TO ALL BODIES OF ELDERS IN AUSTRALIA

Dear Brothers:

Some questions have arisen concerning the statement on page 2 of our letter To All Congregations in Australia dated August 28, 2002: "We have long instructed elders to report allegations of child abuse to the authorities where required by law to do so, even where there is only one witness." This statement needs to be understood in the following context: (1) This was a general letter addressed to the congregation and not specifically to the elders; and (2) the Society has long instructed elders to follow the following procedure:

> "When elders receive reports of physical or sexual abuse of a child, they should contact the Society's Legal Department immediately. Victims of such abuse need to be protected from further danger."–See letter AB:AS To All Bodies of Elders, August 25, 1989, page 3.
> "When a member of the congregation is accused of child molestation, the elders should contact the Society immediately. Some states make it mandatory that elders report an accusation to the proper authorities but other states do not. ... Before speaking to the one accused, the elders should contact the Society."–See letter SA To All Bodies of Elders, November 1, 1995, page 1.

It must be appreciated that the question of child abuse is a complicated matter and that there can be no blanket direction given to the elders throughout the country, or even state by state. Whether or not they are "required by law to do so," can only be determined at the time when elders contact the Society after receiving a report of child abuse. If the law requires them to report the matter, the Society has always, at that time, advised elders to do so. Since there is no clear precise legal definition of "child abuse," and since laws may vary from state to state and are changed from time to time, it is only when all the facts of a particular case are available that proper direction can be given in such matters.Some elders have been concerned about the question of confidentiality, having in mind what the Scriptures say on the subject. (Proverbs 11:13; 15:22) If, after contacting the Society, it is determined that the elders should report a matter such as child abuse to the authorities, it wouldnot be considered to be a breach of confidentiality to make such a report. At times, there may be other Bible principles that must be weighed against the need for confidentiality. (For example, see Awake! January 22, 1985, page 8.) Nevertheless, elders should always be conscious of their Scriptural responsibility to keep matters confidential. In this way they can be "like a hiding place from the wind and a place of concealment from the rainstorm." (Isaiah 32:2; See also The Watchtower April 1, 1971, pages 222-224.) However, there are times when elders must reveal confidential matters in order to protect the sheep. For example, Our Kingdom Ministry, April 1999, on page 7, stated:

> "The question has been asked whether elders should supply information to secular authorities when they learn that a brother or sister has been involved in a serious crime. ... If an elder learns of some serious crime on the part of a member of the congregation, they may, in some circumstances, be obliged to report the matter, or provide information to secular authorities."

In all such cases, the elders would want to reach any decision to report the matter or provide information to secular authorities only after consultation with the Society, as stated in Our Kingdom Ministry:

> "Even in such cases, it is important that the elders maintain confidentiality to the extent possible, and elders should always contact the Society before providing any information on confidential matters to secular authorities."

We also want to encourage you to continue providing follow-up assistance for those who have been victims of child abuse. From time to time, the Society has provided assistance to elders to help them to become more effective shepherds, genuinely interested in the welfare of individuals under their care. (1 Peter 5:2.) For example, some helpful articles are: "Help for Victims of Incest"–The Watchtower, October 1, 1983; "Child Molesting–Every Mother's Nightmare"–Awake! January 22, 1985; "How Can We Protect Our Children?" and "Prevention in the Home"–Awake! October 8, 1993; and "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked!"–The Watchtower, January 1, 1997. While we do not take a secular approach in this regard, by imitating the tender qualities of our loving heavenly Father, Jehovah, and his Son, Jesus, much good can be accomplished in rendering assistance to those who have experienced abuse, or who have other distressing circumstances to deal with.–Matthew 11:28, 29.

To assist in protecting our young children, we are now asking the body of elders to write to the Society before allowing a former child molester to receive any privileges in the congregation that would indicate congregational approval. This would include the handling of microphones, being an attendant, working with the literature, volunteering at a convention or assembly, or even auxiliary pioneering.

We appreciate the time and effort you brothers expend in shepherding the sheep. Please accept our very warm Christian love and greetings.

Your brothers,

Watchtower B. & T. Society

CIRCUIT OVERSEER MEETS WITH ELDERS AND MINISTERIAL SERVANTS
PROGRAM FROM SEPTEMBER 1998 THROUGH FEBRUARY 1999

Theme: Serving With a Self-Sacrificing Spirit (Ro 12:1)

Note to circuit overseer: Ministerial servants will be present for the first 45 minutes of this meeting. An additional 30 minutes will be spent with the elders only, covering pages 118-21 from the 1991 Kingdom Ministry School textbook. In advance, encourage elders to review this material and to bring their Kingdom Ministry School textbooks with them. The entire meeting, including the discussion of other matters on the agenda with the elders, should not exceed two hours

TRODUCTION (5 min.)
To sacrifice means to give up or surrender something valuable
From early times, sacrifices have been a part of pure worship (Ge 4:3, 4)
Self-sacrificing spirit of willing service has always been evident among Jehovah's loyal servants, like the prophet Isaiah, the apostle Paul, "Bible" Brown, John Cutforth, and so on (Isa 6:8; Ac 16:9, 10; jv 433, 527-8)
Christ's love compels us to sacrifice self-interests for Jehovah (Mt 16:24; Ro 12:1; 2Co 5:14, 15)
What are some areas wherein elders and ministerial servants can display a self-sacrificing spirit?

SET EXAMPLE AS A SELF-SACRIFICING EVANGELIZER (10 min.)
Giving up time that might be used for personal pursuits to share in the ministry is self-sacrifice
Jesus set the pattern, taking time to help others late into the evening and early in the morning (Mr 1:32-39)
How much do we exert ourselves in the evangelizing work?
Could you arrange to auxiliary pioneer at least once a year? (Eph 5:15, 16)
Requires discipline and good scheduling (1Ti 4:10)
By word and example, are you teaching your family to make sacrifices for Jehovah?
Can family work together to help wife or children to pioneer instead of working full-time?
...e goal of each Christian should be to conduct at least one home Bible study with someone outside of his own household (km 8/90 1)
A number do not conduct Bible studies because of the commitment of time and effort involved
Could we make the adjustment and sacrifice an hour or two a week for this rewarding activity?
By comparison, how much time is used for pleasures or entertainment?
What is your spirit toward the Bible study activity?
Do you hold back or put forth real effort to cultivate interest?
Do you regularly pray for a Bible study?
Such sacrifices to help others please Jehovah
To a great degree, the congregation relies on your positive example
Help others to enjoy what they are able to do; commend and encourage them (1Th 1:2, 3)
Your good example will allow freeness of speech
Joys outweigh any inconveniences suffered

S-337 5/98 Printed in Australia

DO NOT NEGLECT SACRIFICES OF PRAISE AT CHRISTIAN MEETINGS (10 min.)
Primary purpose of meetings is to praise Jehovah (Ps 26:12; *w*98 3/1 14)
Public expressions of praise at Christian meetings are a part of our sacrifice (Heb 13:15)
Requires sacrificing personal interests to prepare well and attend regularly
In many lands, brothers put forth extraordinary effort to attend and to help others to do so (*yb*97 235-6)
Faith in Jehovah is involved in our willingness to sacrifice
How could lack of faith in the living God affect meeting attendance?
Weighing ourselves down with unnecessary things—excessive recreation, entertainment, extra secular work to obtain personal comforts—could interfere (Heb 12:1)
Many must work hard just to get the necessities of life—food, clothing, and shelter
Some allow secular work to take priority over attendance at meetings
Jesus' counsel to 'seek first the Kingdom' meant not allowing anxiety over providing the necessities of life to interfere with spiritual interests (Mt 6:31-34)
If we exercise faith in him, Jehovah will help us care for family responsibilities without our neglecting worship of him at congregation meetings (1Ti 5:8)
Does your conduct demonstrate faith worthy of imitation? (Heb 13:7)
Hebrews 10:24, 25 says to gather together, "all the more so," especially in these critical times hard to deal with (2Ti 3:1)

LF-SACRIFICING LOVE CONTRIBUTES TO UNITY (10 min.)
Some congregations have had their peace disrupted by disunity among bodies of elders and lack of cooperation on part of ministerial servants (Isa 54:13)
It also interferes with preaching of good news and caring for congregation; impedes flow of God's spirit
Satan directly opposes unity under Christ; aim is to cause division (Eph 1:22; 4:26, 27)
We "allow place for the Devil" if we permit him to play upon our imperfections and fleshly weaknesses, such as keeping account of injuries, pride, feelings of self-importance, resentment at not getting prominence we feel we deserve
When elders and ministerial servants work unitedly within congregational structure, demonstrating self-sacrificing love for one another, great strength results (Ec 4:12)
Christian modesty, meekness, and humility will prevent one from trying to dominate his brothers and impose his opinion (Pr 11:2; Col 3:12; *w*88 10/1 17, par. 9)
One possessing wisdom from above not only avoids being contentious and belligerent but goes out of his way to establish good relations with others
Recent Kingdom Ministry School emphasized need to be receptive to counsel (Heb 12:5, 6)
Rather than wait for someone to offer suggestions, take initiative, and ask for counsel where you perceive you need help
Do not let resentment or pride keep you from listening to observations and counsel from others
A yielding spirit will help us avoid any tendency to retaliate or resort to recrimination
By submitting to headship of Christ and treating one another with love and respect, elders and ministerial servants will protect peace and unity of congregation (Read Philippians 1:1, 27)

LOCAL NEEDS (8 min.)

CONCLUSION (2 min.)
Warmly commend elders and ministerial servants for sacrifices made to serve Jehovah and brothers
In new world, we will be able to look back with satisfaction, knowing that during this urgent time, we did our part, willingly setting aside personal interests for Jehovah's interests (Ps 54:6)

[At this point the ministerial servants should be dismissed. The following material will be considered with the elders only]

HANDLING CASES OF WRONGDOING WITH WISDOM AND MERCY (ks91 118-21) (30 min.)

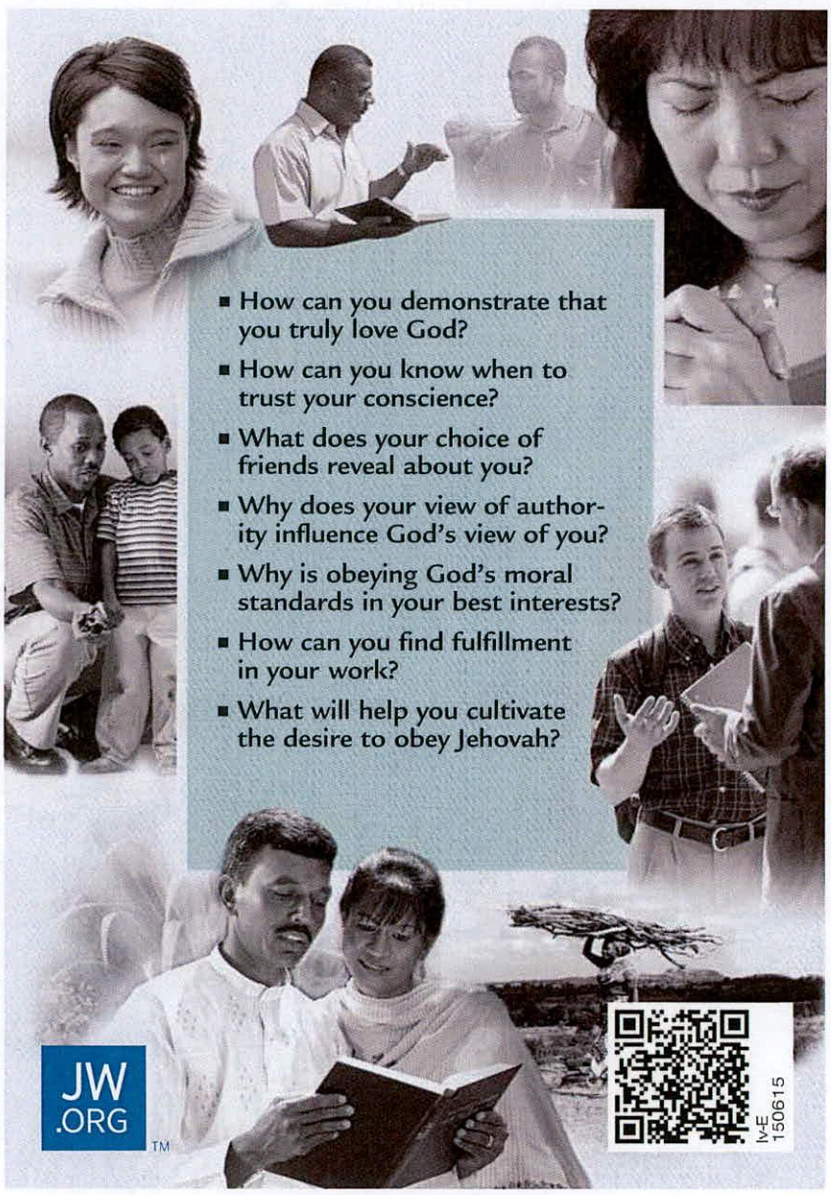
[Cover Unit 5(c), "Handling Cases of Wrongdoing With Wisdom and Mercy," page 118, down to but not including the section on page 121 entitled "If the Decision Is to Disfellowship." Encourage elders to follow along in their textbook. Allow time to look up and apply key scriptures. As you cover this material, include the following questions]

INTRODUCTORY PARAGRAPHS (2 min.)

1. What important lessons are to be learned from the way Jehovah handled the rebellion in Eden? (Elders should imitate Jehovah, taking prompt action according to Bible principles and laws)
2. Before the hearing itself, what should each member of the committee do? (ks91 118, par. 2)

BEFORE FORMING A JUDICIAL COMMITTEE (4 min.)

1. How can the person who is a witness to a serious sin aid both the wrongdoer and the congregation? (The witness should make sure the responsible elders become aware of it. Usually best to approach the person involved first, though it is not wrong to go directly to elders. He should encourage the wrongdoer to approach the elders, then after a reasonable period of time check with the elders to be sure they know) (*w*97 8/15 27, par. 7)
2. When is it not advisable for the witness to confront the accused alone? What should the elders do? (When he is a party to the wrongdoing, is a victim, or is extremely timid. Children who are victims of molestation should not be required to confront the accused. In some cases two elders or an elder and the witness can confront the accused)



DICIAL COMMITTEE HEARING PROCEDURE (24 min.)

1. After opening with prayer, what should the chairman do? How? (State reason for meeting, clearly indicating they are a judicial committee. Best to open with Scriptural point, setting tone. Endeavor to put accused at ease, assuring him of elders' desire to be helpful)
2. Explain what is to be done if the accused person does not admit guilt. (The alleged wrongdoer has right to face his accusers. In most cases, he will have opportunity to hear their testimony and reply. After presenting accusation and its source, the committee will give the accused opportunity to respond. However, if, perhaps due to distance, it is impractical for the witnesses to be present, this should not prevent committee from proceeding)
3. Why is it important for the committee to be skillful in asking questions and in using God's Word? (Skillful use of Bible may reach wrongdoer's heart and move him to repentance. Skillful questions are important to establish facts and discern wrongdoer's attitude. Generally best to avoid such questions as, 'Have you prayed to Jehovah for forgiveness?' Instead, perhaps a more skillful question is, 'What have you done to repair your relationship with Jehovah?' The Kingdom Ministry School textbook, page 112, paragraph 2, says: "Probing questions should not go into needless details, especially in regard to sexual misconduct, unless this is absolutely necessary, such as in determining whether por-nei'a had been committed")
4. How can members of the committee avoid giving the impression of being biased? (They should be quick to listen. Wait until all facts have been heard before making decision)
5. Discuss the various factors to be considered by the committee in their deliberations after all the evidence has been presented. (Additional reference material: ks91 112, par. 7; 113, par. 3; 114, par. 10; 115, par. 3; *w*81 9/1 25-6, pars. 21-3; *w*95 1/1 30, par. 3; it-2 771, par. 5, first sentence)
6. What is to be done if disfellowshipping is necessary? (Inform the wrongdoer of decision orally; do not inform him in writing)

[After covering the above material, consider other necessary matters needing the attention of the body of elders for 45 minutes]

"KEEP YOURSELVES IN GOD'S LOVE"

How can you demonstrate that you truly love God?

How to Treat a Disfellowshipped Person

Few things can hurt us more deeply than the pain we suffer when a relative or a close friend is expelled from the congregation for unrepentant sin. How we respond to the Bible's direction on this matter can reveal the depth of our love for God and of our loyalty to his arrangement.* Consider some questions that arise on this subject.

How should we treat a disfellowshipped person? The Bible says: "Stop keeping company with anyone called a brother who is sexually immoral or a greedy person or an idolater or a reviler or a drunkard or an extortioner, not even eating with such a man." (1 Corinthians 5:11) Regarding everyone who "does not remain in the teaching of the Christ," we read: "Do not receive him into your homes or say a greeting to him. For the one who says a greeting to him is a sharer in his wicked works." (2 John 9-11) We do not have spiritual or social fellowship with disfellowshipped ones. The Watchtower of September 15, 1981, page 25, stated: "A simple 'Hello' to someone can be the first step that develops into a conversation and maybe even a friendship. Would we want to take that first step with a disfellowshiped person?"

Is strict avoidance really necessary? Yes, for several reasons. First, it is a matter of loyalty to God and his Word. We obey Jehovah not only when it is convenient but also when doing so presents real challenges. Love for God moves us to obey all his commandments, recognizing that he is just and loving and that his laws promote the greatest good. (Isaiah 48:17; 1 John 5:3) Second, withdrawing from an unrepentant wrongdoer protects us and the rest of the congregation from spiritual and moral contamination and upholds the congregation's good name. (1 Corinthians 5:6, 7) Third, our firm stand for Bible principles may even benefit the disfellowshipped one. By supporting the decision of the judicial committee, we may touch the heart of a wrongdoer who thus far has failed to respond to the efforts of the elders to assist him. Losing precious fellowship with loved ones may help him to come "to his senses," see the seriousness of his wrong, and take steps to return to Jehovah.—Luke 15:17.

What if a relative is disfellowshipped? In such a case, the close bond between family members can pose a real test of loyalty. How should we treat a disfellowshipped relative? We cannot here cover every situation that may arise, but let us focus on two basic ones.

