you are planning to work separately in the territory, meeting with the group can prove to be encouraging to all concerned. Just knowing that others are out in service working in the same general area gives one confidence.

NEW PUBLISHERS

From the time you begin conducting a home Bible study with an interested person, encourage him to speak with others about what he is learning from the Bible. He could be urged to speak with relatives, friends, work associates and others on an informal basis. Then, at the appropriate time and in keeping with his advancement, invite him to share in the organized field service of the congregation if he qualifies to do so. This is an important step in teaching new ones to be followers of Jesus Christ.—Matt. 9:9; Luke 6:40.

MEETING THE REQUIREMENTS

Before inviting a person to accompany you in the field service for the first time, or before you suggest that he report any field service to the congregation, there are certain qualifications he should meet. When such a person accompanies us in the field service he identifies himself publicly with the congregation of Jehovah's people, so it is understood that he has already brought his life in harmony with Jehovah's righteous standards and can be an approved associate of the congregation. The same would be true regarding his reporting time spent in informal witnessing. So whereas you will certainly want to help your Bible students to become publishers of the good news, and to report field service to the congregation even before baptism, caution must be exercised when inviting them out in field service for the first time. We will want to know that this will not bring reproach on the congregation and thus be displeasing to Jehovah.

Very likely as you study with a person and discuss Bible principles with him the circumstances of his life will become known to you. Or you may have occasion to observe that he is living in harmony with the information he has learned from studying the Bible. But there are some aspects of the student's life that you will want to observe particularly before inviting him to accompany you in the field service and to share in publicly witnessing to others.

Do the person's expressions show that he believes the Bible is the inspired Word of God? (2 Tim. 3:16) Does he know and believe the basic teachings of the Scriptures so that, when asked questions, he will answer in harmony with the Bible and not according to his own ideas or false religious teachings? (2 Tim. 2:15; Matt. 7:21-23) Is he heeding the Bible's command to associate with Jehovah's people in congregation meetings (if he physically and circumstantially can)? (Heb. 10:24, 25; Ps. 122:1) Does he know what the Bible says about fornication, adultery, polygamy and homosexuality, and is he living in harmony with such teachings? If the person is living with one of the opposite sex, are they properly married? (Matt. 19:9; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10;

1 Tim. 3:2, 12; Heb. 13:4) Does he heed the Bible's prohibition of drunkenness? (Eph. 5:18; 1 Pet. 4:3, 4) Does he keep himself clean from the defilement of tobacco, betel nut and other things that contaminate the body? Is he free from nonmedical use of addictive drugs? (2 Cor. 7:1) Has he definitely broken off membership in all false religious organizations with which he may have been affiliated, and has he ceased attending their meetings and supporting or sharing in their activities? (2 Cor. 6:14-18; Rev. 18:4) Is he free from all involvement in the political affairs of the world? (John 6:15; 15:19; Jas. 1:27) Does he believe and live in harmony with what the Bible says about the affairs of the nations at Isaiah 2:4? Does he really want to be one of Jehovah's Witnesses?—Ps. 110:3.

If you are not sure about some of these matters, it may be helpful to invite him to look up the scriptures here cited and get his expressions on them, making sure that he sees the import of what they say and that he understands that those who share with Jehovah's Witnesses in their activity must be leading a life that harmonizes with these Scriptural requirements. We want to be satisfied that those who begin to participate in the field ministry with us know what is expected of them. We should be reasonably sure that they do qualify. Then, when such a person desires to identify himself with Jehovah's Witnesses by publicly engaging in the field ministry, we can encourage him to turn in a field service report.

HELPING YOUNG PEOPLE

Young children may also qualify as publishers of the good news. Jesus received young children to himself and blessed them. (Matt. 19:13-15; 21:15, 16) Although parents are primarily responsible for their own children, others in the congregation may also wish to help young ones who are motivated from the heart to share in the Kingdom-preaching work. If you are a parent, your fine example in the field ministry will do much to encourage your children to be zealous in their service to God. When a child is exemplary in his conduct and is able to make a personal expression of his faith by speaking to others about the good news, being moved from the heart to do so, what further help can be given?

WAT.0020.001.0085

It would be in order for the parent to approach one of the elders on the service committee of the congregation and discuss whether the child is qualified to be counted as a publisher. If the child has a basic knowledge of Bible truth and gives evidence of wanting to share in Kingdom service, this would indicate good progress has been made. After that elder has considered these and other factors similar to those that apply to adults, he can determine whether the child's field service reports may be accepted, so that he may be recognized as a publisher with the congregation.—Luke 6:45; Rom. 10:10.

REPORTING ON THE PROGRESS OF THE MINISTRY

Progressive reports on the worldwide expansion of pure worship have been a source of genuine encouragement for Jehovah's people over the years. From the time Jesus first told his disciples that the good news would have to be preached throughout all the earth, true Christians have been vitally concerned with knowing how this would be accomplished.—Matt. 28:19, 20; Mark 13:10; Acts 1:8.

Early followers of Jesus Christ took interest in reports of progress in the preaching work. (Mark 6:30) As the work prospered, statistical to share in the ministry at hand? (Ezek. 33:8, 9) Will we put God's Kingdom first in our life and fully accomplish our ministry? What theocratic goals are we pursuing to that end?

What Jehovah requires of each one of his dedicated servants was expressed by Jesus when he said: "You must love Jehovah your God with your whole heart and with your whole soul and with your whole mind and with your whole strength." (Mark 12:30) All of us are required to be whole-souled in our service to him. This means that we can individually demonstrate the depth of our devotion and the genuineness of our dedication by doing our utmost in the ministry. (2 Tim. 2:15) There are many opportunities open to each one, according to our individual circumstances and abilities. Just consider what some of these opportunities are and decide what theocratic goals you will pursue in fulfilling your ministry.

SERVING AS A CONGREGATION PUBLISHER

All who embrace the truth have the privilege of publishing the good news. This is the basic work that Jesus gave his disciples to do. (Matt. 24: 14; 28:19, 20) A disciple of Jesus Christ usually begins speaking about the good news to others just as soon as he recognizes its value. This is what Andrew, Philip, Cornelius and others did. (John 1:40, 41, 43-45; Acts 10:1, 2, 24; 16:14, 15, 25-34) Does this mean that a person may participate in telling others about the good news even before he gets baptized? Yes. As soon as an individual qualifies as an approved associate of the congregation, the opportunity to participate in the house-to-house preaching of the good news is opened up to him. Also, according to his ability and circumstances he may regularly share in other features of the Kingdom ministry.

As a baptized member of the congregation you, of course, are interested in doing all you can to help others learn the good news. Men and women alike have the privilege of sharing in the God-ordained preaching work in the field. All should set a fine example in caring for their respective roles within the congregation. (1 Tim. 2:9-15; Titus 2:1-10; 1 Pet. 5:5) Male members of the congregation who make spiritual advancement and qualify may be appointed as ministerial servants. (1 Tim. 3:8-10, 12, 13) Such ones who reach out for the responsibilities of an overseer and who meet the Scriptural requirements are appointed to this position. They are used in teaching the congregation and serve as shepherds of the flock. (1 Tim. 3:1-7; Titus 1:5-9) It is certainly a privilege to have even a small part in advancing the interests of God's Kingdom. Anyone who can expand his ministry to attain special privileges of service is happy indeed.

SERVING WHERE THE NEED IS GREATER

It may be that you have come to a knowledge of the truth in a congregation where the territory is frequently worked and a fine witness is continually being given for the benefit of anyone who should wish to come to know Jehovah. In such circumstances you may feel that you should expand your service privileges by moving to another area or, in some cases, even to another land where there is a greater need in the field. (Acts 16:9) If you are a brother who presently serves as an elder or a ministerial servant in the congregation, there may be another congregation either nearby or elsewhere that would appreciate having your assistance in caring for congregational responsibilities.

If serving where the need is greater is something you would like to do, why not discuss the matter with the elders of your congregation. They may be able to help you determine how to go about making such a move or how to qualify for such work sometime in the future.

AUXILIARY, REGULAR AND SPECIAL PIONEER SERVICE

All publishers should be acquainted with the general requirements for the auxiliary, regular and special pioneer service as well as other branches of full-time service. From time to time Our Kingdom Ministry sets out additional specific information. A pioneer publisher of the good news must be an exemplary baptized Christian, male or female, whose personal circumstances allow the spending of a specified number of hours each month in publicly preaching the good news. Applications for auxiliary pioneer service are approved by the local congregation's service committee, whereas regular and special pioneers are appointed and assigned by the Society.

Auxiliary pioneers may be appointed for a minimum of one month or they may pioneer for any number of consecutive months, according to their individual circumstances and personal qualifications. Many Kingdom publishers enjoy serving as auxiliary pioneers on special occasions, such as during the Memorial season or the month of the circuit overseer's visit to the congregation. Vacation months are chosen by some. Baptized school-age publishers may wish to enroll as auxiliary pioneers during those months they have time off from school because of vacations or worldly holidays. Whatever your personal circumstances, if you are baptized, are of good moral standing, can arrange to meet the requirement of spending 60 hours a month in the field ministry and believe you could serve one or more months as an auxiliary pioneer, the congregation elders will be pleased to consider your application for this privilege of service.

To qualify for appointment as a regular pioneer you must currently be in a position to reach the yearly field service quota of 1,000 hours. This is a requirement. To fulfill this quota you will need to work for a monthly goal of 90 hours. As a regular pioneer, you may choose your own assignment of territory, but you must always work in close cooperation with the congregation where you are assigned. Zealous pioneers can be a real blessing to the congregation, generating enthusiasm for the field ministry and even encouraging others to take up the pioneer service. Before the elders recommend your appointment as a regular pioneer, however, you must be baptized for at least six months, have good morals and have shown yourself to be an exemplary publisher. You must be able to follow a practical schedule that will enable you to spend the required number of hours in field service.

Special pioneers are chosen by the Society from among regular pioneers who have demonstrated their effectiveness in the ministry and who are able to serve wherever the Society chooses to assign them. This is often in unassigned or isolated territory where they can find interest and form new congregations. At times, special pioneers are assigned to congregations that need help in covering their territory regularly with the Kingdom message. Some special pioneers who are also elders have been assigned to help small congregations even where there is not a particular need for more workers in the field. The Society gives some financial assistance to special pioneers in view of their high hour requirement.

MISSIONARY SERVICE

Getting the Kingdom good news preached "to the most distant part of the earth" before the end comes has made it necessary for the Society to send forth missionaries into many lands. (Acts 1:8; Matt. 24:14) This has opened up opportunities for greatly expanded service privileges for thousands of Jehovah's Witnesses and especially for those already sharing in the full-time service.

Usually those invited to share in missionary work are given specialized training in Gilead school. Over the years thousands of full-time ministers have received missionary training. They have been chosen from among those who have already proved themselves as zealous workers, as whole-souled in their devotion and as having a great measure of ability in Kingdom service.

To qualify for missionary work a person must be between the ages of 21 and 40 and have good physical health and stamina, since many missionary assignments are in areas of the earth where living conditions are difficult and there is exposure to unaccustomed diseases. Also, a person going into missionary work may be required to adjust to a different standard of living and an entirely new cultural environment.

If you are already in the full-time service and you would like to reach out for additional privileges as a missionary, you can learn more about the requirements by attending the meetings for people interested in missionary service when these are arranged at district conventions. Your circuit overseer may also be able to help you with good advice. If you qualify, you may be privileged to take up a sacred service that has wonderfully contributed to the worldwide expansion of true worship.

WAT.0020.001.0091

BETHEL SERVICE

Serving at one of the many Bethel homes around the world is a very special privilege. The name Bethel means "House of God," and that designation is certainly appropriate for these centers of theocratic activity. Brothers and sisters who are in Bethel service do a vital work in connection with producing and distributing literature used by Jehovah's Witnesses everywhere. Also, from Brooklyn Bethel the Governing Body provides theocratic oversight and direction for the congregations throughout the earth.

Much of the service being performed at the Bethel homes is hard physical work. For this reason most of those called into Bethel service are dedicated and baptized brothers, young in years, in good health and strong physically. If there is a need in your country and if you would like to serve at Bethel, you can learn more about the requirements by attending the special meetings for people interested in Bethel service when these are arranged at district conventions. Your circuit overseer can also be of assistance in this regard.

WHAT ARE YOUR SPIRITUAL GOALS FOR THE FUTURE?

If you have dedicated your life unreservedly to Jehovah, your ultimate goal is that of attaining to everlasting life in Jehovah's righteous New Order. But what are your service goals along the way? By having spiritual goals you are less likely to misdirect your energies and other resources. (1 Cor. 9:26) You will be able to aim for something worth while. Such goals are conducive to spiritual growth and will help you to concentrate on more important things as you use opportunities to reach out for additional service privileges.—Phil. 1:10; 1 Tim. 4:15, 16.

In his illustration of the man that sowed, Jesus emphasized the fact that good symbolic soil produces varying amounts of fruitage. He said: "As for the one sown upon the fine soil, this is the one hearing the word and getting the sense of it, who really does bear fruit and produces, this one a hundredfold, that one sixty, the other thirty." (Matt. 13:23) If we have got the sense of the Word into our heart, should we not exert ourselves to make that Word produce abundant fruitage for Jehovah's praise? Do we not want to bear much Kingdom fruitage as we zealously share in the Kingdom ministry? And do we not want to produce abundantly the fruitage of God's spirit in our life every day? (John 15:2, 3) Having spiritual goals can help us do all of that.

The apostle Paul is an example for us to imitate in our service to God. (1 Cor. 11:1) He exerted himself vigorously in serving Jehovah to the very limit of his ability. He recognized that Jehovah's service provided him with many opportunities. To the brothers in Corinth he wrote: "A large door that leads to activity has been opened to me." Is this not true in our case also? Are there not many opportunities for us to serve Jehovah in association with the congregation, especially in preaching the Kingdom good news? Paul recognized that going through that door would not be easy, for he added, "But there are many opposers." (1 Cor. 16:9) In accepting that service Paul was willing to discipline himself severely, even as would an athlete whose heart desire was to win a mere fading crown in the games. Notice what he said at 1 Corinthians 9:24-27, including the words: "I pummel my body and lead it as a slave." Are we of that same mind?

Many of the missionaries in foreign lands today are there because they, with encouragement from their parents and others, set Gilead training and missionary work as a theocratic goal early in life, even while they were yet children in school. Similarly, many brothers now serving at Bethel set Bethel service as a goal either while they were very young children or when they first became acquainted with the good news and learned about this special privilege of service.

According to their differing personal circumstances in life, each one is encouraged to work toward certain theocratic goals. Some of those goals might be increasing participation in field service each week, starting and conducting a home Bible study, making more time to prepare for congregation meetings, enrolling as an auxiliary or regular pioneer, serving where the need is greater, serving at Bethel or in the missionary field. Of course, at congregation meetings, at conventions and in the Society's publications attention may be drawn to other theocratic goals that you, according to your own personal circumstances, may want to consider and strive to reach. The important thing is that you remain steadfast and fully accomplish your ministry. If you do, you will also attain your ultimate goal of everlasting life in Jehovah's service.—Luke 13:24; 1 Tim. 4:7b, 8.

a change of pace and recuperate their physical and mental powers. Many have benefited from following the Scriptural counsel and balanced suggestions contained in the Society's publications on this matter.

With so many forms of recreation available, Christians should be selective and exercise godly wisdom in what they do. While it has its place, recreation is not the big thing in life. We are warned that in "the last days," men would become "lovers of pleasures rather than lovers of God." (2 Tim. 3:1, 4) Much of what is today termed recreation and entertainment is objectionable to one who desires to hold to Jehovah's righteous standards.

Early Christians had to resist an unwholesome environment in the pleasure-seeking Roman world. At the circus, spectators were entertained by viewing the sufferings of others. Violence, bloodshed and sexual immorality were key elements in the recreation of the populace. Early Christians stayed away from such things. Much of the modern world's entertainment features similar attractions and caters to base human emotions. We need to 'keep strict watch on how we walk' by turning away from demoralizing entertainment. (Eph. 5:15, 16) And even though the entertainment itself may be acceptable, often the presence and influence of worldly people can be harmful.—See 1 Peter 4:1-4.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES

Children of Jehovah's Witnesses benefit from getting a basic secular education. While attending school, they should be interested in learning how to read and write well. Other subjects taught in primary school as well as in high school can be of value to young people as they pursue spiritual goals. During their school years they should make a diligent effort to remember their Creator by putting spiritual things first.—Eccl. 12:1.

WAT.0020.001.0095

If you are a Christian youth attending school, your parents have no doubt encouraged you to exercise special care. Even though worldly youths go unrestrained in their rebellious course of conduct, you do not need to side with them. (2 Tim. 3:1, 2) Under these circumstances there is much you can do to ward off worldly influences. Jehovah has not left any of us exposed to dangers without providing necessary protection. (Ps. 23:4; 91:1, 2) So take advantage of Jehovah's provisions for the congregation; this will serve to safeguard you.—Ps. 23:5.

To keep separate from the world while in school, young Witnesses should consider the dangers of becoming involved in extracurricular activities. Though classmates and teachers may not always understand your decision of nonparticipation, pleasing God is what counts. This requires exercising a Bible-trained conscience and standing firm in the resolve not to become involved in worldly competition or nationalistic practices that violate Bible principles. (Gal. 5:19, 26; see footnote in 1971 edition.) By listening to the Scriptural counsel of godly parents and benefiting from the good association and instruction of the congregation, the youth in our midst will be aided in holding to Jehovah's righteous standards.

SECULAR WORK AND BUSINESS ASSOCIATIONS

Family heads have a Scriptural obligation to provide for the needs of their own household. (1 Tim. 5:8) Even so, they as ministers recognize that their secular work is secondary to the vital Kingdom interests. (Matt. 6:33; Rom. 11:13) By practicing godly devotion and being content with having sustenance and covering, they avoid the anxieties and snares of the materialistic way of life so common in the world.—1 Tim. 6:6-10.

Not only family heads but also other dedicated Christians who find it necessary to be secularly employed should have such Scriptural principles in mind. Making honest provision for themselves means that they would not want to profit from activities that violate God's law or are illegal from the standpoint of Caesar. (1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Rom. 13:1, 2) Also, there is a need to be constantly aware of the dangers of bad association. As soldiers of Christ, our brothers refrain from engaging in commercial endeavors that violate Christian standards or jeopardize their spirituality. (2 Tim. 2:4) Neither do they become involved in unscriptural connections with God's religious enemy, Babylon the Great.—2 Cor. 6:14-17; Rev. 18:2, 4.

Observing God's righteous standards will prevent us from taking advantage of our theocratic association in order to promote personal or other business interests. The purpose of our association with others at Christian meetings in the local congregation and when attending circuit assemblies and larger conventions is exclusively for worshiping Jehovah, feeding at his spiritual table and enjoying an interchange of encouragement. (Rom. 1:11, 12; Heb. 10:24, 25) Such association should always be kept on a high spiritual level.

"DO ALL THINGS FOR GOD'S GLORY"

In addition to the foregoing, other aspects of our daily life should give clear evidence that our profession of Christianity is genuine. (Rom. 2:21-24) Our personal habits, for example, may seem to be of relatively little consequence. But, concerning these very things we are admonished: "Whether you are eating or drinking or doing anything else, do all things for God's glory. Keep from becoming causes for stumbling." (1 Cor. 10: 31-33) Such counsel is applicable at all times—in our private life, when we are among our Christian brothers or when we are being observed by worldly people.

It is a fine thing to be hospitable. (1 Pet. 4:9) When inviting others to our home for a meal, refreshments, a period of study or relaxation and fellowship, we should keep in mind those in the congregation who may be needy or disadvantaged. (Luke 14:12-14) If we are guests on such occasions, our conduct should be in line with the counsel at Mark 12:31. It is always good to show appreciation for the thoughtfulness and kindness of others.

At times, several families may be invited to a home for Christian fellowship. Or, brothers may be invited to attend a wedding reception or a similar social occasion. (John 2:2) Reasonably, those who are hosts in such cases should feel personally responsible for what takes place. With this in mind, discerning Christians have seen the wisdom of limiting the size of such groups and the duration of the gatherings. Alcoholic beverages, if served at all, should be used in moderation. (Phil. 4:5) If there is an effort to make such Christian get-togethers spiritually upbuilding and they are planned accordingly, food and drink will not be the most important considerations. There is a need to exercise caution when large groups get together. The relaxed atmosphere at such gatherings has led some to go beyond the limits of proper Christian conduct and become involved in excessive eating and drinking and even serious wrongdoing.

Truly, Christians rejoice in God's bounteous gifts and find that they can 'eat and indeed drink and see good for all their hard work.' (Eccl. 3: 12, 13) Realizing that these and other activities should always be to God's glory, hosts as well as guests will look back on social gatherings, not with troubled consciences, but with the satisfaction of having been spiritually refreshed.

DWELLING IN CHRISTIAN UNITY

Jehovah's righteous standards for his people also require that they "observe the oneness of the spirit in the uniting bond of peace." (Eph. 4: 1-3) Rather than seeking to please themselves, they would each seek to pursue what is good toward others. This is the spirit you have doubtless found in your association with the brothers in your congregation. No matter what a person's racial, national, social, economic or education-place from the wind and a place of concealment from the rainstorm, like streams of water in a waterless country, like the shadow of a heavy crag in an exhausted land."—Isa. 32:2.

WAT.0020.001.0099

NOT OVERLOOKING SERIOUS WRONGS

Willingness to overlook offenses and to forgive does not mean that we are not concerned about wrongdoing or that we approve of it. Not all wrongs can simply be charged to inherited imperfection; nor is it for our brother's good or for the good of the congregation to overlook it if he commits wrongs that go beyond minor offenses. (Lev. 19:17; Ps. 141:5) Under the Law covenant given through Moses there was recognition of a difference in degree of seriousness of sins and transgressions. This is also true for Christians under the new covenant.—Compare 1 John 5:16, 17.

When giving counsel, Jesus outlined some specific procedures for resolving problems of serious wrongdoing, such as fraud or slander, that may arise between fellow Christians. Note the steps that he set out: "Moreover, if your brother commits a sin, [1] go lay bare his fault between you and him alone. If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. But if he does not listen, [2] take along with you one or two more, in order that at the mouth of two or three witnesses every matter may be established. If he does not listen to them, [3] speak to the congregation. If he does not listen even to the congregation, let him be to you just as a man of the nations and as a tax collector."—Matt. 18:15-17.

If someone in the congregation has committed such a serious sin against you personally, do not be hasty to turn to the overseers, or someone else, requesting them to intervene in your behalf. First of all, as Jesus counsels, speak with the one against whom you have a complaint. Try to resolve the matter between just the two of you without involving anyone else at all. If the matter can be straightened out in this way, the one who has sinned will certainly appreciate the fact that you have not told others about his sin and have not marred his good reputation among others in the congregation. You will have "gained your brother."

Where the sinner accepts reproof, seeks forgiveness and straightens the matter out, Jesus states there is no need to carry the matter further. This fact shows that, although serious, the offenses here discussed were limited in nature to such as could be settled between the individuals involved. This would not include such offenses as fornication, adultery, homosexuality, blasphemy, apostasy, idolatry and similar gross sins that should be reported to the elders and handled by them. When the Law covenant was in force, these sins required more than forgiveness from an offended individual.—1 Cor. 6:9, 10; Gal. 5:19-21.

In view of this and in view of the illustration that Jesus subsequently gave, as recorded at Matthew 18:23-35, the sins considered in Matthew 18:15-17 evidently were sins such as those involving financial or property matters—failure to make proper payment for something or some action involving a measure of fraud. The sin might damage one's reputation by actual slander. In these cases, if the offender recognized his wrong, expressed willingness to right it to the extent possible and sought forgiveness, the matter could be settled by the offended one's granting forgiveness.—Compare Matthew 5:25, 26.

If the one who sinned against you cannot be convinced by your reasoning with him alone, then do as Jesus said and take one or two others along and speak with him again. The one or two you take with you should have the same objective, that of gaining your brother. Preferably they should be witnesses of the alleged wrongdoing, but if there are no eyewitnesses, you may choose to take along responsible brothers who become witnesses to the evidence presented in the discussion. Also, after listening to what you and the other person have to say, they may help the two of you reason on the matter and seek a solution to the problem. Keep in mind, however, that if you alone were not able to convince your brother that a wrong was committed, there is always the possibility that he has not sinned against you and that the individuals you take along with you may be required to convince you that you have no reason for complaint against your brother. (Prov. 18:17) Remember that the objective is to establish peace between you and your brother, to 'gain your brother.'

But if you are convinced that your brother has sinned against you and it has not been resolved either when you spoke with him alone or when you went to him with one or two others, and if a serious sin is involved so that it would be wrong just to let it pass, then you should report the matter to the overseers of the congregation. Having done this, you have taken it as far as you can. Leave the problem in the hands of the responsible members of the congregation and trust in Jehovah that it will be resolved. Never should you allow the wrong conduct of someone else to become a reason for stumbling or a force to rob you of your joy in Jehovah's service.—Ps. 119: 165.

If upon investigation it should become evident to the shepherds of the flock that the brother has indeed committed a serious sin against you and yet has been unwilling to repent and make appropriate amends, it may become necessary for the overseers to expel the unrepentant wrongdoer and in that way protect the flock and safeguard the cleanness of the congregation.—Matt. 18:17.

HANDLING OTHER JUDICIAL MATTERS

Some cases of wrongdoing may be brought to the attention of the overseers by individual brothers or sisters who report unresolved personal grievances. (Matt. 18:17) On the other hand, the elders may be approached by individuals who either confess their own sins or report what they know regarding the wrongdoing of others. (Jas. 5:16; Lev. 5:1) But regardless of the exact manner in which the elders first hear reports of serious wrongdoing on the part of a baptized member of the congregation, an initial investigation will be made. If it is established that there is substance to the report and evidence is produced showing that a serious sin actually may have been committed, the congregation's body of elders will assign a judicial committee of at least three brothers to handle the matter. In the case of reported serious wrongdoing on the part of one who is regularly associated but not yet baptized, similar steps will be taken.

While exercising watchful care over the flock, seeking to protect it from any elements that would be spiritually damaging, the elders will also endeavor to use their spiritual qualifications to restore or reprove any who have erred. (Jude 21-23) This would be in harmony with instructions given to Timothy by the apostle Paul. He wrote: "I solemnly charge you before God and Christ Jesus, who is destined to judge the living and the dead, and by his manifestation and his kingdom, preach the word, be at it urgently in favorable season, in troublesome season, reprove, reprimand, exhort, with all long-suffering and art of teaching." (2 Tim. 4:1, 2) Doing this may take much time and effort, but it is a part of the hard work of the elders that the congregation appreciates and for which they give the elders double honor.—1 Tim. 5:17.

In every situation where guilt is established, a primary endeavor of the overseers is to restore the wrongdoer if he is genuinely repentant, as indicated, for example, by his producing "works that befit repentance." (Acts 26:20) If they are able to help him and he is repentant, their administering reproof, either privately or before onlookers concerned in the case, serves to discipline him and instill a wholesome fear in any such onlookers. (1 Tim. 5:20; compare 2 Samuel 12:13.) Thus, the wrongdoer may be helped to 'make straight paths for his feet' thereafter. —Heb. 12:13.

However, the wrongdoer may have become hardened in his course of wrong conduct and fail to respond to the efforts of his brothers to help him. Fruits, or works, befitting repentance may not be in evidence, nor may genuine repentance be apparent at the time of the hearing. What then? In such cases it would be necessary for the responsible overseers to expel the unrepentant wrongdoer from the congregation, thus denying him fellowship with Jehovah's clean congregation. This would be done to protect other members of the congregation from the bad influence of the wrongdoer, safeguarding the moral and spiritual cleanness of the congregation and protecting its good name. (Compare Deuteronomy 21:20, 21; 22:23, 24.) This is what the apostle Paul did when he became aware of the shameful conduct of a member of the congregation in Corinth. (1 Cor. 5:11-13) Also, this same apostle reports on the disfellowshipping of others who rebelled against the truth in the first century.—1 Tim. 1:20.

IF THE DECISION IS TO DISFELLOWSHIP

When a judicial committee handling a case of wrongdoing reaches the conclusion that the unrepentant person should be disfellowshipped, how should they deal with him?

It is appropriate for the committee to speak with him and let him know of their decision to disfellowship him from the congregation. They clearly state the Scriptural reason(s) for the disfellowshipping action. When informing the wrongdoer of their decision, the judicial committee should tell him that if he believes that a serious error in judgment has been made and he wishes to appeal the decision of the committee, he may do so by writing a letter clearly stating his reasons for the appeal. He will be allowed seven days for doing this. If such written appeal is received, the body of elders should arrange for an appeal committee to rehear the case. They may use local elders or elders from nearby congregations; they should be men who are experienced and qualified. The body of elders should request one of the traveling overseers to suggest who might serve on the appeal committee. Every effort should be made to conduct the appeal within one week after the written appeal is received. If there is an appeal, announcement of the disfellowshipping will be held in abeyance. In the meantime the accused person will be restricted from commenting and praying at meetings or enjoying special privileges of service.

If the wrongdoer does not indicate that he wishes to appeal, the judicial committee should explain to him the need for repentance and what steps he can take toward being reinstated in due time. This would be both helpful and kind, with the hope that he will change his ways and in time qualify to return to Jehovah's organization. —2 Cor. 2:6, 7.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DISFELLOWSHIPPING

When it becomes necessary to remove an unrepentant wrongdoer from the congregation, a brief announcement is made, simply stating that the person has been disfellowshipped. There is no need to say more. This will alert faithful members of the congregation to stop associating with that person.—1 Cor. 5:11.

NONBAPTIZED ASSOCIATES WHO ARE WRONGDOERS

What of nonbaptized individuals who have been recognized as approved associates, have shared in the field service with the congregation and perhaps have enrolled in the Theocratic Ministry School, but who have now become involved in serious wrongdoing? They should be dealt with in a way similar to that of baptized Witnesses with the exception that, not being recognized members of the congregation, they could not be formally expelled therefrom. It may be that they do not fully understand the Bible's standards, and kind counsel may help them to make straight paths for their feet.

If a nonbaptized wrongdoer is still unrepentant after a judicial committee has met with him and tried to help him, then it becomes necessary to inform the congregation. A brief announcement is made that the person is no longer recognized as an approved associate. (1 Cor. 15:33) The congregation will then view the wrongdoer as they would view one who has been disfellowshipped. No field service reports would be accepted from such a person.

REINSTATEMENT

A disfellowshipped person may be reinstated in the congregation when he gives clear evidence of repentance, demonstrating that he has abandoned his sinful course of conduct and is desirous of having a good relationship with Jehovah and his organization. The elders are careful to allow sufficient time, perhaps many months, a year or even longer, for the disfellowshipped person to prove that his profession of repentance is genuine. When the body of elders receives a written plea for reinstatement, the original judicial committee that disfellowshipped the person should, if possible, be the committee that speaks with that individual, evaluating the evidence and works of godly repentance on his part, and decides whether to reinstate him at that time or not.

If the person requesting reinstatement was disfellowshipped by another congregation, the local judicial committee may consider the person's plea. Thereafter, the local judicial committee will communicate with the body of elders of the congregation that disfellowshipped the individual, giving them their recommendation. However, the decision to reinstate is made by a judicial committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action.

When the judicial committee is convinced that the disfellowshipped person is genuinely repentant and should be reinstated, an announcement of the reinstatement is made, mentioning also any restrictions that apply until the person has regained a measure of spiritual strength.

Elders are acquainted with the procedure to follow in handling pleas for reinstatement by those disfellowshipped from the congregation. Before any decision can be made in such cases, they have to weigh the various factors that apply. A similar procedure is followed in dealing with unbaptized repentant wrongdoers, whether they be adults or minors, who wish to renew their association with the congregation. In such instances a brief announcement could be made that it would be proper to recognize the individuals once more as approved associates of the congregation.

DISASSOCIATION

The term disassociation applies to the action taken by a person who, although being a baptized member of the congregation, deliberately repudiates his Christian standing, rejecting the congregation and stating that he no longer wants to be recognized or known as one of Jehovah's Witnesses. As a disassociated person, his situation before Jehovah is far different from that of an inactive Christian who, having grown weak spiritually, no longer shares in the field ministry. Such an inactive person may have failed to study God's Word regularly, or his zeal for serving Jehovah may have cooled off due to his experiencing personal problems or persecution. (1 Cor. 11:30; Rom. 14:1) The elders, as well as other concerned members of the congregation, will continue rendering appropriate spiritual assistance to the inactive brother. (1 Thess. 5: 14; Rom. 15:1; Heb. 12:12) However, the person who has disassociated himself by repudiating the faith and deliberately abandoning Jehovah's worship is viewed in the same way as one who has been disfellowshipped. A brief announcement would be made to inform the congregation that the person has voluntarily disassociated himself from the congregation.

Concerning those who renounced their Christian faith in his day, the apostle John wrote: "They went out from us, but they were not of our sort; for if they had been of our sort, they would have remained with us." (1 John 2: 19) Also, a person might renounce his place in the Christian congregation by his actions, such as by becoming part of a secular organization the objective of which is contrary to the Bible and, hence, is under judgment by Jehovah God. (Compare Revelation 19:17-21; Isaiah 2:4.) So if a person who is a Christian chooses to join those who are disapproved by God, it would be fitting for the congregation to acknowledge by a brief announcement that he has disassociated himself and is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Such a person would be viewed in the same way as a disfellowshipped person.

CASES INVOLVING MINOR CHILDREN

Serious wrongdoing on the part of minor children who are baptized members of the congregation should be reported to the elders. When the elders investigate and handle cases of serious sins where a minor is involved, it would be good if the dedicated parents of the young person would be present and cooperate with the elders acting in a judicial capacity, not attempting to shield the erring child from necessary disciplinary action. Just as in dealing with adult offenders, elders serving on the judicial committee where a minor is involved would endeavor to restore the wrongdoer. However, if the young person is unrepentant, disfellowshipping action would be taken.

WAT.0020.001.0109

MARKING DISORDERLY ONES

In his second letter to the Thessalonians, Paul expressed a warning concerning certain ones who walk disorderly and who, if accorded full acceptance as being of good standing in the congregation, could be exerting an unhealthy influence upon others. Paul admonished the Thessalonian Christians "to withdraw from every brother walking disorderly and not according to the tradition you received from us." (2 Thess. 3:6) He further clarified that statement by writing: "But if anyone is not obedient to our word through this letter, keep this one marked, stop associating with him, that he may become ashamed. And yet do not be considering him as an enemy, but continue admonishing him as a brother."—2 Thess. 3:14, 15.

Occasionally, in the congregation today, there may be those who, although not known to be guilty of practicing a grave sin for which they could be expelled, nevertheless continue to display flagrant disregard for theocratic order.

After giving repeated admonitions to such individuals and finding that they persist in disregarding well-established Bible principles, the elders may decide to speak to the congregation and give appropriate admonitions concerning such disorderly conduct. Even though no name has been mentioned, individual members of the congregation would then be obliged to 'mark' a person, or persons, of that kind, just as Paul advised the brothers in Thessalonica. If the disorderly one should still persist in his wayward course of conduct, he remains in grave danger of eventually committing a serious sin that could lead to his being disfellowshipped. On the other hand, the loving concern and firm stand of faithful members of the congregation could indeed move him to shame and repentance. When it is clearly evident that the individual has abandoned his disorderly course, it would no longer be necessary to treat him as a "marked" individual.

JEHOVAH BLESSES UNITED CLEAN WORSHIP

All who are associated with the congregation of God today can certainly rejoice in the rich spiritual estate Jehovah has given to his people. Our spiritual pastures have indeed been made fruitful and we have been provided with an abundance of refreshing waters of truth. We have experienced Jehovah's protective care through his theocratic arrangement under the headship of Christ. (Ps. 23; Isa. 32:1, 2) The spiritual paradise in which we find ourselves has given us a feeling of security in these troublesome last days.

By our maintaining fine conduct as ministers of God's good news and by our example of Christian unity, the Kingdom truth will continue to shine forth through us. With Jehovah's blessing we will have the joy of seeing many more people come to know Jehovah and join us in fully accomplishing the ministry.

CHAPTER 13

A WORLDWIDE ASSOCIATION OF BROTHERS

AFTER dealing exclusively with one man, Abraham, and his descendants the Israelites for a period of 2,000 years, Jehovah God "turned his attention to the nations to take out of them a ity and other circumstances of each baptismal candidate. Our interest is in those whose hearts are turned to Jehovah and who have grasped the sense of fundamental Bible truths. With your loving assistance, those being baptized will be encouraged and helped to enter into the Christian ministry, adequately prepared to accomplish that important assignment.]

QUESTIONS FOR THOSE DESIRING TO BE BAPTIZED

PART I ELEMENTARY BIBLE TEACHINGS—Heb. 5:11–6:3

During your study of the Bible with Jehovah's Witnesses you have become acquainted with the pattern of truth and very likely find it is quite different from what you formerly believed. What you have learned has brought you great spiritual refreshment and has no doubt set before you the hope of future life and blessings on a Paradise earth under God's Kingdom. Your faith in his Word has been strengthened, and through association with his organized people you have already experienced many blessings. You have come to appreciate how Jehovah is dealing with his chosen people today. —Zech. 8:23.

Now, as you prepare for water baptism in symbol of your personal dedication to Jehovah God, you will benefit from a review of elementary Bible teachings conducted by the congregation elders. If you do not understand some things so as to be able to give a reasonable answer to those who may ask or to persons you will approach in field service, the elders will kindly help you to improve your understanding.—1 Pet. 3:15.

Your desire should be in harmony with the words of the apostle Paul that we read at Hebrews 6: 1-3: "For this reason, now that we have left the primary doctrine about the Christ, let us press on to maturity, not laying a foundation again, namely, repentance from dead works, and faith toward

Personal Relationships With Others

(1) What Christian quality should outstandingly characterize our relationship with our spiritual brothers and sisters?

I am giving you a new commandment, that you love one another; just as I have loved you, that you also love one another. By this all will know that you are my disciples, if you have love among yourselves.—John 13:34, 35.

Clothe yourselves with love, for it is a perfect bond of union.—Col. 3:14.

Additional references: James 2:8; 1 Corinthians 13:4-7.

(2) What Christian principles should govern our dealings with persons who are not Jehovah's Witnesses?

Just as you want men to do to you, do the same way to them.—Luke 6:31.

As long as we have time favorable for it, let us work what is good toward all.—Gal. 6:10.

Additional references: Matthew 5:43-48; Romans 12:17, 18; Luke 10:29-37.

(3) How should Christians view the shortcomings of fellow believers?

Continue putting up with one another and forgiving one another freely if anyone has a cause for complaint against another. Even as Jehovah freely forgave you, so do you also.—Col. 3:13.

Above all things, have intense love for one another, because love covers a multitude of sins.—1 Pet. 4:8.

Additional references: Matthew 7:1-5; Proverbs 17:9; 19:11; Matthew 6:12.

(4) If your brother sins against you personally and you find it difficult merely to overlook the transgression, or if his sin against you is of a serious nature and should not be covered over, what should you do?