In some instances, the disfellowshipped family member may still be living in the same home as part of the immediate household. Since his being disfellowshipped does not sever the family ties, normal day-to-day family activities and dealings may continue. Yet, by his course, the individual has chosen to break the spiritual bond between him and his believing family. So loyal family members can no longer have spiritual fellowship with him. For example, if the disfellowshipped one is present, he would not participate when the family gets together for family worship. However, if the disfellowshipped one is a minor child, the parents are still responsible to instruct and discipline him. Hence, loving parents may arrange to conduct a Bible study with the child.*—Proverbs 6:20-22; 29:17.

In other cases, the disfellowshipped relative may be living outside the immediate family circle and home. Although there might be a need for limited contact on some rare occasion to care for a necessary family matter, any such contact should be kept to a minimum. Loyal Christian family members do not look for excuses to have dealings with a disfellowshipped relative not living at home. Rather, loyalty to Jehovah and his organization moves them to uphold the Scriptural arrangement of disfellowshipping. Their loyal course has the best interests of the wrongdoer at heart and may help him to benefit from the discipline received.*—Hebrews 12:11.

Head Coverings—When and Why?

When and why should a Christian woman wear a head covering in connection with her worship? Let us consider the apostle Paul's inspired discussion of this subject. He provides the guidance we need in order to make good decisions, ones that honor God. (1 Corinthians 11:3-16) Paul reveals three factors to weigh: (1) the activities that call for a woman to wear such a covering, (2) the settings in which she should do so, and (3) the motives for her to apply this standard.

The activities. Paul mentions two: prayer and prophesying. (Verses 4, 5) Prayer, of course, is worshipful address to Jehovah. Today, prophesying would apply to any Bible-based teaching that a Christian minister does. Is Paul suggesting, though, that a woman should cover her head whenever she prays or teaches Bible truth? No. The setting in which a woman prays or teaches makes all the difference.

The settings. Paul's words suggest two settings, or spheres of activity—the family and the congregation. He says: "The head of a woman is the man; . . . every woman who prays or prophesies with her head uncovered shames her head." (Verses 3, 5) In the family arrangement, the woman's husband is the one whom Jehovah designates as her head. Unless she gives due recognition to her husband's authority,

MR TOKLEY: Thank you, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: So the whole document is exhibit 29-028, but I order that the chapters other than 1, 2, 3 and 7 at this stage not be published. Yes?

MR STEWART: I have no further questions of this witness, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: Does anyone else have any questions?

MS DAVID: Yes.

<EXAMINATION BY MS DAVID:

MS DAVID: Q. Mr O'Brien, my name is Ms David, and I appear on behalf of [BCG] in these proceedings. Just one area of concern that in my view has been highlighted through these proceedings, and that is the manner in which the scriptures are used to assist a victim. Of course, it is accepted that it is an important part of the healing process --
A. Particularly spiritually, yes.

Q. Spiritually. Again, I want to emphasise that I would think that you would agree that the Commission proceedings highlight the need for, really, a comprehensive approach, including spiritual, that must have psychological or other care given to the particular person abused, so not just spiritual guidance?
A. True, yes, I agree.

Q. What concerns me - and I don't mean any of this as a criticism - is the way in which, sometimes, the scriptures have been used, for example, in the case of [BCG]. She has given evidence that she doesn't recall, in her particular case, receiving any scriptural guidance,

PROLOGUE

Dear Committee Member:

This publication is designed to provide unified theocratic direction to Branch and Country committee members worldwide. This manual also serves as a helpful reference for Governing Body members, helpers to Governing Body committees, and headquarters representatives. Each brother who is provided with a copy of this manual should read it thoroughly from time to time so as to stay up-to-date with theocratic policies and procedures. Elders at Bethel should be foremost in recognizing theocratic instructions, studying them, and applying them diligently.—Gen. 6:22; Ex. 7:6; 39:32; Josh. 1:8; 14:5; Prov. 1:5; John 14:31; 1 Cor. 4:17; Jas. 1:22.

Branch and Country committee members should especially be well acquainted with organizational instructions so that they can help others at Bethel and in the field to accomplish their ministry fully. (2 Tim. 4:5) If because of legal restrictions or some other exceptional circumstance it appears to the committee that a particular organizational policy or procedure cannot be implemented locally, the committee should explain matters clearly in writing to the Governing Body or to the appropriate Governing Body committee and await further direction.

Each Branch and Country committee member is to be provided with a printed personal copy of this manual. If it will be helpful to him, a committee member may also obtain a personal copy of Branch Organization in another language if available. If a brother who serves as a secretary to your committee or to a committee member needs the manual for his work, he too may receive it. This approval applies to printed or electronic versions of Branch Organization in any language, including access in the Bethel edition of Watchtower Library. Care should be taken to ensure that the material is made available only to these authorized brothers, since the content of this manual is confidential and is not to be shared with those outside of Bethel.

The portions of this manual that apply to a Bethel department should be made available to the department overseer. In turn, any Branch Organization instructions that apply to those working in the department should be made available to the members of the department.

When revisions to this manual are received, the updated pages should be placed in the manual and the old pages promptly destroyed. At times, a letter from the Governing Body or one of its committees will set forth updated direction that will supersede the direction herein until revised Branch Organization pages are made available. All should be alert to follow the latest instructions.

In addition to being acquainted with this manual, committee members should keep up-to-date with the Scriptural principles and theocratic direction provided in Dwelling Together in Unity, the Watchtower and Awake! magazines, Our Kingdom Ministry, Organized to Do Jehovah's Will, "Shepherd the Flock of God"—1 Peter 5:2, Circuit Overseer Guidelines, Correspondence Guidelines, and other policy materials. This includes letters that are sent to all branch offices and letters sent to individual branch offices in response to local needs.

Please be assured that we appreciate your hard work in looking after Kingdom interests in your part of the world field. (1 Pet. 5:2, 3) It is our prayer that Jehovah will grant you "the wisdom from above" to care properly for your many responsibilities, all to the praise of our Great Shepherd.—Jas. 3:17, 18; Ps. 23:1.

Your brothers,

Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses

CONFIDENTIAL

GOVERNING BODY AND GOVERNING BODY COMMITTEES

1. Governing Body: The Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses is made up of brothers who are anointed servants of Jehovah God. They have the responsibility for giving direction and impetus to the Kingdom work. (Matt. 24:14, 45-47; Rev. 12:17) Like its first-century counterpart, the Governing Body today looks to Jehovah, the Universal Sovereign, and to Jesus Christ, the Head of the congregation, for direction in all matters. (1 Cor. 11:3; Eph. 5:23) The Governing Body is organized to take the lead as Jehovah directs it by holy spirit. The members of the Governing Body do not regard themselves as the leaders of Jehovah's people. Rather, like all anointed Christians on earth, they "keep following the Lamb [Jesus Christ] no matter where he goes." —Rev. 14:4.

2. The Bible says: "Let all things take place decently and by arrangement." (1 Cor. 14:40) The Governing Body obeys this direction by putting in place various helpful procedures and guidelines that ensure the smooth and orderly operation of the branch offices and the congregations. Responsible Christian men do their part by setting an example of obedience as they put such arrangements into effect. All Christians, especially overseers, should look to Jehovah for guidance and should pray regularly for his direction and blessing. All should show themselves "reasonable, ready to obey" those placed in oversight. (Jas. 3: 17) Thus, each group, congregation, circuit, and branch is blessed with a united, orderly body of believers who reflect well on the happy God.—1 Cor. 14:33; 1 Tim. 1:11.

3. While the Governing Body delegates certain details or responsibilities to committees made up of its own members, to committees made up of other dedicated servants of God, or to instruments such as corporations and legal agencies, the Governing Body always takes the lead in promoting the smooth functioning of the organization and the unity of all of God's people.—Acts 6:1-6; 1 Tim. 1:3; Titus 1:5; Heb. 13:17; w01 1/15 pp. 28-31.

4. The Governing Body gives final approval for new publications as well as new audio and video programs.

5. The Governing Body cares for the appointment and deletion of Branch and Country committee members and designates the brother who will serve as the coordinator of the committee. It also appoints circuit overseers and country representatives. In most cases, such appointments are made based on recommendations received from the Branch Committee. The Governing Body also appoints helpers to Governing Body committees as well as headquarters representatives qualified to make branch visits.

6. The Governing Body may arrange for qualified men to care for theocratic assignments in any locality at any time. It is not bound by recommendations received from other elders. Such recommendations serve merely as a guide and may even be rejected for reasons known to the Governing Body. The Governing Body has the prerogative to use its discretion and look into any matters it deems necessary to examine with regard to the Kingdom work.

CONFIDENTIAL

7. To oversee various aspects of the Kingdom work, six administrative Governing Body committees have been established. [See Chart 1.1.] Their responsibilities are as follows.

8. Coordinators' Committee: This committee oversees legal matters and the use of the media when necessary to convey an accurate picture of our beliefs. It responds to disasters, outbreaks of persecution, and other emergencies affecting Jehovah's Witnesses anywhere in the world. In general, all computer-related issues are also cared for by this committee. However, the Writing Committee oversees matters having to do with the development and maintenance of computer programs and tools used to process and translate publications and to publish them in electronic format, including MEPS, the Watchtower Translation System (WTS), Watchtower Library, and jw.org.

9. Personnel Committee: This committee oversees the arrangements for the physical and spiritual welfare and assistance of Bethel family members earth wide. (Eph. 4:3; Phil. 2:1-5; Jas. 5:14-16) It oversees the selecting and inviting of new members of Bethel families, Bethelites in foreign service, construction servants and volunteers, Assembly Hall servants, part-time and full-time commuters, and temporary volunteers and handles questions regarding their service. Those in the aforementioned groups who become members of the Worldwide Order of Special Full-Time Servants and are under the vow of poverty are appointed by the Personnel Committee.

10. Publishing Committee: This committee supervises the printing and shipping of Bible literature worldwide. It has oversight of printeries and properties owned and operated by the various corporations used by Jehovah's Witnesses. Funding for branches is approved and arranged for under the direction of the Publishing Committee. It has oversight of issues involving accounting, auditing, allowances, insurance, taxes, and other financial matters for branch facilities throughout the world, such as the purchase or sale of real estate, equipment, and vehicles. All Branch Requests, Nonliterature Branch Requests, and other budget approvals are processed and approved under the direction of this committee. It oversees arrangements for the construction, renovation, and maintenance of all the organization's facilities, including branches, remote translation offices, missionary homes, schools, Kingdom Halls, and Assembly Halls.

11. Expenditures of up to USD 2,000,000 will be approved by the Publishing Committee. The Governing Body, however, is responsible for approving major real estate transactions and significant construction projects involving the expenditure of more than USD 2,000,000. In most cases, Branch Committees will present the details of such projects to the Publishing Committee, and thereafter, the matter will be presented to the Governing Body.

12. Service Committee: This committee supervises all areas of the evangelizing work comprising the activity of publishers, pioneers, and missionaries, as well as congregation organization and the shepherding activities of elders and circuit overseers. It appoints field missionaries and assigns them to areas of need. The Service Committee also provides guidance to branch offices as to the responsibilities of the Service Department and supervises the preparation of Our Kingdom Ministry. Hospital Information Services at world headquarters as well as the activity of Hospital Information Desks, Hospital Liaison Committees, and Patient Visitation Groups is supervised by the Service Committee. Instructions on field service reporting are given by the Service Committee. It also assigns geographic locations to a particular branch office and outlines the program for periodic branch visits by headquarters representatives and branch shepherding visits by Governing Body members.

13. Difficult service-related questions having to do with the formation of judicial, appeal, and special committees as well as problems involving congregation members, elders, and circuit overseers that cannot be handled by a Branch Committee are referred to the Service Committee. Specific cases in which the standing of those in the congregations might be affected are to be referred to this committee.

14. While the Teaching Committee oversees the preparation of the curriculum for theocratic schools, the Service Committee provides direction to the branches on the operation and scheduling of the schools that are conducted within their branch territories. The Service Committee determines who may be invited to attend the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead and the School for Branch Committee Members and Their Wives.

15. Teaching Committee: This committee supervises the production of spiritual food that is delivered orally for the benefit of the worldwide brotherhood and supervises the format that is to be followed at congregation meetings. For example, it is directly involved in preparing talk outlines, convention costume dramas and sound-only drama scripts and recordings, convention chairman's introductions, as well as audio and video publications that are distributed on DVD, posted on jw.org, or broadcast through other means. These materials are used for dispensing instruction at Bethel spiritual programs, Public Meetings, circuit assemblies, and regional conventions. The Teaching Committee also oversees the organization of international, special, national, and regional conventions around the world as directed by the Governing Body. In addition, this committee supervises the Scriptural curriculum for nine theocratic schools, namely:

Watchtower Bible School of Gilead

School for Branch Committee Members and Their Wives

School for Circuit Overseers and Their Wives

School for Kingdom Evangelizers

School for Congregation Elders

Kingdom Ministry School

Bethel Entrants' School

Pioneer Service School

Theocratic Ministry School

16. The Theocratic Schools Department works under the supervision of the Teaching Committee and assists in instructing students of the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead and the School for Branch Committee Members and Their Wives.

17. Besides reviewing and approving all new recommendations of Morning Worship chairmen and instructors of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers, the Teaching Committee also handles inquiries from branches regarding the above matters, including queries about alternate source material for the Congregation Bible Study in languages into which the main study publication has not yet been translated. The Teaching Committee reviews and approves programs for the dedication of new Assembly Halls and branch facilities, providing helpful guidelines for these events. Guiding principles are also given to the branches on how to conduct morning worship and the Bethel family Watchtower Study. In addition, outlines for Monday night lectures presented to the worldwide Bethel family each service year are reviewed and approved by this committee.

18. Assisted by Audio/Video Services, the Teaching Committee looks after the audio/video needs of all branches grouped under various Regional Audio/Video Centers. The Teaching Committee also oversees the Theocratic Schools Department, the WHQ Travel Department, and the Broadcasting Department. More specific information about each department is located in Chapter 7.

19. Writing Committee: This committee supervises the production of spiritual food in written and electronic form for our brothers and for the public in general. It also develops and maintains the organization's Web sites and oversees the translation work done throughout the earth. This includes giving approval for the translation of audio and video programs from English into additional languages.

20. The publications that the Writing Committee supervises include Bibles, the Watchtower and Awake! magazines, all bound books, booklets, brochures, tracts, invitations, final copy for Our Kingdom Ministry, and any revisions of these. It also supervises the production of public witnessing posters and unique branch materials, such as dedication and tour brochures and public relations materials. This committee also approves scripts for dramas, talk outlines, and manuscripts. Additionally, the Writing Committee responds to questions about the meaning of certain scriptures and points presented in the publications, including general questions about doctrines or morals that do not deal with specific cases in which the standing of those in the congregations might be affected.

RESPONSIBILITY OF BRANCH COMMITTEE MEMBERS

1. The Governing Body appoints well-qualified elders to serve as members of a Branch Committee. Each Branch Committee oversees the preaching work in the field and the work in the branch office within its assigned territory. As the representatives of the Governing Body in their assigned territory, Branch Committee members must faithfully implement and follow the direction coming from God's Word and "the faithful and discreet slave."—Matt. 24:45-47.

2. Each Branch Committee member must feel a deep sense of responsibility to Jehovah. Thus, he must work diligently to fortify and maintain his good relationship with God. He must be a diligent student of the Bible and be governed by its laws and principles in his personal and public life. (Josh. 1:8; Ps. 1:2) He must be zealous for the ministry. (2 Tim. 4:2) He must be a fine example in following Bethel rules, never feeling that he is above them. (Heb. 13:17) His deep love and respect for Jehovah fuels his desire to be faithful in little and in much. (Luke 16:10; 1 John 5:3) He recognizes that his appointment by holy spirit is a privilege and that it will be taken away if he neglects his spirituality. (1 Tim. 4:14-16) His humble mental attitude moves him to seek out and listen to the opinions of others, to take the lead in showing honor, and to be a peacemaker. (1 Ki. 22:19-23; Matt. 5:9; Rom. 12:10; Phil. 2:5-8; Jas. 3:17, 18) Like Christ Jesus, he finds joy in unselfishly serving the interests of his brothers. (Mark 6:31-34; John 13:14, 15; Phil. 2:4) Such dedicated spiritual men are truly gifts from Jehovah to shepherd his precious sheep.—Eph. 4:8, 11, 12; 1 Pet. 5:2, 3.

3. Each Branch Committee member should be able to give as well as to follow direction. He must keep up-to-date with the policies and direction from the Governing Body and help others in oversight at the branch office to do likewise. While he will set a fine example in being willing to work along with his brothers at any task, he will not try to do all the work himself. He will delegate work in a responsible way, helping other spiritual men to be trained and to gain experience so that they too can shoulder weighty responsibilities.

4. Branch Committees also have the responsibility to keep the organization clean. (1 Cor. 5:11-13) They must be courageous in seeing to it that all unrepentant ones are removed from the congregation. Such courageous action builds up respect for the branch office and the Branch Committee. Our brothers should always feel welcome to come to the branch office with any concerns or problems that they may have and be confident that they will receive a hearing ear. —Prov. 21:13.

5. Dealing With People: Each member of the Branch Committee should always treat his fellow servants with love, kindness, respect, and dignity. (Eph. 4:32; 1 Pet. 4:17) He must manifest a warm and friendly disposition, being careful never to be harsh or unkind. (Eph. 4:31; Col. 3:8) If, on account of imperfection, he errs in word or deed, he will be quick to admit his fault and apologize. (Matt. 5:23-25) Following in the steps of Christ Jesus, he provides an example in honoring others and pursuing peace.—Rom. 14:19; 1 Pet. 2:21.

6. Branch Committee members do not view themselves as superior to their brothers and thus do not desire to be served or feel entitled to special treatment. (Matt. 20:25-28; 23:6-12; 2 Cor. 1: 24) As they seek to imitate Christ Jesus, their lowliness of mind makes them refreshing and upbuilding to those working under their oversight.—Matt. 11:28-30; Phil. 2:3.

7. Members of the Branch Committee should be willing to handle problems, taking time to hear both sides and being cautious never to leave even the impression of partiality or favoritism. (Deut. 13:14; Jas. 2:9) They must keep confidential those matters told them in confidence and not talk to their wives or others about individuals' problems or confidential matters of the organization. —Prov. 25:9.

8. Counsel should not be given hastily. (Prov. 18:13) If unsure of the counsel of God's Word, it is best to consult with others and do research before answering. (Prov. 15:22, 28) If a Branch Committee member has a tendency to speak hastily and later to change his mind as to the course he first advised, the brothers will soon lose confidence in his soundness of judgment. If we read directly from the Scriptures when offering counsel, we make clear that God's Word is the authority for making decisions and that we are not simply giving a personal viewpoint.—2 Tim. 3:16, 17.

9. If a Branch Committee member is a foreigner in the country where he serves, he should recognize that the local people have a measure of pride in their land, their culture, and their way of doing things. Whether a foreigner in the country or not, a Branch Committee member should never take the position that the people he serves are beneath him, speaking to them as inferiors. Instead, as their humble fellow servant, he must work hard to develop appreciation for the local people and their culture, being willing to adapt himself so as to win their love and respect.—1 Cor. 9: 20-23.

10. Nothing contributes more to the happiness of our brothers than the conviction that they are loved and appreciated. (1 Cor. 8:1; 13:4-8) Continue to reflect Jehovah's great love for his sheep. To that end, committee members should make regular personal visits to each department, speaking briefly with each worker, sharing words of appreciation and encouragement.

11. Makeup of a Branch Committee: In small branches, it may be sufficient to have three members form the Branch Committee. However, in large branches with printing operations, extensive territories, or a variety of languages, five or more members may be needed. It is desirable that one or more members of the Branch Committee be citizens of the country where the branch is located. Nevertheless, in all cases, spiritual qualifications should be viewed as of greatest importance.

12. The appointment as a member of the Branch Committee or to a position of oversight in the branch organization is not for any specified period of time. Having in mind the advancement of the Kingdom work, the Branch Committee may at any time recommend to the Governing Body a new appointment, a removal, or the reassignment of individuals.

13. Oversight Responsibilities: The Branch Committee prayerfully determines the distribution of oversight responsibilities for the individual members of the committee. These assignments should take into consideration each brother's age, strengths, experience, and personal circumstances. (Rom. 12:3-8; Rev. 1:20) A Branch Committee member would usually serve as the day-to-day overseer or assistant overseer of a key department. The members of the committee may also serve as Branch Committee contacts for additional Bethel departments. A committee member should serve as the overseer of the Service Department. (See 6:35) Usually another Branch Committee member would serve as the Translation Department overseer. A committee member would usually serve as the Bethel overseer in a larger branch office, since his role involves the general oversight of all Bethel Home operations. In printing branches, the printery overseer is usually a member of the Branch Committee. The Branch Committee should consider these matters carefully so that there is a balanced distribution of oversight responsibilities. Adjustments should be made as needed in order to promote good order, the peace of the Bethel family, and the advancement of the Kingdom work.—1 Cor. 14:33, 40.

14. When adjustments in oversight are made, the brothers and sisters working in each Bethel department should be clearly informed as to the brother serving as the department overseer, the assistant overseer(s) and, if applicable, the Branch Committee member designated as the contact for the department. Each Branch Committee member should take an active interest in those working in the departments that he is overseeing. He should endeavor to meet weekly with the department overseers under his oversight.

15. Because of age or infirmity, some members may become unable to accept all assignments in connection with the Branch Committee. If so, the committee may wish to recommend an additional member to help with the workload. Nevertheless, the older and experienced members may be retained on the committee to share their wisdom and insight. (Prov. 16:31) In line with the above, it is not necessary for every member to take the chairmanship in rotation. Brothers 80 years of age or older are not to serve as coordinators of Branch or Country committees or as overseers of departments, nor are they to serve as contacts for departments. However, dignified assignments should be found for these older brothers. (1 Tim. 5:1, 17) For example, they may serve as assistant overseers if their circumstances permit. Older brothers should be keenly interested in passing on their wisdom and experience to those with whom they work. (2 Tim. 2:2) In larger departments, two brothers could serve as assistant overseers if needed. A department overseer or Branch Committee coordinator who is not yet 80 years of age might modestly decide that it would be best to have a younger brother take on that role. (Mic. 6:8) If so, it would be good for the Branch Committee to take the request into consideration to ensure a smooth transition.—See 6:35.

16. Branch Committee Coordinator: Each Branch Committee has a coordinator appointed by the Governing Body. He is responsible for coordinating the work of the committee and for any departments that the Branch Committee places under his oversight. He is responsible for sending reports and correspondence to the Governing Body and also for keeping the Branch Committee informed of all communications received from the Governing Body. Branch Committee coordinators and those overseeing various departments will find it helpful to keep a calendar of activities. This will assist them in making sure that important matters will be handled on schedule and not be overlooked. The Branch Committee coordinator is responsible for seeing that the minutes of each Branch Committee meeting are kept, showing the date of the meeting, those present, the points considered, and the decisions reached.

17. Branch Committee Chairman: There is a chairman at each Branch Committee meeting. The chairmanship rotates annually on January 1. The rotation is usually handled alphabetically. The chairman arranges for the agenda to be prepared and distributed to each member of the Branch Committee. The members should receive the agenda well in advance of the meeting so that they have sufficient time to prepare thoroughly and to give meaningful input. The chairman should notify all members as to the time of the meeting. He will also indicate on the agenda who is assigned to open and close the meeting with prayer. He ensures that there is good order and, along with the Branch Committee coordinator, sees that committee decisions are carried out in a timely manner.

18. Branch Committee Meetings: The Branch Committee decides when to hold its regular meetings. The committee should not postpone giving attention to its responsibilities or delay in providing direction needed to expedite the work. In nearly all cases, the Branch Committee will meet weekly, but special meetings may be held when needed. In small branches, meetings can be held less frequently according to what may be practical and also depending on the location of the members of the Branch Committee. For obvious reasons, it is good if all members of the Branch Committee can live close enough to the branch to be generally available for such meetings. Minutes should be kept of all Branch Committee meetings. If a member is indisposed or absent, the committee can still function if a majority is present.—See 2:38.

19. The Branch Committee may invite other individuals to come to its meetings for consultation or to present information that will help the committee in reaching decisions.

20. Branch Committee decisions should be unanimous. In any significant case in which a decision is not unanimous, the Branch Committee should write to the appropriate Governing Body committee for direction. Pertinent details should be provided, including an explanation as to why some members of the Branch Committee are for a matter and why some members are against it. Providing the names of those who are for and those who are against a certain decision is helpful. The committee should prepare one letter and send it to the appropriate Governing Body committee. If individual members wish to submit additional comments, these should be sent along with the letter from the Branch Committee. If needed, the Governing Body committee will seek direction from the entire Governing Body. If, in rare cases, the urgency of a situation does not allow sufficient time for the Branch Committee to send a letter to the Governing Body explaining the details and differing points of view, the majority decision of the Branch Committee should stand until further direction is received.

21. If the Branch Committee determines that a particular decision is of major importance, it should not decide the matter but send it to the appropriate Governing Body committee with its observations and recommendations. (Ps. 19:13; Prov. 11:2) This procedure is to be followed even when the committee is unanimous as to how the matter should be handled. When the Branch Committee writes about a weighty matter, the coordinator should make it clear in the letter that the Branch Committee members who were present have read the letter and that they are in agreement with its content. The names of any Branch Committee members who were absent should be indicated as well.—See 2:39; 3:3; 6:40.

22. Unity on Branch Committees: From time to time, Branch Committee members may experience personal differences with one another. This often occurs when a brother imposes his personal opinion or preference on others. Of course, responsible brothers may occasionally have a difference of opinion. Despite such differences in thinking, they must continue to work together in love and with mutual respect.—Col. 3: 13, 14.

23. Branch Committee coordinators should especially be conscious not to impose their opinion or preference on others in decisions that should be made by the entire Branch Committee. If a member of the Branch Committee lives outside of Bethel, he should be part of the decision-making process to the extent possible and not simply be informed after the fact about decisions that were made.

24. If the peace and unity of the committee are threatened, each member must examine himself carefully to determine what adjustments he must personally make in order to display "the wisdom from above." (Jas. 3:17, 18) While it is easy to see the faults of others, it takes a mature Christian man to look carefully into the mirror of God's Word and see his own faults clearly and then work to change. (Jas. 1:23-25) While one or more members of the committee may feel that they are not part of the problem, all must be part of the solution. Therefore, each one should supplicate Jehovah for His divine help to resolve the problem, never allowing place for the Devil.—Eph. 4:26, 27.

25. Continue to work together unitedly as a committee in peace and unity, cooperating closely as a body of mature brothers. (Ps. 133:1; Phil. 2:1-4) "Take the lead" in honoring one another. (Rom. 12:10) Much is expected of those who have been put in charge of much. (Luke 12:48b) The Bethel family notices the way you deal with one another and imitates your example, whether positive or negative.

26. Recommendations to the Governing Body: If the Branch Committee wishes to recommend the appointment or deletion of a circuit overseer or a country representative, the form Recommendations to Governing Body should be completed and sent to the Governing Body. While the Branch Committee should give careful and prayerful consideration to the qualifications of each brother being recommended (and, if married, the brother's wife), extensive additional comments in a separate letter are not needed unless there is something significant to report about the brother (or his wife) that the Governing Body should know when considering the recommendation. The wives of such brothers should not be listed on the recommendation form.—See 2:49; 6:139.

27. All members of the Branch Committee who are in agreement should have their names listed at the bottom of the recommendation form. If a member of the Branch Committee was not present when the recommendations were considered, then the word "absent" should be shown next to that brother's name at the bottom of the recommendation form. A copy of the form will be returned to the branch office if the appointments and/or deletions are approved by the Governing Body.—See 2:30.

28. Appointments and Deletions of Branch and Country Committee Members: It is preferred that brothers being considered for appointment to the Branch or Country committee attend Gilead School before the recommendation is made. In the case of Bethel brothers with such potential who are not able to read, write, and speak English fluently, such brothers and their wives, if married, could be invited to attend a future class of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers so that their potential can be further evaluated and their spirituality deepened. If a branch visit is planned in the coming months, it is usually best to discuss recommendations about prospective committee members with the headquarters representative before submitting a recommendation form to the Governing Body. In addition to the recommendation form, the Branch Committee should supply the Governing Body with a covering letter explaining the reasons for the recommendation and, if available, the headquarters representative's comments.

29. A newly appointed Branch or Country committee member who is fluent in English and, if married, whose wife is also fluent in English will be scheduled by the Service Committee to attend a future class of the School for Branch Committee Members and Their Wives.

30. Appointments and Deletions of Circuit Overseers: See 6:99, 137-139, 148-154 with regard to the qualifications and training of prospective circuit overseers. In cases of death, judicial action, pregnancy, or resignation for health reasons, the Branch Committee is authorized to process the deletion. Thereafter, the Governing Body should be informed of the deletion on the next recommendation form that is submitted. For all other reasons, the Branch Committee should submit to the Governing Body the usual form with a covering letter explaining the recommendation to delete a circuit overseer. The Branch Committee must await approval from the Governing Body before informing him about his appointment or deletion.—See 2:26-27.

31. Know the Organization: Branch Committee members, whether in a large or a small branch, should seek to become acquainted with all the operations carried on at the branch. They should research how the work can be done in the most effective and beneficial way and do all they reasonably can to help it to be done in that way. A Branch Committee should know if the brothers are accomplishing the best work they can and, if they are not, the committee may be able to show them how to do better. The members of the Bethel family should love their work and want to see it improve and increase.

32. Branch Committee members should also be interested in all facets of the Kingdom work in the field and should seek to expand the preaching work and carry it out in the most effective way.

33. Communication During Difficult Times: If a country should become isolated by war or other adverse conditions and it is impossible, at least for a time, to have any communication with the Governing Body, the Branch Committee will carry on in looking after Jehovah's sheep. Especially in a time of trouble, it is important for the sheep to have spiritual food and guidance. Encouragement should be given them to have regular meetings and continue worshipping Jehovah. If conditions allow, publications will be provided. If new publications are not available, direction can be given to review past publications and to study the Bible itself, not forsaking assembling together, even though it may be in small groups.—Heb. 10:24, 25.

34. If conditions develop to the point that any members of the Branch Committee are taken away, those who remain should consider the qualifications of other elders who have proved themselves and have years of experience in the work and, if there is a possibility of communication, make the recommendation of these to serve as replacement Branch Committee members. If communication with the Governing Body is not possible, the replacement elders can be asked to serve temporarily, and they can be made familiar with the functions of the branch organization and share in the shepherding of the flock. Every effort should be made to have committee meetings from time to time, depending on the conditions. If any individual member of the Branch Committee should find himself under surveillance and it is not advisable for him to try to meet with other members of the committee, he may be able to send word to them concerning his situation. In that event, another elder may be asked to step in temporarily to share in the activities of the committee. If conditions develop to the point that it is impossible to hold meetings because the committee has been scattered, then each individual should continue to do what he can to shepherd the flock, having in mind what Jesus said as recorded at John 10:11-15 and remembering to seek the guidance of Jehovah through prayer.

CONFIDENTIAL

35. Every effort should be made to communicate with the Governing Body if conditions will allow and if it will not jeopardize the interests of the work. The Branch Committee in each land will know what the circumstances are and will seek the guidance of Jehovah in making a decision as to what is the best course of action at the moment. The Governing Body desires to receive the reports and news concerning Christians scattered throughout the world, but because difficult conditions may develop, these provisions are set forth in connection with the functioning of the Branch Committee.

36. It will be practical if communications sent to the Governing Body are in English. Circumstances in some lands may prevent this. If one who knows English is taken away, the Governing Body will be pleased to receive communications in any language.

37. Country Committees: The Governing Body may determine that a Country Committee should be established in certain lands to work under the oversight of a Branch Committee. A Country Committee is composed of mature Christian elders appointed by the Governing Body. Usually the recommendations for Country Committee members are made by the Branch Committee. The brothers on the Country Committee are responsible for the administration of the office, Bethel Home, remote translation offices, and literature depots in the country where they serve, as well as for handling correspondence, finances, and reports. Even if there is no office in a particular country because of legal restrictions, the Governing Body may appoint a Country Committee to assist a Branch Committee to care for the Kingdom work in that land.

38. The Governing Body designates one brother to serve as the Country Committee coordinator. That brother is responsible for coordinating the daily routine of work. A chairman will serve in a rotational arrangement for a period of a year, following the same pattern as that for a Branch Committee. Generally, a Country Committee will meet each week, or perhaps every second week, depending on matters needing attention.—See 2:16-18.

39. While a Country Committee should be guided by the same Scriptural procedures and policies established for Branch Committees, it must remember that it does not have the same authority as a Branch Committee. Therefore, the Country Committee members should be modest and work cooperatively with the overseeing Branch Committee for the advancement of the Kingdom work in the country where they serve. (Prov. 11:2; 15:22) Any major problems or questions that the Country Committee cannot resolve in line with Branch Organization or other policy materials should be referred to the Branch Committee. The Country Committee will contact the Branch Committee if there is a disagreement about how a matter should be handled, even as a Branch Committee inquires of various Governing Body committees when the brothers on the Branch Committee have differing viewpoints on how something should be done. (See 2:20-21.) The overseeing Branch Committee should feel free to provide the Governing Body and its committees with supplemental comments or observations it wishes to make with regard to recommendations being made by a Country Committee.

40. A Country Committee is authorized to answer questions that local elders and circuit overseers may submit in writing to the office regarding judicial and other congregation or circuit matters. However, if there is any uncertainty as to how a complicated or delicate matter should be handled, the Country Committee should communicate with the overseeing Branch Committee.

41. Country Committees may arrange for locations and times for circuit assemblies and regional conventions. The

CONFIDENTIAL

Country Committee may care for the selection of convention and assembly speakers as is done by Branch Committees.—See Chapter 7.

42. With regard to appointing or deleting special pioneers, the Country Committee is to make its recommendations to the overseeing Branch Committee and await its approval. Whether the Country Committee will tabulate the field service reports or send them directly to the Branch Committee for handling will be determined by the overseeing Branch Committee. Literature distribution to the congregations should be handled as directed by the Branch Committee.

43. The overseeing Branch Committee will forward to the Governing Body any recommendations submitted by the Country Committee for the appointment or deletion of circuit overseers.

44. The general oversight of missionaries and missionary homes is under the direction of the Country Committee. However, such problems as illness and leave of absence and any difficulties that require attention by a Governing Body committee should be reported to the Branch Committee with the recommendations of the Country Committee. The Branch Committee, in turn, will write to the appropriate Governing Body committee, providing full details.

45. The handling of legal matters and the registration of legal entities will be under the direction of the Branch Committee. However, the Country Committee will be consulted as needed.

46. All correspondence from the Country Committee intended for other branch or country offices is to be sent to the overseeing Branch Committee for forwarding. When necessary, the Country Committee may write a letter to the Governing Body or to one of its committees. However, the letter should first be sent to the Branch Committee so that, if necessary, the Branch Committee may add its comments before forwarding the letter to world headquarters.

47. In a rare situation in which communication with the Branch Committee is not possible, it may be necessary for the Country Committee to send information directly to world headquarters or to other branch offices. In cases where communication with the Branch Committee or with headquarters is not possible, the Country Committee will give the needed supervision to the Kingdom work until conditions return to normal and contact with the Branch Committee or headquarters can resume. If there are any relief measures to be taken in behalf of the brothers, the Country Committee will give the needed oversight, bearing in mind the direction that is provided herein related to such aid.—See 3:17.

48. Country Representatives: In countries where there are a significant number of publishers but where there is no Branch Committee or Country Committee, three qualified elders are appointed by the Governing Body to serve as country representatives. As a group, the country representatives serve as advisers, helping the Branch Committee to stay in close touch with the local situation in the lands that the branch office oversees. The brothers serving as country representatives are not considered a Country Committee and do not function in any supervisory capacity. Country representatives do not qualify to attend the School for Branch Committee Members and Their Wives. Nevertheless, the Branch Committee should view them as a helpful resource and periodically inquire of them, perhaps sending a list of questions for them to consider. (Prov. 15:22) The country representatives should be discerning men who can provide meaningful input on the Kingdom work and local needs in the country where they live. (Prov. 27:23; Acts 6:3) Their input will be especially helpful when they notice conditions or trends that endanger the brothers or that threaten the Kingdom work in the country. Those recommended could include special pioneers or circuit overseers. Elders who formerly served on a Branch Committee or a Country Committee in that land may be particularly qualified. It is preferred that at least one of the country representatives be native to the country. In a country with a remote translation office, one of the three country representatives might include the language overseer, the maintenance overseer, or the home overseer.