Moreover, if your brother commits a sin, go lay bare his fault between you and him alone. If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. But if he does not listen, take along with you one or two more, in order that at the mouth of two or three witnesses every matter may be established. If he does not listen to them, speak to the congregation. If he does not listen even to the congregation, let him be to you just as a man of the nations and as a tax collector. —Matt. 18:15-17.

Additional references: Matthew 5:23, 24; Ephesians 4:25.

(4) What mention is made in the Bible of birthday celebrations? How does this affect your view of birthday celebrations?

But when Herod's birthday was being celebrated the daughter of Herodias danced at it and pleased Herod so much that he promised with an oath to give her whatever she asked. Then she, under her mother's coaching, said: "Give me here upon a platter the head of John the Baptist." Grieved though he was, the king out of regard for his oaths and for those reclining with him commanded it to be given; and he sent and had John beheaded in the prison. And his head was brought on a platter and given to the maiden, and she brought it to her mother.—Matt. 14:6-11.

Additional references: Genesis 40:20-22; Ecclesiastes 7: 1, 8.

Optional questions for discussion: (a) What are some of the holidays or celebrations popular in your community that true Christians avoid? (b) What do you need to do to keep from getting involved in worldly holidays or celebrations that run counter to Christian principles? (c) If you have minor children, how can you help them avoid unchristian practices related to worldly holidays?

Baptism

(1) Why do Jehovah's Witnesses baptize in water those who embrace the Christian faith?

Go therefore and make disciples of people of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit.—Matt. 28:19.

He commanded them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ.—Acts 10:48.

Additional references: Matthew 3:13-17; 1 Peter 2:21; Acts 8:12, 35-38.

(2) Who should be baptized? When?

Those who embraced his word heartily were baptized. —Acts 2:41.

When they believed Philip, who was declaring the good news of the kingdom of God and of the name of Jesus Christ, they proceeded to be baptized.—Acts 8:12.

Repent, and let each one of you be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ.—Acts 2:38.

Additional references: Hebrews 10:5-7; Luke 3:21, 23; 1 Peter 3:21.

(3) What does it mean to be baptized in the name of (a) the Father? (b) the Son? (c) the holy spirit?

You, whose name is Jehovah, you alone are the Most High over all the earth.—Ps. 83:18.

God exalted him to a superior position and kindly gave him the name that is above every other name, so that in the name of Jesus every knee should bend of those in heaven and those on earth and those under the ground, and every tongue should openly acknowledge that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father.—Phil. 2:9-11.

I will request the Father and he will give you another helper to be with you forever, the spirit of the truth.—John 14:16, 17.

Additional references: Revelation 1:5; Joel 2:28, 29.

Optional questions for discussion: (a) Why do you want to be baptized? (b) Have you already brought your life into harmony with Jehovah's righteous requirements according to what you have learned from your study of the Bible? (c) Are you at present sharing the good news of the Kingdom with others, demonstrating that you understand that this is Jehovah's will for you at this time? (d) Have you expressed to Jehovah in prayer your desire to be one of his dedicated Witnesses and to serve him in unity with his organized people?

PART III SUBMISSION TO JEHOVAH'S ARRANGEMENT OF THINGS

While still in Eden the first man and woman joined the rebellion led by "the original serpent," Satan the Devil. (Rev. 12:9) They ceased being submissive to Jehovah's arrangement of things. Having been introduced to a course of independence from God, they set out on their own. From that time forward the course taken by mankind has only served to confirm the truthfulness of Jeremiah's words recorded at Jeremiah 10:23, where we read: "I well know, O Jehovah, that to earthling man his way does not belong. It does not belong to man who is walking even to direct his step."

Through your study of the Bible you have learned about Jehovah's purpose to bring all things back into subjection to himself, just as they were in the beginning. (Eph. 1:8-10; 1 Cor. 15:24-28)

WAT.0020.001.0115

Having reached this point in your study you are also desirous of finding your place in Jehovah's arrangement of things and of being submissive to his rule. The following questions and related Scripture references will help you to examine your own understanding of submission to Jehovah's arrangements as regards congregation organization, Christian family life and the political rulers of the day.

Submission in the Congregation Arrangement

(1) What is the basic principle underlying Jehovah's arrangement of things within the Christian congregation?

But I want you to know that the head of every man is the Christ; in turn the head of a woman is the man; in turn the head of the Christ is God.—1 Cor. 11:3.

He [Jesus Christ] is the head of the body, the congregation.—Col. 1:18.

Additional references: Ephesians 1:22, 23; Hebrews 12:9; James 4:7.

(2) Why is there a particular need for submitting to Jehovah's arrangement of things in the Christian congregation today?

For God is a God, not of disorder, but of peace. . . . But let all things take place decently and by arrangement. —1 Cor. 14:33, 40.

You, though, keep your senses in all things, . . . do the work of an evangelizer, fully accomplish your ministry. —2 Tim. 4:5.

Additional references: Ephesians 4:16; 1 Corinthians 12: 18, 28.

(3) What are some examples of Jesus' disciples submitting to his instructions in order to carry out their ministry in an orderly way?

Now he summoned the twelve, and he initiated sending them out two by two, and he began to give them authority over the unclean spirits. And the apostles gathered together before Jesus and reported to him all the things they had done and taught.—Mark 6:7, 30.

After these things the Lord designated seventy others and sent them forth by twos in advance of him into every city and place to which he himself was going to come.—Luke 10:1.

Additional references: Luke 9:14-17; Matthew 10:1-23.

(4) How does Jesus exercise headship over the Christian congregation today?

Who really is the faithful and discreet slave whom his master appointed over his domestics, to give them their food at the proper time? Happy is that slave if his master on arriving finds him doing so. Truly I say to you, He will appoint him over all his belongings.—Matt. 24:45-47.

But the helper, the holy spirit, which the Father will send in my name, that one will teach you all things and bring back to your minds all the things I told you.—John 14:26.

Additional references: Luke 12:42-44; John 16:12-14.

(5) By what visible means is Christ's headship represented in the congregation?

However, from Miletus he sent to Ephesus and called for the older men of the congregation. When they got to him he said to them: . . . "Pay attention to yourselves and to all the flock, among which the holy spirit has appointed you overseers, to shepherd the congregation of God."—Acts 20:17, 18, 28.

Therefore, to the older men among you I give this exhortation, . . . Shepherd the flock of God in your care, not under compulsion, but willingly; neither for love of dishonest gain, but eagerly; neither as lording it over those who are God's inheritance, but becoming examples to the flock.—1 Pet. 5:1-3.

Additional references: Titus 1:5; Isaiah 32:1, 2.

(6) How do members of the congregation demonstrate submission to the headship of Christ in the congregation?

Remember those who are taking the lead among you, who have spoken the word of God to you, and as you contemplate how their conduct turns out imitate their faith.—Heb. 13:7.

Be obedient to those who are taking the lead among you and be submissive, for they are keeping watch over your souls as those who will render an account; that they may do this with joy and not with sighing, for this would be damaging to you.—Heb. 13:17.

Additional references: 1 Timothy 5:17; 1 Thessalonians 5: 12, 13; 1 Corinthians 16:16.

Optional questions for discussion: (a) Are you able to identify "the faithful and discreet slave" today? How? (b) What is the Governing Body of the Christian congregation? What purpose does it serve? (See Acts 6:1-6; 8:14; 15:1-29; 16:4, 5.) (c) What legal agencies are used by the Governing Body today to accomplish the publishing of the good news worldwide? (d) Why would submitting to Jehovah's arrangement in the congregation include giving material support to the work of the congregation to the extent of your ability?

Submission in Christian Family Life

(1) In God's arrangement of things, who is the head of the married woman?

You wives, be in subjection to your husbands, as it is becoming in the Lord.—Col. 3:18.

Let wives be in subjection to their husbands as to the Lord, because a husband is head of his wife as the Christ also is head of the congregation, he being a savior of this body.—Eph. 5:22, 23.

Additional reference: Titus 2:4, 5.

(2) How should a husband exercise headship over his wife? Whose example does he have to follow as a pattern?

In this way husbands ought to be loving their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself, for no man ever hated his own flesh; but he feeds and cherishes it, as the Christ also does the congregation.—Eph. 5:28, 29.

You husbands, keep on loving your wives and do not be bitterly angry with them.—Col. 3:19.

Additional reference: 1 Peter 3:7.

(3) Is the wife whose husband is not a believer freed from his headship?

In like manner, you wives, be in subjection to your own husbands, in order that, if any are not obedient to the word, they may be won without a word through the conduct of their wives, because of having been eyewitnesses of your chaste conduct together with deep respect.—1 Pet. 3:1, 2.

Additional references: Romans 7:2; 1 Corinthians 7:10.

(4) Who is responsible before God for the training and disciplining of children?

And you, fathers, do not be irritating your children, but go on bringing them up in the discipline and mental-regulating of Jehovah.—Eph. 6:4.

Additional references: Colossians 3:21; Proverbs 13:24; 29:15; Deuteronomy 6:6, 7.

(5) What responsibility do children have in the family arrangement?

Children, be obedient to your parents in union with the Lord, for this is righteous: "Honor your father and your mother"; which is the first command with a promise: "That it may go well with you and you may endure a long time on the earth."—Eph. 6:1-3.

You children, be obedient to your parents in everything, for this is well-pleasing in the Lord.—Col. 3:20.

Additional references: Deuteronomy 5:16; Proverbs 1:8; 4:1; 6:20; 23:22.

Optional questions for discussion: (a) If you are a married woman, in what way can you demonstrate your submission to your husband? (b) Does this seem to be righteous and just to you? (c) If your husband does not appreciate your cooperation in this regard, how do you still benefit? (d) If you are a man with family responsibilities, what worldly attitudes must you avoid if you are to exercise your headship in a Christlike manner? (e) If you are a minor child, what benefits will come to you and to the family as a result of your being submissive to your parents? (f) What factors may make it difficult for you to be submissive at times?

Submission to the Civil Authorities

(1) What is the proper attitude for Christians to maintain toward worldly rulers?

Let every soul be in subjection to the superior authorities, for there is no authority except by God; the existing authorities stand placed in their relative positions by God. —Rom. 13:1.

Continue reminding them to be in subjection and be obedient to governments and authorities as rulers.—Titus 3:1.

Additional references: 1 Peter 2:13, 14; Daniel 6:5; Acts 26:2, 3; 1 Timothy 2:1-3.

(2) Must a Christian pay all taxes and assessments demanded by law?

Render to all their dues, to him who calls for the tax, the tax; to him who calls for the tribute, the tribute; to him who calls for fear, such fear; to him who calls for honor, such honor.—Rom. 13:7.

Additional reference: Luke 20:21-25.

(3) Are there any circumstances under which a Christian would refuse to obey the worldly rulers?

With that they called them and charged them, nowhere to make any utterance or to teach upon the basis of the name of Jesus. But in reply Peter and John said to them: "Whether it is righteous in the sight of God to listen to you rather than to God, judge for yourselves. But as for us, we cannot stop speaking about the things we have seen and heard." —Acts 4:18-20.

In answer Peter and the other apostles said: "We must obey God as ruler rather than men."—Acts 5:29.

Additional references: Isaiah 2:4; Daniel 3:16-18; 6:4-24; Exodus 1:15-20.

(4) Should Christians comply with legal requirements such as the registering of marriages and births, respond to census inquiries or obtain required licenses and permits that do not conflict with God's laws?

Now in those days a decree went forth . . . for all the inhabited earth to be registered . . . Of course, Joseph also went up from Galilee . . . to get registered with Mary, who had been given him in marriage.—Luke 2:1-5.

Continue reminding them to be in subjection and be obedient to governments and authorities as rulers.—Titus 3:1.

Additional references: 1 Timothy 3:2, 9; compare Acts 18: 1-3; Hebrews 13:4.

Optional questions for discussion: (a) Why is it important for you to be submissive to the civil authorities even when their rule may seem to be oppressive? (b) How can you be submissive to the political rulers without violating Christian neutrality?

17 June 2015

Mr Tony Giugni
Office of the Solicitor Assisting
Royal Commission into Institutional
Responses to Child Sexual Abuse
Level 17, Governor Macquarie Tower
1 Farrer Place
SYDNEY NSW 2000

Dear Mr Giugni

Compliance with Summons No. S-NSW-461 & Summons No. S-NSW-462

We refer to the above matter and now provide you with the following information.

Summons No. S-NSW-461

We confirm that no claim for compensation has ever been made against Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia ("the Society") in relation to child sexual abuse. Moreover, the Society does not hold and has not held any insurance policy which provides or has provided insurance cover for any claims relating to child sexual abuse.

Summons No. S-NSW-462

In complying with Summons No.S-NSW-391, every effort was made to locate the documents sought. On receipt of Summons No.S-NSW-462 and in preparation for the forthcoming public hearing, we conducted a further extensive search and have located a few additional documents, which we are now providing.

Once again, we make application for a non-publication order under sub-section 6D(3)(b)(i) of the Royal Commissions Act 1902 (Cth) in relation to the documents provided.

Please do not hesitate to let us know if you have any further questions.

Yours faithfully,
WATCHTOWER BIBLE AND TRACT
SOCIETY OF AUSTRALIA

Subject: Royal Commission Case Study 29 Reply to Letter 14 July 2015

Dear Ms Blair and Mr Pender

Complete copy of Document WAT.0006.001.0026_R

Please find attached a copy of the letter dated April 23, 1990, which is now a complete copy of document WAT.0006.001.0026_R. The original page was foolscap size and my client did not detect this during the initial scan of the document. My client apologises for the oversight.

Membership Numbers

Further to your request in a letter dated 14 July 2015 concerning membership numbers of Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia for specified years, my client has now provided the following statistics:

Jehovah's Witnesses Membership Statistics
Year	Active Members Australia	Census Australia	Active Members Worldwide

Electronic Access

Thank you for providing electronic access to the material which has already been uploaded for Case Study 29. There are three issues, however, that are set out as follows:

1. Now referring to the Tender Bundle that you have provided – it includes a redacted letter from BCG (with a previous RingTail ID of WAT.0001.002.0122). The reference to that redacted letter apparently appears in the Tender Bundle Index as QLD.0068.001.1410_R, however, it does not have a RingTail ID on the actual document. Please provide the document with an updated RingTail ID on it.

2. I note also that the correspondence (including emails and letters) between the Commission, my client and myself, has not yet been uploaded with RingTail identifiers. Could you please provide us with access to those documents online and all other documents relevant for the Case Study 29 Public Hearing?

3. The Statements provided in the Tender Bundle for Messrs O'Brien, Spinks and Toole do not contain their Annexures. Could you please let me know if you intend to attach the Annexures in the Tender Bundle that are available electronically?

Thank you for your assistance with these matters.

Kind regards

Dear Mr Bray

Royal Commission Case Study 29

1. We refer to the forthcoming public hearing of Case Study 29, and to documents produced by your client pursuant to summonses S-NSW-391 and S-NSW-462 issued by the Royal Commission on 4 February 2015 and 28 February 2015 respectively. Those documents include, amongst other things, some 1000 files relating to complaints or allegations of child sexual abuse against members of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church in Australia (Case Files).

2. We have conducted an analysis of the information contained in the Case Files and have prepared a summary of the outcomes recorded as a result of that analysis (Analysis Summary). The Analysis Summary is annexed at Attachment A.

3. Counsel Assisting proposes to put some of the figures recorded in the Analysis Summary to witnesses from your client during the public hearing. We ask that your client consider the enclosed Analysis Summary and advise us of any respect in which the Analysis Summary is inaccurate or incomplete by 5pm on Monday 20 July 2015.

4. In order to assist your client in its consideration of the Analysis Summary, we will separately provide you with an electronic spreadsheet recording the data we have extracted from the Case Files. The Analysis Summary is based on that data.

5. Please do not hesitate to contact either me or Joanna Blair on 02 8284 2448 if you would like to discuss any aspect of this matter.

Yours sincerely

Attachment A

SUMMARY OF WATCHTOWER AUSTRALIA CASE FILE ANALYSIS

In response to summons S-NSW-391 issued by the Royal Commission on 4 February 2015, the Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia Ltd (Watchtower Australia) produced documents that include case files held by Watchtower Australia which relate to complaints or allegations of child sexual abuse against members of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church in Australia (Case Files).

The Royal Commission's analysis of documents contained in the Case Files has produced the following outcomes:[1]

Total number of alleged perpetrators

1. Since 1950, Watchtower Australia has recorded in Case Files allegations, reports or complaints of child sexual abuse against 1006 members of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church in Australia (the alleged perpetrators).

State/Territory total number of alleged perpetrators

2. By reference to State or Territory of first report or allegation, the Case Files record the following numbers of allegations of child sexual abuse:
   i) Australian Capital Territory – 10 Case Files.
   ii) New South Wales – 270 Case Files.
   iii) Northern Territory – 10 Case Files.
   iv) Queensland – 306 Case Files.
   v) South Australia – 69 Case Files.
   vi) Tasmania – 24 Case Files.
   vii) Victoria – 141 Case Files.
   viii) Western Australia – 137 Case Files.
   ix) Unclear – 39 Case Files.

Familial vs Non-Familial

3. 326 of the Case Files record allegations of non-familial child sexual abuse.
4. 564 of the Case Files record allegations of familial child sexual abuse.
5. 89 of the Case Files record allegations of both non-familial and familial child sexual abuse.

---

1 In conducting the analysis of Case Files produced by Watchtower Australia, the Royal Commission has only recorded data where it is positively evidenced by material within a Case File. Where material within a Case File did not provide evidence of the data sought by the Royal Commission, it has been recorded as "unclear", and has not been included in the above analysis.

Role of alleged perpetrator in the Church

6. 135 alleged perpetrators were elders or ministerial servants at the time of the first alleged incident of abuse.
7. 87 alleged perpetrators were not members of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church at the time of the first alleged incident of abuse.

Age of alleged victims

8. 712 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse of victims under the age of 15.
9. 421 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse of victims under the age of 10.
10. 170 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse of victims under the age of 5.

Sex of victim

11. 754 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse in relation to a female victim.
12. 122 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse in relation to a male victim.
13. 86 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse in relation to both female and male victims.

Number of victims

14. 456 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse in relation to two or more victims.
15. 90 alleged perpetrators were the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse in relation to five or more victims.

Operation of Two-Witness Rule and Confessions

16. Application of the two-witness rule prevented 125 allegations of child sexual abuse from proceeding to a judicial committee.
17. 579 alleged perpetrators confessed to having committed child sexual abuse.

Progress of matter to judicial committee

18. 563 alleged perpetrators were the subject of a judicial committee hearing by congregational elders.

Reproval

19. 190 alleged perpetrators were reproved in relation to an allegation of child sexual abuse.
20. 11 alleged perpetrators were reproved on more than one occasion in relation to allegations of child sexual abuse.

Disfellowshipping

21. 401 alleged perpetrators were disfellowshipped in relation to an allegation of child sexual abuse.
22. 78 alleged perpetrators were disfellowshipped on more than one occasion in relation to allegations of child sexual abuse.

Reinstatement

23. Of 401 alleged perpetrators disfellowshipped in relation to an allegation of child sexual abuse (see [21] above), 230 were later reinstated.
24. 35 alleged perpetrators who were disfellowshipped on more than one occasion in relation to allegations of child sexual abuse were reinstated on more than one occasion.

Appointment as Elder or Ministerial Servant

25. 29 alleged perpetrators were appointed as an elder or ministerial servant after having been the subject of an allegation of child sexual abuse.

Deletion as Elder or Ministerial Servant

26. 128 alleged perpetrators were deleted as an elder or ministerial servant as a result of an allegation of child sexual abuse.
27. Of 128 alleged perpetrators deleted as an elder or ministerial servant as a result of an allegation of child sexual abuse (see [26] above), 17 were later reappointed as an elder or ministerial servant.

Convictions

28. 161 alleged perpetrators have been convicted of a child sexual abuse offence.

Reporting to secular authorities by the Church and/or Watchtower Australia

29. We identified no record in the Case Files of the JW Church or Watchtower Australia having reported any allegation of child sexual abuse in relation to any of the 1006 alleged perpetrators to the police or other secular authority.

Dear Mr Bray

Royal Commission Case Study 29 – Verification of the Analysis Summary

1. We refer to your letter dated 20 July 2015 setting out your client's response to our letter dated 16 July 2015, which enclosed a summary of our analysis of the case files provided by your client to the Royal Commission (Analysis Summary). The Analysis Summary was prepared on the basis of data collated into a case file analysis spreadsheet.

2. In your letter, your client asserts that various matters in the Analysis Summary are based on inaccurate data contained in the case file analysis spreadsheet.

3. We have reviewed the relevant data identified as inaccurate by your client and address below your client's proposed corrections identified in the following tables:
   - Table 1 – Role of alleged perpetrator in the Church
   - Table 5 – Appointment as Elder or Ministerial Servant
   - Table 7 – Deletion as Elder or Ministerial Servant

Table 1: Role of alleged perpetrator at time of first abuse

4. At Table 1, your client identifies a number of alleged perpetrators whose role in the congregation at the time of the first alleged incident of abuse is incorrectly reflected in the case file analysis spreadsheet. We have conducted a review of the case files relating to the individuals identified in Table 1 and the results of our review are set out below. In the majority of cases, the Royal Commission has accepted your client's identification of the alleged perpetrator's role.

Table 7: Deletion and reappointment as Elder or Ministerial Servant

6. At Table 7, your client identified one alleged perpetrator who was incorrectly classified as being reappointed as an elder or ministerial servant following deletion for child sexual abuse. We have reviewed the case file relating to this individual and set out the results of our review below:

NO	WATCHTOWER REVIEW 20/07/2015	RC REVIEW 27/07/2015
854	Never served as elder or ministerial servant in Australia	Agree - Initial eldership, deletion and reappointment occurred in REDACTED

7. To the extent that we agree with the inaccuracies claimed by your client (as set out in the above tables), we have incorporated your client's proposed corrections into a revised Analysis Summary which is annexed at Attachment A. Where we do not agree with inaccuracies claimed by your client, we have reflected what your client says is the correct figure. Further, we have removed some of the figures from the original Attachment A so that there is a smaller set of final figures to deal with.

8. The figures cited in senior counsel assisting's opening submissions were drawn from Attachment A in its present form, i.e. after having been corrected in the light of the points raised by you in your letter.

9. It is senior counsel assisting's intention to tender this letter and the correspondence that preceded it (being our letter of 16 July 2015 and your reply of 20 July 2015), duly redacted as appropriate, and to rely on the figures as set out in Attachment A.

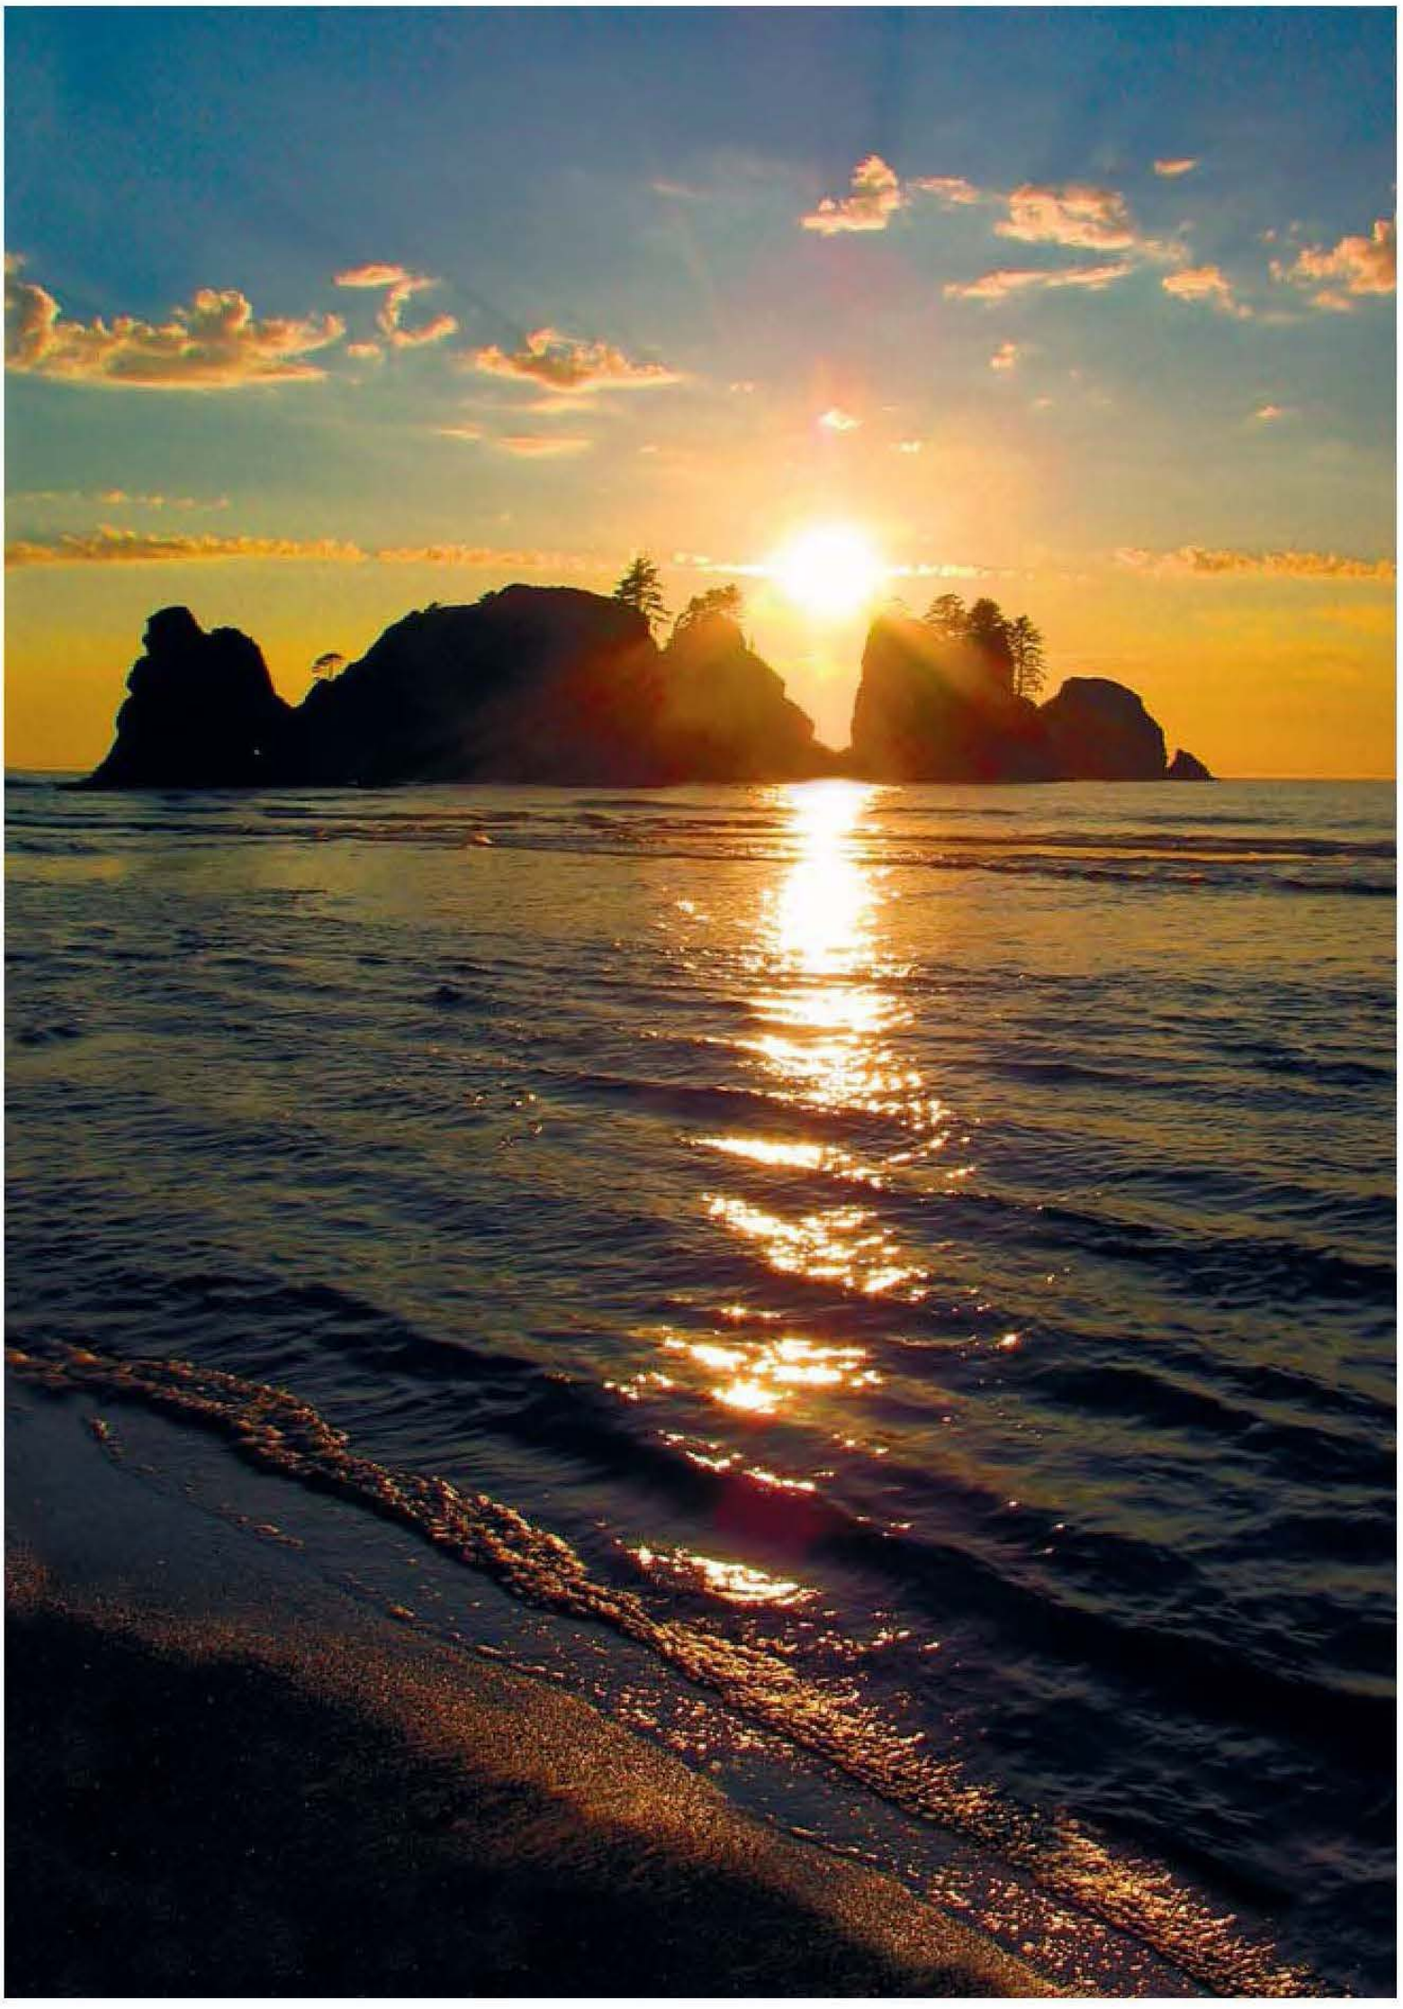
Dear Lover of Jehovah:



"You will know the truth, and the truth will set you free," said Jesus. (John 8:32) How encouraging those words are! Yes, it is possible to know the truth, even in these critical "last days" when falsehood abounds. (2 Timothy 3:1) Do you remember when you first recognized the truth as explained in God's Word? What a thrilling experience that was!

However, as important as it is to have an accurate knowledge of the truth and to have a regular share in telling others about it, we must also conduct ourselves in harmony with the truth. To do that, we need to keep ourselves in God's love. What does this involve? Jesus' words on the night before his death answer this question. He told his faithful apostles: "If you observe my commandments, you will remain in my love, just as I have observed the commandments of the Father and remain in his love."—John 15:10.

Notice that Jesus remained in God's love by observing his Father's commandments. The same is true of us today. To remain in God's love, we need to apply the truth in everyday life. That same evening, Jesus said: "If you know these things, happy you are if you do them." —John 13:17.

It is our sincere hope that this publication will help you to continue to apply the truth in your life and thus keep yourself "in God's love . . . with everlasting life in view."—Jude 21.

CHAPTER 5

How to Keep Separate From the World

"You are no part of the world."
—JOHN 15:19.

DURING his final night on earth as a human, Jesus expressed deep concern for the future welfare of his followers. He even prayed about the matter, saying to his Father: "I do not request that you take them out of the world, but that you watch over them because of the wicked one. They are no part of the world, just as I am no part of the world." (John 17:15, 16) In this heartfelt request, Jesus showed both his deep love for his followers and the importance of his words stated earlier that night to some of them: "You are no part of the world." (John 15:19) Clearly, it was of great importance to Jesus that his followers keep separate from the world!

2 "The world" Jesus mentioned refers to all of mankind who are alienated from God, ruled by Satan, and enslaved to the selfish, prideful spirit that emanates from him. (John 14:30; Ephesians 2:2; 1 John 5:19) Indeed, "friendship with [that] world is enmity with God." (James 4:4) How, though, can all who want to remain in God's love be in the world yet be separate from it? We will consider five ways: by remaining loyal to God's Kingdom under Christ and neutral in worldly politics, by resisting the spirit of the world, by being modest in our dress and grooming, by keeping our life simple, and by putting on our spiritual suit of armor.

REMAINING LOYAL AND NEUTRAL

3 Instead of participating in the politics of his day, Jesus focused on preaching about God's Kingdom, the future heavenly government of which he was the prospective King. (Daniel 7:13, 14; Luke 4:43; 17:20, 21) Thus, when before Roman Governor Pontius Pilate, Jesus could say: "My Kingdom is no part of this world." (John 18:36) His faithful followers imitate his example by giving their loyalty to Christ and his Kingdom and by announcing that Kingdom to the world. (Matthew 24:14) "We are ambassadors substituting for Christ," wrote the apostle Paul. "As substitutes for Christ, we beg: 'Become reconciled to God.' "*—2 Corinthians 5:20.

4 Because ambassadors represent a foreign sovereign or state, they do not interfere in the internal affairs of the countries where they serve; they remain neutral. Ambassadors do, however, advocate the government of the country they represent. The same is true of Christ's anointed followers, whose "citizenship exists in the heavens." (Philippians 3:20) In fact, thanks to their zealous Kingdom preaching, they have helped millions of Christ's "other sheep" to "become reconciled to God."

* Since Pentecost 33 C.E., Christ has served as King over his congregation of anointed followers on earth. (Colossians 1:13) In 1914, Christ received royal authority over "the kingdom of the world." Hence, anointed Christians now also serve as ambassadors of the Messianic Kingdom.—Revelation 11:15.

EARLY CHRISTIAN NEUTRALS

Secular history provides ample evidence that the early Christians remained politically neutral and refrained from warfare. Says the book The Beginnings of Christianity: "The founders of Christianity guarded with sedulous care against the development of anything like a disposition to interfere directly with the established political order." Similarly, the book On the Road to Civilization notes: "Early Christianity was little understood and was regarded with little favor by those who ruled the pagan world. . . . Christians refused to share certain duties of Roman citizens. . . . They would not hold political office."

Regarding the early Christians and military service, German theologian Peter Meinhold said: "Being a Christian and a soldier was considered irreconcilable." In his essay "An Inquiry Into the Accordancy of War With the Principles of Christianity," religion writer Jonathan Dymond wrote that for some time after the death of Jesus, His followers "refused to engage in [war]; whatever were the consequences, whether reproach, or imprisonment, or death." Dymond added: "These facts are indisputable." Only when "Christianity became corrupted," said another writer, did Christians become soldiers.

(John 10:16; Matthew 25:31-40) These latter ones serve as Christ's envoys, as it were, in support of Jesus' anointed brothers. As one united flock advocating the Messianic Kingdom, both groups maintain strict neutrality toward the world's political affairs.—Read Isaiah 2:2-4.

WEB.0053.001.0010

[5] Loyalty to Christ is not the only reason that true Christians are neutral. Unlike ancient Israel, which had a God-given land allocation, we are part of an international brotherhood. (Matthew 28:19; 1 Peter 2:9) Thus, if we were to rally to the side of local political parties, both our freeness of speech in regard to the Kingdom message and our Christian unity would be severely compromised. (1 Corinthians 1:10) Furthermore, during war time, we would be fighting against fellow believers, whom we are commanded to love. (John 13:34, 35; 1 John 3:10-12) With good reason, then, Jesus told his disciples to lay down the sword. And he even told them to love their enemies.—Matthew 5:44; 26:52; see the box "Am I Remaining Neutral?" on page 55.

[6] As true Christians, we have dedicated our life to God, not to any human, human institution, or nation. Says 1 Corinthians 6:19, 20: "You do not belong to yourselves, for you were bought with a price." Thus, while rendering "Caesar" his due in the form of honor, taxes, and relative subjection, Jesus' followers give "God's things to God." (Mark 12:17; Romans 13:1-7) This includes their worship, their whole-souled love, and their loyal obedience. If necessary, they are ready to give up their life for God.—Luke 4:8; 10:27; read Acts 5:29; Romans 14:8.

RESISTING "THE SPIRIT OF THE WORLD"

spirit of the world, but the spirit that is from God," wrote Paul. (1 Corinthians 2:12) To the Ephesians, he said: "You at one time walked according to . . . this world, according to the ruler of the authority of the air, the spirit that is now at work in the sons of disobedience."—Ephesians 2:2, 3.

8 The world's "air," or spirit, is an invisible, impelling force that incites disobedience to God and fosters "the desire of the flesh and the desire of the eyes." (1 John 2:16; 1 Timothy 6:9, 10) "The authority" of this spirit lies in its appeal to the sinful flesh, its subtlety, its relentlessness and, like air, its pervasiveness. Moreover, it is "at work" in disobedient humans by gradually nurturing in them ungodly traits, such as selfishness, haughtiness, greedy ambition, and the spirit of moral independence and rebellion.* Simply put, the spirit of the world progressively causes the traits of the Devil to grow in the hearts of humans.—John 8:44; Acts 13:10; 1 John 3:8, 10.

9 Can the spirit of the world take root in your mind and heart? Yes, but only if you let it do so by lowering your guard. (Read Proverbs 4:23.) Its influence often begins subtly, perhaps by way of associates who may appear to be good people but, in fact, have no love for Jehovah. (Proverbs 13:20; 1 Corinthians 15:33) You can also absorb that evil spirit through objectionable literature, pornographic or apostate Internet sites, unwholesome entertainment, and highly competitive sports—really, through anyone or anything that conveys the thinking of Satan or his system.

10 How can we resist the insidious spirit of the world and keep ourselves in God's love? Only by taking full advantage of Jehovah's spiritual provisions and by praying constantly for holy spirit. Jehovah is far greater than the Devil or the wicked world under satanic control. (1 John 4:4) How important, then, that we stay close to Jehovah in prayer!

BEING MODEST IN OUR DRESS AND GROOMING

11 An outward indication of the spirit that impels a person is his dress, grooming, and hygiene. In many lands, standards of dress have fallen so low that one television commentator suggested that soon there will be nothing left for prostitutes to wear. Even girls not yet in their teens have been caught up in this trend—"long on skin, short on modesty," said one newspaper report. Another trend is to dress in a slovenly manner that reflects a spirit of rebellion as well as a lack of dignity and self-respect.

12 As servants of Jehovah, we rightly want to look our best, which means dressing in a way that is neat, clean, in good taste, and appropriate for the occasion. At all times, our appearance ought to reflect "modesty and soundness of mind," which along with "good works" is fitting for anyone—male or female—"professing devotion to God." Of course, our main concern is, not to draw attention to ourselves, but to "keep [ourselves] in God's love." (1 Timothy 2:9, 10; Jude 21) Yes, we want our most beautiful adornment to be "the secret person of the heart . . . , which is of great value in the eyes of God."—1 Peter 3: 3, 4.

13 Keep in mind, too, that our clothing styles and grooming can influence how others view true worship. The Greek word rendered "modesty," when used in a moral sense, expresses the thought of reverence, awe, and respect for the feelings or opinion of others. Our goal, therefore, should be to subordinate our presumed rights to the consciences of others. Above all, we want to bring honor to Jehovah and his people and to recommend ourselves as God's ministers, doing "all things for God's glory."—1 Corinthians 4:9; 10:31; 2 Corinthians 6:3, 4; 7:1.

14 Our dress, grooming, and cleanliness are even more important when we are engaging in the field ministry or attending a Christian meeting. Ask yourself: 'Do my appearance and personal hygiene draw undue attention to me? Do they embarrass others? Do I consider my rights in these areas to be more important than qualifying for service privileges in the congregation?' —Psalm 68:6; Philippians 4:5; 1 Peter 5:6.

15 The Bible does not set out for Christians a list of rules on dress, grooming, and hygiene. Jehovah has no desire to deny us our freedom of choice or the use of our thinking faculties. Rather, he wants us to become mature people who reason on Bible principles and who "through use have their powers of discernment trained to distinguish both right and wrong." (Hebrews 5:14) Above all, he wants us to be governed by love—love for God and neighbor. (Read Mark 12:30, 31.) Within those boundaries, there is the potential for great variety in dress and grooming. Evidence of this can be seen in the colorfully dressed, joyful throngs of Jehovah's people no matter where on earth they are gathered.

KEEPING OUR LIFE SIMPLE

16 The spirit of the world is deceptive and impels millions to look to money and material things for happiness. However, Jesus said: "Even when a person has an abundance, his life does not result from the things he possesses." (Luke 12:15) While not endorsing asceticism, or extreme self-denial, Jesus taught that life and genuine happiness come to those who are "conscious of their spiritual need" and those who maintain a simple life,

16. How does the spirit of the world run contrary to Jesus' teaching, and what questions should we ask ourselves?

WEB.0053.001.0016

one that is focused on spiritual things. (Matthew 5:3; 6: 22, footnote) Ask yourself: 'Do I truly believe what Jesus taught, or am I being influenced by "the father of the lie"? (John 8:44) What do my words, my goals, my priorities, and my way of life reveal?'—Luke 6:45; 21:34-36; 2 John 6.

17 "Wisdom is proved righteous by its works," said Jesus. (Matthew 11:19) Consider just some of the benefits enjoyed by those who maintain a simple life. They find true refreshment in Kingdom service. (Matthew 11: 29, 30) They avoid undue anxieties and thus spare themselves much mental and emotional pain. (Read 1 Timothy 6:9, 10.) Content with having life's necessities, they have more time for their family and Christian companions. They may sleep better as a result. (Ecclesiastes 5: 12) They experience the greater joy of giving, doing so in whatever way they can. (Acts 20:35) And they "abound in hope" and have inner peace and contentment. (Romans 15:13; Matthew 6:31, 32) These blessings are truly priceless!

TAKING UP "THE COMPLETE SUIT OF ARMOR"

18 Those who keep themselves in God's love also enjoy spiritual protection from Satan, who wants to deprive Christians, not just of happiness, but of everlasting life. (1 Peter 5:8) "We have a struggle," said Paul, "not against blood and flesh, but against the governments, against the authorities, against the world rulers of this darkness, against the wicked spirit forces in the heavenly places." (Ephesians 6:12) The word "struggle" suggests that our fight is not long-distance—from the safety of a hidden bunker, so to speak—but hand-to-hand. Furthermore, the terms "governments," "authorities," and "world rulers" indicate that attacks from the spirit realm are highly organized and deliberate.

19 Despite human frailties and limitations, however, we can gain the victory. How? By taking up "the complete suit of armor from God." (Ephesians 6:13) Describing that armor, Ephesians 6:14-18 reads: "Stand firm, therefore, with the belt of truth fastened around your waist, wearing the breastplate of righteousness, and having your feet shod in readiness to declare the good news of peace. Besides all of this, take up the large shield of faith, with which you will be able to extinguish all the wicked one's burning arrows. Also, accept the helmet [or, hope] of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, that is, God's word, while with every form of prayer and supplication you carry on prayer on every occasion in spirit."

20 Since it is a provision of God, that spiritual suit of armor will not fail us, provided that we wear it at all times. Unlike literal soldiers, who may have long breaks from fighting, Christians are in a relentless life-and-death struggle that will not stop until God has destroyed Satan's world and abyssed all wicked spirits. (Revelation 12:17; 20:1-3) So do not give up if you are struggling with weaknesses or wrong desires, for we all have to "pummel" ourselves in order to stay faithful to Jehovah. (1 Corinthians 9:27) Indeed, it is when we are not struggling that we should be concerned!

21 Moreover, we cannot win this fight in our own strength. Hence, Paul reminds us of the need to pray to Jehovah "on every occasion in spirit." At the same time, we should listen to Jehovah by studying his Word and associating with fellow "soldiers" at every opportunity, for we are not in this fight alone! (Philemon 2; Hebrews 10: 24, 25) Those who are faithful in all these areas will not only come off victorious but will also be able to make a strong defense for their faith when it is challenged.

BE READY TO DEFEND YOUR FAITH

22 "Because you are no part of the world," said Jesus, "the world hates you." (John 15:19) Christians, therefore, must always be ready to defend their faith and to do so in a respectful, mild manner. (Read 1 Peter 3:15.) Ask yourself: 'Do I understand why Jehovah's Witnesses sometimes take a stand that is contrary to popular opinion? When facing the challenge of taking such a stand, am I thoroughly convinced that what the Bible and the faithful slave say is right? (Matthew 24:45; John 17:17) And when it comes to doing what is right in Jehovah's eyes, am I not only prepared to be different but also proud to be different?'—Psalm 34:2; Matthew 10:32, 33.

23 Often, though, our desire to keep separate from the world is put to the test in more subtle ways. For example, as mentioned earlier, the Devil tries to lure Jehovah's servants into the world by means of worldly entertainment. How can we choose wholesome entertainment that will leave us refreshed and with a clean conscience? That subject will be considered in the next chapter.

2 The Jehovah's Witnesses in the modern world

Before we can begin to establish the Witnesses' status at the beginning of the twenty-first century, we need to know something about their organisation's evolution and doctrines. These details help us to understand the culture in which the Witnesses operate and allow us to consider the various compatibilities and incompatibilities between the Watch Tower Society and the outside world. Moreover, the hierarchical structure of the movement enables devotees to resist those forces that might threaten their status as bona fide members of a system they call 'the truth'. In short, an enquiry into what the Witnesses believe, how they came to believe it and how they are able to reaffirm these beliefs internally aids our understanding of their relationship with modernity.

History, doctrines and internal structure

From origin to present day

The history of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society spans 130 years and is rich in controversy. From the moment of its foundation by Charles Taze Russell (1852–1916) to the present day, reactions towards the movement include fascination, compassion, anger and hatred. Although the available literature indicates that their world-renouncing theology and adherence to millenarianism have been the sources of great strain in terms of their liaison with secular bodies (particularly the legal system), the Witnesses have managed to gain converts and expand on an international scale.

Surprisingly, there is very little information about Russell's background. Rogerson's sociological research reveals that Russell was educated in state schools and then by private tutors (Rogerson 1969). Russell inherited Presbyterian beliefs from parents of Scottish–Irish descent, but his mother died when he was only nine years of age. In 1867, at the age of fifteen, he entered into partnership with his father, who ran a chain of men's clothing stores in Allegheny, Pennsylvania. Russell was an astute businessman. Before he was thirty years of age, he had expanded his father's clothing store, which he sold for $250,000 – the equivalent of more than a million dollars today.

He also sold what he called 'miracle wheat' to credulous farmers at $60 a bushel. The fraud was eventually stopped by the federal authorities, who made him refund the money (Ripley 1982: 1–12). During his initial years as a draper, Russell abandoned Presbyterianism in favour of more liberal Congregationalist beliefs, but even these eventually gave way to a firm conviction that an omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient God was incompatible with conventional doctrines of suffering and hell. This left Russell in a state of perplexity and doubt, as his own reflections confirm:

> Brought up a Presbyterian, indoctrinated from the Catechism, and being naturally of an enquiring mind, I fell a ready prey to the logic of infidelity, as soon as I began to think for myself. But that which at first threatened to be the utter shipwreck of faith in God and the Bible was, under God's providence, over-ruled for good, and merely wrecked my confidence in human creeds and systems of Bible misinterpretations.
> (The Watchtower 1916: 170–2 quoted in Rogerson 1969: 5–6)

At this point, Russell became an avowed sceptic and discarded the Bible altogether; but in 1870 he attended a meeting held by some Seventh-Day Adventists in a basement near his store in Allegheny. It would appear that this meeting was a significant influence in the restoration of Russell's faith, for, although he failed to join the Adventists, they did at least persuade him of an alternative creed to Christendom. He gathered together some like-minded friends and acquaintances and they formed a Bible study group in Pittsburgh where they met on a regular basis. Witnesses today believe that this was the point at which Russell returned to the Bible and discovered real truth. Undoubtedly influenced by the Seventh-Day Adventists, Russell espoused doctrines such as the annihilation of the wicked, the denial of hell, the extinction of the soul at death and a new code for salvation. His interest in the Bible became almost obsessive, and, between 1870 and 1879, he wrote several pamphlets and a new periodical called Zion's Watch Tower and Herald of Christ's Presence. This new magazine was to play a crucial role in the expansion of the movement, and by 1880 some thirty congregations had sprung up in several American states. By 1884, 'Zion's Watch Tower Tract Society', managed by Russell, was given legal charter (Hoekema 1984). The Society printed tracts, papers, pamphlets, magazines and other materials in various languages and, in 1886, over six million copies of Russell's first publication, Millennial Dawn (later called Studies in the Scriptures), came to be sold. By now, Russell saw himself as 'the Servant of the Truth'. Not surprisingly, his opponents accused him of conceit. By the late 1880s, Russell had employed thousands of colporteurs (today called pioneers) who worked almost full-time preaching the theology and distributing millenarian literature. Russell devoted all his time to the study of the Bible and the administration of his fast-growing organisation. In 1889, a new building was finished in Pittsburgh to house the printing works and to act as the Society's central office. In 1900, the first branch office was established in London.

Russell wrote specific instructions for selling his literature and employed virtually every device of modern advertising to disseminate his biblical message. By the early 1900s, he had travelled to Ireland, Scotland, Russia and Turkey to deliver his sermons. By 1917, there was a total of ninety-three pilgrims (today known as circuit overseers) travelling from congregation to congregation. Russell had laid the foundation of a movement that would inevitably expand. Most of Russell's written work consisted of elaborate biblical chronology that applied to his own time. His books reveal that he was greatly concerned with dates and events. He related social, political and economic issues to biblical prophecy and was fond of debating the exact meaning of the original Greek and Hebrew words in scripture. In a court in Ontario, Canada, in 1913, he declared under oath to be an expert scripture scholar, but when handed a Greek New Testament he was forced to admit that he did not even know the Greek alphabet. Neither did he know Latin or Hebrew. Few, if any, academic theologians in the universities of the world today acknowledge Russell as a scholar in any sense of the word (Ripley 1982: 1–2). Most Jehovah's Witnesses know little or nothing of Russell's prophecies, but they are all convinced that he correctly predicted the heavenly establishment of the Kingdom of God in 1914. When 1914 finally arrived, it was too late to persuade his followers that he might be wrong. Some left the movement in disappointment, but those who remained were confused about what was going to happen. The Witnesses have since claimed that, in some way, Russell predicted the First World War, but, for Russell himself and his successor Joseph Rutherford, the beginning of a war in Europe was of little significance. Russell was still convinced that heavenly glory was soon to come. In 1916, Russell's health deteriorated rapidly and he died on Tuesday 31 October that year.

In January 1917, Joseph Franklin Rutherford was elected President of what was now known as the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society. Rutherford called himself 'Judge', although some sources claim that he never held an official appointment as such. At the age of twenty-two, he was admitted to the bar and began to practise law, later serving four years as public prosecutor for Booneville. He had frequently defended Russell in court and had become an ardent supporter of the movement. When he became President, he proceeded to restructure the Society and to encourage devotees to engage in a more active programme of Witnessing. He was dissatisfied with the Board of Directors, over which he adopted total control.[1] This culminated in open rebellion, after which several disaffected leaders were dismissed from their official positions. This led to the formation of small schismatic groups. In July 1917, the seventh volume of the Studies in the Scriptures series, The Finished Mystery, was published. This book, compiled by Watch Tower editors from the earlier works of Russell, was chiefly a commentary on Ezekiel and Revelation.[2] According to this tract, Catholic and Protestant organisations together represented Babylon, which was soon to pass into oblivion. Possession of these publications was forbidden in Canada, where the movement had been declared illegal. On 8 May 1918, together with other Russellites, Rutherford was arrested under the United States Espionage Act for spreading dissent in the army and navy and sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment. He served only nine months, although, like his predecessor, he was frequently accused of fraudulent practices, even by his own followers. Unlike Russell, Rutherford developed a hatred of his avowed enemy, the clergy.[3] It was during this period that Rutherford began to teach that Christ had returned invisibly in 1914, and that Armageddon was imminent.[4] Rutherford claimed that this would be the point at which worldly organisations (including of course, Christendom) would perish. In 1931, he devised the new title 'Witnesses of Jehovah' and publicised the slogan 'Millions now living will never die'. He was not one of the millions! He died in 1942 in the palatial villa he had had built at San Diego as an official residence pending the return of Christ. He had been President of the movement for twenty-five years.

During Rutherford's presidency, the Society had moved from a more or less democratic to a theocratic structure, in which the directors of the various local congregations were no longer elected by local assemblies but were appointed by a Governing Body in Brooklyn. Rutherford was succeeded in 1942 by Nathan Homer Knorr, who had worked as a full-time preacher and co-ordinator of all printing activities within the organisation and General Manager of the publishing plant. In 1934, Knorr had been appointed one of the directors of the New York corporation and in 1940, he became Vice President of the Pennsylvania corporation (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1959: 196). Knorr immediately began a face-lifting and public relations programme that has since paid dividends in recruits. Several doctrinal books were published during Knorr's presidency, including Theocratic Aid to Kingdom Publishers (1945), Equipped for Every Good Work (1946a) and Qualified to Be Ministers (1955a). These three books contained information about scripture, door-to-door canvassing and history, but there were other books which were considered authoritative guidelines taking the place of previous publications by Russell and Rutherford, including The Truth Shall Make You Free (1943), Let God Be True (1946b, revised in 1952) and Make Sure of All Things (1953, revised in 1957). The books are summaries of doctrines, and millions of later editions have been printed and sold all over the world. From Paradise Lost to Paradise Regained was published in 1958 and is often used along with Make Sure of All Things and the more recent Reasoning from the Scriptures (1989b) as a handy reference book by the Witnesses in their doorstep ministry.

Another important project carried out under Knorr was the translation of the Bible into modern English. This began in 1950, and in 1961 the entire Bible in The New World Translation was published in one volume.

Those members who were responsible for the translating requested that they should remain anonymous. Under Knorr's presidency, door-to-door evangelists no longer carried a portable gramophone and collection of Rutherford's records. Rather, devotees were given a thorough training in speech and non-verbal communication that enabled them to deliver their own sermons. To this day, the Witnesses hold regular meetings, during which training and demonstrations take place to enable them to minister more effectively to the general public. During Knorr's regime as President, there was a huge expansion of the Witnesses' work worldwide. In 1942, evangelism took place in only fifty-four countries, but by 1971 it had spread to 207. The movement grew by 25 per cent during the 1930s and 1940s, with a total of 20,842 active members in Britain by 1950. By 1971, the country in which the Witnesses were most active was West Germany (87,976 members listed), followed by Nigeria with 75,372, and Brazil with 66,460. The British Isles followed with 62,813, then the Philippines with 54,264 and then Zambia with 52,369. Next was Mexico with 51,256 members, then Canada with 48,100. Other countries in which the Witnesses claim to have had more than five thousand active members in 1971 include Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Chile, Colombia, Congo (Kinshara), Denmark, Finland, France, Ghana, Greece, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Korea, Malawi, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Puerto Rico, Rhodesia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and Venezuela (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1971). Millions of copies of the Society's two magazines The Watchtower and Awake! are sold throughout the world every year, and Witnessing takes place in over two hundred countries. The 1 January 2001 issue of The Watchtower recorded 126,297 Witnesses in Britain alone in 2000 and over ninety thousand congregations worldwide (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 2001).[5] All the countries cited above have seen fairly substantial increases in membership over the last three decades, although in recent years the movement has remained static in Australia, Belgium, Britain, Germany, Scandinavia and Spain. The Witnesses are, however, continuing to expand in Eastern Europe, Latin America and many parts of Africa. Albania, Cambodia and Mongolia all claimed at least a 25 per cent increase in their total membership between 1998 and 1999.

James Beckford tells us that Russell founded his movement amidst a certain amount of dissatisfaction with what was regarded as 'modernism' among Protestant thinkers in late nineteenth-century America. Russell opposed this with what he considered to be fundamental religious truths – truths that he feared were being replaced by individual-oriented Arminianism.[6] Beckford writes:

> Russell chose precisely to oppose modernist philosophy, theology and ecclesiology by restating what he understood to be the unchanging principles of Christianity and by organizing a religious movement with > the explicit goal of propagating those principles . . . His proposed solution to the twin problems of 'infidelity' and 'modernism' was to restore faith in the 'principle (that) seems to be disappearing in respect to religious matters',[7] and his own set of teachings crystallized in the attempt to oppose error with truth and liberalism with 'principle'.

> (Beckford 1975a: 3)

Beckford goes on to describe how a movement which became known as The Social Gospel played a significant role in convincing Russell that churches were becoming tainted with secular influences, and that the clergy had begun to neglect their primary duty of ministry for superficial reform. Although there are few sources that link Russell's way of thinking to the social, cultural and political climate of late nineteenth-century America, it would appear that his disillusionment with modern society in general and orthodox Christianity in particular led him to establish a monosemic, scriptural theology which he argued was rational and irrefutable. To this day, the Witnesses regard the international expansion of their movement as evidence of the gospel of the Kingdom having been preached throughout the whole world predicted in Matthew 24, and have countered what they perceive as the immoral conditions of modern liberal society with puritanical doctrines.

Watch Tower teachings

Watch Tower theology is the Society's most crucial resource, and devotees are expected to adhere to all doctrines established by the Governing Body. These doctrines pervade almost every conceivable sphere of life. The theology plays an important part in uniting devotees into a close-knit community and separating them symbolically from the outside world. It should be borne in mind, however, that Watch Tower theology cannot be summarised without doing gross injustice to its complexity. Were it to be presented in its entirety, the thoughts and questions that will be prompted by this book would undoubtedly receive more attention. In the pages that follow, accounts of the Witnesses' beliefs are intended only to illuminate a social phenomenon. It is the task of the theologian, not the sociologist, to engage in debates concerning scriptural interpretation.

Ever since the organisation was founded, there has been no mechanism for contributing to or criticising the canon of official teachings. The establishment of doctrines has been very carefully restricted to, and controlled by, the Society's Governing Body. This means that Jehovah's Witnesses around the world are recipients of an absolutist message rather than free-thinking agents who are actively involved in the formulation of religious ideas. What is significant about this is the effect of such a uniform set of doctrines on the Witnesses' social relations. Doctrines prescribed by an autocratic administration play a crucial role in the construction of a tightly bonded community. Where inconsistencies are noticed by devotees, personal questioning is abrogated in favour of the safe conviction that those responsible for the formulation of Watch Tower doctrines must also be able to deal effectively with any criticisms. Witnesses at grass roots level often argue that, if inconsistencies were real, then the organisation would not have gained the widespread popularity that it has. It is possible that this acquiescence has brought about even greater support than any serious attempt to deal with questions of doctrinal consistency would do. This is why an analysis of the symbolic meaning and presentation of doctrines serves a greater purpose for this book than details of the doctrines themselves.

The Witnesses see themselves as members not just of a religious movement but of one that monopolises the word of God. For this reason, they feel they are called upon to proselytise. Nonconformist ideas that were widespread during the period in which the Society was founded provided the basis for some of its teachings. The one imperative belief, however, is that the Bible, from beginning to end, is the inspired word of God. This means that all Watch Tower teachings are scripturally supported and most, but not all, the Bible is interpreted literally. The exceptions are the recorded visions in the Books of Daniel and Revelation. The rest the Witnesses regard as historically accurate, including the stories in the book of Genesis. The following transcript from an interview with a local elder conveys the importance of this biblical literalism. He is worth quoting at length:

> The Bible is the fundamental foundation of doctrine and I would say to someone interested in our faith, 'Are you willing to adjust to it in order to be pleasing to God whom you have faith in?' So we would have a Bible study. For instance, I would say to you, 'Do you believe that God is a single person?', and, depending on how you answered, I would go to references in the Bible that would show you what our beliefs are. Now, when you've heard that clarification it's up to you whether you accept it or not, and then we would go to other angles of fact. I would say, 'When you die, what do you expect will happen to you?', and then I'd say, 'Well, let's see what the Bible has to say about death and why we die, and let's see if there's a different future to the one you envisage'. So, the main fundamentals are, 'Do you believe the Bible is the inspired word of God?' and 'Do you believe in the truth of its doctrines?' and 'What do you think happens when you die?', and then we'd turn to the Bible and give you the biblical answer, and if the Bible is the foundation of doctrine and action and way of life, are you willing to adjust to it in order to be pleasing to God? The Bible can be likened to a rule. The rule is a measurement which is internationally accepted, so the Bible becomes the measure of faith and therefore if you measure your conduct by the Bible's measure, then you're doing what Jesus said, you're in the truth. We're convinced we have the truth because the Bible says it's > the truth. Jesus in his speaking said, 'Thy word is truth' – that's from John 17 verse 17. Now when he said that, he was speaking of the Old Testament, because the New Testament hadn't been formulated. So when he said, 'Thy word is truth' or 'Your word is truth' as the modern language would say, we believe that the Bible is an accurate account of facts – historically, scientifically, genealogically and all the other angles of life, and so when Jesus said, 'The first Adam was made flesh', when he talks about 'as it was in the days of Noah' and when he talked about 'the patience of Job', he was making factual references, not allegories. So, when you go therefore to what Jesus referred to as 'the truth', the Old Testament, then you study its narrative, its history, you look at the genealogical lives which are very well recorded in the book of Luke – where Luke said, 'I want to trace things back to the beginning' and he goes back genealogically and ends up with Adam. So therefore, that's why we feel we've got the truth. We try to see things from the biblical viewpoint, which is God's viewpoint.

In contrast with the pick-and-mix philosophy of many of the New Age religions, this elder's comments demonstrate the absolutist nature of the authority to which he defers. Scriptural texts are used by the Witnesses as a constant frame of reference. World catastrophes such as war, famine, murder, environmental pollution, genocide and terrorism provide them with evidence in support of their theology. When ministering on the doorstep, it is not unusual for Watch Tower evangelists to refer to a recent world event and use biblical texts to explain its occurrence. These events are also taken as evidence of signs of the Last Days. It seems that the more the Witnesses hear about social and economic crises when they turn on their television sets, the more their monosemic view of the world is validated.

The Governing Body of the Society teaches its members that God has a personal name – Jehovah (Exodus 9: 16 is used to support this). The Witnesses' God is the God of the Old Testament, and they reject the Trinity doctrine, declaring it unscriptural. Although Jesus is regarded as inferior to Jehovah, it is believed that, together, both Jesus and Jehovah produced perfect spiritual beings that possessed free will. Satan was one such spirit. The Witnesses maintain that, since the deception in the Garden of Eden, Satan has misled the world, and the most important reason for the existence of humankind (as revealed in the Bible) is the vindication of Jehovah over Satan. Instead of destroying Satan, Jehovah decided to test the loyalty of the rest of humankind and to prove to the rest of creation that Satan was a liar. Jehovah has set a time limit of six thousand years for this challenge (the period would have ended in 1975 – the year in which the Society expected Armageddon), after which, the Witnesses will be rewarded for their loyalty to his divine plan.

The Witnesses believe that the Fall (recorded in Genesis) is responsible for death, but they reject the doctrine of the immortal soul. They do not, however, believe that death is the end for everyone (although the Society does teach that this is so for those who fail to pass future millennial tests). They maintain that the reason we die is that our first parents rejected God's law, and human governments have been controlled by Satan ever since. Human misery is the result of Satan's power in a world in which he will soon be destroyed. The Witnesses claim that some kind of existence after death can be expected for most human beings and this will take the form of resurrection. They also believe that, since Pentecost, Jehovah has been preparing a 'Bride of Christ', a 'Little Flock', a body of 144,000 people (a figure mentioned in Revelation 14: 3) to share heavenly life and leadership. Thus, an anointed class of 144,000 Jehovah's Witnesses will win heavenly reward, while the remainder (along with non-Witnesses whom Jehovah deems worthy) will spend eternity in a different paradise here on earth. The righteous who are asleep in death will be raised from their graves (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1955b).

Like their founding fathers, Witnesses today continue to renounce the conventional Christian doctrine of hellfire on the basis that it is unscriptural and contrary to Jehovah's loving nature (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1989b: 168–75). They claim that hell is nothing more than an insensible state. To support this, they quote Ecclesiastes 9: 10, which describes both Jacob and Job in moments of depression wanting to enter Sheol; and Acts 2: 24–7, 31, and Romans 10: 6, 7, which mention that Jesus himself was in Hades. This, say the Witnesses, would be very difficult to understand if hell were a place of eternal torment. For them, hell is complete annihilation that Jesus will execute upon Satan and his demons at Armageddon, after which there will be no resurrection (Rogerson 1969: 93). Armageddon is the battle in which Christ will purge the earth of Satan's influence – a battle symbolising Jehovah's victory over evil. But Armageddon is not incompatible with the pragmatic nature of building new headquarters for the administration of Watch Tower activities and the continuation of all other features of daily life. Since the Witnesses believe that the just will be saved at Armageddon and that the wicked will be destroyed, the doctrine plays an important role in Watch Tower ministry. The promise of eternal bliss in the post-Armageddon Kingdom informs them that world chaos and life-threatening events are not meaningless but part of a larger system of order.

The Society forbids its members to participate in annual events such as Christmas, Easter, birthdays and national festivals. It teaches that Jehovah does not acknowledge these events since, wherever they are cited in the scriptures, they are always in the context of sin or apostasy. According to the Witnesses, the only two birthday celebrations mentioned in the Bible involve people who were not true believers. These are a pharaoh of Egypt and the Roman ruler Herod Antipas (Genesis 40: 18–22; and Mark 6: 21–8), whose celebrations ended in misery. Though they recognise that the birth of Christ is presented as a joyful occasion by the synoptic writers, devotees refuse to partake in the celebration on the grounds that we do not know the precise date of an event that has, in any case, become tainted with secular images such as lights, trees, tinsel and mistletoe. As far as Easter is concerned, the egg is historically a pagan symbol for the celebration of the return of spring and the rabbit was an emblem of fertility, neither of which is connected with the resurrection of Christ (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1989b: 179). Furthermore, the Witnesses associate annual celebrations with immodest behaviour and excessive alcohol consumption – practices that they say are contrary to the counsel of Romans 13: 13, 'As in the daytime let us walk decently, not in revelries and drunken bouts, not in illicit intercourse and loose conduct, not in strife and jealousy.' This explains why, in addition to their eschatological beliefs, devotees adopt a puritanical lifestyle.

Despite their belief that Satan controls the world, the Witnesses do not generally go as far as members of religious organisations such as the Plymouth Brethren in isolating themselves completely from outsiders. None the less, their persistent refusal to engage in political activities such as voting in elections or joining pressure groups shows their disdain for secular society. The Witnesses continue to object to both jury and military service (on the grounds of pacifism and neutrality), and they do not support local or national charities. Although some devotees join social and leisure clubs and progress to post-compulsory education, Watch Tower officials encourage Kingdom interests and frown upon activities that detract from the Society's teachings. The Governing Body officially condemns behaviour that violates these teachings. Devotees are expected not to smoke and to drink alcohol only in moderation. The dualistic nature of Watch Tower theology means that, in principle, Witnesses everywhere are expected to adhere to a strict ascetic code. Sexual purity is high on the agenda of moral regulation. Adultery, fornication, masturbation and homosexuality all flout the organisation's teachings on sexual conduct. Anything other than highly controlled heterosexual activity is regarded as immoral, and sexual intercourse is confined to marriage. Drug abuse, smoking and the excessive consumption of alcohol, although not symbolically polluting, are believed to be physically polluting and offensive to Jehovah. Blood transfusions are both symbolically and physically polluting. These moral boundaries must be understood and accepted by every individual prior to baptism. In its advice to its younger members, the Governing Body has this to say:

> The Bible describes a young man who meets a promiscuous woman. She kisses him and says: 'Do come, . . . let us enjoy each other with love expressions.' Then what happens? 'All of a sudden he is going after her, like a bull that comes even to the slaughter.' (Proverbs 7: 7–22) Obviously, this youth's passions were aroused not simply because his hormones were at work but because of what he saw and heard. Similarly, one young man admits: 'The root of my whole problem with masturbation boiled down to what I put in my mind. I would watch TV programs that included immorality and in some cases watch programs on cable TV that would show nudity. Such scenes are so shocking that they stay with you. They would surface again in my mind, providing the mental fuel needed to engage in masturbation.'
> (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1989a: 200)

The tract goes on to explain how marriage is the only legitimate structure in which sexual desires can be satisfied and that masturbation endangers future happiness between a married couple, since the masturbator risks disregarding his or her spouse's needs. Implicit in the Society's rules of sexual purity is the notion that the body is a temple of God and must therefore be freed from moral contamination. Of all these sexual activities, homosexuality is regarded as probably the most vile and unnatural. In a much earlier tract, but one still widely used by devotees, we read:

> masturbation can lead into homosexuality. In such instances the person, not satisfied with his lonely sexual activity, seeks a partner for mutual sex play. This happens much more frequently than you may realize. Contrary to what many persons think, homosexuals are not born that way, but their homosexual behaviour is learned. And often a person gets started when very young by playing with anothers' sexual parts, and then engaging in homosexual acts.
> (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1976: 39)

The passage continues with an anecdote about a young man who became 'hooked' on homosexual practices and was able to fight them only by realising that God viewed them as unnatural. As usual, the story ends with a biblical injunction against homosexuality: 'God's Word is very clear on this matter, saying: "Make no mistake: no fornicator or idolater, none who are guilty either of adultery or of homosexual perversion . . . will possess the kingdom of God" ' (1 Corinthians 6: 9, 10).

I attended several Kingdom Hall meetings at which homosexuality was referred to as an unnatural perversion. At a public talk that was delivered by a highly enthusiastic young man who aspired to become a pioneer for the Society,[8] I listened to a forty-five minute sermon about whether homosexuals are 'born that way' or if their sexual behaviour is learned. At this, as at most other Watch Tower sermons, reference was given to the widespread nature of homosexuality, but used only in a way that reinforced the organisation's own teachings – that is, that the world has become unashamedly wicked. There can be little doubt that it would be very difficult for someone with a gay orientation to remain a Witness without experiencing a great deal of injury to his or her personal identity, not least because the Society fails to distinguish between the homosexual condition and homosexual practice.[9]

Of those Watch Tower doctrines that condemn impurity, however, it is the refusal of blood for which the Witnesses are best renowned. This issue has undoubtedly earned the movement the most attention from the outside world (particularly from the courts), and yet, surprisingly, it is not one that often appears on the agenda at Kingdom Hall meetings. Nor is it discussed regularly by elders or even among devotees themselves. Blood prohibition is rarely selected as a key topic for a doorstep sermon, not only because it has given the Witnesses a negative profile (exacerbated over the years by the popular press) but also because it is unlikely to entice new recruits. The Society teaches that blood transfusions are strictly forbidden since blood is a source of life that is sacred to Jehovah. However, the Witnesses insist that most modern surgery can be performed successfully without the use of blood (the Governing Body has no objection to the use of non-blood plasma expanders). Watch Tower publications also warn against the risks of bacterial infection, transfusion reactions and Rhesus sensitisation in their condemnation of the practice. Genesis 9: 4 and Leviticus 17: 11–12 are among the scriptural references used by the Society in support of the doctrine, but it is Acts 15: 28–9 that is most frequently quoted in Watch Tower literature: 'For it has seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things: that you abstain from what has been sacrificed to idols and from blood and from what is strangled and from unchastity.'

Blood transfusions are thus considered physically and morally unclean. As in the case of sexual impurity, receiving blood is tantamount to polluting oneself as well as offending the community. This belief demonstrates the strict purity code that characterises so many Watch Tower teachings. The emergence of AIDS during the 1980s also provided the Witnesses with secular if macabre confirmation of the virtue of the doctrine as well as a powerful justification to abstain from blood on health grounds. It is also worth noting that, prior to its prohibition of blood transfusions in 1945, the Society objected to vaccinations and inoculations, although this never became an official Watch Tower teaching in quite the same way. Sociologist Richard Singelenberg (1990) argues that the patriotic period of the Second World War (ideologically anathematised by the movement) provided a breeding ground for the prohibition to crystallise. The American population was regularly incited to donate blood for its injured soldiers and, in this way, blood transfusions became part of nationalistic manifestation such as armies, national anthems and flags, to which the Witnesses were already vehemently opposed (519–20). The Society's condemnation of blood transfusions constitutes a rule of pollution and purity that is instrumental in creating structural boundaries. In a period marked by state opposition to Watch Tower doctrines (particularly in the USA), devotees needed to maintain their exclusivity in order to re-establish their universal collective identity and to detach themselves from orthodox Christianity. The Witnesses' refusal of blood is functionally analogous with Jewish dietary laws – it confirms that sacrifice is part of the price of membership and reinforces internal cohesion by distinguishing between purity and pollution. Blood is a powerful symbol of allegiance simply because of its lack of meaning for other cultures.

Like most other religious movements, the Watch Tower Society imparts a theology that embraces a large number of highly complex issues and each member usually has at his or her disposal several tracts containing hundreds of biblical references which are used to substantiate beliefs. The doctrines outlined above are those which, in my view, pose the greatest challenge to the Witnesses when they find themselves in the company of non-members and, as such, provide the ethnographer with some important analytical material. I would wish to suggest not that the Witnesses can never circulate in secular environments without experiencing hostility from those who do not share their doctrines, but, rather, that their disillusionment with the world has important implications for how they manage their private beliefs in public. Whatever happens, the Witnesses' loyalty is first and foremost to an organisation that secures their salvation.

Internal organisation and control

As far as the communication of Watch Tower doctrines is concerned, all information is transmitted by central headquarters (that is, the Governing Body) through direct channels to individual members. The result is that Witnesses at all levels are kept aware of the activities of their brethren abroad. The Society's official mission is the key to understanding the relationships that hold devotees together in something that can be called a religious movement. This calls for an examination of the forces of integration and disintegration, the distribution of authority and the internal factors affecting growth and change. Such an exercise involves a description of the activities in which the Witnesses participate. As one might expect, there is a division of labour within the organisation as well as inevitable differences in status and roles.

The Witnesses make use of two corporations – namely, the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania and New York, and the International Bible Students Association. The Pennsylvanian Corporation has voting members who live in all parts of the world. They meet annually and elect or re-elect seven directors of the corporation, who themselves elect officers. The President of the corporation is therefore, elected not by popular vote but by the directors, who choose one of their members for the post. The International Bible Students Association is a London Corporation. It owns property in Britain and is responsible predominantly for British affairs. The President is responsible for the central administration of door-to-door evangelism and travels extensively to check on the progress of the movement worldwide. Doctrinal edicts are the responsibility of a larger body of Jehovah's Witnesses known as the remnant class – a spiritual committee comprising the President and other devotees. The Society has an extensive printing factory in New York, consisting of four large interconnected buildings in which millions of magazines, tracts and other publications are printed every year. This literature appears in nearly every language as well as in Braille. Factory workers are all fully baptised members of the community. There are also Branch Offices in London, which have a printing factory producing several million magazines each month. For administrative convenience, the country under the Branch Office is divided into districts that are further divided into circuits. At the time of writing, the Society also has three official internet websites.[10]

The Witnesses have no ordained clergy. They refer to all members as ministers or publishers (or, more personally, brothers and sisters). This is based on the belief that hierarchies are contrary to biblical teaching. However, closer examination reveals that there is a visible hierarchy, and Witnesses in over fifty thousand congregations throughout the world are assigned responsibilities. The chain of posts and the graduation of authority upwards from Minister (or Publisher) to Pioneer, Special Pioneer, Circuit Overseer, District Overseer, Branch Official and Governing Body suggest a complicated system of command and promotion. Strange as it may seem to outsiders, all positions are viewed as positions of service with no visible or official exaltation of individuals. At every level of the organisation, those in authority oversee those below them, which means that every Witness is under official surveillance. Nevertheless, it would be wrong to argue that the movement does not contain any informal structures, since kinship relations often facilitate a flow of information outside official channels. Beckford (1975a) argues that kinship links have helped the organisation to expand without threatening the efficient pursuit of goals. Legitimation of official authority is claimed on the grounds that the Society acts as Jehovah's earthly agent and as Christ's instrument for the forthcoming Kingdom.