49. Recommendations and deletions of country representatives are submitted to the Governing Body using the form Recommendations to Governing Body. (See 2: 26.) One of the three brothers should be recommended to serve as the chairman of the group. Once the Governing Body confirms the appointment or deletion of a country representative, the Branch Committee should update the Admin person record to reflect the start or stop date of this role. The branch office should provide newly appointed country representatives with a letter that explains their appointment and the basic operation of the group as well as the names and contact information of the other two country representatives.

50. The country representatives may meet at a convenient time and place whenever there is a need or as directed by the Branch Committee. The group is not given permanent office space or computer equipment. Their periodic meetings should be arranged at any convenient location that is available, such as a Kingdom Hall, Assembly Hall, or the home of one of the brothers as long as confidentiality can be maintained. Such meetings should not interfere with normally scheduled meetings or assemblies. Upon request, the branch office may reimburse reasonable travel expenses for country representatives to participate in their periodic meetings. The group should open and close their meetings with prayer. A typed report, usually no more than one to two pages in length and addressed to the Branch Committee, should be sufficient to convey their key observations. The chairman of the group should keep a confidential file of these reports for two years. Reports older than two years should be destroyed, since the branch office will have its copies on file.

COORDINATORS' COMMITTEE

CORRESPONDENCE AND COMMUNICATION

1. This section provides direction for handling correspondence and communication between branch offices and with world headquarters. For guidelines on the handling of correspondence with congregations and individuals in the field, see Chapter 6.

2. Branch Committee's Role: A Branch Committee should feel free to ask the Governing Body or one of its committees any question related to the Kingdom work in the territory under the oversight of the branch office. It is best that such questions be expressed clearly and carefully in writing rather than by telephone. The Branch Committee should ensure that it has an arrangement for handling correspondence efficiently.

3. The Branch Committee coordinator should be especially attentive to matters sent to and from the Governing Body and its committees. Good communication between the coordinator and other Branch Committee members is essential so that all are involved and are aware of direction being provided. Numbered letters sent to the Governing Body or its committees should be signed by the coordinator on behalf of the Branch Committee. (See 2:20-21.) Correspondence should not be delayed unnecessarily. The urgency of some matters may require that another committee member sign the letter if the Branch Committee coordinator is not available. See Chapter 2 for more information regarding correspondence sent to the Governing Body and its committees.

4. Branch offices are authorized to write to other branch offices and to headquarters. However, branch offices should not write to offices under the oversight of another Branch Committee, such as country offices, translation offices, literature depots, and so forth. In such cases, the correspondence should be sent to the branch office that has oversight. Country offices are authorized to write to the branch office that oversees their work.

5. Desk Symbols: If many people in the branch or country office prepare correspondence to be sent to other departments, to the field, to other branch offices, or to headquarters, it may be practical for the branch office to use desk symbols on such correspondence. The use of desk symbols serves to help the branch office identify the author and/or his secretary who prepared a particular letter or memorandum. When a reply is received that refers to the correspondence by desk symbol(s) and date, the reply can be promptly routed to the appropriate desk. The Branch Committee may determine the desk symbol system that works best locally. No more than three letters should be combined to form each desk symbol, such as ABA, SCA, HID. The Branch or Country committee should see that a confidential listing of the branch office's desk symbols is kept up-to-date. The desk symbol list is to be provided only to those who need to consult the listing for their Bethel work. It is not to be distributed to anyone outside of Bethel.

6. Correspondence Standards: All correspondence should be dated and include the desk symbols of the writer(s) as well as a subject or a regarding ("Re:") line. Since correspondence is sent electronically via the Branch File Transfer (BFT) system, it is not necessary to indicate at the top "Via BFT." However, if it is necessary to send the correspondence by more than one means, this should be indicated at the top, for example, "Via Hard Copy and BFT." (See 3:16) If the correspondence is truly urgent or time-sensitive, this should be clearly indicated under the date. If the subject involves another country or geographic location, this should be indicated at the beginning of the subject line. For example, if the Russia branch office writes about a matter in Belarus, the subject line should commence with "Belarus—" followed by the subject.

7. When only a very brief reply to correspondence is needed, it is appropriate to reply using a brief note at the top of the received correspondence. This note could convey an approval, a confirmation, or other minor detail. The note should show the intended recipient, those being copied, and the sender, as well as the desk symbol(s) and date.

8. File Naming: A numbered letter or memorandum and its attachments must be given a proper file name so that the documents are handled together when received through BFT. Files produced using the Correspondence Module in Admin are named in accord with the standards set forth in this chapter. A word or brief phrase may be added after the required file-name prefix. Care should be taken so that the file name does not reveal confidential information. In most cases, correspondence and the associated attachments should not be sent in a compressed folder.

9. Numbered Letters: All correspondence between a Branch Committee and the Governing Body or one of the Governing Body committees should be sent by means of numbered letters. [See Chart 3.1.] Branch Committees should address a numbered letter to one Governing Body committee only. The letter number, letter date, and desk symbols serve as a helpful reference to specific correspondence. For numbered letters sent to the Governing Body and its committees, each branch office uses a number series that starts at 101 and continues sequentially until 9999. The letter number series is not reset or restarted each year. It is reset to 101 after letter number 9999 has been used. Unique letter numbers will be used on letters sent to Branch Committees but will not necessarily be sequential. When the Governing Body or one of the Governing Body committees sends the same letter (a circular letter) to various branch offices, the same letter number will be used. Additionally, to identify easily circular letters from headquarters, the letter number will begin with a "C-" prefix, such as "No. C-1234P."

10. File Names for Numbered Letters: The required file-name prefix for numbered letters is FROM+TO+LETTER NUMBER. FROM represents the three-letter code of the sending office. TO represents the three-letter code of the receiving office. For example, the proper file name for a letter numbered 2345 from the Germany branch office to the Service Committee at headquarters is DEUWHQ2345.docx. The file name of any associated attachments to a numbered letter are appended with letters "a," "b," and so forth. In the example cited above, two attachments would have such file names as DEUWHQ2345a.docx and DEUWHQ2345b.pdf.

11. Memorandums: Correspondence between branch offices is sent by means of memorandums, not numbered letters. Memorandums are also used for correspondence between branch offices and headquarters departments. [See Chart 3.1.] The word "MEMORANDUM" needs to be shown above the name of the sending branch. In addition, for the recipient, the department should be specified under the name of the branch, for example, "Attention: Shipping Office." A memorandum does not need to be signed by the Branch Committee coordinator.

12. File Names for Memorandums: The required file-name prefix for memorandums is FROM+TO+DESK SYM-

COPY BETHEL

BOL+SEQUENTIAL NUMBER. FROM represents the three-letter code of the sending office. TO represents the three-letter code of the receiving office. SEQUENTIAL NUMBER represents the number of the memorandum sent on a given day. For example, the proper file name for the first memorandum that Desk AY at the Brazil branch sends to the Art Department at headquarters on a given day is BRAWHQAY01.docx. The file name of any associated attachments to a memorandum are appended with letters "a," "b," and so forth. In the example cited above, two attachments would have such file names as BRAWHQAY01a.docx and BRAWHQAY01b.pdf.

13. Branch File Transfer: BFT is the principal means by which branch offices and headquarters departments send and receive correspondence and other electronic files. It is not a correspondence tracking system. Most branch offices find it advantageous to use a correspondence tracking system, such as the Correspondence Module in Admin.

14. E-Mail: In addition to the use of numbered letters and memorandums, departments at headquarters and at the branch offices may be approved by oversight to use e-mail to communicate directly with departments or individuals in other lands about technical and routine matters. However, e-mail does not replace numbered letters or memorandums. Recommendations, direction, and decisions are to be communicated through numbered letters or memorandums, as explained above. In most cases, authorized e-mail communications between departments or individuals serve the purpose of expediting the clear communication of technical and routine details having to do with previously approved projects. If such e-mail communication is approved between a department at headquarters and at the branch offices or between branch offices, oversight should ensure that such e-mail communications are limited to their authorized technical purpose. E-mail should not be used by anyone to bypass official communication. A department overseer should be sure that his oversight on the Branch Committee is kept abreast of the nature of work-related e-mail communications that he or others in the department send to anyone outside the branch office or to those at other branch offices or at headquarters.—See 6:44.

15. Telephone Calls: The telephone may be used to communicate with headquarters or with another branch office if necessary. This is especially true when a sudden emergency or other urgent matter arises. Usually, urgent matters handled over the telephone should be followed up with official communication in a numbered letter or a memorandum. For technical and routine matters, the guidelines outlined above with regard to the use of e-mail also apply to telephone calls. Department overseers should authorize any international phone calls before they are made.

16. Faxes and Hard-Copy Mail: Whenever possible, correspondence and attachments should be sent electronically only through BFT, as this expedites the handling and assists in the tracking and routing of items once they have been received. If BFT is temporarily unavailable and emergency communication is needed, fax transmissions may be used. Correspondence sent by fax should be resent using BFT as soon as it is available. It is preferred that hard-copy correspondence be scanned and then sent electronically. If a matter must be sent by hard copy and BFT, please indicate this at the top of the correspondence as described in 3:6.

DISASTER RELIEF AND EMERGENCIES

17. From time to time, emergency situations arise throughout the world. Sometimes there are violent storms, damaging floods, or strong earthquakes. At other times brothers may be forced to flee from their homes because of warfare or mob violence. When such problems occur, the Branch Committee should communicate with the Coordinators' Committee to explain what is happening and set forth recommendations as to what needs to be done. On occasion, it may not be possible for the branch office to communicate with the Coordinators' Committee. Or a need may suddenly arise to do something for brothers affected by a disaster. In such circumstances, the branch office is permitted to spend up to USD 5,000 immediately to provide temporary relief and assistance to brothers involved in a major disaster. When funds are spent, an explanation should be included in the letter sent to the Coordinators' Committee. The letter should state what the local brothers are able to do and what materials or facilities are available to take care of the immediate needs of the brothers affected. Further instructions are found in the Disaster Relief Guidelines.—See 2:47.

18. Safety of Those in Foreign Service: If such emergencies as civil unrest, acts of terrorism, or war threaten the safety and well-being of foreign nationals, the Branch Committee must be alert and quick to provide practical assistance and clear direction. The Branch Committee must take a special interest in the welfare of all those who are members of the Worldwide Order. If the Branch Committee determines that there is an urgent need to evacuate special full-time servants in foreign service to a safer location or to relocate them, the branch office should immediately contact the Coordinators' Committee by letter or by telephone and explain the situation, setting forth specific recommendations. The Coordinators' Committee will consult with the Personnel and Service committees and provide further direction. If it is not possible for the Branch Committee to communicate with the Coordinators' Committee, then the Branch Committee should do what is needed to protect the lives and safety of those in foreign service. A report on what transpired should be provided to the Coordinators' Committee as soon as possible. For these reasons, each branch office should have and periodically review an emergency action plan. (Prov. 21:5) The branch should maintain up-to-date contact information for all of those in special full-time service so that they can be reached quickly in an emergency. While some in foreign service may feel either that they should or that they should not relocate or evacuate, ultimately the decision is a personal one. No one should judge others in this regard. (Matt. 7:1; 10:23; Rom. 14:10, 19; Gal. 6:5) Nevertheless, in most cases, it is best that Christians quickly heed the warnings and direction issued by the secular authorities and the responsible elders during times of civil unrest or emergency.—Rom. 13:1; Heb. 13:17.

LEGAL DEPARTMENT

19. Official opposition to the advancement of Kingdom interests, particularly the preaching of the good news, is to be expected. As foretold, there are those who 'frame trouble in the name of the law' and who resort to the courts in an effort to silence the spread of the Bible's lifesaving message. (Ps. 94:20; Matt. 10:16-19) While the theocratic organization does not need legal status to form congregations or engage in the field ministry, being legally recognized affords a degree of protection, which is why efforts are made to 'defend and legally establish the good news.'—Phil. 1:7.

20. The Branch Committee should promptly inform the Coordinators' Committee of serious legal challenges, providing dates and times of occurrences, names of individuals involved, and a thorough but concise explanation. This includes outlining what the charges against the brothers may be and sending a copy of the laws involved, translated into English. The Branch Committee should not assume that the Coordinators' Committee is up-to-date on the situation in a given country just because there was correspondence with world headquarters about the situation in the past.

21. It is advisable to have a Legal Department in larger branch offices, particularly where printing is done or where there is significant ongoing legal opposition to theocratic activities. If possible, it is good to have a licensed attorney serving with the department. It is the responsibility of the entire Branch Committee to be aware of legal challenges to our worship.—Esther 3:5-15.

22. When legal controversies arise, the branch Legal Department may consult, if necessary, with a lawyer who is not serving at Bethel. The lawyer's opinion and recommendation should be included in the letter sent to the Coordinators' Committee. If it seems necessary to hire a lawyer, the lawyer should explain the legal remedies available, the likelihood of a favorable result, how long it will take, and an estimate of his costs. In explaining matters to the Coordinators' Committee, the Branch Committee should outline the lawyer's opinion on whether a favorable outcome will be achieved, his reasoning, and the recommendation of the Branch Committee.

23. To minimize the use of non-Witness attorneys, it is beneficial to maintain a list of brothers and sisters in the field who are lawyers. Legal matters can periodically be referred to spiritually qualified attorneys who are willing and feel privileged to help. They are generally pleased to assist without charge.

24. Action against Jehovah's Witnesses is often preceded by negative propaganda in the media and derogatory statements by government officials. The Branch Committee should promptly inform the Coordinators' Committee if events indicate that the authorities are considering the imposition of restrictions or an outright ban on true worship. With comments from the branch office and the help of the WHQ Legal Department, the Coordinators' Committee will prepare an approach to the appropriate officials. Written materials explaining our activities and refuting falsehoods may be prepared. The objective is to inform responsible officials of the true position of Jehovah's Witnesses. To ensure that the best approach is made, the branch office should always communicate with the Coordinators' Committee before setting up such meetings. Any meetings that are approved to be held with officials should be cared for by a member of the Branch Committee and, if available, someone from the branch Legal Department.

25. Most governments have committed themselves to respecting human rights, including freedom of worship. (Rev. 12: 16) National and international organizations monitor governmental compliance with these commitments. It may be helpful to inform such agencies about the arrests of publishers, lawsuits, or proposed legislation against true worship. The Branch Committee should communicate with the Coordinators' Committee before doing so, explaining which organization is to be approached. A draft of what the branch office wishes to submit should be sent to the Coordinators' Committee. The Coordinators' Committee will then decide whether the approach should be made.

26. The branch office should always ask for any court action to be delayed or adjourned to allow ample time for a complete report to be sent to the Coordinators' Committee and to allow time to receive instructions from headquarters. If possible, a two-month delay or extension should be requested.

27. In the event of an adverse ruling or decision, the Branch Committee should immediately inform the Coordinators' Committee and specify the time limit for making an appeal. The Coordinators' Committee will want to know the opinion of the branch Legal Department about the advisability of appealing, the reasons for or against making an appeal, as well as the costs. The letter to the Coordinators' Committee should also state any possible negative effects on the legal status of the Kingdom work if the matter is not appealed or if the appeal is lost.

28. If the Branch Committee does not have time to write to the Coordinators' Committee to receive instructions because of a deadline that cannot be extended, a legal update should be provided as soon as possible. If necessary, the Branch Committee coordinator or another member of the Branch Committee may telephone headquarters about the matter.

29. If the Branch Committee believes that an action taken against true worship should be publicized, the branch office should write to the Coordinators' Committee with a recommendation of what could be prepared, making sure that all of the facts are fully substantiated.

30. Legal Status: Obtaining legal status or registration facilitates the entry of missionaries, the organization of assemblies, the importation of literature, the entitlement to tax exemptions, and other benefits. The Branch Committee should give careful attention to obtaining and maintaining legal registration. Of course, the organization will never compromise principles of pure worship merely to obtain legal status. Attention should be given to the type of legal status being sought. Some religions have a very favorable status, whereas others are merely tolerated. It is necessary to examine carefully the law in each country to determine which form of legal status would be most beneficial for theocratic purposes.

31. Legal Entities and the Worldwide Order: Branch Committee members should have a clear understanding of the relationship among the Governing Body, the Branch Committee, the legal entities used by branch offices, and the Worldwide Order of Special Full-Time Servants of Jehovah's Witnesses ("Worldwide Order").

32. The Governing Body has delegated a measure of oversight of the spiritual and material welfare of "the flock of God" to Branch Committees throughout the world. These Branch Committees also oversee administrative and legal activities of the organization in their designated territories. Of course, all Branch Committees serve under the spiritual direction of the Governing Body.—See w01 1/15 pp. 28-31.

33. Branch Committees are encouraged to register and use a recognized legal entity to carry on the legal affairs of the branch office. Depending on the local laws and circumstances, a branch office may need to use more than one legal entity to further the work in its territory. Any recommended adjustments in the use of legal entities are to be presented to the Coordinators' Committee. This would include recommendations for the appointment or deletion of directors or officers of legal entities. Some countries do not allow the registration of religions or the formation of a legal entity of a religious nature. In such countries, it may be necessary to use a legal entity that is of a general nonprofit nature or, in a rare instance, a for-profit nature. In either case, the Branch Committee must not lose sight of the primary objective to spread the good news of God's Kingdom under Christ Jesus. Our principal activities as an organization are religious even though some aspects may be viewed as educational or charitable in nature.

34. Members of the Worldwide Order serve at all branch offices. The Worldwide Order provides ministers for the legal entity or entities used by the branch offices to carry out the spiritual activities of Jehovah's Witnesses. (Matt. 24:14; 28:19, 20; Acts 1:8; Rom. 12:1) For this reason, it is important that Branch Committees understand what the Worldwide Order is and the relationship between it and the legal entities branch offices may use.

35. The Worldwide Order is an unincorporated association made up of all those in special full-time service throughout the world. Members of the Worldwide Order are baptized ministers in special full-time service who perform whatever assignment they receive from the Worldwide Order. Each member of the Worldwide Order signs a Vow of Obedience and Poverty ("Vow"), which is a voluntary commitment made by each member.