In sociological terms, the Watch Tower Society is Durkheimian in that there can be no division between God and society. In such a system, the sense of self-discovery or self-exaltation is minimised – often even non-existent, as conveyed in the following passage from a Watch Tower publication:

> There are, of course, many factors involved in being a faithful servant of God. But basic to all of them is reliance on Jehovah and his provisions. How do we show such reliance? One way is by attending congregation meetings. The Scriptures urge us not to neglect them. (Heb. 10: 23–5) Those who have continued to be faithful witnesses of Jehovah, whether in the face of public apathy or of persecution, have exerted themselves to be regular in attending meetings with fellow worshippers. At these meetings our knowledge of the Scriptures is increased, but it is not mere fascination with new things that draws us . . . We are drawn close to our Christian brothers in united worship and we personally are strengthened to continue doing God's will. Jehovah's spirit provides direction through the congregation, and by means of that spirit Jesus is in our midst when we assemble in his name. (Rev. 3: 6; Matt. 18: 20)
> (Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania 1983b: 170–1)

This passage is rich in detail about the all-powerful congregation over the subordinated self. Although devotees recognise that each human life comes from Jehovah, individual exaltation is given little space. The individual Witness who attends meetings regularly and ministers truth with passion can never pursue personal interests. Many riches await those who are prepared to sacrifice their metaphysical curiosity and personal innovation for the public symbolic system that has stamped its authority on every member of the congregation. In Durkheimian terms, success in the world is incompatible with the given categories of truth in which the internal consciousness of the private person matches that of the collective whole. Witnesses who spend the most number of hours in ministry work and become pioneers or elders are admired and respected for their loyalty and commitment. Individuals derive satisfaction from the knowledge that the community has benefited spiritually from their efforts, while personal success is considered self-indulgent. The following excerpt from an interview with an elder confirms how difficult it is for the Society to allow individual Witnesses to cherish their own achievements:

> Involvement in business isn't discouraged except if it's going to overrun and remove your time and energy for spiritual things. You see, Jesus did give an illustration about a man who had grown fat and wealthy and he decided to pull down his barns and build some more barns, 'cos he thought it'd be nice to have some more barns. But Jesus said, 'Beware', and, that very night, the man died. Now many of our younger people do begin to enter into business and that's OK provided it doesn't injure their spiritual activities. Now as far as education is concerned, the organisation through its literature tells our young people, 'Get as much education as you can while you're at school'. Now when it comes to college and university, caution is needed because of the philosophies that can be anti-spiritual and association can be as well.

This elder's comments show how devotees are strongly advised to 'seek first the Kingdom', and there seems to be great pride expressed among active members when their children decide to leave school and become full-time evangelists (or pioneers). Financial success can never compensate for one's status as a Witness. The separation of oneself from the community could well mark the beginning of breaking away from it. Unquestioning loyalty of this kind has undoubtedly helped to play down doctrinal inconsistency. The failed prophecies of 1914, 1918, 1925 and, most significantly, 1975 could no longer be taught after these years came and went, and yet the movement has since managed to expand. At the same time, certain doctrines were introduced long after the Society was founded, only to be phased out years later. Examples of these include the ban on vaccinations and the prohibition of organ transplants between 1967 and 1980 (I have also mentioned that blood transfusions were not prohibited until 1945). The movement has been successful in persuading its members that such change comes from the Almighty who never tires of teaching them new things: 'the path of the righteous ones is like the bright light that is getting lighter and lighter until the day is firmly established' (Proverbs 4: 18).

It could well be that many Witnesses have not yet been in the organisation long enough to realise that 'new lights' have a habit of growing dimmer, while old ones are sometimes switched back on! For example, in its guidelines on sexual conduct within marriage in the early 1970s, the Governing Body prohibited certain forms of stimulation, foreplay and intercourse; but in 1978 it advised that it was inappropriate for congregational elders to attempt to control marital intimacy. In 1983, the pendulum swung back when an article in The Watchtower of 15 March issued an 'amplification and adjustment in understanding' of the 1978 guidelines, asserting anew the Society's right to examine sexual relations and to impose sanctions, including disfellowshipping (the official term for the expulsion of dissident members), on those whose marital behaviour was considered immodest. For Witnesses who have lived through these inconsistencies, leaving the Watch Tower community poses a more painful option than doubting its version of reality. As I will show in Chapter 8, the part that such inconsistencies might play in causing members of other religious organisations to abandon their beliefs is missing in the case of the Witnesses, many of whose loved ones are also members. Loyalty, emotional dependence and a strong sense of community have enabled the movement to survive. Former Witness David Reed (1989a) also suggests that the main reason for the Society's success is that it is able to impart a certain mystique about the authority of the presidency. Until recently, members of the Governing Body remained completely anonymous to Witnesses at grass roots level. Their photographs were never to be seen in Kingdom Halls or in any of the organisation's literature. Witnesses everywhere continue to believe that God is using the Governing Body as his channel of communication, and any correspondence for which it is responsible is endorsed only by the Society's official rubber stamp. The role attributed to the Watch Tower presidency thus carries the same symbolic significance for the Witnesses as the papacy for Roman Catholics.

The structure of the movement and the intense loyalty demanded of each individual at every level demonstrates the characteristics of totalitarianism identified by Friedrich: namely, an elaborate total ideology making chiliastic claims with a promise of a utopian future, a single mass party, a monopoly of the means of communication and central direction and control of activity through bureaucratic co-ordination (Friedrich 1954). Although, historically, totalitarianism has been heavily over-laden with ideology, the Watch Tower Society controls millions of people who are denied freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly and freedom of conscience yet, paradoxically (or so it would seem to the outsider), devotees regard themselves as free, and non-members as oppressed or 'in shackles'. When people join the Watch Tower Society, they must adhere to its teachings, which means subjecting themselves to the theocratic rule of God himself and to judicial committees that claim the right to function as a literal government. In the Witnesses' eyes, these committees supersede secular courts since they act as divine judge and jury over eternal destiny (Reed 1989a). Why, then, do the Witnesses submit to this kind of authority?

Introducing modernity

I explained in Chapter 1 how, despite its international success, the Watch Tower Society has been largely neglected by academic writers. Other than the small amount of literature that addresses Watch Tower conversion and recruitment, most of the remaining sources focus on tension of one form or another between the Witnesses and secular states. With the exception of the historical examples of persecution of Watch Tower evangelists (which was often a result of their own attacks on official authorities), this tension mainly derives from the Witnesses' refusal to participate in activities pertaining to citizenship. Though some of the material raises important issues concerning the relationship between the Watch Tower community and secular society, most of this is written from a macro perspective and fails to examine the strategies which the Witnesses adopt for managing their beliefs in the various contexts of their daily lives. In addition to this, there is a serious shortage of academic literature on defection. Although Botting and Botting (1984) comment on the long-term effects of Watch Tower theology on former members, their discussion centres on those who have been disfellowshipped rather than on voluntary defectors. Most of the available material on defection is autobiographical and therefore lacks sociological analysis. There is, of course, always the potential for further research in every substantive area of social science, but by far my biggest concern about the current sociological literature on the Watch Tower Society is that there is little or no material on the relationship between the Witnesses and modernity. This is not to suggest that research to date is wholly empirical, but, where academics have attempted to theorise the current position of the movement, it is usually in relation to conversion and/or continuation of membership.[11] Search as I may in the sociological, anthropological and historical material, I find no attempt to link the beliefs and activities of the Witnesses to the general characteristics of modern secular society. This is where I believe the concept of modernity is useful.

The literature on modernity is, as anyone who has ever consulted it knows, abstract and dense. The concept has no simple definition and there is very little consensus among sociologists about when modern societies broke with traditional ones.[12] Modernity is complex and multi-layered and involves contrasting and contradictory principles. In the following account, I have outlined a number of issues that provide a backdrop for my analysis. Although the content of this chapter is by no means a blueprint of the modernity thesis, the literature emphasises three main spheres of modern life – the economic, the political and the cultural. Broadly speaking, the economic sphere involves the dominance of industrial capitalism; the political sphere involves the rise of liberal democracy and the consolidation of the nation state; and in the cultural sphere rationality replaces traditional authority (Jones 1993). Other literature focuses on the impact of these structural changes on the construction of modern identities (see, for example, Giddens 1991, Hall and Gieben 1992, Weeks 1992). More dynamical, perhaps, is the claim that the modern age is being replaced with a new social order which is characterised by flexible forms of technology (that is, post-Fordism), globalisation and a cultural ethos containing a radically new set of art forms, lifestyles and values.[13] Bauman, however, sees modernity as:

> a historical period that began in Western Europe with a series of profound social-structural and intellectual transformations of the seventeenth century and achieved its maturity: (1) as a cultural project with the growth of the Enlightenment; (2) as a socially accomplished form of life with the growth of industrial (capitalist and later communist) society.
> (Bauman 1991: 4)

There can be little doubt that industrialisation has altered the religious landscape in the West. Some modernity theorists suggest that capitalism has had a corrosive effect on our sense of moral order.[14] The rapid expansion in economic scale bolstered by technological innovations (particularly throughout the twentieth century) gave rise to the enormous loss of confidence in environmental matters and the subsequent emergence of a mood of uncertainty – a mood in which religion has taken on new and sometimes unexpected roles. On the one hand, market demands have required larger economic units in order to expand internationally while, on the other, people have felt inclined to reassert local and national identities in their search for psychological security. These contradictory economic and cultural pressures have brought about some significant changes in religious expression. Sociologist Paul Heelas argues that one of the most important consequences of modernity is the decline in mainstream religion and the emergence of a society in which the individuals are free to negotiate their own identities as consumers. For Heelas, modernity lies at the heart of the New Age movement, which he defines as:

> the faith which has been placed in obtaining progress by way of scientific expertise, together with the application of reason to the management of social and individual affairs; the faith which has come to be placed in the promises of consumer culture; the loss of faith in religion, in particular in northern Europe.
> (Heelas 1996: 135–6)

Similarly, Chief Rabbi Jonathan Sachs invites us to think about the consequences of the transition from traditional communities, where life chances, beliefs and identities were narrowly circumscribed, to a modern situation in which lifestyles, relationships and careers are open to a multiplicity of options:

> Modernity is the transition from fate to choice. At the same time, it dissolves the commitments and loyalties that once lay behind our choices. Technical reason has made us masters of matching means to ends. But it has left us inarticulate as to why we should choose one end rather than another. The values that once led us to regard one as intrinsically better than another – and which gave weight to words like 'good' and 'bad' – have disintegrated, along with the communities and religious traditions in which we learned them.
> (Sachs 1990: 6)

All these writers suggest that rationalisation has led to the increased differentiation of social institutions. Industrial societies with high levels of technology have seen the freeing of communities from religiously sanctioned controls and the emergence of autonomous individuals driven by their own values. The loss of community and the rise of individualism are regarded by modernity theorists as essential features of secularisation – a process which arguably has its roots in the 'modern' discourses of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.[15] Since then, modernity has become identified with major changes associated with industrial capitalist societies including the rise of the secular state, the expansion of a capitalist economy, the formation of classes, the emergence of distinctive patriarchal relations between men and women, racial divisions and 'the transition from fate to choice'. Over a long period of time, so we are told, these processes brought about a materialistic social order governed by individualistic, instrumental and rational impulses. These historical trends and changing social patterns resulted in a variety of lifestyles and a huge proliferation of consumer products. Life chances both within and between nation states have since become enormously complex and asymmetrical. Throughout the twentieth century, modernity became a progressively global phenomenon (Hall and Gieben 1992).

Davie (1994) offers a historical analysis of religious expression in her examination of the relationship between the ordering of societies and the cultural forms with which they have become associated. Though she acknowledges that there are disagreements among historians about the origins of modernity, Davie argues that the shift from pre-industrial to production-based societies made heavy demands on organised religion. Migration away from the countryside to what eventually became large industrial conurbations brought about lower levels of religious practice than had previously been the case (particularly among the working classes) across the whole of Western Europe. Davie suggests that this was mainly because of the increasing detachment of many people from their previous churches. In the case of the sizeable minority who, for whatever reason, were able to find employment, Sunday in its traditional form as a day of rest had become like any other – a day of struggle. Davie goes on to explain how, since the eighteenth century, the scrutiny of all knowledge has led to widespread pessimism in both Eastern and Western societies. The undermining of the traditional formulas of the earlier period infected religious and secular life to the extent that creeds of both kinds began to be replaced by continuous self-questioning. As far as Britain is concerned, Davie argues that this has caused the mutation rather than the disappearance of religious life in a society which plays a crucial role in a global economy but which is still rooted in the Judaeo-Christian tradition.[16] Although Davie believes that the sacred will continue to persist, the forms in which it will do so will be fundamentally different from those of previous times. The various manifestations of religion at the beginning of the twenty-first century reflect the age of heterogeneity and self-fulfilment described by postmodernists. In short, individual freedom has led to the adoption of beliefs that are as unconventional as they are diverse.

The weakening of tradition and the rise of individualism have also blurred the boundaries between the public and the private spheres, both in our emotional lives and in our relationships with wider society. Individuals have become increasingly aware of their own ability (and often their own need) to construct new identities in a world which is atomised and fluid.[17] One does not need to have read modernity literature to realise that this is a condition that has caused some considerable concern to current scholars, as expressed in the following passage by Gehlen:

> Any individual transplanted into our times from the vigorously concrete cultures of antiquity, of the Middle Ages, or even of the baroque era, would find most astonishing the conditions of physical proximity, and the lack of structure and form, in which the people of our time are forced to vegetate; and would wonder at the elusiveness and abstractness of our institutions, which are mostly 'immaterial states of affairs'.
> (Gehlen 1980: 74)

Gehlen's commentary hints strongly at a culture without shared meanings. Particularly significant (at least for the purpose of this book) is the effect that the 'elusiveness' to which he refers have had on religious beliefs. The abstract nature of social institutions and the absence of an overarching religious ideology has left us increasingly alone in an impersonal (some might say heartless) world (Lasch 1980, 1991). With the weakening of mainstream Christianity, monosemic beliefs have become ever more obscure and difficult to uphold, and this has led to significant changes in religious behaviour. The plurality of religious movements indicates that faith is now well and truly a matter of choice, and is no longer part of one's membership of society. Davie (1994) suggests that the majority of people lack discipline in their spiritual orientation in a society in which it is common to believe without belonging. This modern form of religious expression allows the individual to select at will from a variety of goods that can be tailored to meet his or her lifestyle.[18] Faced with so many rival movements – traditional, cultic and postmodern – no single religion can ever be the final arbiter of truth and falsity. In the absence of clear divisions and boundaries, a variety of religious beliefs and practices exist alongside monosemic and revelatory doctrines. The religious eclecticism of the modern world operates on the basis that we can all discern reality and that all versions of it are equally valid, as Bruce explains:

> Like the hominid creature drawn on charts of human evolution, who starts on the left-hand side as a small hunched hairy beast and gradually grows and sheds hair until he turns into the sleek human on the right, modernization has seen the individual grow and stand erect. From a stunted and ill-formed beast, subordinate to his Gods as he was subordinate to his political masters, the individual has risen in confidence, claiming first the right to make choices in ever-expanding spheres of behaviour and now insisting, . . . on the right to define reality and then, because the definitions clash, asserting relativism as the practical attitude.
> (Bruce 1995: 134)

The relativist's insistence that we are all now released from social constraints and free to decide what counts as knowledge poses a threat to those who extol rational thinking.[19] But the coexistence of individual sovereignty and rationality represents one of the contradictions to which modernity theorists draw our attention. The modernists' belief that it is both possible and desirable to produce valid knowledge has long been recognised as one of the main sources of dispute between modernity and postmodernity theorists.[20] However, modernity writers also contend that self-authoritarian, pluralistic societies are likely to undermine notions of rational knowledge. They call this condition anti-foundationalism. Individuals who yearn security in the modern world of contradictions often experience personal and emotional crises (Giddens 1990, 1991, Wagner 1994). The Watch Tower Society has managed to offer its devotees a meaningful identity at a time when free thought has shaken the very foundations on which substantive value systems are built. To the Witnesses, the modern world presents risk – risk of moral contamination, risk of physical harm and, ultimately, risk of eternal damnation. So what is the significance of their monotheistic system with its literal interpretation of scripture and non-negotiable prescription for salvation in a world where polysemic beliefs and absolutist cosmologies occupy the same stage?

Certainty in an uncertain world: the Witnesses' response to ambiguity

In his article on the modern world in the Guardian on 3 April 1997, journalist Douglas Rushkoff commented:

> It's a place where nothing is fixed and everything is uncertain. Facts are reduced to conjecture. Linear arguments are deconstructed into discontinuous obscurity. Stories no longer have absolute endings. Authorities have no advantage. Autonomy is the only rule. The holy maxim: empower thyself. So let the celebrations begin. We are liberated from linear thinking and its determinist conclusions. Now we can live in a reality where anything can happen. We don't need heroes, saints, martyrs or messiahs – especially not ones who enforce their messages with a terrifying day of judgment to divide the saved from the damned.

In this passage, Rushkoff offers a concise description of the anti-foundational society. But while the days of catechisms, commandments and absolutes may be regarded as a thing of the past for religions which allow individuals to construct their own identities, the Watch Tower Society claims to offer its adherents the same degree of existential security in the twenty-first century as it did 130 years ago. By renouncing modern notions of individual freedom and liberty, the Witnesses have won recruits year by year and managed to maintain their exclusivity throughout the world. The real problem that modernity poses for the Witnesses is the problem of choice.

For sociologist Peter Wagner (1994), modernity is haunted by ambiguity. Wagner argues that although the Enlightenment celebrated freedom and autonomy, modern societies have never allowed liberation in its fullest sense to take place. The state, for example, has always had to safeguard what have been regarded as important objectives of the modern project as well as maintain social order. Far from fulfilling the humanist promise of self-realisation, it has had to restrict practices and discipline individuals to such an extent that total human emancipation has become untenable. At the same time that societies have become marked by difference and plurality, the decline in traditional authority has made the construction of modern identities an ever more precarious and anxious exercise. One of the paradoxes of modernity is that the disembedding of people from their social and cultural contexts at the end of the nineteenth century led to a situation in which the autonomy of one individual meant the exploitation of another. Wagner argues that this is part of the general ambiguity of modern reasoning and modern practice (1974: 22–4). The capacity to choose new ways of life has weakened tradition to such a degree that we are now living in what Berger calls 'the terror of chaos' (Berger 1977: 109), and it is against these uncertainties of modernity that the Witnesses seem to have launched their appeal. One way of surviving in a pluralistic world is to select one particular fragment of what is on offer and transform it into an all-encompassing worldview. Joining the Watch Tower community enables individuals to eschew those secular institutions that weaken identity. In this sense, the Witnesses have successfully constructed certainty and reduced the risks caused by confusion. But on what cultural resources have they drawn in order to achieve this?

As far as the certainties of modernity are concerned, Heelas contends that the enterprise culture of Thatcher and Reagan throughout the 1980s created a climate in which it was impossible (at least in principle) not to think of individuals as more autonomous and better able to take control of their own lives than ever before. This self-empowerment marks a shift away from the influence of traditional, overarching systems towards one's own inner sources of authority and responsibility. But if self-authority is an indicator of certainty, the Watch Tower Society hardly exemplifies it. The Witnesses' continued deference to external authority suggests that they are in no way inclined to gravitate in the same direction as those involved in the New Age. This is not to suggest, however, that the Witnesses' worldview is the complete antithesis to modernity (their movement was, after all, founded as a result of the rejection of orthodox Christianity) for, although world-renouncing tenets undoubtedly curtail life options, modernity theorists do not deny that even some so-called moderns continue to hold absolutist beliefs. In exercising their freedom to choose a post-traditional lifestyle, the Witnesses have solved the problem of finding ontological security in a world of uncertainty. For them, absolutism is the essence of a meaningful identity that eradicates risk and ambiguity with one fell swoop.

The Witnesses' version of truth is the answer to modern doubt. Reactions that advocate the complete transformation of society are part of a phenomenon which sociologists call fundamentalism.[21] This is a highly problematic concept (not least because it is used in a pejorative sense to stigmatise beliefs and behaviour that are considered widely unpopular or of which people disapprove), but can, if used accurately, help to illuminate the status of various social movements in the modern world. Some writers regard fundamentalism as a product of late capitalism, and it can take a variety of forms, both religious and non-religious (Davie 1994, 1995, Harris 1994).[22] The available literature suggests that fundamentalist movements arise out of conditions of uncertainty. Generally speaking, it is the passion and simplicity of fundamentalism that gives it its appeal. Fundamentalists are known for their preoccupation with an all-encompassing explanation of the world and their defence of essential truths. According to Davie, they evoke the reaffirmation of these truths 'within a situation that has been profoundly disturbed by the pressures of an expanding global economy and the effects that this has had on social, political or ideological life' (Davie 1995: 2–3).[23] Fundamentalism can thus be seen as a by-product of the modern age. Religious fundamentalists see God and the devil as active forces in everyday life and ascribe the most mundane events and decisions to divine authority. Most believe that we are not far from the final judgement where God will intervene, ridding the world of all its ills and rewarding the righteous with everlasting life. The main goal of religious fundamentalism is to protect society from moral decay. This is usually accompanied by a programme of radical reform. Fundamentalists often deliver public sermons to warn nation states – be they communist or secular humanist – of the dangerous forces of atheistic and liberal thinking. Their level of activity ranges from supporting right-wing causes to engaging in direct political action against certain social and moral issues (Davie 1995: 3–4).

The sociological literature on fundamentalism provides an appropriate starting point for an analysis of the Watch Tower movement. The Witnesses' literal interpretation of the Bible can be seen as a retreat to the certainties of fundamentalism by a people who are threatened by the loss of a stable sense of self. Hunter (1991) argues that, in the case of religious fundamentalism, sacred texts play an essential part in sealing beliefs and activities with the approval of divine authority. 'Given the moral and religious ambiguities that seem intrinsic to modern and post-modern thought and aesthetics, the text becomes the source of all religious and moral authority, establishing safe, definable and absolute standards of life and thought' (157–8).

The belief that the inerrant word of God has been correctly translated from original Greek and Hebrew manuscripts has earned Watch Tower theologians a deference not unlike that of papal infallibility. As far as the Witnesses are concerned, religious conviction is not just about attending meetings at their local place of worship, or even believing in the existence of an omniscient being; it is about substantiating beliefs with tangible evidence. Scriptural literalism signifies a revealed truth that guards against polysemic beliefs by presenting a one true interpretation of the Bible that holds good for the whole of humanity. Polysemy would seriously undermine the exegeses of Watch Tower interpreters.[24] The certainty that devotees construct from scriptural texts is a proverbial stick with which to beat moral danger. These texts enable them to consult Jehovah on every aspect of their lives.

Although religious fundamentalism is a relatively recent phenomenon, there can be no denying its tension with modernity. Bruce (1990) argues that fundamentalism is never likely to be a major social force because of the ideological dominance of science, technology and humanism, all of which are better able to accommodate cultural diversity. Fundamentalist tenets are in direct conflict with most definitions of liberalism, and liberal thinking is anathema to the Witnesses as they step up their appeal for a puritanical lifestyle based on literal biblical interpretation. Though they are a product of modern conditions, the Witnesses have also successfully resisted some of the very features of the modern world theorised by the above scholars. Only an organisation as highly insulated as the Watch Tower Society would be able to enforce fundamentalist doctrines and a puritanical code of conduct with such a high degree of conformity. The outside world is clearly a world that requires careful management on the part of the Witnesses, who jeopardise their eternal salvation when they cross the organisation's ascetic boundaries. Millenarian beliefs act as a defence against those forces that threaten the fabric of the community. But since the Witnesses represent only a tiny percentage of the world's population, no empirical study of their social relations can constitute either an acknowledgement or a devastating critique of the modernity thesis. What such a study can do, however, is help us to understand how they perceive the world, and what they are able to offer prospective recruits.

Introduction

Significant numbers of Australian children have experienced neglect, emotional abuse, physical abuse and sexual abuse. The adverse, long-term consequences of these experiences are well demonstrated in the research literature and well recognised by the policy and practice communities. It is also now well recognised that responding to abuse and neglect after it has been detected is only one aspect of prevention. Indeed, the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children 2009–2020 (Council of Australian Governments [COAG], 2009b), which provides a long-term strategy for children's wellbeing and safety, and advocates a shift in focus from statutory tertiary responses to locating child abuse prevention and child safety within a public health model. In this approach, primary prevention and universal supports for all families are the central strategies out of which more intensive interventions should flow. In other words, the focus needs to be on preventing abuse and neglect before it occurs.

The six supporting outcomes of the National Framework reflect this focus on prevention, particularly outcomes 1, 2 and 5 (outcomes 3 and 4 reflect early intervention and tertiary responses respectively).[a] While these outcomes address all forms of child abuse (i.e., emotional abuse, physical abuse, neglect, sexual abuse and exposure to domestic violence), child sexual abuse is also addressed in a separate outcome—outcome 6. The key strategies for outcome 6 are to:

- raise awareness of child sexual abuse and the online exploitation of children;
- enhance prevention strategies for child sexual abuse;
- strengthen law enforcement and judicial processes in response to child sexual abuse and exploitation; and
- ensure survivors of sexual abuse have access to effective treatment and appropriate support (COAG, 2009b).

Outcome 6 thus clearly acknowledges that the dynamics and drivers of child sexual abuse and exploitation may not be the same as other forms of child abuse, and that preventing and responding to sexual abuse may require different strategies.

In early 2013, the Australian Institute of Family Studies (AIFS) and PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) collaborated to develop a project proposal to explore the specific dynamics of child sexual abuse (CSA) and their implications for prevention and early intervention. AIFS was subsequently commissioned by the Department of Social Services to develop a framework synthesising the dynamics of child sexual abuse based on the available research, and subsequently to identify the key determinants underpinning these behaviours. This high-level overview would then enable us to identify gaps and key directions for primary prevention and early intervention.

The overall aims of this project were to consider the specific dynamics of child sexual abuse and their implications for prevention and early intervention. Specifically we aimed to:

a The six supporting outcomes are: (1) children live in safe and supportive families and communities; (2) children and families access adequate support to promote safety and intervene early; (3) risk factors for child abuse and neglect are addressed; (4) children who have been abused or neglected receive the support and care they need for their safety and wellbeing; (5) Indigenous children are supported and safe in their families and communities; and (6) child sexual abuse and exploitation is prevented and survivors receive adequate support (COAG, 2009b).

- document and conceptualise the broad range of behaviours that constitute "child sexual abuse" and exploitation, and the contexts in which these occur;
- identify the factors and facilitators associated with the various forms of perpetration of child sexual abuse;
- map current prevention, early intervention and therapeutic responses against this analysis; and
- assess key points of prevention and intervention in light of identified risk factors and facilitators of child sexual abuse and apparent gaps in prevention.

Project description

Project components

While the major component of the project has been a synthesis of the literature, we also undertook the following additional activities:

- an expert roundtable with high-level police representatives responsible for child safety in their jurisdiction;
- an expert roundtable with researchers and practitioners involved in the child protection, sexual abuse and treatment fields;
- a desktop review of current policy and program approaches to preventing child sexual abuse, including any available evaluations; and
- further one-on-one consultations with key individuals.

These activities have assisted us in making sense of the research evidence and were essential to the process of identifying key directions for prevention efforts.

Our approach

Locating prevention in a public health framework

Our thinking on prevention, and particularly primary prevention, is informed by a public health framework for violence prevention and the literature on social determinants of health and wellbeing (Box 1 on page viii). This framework comprises three aspects. First, it uses a systematic approach to defining and understanding the problem in order to develop and evaluate interventions aimed at reducing that harm. Second, the framework sees prevention as comprising three levels: primary, secondary and tertiary. These levels move from universal strategies to change the underlying conditions at the population level that give rise to child sexual abuse occurring to increasingly targeted strategies with at-risk populations to working with those who have experienced or have perpetrated sexual abuse. Third, it uses a social-ecological framework to describe the nested relationships between individuals, families, communities and the wider social environment. Box 1 provides a detailed explanation of the public health framework.

Focus on learning from perpetration

A key lens in this project was a focus on the factors associated with perpetration (i.e., what causes individuals to commit sexual offences against children and young people). Perpetration of sexual abuse remains under-examined within the broader child maltreatment field. As noted by the International Society for the Prevention of Child Abuse and Neglect (ISPCAN, 2013):

> Historically in the child protection field, more attention has been paid to the management of the victim or the potential victim of child abuse than to the potential or actual perpetrator of violence. A focus on girls as potential victims of sexual abuse has resulted in programmes across many countries that aim to empower girls as prevention strategy. At best, their effectiveness is unclear. (p. 4)

WEB.0061.001.0009

Box 1: Public health framework: Key elements

The public health approach to prevention

The public health approach aims to provide the maximum benefit for the largest number of people. It adopts a systematic process for achieving this by:

- defining the problem through the systematic collection of information about the magnitude, scope, characteristics and consequences of violence—this step aims to understand the "who", "what", "when", "where" and "how";
- understanding why abuse occurs in terms of the causes and correlates, the factors that increase or decrease risk, and the factors that could be modified through interventions;
- developing and testing prevention and intervention strategies, as well as evaluating them for process learnings and effectiveness; and
- "scaling up" by implementing effective and promising interventions in a wide range of settings. The effects of these interventions on risk factors and the target outcome should be monitored, and their effects and cost-effectiveness should be evaluated.

Levels of prevention

In the context of sexual abuse, the public health approach conceptualises three levels of prevention:

- Primary prevention—This refers to strategies aimed at preventing violence before it occurs. It includes strategies that aim to tackle the underlying causes of abuse and bolster protective factors. Its focus is on population-wide effects.
- Secondary prevention/early intervention—This refers to programs that involve the early detection of risk or early manifestations of the problem. In terms of child abuse, this can involve interventions with populations that have one or more risk factors associated with child maltreatment, such as poverty, parental substance abuse, young parental age, parental mental health concerns, and parental or child disabilities. Programs may target services for communities or neighbourhoods that have a high incidence of any or all of these risk factors.
- Tertiary prevention—These are responses set in motion after the violence or abuse has occurred. They aim to prevent the consequences of violence and include, for example, child protection responses, counselling and trauma services, justice responses, and perpetrator behaviour change programs.

The social-ecological model

An understanding of sexual abuse as having multiple causes is best conceptualised in the social-ecological model, demonstrating the interactive nature of a range of key factors. Developed initially by Bronfenbrenner (1977), the social-ecological model describes the interrelatedness of different spheres of social life and the interactions between individuals and their environments. The social-ecological model has been extremely influential in conceptualising child protection responses. The ecological dimension refers to the following spheres:

- Individual-level influences (also called the microsystem)—These are personal history factors that increase the likelihood of an individual becoming a victim or perpetrator of sexual abuse (e.g., alcohol and/or drug use, attitudes and beliefs that support sexual interaction with children, impulsive and other antisocial tendencies, hostility towards women, and a childhood history of sexual abuse or witnessing family violence).
- Interpersonal relationship-level influences (exosystem)—These factors increase risk as a result of relationships with peers, intimate partners and family members. Peers, partners and family members can reinforce attitudes and shape the individual's behaviour and range of experiences.
- Community-level influences (mesosystem)—These are factors that increase risk due to community and social environments, and inform an individual's experiences and relationships with schools, workplaces and neighbourhoods.

- Societal-level influences (macrosystem)—These are larger, structural factors such as government policies or laws that influence attitudes and behaviours; for example, gender inequality, religious or cultural belief systems, societal norms, and economic or social policies that create or sustain gaps and tensions between groups of people (adapted from Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, 2004, pp. 4–5).

These levels of classification are not rigid or mutually exclusive. Groups that might be specifically the target of a primary prevention activity may include those at risk of either experiencing or perpetrating violence. Tertiary prevention, such as developing a strong criminal justice response to child sexual abuse, can support primary prevention messages. In addition, many services are involved in all levels of prevention.

For this project the key questions are:

- What range of behaviours, relationships, and circumstances are associated with the perpetration of child sexual abuse?
- What risk factors are associated with these dynamics?
- What do these risk factors suggest about:
  - — early intervention efforts with at-risk populations; and
  - — preventing sexual abuse from occurring in the first place?

Limitations

The intention of this project was not to provide an exhaustive account of all forms of child sexual abuse and exploitation, but rather to consolidate the key themes and findings across the literature into a high-level conceptual mapping of:

- the dynamics of child sexual abuse (i.e., the circumstances, relationships and settings in which child sexual abuse and exploitation occur);
- the range of factors and conditions associated with these behaviours; and
- the implications of these for primary prevention and early intervention efforts.

WEB.0061.001.0011

We necessarily drew on a wide range of literature reflecting a diversity of disciplines, populations, methodologies, and measures in order to do this. Our aim was to identify common findings and themes in order to create an overall map of the dynamics of child sexual abuse and to identify directions for prevention efforts. As such, critique of methodology as per a more traditional literature review is limited.

It is also important to note that we have looked at both adult offenders of child sexual abuse as well as literature on young people who sexually abuse. This is emphatically not to suggest that adolescents with sexually abusive behaviours are somehow "mini sex offenders"—the empirical, clinical and practice literature is clear in pointing out that the treatment needs of young people cannot be based on work with adult offenders, and that the developmental and trauma needs of this population need to be acknowledged (Nisbet, Rombouts, & Smallbone, 2005; Pratt, Miller, & Boyd, 2012). However, as our focus is on behaviours, settings, and contexts, it is important to include it in our mapping.

Report structure

Part A synthesises the available research in relation to:

- prevalence data and literature review methodology;
- dynamics and contexts of child sexual abuse;
- risk factors for child sexual abuse; and
- current approaches to child sexual abuse prevention.

Drawing on the key findings and themes arising from this synthesis activity, Part B:

- identifies the conceptual, policy and practice challenges that the prevention of child sexual abuse presents;
- presents a conceptual mapping of dynamics associated with child sexual abuse and sexual exploitation; and
- outlines key directions that could be taken to strengthen prevention strategies.

PART A

Background literature

A1 Background data

A1.1 Prevalence of child sexual abuse in Australia and internationally

In a meta-analysis of global prevalence rates of sexual abuse, Stoltenborgh, van IJzendoorn, Euser, and Bakermans-Kranenburg (2011) reviewed 331 studies published between 1980 and 2008, with a collective total of nearly one million participants. However, there was no consistent definition of child sexual abuse, with many studies leaving the definition of sexual abuse up to the individual participant. The results of the meta-analysis were that 18% of females and 8% of males reported a history of child sexual abuse, with higher rates found in studies using self-reports than informant or crime statistics. The researchers were unsure if the higher numbers for females were because they were more likely to suffer child sexual abuse, or if males were less likely to report or disclose experiences of child sexual abuse, or if it was a combination of the two. What the meta-analysis did indicate was that it took much longer for males than females to disclose sexual abuse (often taking 10 years or longer to disclose). The authors also found that the prevalence of child sexual abuse for females was higher in individualistic cultures, such as Australia and New Zealand, than in collectivist cultures, which they suggest is potentially due to higher rates of disclosure in the former. The prevalence rates for Australia were 22% for females and 7% for males (in comparison, the world mean was calculated at 17% and 7% respectively).

Other research by Dunne, Purdie, Cook, Boyle, and Najman (2003) noted that in Australia the "overall impression is that risk of sexual abuse faced by children and adolescents has remained stable for males, and may have increased for females" (p. 142), suggesting that females were more likely to be victims of child sexual abuse than males in Australia. Dunne et al.'s research presented findings that penetrative abuse is three times higher for females than males (12% and 4% respectively), and that having a history of being sexually abused as a child was higher for females in general across all ages between 18 to 60 years than it was for males.

Nationally representative figures estimated by the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) (2006) put the proportion of Australians who had been sexually abused before the age of 15 years at 12% for females (956,6000) and 5% for males (337,400). Two-thirds of all child sexual abuse victims (68%) reported being sexually abused before the age of 11. More than 90% of female victims and 80% of male victims knew the perpetrator. However, during their life course females were more likely to have been sexually abused by family members in comparison to males:

- Fathers, step-fathers and other male relatives (including siblings) made up more than half (52%) of those who sexually abused girls, compared to approximately one-fifth (21%) of those who abused boys.
- Over a quarter of boys (27.3%) were sexually abused by "another known person"[1] compared to 11.0% of girls.
- Nearly 1 in 5 males under the age of 15 had been sexually abused by a stranger (18%), compared to fewer than 1 in 10 females aged under 15 years (9%).

1 "Other known person" includes acquaintance, neighbour, counsellor or psychologist or psychiatrist, ex-boyfriend or girlfriend, doctor, teacher, minister, priest or clergy and prison officer.

WEB.0061.001.0014

These figures suggest that boys are abused in a more diverse array of settings and relationships, compared to girls, for whom family relationships are the most common contexts. Findings from community-based prevalence studies conducted in Australia, with comprehensive measures on types of sexual abuse, found that males had prevalence rates of 1–8% for penetrative abuse, and 6–16% for non-penetrative abuse, while females had prevalence rates of 4–12% for penetrative abuse and 14–36% for non-penetrative abuse (Price-Robertson, 2012).

These figures suggest that:

- experiences of child sexual abuse are common for both females and males; and
- there may be different dynamics of victimisation experienced by boys compared to girls.

The following section considers these dynamics in more detail, with specific consideration given to relationships and contexts, and how perpetrators exploit victim vulnerabilities.

A1.2 Victimisation and perpetration: How perpetrators exploit victim vulnerabilities

For the past three decades, child sexual abuse prevention in Australia and in many parts of the world has focused on how to prevent victimisation of children rather than preventing perpetration. Putman (2003) undertook a review of the literature on risk factors for child sexual abuse and identified the following:

- Gender—Girls are at 2.5 to 3 times higher risk of child sexual abuse than boys. Approximately 22–29% of child sexual abuse victims are male.
- Age—The risk for sexual abuse rises with age. Over a third of victims are aged 12 or older, a quarter between the ages of 8 and 11.
- Disabilities—Having a physical disability is associated with increased risk, particularly where the child's perceived credibility is impaired (e.g., children with a visual, hearing or mental impairment). Factors for increased vulnerability include dependency, institutional care and communication difficulties, with boys being overrepresented in this cohort.
- Socio-economic status—This does not appear to have the same relationship with sexual abuse as it has with physical abuse; however, a higher number of cases reported to child protection services are from among those with low socio-economic status.
- Family—The absence of one or both parents, parental impairments (such as maternal illness or parental alcoholism), social isolation and punitive parenting increase risk.
- Intergenerational transmission—Putman (2003) argued that little is known about the intergenerational child sexual abuse due to research methodologies that collapse all forms of child abuse together. However, a review by Tarczon (2012) found that a maternal history of childhood sexual abuse is the single strongest predictor of sexual abuse in the next generation, with a daughter's risk of abuse being nearly four times greater when her mother reports a history of sexual abuse.

Davies and Jones (2013) studied 138 cases of young girls (average age 15 years) presenting to a forensic examination centre in the United Kingdom. Their research detailed the victim vulnerabilities that perpetrators look for when searching for their victims. Factors associated with victimisation were found to include:

- use of alcohol or drugs in the family or by the victim;
- having a physical disability;
- being cared for by someone other than parents;
- having a learning disability;
- having a history of sexual activity; and
- having a history of psychiatric support.

Research with perpetrators has found that child molesters target vulnerable children who exhibit certain traits, behaviours or characteristics that perpetrators feel they will be able to manipulate. Other perpetrators look for children with a disability or requiring care away from their immediate family.

A2 Reviewing the literature on child sexual abuse

A2.1 Approach taken in reviewing the literature

We first undertook a review of the national and international research literature published since 2000. There were two key research questions that drove this task:

- What range of experiences and behaviours constitute child sexual abuse and exploitation?
- What are the drivers, risk factors and correlates of child sexual abuse and exploitation across: (a) different types of perpetration; and (b) across different dimensions of a social-ecological framework?

The development of a picture of child sexual abuse based on empirical research was then used as a basis to consider the following question:

- What does this suggest about the key elements of holistic prevention and intervention responses?

To assist us in these tasks, we convened two professional expert forums: one with police/criminal justice professionals, and another with practitioners and researchers (see the Appendix for details). These forums highlighted a number of issues in how professionals think about and engage in the prevention and early intervention of child sexual abuse.

A2.2 Outcome of this approach in the scoping

For this literature review, peer-reviewed articles, books, grey literature and policy documents were identified and accessed to provide the basis for the research synthesis presented in Parts A and B of this report.

Overall, over 300 documents were identified, accessed and compiled into an EndNote reference library. The purpose of this library was to create an in-depth database of the most pertinent literature relating to child sexual abuse perpetration and primary prevention. This library does not contain policy documents or other grey literature, only peer-reviewed articles, unpublished PhD theses and books. Although the number of identified materials may appear high, after consulting the literature, there were gaps in the topics and themes covered by the materials (which were often acknowledged by the writers themselves) due to a lack of research in to child sexual abuse perpetration prevention. The majority of the literature compiled was also non-Australian, primarily from the United Kingdom, the United States, Ireland and Canada.

Databases

Numerous databases were searched for relevant peer-reviewed articles, including the EBSCO social sciences databases, PubMed, InformIT and ProQuest. Grey literature, books and policy documents were sourced through Google and Google Scholar searches of relevant keywords, outlined below. Searches were limited to material published after 2000, although some pre-2000 literature was included on a case-by-case basis; for example, Finkelhor's theory of child sexual abuse perpetration, which was published in 1984.

Keyword searches

An initial keyword search was undertaken with approximately 60 variations of identified keywords to form the basis of the literature that would be accessed for this literature review. The main keywords that were used initially included "primary prevention", "child sexual abuse", "CSA", "perpetration prevention", "risk factors", "protective factors", "types of offending", "public health" and "prevention strategies". Keywords were altered to reflect how the literature defined and wrote about sexual abuse and perpetration, and new searches were undertaken with the reworked keywords.

A2.3 Key issues in interpreting literature

There were several issues identified with interpreting the literature for this report. The key issues were:

- a lack of consensus on the definition of child sexual abuse;
- varying sample sizes;
- selection bias in perpetrator samples; and
- confusion in the classification of paedophiles, hebephiles and ephebophiles, as opposed to child molesters more generally.[2]

Definition of child sexual abuse

Across the reviewed literature there is much difference in how child sexual abuse is defined. Government policy documents tend to use the legal definitions of sexual abuse against a child, and these are often fragmented; for example, in Victorian criminal law, incest is separated out from persistent sexual abuse or indecent sexual abuse, and child sexual abuse can only be perpetrated against individuals under the age of 16 years. Australia's other states and territories also have different laws pertaining to the sexual abuse of children, and the age of the victim when the sexual abuse took place, and some may refer to child sexual abuse as incest or as sexual abuse.

Some of the academic literature (especially those published in peer-reviewed journals) put limitations on the definition of child sexual abuse; for example, that the perpetrator has to be at least 5 years older than the victim for it to meet the study criteria. Other definitions do not include non-contact behaviour (for example, online communications between victim and perpetrator), or non-penetrative actions. Therefore, it was important to not presume that the definition of child sexual abuse would be standard across the literature that was consulted.

Research reports conducted by larger institutions and organisations tended to have a broader definition of child sexual abuse, based on the public health model. The World Health Organization (WHO) (1999) definition of child sexual abuse is the most commonly used one in this area:

> The involvement of a child in sexual activity that he or she does not fully comprehend, is unable to give informed consent to, or for which the child is not developmentally prepared and cannot give consent, or that violates the laws or social taboos of society. Child sexual abuse is evidenced by this activity between a child and an adult or another child who by age or development is in a relationship of responsibility, trust or power, the activity being intended to gratify or satisfy the needs of the other person. This may include but is not limited to:
> - the inducement or coercion of a child to engage in any unlawful sexual activity;
> - the exploitative use of a child in prostitution or any unlawful sexual activity;
> - the exploitative use of a child in a pornographic performance and materials. (p. 62)

2 Paedophiles are individuals who are sexually attracted to pre-pubescent children. Hebephiles are those individuals who are attracted to children at the age of puberty (11–14 years). Ephebophiles are attracted to children in later adolescence. However, the term paedophile is often used in research literature, to describe all individuals sexually attracted to children under the age of 16 years. These are psychopathological classifications, while child molester or child sexual abuser is a socio-legal classification.

WEB.0061.001.0017

Other international organisations and reports into child sexual abuse (e.g., Averdijk, Muller-Johnson, & Eisher, 2012; ISPCAN, 2011; UBS Optimus Foundation, 2013) use the WHO definition of child sexual abuse where there may be competing legal definitions across states or countries, and because this definition also includes a description of potential perpetrators. This description of perpetrators defines the role that a perpetrator may have in the victim's life; however, it is not a prescriptive definition of perpetrators.

As part of our research, we also used the WHO definition when searching for literature, due to its broad nature. There was also no guidance from the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children 2009–2020 (COAG, 2009b) regarding a definition of child sexual abuse as it does not actually define what child sexual abuse is or who potential victims and perpetrators may be.

Sample sizes

The majority of the research on perpetrators of child sexual abuse has been conducted with small sample sizes, and this is especially true for the limited number of currently available Australian studies. The smallest was a sample of one (a case study), with several studies using samples of between 10 and 150 perpetrators.[3] Sample sizes are often small due to perpetrators wishing to prevent further incrimination for crimes they may not be in prison for, perpetrators continuing to express innocence even when incarcerated, prisoner release while the study is underway, and/or disqualification from the study due to other factors. In order to assess the quality of the studies and determine their usability for this report, we also consulted the methodology that was used by the researchers.

Perpetrator samples

Not only were perpetrator sample sizes small, but they also had some selection bias; that is, results may have been affected by the choice of participants, which in many child sexual abuse studies are often not random, and lead to conclusions being drawn that may not be generalisable for a broader population. The majority of the studies (with the exception of the Project Prevention Dunkelfeld research) were undertaken with convicted and currently imprisoned child sexual abuse perpetrators, thus limiting the conclusions that could be drawn. As several researchers have pointed out, incarcerated child sexual abuse offenders (who make up a small proportion of child sexual abuse perpetrators, as only a minority are charged, prosecuted and found guilty) may not be representative of child molesters and paedophiles in general.

In studies that were testing child sexual abuse prevention, the research was conducted with perpetrators who had a history of child sexual abuse perpetration. However, these studies did not take in to account the difference between risk factors for perpetration in the first instance, as opposed to those that lead to re-offending; therefore the studies tended to examine only risk factors for re-offending. Likewise, there were no studies with only perpetrators who were Indigenous, or from culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) backgrounds, thereby making the findings from the published research difficult to generalise across various Australian community populations.

Paedophiles vs child molesters

Feelgood and Schaefer (2011) argued that it is important to differentiate between paedophiles and detected child sex offenders. As they noted, paedophilia is a psychopathological classification, while child molester or child sexual abuser is a socio-legal classification, and the comparison of the two is fraught with difficulties. Their study examined offenders from the Prevention Project Dunkelfeld in Berlin (undetected, or "dark figure" offenders), who gain support and help in dealing with their feelings for children. Feelgood and Schaefer noted that the Dunkelfeld offender is very different from the "average" child sex offender who is incarcerated (see Box A1 on page 7).

3 Research based on victims of child sexual abuse tends to have bigger sample sizes.

Box A1: Characteristics of typical Dunkelfeld offenders

Dunkelfeld offenders:

- are well-educated (high numbers with postgraduate education) in comparison to detected offenders;
- have few or lower levels of psychiatric disturbance than detected offenders;
- are predominantly paedophiles as opposed to detected offenders, of whom only 25–50% can be classed as paedophiles;
- have male rather than female victims;
- are politically active; and
- are unlikely to have children.

See section A6.2 for more information about Project Dunkelfeld.

The Dunkelfeld offender is unlikely to be a parent but is more likely to fall in to the categories of authority figures, strangers, or online or adolescent abusers. Intra-familial child sexual abuse is considered unlikely due to their lack of sexual interest in adults (often preventing them from developing relationships with women with children or having families of their own) (Beier, Ahlers et al., 2009; Feelgood & Schaefer, 2011). The wide discrepancy in Dunkelfeld offender motivation, characteristics, behaviours and risk factors means that it is difficult to categorise their child sexual abuse into one simple category.

Therefore, there may be differences between paedophiles and child molesters more generally, and the two terms cannot be used interchangeably. Although some paedophiles are child molesters, not all child molesters are paedophiles, as later sections on theories of child sexual abuse perpetration will discuss. We will not differentiate between, for instance, paedophiles working as teachers who sexually abuse children and teachers who opportunistically begin to sexually abuse children under their care and supervision. Instead, the focus will be on the broader context and power relationship between the adult and child.

Key points on the distinction between paedophiles and child molesters are:

- the differences between the two groups affects the prevention programs that are implemented;
- it is important to look at the context in which the offending behaviour is occurring (e.g., authority and care settings vs online) as that will influence the effectiveness of prevention programs; and
- the two terms are not interchangeable—not all paedophiles are child molesters and vice versa.

A2.4 Key themes in the literature

Diversity of perpetrator characteristics

Both the literature and our engagement with stakeholders highlighted the diversity of relationships, contexts and perpetrator characteristics involved in child sexual abuse. A limited array of perpetration characteristics includes:

- adult male family members engaging in intra-familial abuse;
- adolescents (or even children) who engage in sexually concerning or abusive behaviour—within or beyond the family;
- teachers, guardians and other non-familial carers abusing children in their care;
- adult men targeting pubescent girls for sexual interactions; and
- the production and circulation of child exploitation material ("child pornography").

The literature to date has not brought these diverse circumstances together to consider how they differ; what, if anything, these dynamics have in common; and whether there are shared risk factors across them. Nor does the literature necessarily offer a way of grouping these circumstances. The consequence is that prevention strategies (e.g., teaching children protective behaviours or cybersafety programs) may be useful in targeting some aspects of child sexual abuse but not others.

We have attempted to do just this. By grouping the range of dynamics in child sexual abuse, we have identified two key dimensions: relationships and contexts or settings. These are not mutually exclusive, but are used to highlight the idea that some forms of child sexual abuse are made possible and shaped by the relationships between victims and perpetrators, while other forms of child sexual abuse are significantly shaped by the settings and contexts in which victims and perpetrators meet or engage. This is highlighted by the notion that sexual abuse is only possible at the convergence or interaction of two factors: the person (both victim and offender) and the situation (context or setting) (see Smallbone, Marshall, & Wortley, 2008).

Relationships

While undertaking this research, we identified the following relationships within which sexual abuse can be committed. These can be grouped in terms of being familial/kinship, non-familial but known relationships, or strangers with no prior relationship with the victim.

Child sexual abuse occurring within familial relationships is considered to be the most prevalent form of sexual abuse (with the exception of one or two researchers who disagree with the statistics). Within this category, though father–daughter sexual abuse is often thought of as the most prevalent form of incest, there is research that suggests that sibling sexual abuse occurs at a similar or higher rate. In fact, some studies suggest that up to 43% of intra-familial abuse is between siblings. Although victim–offender profiles of sibling abuse suggest a similar incidence rate as adult–child sexual abuse (92% of offenders are men, with 71% of victims being girls), there is also a high rate of male–male sibling sexual abuse (accounting for a quarter of offences) (Stathopoulos, 2012). According to Rosenman and Rodgers (2004), in their study of the PATH Through Life Project with over 7,000 participants around Canberra, only 1% of the survey population who experienced sexual abuse as children experienced parent–child sexual abuse ("parent" meaning the biological parent of the victimised child).[4] As with the ABS Personal Safety Survey and Stoltenberg et al.'s (2011) analysis, the PATH Through Life Project found that more females than males reported experiencing child sexual abuse.

Contexts and settings

There are specific contexts within which sexual abuse occurs, some within the relationships mentioned above. Child sexual abuse occurring within institutional settings (including residential, care, education, sporting or religious organisations) generally see higher rates of boys being victims of abuse than girls; however, girls are victims of teacher–student sexual abuse at a higher rate than boys (Knoll, 2010; Moulden, Firestone, Kingston, & Wexler, 2010; Sullivan & Beech, 2004). Generally, sexual abuse committed by educators occurs at a similar rate globally. In the American Association for University Women (2001) survey, 10% of students between 8th and 11th grade reported sexual abuse by a teacher, while a similar Israeli survey found that 8% of students reported sexual abuse perpetrated by a teacher (Knoll, 2010).

It is difficult to quantify online child sexual abuse perpetration rates, but there have been attempts to discover how many children are approached and sexually solicited online. One study of 10–17 year olds found that 20% had been approached and sexually solicited in the past year (Beech, Elliott, Birgden, & Findlater, 2008). The crossover between online consumption of child exploitation material and offline sexual abuse perpetration was estimated at between 15% and 55%.

4 The study only researched what forms of abuse during childhood were perpetrated against survey respondents at home. One per cent reported parental sexual abuse (including non-biological or parental authority figures). No other forms of sexual abuse (e.g., stranger-perpetrated or extra-familial relationships) were inquired about.

A3 Relationships and contexts of child sexual abuse perpetration (by adults)

A3.1 Intra-familial child sexual abuse

The literature indicates that intra-familial child sexual abuse is considerably different to other forms of child sexual abuse. Key findings indicate that for intra-familial abuse:

- girls are more likely than boys to be victims (although boys do make up a substantial number of sexual abuse victims within familial relationships);
- it tends to occur more frequently and over a longer period than child sexual abuse that is extra-familial or perpetrated in contexts and settings outside of the home;
- the sexual acts are more intrusive (e.g., more penetrative acts) and cause greater emotional and physical injury to the victim;
- it starts at an earlier age;
- it can occur with other forms of maltreatment (e.g., physical abuse); and
- often the abused children and their families are unknown to child protection authorities.

We have further broken down the research into abuse that occurs in biologically related families and blended families.

Biologically related families

Child sexual abuse occurring within biological familial relationships not only includes the biological father as the possible perpetrator but also siblings, mothers, grandparents, cousins, aunts and uncles.

Research into child sexual abuse committed purely within and across familial relationships is difficult to find as the majority of research targets currently incarcerated perpetrators, who often have victims from within their own families as well as unrelated children.

Familial relationships present many more opportunities for offending than other forms of relationships. Familial relationships also allow for sexual abuse to have an earlier onset, happen more frequently and for a longer duration than sexual abuse occurring within other perpetrator–victim relationships, and be more intrusive (e.g., more penetrative acts) (Fischer & McDonald, 1998; Smallbone & Wortley, 2004; Wakeling, Webster, Moulden, & Marshall, 2007). Intra-familial offenders progress more quickly to serious sexual acts than when sexual offences are committed in interpersonal relationships (on average in less than 30 days) (Fischer & McDonald, 1998).

Blended families

Although blended families are defined by some as families that contain one step-parent and a joint child between the biological parent and the step-parent, in this report we include families where there is only a step-parent and not necessarily any new offspring between the biological parent and the step-parent. Although many sexual abuse cases include fathers abusing their children, Black, Heyman, and Slep (2001) argued that intra-familial abuse is highest in single-parent families or "blended" families (e.g., biological parent and step-parent as main caregivers).

WEB.0061.001.0021

There are also data that children of mothers who were dissatisfied with their marriages were seven times more likely to be abused within the family than mothers who were satisfied with their marriages (Black et al., 2001). Care needs to be taken in interpreting such findings; there is a risk that it may be misinterpreted to suggest that family formation per se is a risk factor for child sexual abuse, and the research literature appears to be in disagreement over whether there is any greater risk of sexual abuse for children in blended families over biological families. Wakeling et al. (2007) found there was no distinct difference in blended versus biologically related families with regard to actual perpetration numbers. They also noted that one UK study found that while child sexual abuse is reported at a higher rate within blended families, on investigation, the biological parent had perpetrated the abuse prior to a change in family circumstances. McRee (2008), on the other hand, found that the presence of a non-related, non-biological adult increased the risk for physical and sexual abuse when compared to families with two biological parents or a single parent and no other adults. However, McRee's data were 20 years old at the time of their review. A Dutch study presented data that suggested that there is no difference in child sexual abuse rates between blended and biological families (4% for both groups) (van IJzendoorn, Euser, Prinzie, Juffer, & Bakermans-Kranenburg, 2009). Interestingly, this study found that adoption was a protective factor for child sexual abuse and other maltreatments (van IJzendoorn et al., 2009), and similar results have been recorded when surveying foster care situations (Euser, Alink, Tharner, van Ijezendoorn, & Bakerman-Kranenburg, 2013).

A3.2 Extra-familial child sexual abuse

Research into purely extra-familial abusers—neighbours or acquaintances of the victim's family—is limited due to the reasons outlined in the earlier section on literature limitations.

There are a limited number of researchers who believe that non-familial relationships account for the majority of child sexual abuse, and that strangers and authority figures victimise girls at a higher rate than boys (Bolen, 2000). This is contrary to other research in this field and is especially in opposition to research showing that boys are more likely to be victimised by strangers or within institutions than girls (Foster, Boyd, & O'Leary, 2012). However, Bolen did discuss in great detail risk factors for victimisation and how these are linked to the offender's age and relationship to the victim, as well as the location of the abuse. According to Bolen, children under the age of 13 years had a higher likelihood of being sexually abused by acquaintances of the family, family friends and neighbours than children over the age of 13 years. The majority of such abuse also took place within the victim's home or nearby. The abusers shared characteristics in age, though Bolen argued that girls between the ages of 10 and 13 years were more likely to be abused by an offender under the age of 20 years than were children under the age of 9 years.

A3.3 Authority and care contexts

People who sexually abuse children while in a position of authority and care include:

- educators (including administrators and other staff employed by schools);
- clergy;
- sports coaches;
- adults working in residential care facilities (e.g., for children with disabilities or children in transition between homes); and
- adults in any position of authority over children (e.g., in youth organisations).

Key findings from the literature include that:

- child sexual abuse in these contexts is often due to a combination of the individual's psychology as well as the opportunities afforded by the situation;
- perpetrators in these contexts are often difficult to screen for due to a lack of previous criminal convictions and a generally solid background;
- boys are victimised at a greater rate than girls;

WEB.0061.001.0022

- grooming is often employed to allow access to children without supervision from colleagues, superiors or family members of the victims; and
- abuse in authority and care settings is often shorter in duration, with fewer penetrative acts.

All children are involved with adult authority figures, whether through their school education, religious instruction, being coached as part of extracurricular sporting activities, or any other numerous contexts where an adult who is not the child's parent or carer is responsible for the safety of the child. As such, the prevalence of child sexual abuse within authority and care contexts is estimated to be much higher than stranger-perpetrated and online child sexual abuse. There are numerous inquiries and commissions undertaking extensive work in discovering cases of historical child sexual abuse in non-government institutions, dating from as far back as the 1920s through to today; for example, the UN Committee on the Rights of Children, the Commission to Inquire into Child Abuse (Ryan Commission) in Ireland, the current Northern Ireland Historical Institutional Abuse Inquiry, and the current Australian Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. Therefore, part of this section discusses clergy-perpetrated child sexual abuse. Due to the amount of time that children spend during their youth in educational settings, this section also presents the literature about perpetration by teachers and educators.

Non-government institutions: Clergy-perpetrated abuse

Research into clergy-perpetrated abuse indicates that environments considered traditionally "safe" and where adults should be trusted (i.e, the home, church or school) are the locations for the majority of the abuse, with the victims' and priests' homes being the primary sites. Terry (2008) concluded that clergy who sexually abuse are not dissimilar to other child sexual abuse perpetrators: they often commit a variety of sexual and non-sexual offences, have a late onset of deviant behaviour, use similar grooming techniques as non-clergy, and only a few "specialise" in a particular victim type. We note that other research suggests that a number of child sexual abuse offenders across all contexts have early onset of these behaviours.

It is widely published that children in institutional settings (where they are subject to authority and liable to abuse by those in possession of authority) are at greater risk of all forms of abuse than their non-institutionalised counterparts (Green, 2001). However, there has not been a wealth of literature on the specific tactics engaged to groom and enact abuse in these settings. Green described and analysed the power and control exerted not just upon children but upon "non-abusive staff to try and maintain their allegiance or compliance, or alternatively to ensure they are too fearful and demoralized to complain" (p. 6). Particular organisational features can render staff and children vulnerable to exploitation, such as the "enclosed nature of the settings", staff "inability and reluctance to deal with sexuality/sexual abuse issues and the effect of gendered, homophobic belief systems on how both staff and children construe and respond to sexuality and sexual abuse issues" (Green, 2001, p. 6).

Further, the data indicate that boys are also more likely to be the victims of clergy-perpetrated child sexual abuse (81% boys to 19% girls) (Terry, 2008). These data also show that there is a close relationship between the family and the priest, and many victims are enticed through gifts, alcohol, drugs and other benefits, though some are threatened, using psychological or spiritual rather than physical abuse.

The so-called John Jay Report (John Jay College of Criminal Justice, 2004) examined reports made by some 10,667 individuals of clerical sexual abuse within the Catholic Church in the US. The study investigated some of the specific risk factors that encompass child sexual offending and found that, as per "the general population, child sex abuse in the Catholic Church appears to be committed by men close to the children they allegedly abuse" (p. 68). Grooming (such as buying gifts for victims and using social events as occasions for abuse) was found to be a common method of procuring victims and the abuse often occurred in the home of the alleged abuser or victim.

Regarding the profile of the abuser, the John Jay report (2004) found that allegations were first made at the time the priests were 35 years of age or younger. It further reported that fewer than 7% of the priests were reported to have experienced physical, sexual or emotional abuse as children. Among the accused priests in the study (n = 4,392), 19% were classified as having an alcohol or substance abuse problem, but only 9% used drugs or alcohol during the alleged instances of abuse.

Educational settings

Educational settings are taken to mean schools, including after-school care, at kindergarten, primary and secondary levels. Educators can mean teachers, teachers' aides, and anyone else employed by schools to either teach or care for students. Although the majority of the research into educators is focused on teachers as perpetrators, much of the research also considers administrators at schools as educators.

Moulden et al. (2010) cited a number of differences in characteristics between "professional perpetrators" and other sex offenders, relating to both psychological state and offence planning. Professional perpetrators are defined by Sullivan and Beech (2002) as perpetrators who "use either institutions or organisations within which they work to target and abuse children" (p. 153). Australian organisation Child Wise (2013) defines professional perpetrators as "those considered hardened paedophiles, the ones that employ far more sophisticated techniques to manipulate their organisational settings and their victims" (p. 50). While this latter definition is an extension of Sullivan and Beech's definition, it illustrates how professional perpetrators can operate in a care or education setting. However, Child Wise refers to these perpetrators as paedophiles, even though there is no evidence to suggest that child sexual abuse perpetrated in care and authority or education settings is committed exclusively by paedophiles (as the literature below outlines).

Moulden et al.'s (2010) overview of the literature identified characteristics that are common to this cohort: "adult, single, male, often university educated, minimal substance abuse issues, generally prosocial attitudes, virtually no prior sexual or even criminal offenses, and few psychological deficits" (p. 404). Additionally, they noted that there is a discrepancy in the literature between research that suggests "professional perpetrators are controlling and manipulative" and research indicating these "offenders are socially inadequate" (p. 406). Moulden et al. drew upon Ward's Pathways Model (see section A5.2) to describe the majority of offenders as following a Self-Regulation Model, which includes an offence pathway characterised by "explicit planning (e.g., grooming) rather than one that was opportunistic in nature" (p. 405).

Knoll's (2010) research showed how sexual abuse perpetrated by teachers against their charges differs from child sexual abuse perpetrated in other care, supervision and authority contexts. Both female and male teachers can be offenders, although female teachers' actions have traditionally been seen in a more favourable light by communities and by the criminal justice system, being considered either "well-meaning" or "harmless initiation" (see also Stathopoulos, 2014). Two distinct categories of teachers and victims were identified by Knoll in his research:

- victims younger than 7th grade (generally under the age of 12); and
- victims in late middle or high school (generally between the ages of 14-17).

This type of crime, according to Knoll (2010), is less premeditated and it is possible that it is "bad judgement" on the part of the teacher that they begin a sexual relationship with their student (especially in cases where the student is aged 16 years or above). Regardless of whether or not it is bad judgement on the teacher's part, professional perpetrators often target vulnerable or marginalised students, who feel gratified by the extra attention.

Teachers who target the first group of children are generally considered to be high achievers, recognised with awards for their teaching efforts. When allegations arise, often parents and administrators are unwilling to believe the victim and there is a tendency to ignore or dismiss allegations. The teachers accomplish this by grooming not only their victims but also the families of the victims, and their colleagues or superiors.

The grooming techniques used by educators were also identified by Knoll (2010). These techniques include:

- selecting victims based on the compliance of the student and the likelihood of secrecy;
- finding students who can be easily controlled and are estranged from their parents;
- giving a student special attention, support or rewards;
- slowly introducing the student to sexual discourse;

- increasing touching and physical contact; and
- involving the parents in the grooming process to gain their trust and enable the teacher or educator to take the child out of the parent's supervision for overnight or extended trips.

The research data in to teachers and educators, coupled with research into clergy as perpetrators of child sexual abuse, suggest that professional perpetrators do not have the same or even similar risk factors to offending as those within familial or other extra-familial relationships. The research indicates that this cohort may be the most difficult to reach with child sexual abuse prevention techniques that do not originate from within their own organisations.

Care and other settings

Research indicates that when children are sexually abused in care and broader organisational settings there are often other forms of abuse also being perpetrated against the victim (Irenyi, Bromfield, Beyer, & Higgins, 2006). Although there have been numerous Australian inquiries into the maltreatment and abuse of children in care and out-of-home residences, the issue of child sexual abuse in these scenarios has not been solved.

As with other forms of child sexual abuse, males have been overwhelmingly noted as the abusers in care and organisational settings. Offenders are also more likely to be between the ages of 20 and 50 years of age, as with other forms of child sexual abuse in extra-familial and authority and care settings. Research literature suggests that these types of offenders may have alcohol and drug problems—often not enough to have been investigated by authorities, but enough to have been screened for in pre-employment interviews (Irenyi et al., 2006)—or physical impairments that may be associated with mood swings, aggressiveness, depressiveness or cognitive dysfunction, such as diabetes or thyroid conditions (Langevin & Watson, 1996, as cited in Irenyi et al., 2006). As with child sexual abusers in religious and educational settings, perpetrators in organisational settings manipulate situations to their benefit and look for opportunities to offend; therefore, it is best to target these perpetrators using situational crime prevention approaches (see section A5.3 for more information).

A3.4 Indigenous and CALD communities

Indigenous communities

It is clear across the literature that experiencing multiple disadvantages—such as a combination of poverty, lack of family cohesion, broader family/community violence and/or parental substance misuse—can be associated with child sexual abuse. Indigenous communities face multiple issues and disadvantages. A particular context of offending that has been more widely reported in Australian Indigenous communities is not simply adult child sex offending, but "problematic sexual behaviours in children", a matter afforded detailed exploration by the Australian Crime Commission (O'Brien, 2008). This review of the literature cited general agreement among researchers that, unlike adult–child sex offending, the offending behaviour of children and young people is not driven by a "pre-existing sexual predilection for children", but rather the context in which the abuse occurs, namely the "familial, social, cultural, economic, educational and material aspects of the child's life" (p. 12). Another review by Staiger (2005) for the Australian Childhood Foundation (ACF) found that the contextual aspects documented by the literature give rise to children's sexually abusive behaviours. These contextual aspects have been found to be dominant in many Indigenous communities and highly prevalent among the Indigenous children with problem sexual behaviours. Staiger and her colleagues noted specifically the ACF's observation that the children who were referred to them with problem sexual behaviours were more likely to be experiencing:

- experiences of trauma, loss and alienation;
- physical and/or sexual abuse;
- witnessing incidents of family violence;
- illicit drug use or alcohol abuse by parents or caregivers (Staiger, Kambouropoulos, Evertsz, Mitchell, & Tucci, 2005, as cited in O'Brien, 2008, p. 12).

WEB.0061.001.0025

Each of these aspects was consistently established by the literature as being precursors to problem sexual behaviours in children. A number of reports documenting risk factors facing Indigenous communities have cited these aspects as "often characteristic of life" in some places (O'Brien, 2008, p. 12).

Adolescent sexual abuse perpetration is not the only form of sexual abuse that takes place in Indigenous communities. Indigenous adults often present as perpetrators, but their risk factors for offending against children sexually may be different to other offenders. In section A4.1 we present the risk factors associated with adult child sexual abuse offending in Indigenous kinship relationships.

CALD communities

Unfortunately, current literature into child sexual abuse in CALD communities is sparse. In examining the number and type of child abuse cases referred to forensic examination, Davies and Jones (2013) noted that the majority of perpetrators in reported cases were Caucasian males. This led the researchers to the conclusion that CALD communities "may hold a large amount of unreported cases" (p. 146). Therefore, it has been difficult to build a detailed picture of child sexual abuse perpetration in CALD communities. However, one risk factor would certainly be traditional gender values; of increasing concern is the knowledge that girls from CALD backgrounds raised in Western societies are being forced into marriages in their parents' homelands (Forced Marriage Unit, 2012). We have not consulted any literature on this issue as it is not traditionally defined in research literature as child sexual abuse. However, we would be interested in exploring whether Australian legislation and criminal justice authorities consider forced marriages to be a part of the definition of child sexual abuse.

A3.5 Female offenders

As mentioned in the earlier section about child sexual abuse perpetrated in education settings, women do perpetrate such abuse; however, it is culturally not met with the same disapproval as for male teachers who abuse children. Women sexually abuse children on a much smaller scale and for very different reasons than men. Prevalence data suggest that between 3% and 10% of child sexual abuse is committed by women (Denov, 2003; Peter, 2009), most often those who have children under their care and supervision (as teachers or sports coaches, for instance), who are young (between 16 and 25 years) and emotionally immature, or who have low education or a mental illness (Gannon & Alleyne, 2013; Knoll, 2010).

Generally the literature in to female offenders who are teachers indicates that they are well-educated, can and regularly do have age-appropriate relationships, choose victims who are generally adolescents, and groom their victims with gifts, money and attention (Gannon & Alleyne, 2013; Knoll, 2010). This is unlike other female offenders, who are more likely to have a history of domestic and sexual abuse, a mental illness, low education, and have pre-teen victims; are themselves young (under the age of 25); use force to sexually abuse; and abuse their victims in a non-education care setting, such as in a child care facility or in the victim's home while babysitting (Knoll, 2010; Peter, 2009).

In this report, we have not included women child sexual abusers who are teachers or in positions of authority and care within the category of female offenders. This group are instead discussed alongside male child sexual abuse perpetrators, in section A4.2.

Due to the low prevalence rates for female child sexual abuse perpetrators, there is not a lot of research on them, nor on the treatment and recidivism prevention work being undertaken with incarcerated female offenders. However, Bader, Welsh, and Scalora (2010) found that 18% of female perpetrators re-offend. Clements, Dawson, and das Nair (2014) concluded in their study that professionals working on treating female perpetrators often did not perceive female child sexual abuse to be as serious or harmful as that perpetrated by males, even though the victims themselves reported the same health and psychological wellbeing issues. This perception has led to courts giving more lenient sentences to female perpetrators than their male counterparts; Australian courts often respond similarly (Angelides, 2008, 2010; Deering & David, 2009).

A3.6 Stranger-perpetrated child sexual abuse

Contact child sexual abuse

There is limited research on stranger contact offending. The research that is available has suggested that this form of child sexual abuse is generally more violent than other forms of child sexual abuse and more likely to result in the death of the child (Rebocho & Gonçalves, 2012). Rebocho and Gonçalves sampled and compared 216 incarcerated Portuguese men who had either sexually abused a child under the age of 13 years, or raped someone over the age of 14 years. The age of consent in Portugal is 14 years. In most other jurisdictions around Australia, the USA and the UK the age of consent is 16 years, and a perpetrator sexually abusing a 14-year-old child would be classified as a child molester not a rapist. According to Rebocho and Gonçalves, the rapists are labelled "hunters" or "poachers" while the child molesters were called "trollers" or "trappers". Table A1 offers an outline of how these offenders differ from each other.

Table A1: Typology of contact child sexual abuse offenders

Manipulative/child molesters (known to victim)		Coercive/rapists (strangers)

Online child sexual abuse

Online child sexual abuse is of growing concern to police and investigators, internationally as well as in Australia. This form of perpetration can include not only grooming children in a virtual environment and accessing child exploitation material, but also producing and distributing exploitation material without necessarily having a sexual interest in children. The true extent of online perpetration is currently not known. However, when surveying US children aged between 10 and 17 years, 20% said they had been approached and sexually solicited online (Beech et al., 2008). Some of the issues identified by Beech et al. were a lack of clear definitions worldwide about what qualifies as child pornography and image dissemination. The International Centre for Missing and Exploited Children (2013) has developed a model against which to review international legislation. Australia meets the model criteria, including having legislation that:

- specifically relates to the illegality of child pornography;
- defines child pornography;
- criminalises child pornography, regardless of whether there is an intent to distribute it;
- requires Internet service providers to report suspected child pornography to law enforcement agencies;
- punishes attempted crimes;
- includes grooming provisions; and
- ensures criminal penalties for parents or guardians who participate in the exploitation of their child for pornography production.

WEB.0061.001.0027

Currently, in some jurisdictions outside of Australia, Beech et al. (2008) noted that online child sexual abuse is seen as being less harmful than traditional forms of child sexual abuse, as it does not involve physical contact. They also noted that the crossover from the consumption of child exploitative material to committing contact child sexual abuse is high: between 15% and 55% of all perpetrators will cross over at some point. Krone (2004) noted that once a paedophile makes contact with a paedophile network, the seriousness of their offence increases. Although the true extent of online child sexual abuse may be difficult to discover, and at first instance may be considered to be less harmful than contact offending, online abuse is not harmless, passive nor victim-free.

Online child sexual abuse behaviours are often active (e.g., not just searching for and viewing child exploitation material), and perpetrators will seek out contact with minors. Online communication facilitates contact with a large number of children, allows for the initiation and continuation of grooming, allows the perpetrator to detach from the behaviour in which they are partaking; and helps them to remain anonymous in a way that is not otherwise possible. Perpetrators can blackmail their victims to provide further sexual favours by capturing non-consensual images and distributing or threatening to distribute them widely (Bluett-Boyd, Fileborn, Quadara, & Moore, 2013). There have been attempts to create a typology of Internet offenders, with Krone's (2004) typologies scale being widely accepted by researchers. Krone conceptualised Internet offenders in a hierarchy to explain how an individual can go from having no sexual interest in children to being a serious sexual offender. In order, these types are:

- the browser, who inadvertently comes across child sexual abuse material and saves it;
- the private fantasy creator, who uses digital images to create material for their personal use;
- the trawler, who actively seeks images on a non-secure browser and through open keyword searches;
- the non-secure collector, who collects material through peer-to-peer networks;
- the secure collector, who actively seeks material, but only through secure networks;
- the groomer, who cultivates online relationships;
- the physical abuser, who sexually abuses children to whom they were originally introduced online (i.e., contact offending);
- the producer, who records their own abuse or the abuse of others; and
- the distributor, who distributes to any of the above levels but may not take any interest in child sexual abuse for their own gratification.

One of the key questions arising from the viewing, collection and distribution of child pornography is the likelihood of the user actively sexually assaulting the child. Bourke and Hernandez (2009) examined two groups: online offenders with no known child sex offence history and those with a recorded child sex offence history. Their findings demonstrate that those who were merely classified as viewers or collectors, without any known prior child sex offence history, "were significantly more likely than not to [also] have sexually abused a child via a hands-on act" (p. 183) and "that the offenders who abused children were likely to have offended against multiple victims, and that the incidence of 'crossover' by gender and age is high" (p. 191).

Their findings stand somewhat in contrast to a 2009 study by Swiss researchers (Endrass et al., 2009), who examined the "recidivism rates for hands-on [active] and hands-off [passive] sex offenses in a sample of [once incarcerated] child pornography users using a 6 year follow-up design" (Background section, para. 1). That study concluded that for 52% of the 231 convicted child pornography offenders in the sample (who had no previous convictions), the chance of recidivism and committing "hands-on" sexual abuse was low, given the right treatment.

However, the weight of research appears to lend more support to the findings of Bourke and Hernandez (2009). For example, Canadian research by Kingston, Federoff, Firestone, Curry, and Bradford (2008), following 15-year recidivism rates of the 341 child pornography offenders analysed (albeit only a criminally convicted cohort), found that "after controlling for general and specific risk factors for sexual aggression, pornography added significantly to the prediction of recidivism" (p. 341).

Bourke and Hernandez (2009) also explored in some depth the motivating factors behind online offending and their similarities to the issues raised above in relation to individual causal motivations to offend. The authors referred specifically to the "thinking errors" that are present in this category of offenders:

> A particular challenge for treatment practitioners relates to the numerous cognitive distortions evidenced by child pornography offenders, and the need to discern these thinking errors from legitimate causal or contributing explanations for their behaviour. While the phenomenon of cognitive distortions has been the subject of considerable research, considerably less is known about thinking errors utilised by child pornography offenders. (p. 184)

Bourke and Hernandez (2009) acknowledged the research of Taylor and Quayle (2003), which showed that cognitive distortions and fantasy play an important role in the behaviour of child pornography offenders. However, Bourke and Hernandez augmented this with their view that the accompanying "thinking errors" facilitated the behaviour by minimising the offender's guilt and enabling "disowning" behaviours. They saw this evasion and avoidance of responsibility as a key part of the online offending process. The authors nonetheless lamented the fact that very little is still known about online child pornography offenders:

> While it is indisputable that certain factors (e.g., psychiatric disorders, developmental and psychological vulnerabilities) influence criminality, the influence of these factors on child pornography offenders is unknown. Based on our clinical observations, however, only a very small minority of offenders (e.g., psychopaths) who commit child pornography crimes are motivated by non-sexually deviant interests; rather, most are motivated by a pre-existing sexual interest in minors. (pp. 184–185)

A3.7 Adolescents and children

Peer-to-peer sexual assault vs child sexual abuse

The research literature has been unclear as to how to differentiate between sexual assault by children and adolescents against their age-peers, and the sexual abuse of younger children or developmentally challenged children by older children and adolescents. Some literature has tested the efficacy of relationship programs for teens by defining peer abuse as child sexual abuse, while others have suggested that peer sexual assaults are the effect of child sexual abuse victimisation in the history of the offending adolescent. In this report, we have distinguished between peer-to-peer sexual assault or harassment (e.g., "sexting", harassment or date-rape/acquaintance-rape) from child sexual abuse, where the focus is on the sexual gratification of an older offender through the abuse of a child. The dynamics of the two crimes are also different, have different risk factors and ages of onset, and may be linked to factors other than a history of child sexual abuse or neglect and maltreatment.

Sibling sexual abuse

Children and adolescents who offend against their siblings have often been victims of neglect, or have experienced domestic violence and poor family cohesion. Living in a highly sexualised environment (not necessarily with child exploitation material, but usually with adult pornography) where they can view pornography or adult members of the family partaking openly in sexual behaviour can also be a risk factor for sibling sexual abuse. The child or adolescent who is presenting with problematic sexual behaviours or sexually abusive behaviours may also exhibit other violent behaviours; for example, bullying behaviour in school. Stathopoulos (2012) noted that certain family environments could have a negative effect on a child's sexual development, causing them to behave in a sexually inappropriate manner towards siblings. Early exposure to pornography can also lead children to copy behaviours they have witnessed with their siblings (Stathopoulos, 2012). Research is extremely limited on sibling sexual abuse, even though prevalence data indicate that up to 40% of abuse is sibling sexual abuse (Stathopoulos, 2012). It is often not separated from other forms of intra-familial abuse or investigated separately.