36. Members of the Worldwide Order are not compensated and do not receive in-kind benefits for any services they perform. The support a member receives is based on the member's commitment to the Order and is not related to any service performed or the nature of any assignment. Members of the Worldwide Order receive food, shelter, and other basic necessities. Regardless of the nature of their privilege of service, all receive modest, yet appropriate, support. In view of the foregoing, the activities of any legal entity used by the Branch Committee are not to be viewed or regulated as a "commercial" enterprise or as involving an employer/employee relationship between any legal entity and members of the Worldwide Order.

37. At times, authorities attempt to categorize the endeavors of those in special full-time service as 'secular work.' As Christians, we do have a "work" commissioned to us. (John 4:34; 5:17; Acts 13:2; 1 Cor. 15:58; 16:10; 2 Tim. 4:5) However, members of the Worldwide Order are motivated, not by financial gain, but by the desire to accomplish the will of Jehovah and Jesus Christ in helping all "to attain to repentance." (2 Pet. 3:9) Even so, in keeping with Jesus' admonition, Branch Committee members and those who serve under their oversight need to exercise caution when asked to describe the nature of our activities. (Matt. 10:16) While we do engage in "work," even as Jesus and his first-century disciples did, we are certainly not secularly employed or motivated.

38. If a Branch Committee feels that it should describe itself, its legal entities, or the Worldwide Order differently than set forth above, it must first provide details of the proposed adjustment to the Governing Body in order to receive direction.—See 6:50.

39. The Branch Committee should consider whether to register Jehovah's Witnesses as a local entity. However, registration as a local branch of the Pennsylvania corporation may be preferable. Regimes in developing countries are less likely to expropriate property belonging to an American corporation. In other countries, having legal ties to an American legal entity is not desirable. If the Branch Committee recommends pursuing legal registration in a particular country, the details should be sent to the Coordinators' Committee. The WHQ Legal Department will provide assistance in preparing a charter and bylaws needed for registration.

40. There may be other laws in the country regulating those who transact business on behalf of local or foreign corporations. To ensure that the branch office is operating legally, a lawyer should be consulted so that the legal requirements are known. Each member of the Branch Committee should be familiar with the laws of the country as they pertain to corporations or business matters.

41. Power of Attorney: This is a legal document authorizing an individual to act as a legal agent or representative of another person or legal entity (such as the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania). The Power of Attorney names an individual to handle 'necessary business matters.' (Acts 6:3) The Branch Committee may write to the Coordinators' Committee if a Power of Attorney is needed to conduct corporation business, to register the corporation, or to obtain legal recognition as a branch of a foreign corporation.

42. In some countries, the law requires anyone holding a Power of Attorney to register it with the government. If that is the case, it should be done, thus avoiding the severe complications for not complying with such laws. Each member of a Branch Committee should be aware of the legal requirements regarding Powers of Attorney, including time periods for renewal or expiration.

43. Lawsuits for Libel, Damages, or Injunctive Relief: Before initiating any such legal actions, the Branch Committee must receive approval from the Coordinators' Committee. The recommendation from the Branch Committee should include a description of available legal remedies, the cost for such legal action (including estimated attorney's fees), an estimate of the likely time from the initiation of the action to the conclusion, and the likelihood of success and the recovery of an award. In libel actions, the Branch Committee should consider whether the suit will further advertise the false accusations. If it is believed that failure to initiate a lawsuit will lead to other difficulties, these concerns should be explained.

44. Printed Matter Against Jehovah's Witnesses: As a general policy, the organization does not publish responses or retaliate legally if another organization or individual circulates printed matter that contains falsehoods about Jehovah's Witnesses. It is usually best to concentrate on the positive activity of Kingdom preaching. If the Branch Committee thinks that the wise course is to take steps to counteract negative reports that may adversely affect our activities, the committee should set forth recommendations to the Coordinators' Committee.—See 6:19.

45. Refusal of Blood Transfusions: If our brothers' refusal of blood transfusions is being disregarded or overridden by health-care providers, legal action may be warranted. If the Branch Committee recommends such, a complete overview of the matter should be presented to the Coordinators' Committee. The recommendation should clearly state what is hoped to be accomplished by taking legal action. We are not inclined to get involved if a favorable result will not help the brotherhood in general.

46. Child-Custody and Visitation Disputes: At times, publishers are involved in child-custody or visitation disputes in which our beliefs are attacked. Unfavorable child-custody decisions in which our beliefs and activities are misrepresented can adversely affect our reputation in the community, even our legal status. With prior approval of and subsequent review by the Coordinators' Committee, some branch offices have prepared and made available information to assist publishers whose beliefs are attacked in such disputes.

47. Personal Decisions: The Legal Department at the branch office is set up to assist the Branch Committee in "the defending and legally establishing of the good news." It is inappropriate for the Legal Department to take time from these "more important things" to assist individuals with their personal legal matters. (Phil. 1:7, 10) The Legal Department should limit its work to legal matters affecting the advancement of Kingdom interests rather than personal requests for legal advice or services.

48. Protecting the Organization's Copyrights: The organization has a long-standing policy of copyrighting its publications. Copyright is a tool that can be used to protect dedicated materials from being misused, such as by apostates or false religious organizations as well as by those who attempt to commercialize our artwork, photographs, or text. We do permit some uses of our copyrighted material, such as use or reproduction by Jehovah's Witnesses for the personal use of family members, use of the organization's artwork by the congregation at a Kingdom Hall, and use by authors and others for educational purposes with specific permission granted on a case-by-case basis. However, approval is not given for the general or widespread distribution of our publications, including artwork, photographs, and text, for posting on the Internet or any other electronic network or for reproduction or distribution in exchange for money. If the branch office learns that the organization's copyrighted material is being misused, the Branch Committee should write to the Coordinators' Committee, providing full details, including the action that the committee recommends be taken against the violator.

49. Tax Matters: Although many countries provide tax exemptions for religious entities, some countries do not. Tax exemptions are generally created by law and are usually not a legal right. Where required to do so by Caesar, legal entities used by branch offices should pay the taxes legally required of them, even if other religious entities do not follow the law. Conversely, legal entities used by branch offices should not pay taxes where there is an accepted legal basis for not doing so. Every Branch Committee should take full advantage of any legal exemption from taxation. Branch Committees should keep in mind that how they handle tax and legal matters (including the tax or legal status of those in the Worldwide Order) could have implications for other branch offices, the worldwide organization, and the Worldwide Order. In addition, individuals engaged full-time in religious activities may be entitled to tax exemptions. Such exemptions relieve the branch offices of some financial obligations and indirectly constitute legal recognition of our activities. The Branch Committee should keep the Coordinators' Committee informed when exemptions currently enjoyed by the organization or members of the Worldwide Order may be in danger of being lost.

50. To respond effectively in times of emergency or war, Branch Committee members should be familiar with all decrees affecting our work and the operation of the branch office. The Branch Committee should watch carefully so that the work will be protected and the brothers will be given necessary direction. The Branch Committee should be alert as to what is going on in the country and keep the Coordinators' Committee duly informed.

51. Keep Proclaiming the Good News: In some places, opposers make every effort to stop the Kingdom work. Nevertheless, true Christians continue preaching, even if this means doing so in a quiet manner. If literature is not available, the brothers can talk about the truth using only the Bible. Dedicated servants of Jehovah should be thoroughly acquainted with the Word of God so that they can continue to preach no matter what circumstances might arise.

NEWS SERVICE AND PUBLIC INFORMATION

52. It is beneficial for the branch office to establish good relations with the public news media wherever possible and practical. Branch Committees should be prepared to provide accurate information about our activities and beliefs to newspapers, magazines, radio, and television where appropriate.—Col. 4:5, 6.

53. Office of Public Information (OPI): This office at world headquarters works under the direction of the Coordinators' Committee to publicize accurate information about and to correct misconceptions and prejudices about our organization and work. OPI produces content about our worldwide activities in the form of news releases, video news releases (VNRs), and other related materials for the Newsroom section of jw.org. Rather than focusing primarily on human rights and legal matters, these news items highlight positive developments that have broad appeal to the general public and the media, such as Witnesses' receiving official recognition for fine conduct or another significant achievement publicly acknowledged by the local community. (Please review our letter dated HCA: NC April 12, 2012, No. C-6266C.) This office makes direct contact with media professionals, academics, and other non-Witnesses to provide this information. Additionally, if a branch office needs help with media-related issues, the Branch Committee may submit the details of the situation to the Coordinators' Committee. If there is a major development or a fast-breaking news item in the branch territory about which it may be helpful to have accurate information posted on jw.org (particularly in the case of a disaster or other emergency), the Branch Committee may submit a request to the Coordinators' Committee and include documented, relevant details about the matter. OPI may prepare fast-breaking news items as "News Alerts" for the Newsroom.—See 6:19.

54. Public Information Desk (PID): This desk is responsible for providing major media outlets in the branch territory, such as national networks or newspapers and academic professionals, with an accurate picture of our beliefs and activities. They should be referred to the media resources and other official information available on jw.org. The PID should also be used to correct misconceptions and prejudices about us and our work to the extent possible. Discernment should be used in deciding whether or to what extent inquiries should be answered, especially if the reporter has a reputation for being antagonistic toward our work. The PID should also periodically provide information to OPI on positive news stories related to Jehovah's Witnesses in the branch territory. The PID may subsequently work directly with OPI in verifying the details of these stories to facilitate OPI's preparation of a news release and/or video news release (VNR). The PID will obtain approval from the Branch Committee to forward the information and related materials—including video clips—to OPI as source material. Additionally, those assigned to the PID should have a working knowledge of both English and the language used by local media, so as to assist those who translate materials appearing in the English-language Newsroom as needed. News items currently appearing on the Newsroom landing page on jw.org can serve as a guide to the PID for ideas on positive news stories. Each Branch Committee should appoint a brother at the branch to care for media matters and oversee the PID. The brother should be humble as well as capable and tactful. He should have a good knowledge of the truth. He should be able to articulate our beliefs clearly in a personable yet professional manner, particularly when dealing with non-Witnesses. The brother should be prepared to care for news interviews and other inquiries from media outlets, serving as the official spokesman for Jehovah's Witnesses in the branch territory with the full knowledge and support of the Branch Committee. He will also serve as the permanent branch media contact for news releases prepared by OPI. Please keep OPI informed of the current staffing of the PID and whether it is staffed full- or part-time.

55. News Service Representatives: A news service representative is selected for each circuit by the circuit overseer. A Circuit News Service Representative card (S-304) showing the name and address of this brother is then sent to the branch office to update its file. This brother should be available to provide accurate information to the media. He will cooperate closely with the circuit overseer and the branch office. A regional news service representative may be assigned by the local Convention Committee in harmony with direction from the branch office. It is appropriate for this brother to invite the local media to report on the convention each year. The Teaching Committee provides an annual news service kit to branch offices for use in connection with regional, national, and international conventions. Ordinarily, no newspaper advertising or radio or television time is used for conventions unless it is free. However, if it seems advisable to pay to publicize our convention activities in the country in some way, the Branch Committee may submit a recommendation to the Teaching Committee.

56. Videos for Use by the Media: The Teaching and Writing committees have selected certain videos that are especially appropriate for public broadcast. This list is updated from time to time. If a station is willing to broadcast one of our videos, the branch office representative should be sure to review our public broadcasting guidelines with the station management. If the station agrees to adhere to the conditions outlined, a broadcast may be arranged and a copy of the video provided to the station.

57. As a general rule, we avoid controversy when it comes to minor misconceptions that appear in the media. However, if some in the media spread false information of a serious nature about Jehovah's organization, what can be done? The Branch Committee generally knows the situation in the country and will often be able to judge whether it would be wise to try to contact the media and counter the misinformation or to ignore the matter. There is "a time to be silent and a time to speak."—Eccl. 3:7; see w98 12/1, pp. 17-18, pars. 15-18.

58. Handling Media-Related Emergencies: In a media-related emergency, such as criminal activity involving Jehovah's Witnesses or a slanderous campaign that could have repercussions on our preaching work, the Branch Committee has the responsibility to handle the matter quickly. It should communicate with the Coordinators' Committee for suggestions and direction, particularly if it is expected that problems will quickly spread to other countries because of media reports. If slanderous or lying reports appear in the media, it may be appropriate for the PID, in consultation with the branch Legal Department, to review these reports and submit a recommendation to the Branch Committee. The Branch Committee may write to the Coordinators' Committee to provide details on the matter or to request additional direction on pursuing the matter legally. Please note that as an exception, the branch Legal Department should handle media queries related to ongoing court cases or major legal issues involving Jehovah's Witnesses. In these instances, the PID would be consulted as needed and kept informed of the details.

DATA PROTECTION

59. The organization of Jehovah's Witnesses respects individuals' rights of privacy, based on principles set forth in the Bible. The organization recognizes the necessity for open and frank communication and the collection of personal and sensitive personal data in order to administer to the needs of Jehovah's Witnesses and accomplish its religious and charitable activity. The organization also recognizes the corresponding necessity to maintain confidentiality and ensure that information is adequately protected. (Prov. 15:22; 25:9) Confidentiality is highly valued.—Prov. 20:19.

60. Various countries have enacted data protection laws to ensure individuals' rights of privacy. The organization of Jehovah's Witnesses has a long-standing history of respecting privacy rights and maintaining confidentiality, even before the enactment of such data protection laws. The organization will continue to protect information disclosed to it in harmony with its long-standing practice, now recorded in this policy.

61. Scope of Application: This policy applies to the entire organization of

CONFIDENTIAL

Jehovah's Witnesses, as represented by branch offices located throughout the world.—See 6:19.

62. Data Protection Policy: The organization of Jehovah's Witnesses handles all personal data in accordance with the following principles:

a. Personal data will be processed in a fair and lawful manner.

b. Personal data will be collected, processed, and used only to the extent necessary to fulfill Jehovah's Witnesses' religious and charitable purposes.

c. Personal data will be accurate and kept up-to-date. Any error will be corrected as soon as possible after the organization becomes aware of it.

d. Personal data will be kept only for as long as is necessary for the legitimate purpose(s) of the organization.

e. Due consideration will be given to respecting the rights of data subjects.

f. Appropriate technical and organizational measures will be taken to prevent unauthorized or unlawful disclosure of personal data. All computer-held personal data is held on password protected computers to which only authorized users hold passwords. Offices are locked after office hours and only authorized staff may gain entry.

g. Personal data will not be transferred between branches unless necessary to accomplish the religious or charitable purposes of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses, to which all of Jehovah's Witnesses have consented by virtue of their free and willing decision to become Jehovah's Witnesses and identify themselves as such.

63. Rights of the Data Subject:

a. A data subject's right to the protection of personal and sensitive personal data and to the correction or deletion of personal and sensitive personal data is to be granted according to the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses as set forth in this policy.

b. Whoever makes a request according to this section must provide sufficient evidence of his identity.

c. If a data subject requests access to, correction of, or deletion of personal data or sensitive personal data about himself, the organization will fairly consider granting the request by balancing the interests of the individual in gaining access or correcting or deleting data against the legitimate religious interests of the organization, including whether granting the request would endanger the organization's right to religious freedom and practice.

d. The organization has an interest in permanently maintaining data regarding an individual's status as one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Deleting such information would unduly infringe on the organization's religious beliefs and practices.

64. Right of Appeal: If a person believes that his rights have been infringed, he can appeal to the Branch Committee by means of a written personal letter. The letter must be sent within two weeks of the action that forms the basis of the appeal.

COMPUTER DEPARTMENT

65. The WHQ Computer Department oversees the work of all branch Computer Departments worldwide, under the supervision of the Coordinators' Committee. This includes setting standards, providing global shared services, specifying new equipment, designing and maintaining computer networks, and supporting commercial enterprise software and software developed by headquarters.

66. The WHQ Computer Department has technicians working under its direction in various branches in order to provide timely assistance to branches around the world. These technicians closely follow the standards and policies that apply to all areas under the supervision of the WHQ Computer Department, such as networking, servers, and software.

67. For detailed information on organizing local computer operations, the Branch Committee and the branch Computer Department should consult Computer Department Guidelines.

68. Branch Computer Department Responsibilities: The Branch Committee should appoint a capable, trustworthy brother and perhaps an assistant to oversee the Computer Department. The principal responsibility of the Computer Department is to supply branch departments with computers, servers, software, telephones, radio communication, data communication, telecommunication, and related technologies. In addition, this department provides helpful support to keep equipment in good working order. Most important, it ensures that all the electronic data belonging to the branch is available only to those authorized to use it and is protected against tampering or accidental loss.

69. Standards and Guidelines: In order to maintain reasonable uniformity among branches, headquarters provides standards and technical guidelines. The branch Computer Department should endeavor to keep up-to-date with such information as provided in correspondence to the branches, Computer Department Guidelines, and the Technical Support Library located on the Extranet. There is usually no need for branch members to experiment with or pioneer the use of the latest technologies available; rather, they should concentrate on using what has been approved.

70. If the branch Computer Department feels that it needs assistance in evaluating whether to replace equipment, in using new software, or in similar matters, the branch office may submit a request for help and direction to the WHQ Computer Department.

71. Data Backups and Disaster Recovery: A good data-backup strategy is extremely important and should be viewed as one of the first priorities of the Computer Department. Backup procedures should be performed at least on a daily basis and should be verified periodically by restoring the data to a test computer. At least weekly, backups should be moved to a secure place that is not in the same building as the data being backed up. This ensures that in case of a major disaster, such as a fire or a flood, data could be retrieved and reinstalled on new equipment.

72. The Computer Department is responsible for having recovery procedures in place in case critical equipment, such as a server, fails. The procedure will vary according to the size and location of the branch and may include having a limited supply of spare equipment readily available.

73. Approvals: Any purchase of new computer hardware or software that goes beyond normal supplies, such as printer cartridges, and small items, such as memory sticks, needs approval from headquarters. This includes replacements for equipment that is taken out of service because of failure or because of the need for upgrading. Approval is obtained by submitting a Nonliterature Branch Request. For a list of recommended equipment, consult the Technical Support Library.

74. Security: Much of the information that is stored electronically is of a confidential nature. The Branch Committee should have an up-to-date list of all brothers who have access to such data. A meeting at which the importance of confidentiality is emphasized should be attended by each brother who is given such rights. A branch member may lose his Bethel service privilege if confidential data is accessed or copied without authorization. All users accessing branch data should first sign the Watchtower Information Resources Confidentiality Affirmation (available in the Technical Support Library). If changes are needed for legal reasons, this document may be adjusted by the Branch Committee.

75. The Computer Department is responsible for regular network administration tasks, such as data backup, user and group maintenance, server monitoring, and upgrading. Some network administration tasks require "system administrator" permission to accomplish this work. This type of network permission should be limited to a small number of trusted brothers. For the protection of the branch, local laws may require that such brothers sign a specific nondisclosure agreement. An up-to-date list of all system passwords should be placed in two envelopes, which should then be sealed. One should be securely stored by the overseer of the Computer Department and the other by the coordinator of the Branch Committee. For additional information relating to the security and management of confidential data, see the Information Security and Acceptable Use Policy and the Records Management Policy, both available in the Technical Support Library.

76. Infrastructure: The Computer Department would generally specify, install, and maintain the cabling for the voice and data networks of the branch. The Branch Committee may decide that another department, such as Maintenance, should handle cable installation. The Computer Department will set up and maintain any routers, switches, and servers. The standards for setting up and maintaining a network and the servers on it are contained in the Technical Support Library. All design, specifications, operation, and maintenance of the computer data network should be coordinated by the Computer Department in each branch. The Computer Department will meet with each department that has devices connected to the computer network to make sure that department requirements are being taken into consideration in the design and operation of the network. Branches planning major upgrades or changes to the computer network should have these design proposals reviewed by headquarters.

77. An air-conditioned room should be designated where servers containing the branch data can be installed. The telephone system would usually also be installed in this room, along with all the communications equipment needed to connect the branch to the outside telephone system and to the Internet. Access to this room should be limited to those who have been authorized by the Computer Department overseer and the Branch Committee.

78. Training and Support: The Computer Department must be service-oriented. Its goal is not only to provide computer equipment and software but also to help branch members make good use of the equipment and software that have been approved and provided for translation, publishing, and administration.

79. The complexity of the technology in use today makes it very important that thorough training be provided for those working in the Computer Department. This includes understanding the office productivity software and server products currently being used. It is also necessary to train backup people. When a computer system is installed, training is often provided. Ongoing training is required to get the most benefit from the computer equipment and to reduce the frustration that results from members not knowing how to use the equipment or software.

80. Depending on the size of the branch, the Computer Department might choose to establish a help desk that brothers can contact to receive help with using computer equipment and software. The brothers or sisters assigned to the help desk should be well-trained so that they can resolve the majority of problems without involving other technicians. In addition, those working on the help desk should be patient and kind with those needing assistance, showing a willing spirit. In most cases, it is good for those who support the hardware and software to deal directly with the brothers using the hardware and software. This promotes good understanding and cooperation and usually leads to better support. The help desk is not to provide assistance for or to repair personally owned computers.

81. Admin: The WHQ Computer Department is responsible for the development and support of the Admin software, the standard administrative software used by all branch offices worldwide. Unless approved to do otherwise, branch offices should use Admin or request enhancements rather than develop other administrative software locally. The Admin program is kept up-to-date with organizational procedures as these are adjusted from time to time. –See 3:87.

82. Admin is a large program with thousands of different features. Since it is used by both large and small branch offices, not all features are appropriate for each branch office. Simplification in branch operations also means simplifying our use of computers wherever possible. The Branch Committee in each branch is responsible for deciding which features of Admin should be used. Balance is required to ensure that the features of the software being used contribute to productivity and accuracy without placing a burden of unnecessary work on those using it. If a Branch Committee is unsure about using a particular feature of the program, it should consult with the WHQ Computer Department.

83. Selected brothers in various branches serve on the Admin Regional Support Team. In this assignment, these brothers make sure to follow direction from the WHQ Computer Department when providing support to the branches. Therefore, branches should e-mail the WHQ Computer Department to request Admin support. The WHQ Computer Department may then assign a Regional Support Team member to assist. If a branch office needs assistance to install a major update or a new module for Admin, the requesting branch office should send a memorandum to the WHQ Computer Department, outlining the need.

84. The Branch Committee should organize Admin support. The branch Computer Department will maintain the Admin server and database, make regular backups, apply necessary updates, and administer user security. The Branch Committee is responsible for determining which users are granted various Admin permissions. However, it is not necessary for Admin administrators to be members of the Branch Committee, as this is a technical role.

85. User training is best done by the most experienced Admin users in the branch. In many branches, this will be experienced users within a department. In branches that do not have experienced users within a department, a department overseer may ask the branch Computer Department for such training. Those assigned to support Admin should be alert to new features as described in the Admin documentation and should make sure that new features are made available to software users after discussing these features with the Branch Committee and the respective department overseers.

CONFIDENTIAL

86. The WHQ Computer Department provides the branch offices with resources to assist in giving support. In addition, the Admin support site on the Global Bethel Intranet contains helpful information, training material, and program updates. Branch offices can also e-mail the WHQ Computer Department for technical assistance or to report bugs in the program.

87. Programming: Computer software can be a valuable tool in getting our work done. However, simplification in our operations includes simplifying our software requirements where possible. Standard software packages are developed and maintained under the direction of headquarters, and as far as possible, branches should work with the standard software tools provided, such as Admin, jw.org, MEPS, and the Watchtower Translation System (WTS). This software should be kept up-to-date as directed by headquarters. —See 3:81.

88. It is generally not necessary for a branch to develop custom software, and most branches do not require a separate programming group in the Computer Department. All software projects must be approved by the Branch Committee and the WHQ Computer Department. When the Branch Committee recommends a local programming project, it should write to the WHQ Computer Department for approval. The WHQ Computer Department will consult with other headquarters departments and seek approval from the appropriate Governing Body committee as needed.

89. Where a local need is not addressed by a standard software package, such as Admin, jw.org, MEPS, or WTS, it is best in most cases to request an enhancement to the existing software. In this way, other branches with the same needs may benefit. Enhancement requests for existing software should be submitted in writing to the headquarters department or Governing Body committee that cares for the software package. —See 8:1.

90. At times, because of some specific local situation, a department at the branch office might not be able to care for its assigned work exactly as desired using the Admin program. In such cases, the Branch Committee should usually adjust the way the department does its work. If it is believed necessary, the Branch Committee may send an enhancement request to the WHQ Computer Department. If it is not possible for a department to use the standard software because of local legal requirements or other unique circumstances, the Branch Committee should write to the WHQ Computer Department for direction.

91. All branch offices are approved to make a few specific customizations to the Admin program. Before making other customizations or local extensions, the Branch Committee should write to the WHQ Computer Department for approval and direction. Branches should not submit enhancement requests and then customize Admin to match what they requested while waiting for the enhancement to be programmed. All local customizations that are approved by the WHQ Computer Department must be documented carefully, since they must be reapplied when upgrades to the Admin program are sent from headquarters.

92. Admin enhancement requests should always be entered on the appropriate document template, approved by a Branch Committee member, and then sent to the WHQ Computer Department. If the benefit of an enhancement request justifies the amount of work required, it will be approved by the WHQ Computer Department. Enhancement requests that would involve significant work or would change an organizational procedure will be referred to the appropriate headquarters department or Governing Body committee for consideration.

CONFIDENTIAL

93. Commercial Software: The Computer Department is responsible for making sure that commercial software is not used without proper licensing. Personally owned software should not be used on branch computers. If software is needed, it should be properly purchased and licensed by the branch. This means that records have to be kept to show clearly all available licenses at the branch and who is using them. Discrepancies must be resolved either by removing the program or by obtaining a proper license. No software should be installed on any branch equipment without prior approval from the Computer Department.

94. Use of the Internet: The Internet should remain logically separate from the branch network in a manner that is in harmony with the latest direction from headquarters. Internet access should be monitored and filtered. Access to the Internet during working hours should be granted only to those who require it for their work. Periodically, reminders should be given about using this access for work-related matters only.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEES

34. Anyone coming to know of serious misconduct on the part of a member of the Bethel family should advise the offender of his obligation to bring this to the attention of a member of the Branch Committee or another elder. The one having knowledge of the offense should also make a report to the Branch Committee so that the organization will be kept clean. (Lev. 5:1) This should be done whether the offender reports the matter or not.

35. Investigation Procedure: If the elders of the congregation that a Bethel family member attends become aware of an accusation against the Bethelite, they should immediately contact the branch office for direction. If the accusation involves the Bethelite's conduct with someone in his congregation or if the offense was committed in his congregation environment, the Branch Committee may determine that it will be most practical to have the local elders investigate and handle the case to the extent necessary. Otherwise, the matter will be handled at Bethel. In either case, two elders will investigate the allegation. If the accused is under consideration for a theocratic assignment, it should be held in abeyance pending resolution of the case. If upon investigation the elders determine that the charges have no substance or that no further action is needed, they should inform the Branch Committee in writing of their findings. If the elders determine that a disfellowshipping offense has been committed, the Branch Committee will appoint a judicial committee.

36. Judicial Committees Involving Bethelites in the Congregation: If it has been established that a Bethel family member has committed a disfellowshipping offense involving his congregation, the congregation body of elders should inquire of the branch office immediately as to how to proceed. The branch office will determine whether the local body of elders should convene a judicial committee or whether the case should be handled by a judicial committee at Bethel. If the local elders are directed to appoint the judicial committee, the case will be handled in an expeditious manner, just as a judicial case would be handled for any publisher in the local congregation. The judicial committee should immediately advise the branch office of the final decision.

37. Judicial Committees at Bethel: These are appointed to handle offenses that are the basis for disfellowshipping, just as they would be handled in the congregation. The judicial committee and its chairman are appointed by the Branch Committee. Qualified elders who are in a good position to render a balanced and just decision should be appointed. Though the judicial committee is usually made up of three elders, it could include four or five because of the gravity of the offense and other factors. Branch Committee members should not serve on judicial committees if other qualified brothers are available to do so. Thus, if needed, some Branch Committee members would be available to serve on an appeal committee. Although the judicial committee may want to consult with members of the Branch Committee before reaching a conclusion, the judicial committee alone should make the decision. The report to the Branch Committee will be made out using the form Judicial Committee Summary at Bethel (A-7).

38. Appeal Committees: If the judicial committee (either at Bethel or in the congregation) decides that the Bethel family member should be disfellowshipped, he may make an appeal in writing to the Branch Committee. The Branch Committee will select an appeal committee of qualified elders at Bethel, one of whom will be appointed to serve as chairman. The appeal should be heard in an expeditious manner even if the basis for the appeal does not appear to be sound. In the case of disfellowshipping, the wrongdoer should be given the usual seven days to make this appeal, even though he would normally leave Bethel on the day the original judicial committee advises him of the decision to disfellowship. No announcement of the disfellowshipping should be made until seven days have elapsed since the appeal was handled.—ks10 8:1-20.

39. When the disfellowshipping is upheld, there is no further arrangement for appeal. However, if an individual persists in believing a serious error in judgment has occurred, the appeal committee should inform him that he may submit his allegations in writing to the appeal committee within seven days for transmittal to the Branch Committee. The appeal committee should not mention this provision unless the individual indicates that he believes a serious error in judgment has occurred. If he indicates a desire to submit a letter of appeal to the Branch Committee, the announcement of disfellowshipping should be delayed. The appeal committee should submit the wrongdoer's letter, the report from the judicial committee, and a report from the appeal committee to the Branch Committee. No announcement should be made until a reply is received from the Branch Committee.—ks10 8: 14-15.

40. If someone is judicially reproved and therefore must leave Bethel, a letter should be sent to the body of elders of the congregation that he will attend so that the elders may be able to assist him to regain his spirituality. A copy of the judicial committee's report (either from Bethel or from the congregation) should be sent to the Service Department, which will write the letter to the body of elders. In the case of disfellowshipping, the form Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) should also be included in the report to the Service Department. If the person is reinstated, the S-77 form should be signed and returned to the Service Department. An announcement should be made to the Bethel family in the case of a disfellowshipping. (ks10 7:31) In the case of someone who is judicially reproved, the Branch Committee should use good judgment in determining whether an announcement should be made or not. —ks10 7:21.

SERVICE COMMITTEE

FIELD MISSIONARIES

1. The Service Committee appoints field missionaries and determines the lands to which they will be assigned. Branches that wish to request additional field missionaries should submit the Request for Field Missionaries (S-218) form to the Service Committee by April and November of each year.—See 6:5-6.

2. Hour Requirement: The field missionary hour requirement is 130 hours a month. Sisters who are 40 years of age or older have a requirement of 120 hours a month. It is understood that a field missionary who serves as a congregation elder may at times be needed for additional short-term theocratic assignments. For example, he may need to serve on a special committee or a Disaster Relief Committee, help with circuit or convention organization, assist in the construction or renovation of his own Kingdom Hall, or serve as a substitute circuit overseer. In addition, he may be needed for a brief period of time to train local elders to care for their responsibilities on a Hospital Liaison Committee. In exceptional situations, the travel time to attend an assigned circuit assembly, regional convention, or Kingdom Ministry School may be unusually long. If such assignments prevent him from making his hour requirement, a brief explanation as well as the number of hours spent should be included on the monthly report submitted on jw.org or on his monthly S-212 report. An explanation should also be written in the "Remarks" column of the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card. However, the hours spent should not be included in the "Hours" column. The branch will also mark the Admin records accordingly.

- If a missionary with less than 15 years of special full-time service is consistently unable to meet his monthly hour requirement because of serious and debilitating health problems, perhaps for six months or so, then the Branch Committee should follow the direction outlined in 6:10. For those who are 50 years of age or older or who have 15 or more years in special full-time service, a reduced hour requirement may be appropriate. To determine a reasonable hour goal, the branch office should receive a recommendation from the missionary's body of elders and one from the circuit overseer before submitting the recommendation to the Service Committee. For reporting purposes, a field missionary with an approved reduced hour quota will continue with the FMF enrollment code. Periodically, the branch should review the field missionary's circumstances to determine whether the reduced hour quota is still needed or whether a further reduction should be recommended to the Service Committee. In most cases, a reduced hour requirement is better than no hour requirement at all. The recommendation that a field missionary have no hour requirement is usually reserved for field missionaries who have extremely limiting circumstances because of advanced age or life-threatening health issues and whose hour requirement has already been progressively reduced.

3. Marriage: If a single field missionary becomes engaged to be married, he or she should inform the branch office right away. If the field missionary indicates that he or she wishes to continue in the missionary work along with his or her prospective mate, the branch should immediately request a confidential Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) from the missionary's body of elders and one from his or her circuit overseer.

- If the prospective mate lives in the branch territory, the branch may send him or her a Questionnaire for Prospective Field Missionary (S-214) to fill out. In addition, the prospective mate's body of elders and circuit overseer should be asked to complete separate Personal Qualifications Reports (S-326). The Branch Committee will review the missionary's qualifications and those of his or her prospective mate, taking into consideration the reputation and the physical health and stamina of each one. Whether favorable or otherwise, all the reports (translated into English) along with the Branch Committee's recommendation and the prospective mate's S-214 questionnaire should be submitted to the Service Committee, which will make the final decision.
- If the prospective mate does not live in the branch territory, the Branch Committee should submit the S-326 reports for the missionary to the Service Committee along with its recommendation based on the Branch Committee's knowledge of the missionary. In turn, the Service Committee will obtain the needed reports from the prospective mate's branch office. In all cases, the Service Committee will make the final decision as to whether someone continues as a field missionary following his or her marriage.

4. Pregnancy: A field missionary couple who learn that they are to be parents should inform the branch immediately. The couple should be given a period of three months to get settled, during which they will continue to receive their monthly allowance. During this three-month period, the couple will need to locate suitable accommodations and find employment, so it is not expected that they will meet their monthly hour requirement. If one or both mates wish to become regular pioneers, they will have an additional three months to make the transition and their full-time service history would continue uninterrupted. If requested, the branch office is authorized to assist a departing missionary with the cost of return travel to his home country and the costs associated with shipping his basic personal belongings. For information on transitional financial assistance, see 6:130.

5. Missionary Assignments: Field missionaries are a valuable resource, and the Branch Committee must give careful consideration to where they will be assigned. Assignments should enable the missionaries to accomplish the most good in stabilizing and strengthening preaching and congregation activities in densely populated areas. Missionaries should not be assigned to areas where their health and safety will be endangered. The Branch Committee should thoroughly consider such factors as the publisher-to-population ratio, the language fields that need to be targeted, and the availability of suitable housing. Specific congregation assignments for field missionaries are made by the Branch Committee. Missionaries do not select their own congregation assignments. Before any reassignment of field missionaries is finalized, a branch representative, preferably a member of the Branch Committee, should discuss the proposal with the missionaries involved to address any questions or concerns. There is no need to consult with the Service Committee about such reassignments unless the field missionaries raise a concern about the proposed move. (Prov. 13:10; 15:22) The Service Committee should be consulted when submitting requests to transfer a field missionary to Bethel for more than three months.—See 4:7.