WEB.0061.001.0029

Non-sibling sexual abuse

Adolescent sexual abuse perpetration may have different drivers when compared to adult perpetration, as section A4.2 illustrates. Boys have been found to be more likely to perpetrate sexual harassment when they are being bullied or experiencing family victimisation.[5] Girls are more likely than boys to experience sexual abuse at home and at school, while boys are more than twice as likely to sexually harass others compared to girls from a similar background to the boys (Fineran & Bolen, 2006).

Adolescent males perpetrate at higher rates than females. Nearly one in ten youths (9%) have reported perpetrating some form of sexual violence in their lifetimes (Ybarra & Mitchell, 2013). The majority of teen perpetrators first begin engaging in sexually abusive behaviours after the age of 15 years. Male and female perpetrators were only equally represented at the ages of 18 or 19 years (48% females, 52% males). Ybarra and Mitchell also found that boys were more likely to engage in abusive behaviour against younger children, whereas girls were more likely to do so against older children/adolescents.

In a meta-analysis of 59 studies that compared incarcerated adolescent child sexual abuse perpetrators and other incarcerated, but non-sexual offending, adolescents, Seto and Lalumiere (2010) found that adolescents who engage in sexually abusive behaviour towards children/young people:

- were slightly older than adolescents with non-sex offences when they had first contact with the criminal justice system;
- had no major differences in comparison to non-sex offenders regarding antisocial tendencies, which indicates that antisocial behaviour is not a risk factor for young people to sexually abuse;
- had a lower likelihood of a substance abuse problem than non-sex offenders;
- were more likely themselves to have been a victim of child sexual abuse (on average, 46% reported a history of child sexual abuse, compared to 16% of non-sex offenders);
- were more likely to have experienced physical abuse than non-sex offenders;
- were more likely to have witnessed or been present when sexual or non-sexual violence was occurring in the family; and
- had experienced a higher prevalence of emotional abuse or neglect than non-sex offenders.

Children under the age of 10 years may often engage in problem sexual behaviours. Children aged 14 years and under can display sexually abusive behaviours that may involve the sexual abuse of children younger than them, children who are older but lack resilience, or children with mental impairments. As children under the age of 14 cannot be charged with any crime in most Australian jurisdictions, those who have been identified as partaking in these behaviours are usually offered treatment. For example, in Victoria, this is managed through Therapeutic Treatment Orders in the Children's Court.

A3.8 Summary: Common behaviours and strategies in perpetrating child sexual abuse

Not only are there common risk factors that increase the likelihood of perpetration (and common factors that do not influence risk to a measurable extent), there were also common behaviours identified. Table A2 (on page 19) outlines the nature of the acts often perpetrated against children, what type of force is used in eliciting the desired outcomes, and in which contexts enticements and secret-keeping are generally seen. These data do not imply that these behaviours are only seen in these particular contexts, but rather that the majority of researchers agree that this is where they are more likely to be found; however, there are always exceptions.

5 The authors use "sexual harassment" to define the children's sexually abusive behaviour. This terminology is more commonly used to describe unwanted sexual behaviour in workplaces, but the behaviour described by the researchers fits our definition of child sexual abuse.

The majority of child sexual abuse occurs within familiar—and familial—relationships.[6] As such, it tends to be characterised by:

- prolonged or repeated victimisation;
- secrecy; and
- delayed disclosure.[7]

Perpetrators expend significant effort in identifying and building a connection with a potential victim, and use a range of grooming strategies to do so,[8] such as:

- identifying the most vulnerable child, such as those who are picked on by their siblings, are struggling at school, or are lonely (Craven, Brown, & Gilchrist, 2007);
- identifying vulnerable or receptive families, such as a single mother with primary care for her children (Leberg, 1997; van Dam, 2006);
- isolating the child from other children or their guardian; for example, by sending other siblings to bed early, or encouraging the child's mother to take up activities outside the home;
- conferring a "special status" on the child, such as by making them feel more adult or worldly (Herman, 1992);

6 Nationally representative statistics show that approximately 90% of girls and 80% of boys have known the perpetrator of the abuse, with girls more likely to have been sexually abused by family members. Fathers, step-fathers and other male relatives (including siblings) made up more than half of perpetrators against females (52%), and approximately one-fifth of perpetrators against boys (21%) (ABS, 2006; see also Mouzos & Makkai, 2004).

7 On these characteristics, see Finkelhor (1986), Herman (1992), and Smallbone & Wortley (2001).

8 Reviewing the research on grooming, Craven, Brown, & Gilchrist (2006) provided the following definition: "A process by which a person prepares a child, significant adults and the environment for the abuse of this child. Specific goals include gaining access to the child, gaining the child's compliance and maintaining the child's secrecy to avoid disclosure" (p. 297).

WEB.0061.001.0031

- gradually desensitising the child to sexual touch (Smallbone & Wortley, 2001); and
- becoming "indispensible" to significant adults in the child's life; for example, by offering to look after the child or children, or doing tasks that parents and teachers have little time for, which puts them in a position of trust (Craven et al., 2007).

These strategies demonstrate long-term planning (whether conscious or not), such that perpetrators gain "insider status" and its benefits (e.g., trust, authority and respect) long before they start offending (van Dam, 2006). These benefits are especially amplified in contexts of intra-familial sexual abuse.

Along with these varied strategies to create opportunities for offending, perpetrators may use bribes, threats, coercion, denial and blackmail to continue the offending and to ensure victims' compliance and silence. This can take the form of creating secrets the child must keep, thus rendering them complicit or making them co-conspirators in their abuse (Paine & Hansen, 2002); demonstrating the perpetrator's potential for violence by harming others; threatening that the family will break down or the non-offending parent will be upset if the child discloses; or making the child feel responsible for not stopping the abuse (Craven et al., 2006, 2007).

As Table A2 illustrates, there are certain behaviours that are very specific to sexual abuse perpetrated within particular contexts; for example, both victims and perpetrators of sexual abuse within religious settings have often reported experiencing spiritual coercion. Other behaviours appear across multiple forms of child sexual abuse; for example, the use of emotional force or emotional blackmail is commonly seen in sexual abuse within familial and interpersonal relationships, and also in online and institutional/educational settings. Certain behaviours, such as the use of physical force, are seen in specific contexts and relationships due to the dynamic between the victim and perpetrator; in interpersonal relationships the perpetrator may only have a limited amount of time alone with the victim and therefore may resort to threats of or actual physical force to gain the victim's compliance. This is not as much of an issue for sexual abuse within familial relationships, where the perpetrator is more likely to have extended periods alone with the victim.

A4 Mapping risk factors

A4.1 Research results on perpetration risk factors

In this section we present the risk factors for offending across the identified relationships and contexts. Before doing so, it is useful to consider what factors have been associated with child sexual abuse overall. These differ from those identified for child maltreatment more generally (see Box A2).

Box A2: Risk factors associated with child maltreatment

- Individual risk factors:
  - parents' lack of understanding of children's needs, child development and parenting skills;
  - parents' history of child maltreatment in family of origin;
  - substance abuse and/or mental health issues, including depression in the family;
  - parental characteristics, such as young age, low education, single parenthood, large number of dependent children, and low income;
  - non-biological, transient caregivers in the home (e.g., mother's male partner);
  - parental thoughts and emotions that tend to support or justify maltreatment behaviours.
- Family risk factors:
  - social isolation;
  - family disorganisation, dissolution, and violence, including intimate partner violence; and
  - parenting stress, poor parent–child relationships, and negative interactions.
- Community risk factors:
  - community violence;
  - concentrated neighbourhood disadvantage (e.g., high poverty and residential instability, high unemployment rates, and high density of alcohol outlets), and poor social connections.

Source: Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (2014)

For instance, while there is a crossover with child maltreatment risk factors, the literature on adult perpetrators of child sexual abuse also emphasises factors such as:

- their history of violence and delinquency;
- their maladaptive sexual behaviours, such as deviant sexual fantasies;
- social deficits, such as lack of empathy and social skills deficits; and
- attitudinal and cognitive variables, such as their attitudes towards rape, the "sexual precociousness of children" and cognitive rationalisations (Whitaker et al., 2008).

Indeed, in their meta-analysis of 89 studies of sex offender risk factors, Whitaker and colleagues (2008) found that child sex offenders were more likely than non-offenders to have poorer family functioning, more harsh discipline, poor attachment and generally worse functioning in their family of origin. Child sex offenders also demonstrated:

WEB.0061.001.0033

- poorer social connectedness to others (e.g., loneliness, poor social skills);
- significantly higher sexual externalising problems;[9]
- higher sex drive and preoccupation with sex;
- more deviant sexual interests;
- greater sexualised coping;
- attitudes that are more tolerant of adult–child sex; and
- cognition that minimises perpetrator culpability.

On most of these measures, there were no significant differences between child and adult sex offenders. Whitaker et al. (2008) concluded that while child sex offenders are different from non-offenders, they are not different from adult sex offenders. In other words, while both child and adult sex offenders share a number of risk factors with general (non-sexual) offenders, the point of difference relates to the sexual component of their behaviour. This is echoed in other research on the attitudes of child sex offenders, which finds that their beliefs and attitudes in relation to children as sexual objects; general preoccupation with sex; and beliefs about entitlement, authority or control distinguish them from a range of other offenders (Helmus, Hanson, Babchishin, & Mann, 2013; Marziano, Ward, Beech, & Pattison, 2006; Ward & Keenan, 1999).

The following sections consider risk factors associated with particular forms of child sexual abuse. Box A3 provides definitions of the terms that are used in the literature we reviewed.

Box A3: Definitions of perpetrator risk factor terms

Perpetrator risk factors

Personal characteristics

Biologically unrelated male: A well-documented risk factor for certain forms of child sexual abuse is the presence of a biologically unrelated male. In authority, care and extra-familial relationships this can mean a male who has unrestricted access to a child due to their authority status (e.g., a teacher or priest) or by being considered trustworthy by the family (e.g., a neighbour). Within a familial relationship, the male can be an uncle, step-father, de facto or boyfriend to the mother who is biologically unrelated to the child. This risk factor has been calculated from victim response surveys and other records where the offender's relationship to the victim is detailed. In cases of online perpetration, research indicates that males unknown to the victim are the main offenders.

Young: Generally means the perpetrator is under the age of 25 years, although for peer and sibling abuse it means under 18 years.

Psychological deficits: The perpetrator has a low IQ or is cognitively impaired.

Traditional gender values: Generally understood to be values that place women and children in an inferior position to the male offender's wants and needs. It can mean also acting on these held values; for example, through preventing a female partner from controlling her own finances, expecting children to be deferential to the offender's authority within the family, etc.

Interest in child exploitation material: The offender has accessed and used such material.

Computer savvy: The perpetrator is a very competent user of information technologies. They can upload material, connect with other users, encrypt their uploads and downloads, can possibly access a "darknet" (anonymous online file sharing service), and find ways of evading detection on the Internet.

9 No definition or explanation of what this refers to is provided in Whitaker et al.'s (2008) study.

Substance misuse: When perpetrators currently or at the time of the child sexual abuse have alcohol or other substance abuse issues.

Social characteristics

Highly sexualised environment: A highly sexualised environment for adult perpetrators is usually defined as one where there is high pornography consumption and a high degree of sexual discourse between adults, and where the children are often exposed to this behaviour. It does not necessarily mean creating or accessing child exploitation material. For peer and sibling offenders it often means they have witnessed sexual acts between adults in their home, or have been exposed to high levels of pornography. It has been measured from self-reports, or from online offenders, generally from details taken about their search and browsing histories prior to their arrest.

Social isolation: The offender has not had close or significant friendships and relationships in their childhood or early adulthood.

Low socio-economic status: The perpetrator may be unemployed, or have low-level employment.

Low education: When the perpetrator has education only up to high school graduation level.

Childhood history and past behaviours

Child sexual abuse history: If the perpetrator was a victim of child sexual abuse when a child, they are more likely to become a child sexual abuse perpetrator themselves.

Childhood neglect: This is usually defined as the perpetrator having experienced neglect as a child or adolescent rather than referring to someone who neglects their own children. There are not always substantiated or reported cases of neglect in the history of the perpetrator, so this is often measured by self-reports describing childhoods that have been characterised by neglect.

Childhood physical abuse: The offender was physically abused as a child.

Large family size: The perpetrator grew up in a family with three or more children.

Early parenthood: The perpetrator was aged 15 to 20 years when their child was born.

Prior sexual criminal behaviour: The perpetrator has a history of sexual crime, not necessarily against children.

Prior non-sexual criminal behaviour: Criminal behaviour of a non-sexual nature either while an adolescent or adult.

Violent behaviour: The perpetrator has a history of violent and abusive behaviour. This is usually defined as other, non-sexual, criminal behaviour (for adults or adolescents) or problems with regulating emotional outbursts in children. For adults and adolescents it has been measured by looking at criminal records, reports from child protection services or self-reporting from the perpetrator.

Victim risk factors

Poor family cohesion: This is usually defined as a family where one parent may be absent due to personal/health issues (e.g., depression or substance abuse), where parents may be emotionally or physically absent and the child is being raised by other family members, or where there is poor health in the family. It is often linked with low-income families. Where there is poor family cohesion an offender may have more opportunities to sexually abuse children, or in the case of female, Indigenous and peer/sibling offenders, they may themselves have a history of poor family cohesion that has led to behavioural and developmental issues.

Domestic violence in the family: Child sexual abuse is often found in families where there are other forms of violence and abuse being perpetrated against the children or the perpetrator's partner. Familial and some Indigenous offenders of sexual abuse may also be committing domestic violence. Peer/sibling sexual abuse perpetrators may have witnessed domestic violence in the family; likewise female offenders. It is measured through self-reports or reports from the police or child support authorities, or the offender may have been first reported for domestic violence and it is through this that their sexually abusive behaviours are discovered.

Table B1 also provides a summary of these risk factors and associations found in the research with particular types of child sexual abuse and perpetrators.

Risk factors for adult familial offenders

The following risk factors for familial offenders have been identified by the research:

- biologically unrelated male (including step-father, de facto boyfriend of mother) (Black et al., 2001; Smallbone et al., 2008);
- traditional gender values (Fischer & McDonald, 1998; Proeve, 2009);
- highly sexualised environment (Simons, Wurtele, & Durham, 2008);
- social isolation (Ward, 2003; Farmer, Beech, & Ward, 2012; Simons et al., 2008);
- prior non-sexual criminal behaviour (Smallbone & Wortley, 2004);
- poor family cohesion (Simons et al., 2008); and
- domestic violence in the family (Sinanan, 2011; Simons et al., 2008).

This is not to suggest that all families presenting with these risk factors will have child victims of sexual abuse, but there is a higher likelihood of child sexual abuse within a family where these risk factors are present than one where they are not. It has been noted that it is extremely difficult to distinguish between the risk factors for perpetrators within or outside a familial relationship because the majority of studies combine various types of child sexual abuse (Black et al., 2001). Black et al. still successfully disaggregated the profile characteristics of fathers who sexually abuse their children, and found that compared to non-abusive fathers, the sexually abusive fathers scored significantly higher on the Child Abuse Potentiality Inventory (Milner, 1986), a measure of propensity to abuse, including sexual abuse. Specifically, the sexually abusive fathers scored higher in relation to distress ($r = 0.39$), loneliness ($r = 0.40$), rigidity ($r = 0.35$), and unhappiness ($r = 0.44$).

There is disagreement about whether having a history of child sexual abuse is a risk factor for adults who commit sexual abuse against a family member. Smallbone and Wortley (2001) reported that 57% of currently incarcerated intra-familial offenders reported having a history of being a victim of child sexual abuse, whereas other research has found lower rates of offenders reporting being the victim in childhood of sexual abuse (Schaefer et al., 2010; Terry, 2008).

Extra-familial offending risk factors

The difficulty with categorising risk factors for adult acquaintances or neighbours of the family is that there seems to be only one major risk factor in the perpetrator's background: that they are a biologically unrelated male with access to the child. There is conflicting evidence about whether neglect, substance misuse, low socio-economic status, a history of physical abuse and child sexual abuse, interest in child exploitation material, or violent behaviour are risk factors associated with this cohort of offender.

Risk factors for authority and care relationships

Risk factors for child sexual abuse perpetration in authority and care relationships are relatively broad:

- biologically unrelated male (Knoll, 2010; Moulden et al., 2010; Sullivan & Beech, 2004);
- young (Moulden et al., 2010; Sullivan & Beech, 2004, who found that 68% of perpetrators had offended against a child by the age if 21); and
- child sexual abuse history (Sullivan & Beech, 2004).

As the above list illustrates, the risk factors for authority and care offenders is very circumscribed. Unlike other child sexual abuse perpetrators, this limited number of risk factors suggests that screening for child sexual abuse perpetration tendencies in authority and care contexts would be very difficult. The list below includes the variety of risk factors that have been tested for in authority and care offenders, but where research has concluded that they were not risk factors:

- psychological deficits;

- traditional gender values;
- interest in child exploitation material;
- computer savvy;
- substance misuse;
- highly sexualised environment;
- social isolation;
- low socio-economic status;
- childhood neglect;
- childhood physical abuse;
- large family size;
- early parenthood;
- prior sexual criminal behaviour;
- prior non-sexual criminal behaviour;
- poor family cohesion; and
- domestic violence in the family.

This cohort of child sexual abuse offender therefore does not exhibit the risk factors that can help easier identification in other relationships and contexts. Without these risk factors these offenders would be difficult to detect by traditional pre-employment screening means (due to their lack of contact with authorities).

Risk factors for Indigenous communities

As the list below illustrates, the risk factors for child sexual abuse perpetration in Indigenous communities is less about the individual's personal history and more likely to cross into intergenerational issues with isolation, abuse and community breakdown. As Indigenous families and communities are structured differently to other Australian families, a lack of family cohesion or domestic violence, for example, will involve not only the immediate parents of the perpetrator but also those who would otherwise be considered by non-Indigenous Australians as extended family or family friends. Therefore, child sexual abuse is more likely to cross between familial and extra-familial boundaries in Indigenous communities than non-Indigenous ones.

Risk factors include:

- substance misuse (Hunter, 2008 Smallbone & Rayment-McHugh, 2013; Staiger, 2005);
- highly sexualised environment (Smallbone & Rayment-McHugh, 2013);
- low socio-economic status (Hunter, 2008; Smallbone & Rayment-McHugh, 2013; Staiger, 2005);
- low education (Hunter, 2008; Stathopoulos, 2014);
- childhood neglect (Hunter, 2008; Staiger, 2005); and
- domestic violence in the family (Smallbone & Rayment-McHugh, 2013; Staiger, 2005).

While substance misuse is an issue in Indigenous communities, it has not been identified as a direct risk factor in the perpetration of intra-familial abuse. Spatz-Widom and Hiller-Strumhofel (2001) noted that "parental alcohol abuse may leave children more vulnerable to sexual abuse by others" (p. 53); however, the relation that the perpetrator has to the victim was not specified. Other researchers found that "whereas an alcoholic father was a risk factor for child sexual abuse by a family member, an alcoholic mother was a risk factor for child sexual abuse by a person outside the family" (Fleming et al., 1997, as cited in Spatz-Widom & Hiller-Strumhofel, 2001, p. 53). This may imply that in Indigenous communities alcohol misuse by a parent or carer is a risk factor for victimisation rather than for perpetration of child sexual abuse. In a US study of the pathways through which a history of child sexual abuse and the use of alcohol influence men's self-reported sexual aggression intentions, Davis et al. (2012) concluded that intoxication heightened "the effects of child sexual abuse history on sexual entitlement cognitions, such that sexual entitlement cognitions were highest for men who had a child sexual abuse history"

WEB.0061.001.0037

(p. 179). The authors claimed their experimental research suggests that having experienced child sexual assault "may facilitate sexual assault perpetration through its effects on in-the-moment cognitions and that these effects may be exacerbated by alcohol intoxication" (p. 179). Recent research appears to confirm these findings (see Davies & Jones, 2013).

Risk factors for female offenders

As mentioned previously, while the number of female child sexual abuse perpetrators is very low, it is useful to point out where female and male adult sexual abuse perpetrators are similar and different. Researchers agree that the following risk factors contribute to a woman committing child sexual abuse against a child. They may also be risk factors for female professional perpetrators, although female professional perpetrators are more likely to have risk factors relating to their context rather than the more general risk factors for female perpetrators.

The risk factors for females perpetrating child sexual abuse appear to be slightly different to those associated with male perpetrators both within and outside familial relationships. Most interesting is how having a low education and socio-economic status, along with having experienced multiple forms of child abuse, can be risk factors for sexual abuse perpetration in women.

The risk factors for female offending include:

- young (16–25 years) (Wijkman, Bijleveld, & Hendriks,, 2011);
- low-socio economic status (Mapp, 2006; Wijkman et al., 2011);
- low education (Mapp, 2006; Wijkman et al., 2011);
- child sexual abuse history (Elliott, Eldridge, Ashfield, & Beech, 2010; Mapp, 2006; Wijkman et al., 2011);
- childhood neglect (Elliott et al. 2010; Wijkman et al., 2011);
- poor family cohesion (Elliott et al., 2010; Wijkman et al., 2011); and
- domestic violence in the family (Elliott et al., 2010; Mapp, 2006; Wijkman et al., 2011).

Risk factors for online offenders

Here we consider the risk factors only for those perpetrators who are accessing child exploitation material and making contact with children in online environments, either for the purpose of contact offending or for the purpose of receiving child exploitation material from them. We have not included teens involved in sexting or online sexual harassment in this cohort.

Risk factors for online offending include:

- biologically unrelated male;
- young (16–25 years) (Beech et al., 2008; Krone, 2004);
- interest in child exploitation material (Beech et al., 2008; Krone, 2004);
- computer savvy (Beech et al., 2008; Krone, 2004);
- highly sexualised environment (Beech et al., 2008; Bourke & Hernandez, 2009; Krone, 2004);
- social isolation (Beech et al., 2008); and
- violent behaviour (Beech et al., 2008).

Risk factors for sibling sexual abuse and adolescents with sexually abusive behaviours

Sibling sexual abuse has not been as widely researched as other forms of child sexual abuse; however, the research literature does suggest the following risk factors for youth who sexually abuse siblings:

- young (16–18 years) (Stathopoulos, 2012);
- highly sexualised environment (Latzman, Viljoen, Scalora, & Ullman, 2011; Stathopoulos, 2012);

- childhood neglect (O'Brien, 2008; Stathopoulos, 2012);
- violent behaviour (Latzman et al., 2011; O'Brien, 2010);
- poor family cohesion (Latzman et al., 2011; O'Brien, 2010; Stathopoulos, 2012); and
- domestic violence in the family (Latzman et al., 2011; O'Brien, 2010; Stathopoulos, 2012).

There are risk factors that overlap between adolescent and sibling sexual abusers, but there are also risk factors that are unique to the adolescent cohort:

- biologically unrelated male (Seto & Lalumiere, 2010);
- young (Hanson, 2011);
- interest in child exploitation material (Hanson, 2011; Seto & Lalumiere, 2010);
- computer savvy (Hanson, 2011);
- highly sexualised environment (Lowenstein, 2006; Seto & Lalumiere, 2010);
- childhood neglect (Lowenstein, 2006; O'Brien, 2010; Seto & Lalumiere, 2010);
- violent behaviour (Lowenstein, 2006; O'Brien, 2008);
- poor family cohesion (Lowenstein, 2006; O'Brien, 2010; Seto & Lalumiere, 2010); and
- domestic violence in the family (Lowenstein, 2006; O'Brien, 2010; Seto & Lalumiere, 2010).

A4.2 Common factors associated with perpetration

Across the various contexts and settings of child sexual abuse, there are similarities in the risk factors to perpetration, as well as similarities in the behaviours engaged in by perpetrators. The common risk factors to perpetration (biologically unrelated male, young, highly sexualised environment, childhood neglect, violent behaviour, poor family cohesion, and domestic violence in the family) can be outside the perpetrator's control; for example, being young, having a history of neglect or being a victim of domestic violence.

Across a lot of the research into assessing the recidivism risk of child sexual abuse offenders, research was supportive of the hypothesis that a pro-offending attitude was an assessable risk factor for future offending (Allan, Grace, Rutherford, & Hudson, 2007; Craissati, Falla, McClurg, & Beech, 2002; Helmus et al., 2013). However, while studies with college students and analyses of website contents have found that some men and women have attitudes that are pro-sexual activity with children or at least not censuring of that behaviour (Cromer & Goldsmith, 2010; Maynard & Wiederman, 1997), there are no data about whether these attitudes translate to offending behaviour.

As outlined in the previous section, there is a major outlier when documenting common risk factors: individuals committing sexual abuse in authority and care relationships do not appear to have the same risk factors to their perpetration as those in other relationships. As the previous section also illustrated, having a criminal background (either sexual or non-sexual in nature), early parenthood, large families and psychological deficits are often not risk factors for child sexual abuse offending across almost all relationships and contexts. Where there are commonalities in risk factors, these are potential areas to target for programs aimed at preventing sexual abuse.

The research literature suggests that there are certain factors that are associated with the perpetration of multiple types of sexual abuse (see Table A3 on page 28). These include:

- biologically unrelated male;
- young;
- highly sexualised environment;
- childhood neglect;
- violent behaviour;
- poor family cohesion; and
- domestic violence in the family.

WEB.0061.001.0039

Table A3: Common risk factors, by relationship/context of child sexual abuse offending

Risk factor	Relationship/context
Biologically unrelated male	Familial Authority and care Extra-familial Online Peer
Young	Online Peer Sibling Female
Highly sexualised environment	Familial Online Indigenous Peer Sibling
Childhood neglect	Female Indigenous Peer Sibling
Violent behaviour	Online Peer Sibling
Poor family cohesion	Familial Female Indigenous Peer Sibling
Domestic violence in the family	Familial Female Indigenous Peer Sibling

However, there are also numerous ambiguous findings from the research regarding other risk factors. There is disagreement between researchers about the following:

- substance misuse;
- low socio-economic status;
- child sexual abuse history;
- childhood physical abuse;
- prior non-sexual criminal behaviour; and
- violent behaviour.

This disparity may be due to differences in the research populations being approached for study. For example, incarcerated males comprise only the known and currently apprehended child sexual abusers and are more likely to be from a low socio-economic status, whereas unapprehended child sexual abuse perpetrators are perhaps more likely to be from a more solid financial background (Beier, Ahlers et al., 2009; Schaefer et al., 2010). Researchers have attempted to explain perpetrators' psychology and this ambiguity. Drawing upon Milner's (1986) Child Abuse Potentiality Inventory, Black et al. (2001) found that, regardless of context, offenders scored higher on the emotional need scale ($r = 0.33$) and the sexual need scale ($r = 0.26$) compared to non-abusers. Many studies have noted the use of "defence mechanisms" by child sex offenders across all contexts of offending. "Defence mechanisms" refer to cognitive strategies that individuals use to minimise inner conflict, often unconsciously, by altering their own perception and interpretation of external events and internal motivations (see Vaillant, 1977, as cited in Miller, 2013). In a study of non-violent child sex offenders, Drapeau, Beretta, de Roten, Koerner, & Despland, 2008, as cited in Miller, 2013) found that such offenders tended to use "more primitive and immature defence mechanisms such as dissociation, in which the unwanted thought, impulse or feeling is split off and quarantined from consciousness" (p. 513).

Other individual-level factors include:

- Sexual interest: While neuropathology in concert with sexual interest may provide the environment for the desire for sex with children to arise in a potential offender, numerous studies suggest that sexual interest in children, even if not consciously known to a person, can be screened for (Abel et al., 2012).
- Neuropathology: Biological brain chemistry abnormalities have been raised in the literature as a cause (or even neuroplastic symptom) of child sexually abusive behaviours. A range of medical and psychiatrically oriented research has shown that child sex offenders:

  > can suffer from neurological issues, including exposure to neurotoxins and genetic disorders in childhood/infancy (Blanchard et al., 2002); and a strong correlation with head injury (Blanchard et al., 2002; Fruend & Kuban, 1993). This premise is reinforced by research suggesting that paedophilia may be related to biology, hormones and neurotransmitters (Bradford, 2000). (McCartan, 2008, p. 60)

To this end, a range of research has pointed to the effectiveness of particular drugs for suppressing sexual desire and deviant behaviour, and reducing re-victimisation (see Bradford, 2000; McCartan, 2008). McCartan noted research showing that "certain areas of the brain can have an impact upon sexual behaviour and therefore the targeting of these areas can have positive effects" (p. 73). In relation to whether brain injury or trauma itself can cause child sexually abusive desires and behaviour, Miller (2013) concluded that "what this trend of neuropsychological research may be identifying is a behavioural pattern of impulsivity, egocentricity, impaired judgment, deficient empathy, and discounting of consequences" (p. 514).

A5 Theories on how and why child sexual abuse occurs

There are various psychological and criminological theories that attempt to explain child sexual abuse perpetration. The majority of research has up until now been undertaken with incarcerated populations of child molesters, and therefore these theories may present with a selection bias. If we consider a social-ecological model for child sexual abuse prevention, it is clear that the individual perpetrator is part of a much larger set of relationships than the one between themselves and their victim. As such, risk factors for child sexual abuse perpetration may exist at a broader, societal level; for example, in the portrayal of children and women in advertising or the hyper-sexualisation of children. The levels within the social-ecological model are the individual, family, community, organisations/institutions, and society.

This section describes three key etiological theories used to explain why child sexual abuse occurs—Finkelhor's Four Preconditions Model, Ward's Pathways Model, and the situational crime prevention model, which is based on the rational choice theory for crime perpetration. Both the Four Preconditions and the situational crime prevention models insist on looking beyond the individual to other external factors that could be or are influencing their actions: for Finkelhor's model, it is societal factors that influence perpetration, and for the situational crime prevention model, it is a situation, organisation or institution's settings that can create opportunity.

A5.1 Finkelhor's Four Preconditions Model

Finkelhor's (1984) Four Preconditions Model has been widely used for understanding child sexual abuse offenders. It was the first to move beyond the notion that child sexual abuse only occurs as father–daughter incest or when men who are strangers molest a multitude of children. The four preconditions are:

- motivation to sexually abuse;
- overcoming internal inhibitors (for example, concern that their thoughts and behaviours are wrong);
- overcoming external inhibitors (for example, finding a child in their vicinity whom they can sexually abuse); and
- overcoming the resistance of the child.

According to this theory, all these preconditions need to be met in order for child sexual abuse perpetration to be possible and to occur.

Finkelhor (1984) argued that there are three components to the motivation to sexually abuse:

- sexual contact with the child satisfies an emotional need;
- the child is a source of sexual arousal;
- alternative sexual partners are not available. (p. 54)

However, these are not preconditions and they don't necessarily have to occur, or can overlap with one another.

Regarding overcoming internal inhibitors, this precondition is crucial, as without it the perpetrator will not commit any acts of abuse, as they may be inhibited by social taboos or fear of hurting the child.

The third and fourth preconditions move the explanation for offending beyond the perpetrator to account for their external environment. External inhibitors can include if there are bystanders around to protect the child (e.g., the child's mother, other family members, teachers, etc.), or if the environment is not conducive to abusing a child. The resistance of a child is the final barrier to committing the act; if the child is emotionally insecure, needy or without a support network then the child molester can break through a child's barrier more easily than if the child is more resilient to their advances.

Finkelhor (1984) noted that these preconditions not only operate on an individual level but on a more sociological level. Social factors and characteristics can act as motivators or inhibitors to child sexual abuse perpetration. Table A4 outlines how the preconditions work in relation to individual and social/cultural factors.

Table A4: Preconditions for sexual abuse and individual and social/cultural factors

Preconditions	Individual factors	Social/cultural factors
Motivation to sexually abuse	Arrested emotional development Need to feel powerful and controlling Re-enactment of childhood trauma to undo hurt Biological abnormality Fear of adult women Traumatic sexual experience with adult Inadequate social skills Marital problems	Masculine requirement to be dominant and powerful in sexual relationships Erotic portrayal of children in advertising Male tendency to sexualise all emotional needs Repressive norms about masturbation and extramarital sex
Overcoming internal inhibitors	Alcohol Psychosis Impulse disorder Senility Failure of incest inhibition mechanism in family dynamics	Social toleration of sexual interest in children Weak criminal sanctions against offenders Ideology of patriarchal prerogatives for fathers Social tolerance of deviance committed while intoxicated Child pornography Male inability to identify with needs of children
Overcoming external inhibitors	Mother is absent or ill Mother is not close to or protective of child Mother is dominated or abused by father Social isolation of family Unusual opportunities to be alone with child Lack of supervision of the child Unusual sleeping or rooming conditions	Lack of social supports for mothers Barriers to women's equality Erosion of social networks Ideology of family sanctity
Overcoming the resistance of the child	Child is emotionally insecure or deprived Child lacks knowledge about sexual abuse Situation of unusual trust between child and offender Coercion	No availability of sex education for children Social powerlessness of children

Source: Finkelhor (1984), pp. 56–57

Finkelhor's model demonstrates the importance of looking beyond the individual victim or perpetrator when assessing where primary prevention programs should be introduced and how other seemingly unconnected societal pressures and gaps can lead to an environment where a child can be sexually victimised.

A5.2 Ward's Pathways Model

The work of Ward and Siegert (2002) is regarded among researchers as being very instructive for investigating the individual's role in committing child sexual abuse. Their theory is often referred to as Ward's Pathways Model. It is differentiated by its explanation of how offenders use apparently normalised interactions to gain both trust and access to victims.

The Pathways Model is a psychological theory that suggests that certain pathways are the key to child sexual abuse perpetration. These pathways stem from "clusters" of problems that are found in the psychology of adults who sexually offend against children. These clusters are:

- difficulties in identifying and controlling emotional states;
- social isolation, loneliness and dissatisfaction;
- offence-supportive cognitions (e.g., belief that everyone sexually abuses children and that children enjoy the abuse); and
- deviant sexual fantasies.

There can be more than one cluster apparent in any one individual. Clusters are different from the pathways in that they are clinical phenomena that are found among child sexual abusers, whereas the pathways are associated with different psychological and behavioural profiles (Ward, Polaschek, & Beech, 2006).

There can be overlap between the various pathways. The five aetiological pathways that were identified are discussed in Table A5.

Table A5: Pathways and developmental trajectories in Ward's Pathways Model

Pathway	Developmental trajectory
Multiple Dysfunctional Mechanisms	Distorted sexual scripts [a] Idealised relationships Dysfunctional ideas about children's sexuality Deviant sexual arousal Heightened self-esteem based on perceived legitimacy of actions
Deviant Sexual Scripts and Relationship Schema	Distorted sexual scripts plus dysfunctional relationship schema Sex/intimacy confusion Vulnerability in seeking sexual activity Relationships perceived in sexual terms Relationships are unsatisfying, short-term and with periods of rejection
Intimacy Deficits	Normal sexual scripts Insecure attachments, which lead to problems in adult relationships Maladaptive strategies to avoid unsuccessful adult relationships Intimacy deficits and feelings of loneliness Substitutes child as a surrogate
Emotional Dysregulation	Normal sexual scripts Emotional regulation problems Unidentified emotional structures Early established link between sex and emotional wellbeing Sex used as soothing strategy Unable to mobilise social supports when stressed High anger and emotional dysregulation Child used to satisfy sexual need and punish partner
Antisocial Cognitions	Normal sexual scripts Pro-criminal attitudes and beliefs Antisocial tendencies Patriarchal attitudes and sense of superiority Disregard of social norms, especially children and sex Exploits opportunity to self-gratify

Notes: Sexual scripts are "the cognitive representations individuals acquire during the course of their development that specify how to behave in sexual encounters" (Ward et al., 2006, p. 64).

Source: Adapted from Ward et al. (2006).

The Pathways Model makes it clear that it aims to explain adult perpetrators' behaviour, not problem sexual behaviours or sexually abusive behaviours that may be exhibited by children who sexually abuse other children. Ward and Siegert (2002) argued that the Multiple Dysfunctional Mechanisms pathway is exhibited by "pure" paedophiles; that is, those who can be diagnosed with paedophilia. Perpetrators with the Deviant Sexual Scripts and Relationships Schema are those who may have a possible history of child sexual abuse themselves.

As Ward et al. (2006) noted, "in the pathways model situational triggers are hypothesised to interact with the various predispositions of individuals to sexually abuse children. The nature of the situational triggers will vary according to the particular profile of causes underlying each individual's offence trajectory or pathway" (p. 73).

A5.3 Rational choice theories and situational crime prevention

Rational choice theory is a sociological model used to understand social and economical behaviour. While it was initially modelled to explain the economic behaviours of individuals, since the 1980s and 1990s it has been used to explain involvement with crime. Criminologists have used rational choice theory to argue that criminals are logical and will find ways to have their needs for money, sex or excitement met. Broadly speaking, rational choice theory posits that individuals will rationalise the commitment of a crime (i.e., undertake a cost-benefit analysis) and will commit it if the benefit of the crime outweighs the consequences, and if there is little or no chance of being caught.

Similar to rational choice theory is routine activity theory, which posits that if there is a suitable target, a motivated offender and no authority figure to prevent the crime from occurring, then the crime will be committed. Routine activity theory is closely linked to the idea that the given environment in which a would-be offender finds themselves plays just as important a role in the crime being committed as the individual's psychology.

Arising out of rational choice theory and routine activity theory is the situational crime prevention model. Researchers have focused on this model as having a great deal of potential for preventing sexual abuse (see Smallbone et al., 2008). In theory, situational crime prevention is more efficient than other prevention models because the target is the situation, not the individual's motivation. Clarke (1997) outlined the components of this prevention model, namely that it: (a) is aimed at a very specific form of crime; (b) involves the management, design or manipulation of the environment in a systematic and permanent manner; and (c) ensures the crime is more difficult or risky to commit, or has fewer rewards. Currently, situation crime prevention is more commonly used for targeting "everyday crimes", such as graffiti, loitering, theft from motor vehicles, crowd control and shoplifting. Although this theory is successful in preventing crime from occurring within certain environments and situations, some argue that it only deters the criminal; it does not offer a cure for their behaviour. Scholars who are researching the potential for situational crime prevention to prevent child sexual abuse have presented compelling data for how to reduce child sexual abuse perpetration in organisational or institutional settings (Leclerc, Wortley, & Smallbone, 2011; Smallbone et al., 2008). Clarke and Homel's (Clarke, 1997) 16 opportunity-reducing techniques include:

- target hardening;
- controlling access;
- deflecting offenders;
- controlling facilitators;
- screening entries/exits;
- strengthening formal surveillance;
- using surveillance by employees;
- assisting natural surveillance;
- removing the target;
- identifying property;
- reducing temptation;
- denying benefits;
- setting rules;

WEB.0061.001.0045

- stimulating conscience;
- controlling disinhibitors; and
- facilitating compliance.