CONFIDENTIAL

6. Housing for Field Missionaries: Generally, branches should endeavor to house a field missionary couple or two single brothers by themselves in a modest apartment or house. Branch Committees will follow the guidelines and options below:

- Field missionaries should be assigned to densely populated areas where their efforts may have a profound impact in stabilizing and strengthening preaching and congregation activities. After the Branch Committee has identified an area where field missionaries can be used effectively, a qualified brother should be assigned to research available housing options and the costs involved. This could include identifying Kingdom Hall apartments or apartments that local brothers are renting out. The Branch Committee should guide those who are assigned to research the matter so that the needs of foreign missionaries, such as safety, the distance to the territory, and the availability of public transportation, are kept in mind. Have in mind that some locations may be a little more costly but would allow the field missionaries to be more centrally located in their assigned territory. The Branch Committee, not the field missionaries, will make the final decision as to which accommodations should be rented.
- Consider the health and safety of the field missionaries. Are there apartments or small dwellings suitable for a couple and available in a reasonably safe location? A larger apartment or home to house more than one couple would be recommended only when safety and/or health issues require it or when providing separate housing is considerably more costly. For example, an older single or widowed missionary sister may not need to be assisted by local publishers as outlined in 6:11. However, for her safety and peace of mind, it may be advisable for her to share accommodations with a younger missionary couple. Additionally, in some lands it would be very expensive to set up smaller missionary homes in areas where electricity, water, and other basic utilities are not available. Therefore, the Branch Committee should exercise good judgment when considering these factors.
- The Branch Committee is authorized to spend up to USD 1,000 per month per couple for missionary accommodations. Please note that this approval limit includes the monthly cost of utilities. In most lands, a suitable apartment and utilities for two people would cost USD 200 to 500 per month. Higher expenditures would be viewed as quite exceptional and possibly extravagant in developing lands. This approval level on rental agreements has been established on the premise that the Branch Committee will be careful to ensure that field missionaries are located where they can accomplish the most good and where the cost of accommodations and utilities will not be prohibitive. If you need further direction on this matter, please write to the Publishing Committee. The branch office should care for the payment of rent and utilities and help the field missionaries handle any legal agreements that may be needed to secure accommodations. If local circumstances require paying the owner several months of rent up front, this may be done up to a maximum of one year's rental. Rental agreements that exceed USD 1,000 per month or USD 12,000 per year or recommendations that involve the construction of new missionary homes should be sent to the Publishing Committee. If it is concluded that a branch-owned missionary home should be used for some other purpose or sold, the recommendation should be sent to the Publishing Committee.—See 5:192.

- In cases where it might be less expensive for the individual renter to pay the rent instead of the organization, the branch office may provide the missionary with the funds to cover the rent. As long as the monthly rent and utilities for field missionaries is less than USD 1,000 per month for two people, there is no need to show this on the Record of Allowances (A-29) form.—See 5:192.

7. Home Equipment Needs: Branch Committees must be practical, kind, and generous in the supplying of suitable home equipment for the field missionaries. A standard approach will not work in all countries. Some field missionaries may have personal linens, furniture, and equipment that they want to use in their assignment. Newer missionaries may have very little and may need more assistance in obtaining these items. A rented apartment in one location may have heating, air conditioning, appliances, and access to laundry facilities. In other locations, the apartment may lack these provisions, and field missionaries will need to be provided with these basic necessities. The local situation and circumstances must be carefully considered. The branch office should avoid installing expensive equipment, such as water-filtration devices and backup electrical systems, in rented missionary homes. For rented accommodations, it is preferred that any additional equipment that the branch office obtains be limited to what is practical and what could be moved easily to another rented home. For example, while the branch office should not install expensive generators in a rented missionary home, a less-expensive portable generator that provides backup power for the refrigerator and air-conditioning may be obtained if needed. The same principle applies to other equipment, such as water filters. If there is a legitimate need for something beyond that, then please write to the Publishing Committee. If the Branch Committee feels that it is reasonable to provide Internet service for a missionary home and the missionaries agree to cover the monthly costs, it may submit the recommendation with the details to the Publishing Committee for consideration, explaining the cost of installation and the monthly cost per person.

8. Shepherding Visits: The Branch Committee assigns members of the committee to make annual shepherding visits on field missionaries. Such visits are not made on circuit overseers in foreign service nor on field instructors in foreign service. If it is practical, the visit could be arranged in conjunction with another assignment, such as a circuit assembly or a Kingdom Hall dedication, perhaps using Friday or Monday to meet with the missionaries. Apart from travel time, usually no more than a day or two should be needed to meet with all of the field missionaries in a particular city. After his meeting with the field missionaries as a group, the branch representative may spend any remaining time with the missionaries on an individual basis. The branch representative should make it his goal to provide each missionary couple or single missionary with specific, warm commendation. (Prov. 12: 25; 1 Thess. 5:11) Following the visit, the branch representative will provide the Branch Committee with a completed Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) on each field missionary. If problems or concerns arise, the branch representative should not try to handle these on his own. Rather, he should report his observations to the Branch Committee, which will follow up as needed. If the branch representative is married, his wife may be given time off from her Bethel assignment to accompany him. While her husband is making the shepherding visits, she could spend time in the ministry, perhaps with other missionaries or with some of the local publishers.

- While it is strongly preferred that Branch and Country committee members make such annual visits, other mature and exceptionally kind elders working in the Service Department may be assigned to assist the committee members. This exception is made primarily for lands where there are a large number of field missionaries or where some members of the committee cannot care for this assignment because of age or health.

9. Travel Expenses: If a field missionary needs some assistance to cover his actual round-trip travel expenses to attend his assigned circuit assembly, regional convention, or Kingdom Ministry School, the Branch Committee may reimburse actual travel expenses upon request. This provision is not to be advertised and is intended only to cover unusually high travel expenses that may be involved to reach the assigned assembly or school.

10. Recommending the Deletion of a Field Missionary: Occasionally, a Branch Committee finds it necessary to recommend the deletion of a field missionary, perhaps because of prolonged problems in getting along with others or chronic health issues that prevent him from fulfilling the requirements for field missionaries. Before sending the recommendation to the Service Committee, the Branch Committee should arrange for a meeting with the field missionary to explain the reasons for recommending his deletion. If the missionary disagrees and wishes to provide his comments to the Service Committee, he may submit a letter that should be forwarded with the Branch Committee's recommendation. If he agrees with the recommendation, this should be indicated in the Branch Committee's letter. The Service Committee will consider the matter and provide further direction. If requested, the branch office is authorized to assist a departing missionary with the cost of return travel to his home country and the costs associated with shipping his basic personal belongings.

11. Long-Term Care of Field Missionaries: At times, field missionaries who have served faithfully in their foreign assignment for decades begin to experience chronic health problems or the limitations of old age or disease. The organization is pleased to care for their needs. (Ps. 71:9) While there is no arrangement to provide housing and long-term care for field missionaries at Bethel, the Branch Committee will take the lead in thoroughly investigating other options with the objective of providing the field missionary with personal and/or medical care while the field missionary remains in a field assignment. For example, could the local congregation provide needed assistance? (Mark 10:28-30) Are qualified local publishers or pioneers with medical training and experience available to assist? (1 Thess. 5:14) In some cases, consideration could be given to hiring a publisher or a pioneer to care for the long-term needs of the brother or sister. If a pioneer is involved, the branch may direct the congregation elders to show the pioneer consideration regarding his annual hour requirement. Simply put, the Branch Committee should consider what can be done locally, in the foreign assignment, to meet the long-term needs of the elderly field missionary in the best way possible.—See 6:6; Eccl. 5:18.

12. In some cases, a longtime field missionary may request to live closer to fleshly or to spiritual family members who are eager to care for his physical or medical needs; this is appropriate and appreciated. (1 Tim. 5:3, 4) However, what if long-term specialized health care cannot be provided in the foreign assignment and the field missionary has no family members available to assist him? In such cases, thorough consideration will be given by the Service Committee to transferring the field missionary to another country, such as his home country, where health care can be provided while he serves in the field. As noted above, it may be possible to utilize the services of qualified brothers and sisters in the field who can provide the personal assistance that is needed. In an exceptional case that seems to necessitate transferring a field missionary to Bethel for long-term health care, the Governing Body will need to be consulted.

HOSPITAL INFORMATION SERVICES

13. Under the supervision of the Service Committee, Hospital Information Services (HIS), a world headquarters department, provides direction and practical assistance to branch Hospital Information Desks (HIDs) and Hospital Liaison Committees (HLCs). This arrangement (1) supports the Bible-based position to 'abstain . . . from blood' and (2) helps to correct misconceptions about the position of Jehovah's Witnesses on medical care.—Acts 15:29.

14. HIS provides periodic training for the branch HID and the HLCs. HIS maintains a database of current medical articles on transfusion-alternative treatment strategies from respected medical journals. HIS also supplies HIDs with useful medical publications, medical article citations lists, video programs on transfusion alternatives, and favorable court decisions involving patients' rights. Therefore, branch HIDs should not do extensive searches for medical information or begin working on any other materials related to HID or HLC activity without permission from the Service Committee. When emergency cases or other urgent situations arise requiring such information, HIS should be contacted immediately by e-mail or by telephone, following up with official correspondence, which would normally include the Medical Emergency Worksheet (hlc-7-E). HIS will provide any needed materials. To accommodate urgent requests for information on medical alternatives to transfusion, HIS maintains 24-7 telephone accessibility. A branch HID should also be accessible to HLCs and hospital professionals in its branch territory on a 24-7 basis.

15. If a branch HID becomes aware of a high-quality, peer-reviewed, local-language medical article and the Branch Committee believes that the article would be useful, such an article, along with a brief English summary, may be sent to HIS for approval. Articles should focus on one or more of the following: (1) drugs, devices, or techniques that reduce or eliminate the use of (donor) blood transfusion; (2) ethical/legal concerns, patients' rights, or informed consent issues; (3) transfusion hazards; (4) the cost-effectiveness of transfusion alternative strategies; or (5) an outline of how to perform a specific medical or surgical procedure without the use of donor blood.

16. Hospital Information Desk (HID): An HID is established at each branch to oversee the HLCs within its assigned territory. The Branch Committee directs the work of the HID. The department name Hospital Information Desk is to be used when communicating with the HLCs and other departments within the branch office and when writing to other branches and to headquarters. However, when the HID communicates with doctors and secular professionals, its letterhead and business cards should describe the department as "Hospital Information Services (Country) for Jehovah's Witnesses." An HID should also use this designation when it uses exhibit booths at medical conferences. While there is no arrangement for HID representatives to visit HLCs, the Branch Committee may grant approval on a case-by-case basis for an HID representative to visit an HLC that is in urgent need of training or that is finding it difficult to assist the brothers to obtain medical care without blood transfusions. The support and medical information provided by HIS is primarily in English. Therefore, if possible, the HID overseer or his assistant should be reasonably proficient in spoken and written English, in addition to the local language.—See the Service Committee's letter to all branches dated HSA:HIA February 13, 2014, No. C-26033S.

17. The HID maintains a list of consulting doctors who are respected, highly skilled, well-known advocates of nonblood management and who are willing and able to explain effectively to less experienced doctors the use of transfusion alternatives. When emergencies or complicated cases arise, the HID may provide an HLC with the name of a consulting doctor. If there are no consulting doctors available in the country, the HID may contact HIS or a nearby branch HID for assistance. Each HLC maintains a list of cooperative doctors in its local area who have agreed to care for Witness patients. (In smaller branches with few cooperative doctors, the HID may decide to keep on file the HLC lists of cooperative doctors.) Thus, when Witnesses seek a cooperative specialist or medical facility, the HLCs can supply the names of several doctors or medical facilities that can provide the needed specialized care. (HLCs may provide indirect humanitarian assistance through Witness relatives or local elders to disfellowshipped individuals.) HLCs refrain from endorsing doctors, medical procedures, medical facilities, pharmaceuticals or herbal products, and alternative therapies. In all matters of health care, members of the HLCs avoid imposing their conscience on others. For cooperative physicians and facilities outside their assigned area, HLCs may consult with neighboring HLCs or with the branch HID. Only the HID should consult a nearby branch or HIS as needed. —See the Service Committee's letter to all branches dated GAO:HIA October 2, 2006.

18. Hospital Liaison Committees (HLCs): The Branch Committee determines the number of HLCs needed in its branch territory. When an HLC needs additional brothers to help care for the workload, the HLC determines who should be recommended. Qualifications for HLC members are outlined in Circuit Overseer Guidelines (tg). The HLC should consult the circuit overseer to ensure that the recommended brother is qualified to serve in this capacity. The HLC then sends the recommendation to the HID, using the Hospital Liaison Committee Recommendation (hlc-21) form. If in agreement, the HID forwards the recommendation to the branch Service Department for comments. If there is no objection to the appointment, two members of the Branch Committee may approve it.

19. HLCs are set up in most major cities to (1) act as a liaison between healthcare providers and Witness patients and their families when requested; (2) assist Witness patients in locating doctors willing to provide treatment without blood transfusion; (3) provide medical articles to doctors, in accordance with copyright laws; (4) arrange consultations between local doctors and experienced specialists; (5) assist Witness patients in transferring to another medical facility if this becomes necessary; (6) make presentations to medical staffs, health ministries, social welfare officials, legal personnel, and others about our position on medical care and/or blood transfusions; and (7) appoint elders to serve as Patient Visitation Group (PVG) members. HLCs coordinate the activity of the PVGs and meet with the members at least once a year to review needs, offer encouragement, and keep these elders abreast of HLC activity. During a local blood-related medical crisis, the branch may designate HLC members to respond to media inquiries. The Branch Committee would likely direct the HID and the HLC members to work closely with the branch Legal Department and the Public Information Desk on such media matters. (See 3:44, 52-53, 56-61.) Annually, toward the beginning of the year, bodies of elders receive a letter from the branch with an updated list of members of the local HLC, unless the elders have access to regular updates on jw.org.

20. Patient Visitation Groups (PVGs): HLCs organize PVGs in key cities to provide spiritual support for hospitalized Witness patients from outside the local area. HLCs may consult with the circuit overseers for recommendations of elders to serve as PVG members. An HLC member is assigned to oversee PVG activity, especially in metropolitan areas. At least once a year, HLCs meet with the PVGs to review needs and offer encouragement. During hospital visits, the PVG elders endeavor to provide emotional and spiritual support and, at appropriate times, pray with Witness patients and relatives. When a PVG finds a patient from a local congregation who needs assistance and support, it facilitates contact with the elders in the patient's congregation. PVG activities do not replace the responsibility of the local congregations to visit and care for the needs of their publishers who are in the hospital.

21. Bloodless Medicine and Surgery Programs (BMSPs): Hospitals in some lands have established BMSPs, blood conservation programs, and patient blood management programs. This means that the hospital administration, the coordinator(s) within the hospital, and/or various specialists have made a commitment to provide medical or surgical care without donor blood transfusions to patients who request such care. At times, business organizations make contracts with hospitals to develop and maintain BMSPs. Even when staffed by Witnesses, such organizations are not spokesmen for Jehovah's Witnesses.

22. HLCs should not endorse or participate in the meetings of BMSPs or share with them the HLCs' confidential lists of cooperative doctors. The activity of these entities must remain separate from HIDs, HLCs, and the congregations. (See km 9/87 p. 4 and 6/77 p. 4.) The branch should write to the Service Committee if there are some unusual circumstances warranting a different approach.

23. Medical Conferences: The Branch Committee should be very selective as to the type of conferences and the number of conferences it approves for the HID to attend each year, so that Bethel members are not away from their regular assignments too frequently. Only conferences directly related to the blood issue should be considered. However, conferences featuring blood conservation or transfusion-alternative strategies will often discuss Jehovah's Witnesses and having an HID or HLC representative present may help to correct any misinformation. If a conference is held in another country, the Branch Committee should seek in writing the approval of the Service Committee to have a representative attend.

24. If the HID or an HLC is invited to present information on the position of Jehovah's Witnesses on medical matters and the Branch Committee agrees, a copy of the proposed presentation should be sent to the Service Committee for approval. This is not necessary if the brother uses the standard HID/HLC PowerPoint presentation.

25. The branch should not sponsor a medical conference or symposium. If cooperative doctors consent to their names being given to the sponsors as potential presenters, this may be done. If the Branch Committee believes that more involvement is warranted, the Service Committee should be consulted. There is no objection to HLC members verbally informing cooperative doctors of such events if the HLC believes that the doctors may wish to attend. However, HLCs should not initiate a special campaign to invite doctors in their area to the event and should refrain from advertising or giving the impression that they endorse or promote an event, even when Witnesses are organizers. Furthermore, the branch should not incur transportation, registration, or lodging expenses for physicians to attend these events. If further consideration is warranted, the Branch Committee should write to the Service Committee.

26. Exhibit/Display Booths: The branch should be very selective regarding the type and the number of medical conferences for which it will seek approval to set up a booth. Only conferences attended by doctors who regularly deal with the blood issue are to be considered. Before contracting with the sponsors to exhibit, the branch office should seek approval from the Service Committee, submitting the name of the conference, its location, expected attendance, total costs, and other relevant information concerning the event. Only the approved booth graphics and signage should be used. The Service Committee should approve any modifications. When a booth is requested from a custodial branch, sufficient lead time should be allowed (at least three months). Only the approved presentation kits should be used as handouts. Branches may write to HIS for suggestions on what to include in the information packages for doctors.—See the letters to all branches dated HIM:HIO August 23, 1999, and HIM:HIP December 22, 2000.

27. Medical Devices and Supplies: Hospitals in developing countries may ask the branch to donate medical devices, equipment, or other supplies. Before making any commitment, the Branch Committee should write to the Service Committee for direction.

- Pharmaceuticals: In developing lands with limited access to basic pharmaceuticals, a branch may wish to store a small supply of specialized medicine (such as EPO or iron) and/or other basic medical supplies. However, before requesting permission from the Service Committee, the branch should check with regulatory health agencies in the country to determine the legal requirements that regulate storing these items. If the Service Committee approves the request, the branch should be judicious in the amount of medicine kept on hand, perhaps storing only a six-month supply or enough for two or three patients. The branch should submit a Nonliterature Branch Request to replace any items used. Brothers may express their appreciation for this arrangement by donating financially to defray the cost of replenishing the stock of medicine and supplies, though such a donation is not a requirement to benefit from this arrangement.

28. Web Sites: Neither the branches nor the HLCs should place information about HID/HLC activity on any public Web site unless the Service Committee grants approval.

OUR KINGDOM MINISTRY

29. Branch Committees are authorized to make necessary adjustments to the local edition(s) of Our Kingdom Ministry or to outline adjustments in a letter to the affected congregations. However, rather than preparing new material for Our Kingdom Ministry to address a local problem, the branch office should try to use material that has already been published. In some cases, it may be best for the branch to send a letter to the bodies of elders explaining the concern that needs attention and instructing the elders to make local application of certain published references during a local needs part on the Service Meeting.

30. If there are unique situations that cannot be addressed as described above, the Branch Committee may submit a draft Our Kingdom Ministry article to the Service Committee for consideration. This would need to be done several months in advance of scheduled printing. What is written about should deal primarily with the field ministry and other activity pertaining to the preaching and teaching work. Generally, it is not wise to prepare new material featuring Scriptural direction on topics such as local marriage or funeral customs or superstitious practices common in the branch territory. If the Branch Committee feels that there are unique circumstances that need to be addressed during the Service Meeting, it is best to write to the Service Committee for direction before preparing new material.