Kaufman, Tews, Schuett, and Kaufman (2012) focused on how organisations can use situational crime prevention to prevent child sexual abuse and argued that this is the best model for preventing abuse outside of familial contexts. According to Kaufman et al., the organisational climate and local community influences that can directly or indirectly influence or control behaviour in a setting, the physical attributes of the environment, and lifestyle and routine activities can all have an effect on whether child sexual abuse is perpetrated within an institutional setting. They presented a six-step process that organisations and institutions can use in order to ensure that their environments become safe spaces for children and prevent child sexual abuse from happening. The six steps are:

- brainstorming organisational risks, such as children being left alone with one staff member for extended periods of time—undertaken by staff who know the organisation well, over at least two sessions running to about 4.5 hours in total;
- obtaining input on risks from staff, volunteer, and the organisation's community—there must be community buy-in and reassurance that all risks have been identified and the community feels their fears are being understood;
- linking risk-to-risk reduction with prevention strategies;
- prioritising risks—reflecting practical realities and how they limit or modify risk reduction;
- implementing risk reduction and prevention strategies—stagger the implementation in order to reduce resistance to change; and
- ongoing monitoring and reassessment—assess the effects of the strategies 4–6 months after implementation (pp. 151–160).

As Kaufman et al. (2012) noted, it is not enough to have Working With Children Checks if the environment facilitates the sexual abuse of children; for example, by having areas such as gym change rooms isolated from the rest of the school, or having lockable classrooms to which only one teacher has the keys and access.

A6 Current approaches to prevention

In this section we present approaches to prevention. This section steps beyond the previous review areas to look at how child sexual abuse is being prevented, or how researchers are theorising it could be prevented, based on findings from studies of perpetration behaviour and psychology.

A6.1 Public health model

Primary prevention

In this report, we have been mainly interested in research results on the primary prevention of child sexual abuse rather than on preventing recidivism. Using the public health and socio-economic models, primary prevention looks at child sexual abuse perpetration at all levels of society, including whole communities, organisations, families and individuals, whereas preventing recidivism is aimed only at the individual perpetrator who has already committed sexual abuse against a child.

For example, both the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and WHO define primary prevention as preventing violence before it occurs. This definition is also used when discussing sexual assault (see VicHealth, 2007) and is also focused on preventing victimisation (or continued victimisation). However, among Australian program providers of protective behaviours education (see section below on protective behaviours), there currently appears to be some misunderstanding and a lack of consensus about what the primary prevention of child sexual abuse is.

Developmental prevention

Outlined by Smallbone et al. (2008), developmental prevention aims to "prevent the emergence, over the course of individual social cognitive development, of dispositions and vulnerabilities associated with the onset of child sexual abuse offending" (p. 65). They noted that individuals, especially men, would require interventions at key life phases in order to reduce and prevent the likelihood of child sexual abuse offending. The life stages noted are during:

- early attachment relationships;
- transition to school;
- transition to high school (Colton, Roberts, & Vanstone, 2010); and
- transition to parenthood.

However, programs aimed at women, such as the Elmira Project, which aim to develop stronger links between low socio-economically situated mothers and their infants, could have a positive effect in building stronger relationships (emotional and physical) that could play a role in lowering child sexual abuse offending in the long term. Smallbone et al. (2008) argued that focusing on these life stages could potentially reduce child sexual abuse prevention because children's social cognitive skills need to be addressed and strengthened in order to ensure that later emotional and sexual development is not hindered, and progresses along a normal trajectory. Currently, there is no one established program that delivers developmental prevention against child sexual abuse offending at the four life stages, nor has there been an evaluation of whether or how this would work across a broad population.

A6.2 Current international programs

Primary prevention

Prevention Project Dunkelfeld

Prevention Project Dunkelfeld (PPD) is an innovative German primary prevention strategy aimed at paedophiles and hebephiles who have not been arrested or convicted of any sex crimes against children but are seeking help and treatment. It has been in operation since 2002, following constant requests from 1996 onwards from self-diagnosed paedophiles or hebephiles for help to prevent them from becoming child sexual abuse offenders (Beier, Ahlers et al., 2009; Beier, Neutze et al., 2009). Within 38 months of the PPD being set up, there were 808 respondents to national advertisements on television, radio and in print seeking participants for the project. Men who came forward were offered anonymity and promised confidentiality provided they were not currently sexually abusing a child. Of the respondents, 234 reported having committed child sexual abuse or child sexual exploitation at least once in their lives and so they were discounted from the study/project. The project uses cognitive behaviour therapy, group and individual therapy, sexological tools (e.g., finding ways to connect with adult sexual partners) and medical options (e.g., chemical castration) to help participants control their thoughts and feelings towards children.

The official partners of PPD are victim support organisations, media relations and campaign companies, and a web developer who aided in the creation of a media message that would speak to the right demographic while also not alienating support from the German public. There were a variety of reasons why potential offenders sought support, including:

- being urged by friends, relatives or spouses to get help;
- being referred to the project by their doctor;
- having the empathy to realise the harm they could do;
- wanting to be cured;
- waning to be attracted to adults; and
- wanting to have a family of their own.

Many men who were not paedophiles or hebephiles were worried about their sexual attraction to younger looking women.

PPD has uncovered vital differences between currently detected child sexual abuse offenders and undetected or Dunkelfeld offenders. Dunkelfeld offenders:

- were generally well educated, with higher numbers having graduate and postgraduate qualifications;
- had low levels of psychiatric disturbance;
- had higher levels of paedophilia than among detected child sexual abuse offenders;
- were primarily male;
- were politically active;
- had a better ability to reflect on their behaviour and thoughts;
- were less antisocial; and
- rarely reported having committed any other form of crime (Feelgood & Schaefer, 2011).

Those who feared harming a child for the first time were also more receptive to treatment (Feelgood & Schaefer, 2011).

There are limited data available on the effectiveness of PPD, with researchers noting that the initial part of the project was wrapping up in 2013 when data would be released on the effectiveness of the treatment (Feelgood & Schaefer, 2011).[10] At first glance, however, this may not be a possible treatment strategy in Australia due to mandatory reporting laws, which may make it difficult to promise confidential treatment to paedophiles and hebephiles who have not yet committed a contact offence but who do access child pornography or fantasise about sexual relations with a child. While this project encapsulates the idea of primary prevention by seeking out contact with potential (future) offenders, it would be necessary to see evaluations of the program.

Stop it Now! UK & Ireland campaign

A telephone hotline was established about 10 years ago in the UK (based on the US hotline Stop it Now!) to allow individuals who were worried about their thoughts and actions around children to anonymously speak with the helpline staff about their concerns. Over the course of 10 years, over 14,524 individuals have called the helpline, with over 54% of all the calls coming from adults concerned about their own behaviour, 24% coming from family and friends concerned about another adult's behaviour, and 4% of calls concerning a child exhibiting sexualised behaviour. Only 2% were women. Two-fifths of callers had not yet abused a child but were concerned that they might. The justice system also works with Stop it Now! UK & Ireland by referring any cautioned or bailed offenders to the organisation to receive help while they are awaiting trial. A small number of individuals who have committed child sexual abuse have referred themselves to the police and have been arrested. The organisation offers face-to-face interviews for offenders, offenders' families and youth with sexualised behaviours, and offers to install an Internet browser application called Securus that monitors web-browsing habits and logs the pages a user visits. This program has been considered very effective; however, no independent research exists detailing the efficacy of the helpline and face-to-face interviews (Denis & Whitehead, 2012).

Preventing recidivism

Focus is currently on mental health treatment programs in correctional settings for child sexual abuse and other sex offenders. However, the research literature indicates there are other options for reintegrating an individual back into the community and reducing the risk of reoffending.

Circles of Support and Accountability (COSA)

One of these programs is COSA, which was established in Canada 15 years ago. The purpose of this program is to support released child sexual offenders through group and individual meetings, help them find employment and housing, and reintegrate them back into society after their period of incarceration. Results indicate that offenders who have been part of COSA have between a 70% and 83% lower chance of sexual reoffending than those who did not partake in the group (Finkelhor, 2009; Wilson, Cortoni, & McWhinnie, 2009). The program is now available in the UK and the USA, and there have been suggestions that it could be introduced in Australia, although there is no information post-2009 about this.

The COSA program was initially established to fill a gap; in the past offenders were being released following the end of their prison sentence without any community supervision or aid in their reintegration into the community. Volunteers from a local religious group decided to work with two released offenders and met with them on a daily basis (in a group or "circle" that involved the perpetrator and five volunteers, or on a one-on-one basis). Although the two offenders were classed as high risk, with a 100% chance of violent sexual re-offending at their release, they were successfully reintegrated into the community (Wilson et al., 2009). Since then, the Ontario section alone of COSA has aided 200 released sex offenders, and Circles UK was established by the government to allow for the training of volunteers to work with recently released offenders.

There is no established timeframe within which a circle works. The circle meets until they feel that the offender is ready to go ahead alone. Often the circle can be brought together again if months or years down the track the offender feels that they need circle support again (Wilson 10 As of February 2014, there has been no new information published about this program's effectiveness.

WEB.0061.001.0049

et al., 2009). There have been cases where the COSA method for reintegration has not worked for an offender, resulting in their re-arrest, although usually not for a sexual offence. However, as Bates and Wilson (2012) noted, this was often because the volunteer members of the circle were not working well together or communicating well with the offender. More long-term evaluations of this program are required, but initial results, as well as increased enthusiasm by the UK government to fund the circles, suggest this may be a viable option to prevent reoffending.

Integrated treatment

While integrated treatment programs are aimed at all sexual offenders, Marshall, Marshall, Serran, and Fernandez (2006) singled out incest and paedophile sexual offenders as those who could benefit from this in-prison treatment. As the authors noted, it is a "semi-structured, cognitive behavioural approach that integrates emotional expression and regulation and operates in a rolling format" (p. 24). The researchers produced a very thorough manual of what the treatment entails, but data on its effectiveness are limited due to a lack of testing. However, the authors note that the program is based on other successful processes employed by therapists and researchers elsewhere, including, for example, Ward's Good Lives approach (see below).

Good Lives

The Good Lives framework, as proposed by Ward and Gannon (2006), is concerned with understanding offending within a broader concept of unmet needs or frustrations with satisfying universal human needs. As Frost (2011) stated, "according to the [Good Lives] model, persons commit criminal acts because they lack opportunity or capability to achieve valued goals by appropriate means" (p. 435). The treatment is focused on building the offender's self-esteem, self-confidence and sense of hope so they can work towards a better life that is free from child sexual abuse. If the treatment is presented ineffectively, it can lead to conflict in a group, result in group therapy being a passive listening experience, or create an adversarial environment that is ineffective for treatment and rehabilitation. However, if a well-trained therapist applies the program, then there is evidence, as noted by Frost, of this program being successful. However, recidivism (re-offending by committing a sexual offence and not just re-arrest for any criminal behaviour) was not discussed.

A6.3 Current Australian programs

There is little overall government policy that dictates either a whole-of-system or whole-of-government approach to child sexual abuse prevention in Australia. Child sexual abuse has been part of other child protection frameworks and not located separately as requiring different responses than other forms of child abuse and neglect. It is noted that the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Assault will make policy recommendations in addition to conducting inquiries. It is as yet unclear whether any government policy recommendations arising from the inquiry will be limited to child sexual abuse in institutional contexts. It is hoped that the present work may assist in informing this.

Apart from the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children (COAG, 2009b), we could not locate any other state/territory or national policies that have specific actions or strategies that target prevention of and early intervention in child sexual assault, other than in NSW, where such a policy specifically targets Indigenous people.

However, the following related policy approaches were identified:

- national frameworks agreed at COAG level, including: National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children (COAG, 2009b), National Plan to Reduce Violence Against Women and Their Children (COAG, 2010), Information Sharing Protocol between the Commonwealth and Child Protection Agencies (NSW Government, 2009), and National Partnership Agreement on Indigenous Early Childhood Development (COAG, 2009a);
- enforcement responses: the Australian Federal Police and state/territory police at jurisdictional levels have dedicated sexual assault and child abuse teams;

- child protection legislation: authorising intervention (but not necessarily the administration of therapeutic responses) where a child has been deemed at risk of child sexual assault;
- NSW Interagency Plan to Tackle Child Sexual Assault in Aboriginal Communities (NSW Department of Aboriginal Affairs): appears to be the only dedicated response of its type and was recently reviewed by the NSW Ombudsman (2012);
- mandatory reporting schemes in each jurisdiction; and
- WA Protective Behaviours Program: promoted by the WA Government (though not directly administered by it).

Other prevention strategies currently employed in Australian jurisdictions include Working With Children Checks, residency restrictions, community notifications and sex offender registration. International research into these strategies has been minimal and often they have been introduced without any evidence of their efficacy (Finkelhor, 2009). In Australia, there has been no research testing the efficacy of such programs.

Residency restrictions are somewhat flawed, seeing as most sexual abuse occurs within families and the family's social networks. Background checks in one US state have revealed that after five years of screening 3.7 million individuals, only 5% had a criminal record and less than half of 1% were registered sex offenders (with no data on whether the offence was against children or adults). Community notification of sex offender whereabouts has been linked to a downward decline in crime, but researchers are not sure if this is separate from the general decline in crime (Finkelhor, 2009). Sex offender registration has also not been fully researched for efficacy and, in general, the current research results are mixed at best, with some null and negative effects being found (Finkelhor, 2009).

It would appear from the research literature that these common tertiary prevention techniques are primarily implemented to allay public anxieties about the location of sex offenders, and for governments to appear that they are "cracking down" on sex offenders (Finkelhor, 2009; Miller, 2013; Smallbone et al., 2008). As Miller noted, sexually violent predator statutes "are essentially punitive expressions of societal disgust and fear of contamination by offenders" (p. 515).

Protective behaviours as primary prevention in Australia

Across Australian state and territory jurisdictions there is an uneven level of child sexual abuse prevention education. There are no consistent policies regarding how child sexual abuse prevention is or should be taught to students, whether students should be assessed following the program, whether the teachers receive training to teach about this, or even if parents should know that their children are being taught prevention. Results for each of the key criteria indicate that:

- All the states and territories have "base" child protection policies that prescribe the teacher's role in identifying and reporting any child maltreatment (all suspected cases of sexual abuse must be reported). Only the ACT, SA and WA specially address the role of teachers in child sexual abuse prevention education.
- None of the states have specific child sexual abuse prevention education policies.
- Only the ACT, SA and WA have a commitment in their curriculums to providing sexual abuse prevention education. NSW and Victoria have a weak commitment to it, meaning that it is ultimately the school's decision whether sexual abuse is taught or not. Queensland, Tasmania and NT have no commitment to include prevention education in their curriculum.
- Sexual abuse prevention is primarily taught within the Health and Physical Education subject (Personal Development in NSW, and Physical Education, and Health and Wellbeing in Tasmania). NSW, the ACT and WA specifically mention that sexual abuse prevention education must take place in these classes, unlike Victoria, Queensland, NT and Tasmania, which don't specifically mention child sexual abuse prevention, personal safety or protective behaviours as compulsory units of study.
- All states and territories make resources for prevention education publicly available on their websites; however, it may be difficult for untrained educators to judge the quality of the material and the quality of external providers of prevention education if they have not received specific training. A hindrance for teachers in assessing the suitability of external, non-government providers is a lack of accreditation or registration. Only Victoria and the ACT offer guidelines on the use of external providers.

WEB.0061.001.0051

- Only SA and the ACT stipulate that teachers must receive training before delivering sexual abuse prevention education modules. SA also requires all teachers to attend a full-day, face-to-face training session on "Responding to Abuse and Neglect–Education and Care", with three-yearly updates to the training.
- Victoria, SA, Queensland and the ACT assess students on what they have learned from prevention education, but only Victoria makes it explicitly clear that students are assessed on what they have learned.
- In NSW, schools actively seek parental permission to provide sexual abuse prevention education, and in SA and Victoria parents can opt to withdraw their children from such classes. However, if SA parents choose to withdraw their children, teachers are cautioned to find out why the parents wish to do so.
- Information for parents and communities is scant. NSW, SA and Victoria have specific information for parents, but mostly only in English, and they only send parents to cyber-safety websites.

Future research should focus on discovering why these discrepancies exist to begin with. Is it inadequate resources, preference for broader sexuality education, or lack of knowledge about what constitutes effective pedagogical content for this topic? As Walsh et al. (2013) noted, "as long as this work remains outstanding, the effect is one of disunity and unequal provision across the country such that we are a long way from achieving the sixth supporting outcome for the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children" (p. 668). However, coordinating all state and territory child protection policies with the national framework may be a long-term challenge.

Assessments of sexual abuse prevention education programs in schools have found that there are limited data available on the benefit of education programs for either primary or secondary school students in an Australian context (there is currently only one project, funded by the Australian Research Council, that is assessing a sexual abuse prevention program, with results becoming available after 2015). International research into the effectiveness of sexual abuse prevention education (across all year levels in primary and secondary schools) and respectful relationships education (for children and young people aged 12 to 25 years) has found mixed evidence for their effectiveness. Respectful relationships programs aim to prevent or reduce dating and relationship violence (including sexual violence between peers), effective communication skills, and skills to deal with stress, disappointment, rejection, the resolution of conflict and the promotion of healthier relationships (Fellmeth, Heffernan, Nurse, Habibula, & Sethi, 2013). However, one comprehensive research review found that there was "no evidence of an effect of interventions on the outcomes reported", although that was not to say that these programs should be stopped, but rather that more research with strong methodologies needs to be undertaken to evaluate the effectiveness of these programs for children and young adults (Fellmeth et al., 2013, pp. 20–23).

Another international review of the research literature found no evaluations of Australian prevention programs in schools, and so the assessment of sexual abuse prevention education is based predominantly on research from the USA (however, we note that there are some evaluations of individual programs that are not publically available). A final review found that knowledge retention for children at two or three months after prevention education sessions was high, but there is no information about long-term effectiveness. There were some negative outcomes reported in several studies (for example, children being frightened), but it is unknown whether it was the topic or the manner in which the children were taught that caused the issues. It has not been evident if disclosures of child sexual abuse have been linked to participation in prevention education and there are insufficient data to measure if different types of programs and settings are necessary for education provision, nor when the optimal age would be to begin educating children about sexual abuse (Zwi et al., 2007). While research shows that children benefit from sexual abuse prevention education (and some would argue that provision of such education is part of a child's human rights), it should not be seen as or become a replacement for a wider societal responsibility to ensure children are protected against sexual exploitation.

Prevention programs are aimed primarily at young children and adolescents. The programs discussed above only consider the individual (not broader societal, familial or organisational effects on perpetrating behaviour), and the programs taught to children at schools may inadvertently put the onus on children to prevent child sexual abuse. Where there are programs for parents and teachers, it is often to present the information that has been taught to the children and may not involve wider discussion about how to integrate the learned information into day-to-day parenting or teaching.

Programs that are purely focused on sexual abuse prevention have previously been evaluated by researchers, who have found them to be useful in teaching children (in the short term), but there have been no data on whether these programs actually prevented child sexual abuse from occurring (Finkelhor, 2009; Kenny, Capri, Thakkar-Kolar, Ryan, & Runyon, 2008; Topping & Barron, 2009).

Preventing recidivism

Counselling of convicted sex offenders is a treatment form offered or enforced in prisons around Australia and worldwide as part of an offender's rehabilitation, and is in the first instance used to prevent recidivism rather than prevent sexual abuse from occurring in the first instance. This form of treatment is primarily to increase skills for the offender's behavioural self-regulation and to aid the resolution of underlying problems that may have led to the offending in the first place (Finkelhor, 2009). These programs can be successful if they are available for the duration of incarceration, if there is enough funding for effective therapists to undertake the work, and if child sexual abusers are treated separately to adult sex offenders (Smallbone et al., 2008). However, the effectiveness of counselling, especially the use of cognitive behaviour therapy, has not yet been fully evaluated here or elsewhere, with some reservations about how much it can prevent recidivism. One of the issues raised by other researchers working on prevention strategies is that counselling is often only offered within a correctional setting once an offence has been committed (Beier, Neutze et al., 2009). Evidence for the success of counselling for juvenile sexual offenders is much more readily available and multi-systemic therapy has been found to be the most effective for this cohort (Finkelhor, 2009), although there is no information about whether it is used in Australia.

Offender treatment programs tend to be primarily provided in custodial settings. However, there have been efforts to broaden the scope of delivery. In Australia, there were two programs available for preventing recidivism—Cedar Cottages (NSW) and Safecare (WA)—which offered therapy and treatment to perpetrators who were either awaiting trial, had been tried and found guilty, or had admitted their guilt, and rather than proceed with a court trial were put through the program. Each program ran for two years (which could be extended by a year if necessary) and often required the perpetrator and victim to meet, under supervision, to begin healing (for the victim) and behaviour change (for the perpetrator). Both programs were independently evaluated and found to be highly effective in preventing recidivism, and offered an alternative to traditional criminal justice penalties for child sexual abuse (Cant & Penter, 2006; Goodman-Delahunty, 2009; O'Brien, 2010). These programs are no longer in operation.

A6.4 Prevention and children/adolescents with problem sexual behaviours or sexually abusive behaviours

Generally, research has found that treating and preventing child sexual abuse among the younger cohort needs a different strategy to what is used with adults. In Victoria this has resulted in therapeutic treatment orders being issued by courts to take children under the age of 15 years out of the justice system and into therapy for two years. In the UK, the Stop it Now! campaign also offers counselling to youth under 16 years who have been found in possession of child exploitation material or to be exhibiting problem sexual behaviours or sexually abusive behaviours. Both therapeutic treatment orders and the Stop it Now! counselling have reported positive outcomes for youth who have used their services. Research suggests that treatment is highly effective and prevents recidivism among children and adolescents if it is administered early on (O'Brien, 2010).

For primary prevention, education strategies, professional (teacher) education and community education have been suggested as effective means of preventing problem sexual behaviours and sexually abusive behaviours from developing in youth (O'Brien, 2010). The basis of calls for community and professional teacher education is the argument that adults without this education do not consider that children are capable of perpetrating sexual violence (Karrington, 2009, as cited in O'Brien, 2010). The community, teachers, justice officials and teachers need education in how sexuality develops in children, and how to respond suitably to appropriate or inappropriate sexual behaviour in children (Webster, 2009, as cited in O'Brien, 2010).

As outlined in section A3.7, often with children and adolescents presenting with problem sexual behaviours or sexually abusive behaviours there is a history of victimisation at the hands of either another child or an adult. Therefore focus has been less on criminal justice interventions and more on holistic therapeutic responses. Research indicates that these are highly successful (O'Brien, 2010). In some jurisdictions, for example in Western Australia, children and adolescents can receive counselling only if they have been convicted of a sex offence (they can receive this treatment even if they are on community orders), but there are problems with the delivery of services within and outside of metropolitan regions due to distance (O'Brien, 2010). Some programs have been discontinued; for example, the Critical Response Team, which offered counselling to youth in remote regions (O'Brien, 2010). There appear to be a variety of programs available across all the states and territories for children and adolescents who are displaying problem sexual behaviours or sexually abusive behaviours, but issues of distance, funding and having no clear federal, state or territory legislation on dealing with children and youth outside of juvenile detention settings means that service delivery varies a great deal across Australia (O'Brien, 2010).

PART B

Child sexual abuse: Current issues and future directions

B1 Key issues in research, policy and practice responses to child sexual abuse

Child sexual abuse is a complex phenomenon, both empirically (i.e., the actual circumstances in which it occurs) and conceptually. The following section identifies key issues that shape what conclusions we can draw from the research, policy and practice responses to prevention.

B1.1 Research issues

As can be seen in Part B, a number of issues (usually methodological) affect the conclusions we can draw about perpetration. These include:

- Definitions of child sexual abuse—Different studies use broader or narrower definitions and measures (e.g., self-report measures compared to notifications of child sexual abuse made to statutory authorities that are investigated and substantiated).
- Lack of available data about the characteristics of child sexual abuse—It is difficult to obtain an accurate picture of features such as: the age of perpetrators; the age of victims; the incidence of intra-familial compared to extra-familial sexual abuse; the settings or locations in which abuse occurs; and the balance between young people who sexually abuse compared to adult offenders across the range of child sexual abuse types.
- Distinction between paedophilia and child molestation—Paedophilia is a psychiatric concept while child molestation is a socio-legal concept.
- Representativeness of research samples—As has been well established, the majority of child sexual abuse cases do not come to the attention of the justice system or result in a conviction (Cossins, 2010), yet most research with child sex offenders is drawn from detected and convicted populations. The extent to which these populations are representative of undetected child sex offenders is unclear.
- Collapsing types of sex offenders—Most studies on child sex offending, particularly those that look at risk factors, combine different types of sex offenders together (Whitaker et al., 2008). This could mean combining adult and child sex offenders, or combing intra-familial and extra-familial offenders.
- Assessment of perpetrator risk factors—Typically, the research assesses risk factors for re-offending rather than the onset of offending. It is possible that these are quite different factors. In addition, most risk factors are individual-level factors. There is limited research that looks at community- or social-level factors or how they interact with individual factors. In addition, compared to risk factors associated with child maltreatment more broadly, risk factors associated with child sexual abuse are not as well documented, nor do they appear to be as predictive as the risk factors associated with child maltreatment.
- Distinction between adolescent- and adult-onset perpetration—There has been growing recognition that adolescents comprise a significant proportion of assailants in incidents of child sexual abuse and that their risk factors and therapeutic needs are not the same as those of adult offenders. However, there is a lack of clarity about whether adolescents engaging in sexually abusive behaviour are a distinct population compared to those who begin offending in adulthood. This lack of clarity affects claims about who should be the target of prevention.

B1.2 Locating child sexual abuse as a social and policy issue

Compared to other forms of child abuse and neglect, sexual abuse and exploitation characteristically occurs in a range of relationships and settings within and beyond the family and is predominantly perpetrated by males. By contrast, neglect, emotional abuse and physical abuse typically occur within the family, with mothers predominantly being the adult whom child protection authorities hold responsible (Lamont, 2011). In addition, child sexual abuse involves:

- significant barriers to and delays in children's disclosures that sexual abuse is occurring, and indeed this may not come to light until the victims are adults;
- perpetrator tactics that normalise, conceal or reframe sexually abusive interactions;
- adherence by the general public to myths about child sexual abuse; and
- public demonisation of "child sex predators" when particular types of sexual abuse come to light.

To this end, child sexual abuse reflects a number of the common dynamics and issues associated with adult sexual assault (Clark & Quadara, 2010; Heenan 2004; Tarczon & Quadara, 2012). More recently, the growing recognition that adolescents comprise a significant proportion of those engaging in sexually abusive behaviour adds a developmental consideration in prevention efforts. Meanwhile, the production and distribution of child exploitation material ("child pornography") has, to date, been located within a criminal justice and crime prevention framework.

There are subsequently "different, but independently legitimate, perspectives" on the causes and appropriate responses to child sexual abuse, such as:

- criminal justice;
- child rights;
- child health and wellbeing;
- family and community wellbeing;
- public health; and
- risk management (ISPCAN, 2011, pp. 13–14).

We would also add the perspective of gender-based violence to this list.

As a social and policy issue, therefore, child sexual abuse crosses at least four domains—violence against women, family wellbeing and support, child protection, and criminal offending. The consequences of this can be not only different approaches to prevention, but also a risk that "child sexual abuse" falls between the gaps of policy frameworks.

B1.3 Practice issues

Translating a public health approach to prevention into practice

Numerous policies (including the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children 2009–2020, COAG, 2009b), research studies, and expert commentary have noted that statutory responses are not sufficient or sustainable, and are often unable to prevent future harm (e.g., Australian Research Alliance for Children and Youth [ARACY], 2008; Bromfield & Holzer, 2008; O'Donnell, Scott, & Stanley, 2008). Economic analyses show that attempting to remedy the effects of child abuse is more costly than preventing it in the first place (Mikton & Butchart, 2009).

While there is agreement that primary prevention is the "change goal", the complex and multisectoral nature of child sexual abuse noted above influences understandings about what an effective prevention agenda should look like. For example, in child protection the orientation is towards the rights of the child as well as the rights—and needs—of the parents. Where safety is an issue, the primary focus is the child's right to safety. By comparison, family services start from the idea that children are best cared for in the family. These different emphases can result in different issues triggering a service response. Further, when comparing sexual violence prevention (of which child sexual abuse is one example) to child protection, the targets of any intervention (i.e., those receiving a prevention initiative) differ. In sexual violence prevention, targets can be individuals, communities and organisations, or the broader social environment (e.g., media representations). In the child protection literature on prevention, the target is primarily seen as the family (ARACY, 2008).

This issue was reflected in our consultations, with some stakeholders noting that in current practice diverse activities and targets are being identified as "primary prevention". For example, some services consider the prevention of further offending by a perpetrator as being a form of primary prevention. There were many approaches being called primary prevention when they could more accurately be classified as secondary or tertiary prevention. The aims of primary prevention (such as "changing social norms") were also considered to be too vague, which may suggest that underlying determinants for child sexual abuse are not well identified. This makes it difficult to see how "upstream" prevention efforts connect with a reduction in victimisation.

Difficulty in addressing perpetration within the child protection system

Statutory child protection systems have generally been focused on the safety of the child, and the presence of risk and harm. Some expert stakeholders observed that:

- it could be difficult, when thinking about prevention, for child protection systems as a whole to consider the tactics, strategies and motivations of perpetrators;
- focusing on perpetration highlights the deeply gendered nature of child sexual abuse perpetration, which was sometimes interpreted by practitioners as implying that "all men are child molesters";
- those working with mothers in contact with statutory child protection systems may not be aware of the ways in which their ability to protect is reduced by father's/men's tactics (particularly in situations where family violence is present) (see Tarczon, 2012); and
- there is still a lingering focus on "stranger danger" in child sexual abuse prevention efforts, despite research showing that the vast majority of child sexual abuse victims already know the offender.

This is reflected in the literature, with the majority of research undertaken on child sex offenders and perpetration located within criminology, socio-legal studies and the offender-treatment literature, and is rarely connected back to child maltreatment or child protection.

B2 Conceptualising child sexual abuse: Key findings from the literature

B2.1 Key characteristics of child sexual abuse

Part A reviewed and synthesised current research across different forms of child sexual abuse in terms of the characteristics of and risk factors for perpetration. Several key characteristics from this review were identified:

- Familial vs non-familial perpetrators and differences in victims—There are some key differences in perpetration dynamics when the perpetrator is an adult family member compared to a non-family member, namely:
  - gender of victim—females are far more likely to be victimised where sexual abuse is perpetrated by a family member, while males are more likely to be sexually abused by non-familial perpetrators (see Australian Bureau of Statistics [ABS], 2006, 2013; Rosengard, Laing, Ridley, & Hunter, 2007);
  - age of victim—age of first abuse is younger when the abuse is perpetrated by family members compared to non-family members;
  - demographic characteristics of perpetrator—parental perpetrators are older than extra-familial perpetrators, are often in marital or de facto relationships, or have participated in long-term intimate relationships with adults, which are typically regarded as protective factors (Goodman-Delahunty, 2014); and
  - number of victims/frequency or duration of abuse—perpetrators of familial sexual abuse have fewer victims compared to non-familial perpetrators, but their offending is more likely to be frequent or occur against that victim for a longer period time. While non-familial perpetrators may have a greater number of victims, they may only offend against that individual once or twice.
- Differences in adolescent vs late onset perpetration—Research suggests a "bimodal" pattern of perpetration, referring to two distinct periods for onset (i.e., the start of perpetrating abuse). The first is adolescence, with some research estimating that young people may account for up to half of all child sex offences, although most figures suggest between 16% and 28% (Boyd & Bromfield, 2006; Moses, Huntington, & D'Ambrosio, 2004; Nisbet, Rombouts, & Smallbone, 2005; Stathopoulos, 2012). A second distinct point of onset is between the mid-20s to early/mid-30s (Moses et al., 2004). These two distinct periods will likely mean different approaches to prevention are required.[11]
- Online sexual abuse—This is an emerging area of concern. While the extent of online sexual abuse is less than sexual abuse perpetrated in familial and/or care relationships, communication technologies vastly speed up perpetrators' capacity to make connections with children and young people, both in Australia and overseas (particularly in the adjacent Asia–Pacific region). Further, the speed of innovation in technology makes 11 To emphasise, the identification of "bimodal" onset in sexual offending is different from broader criminological analyses of the age/crime curve. When looking at offending overall, people are most likely to begin offending between 15 and 19 years of age and then "grow out" of this behaviour ("adolescent-limited"). There are some offenders, however, who continue to offend into adulthood ("life-course persistent") (Moffitt, 1993, 2003). So the model here is onset in adolescence, persistence for some into adulthood. By contrast, the sexual abuse literature suggest two different points in time for onset, and by implication, two different perpetrator groups with possibly different risk factors, situational opportunities, and therefore approaches to prevention.

detection, investigation and prosecution difficult. Perpetrators may cross over from making connections with children/young people online to making contact offline (in real life), and may move from downloading child exploitation material to virtual forms of child sexual abuse, facilitated through instant messaging services or voice-over-Internet protocol (VOIP) platforms. Further, online social networking platforms or other social media enable "weak connections" between potential victims and perpetrators in the offline world to become more intimate, thus facilitating either contact abuse or the production of child exploitation material. Overall, online child sex offenders use technology to facilitate a range of sexually abusive behaviours, from viewing child exploitation material to contacting potential victims to facilitating overseas child sex tourism.

Figure B1 (on page 49) conceptually maps the diverse characteristics of child sexual abuse according to the following four dimensions: relationships, contexts or settings, victim vulnerabilities and grooming strategies. These are not mutually exclusive, but are used to highlight the idea that some forms of child sexual abuse are made possible and are shaped by the relationships between victims and perpetrators, while other forms of child sexual abuse are significantly shaped by the settings and contexts in which victims and perpetrators come together. This is highlighted by the notion that sexual abuse is only possible at the convergence or interaction of two factors: the person (both victim and offender) and the situation (context or setting) (Smallbone et al., 2008). Further, adult perpetrators typically target children who appear vulnerable (due to family dysfunction, social isolation, disability, etc.), and employ a range of grooming strategies to develop trust and intimacy with the child, which enables sexualisation of the relationship to occur (Salter, 1995).

These four dimensions—relationships, settings, vulnerabilities and grooming—are represented visually in Figure B1. This is not intended to be a prescriptive or comprehensive representation. Rather, it is intended to provide a schematic of the diverse circumstances in which child sexual abuse occurs in terms of:

- types of relationships and settings;
- the possible intersections and overlaps between contexts; and
- perpetrators' exploitation of victim vulnerabilities and the opportunities afforded by both the relationship (e.g., a care/supervision relationship) and the setting or context (e.g., child-focused organisation or institution).

This schematic representation can be used to help focus questions on, for example:

- the different programmatic areas at the policy level that exist to address these different dimensions and whether/how they interrelate; and
- the range of prevention approaches targeting these diverse circumstances.

The components of the mapping shown in Figure B1—relationships, contexts, vulnerabilities and grooming—are further described below.

Relationships

Based on the literature reviewed, there are three major relationship groups:

- Intra-familial relationships—These comprise a range of familial ties between perpetrators and victims. Depending on the familial context, friends of the family can be considered part of the family. Whether they are blended or biological, familial relationships are often characterised by privacy, complex attachments, frequent and intimate contact, and gender role expectations (e.g., paternal authority). As discussed in the following section, familial environments can contain a range of risk factors—such as family violence, dysfunction and disadvantage—that can increase the risk of child sexual abuse occurring as well, either from a parent or other relative. We have made a distinction in Figure B1 between adult offenders and young people who engage in sexually abusive behaviours.
- Extra-familial relationships—These are also interpersonal relationships between perpetrators and victims; however, they are facilitated by somewhat looser or more formal social connections, such as schools, sports organisations or neighbourhood ties. Within this, we specifically draw out:
  - relationships based on care, supervision or authority;

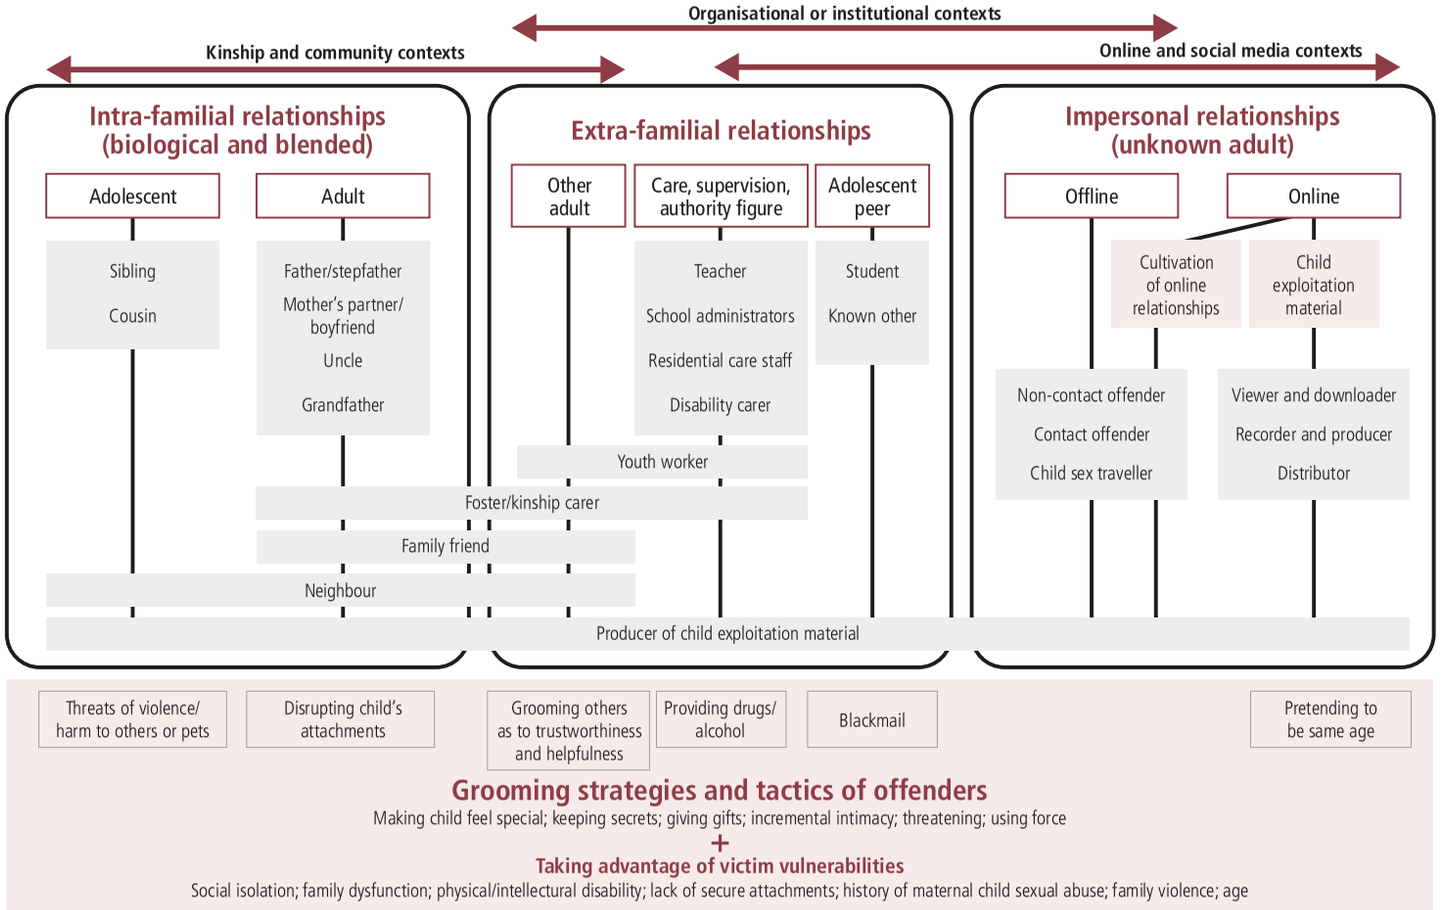

Figure B1: Conceptual map of relationships and contexts in which child sexual abuse occurs

WEB.0061.001.0060

WEB.0061.001.0061

  - other adult relationships, such as family friends, youth workers, or neighbours; and
  - peer relationships between young people (e.g., young students in school).
- Impersonal relationships—This is where there is little to no initial relationship between the victim and perpetrator. This can include "stranger" child sex offenders, who may approach children in public settings such as playgrounds, shopping malls or sporting events. Based on the available research and consultations with key stakeholders, online settings appear to be a key way for adults to manufacture and cultivate a new relationship with a child or young person (in addition to enabling access to child exploitation material [CEM]). As Figure B1 suggests visually, there is some complex overlaps and interconnections between online and offline sexual offending. For example, an individual may use the Internet to make connections with brothel owners and others (including family members) in another country and then travel to that country to engage in contact sex offending. Alternatively, they may use online platforms to engage in "pay-per-view" live streaming, where the offender requests specific sexual activities with a child in another country, which they view online. The production of child exploitation material is also associated with the perpetration of sexual abuse in known relationships (e.g., through contact offending against a child known to the offender).

Contexts or settings

Following consultations with key stakeholders, as well as examining situational crime prevention insights (as outlined in Part A), it became clear that relationship dynamics are not sufficient to explain the occurrence of child sexual abuse. It is necessary to also look at the context or setting in which that relationship is located. Contexts (i.e., the situational environment in which the abuse occurs) influence the nature of the relationship between perpetrators and victims, providing a range of routine activities and interactions with children (Smallbone et al., 2008), and thus shaping how the opportunity to offend against a child presents itself. We have identified two relevant contexts:

- Kinship and community contexts—This refers to environments that are particularly relevant for Indigenous Australians. First, familial relationships in Indigenous communities are broader than those in Anglo-European cultures, as well as having a complex arrangement of social interactions and roles. This means that individuals who may not be biologically related are nevertheless considered to be family members within the particular kinship arrangements of an Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander community. Second, a history of colonisation, disenfranchisement and child removal, and the subsequent secondary effects of these traumas means that the community context for many Indigenous children includes a range of risk factors associated with child sexual abuse.
- Organisational and institutional contexts—This refers to settings such as schools, sporting or youth organisations, religious institutions, out-of-home care, child care, and so on, where a relationship between children and adults is a feature of the organisation or institution, and where, generally, there is a hierarchical relationship between children and adults.

As shown in Figure B1, the examples given of the relationship between perpetrator and child (e.g., father, teacher, etc.) is influenced by these contexts, such that a neighbour, family friend or carer may be more properly understood as being located within a familial context compared to an organisational one.

Vulnerabilities and grooming

We can add two more issues to the dimensions of relationships and contexts: victim vulnerabilities, which are exploited by adult perpetrators and young people who sexually abuse, and specific grooming strategies, which are more likely to be used by adult perpetrators.

In line with Smallbone et al.'s theory (2008) that the opportunity for child sexual abuse requires both a motivated offender and a likely victim, victim vulnerabilities are likely to be consistent across the types of child sexual abuse, although they are likely to be particularly salient in relationships based outside the parental family unit. Victim vulnerabilities include: social isolation, family dysfunction, physical and intellectual disabilities, lack of secure attachments, history of maternal child sexual abuse, family violence, and older age (i.e., the risk of sexual abuse increases with a child's age).

Following on from this, there is a range of grooming tactics that adult perpetrators use. To an extent, the literature suggests broadly similar tactics across different types of child sexual abuse (e.g., Craven et al., 2006). These include:

- making the child feel special (e.g., by making them feel older or more sophisticated than other children; providing them with gifts);
- creating a sense of trust and intimacy (which can extend to the child's family);
- gradual introduction to sexual content or sexual touch; and
- secret keeping (which can have a range of functions, such as creating trust, isolating the child from others, creating a sense of complicity or using blackmail).

However, there are some strategies that are more suited to particular relationships or contexts than others. For example, threats of harm to others may be particularly suited to familial relationships, while pretending to be a child or young person is suited to online contexts.

B2.2 Risk factors associated with the perpetration of child sexual abuse

Overall, risk factors associated with child sexual abuse perpetrated by adult offenders differ somewhat from those identified for adults who maltreat children more generally. The literature indicates that the following are factors found among adult perpetrators of child sexual abuse:

- having a history of being violent or delinquent;
- displaying maladaptive sexual orientations, such as having deviant sexual fantasies;
- having social deficits, such as a lack of empathy or poor social skills; and
- evidence of problematic attitudes and cognitive beliefs, such as attitudes towards rape, belief in the "sexual precociousness of children" and cognitive rationalisations that facilitate sexual offending against children; for example, that sexual activity isn't harmful if motivated by love for the child (Whitaker et al., 2008).

Such analyses do not distinguish between types of child sexual abuse. In our review and synthesis of the literature, there do appear to be some common characteristics of perpetrators associated with particular types of child sexual abuse (see Table B1 on page 52 and Box A3 on page 22). In addition to the general factors above, the following linkages can be made:

- perpetrators living with domestic violence is associated with perpetration in familial relationships and with young people who sexually abuse;
- across almost all types of child sexual abuse there is mixed research support for perpetrators having a history of committing or having been subject to physical or sexual abuse, neglect and violence;
- there is mixed research support for adult perpetrators:
  - having a non-sexual criminal background;
  - misusing alcohol and illegal substances;
  - being of low socio-economic status;
- there is limited research support for adult perpetrators:
  - having a criminal background that is sexual in nature;
  - becoming a parent at an early age;
  - growing up in a large family (3 or more children);
  - having psychological deficits; and
- individuals committing sexual abuse in authority and care relationships do not appear to share the same risk factors for their perpetration as those in other relationships. There is also little indication of the nature of these risk factors, suggesting that prevention for these types of perpetrators may need to focus on situational elements.

WEB.0061.001.0063

Section A4 provides a more detailed discussion of these risk factors and their association with different types of child abuse and perpetrators.

B3 Current and future directions for prevention and early intervention

B3.1 Mapping current approaches

Part A of this report provides a review of national and international approaches to the prevention of child sexual abuse. This section briefly discusses current approaches to the prevention of both child sexual abuse and child maltreatment more broadly.

Child-sexual-abuse-specific prevention

There are a number of prevention activities specifically aimed at preventing the sexual abuse of children (see Box B1 on page 54). Through desktop reviews and in consultation with key agencies and researchers, we observed that these efforts are predominantly located within the following domains:

- protective behaviours education for children—increasingly referred to as child abuse prevention education, which may also involve parents, and broader school personnel or systems;
- situational crime prevention—applied to risky settings, organisations and institutions;
- therapeutic interventions for problematic sexual behaviours and sexually abusive behaviours—targeting children and young people who are at risk of sexually offending, prior to their involvement with the criminal justice system;
- therapeutic prevention of re-offending—targeting:
  - young people who have come to the attention of the criminal justice system for sexually abusive behaviours;
  - detected and convicted adult sex offenders;
- criminal justice and other statutory responses—to identify and monitor sex offenders and their engagement with children and young people; and
- therapeutic work with children and adolescents who have experienced sexual abuse—to reduce their vulnerability to re-victimisation.

These efforts tend to lie at either end of the spectrum of prevention. On the one hand there is significant activity in educating children about child sexual abuse and increasing their capacity to deter potential perpetrators—what, from a public health perspective, could be considered primary prevention. On the other there is significant focus on engaging with perpetrators, whether therapeutically or punitively (tertiary prevention). This situation is not unique to Australia, though. Finkelhor (2009) characterised the situation in the USA in similar terms. He concluded that criminal justice approaches to prevention (e.g., sex offender registration and monitoring) have not been effective, while the evidence on the effectiveness of educational programs in reaching "certain of their goals" has been promising, but decidedly unclear as to whether they result in a reduction in victimisation.

Broader child maltreatment prevention

As Higgins and Katz (2008) outlined, a holistic approach to the prevention of child abuse and neglect integrates primary, secondary and tertiary prevention:

WEB.0061.001.0065

Box B1: Summary of current approaches to child sexual abuse prevention

Protective behaviours (child abuse prevention) education

Walsh et al. (2013) examined various child sexual abuse prevention education programs in the various states and territories of Australia and found no consistent policies regarding: how child sexual abuse prevention is or should be taught to students; whether students' knowledge, skills, confidence or actual use of the strategies should be assessed following the education; whether the teachers receive training; or even if parents should know that their children are being taught prevention strategies.

Situational crime prevention principles

Across Australia, there are no comprehensive policies on how institutions and organisations with a large child and youth cohort should prevent child sexual abuse. However, all states and territories make Working With Children Checks at the pre-employment stage mandatory for any role where work with children is undertaken. Police checks are also routinely undertaken for new or potential employees. Research has suggested that these measures are not enough for preventing sexual abuse in institutions and organisations, as the majority of abusers are never reported in the first instance (Finkelhor, 2009).

Situational crime prevention has been suggested as the ideal model for child sexual abuse prevention at an organisational level (Smallbone et al., 2008). This would involve ensuring that it becomes difficult to perpetrate child sexual assault—for instance within a school, sporting organisation or religious institution—through, for example, whole-of-organisation policies that clearly outline acceptable and unacceptable behaviour from those in authority positions to children, the installation of closed-circuit televisions (CCTVs), or ensuring classroom interiors are visible from common hallways or that doors contain clear glass. However, Australian institutions and organisations are not compelled by any legislation or incentives to introduce policies to prevent child sexual abuse. Outlines of optimal prevention strategies (usually 10-step strategies involving adults as well as children) have been created; for example, by the Canadian Red Cross, Smallbone et al. (2008) or Erooga, Allnock, & Telford (2012). Their efficacy is currently unknown.

Therapeutic interventions for problematic sexual behaviours and sexually abusive behaviours

Currently in Victoria, therapeutic treatment orders and sexually abusive treatment services are available for children and youth who are displaying problematic sexual behaviours and sexually abusive behaviours and are at risk of offending, but before they enter the criminal justice system. In South Australia, Child Protection Services offer counselling to children aged between 2 and 12 years who exhibit problematic sexual behaviours, but this is not linked to any courts or legislation. In New South Wales, sexual assaults are only dealt with by courts, and the majority of counselling for youth is only available within juvenile justice centres (although some courts can refer adolescents to independent therapy). It is unclear whether Queensland and Western Australia offer any services for youth with problematic sexual behaviours.

Therapeutic prevention of re-offending

Therapeutic work with adult perpetrators of child sexual abuse to prevent re-offending is currently limited to prison populations and, in a majority of cases, is on a self-referral rather than compulsory basis. During consultations, stakeholders advised us that two effective treatment programs to prevent recidivism have been recently defunded (Cedar Cottages, NSW, and Safecare, WA) due to perceptions from the respective governments that harsher prison penalties rather than therapeutic work should be undertaken with all child sexual assault perpetrators (Cant & Penter, 2006; Goodman-Delahuntly, 2009).

Criminal justice and other statutory responses

Currently, all states and territories have a sex offenders registry; however, the majority are not available for public searches. There is also a national registry, Australian National Child Offenders Register (ANCOR), that is in place to allow ease of cross-jurisdiction information sharing. Although all the state and territory registries have been set up under the national model legislation agreed to by all states and territories in 2004, there is a great deal of leeway in the administration of the registers, which is often contrary to what was agreed to by the state and territory Police Ministers' Council in 2004. For example, individuals convicted of a sexual offence and placed on the local register should have legal recourse to appeal their being placed on the register, but this is currently unavailable in any jurisdiction. Only WA offers a service to members of the public to undertake a search of their sex offenders registry; however, individuals must disclose their personal information (including driver's licence number) and agree to not distribute the information to any other parties. (The supplied photo of the sex offender is watermarked with the enquirer's name to prevent the photo from being uploaded online or circulated.)

Therapeutic work with children and adolescents who have experienced sexual abuse

Service providers of counselling and therapeutic work for victims of child sexual abuse include organisations such as the Australian Childhood Foundation, Berry Street, Bravehearts, and the Children's Protection Society (among many others). Counselling and therapeutic services are often in high demand, and due to budgetary constraints adult survivors of child sexual abuse are often placed on waiting lists. Child victims of sexual abuse are prioritised for receiving counselling.

- primary or universal interventions are strategies to reduce risk factors for maltreatment that are targeted at whole communities;
- secondary interventions target families who are at risk for child maltreatment; and
- tertiary interventions seek to reduce the long-term implications of maltreatment that has occurred, and prevent recurrence (Holzer, Higgins, Bromfield, Richardson, & Higgins, 2006).

Child maltreatment prevention can only be effective when the broader social policy contexts around childhood that intersect with the protection of children and prevention of harm are acknowledged and included in a prevention agenda, such as:

- public health services, including mental health, disability, maternal and child health services, etc.;
- housing and homelessness services, including refugee resettlement;
- education;
- domestic violence, juvenile sex offenders, crime prevention and justice system responses;
- drug and alcohol and other adult-focused services;
- Indigenous health and social services;
- child care and early childhood services;
- employment and income security; and
- family law and family relationships services (Higgins & Katz, 2008).

As Higgins and Katz (2008) noted:

> The challenge for these services is that child protection is not their "core business", and often the families who are at risk of involvement in the statutory child protection system are not high priorities for their services. Only by working together in a multidisciplinary way can these services really come together to protect children. (p. 46)

WEB.0061.001.0067

In the National Child Protection Clearinghouse's[12] audit of prevention programs operating in Australia at the time, Poole and Tomison (2000) classified the main program types into six categories of prevention activities (see Box B2).

Across prevention efforts specifically addressing child sexual abuse and child maltreatment more generally, similar issues have been raised about the right balance of prevention. There has been a tendency to focus on individual-level risk factors, rather than factors that occur or are better addressed at the community or social level, such as partner violence and social norms (such as the sexual nature of children, gender norms or the acceptability of violence towards children) (Klevens & Whitaker, 2007; O'Donnell et al., 2008; Tomison & Wise, 1999).

Box B2: Classification of child abuse prevention activities

Poole and Tomison (2000) used the following classification of child abuse prevention activities in their audit:

> Community education—media campaigns (e.g., Australians Against Child Abuse (AACA) Every Child is Important), information materials, and training programs for professionals and community groups.
> Personal safety or protective behaviours programs have the aim of educating school-age children to protect themselves from sexual abuse. The programs attempt to involve the children's parents in the program in order to raise community awareness of sexual abuse and to teach parenting skills related to protecting children and detecting signs of abuse (Plummer, 1993).
>
> Family support programs generally have two major facets: to provide counselling and support, which may incorporate respite care or a home visiting service, to families who are defined as "at-risk" of maltreating their child and who are socially isolated (James, 1994); and secondly to enhance parenting skills (provide parent education), which aims to minimise the likelihood of maltreatment by enhancing parenting skills, and increasing parental knowledge of appropriate child development.
> Child focused programs. It was apparent in previous Clearinghouse Audits (Tomison, 1996a) that some prevention programs, particularly substitute care programs and individual child counselling programs, focused predominantly on children and young people, without the involvement of, or minimal focus on, their families. It was therefore decided to include a "child focused" category to incorporate programs where the focus was almost entirely on the maltreated or "at-risk" child.
> Offender programs are primarily designed to prevent the recurrence of sexually or physically abusive behaviour, or the development of such behaviour, and usually focus on males. Thus, the programs incorporate elements of tertiary prevention (the prevention of re-offending) and secondary prevention (targeting young males at risk of offending).
> Child and family centres, frequently referred to as "one-stop shops", adopt a holistic approach to preventing child maltreatment and promoting healthy communities. Similar programs, known as Family Resource Centers, have been operating in the United States for some time (Tomison & Wise, 1999). Designed to be non-stigmatising and easily accessible, the centres offer highly integrated services that can promote parental competence, meet the diverse needs of children and families, and facilitate a sense of community and the development of social support networks within neighbourhoods. Child and family centres are a relatively new initiative, which is reflected in their small numbers. Many of the centres are run by the large non-government agencies, such as Barnardos and Burnside. B3.2 Future directions

Based on our synthesis of the literature and issues that arose through consultations, we see two broad directions that could be taken to further develop prevention efforts against child sexual abuse and exploitation:

- continue to develop an integrated prevention framework based on a public health approach to prevention; and
- increase the focus on "upstream" risk factors to address underlying factors at a population level.
- These inter-related directions and their implications for policy, practice and programming, and research are examined in the following sections.

Development of an integrated prevention framework

Numerous policies (including the National Framework for Protecting Australia's Children; COAG, 2009b), research studies, and expert commentary have noted that statutory responses are not sufficient or sustainable and are often unable to prevent future harm (e.g., O'Donnell et al., 2008). There is agreement that a public health model should be a framework in which to situate the prevention of child abuse, including child sexual abuse; however, there does not appear to be a shared understanding about what this looks like in practice. Through the course of this project we observed a relatively fragmented understanding of prevention across different service systems and agencies.

Given the diverse circumstances in which sexual abuse occurs, as well as differences between adolescents who sexually abuse and adult sex offenders, having a diversity of tools and approaches is crucial. However, the absence of a shared framework for understanding how these fit together means that instead of complementary strategies, there can be competing and contradictory approaches. The consequences of this include:

- diverse or inconsistent criteria informing the funding of programs;
- poor program and initiative design (e.g., lack of a theory of change; not evidence-informed; inappropriate "dosage");
- "sluggish" development of best-practice principles and approaches;
- disconnected or ad hoc prevention activities;
- disconnected "communities of practice";
- weak or inappropriate evaluation methodologies; and
- non-comparable evaluation and research findings.

In combination, these issues mean that despite significant efforts at the program and practice levels, it is very difficult to develop a coherent understanding about "what works" or what is promising (i.e., programs based on theoretically sound principals but yet to be examined empirically).

An integrated public health approach to prevention involves:

- having a clear, shared understanding about primary prevention. Primary prevention is concerned with collective behaviour change rather than just increasing knowledge or awareness about an issue (though it may do this as part of the process). This is an important distinction. Increasing knowledge or awareness of child sexual abuse is a characteristic of primary prevention but it is not sufficient on its own to achieve behaviour change. To change behaviour, primary prevention efforts target people's fears, self-efficacy, perceptions of social norms, attitudes, barriers, risks and rewards, intentions, and skills and competencies to change people's engagement in harmful behaviours. For example, fear campaigns have been a key strategy in public health efforts to reduce smoking, drink driving, and speeding.
- addressing the three levels of prevention (primary, secondary and tertiary)—We also have an additional level between primary and secondary, which could be classified as "progressive universalism" or "proactive identification".[13] This is to distinguish between strategies that target the underlying factors or conditions for child sexual abuse compared to strategies to identify at-risk children and families and connect them to early intervention services. Many service systems for child development and wellbeing are universal and there can be a tendency to collapse the focus of these slightly different prevention strategies.

- considering different perspectives of prevention and where they are most likely to be effective regarding the above (e.g., developmental prevention, situational prevention, community-based prevention, prevention education, and criminal justice reponses);
- identifying the types of strategies associated with each level of prevention (e.g., prevention education); and
- applying the range of settings to which they are best suited.

The benefits of this include:

- enabling the different service systems and agencies to see where their respective prevention efforts sit alongside, and as a complement to, other approaches;
- enabling better collaboration between service systems and agencies; and
- providing a funding rationale for governments and others to fund different types of child sexual abuse prevention initiatives, the findings of which can be used to further inform an integrated prevention framework.

Figure B2 brings these elements together. The key point being made here is that the spectrum from primary to tertiary prevention requires diverse yet complementary approaches and understandings about child safety and perpetrator behaviour.

Figure B3 (on page 59) explains these elements in more detail and uses a matrix approach to demonstrate how these elements interrelate. The matrix brings together: the levels of prevention, domains of focus (using a socio-ecological model) and the range of more specific 13 For example, progressive universalism might lead to strategies to identify and target further interventions tailored to meet the needs of groups of children whom research has shown have greater vulnerability to child sexual victimisation, such as: children with a disability (Higgins, 2010); children in Indigenous communities (particularly remote communities experiencing significant social disadvantage; Scott & Higgins, 2011); same-sex attracted young people (Higgins, 2010); and children who have already experienced other forms of child maltreatment (Price-Robertson, Rush, Wall, & Higgins, 2013).

Level of prevention	Aims	Example strategies	Levels of the social ecology: Individual	Relationships/ families	Organisation/ institution	Community	Society
Primary	To prevent abuse before it occurs by: ■ addressing the underlying factors that facilitate it ■ strengthening the factors that act as buffers against violence ■ changing behaviours that are abusive or that ignore, normalise, deny abuse Change is sought at the level of the whole population.	Increasing awareness of the nature, scope and effects of abuse	Protective behaviours
		Increasing knowledge about effects, appropriate social response, who perpetrators are, perpetrator behaviours	Public education campaigns
		Increasing skills	Comprehensive prevention education			Community-based prevention
		Changing norms/providing new norms					Social norms/social marketing campaigns
		Policies, practices and workforce planning to ensure all child-focused organisations are child-safe			Situational crime prevention Working with children checks
		Addressing structural factors that underpin risk factors				Community-based prevention	Social and economic policies
Progressive universalism	To provide universal support while recognising differential barriers for some sections of the population (who do not necessarily require intervention)	Targeting/staggering service provision of universal family or health services to isolated, more disadvantaged areas	Comprehensive prevention education Maternal and child health care Family support services
		Proactively identifying potential risk factors (e.g., sexualised behaviour) through universal service systems and appropriate referral support pathways	Developmental prevention
Early intervention (secondary prevention)	To target and ameliorate "indicated behaviours" and other risk factors associated with child sexual abuse Interventions are targeted at at-risk individuals or populations who show evidence of potential victimisation or perpetration	Screening individuals/families for particular risk factors and providing appropriate service/intervention
		Providing at-risk populations (e.g., adolescent boys with history of sexual victimisation) with effective therapeutic support for victimisation	Trauma counselling
		Planning policies, practices and workforce to ensure organisations/ institutions providing care/guardianship identify and address areas of risk			Situational crime prevention
		Implementing trauma-informed practice across mental health and human service systems (e.g., child welfare systems or alcohol/drug treatment that are aware of maternal histories of abuse; schools)			Trauma-informed practice
Tertiary prevention	To provide effective and appropriate therapeutic and other responses to address the short- and long-term effects of victimisation or to prevent re-perpetration Interventions are targeted at identified individuals and their families	Responding appropriately to critical incidents
		Providing timely trauma-related support for child sexual abuse victims	Trauma-specific support
		Providing effective therapeutic interventions with young people who sexually abuse and their families	Therapeutic interventions
		Conducting effective therapeutic interventions with adult offenders	Therapeutic and rehabilitative interventions
		Ensuring effective criminal justice responses to sex offenders	Sex offender management Effective investigative practice				Law reform and training prevention approaches, which we have situated according to their "best fit" relative to the levels of prevention and the social ecology. Specifically:

- Prevention is situated within a public health model, which distinguishes between the aims of primary, secondary and tertiary prevention strategies. It is important to note that in reality there are overlaps in these levels of prevention. However, as concepts they enable a systematic approach to prevention.
- The aims or goals of these levels are described. As noted, a key aim of primary prevention is behaviour change. Strategies therefore need to target the range of factors influencing behaviour, such as attitudes, knowledge and skills. Such strategies are generally targeted at individuals (even if delivered universally); however, other approaches, such as community prevention or situational prevention, can improve organisational and local-level responses.

This mapping highlights that:

- primary prevention involves multiple prevention approaches across the social ecology that should be complementary (however, within the literature or in practice there is little "marrying up" between these efforts);
- community and society-level factors are best targeted through primary prevention approaches that aim to make changes at the population level; and
- the reach of particular approaches to prevention across the social ecology (e.g., therapeutic responses) can be very narrow.

A tailored approach for adolescents with sexually abusive behaviours

A critical task related to this priority is the development of a prevention framework specifically designed for adolescents with sexually abusive behaviours. As noted throughout, the onset of adolescent perpetration and adult offending suggest two distinct populations. Based on the available evidence, prevention and intervention for adolescent perpetrators should focus on:

- preventing domestic and family violence—research and clinincal expertise suggest signficant overlap between the presence of family violence and young people engaging in sexually abusive behaviours;
- providing early and effective therapeutic support for children and young people disclosing sexual abuse victimisation—there are often histories of sexual victimisation among young people with sexually abusive behaviours;
- related to this, implementing awareness raising and training for educators and other professionals working with children and their families about the dynamics of child sexual abuse as well as behavioural and other markers of possible sexual abuse, including inappropriate sexual or sexualised behaviours; and
- providing developmentally tailored sex education for children and young people about respectful relationships (including sexual relationships), power and consent, the nature and effects of pornography, constructive forms of masculinity, and male desire.

Areas for action

Developing an integrated approach to the prevention of child sexual abuse is a significant undertaking. However, it is our view that without consensus about the aims, strategies and conditions for effective prevention (particularly primary prevention), specific initiatives will remain ad hoc and disconnected. A prevention framework needs to be based on research evidence, have the support of the relevant practice communities, and be an accessible reference for all key players working to prevent child sexual abuse.[14]

Table B2 (on page 61) identifies several strategies that can support the development of an integrated prevention framework. It is not intended to be prescriptive but to provide 14 An example of such a framework for primary prevention is the VicHealth framework to prevent violence against women. Its development was driven by policy, which had interdepartmental mechanisms providing buy-in and support across government and other mechanisms to engage the community and service sector. The framework has had significant influence in enabling a systemic, connected approach to prevention.

suggestions for how the key players—namely policy, practice and research communities—could contribute. We also acknowledge that some of these suggestions may already be underway or in development.

Table B2: Strategies for an integrated approach to prevention of child sexual abuse

Strategies	Policy	Practice	Research
Develop a shared understanding of primary prevention	Facilitate the development of an evidence-based framework for primary prevention to guide prevention initiatives Examine how the framework can articulate with actions under other policy initiatives (e.g., National Plan to Reduce Violence Against Women and Their Children)	Contribute to the development of a shared framework through practice expertise	Contribute to the development of a shared framework through systematic reviews on risk factors for victimisation and perpetration, within a public health framework
Develop a prevention framework specifically tailored for adolescents	Facilitate the development of a tailored framework that draws on research evidence, service information and therapeutic expertise Consider the implications for current prevention activities across settings (which tend to focus on adults and do not address adolescent behaviours)	Contribute clinical and practice expertise to the development of an adolescent framework	Undertake research (e.g., using incidence data) on young people's sexually abusive behaviours across a range of settings (which may also be compared to adult offenders)
Build capacity across program funders, designers and deliverers about effective primary prevention	Explore opportunities to support capacity development across relevant services and program providers engaged in prevention education Examine how different types of education (e.g., protective behaviours, cybersafety, bullying) can be integrated into a broader, developmentally appropriate respectful relationships curriculum	Work with researchers to develop a suite of accessible, practice-relevant tools (e.g., program logics, understandings of theory of change, evaluation methodologies) to enhance prevention education practice Create communities of practice to enhance capacity in prevention education and which draws from learning and expertise in respectful relationships education	Undertake a review and consultations with programmers to identify minimum elements for effective prevention education programs (e.g., National Association of Services Against Sexual Violence standards; respectful relationships standards) Identify key components of effective community-based prevention and social change across different public health issues to identify promising strategies for preventing child sexual abuse

Moving upstream: From "risk factors" to "key determinants"

In tandem with the continued development of a shared understanding of prevention (and particularly primary prevention), a second key direction relates to focusing efforts further "upstream". This refers to tracing problems back to the source. This is different to saying something is causally related. Causality is generally measured by how direct the relationship between a variable and an outcome is. Upstream determinants are those that occur at the macro level, and include structural forces such as poverty, government policies, and popular and news media. Their demonstrable influence is often less direct, but they significantly shape people's opportunities in life.

The overall goal of primary prevention is to reduce the actual incidence of child sexual abuse within the population. Working backwards then, it targets the factors that give rise to, or create, the conditions for sexual abuse and influence behaviour.

WEB.0061.001.0073

A range of factors have been identified in the literature such as:

- biologically unrelated male;
- psychological deficits;
- traditional gender values;
- attitudes related to male sexual entitlement and sexual dominance;
- substance misuse;
- highly sexualised environments;
- social isolation;
- low socio-economic status;
- low education;
- childhood neglect;
- childhood physical abuse;
- large family size;
- early parenthood;
- violent behaviour;
- poor family cohesion;
- domestic violence in the family;
- living or working in closed familial and institutional settings.

Some of these have been empirically tested as risk factors that are either associated with sexual abuse or predict it (see Box A3 and Table B1).

Some of these factors are common across child maltreatment, but their relationship to child sexual abuse appears to be weaker and less predictive. This is to be expected given the diverse circumstances in which sexual abuse occurs. While it is possible to address each of these factors, it would be very costly in time and funds to do so. It is necessary to move beyond risk factors to consider common underlying causes or conditions.

On this, it is instructive to refer to the literature on the social determinants of health, also sometimes understood as the "new public health". This enables us to consider the underlying conditions that give rise to the above issues. Social determinants are defined as:

> the conditions in which people are born, grow, live, work and age. These circumstances are shaped by the distribution of money, power and resources at global, national and local levels. (World Health Organization [WHO], 2014)

Social determinants can also be referred to as the "causes behind the causes" (i.e., upstream determinants). This means looking to the underlying conditions giving rise to issues, such as family dysfunction and instability, poor social skills, substance misuse, poor parenting and so on, all of which have been identified as risk factors for sexual abuse perpetration.

Focusing on social determinants enables prevention efforts to address root causes in a more efficient manner. In their review on gaps and directions in the prevention of child abuse and neglect, Klevens and Whitaker (2007)[15] argued that "preventative interventions targeting risk factors that are highly prevalent in a population will generate a greater impact on the problem at the population level than targeting factors that are less prevalent", even if the risk factors appear to be less directly related (p. 364). They further noted that the reach and mode of delivery of prevention strategies are important dimensions not only for achieving population-level behaviour change (which is the aim of primary prevention), but are attractive from a "cost-containment" perspective. That is, initiatives are likely to be more cost-effective where: the deliverer is more whole-of-community (e.g., public insititutions compared to individual service providers) and where the recipient is more expansive (e.g., a whole community compared to groups or individuals).

15 Note that this review did not specifically include the prevention of child sexual abuse.

Areas for action

Based on literature reviewed in Part A, we see child sexual abuse and its pepertration as coalescing around the following key issues:

- children's structural vulnerability relative to adults within social domains such as families, organisations, and institutions;
- forms of masculinity and rigid gender attitudes that endorse men's social dominance, entitlement (including sexual entitlement), authority and control in a range of settings;
- socio-economic disadvantage and income inequality, including gendered socio-economic disadvantage;
- poor or non-existent psycho-social responses for trauma arising from child abuse and neglect (including sexual abuse and witnessing family violence).

These conditions give rise to many of the risk factors listed in the previous section, such as experiencing domestic and family violence; experiences of violence and abuse; substance misuse; social isolation and weak social ties; and poor family cohesion and insecure attachments.

Drawing on analyses of effectiveness in the primary prevention of child maltreatment and child sexual abuse; international approaches to preventing child sexual abuse; and learnings coming from the prevention of sexual assault, family violence and gender-based violence, we have identfied a number of actions (described in more detail below) that could be taken to strengthen current sexual abuse prevention efforts:

- balance children's structural vulnerability in social institutions;
- engage men and boys in the development of gender-equitable relationships in the home, at work and among peers;
- conduct public education/social marketing campaigns;
- address social disadvantage; and
- develop trauma-informed human service systems as an early intervention mechanism.

These are underpinned by elements of an upstream focus: targeting the underlying conditions giving rise to identified risk factors and targeting these conditions at more collective levels (e.g., community and society levels).

Balance children's structural vulnerability in social institutions

Social institutions such as families, schools, and broader civil society engender unequal relationships between adults and children. In many cases this inequality is a way of protecting children and young people to optimise their development. However, there are aspects of this structural inequality that increase children's vulnerablity to sexual abuse such as:

- beliefs in adults' superiority and natural authority over children;
- attitudes that diminish children's views and self-expression about events, feelings and relationships; and
- beliefs that children should not challenge adults, or that challenge is deliberative provocative.

These beliefs and attitudes can mean: there is an assumption that adults' treatment of and engagement with children and young people is appropriate or in the child's best interest; adults can manipulate a range of situations and groom children with little intervention; and children lie or are confused when they disclose incidents of sexual abuse.

Engage men and boys

There are many initiatives that attempt to engage boys in the development of gender-equitable relationships in the home, at work and among peers in terms of violence against women. In relation to child sexual abuse, two broad approaches can be taken:

- integrate into the initiatives to prevent violence against women key risk factors for child sexual abuse, such as: sexual entitlement, entitlement to having emotional needs met in non-reciprocal ways; and age-related power and vulnerability; and

- integrate gender equity into family services and maternal and child health services regarding gendered expectations about child care and division of labour following the birth of a child. Strategies to do this could have an effect on:
  - family dynamics;
  - women's social isolation following the birth of child;
  - the prevalence of family and domestic violence;
  - men modelling gender-equitable behaviours to boys; and
  - challenging norms that excuse the use of power, control and domninance in relationships.

Conduct public education/social marketing campaigns

- Public education/social marketing campaigns about the nature of child sexual abuse and who are likely perpetrators could be considered in order to address:
- silence surrounding child sexual abuse;
- how children's vulnerability relative to adults can conceal child sexual abuse;
- misinformation about perpetrators, which inhibits appropriate help seeking and acknowledging wrong-doing;
- community capacity and willingess to respond to disclosures appropriately; and
- the sexualisation of children and young people in popular culture, consumer and other media settings.[16]

Address social disadvantage

- Although socio-economic disadvantage is not associated with child sexual abuse to the same extent as child maltreatment more generally, it does increase the likelihood of sexual abuse occurring. Addressing social disadvantage could:
- reduce mothers' social isolation and their gendered inequality compared to men;
- lessen the prevalence of family and domestic violence;
- improve the collective efficacy and capacity to appropriately intervene in circumstances related to child sexual abuse (e.g., controlling behaviours exhibited by male partners); and
- increase early intervention with perpetrators and young people who sexually abuse.

Develop trauma-informed human service systems

- In addition to specialist trauma services, other human services that are trauma-informed can support child sexual abuse prevention efforts by:
- addressing maternal histories of child sexual abuse, which can affect parenting and protective capacities, is a risk factor for future victimisation for themselves and their children, and leads to a range of other negative outcomes for mothers; and
- acknowledging at an early stage any developmental risk factors for perpetration.

As in the previous section, we have identified a number of strategies that could fall under the above five areas across the social ecology. These are detailed in Table B3 (on page 65).

16 In their review of the research evidence relating to the effectiveness of social marketing campaigns in preventing child abuse and neglect, Horsfall, Bromfield, and McDonald (2010) concluded that although the evidence is mixed, social marketing campaigns to address child maltreatment are most effective when they (a) use mass media paired with a community-level strategy; (b) don't rely solely on television advertising; (c) are aligned with support services; (d) suggest concrete actions that people can take; (e) are sensitive to the needs of the target audience; and (f) are based on a solid theoretical framework. Given the paucity of the evidence base, they also emphasised the importance of any such interventions being thoroughly evaluated. They stated: "the integration of both mass media and community-level strategies appreciates that attitudes and behaviours are complex and that a campaign is unlikely to produce long-term change without broader social reinforcement. Community-level strategies recognise that individual behaviour does not occur in isolation. Social relationships create the environment to either support or challenge child maltreatment, through neighbourhoods, schools, workplaces, health services and other institutions" (p. 24).

Table B3: Upstream actions for preventing child sexual abuse

Action area	Individual	Relationships/ families	Organisation/institution	Community	Society
Balance children's structural vulnerability	■ Teach children and young people assertive communication and other social intelligence skills	■ Encourage parents to use their skills and equity in own relationships to include and support children in decision-making	■ Screen to prevent known perpetrators from working in child-focused services ■ Manage situational settings to minimise risk (e.g., prepare policies and protocols to respond appropriately to disclosures; train staff to respond appropriately) ■ Include children in policy development and encourage them to develop their own code of conduct ■ Engage in open and egalitarian management and decision-making	■ Address social norms and beliefs about adults' natural authority and superiority over children as part of child safety campaigns
Engage men and boys	■ Implement programs to support healthy sexual and relationships development for children ■ Include sex education in schools that tackles sexualities and sex for pleasure not just sex as biology, e.g.,self-protection skills; safe dating programs; and constructive masculinities and gender equity programs	■ Provide gender equity training for new parents to address changes in roles and expectations	■ Provide organisational training, whole-of-organisation policies, and bystander training on: gender equity; sexual violence; and family violence	■ Introduce community-based initiatives to engage men in gender equity, challenge problematic constructs of masculinity ■ Provide services and referral pathways for men demonstrating aggression and hostility	■ Run social norms campaigns across diverse media platforms to address the sexualisation of children and adolescents
Conduct public education campaigns				■ Conduct public education campaigns to raise awareness about nature and extent of child sexual abuse, who perpetrators are ■ Develop appropriate actionable messages for community members and bystanders matched with resources to assist with taking concrete action ■ Ensure adequate service support for survivors
Address social disadvantage	■ Provide parenting information and peer support groups to address specific needs of socially vulnerable groups		■ Enable women to maintain their connection to paid work	■ Provide outreach services for socially vulnerable groups and young people ■ Introduce place-based prevention strategies to address child wellbeing	■ Provide income support and poverty reduction strategies ■ Enable women to maintain their connection to paid work
Develop trauma-informed human service systems			■ Build awareness among staff of the role and effects of trauma on a range of capacities, using the principles of trauma-informed care ■ Provide early and appropriate therapeutic support for survivors of child sexual abuse ■ Build capacity across service systems to recognise signs of child sexual abuse, problem sexual behaviours and sexually abusive behaviours, and to provide appropriate responses

B3.3 Conclusion

Child sexual abuse is a complex, cross-policy and cross-sector issue. While there are many options for prevention, enormous commitment to prevention among a range of stakeholders, and agreement that child sexual abuse has long-term effects, there are some important tasks to be done to underpin and coordinate this activity.

As discussed throughout, it is necessary to have a shared framework across research, policy and practice communities to guide these different activities.