31. Foreign-Language Editions: It is recommended that branches use the foreign-language edition of Our Kingdom Ministry prepared by the translating branch. This reduces the amount of work for translation teams and makes for a unified approach for presenting the good news to certain language groups. Rather than adjusting Our Kingdom Ministry, the branch office may send a letter to congregations and groups with any needed direction that applies to their territory when a specific need arises for a particular foreign-language field. In an exceptional case, an article prepared by the branch office for the local foreign-language edition may be sent to the Service Committee for review and approval, in harmony with the guidelines outlined above.

32. Literature Offers: Literature offers are established to meet the needs of the territory, with the objective of helping many more people learn about the good news of the Kingdom. (1 Cor. 9:26; 14:9) All Branch and Country committees should carefully review the offers set forth by the Service Committee in the Governing Body's annual letter and determine which items will best suit local needs. Branch Committees are authorized to make needed adjustments and announce these adjustments in the local edition(s) of Our Kingdom Ministry or, if necessary, in correspondence to the affected congregations. If a suggested presentation in the base edition of Our Kingdom Ministry does not fit local circumstances, the branch office should replace it with a more fitting one.

33. Field Service Highlights: The Branch Committee may decide what notable field service highlights will appear in the local edition of Our Kingdom Ministry. This may include new peaks reached in the number of publishers or pioneers, the total number of Bible studies conducted, the number of new ones baptized, or the fine results achieved during a special campaign. The objective of such highlights is to encourage all members of the congregation, including those whose field service activity appears to be small. (Mark 14:8, 9; Luke 21:1-4) The highlights should not report on averages, such as hours, placements, return visits, or Bible studies. If many lands are served by a particular edition of Our Kingdom Ministry, the Branch Committee(s) will likely find it advantageous to alternate country reports month by month.—See 5:84.

SERVICE DEPARTMENT

34. Under the direction of the Branch Committee, the Service Department cares for matters related to the preaching work and the activity of congregations, elders and ministerial servants, circuit overseers, and pioneers. It also arranges assemblies and conventions and various theocratic schools. Brothers in the Service Department prepare responses to reports and inquiries from the field that relate to the preaching work and congregation activities. The Service Department works closely with the Local Design/Construction Department to determine where Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls are needed and their priority. The Governing Body provides direction on such matters through the latest publications on congregation organization, various guidelines, and letters. If there is no clear policy on a matter, the Service Department should forward its questions to the Branch Committee. The Branch Committee may need to consult with the Service Committee or another Governing Body committee for direction.

Department Organization

35. Overseer: A member of the Branch or Country committee will be appointed to serve as the Service Department overseer. (See 2:13.) In most branches, an assistant overseer should be appointed to care for the workload, especially when the overseer is away from the office. In larger branches, two brothers may be appointed by the Branch Committee to serve as assistant overseers.–See 2:15.

36. Deskmen: In a small branch office, the overseer may be able to handle the work of a Service Department deskman. In most branches, however, the Branch Committee will appoint other qualified elders to serve in the Service Department as deskmen who will care for the reports and correspondence from a number of circuits. The number of circuits assigned to a deskman varies according to the brother's workload, capabilities, health, and age limitations.

37. A deskman should be an experienced elder known for his loyal adherence to theocratic direction. He must be courteous, loyal, and courageous in giving sound Scriptural direction. He must be well-organized and diligent in caring for his responsibilities. He may have gained experience as a Service Desk secretary for several years. Experience has shown that there are benefits for some of the deskmen to have served in the traveling work prior to Bethel. Deskmen should give thorough training to the secretaries in the department with the objective of helping them to take on greater responsibility in the future. (2 Tim. 2:2) In most cases, such a training program would make it unnecessary routinely to transfer circuit overseers to Bethel to serve in the Service Department. However, if there is a need to transfer a circuit overseer to Bethel to serve as a Service Department deskman, the request, along with a complete explanation, should be submitted to the Service Committee. If the Service Committee agrees to release the circuit overseer for Bethel service, the recommendation will then be sent to the Personnel Committee. (See 4:7) When considering this option, the Branch Committee should keep in mind that not all circuit overseers and their wives will be able to adapt to Bethel life.

38. A deskman should be careful to avoid giving his own opinion on service-related matters. His counsel must be sound, based on the Bible and theocratic guidelines. (1 Cor. 4:6) To ensure that proper theocratic direction is relayed to the field, a proofreading system should be established. One deskman may proofread the work of another.

39. Service Desk Secretaries: As the workload increases, a brother may be assigned as a secretary to a deskman. Although he may be younger in years and may not have the same level of experience, a secretary must have the spiritual qualities required of a deskman. While it is preferred that a Service Desk secretary be an appointed elder, he would generally not need to be an older brother with many years of Bethel service or field experience. A modest young brother with fine spirituality and the potential to qualify in time to serve as a deskman may be used. His duties would include opening and sorting mail, attaching relevant background material, typing letters, filing, entering information into the computer, and so forth.

40. Desk Groups: As the number of deskmen increases, it may be practical to arrange them in groups of five or six and have them circulate difficult cases. The more-difficult cases can be considered at a weekly meeting. (Prov. 13:10) At the discretion of the Branch Committee, the more experienced Service Desk secretaries could be included in the group meetings in order to further their training. If those in the Service Department cannot resolve a complex issue by using published direction or if a case is of major importance, they will refer the matter to the Branch Committee. The Branch Committee, in turn, may need to consult with the Service Committee for direction.–See 2:21; 6:55.

Handling Telephone Calls and Correspondence

41. Telephone Calls: A telephone call should always be answered in a kind and loving way. Even though the brother taking the call is busy and it may interrupt his work, reflecting warmth, respect, and concern for the brothers and others is important. One should be as helpful as possible to the individual calling. If the caller is from outside of Bethel, it is not wise for a deskman or his secretary to give his name unless the caller is a circuit overseer. However, there is no objection to providing an outside caller with the desk symbol of the deskman.

42. A telephone memorandum should be made for all telephone calls that deal with important matters and for calls in which direction is given and a record is necessary. The memorandum should include the name of the caller, the caller's telephone number, the congregation, the nature of the call, who took the call, and any direction that was given. This can be filed in the General Correspondence section of the congregation's file or in the HOLD file if a letter is forthcoming. If the caller presents a weighty matter, he should be requested to write to the branch office.

43. Incoming Mail: In smaller branches, the Service Department overseer may be able to handle routine mail. In most branches, it may be necessary to have a mail desk or a correspondence clerk assigned to open postal mail. A similar arrangement may be needed to process and route incoming electronic correspondence. Incoming mail is handled in the date order of receipt and according to its urgency. If at all possible, those working in the Service Department should make it their goal to reply to correspondence within two weeks.

44. Requests for Kingdom Hall Addresses and Meeting Times: In most cases, the branch office may provide any inquirer with basic information about Kingdom Hall addresses and meeting times. There is no objection to replying by e-mail to written requests for such basic information.—See 3:14; 6:48.

45. Correspondence From Other Branches: When another branch writes to an individual in the branch territory, the letter will usually be sent to the Service Department for forwarding to the addressee. In most cases, such letters can be sent directly to the addressee. If there are any concerns about the information being provided or about the addressee, it would be best to send the letter through the congregation, with appropriate direction to the elders.

46. If the letter to the individual is accompanied by a courtesy copy for the branch, the original should be sent to the addressee, as directed above, and the courtesy copy filed in the BRANCH CORRESPONDENCE FILE. If the letter to the individual is not accompanied by a courtesy copy to the branch, this means that it was received electronically and printed in the office. The letter may be mailed as outlined above. A photocopy does not need to be made for the BRANCH CORRESPONDENCE FILE, as the electronic file copy will be retained according to the retention policy.

47. Letters sent to those living outside the branch territory are usually not mailed directly to the individual. Rather, after the letter is approved, it is sent to the overseeing branch office to be forwarded to the person or his congregation body of elders. (See 6:44-46.) Exceptions to this general policy are outlined in 6: 48-49.

48. Inquiries From Publishers in Other Countries: It is important that all those who consider moving to a foreign land prayerfully count the cost and seek Jehovah's direction. (Luke 14:28; Jas. 1:5; od p. 111; km 8/11, pp. 4-6) The branch office should be helpful and respond promptly to any publisher who inquires about serving temporarily or permanently where the need is greater. If a written inquiry is accompanied by a favorable letter of recommendation from the Congregation Service Committee, the Service Department may provide such information as Kingdom Hall addresses, meeting times, and contact information of the coordinator(s) of the body of elders. The Service Department should be sure that any areas being recommended for assistance are safe for foreigners. The reply letter may be sent directly to the publisher via e-mail or surface mail. If the branch office is uncertain about the qualifications of a particular publisher, the letter should be sent to the inquirer's branch office, indicating that the letter should be forwarded to the individual or to his body of elders.—See 6:44.

49. While branches are authorized to provide general information to publishers about the country and congregations needing assistance, the branch is not authorized to provide extensive additional assistance, such as issuing sponsorship or guarantee letters; supplying residency, visa, or other legal forms; locating pioneer partners; and arranging suitable accommodations. These are personal matters that require careful investigation by the publisher before he or she moves to another country. Therefore, it is the responsibility of the individual publisher, not the branch office, to obtain information about visa requirements and work permits.—Gal. 6:5.

50. Certificates or Letters for Jehovah's Witnesses: On occasion, publishers and others associated with a local congregation may request that the body of elders or the branch office provide them with a signed letter or certificate that confirms or explains in some way the person's relationship with the Christian congregation. For example, local authorities in some areas may require that an elder who performs weddings or one who conducts meetings in prisons register and provide some proof of his ordination as a minister. A publisher or pioneer who is moving to serve where the need is greater in another country may request that the body of elders or the branch office provide him with a letter confirming that he is one of Jehovah's Witnesses in good standing. The immigration authorities in some countries may ask a person who is regularly attending congregation meetings to provide a signed statement from the body of elders confirming that fact. In some lands, baptized Christians are called upon to explain to the authorities their personal and conscientious objection to military service. In neutrality cases, it may be helpful for the authorities to receive a letter or a certificate from the congregation or the branch office confirming that the conscientious objector is an ordained and baptized minister of Jehovah's Witnesses or a full-time preacher of the good news. The Branch Committee is responsible for carefully determining (1) if the elders or the branch office should be involved in replying to such requests; (2) if so, the approved wording to be used; and (3) for whom such letters and certificates may be provided. In most cases, the elders or the branch would issue such documents only for publishers in good standing. Any such letters or certificates approved by the Branch Committee should be limited to explaining the facts and not go into detail about a brother's or a sister's personal convictions. (1 Pet. 3:15) Furthermore, any document provided by the branch office on the letterhead of one of the organization's local legal entities should not in any way imply that the organization is sponsoring the person financially or legally. (Gal. 6:5) Publishers and pioneers who move on their own to another land should not be represented to immigration authorities as "missionaries" because they are not sponsored by the organization as is done for those who are in the Worldwide Order of Special Full-Time Servants of Jehovah's Witnesses. If the Branch Committee needs further guidance on such matters involving publishers, pioneers, or others in the field, it should write to the Service Committee. Matters related to the support of members of the Worldwide Order are further described in 3:34-38.

51. Circuit Overseer's Report on a Congregation: The Report on Circuit Overseer's Visit With Congregation (S-303) is used by the circuit overseer to give the Service Department a brief report on the spirit of the congregation and any encouragement or counsel given. It is necessary to acknowledge the circuit overseer's report only if further correspondence would be helpful.

52. Appointments of Elders and Ministerial Servants: Circuit overseers are appointed by the Governing Body to care for the appointments and deletions of elders and ministerial servants. (Acts 14:23; Titus 1:5) The procedures are outlined below and in Circuit Overseer Guidelines (tg).—See 6:67.

- Preliminary check before circuit overseer's visit: At least one month prior to the circuit overseer's regular visit to a congregation, the Congregation Service Committee will send to the Service Department and the circuit overseer the full name, date of birth, and date of baptism of each brother the body of elders will be recommending for appointment as an elder or a ministerial servant. Congregations with Internet access can provide this information by means of the Recommendation for Elder/Ministerial Servant (S-62) form using the Inbox feature on jw.org. Branches where Internet access is limited may allow congregations to submit the information by means of a phone call or text message. Once a check has been performed, the Service Department will inform the circuit overseer whether there are any legal reasons a brother should not be considered.
- During the circuit overseer's visit: During his meeting with the elders, the circuit overseer will discuss the Scriptural qualifications of each brother recommended. (ks10 3:1-10) The circuit overseer should take adequate time to ensure that the consideration is thorough and complete, asking pertinent questions during his meeting with the body of elders until he is convinced that the recommended brother qualifies for appointment. If the circuit overseer determines that the brother does not measure up to the Scriptural requirements to a reasonable degree, he will advise the elders accordingly and inform them how they can help the brother to qualify in the future. At any time, the circuit overseer should feel free to consult with the Service Department or another experienced circuit overseer.

Only when a brother is (1) being appointed for the first time as a ministerial servant or (2) being reappointed as an elder or a ministerial servant for reasons other than his move from one congregation to another is it necessary for him to be asked the following questions: "Is there anything from your past, even before baptism, or in your personal or family life that disqualifies you or that would prevent you from accepting this appointment? Is there any reason why your appointment should not be announced to the congregation? Have you ever been involved at any time in the past with child sexual molestation?" In the situations mentioned above, the circuit overseer along with another elder will meet with the brother sometime following the circuit overseer's meeting with the elders but before the end of the visit to ask these questions. If the brother answers "No" to the questions, the circuit overseer will provide the elders with a signed appointment letter that includes the names of all those appointed during his visit. The circuit overseer will inform the Service Department of the appointments using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2). The appointments made during the visit will be announced to the congregation at the next Service Meeting. In all cases, a brother who has been appointed (or reappointed) as an elder or a ministerial servant should be informed of his appointment before it is announced to the congregation.

If the brother approved for appointment is not present at the conclusion of the visit and thus the necessary questions cannot be asked, the circuit overseer will not include the brother's name in the appointment letter left with the elders at the end of his visit. Rather, when the brother returns, two local elders will ask the brother the questions mentioned above. The coordinator of the body of elders will then inform the circuit overseer of the brother's answers to those questions. If the brother answers "No" to the questions, the circuit overseer will provide the elders with a signed appointment letter. The circuit overseer will inform the Service Department of the appointments using the S-2 form. At the Service Meeting following the receipt of the appointment letter, the brother's appointment will be announced to the congregation.

In the event that a substitute circuit overseer is serving the congregation, he should forward his recommendation(s) and those of the body of elders to the regular circuit overseer for consideration. Such recommendations will be handled as are other recommendations for appointment or deletion between visits. If the regular circuit overseer will be away from the circuit for (1) less than a month, he may hold the recommendations in abeyance until he returns; (2) one to three months, the branch office should designate another circuit overseer (perhaps a neighboring circuit overseer or one who recently served the circuit) to consider any recommendations received from substitutes; or (3) more than three months, the branch office should assign another circuit overseer to visit congregations in the circuit. If the regular circuit overseer is unable to communicate with the affected congregations and substitutes before leaving his assignment, the branch office should take the lead in informing them.

- Appointments between regular visits to a congregation: When a brother moves into the congregation with a favorable letter of recommendation for reappointment and the next visit of the circuit overseer is not in the near future, the Congregation Service Committee of the new congregation may send the S-62 form to the circuit overseer, informing him that the body of elders recommends the brother's immediate reappointment. A copy of the letter of recommendation signed by the Service Committee of his former congregation must be included. If the circuit overseer agrees based on the favorable recommendation of both bodies of elders, he will generate an appointment letter to be sent to the new body of elders and will inform the Service Department of the appointment using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2). If there are disqualifying factors mentioned or questions raised in the letter of introduction from the brother's former congregation, the circuit overseer may encourage the elders to wait until his visit to make the recommendation so that they have an opportunity to observe the brother for a time.
- Appointments recommended by the branch office: At times, the branch office will assign an appointed elder, such as a special pioneer or a graduate of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers, to serve in a particular congregation. In such cases, they will write to the circuit overseer to advise him that they recommend the appointment. Thereafter, the circuit overseer may generate an appointment letter to the new congregation and will inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2).

- Other appointments: The circuit overseer is responsible for the appointment of coordinators of the body of elders, assembly overseers, and assistant assembly overseers.—See 6:179.

53. Deletions of Elders and Ministerial Servants: The procedures are outlined below and in Circuit Overseer Guidelines (tg).

- During the circuit overseer's visit: Recommendations for deletion because of poor judgment not of a judicial nature are usually best considered with the elders during the visit of the circuit overseer. At the start of the circuit overseer's visit, the elders will provide any background information that will help the circuit overseer have a complete view of the qualifications of the brothers recommended for deletion. During his meeting with the elders later in the week, the circuit overseer will discuss the Scriptural qualifications of each brother. (ks10 3:15-21) He must not be hasty but should take adequate time to ensure that the consideration is thorough and complete. At any time, the circuit overseer should feel free to consult with the Service Department or another experienced circuit overseer. If the circuit overseer agrees with the recommendation, sometime following the discussion with the elders but before the end of the visit, the circuit overseer along with another elder will meet with the brother to inform him of his deletion. If the brother agrees with the decision, the circuit overseer will generate a deletion letter to the body of elders and inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2). If the brother disagrees with the decision, he will be informed of his right to appeal. The announcement to the congregation will be held in abeyance.—See 6:54.
- Deletions between regular visits to a congregation: If serious questions arise concerning a brother's qualifications and the next visit of the circuit overseer is not in the near future, the Congregation Service Committee may send the recommendation of the body of elders to the circuit overseer immediately. The letter should provide complete details and indicate whether the brother agrees with the recommendation or not. If the circuit overseer agrees with the recommendation and believes it should be processed immediately, he will generate a letter of deletion to be sent to the body of elders. If the brother accepts the decision, the announcement will be made at the next Service Meeting and the circuit overseer will inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2).

If the brother disagrees with the recommendation for his deletion or it is an issue of poor judgment that is not widely known, the circuit overseer may decide to wait until his regular visit to consider the matter. However, if the circuit overseer believes it should be processed immediately, he will do as outlined above. If the brother does not accept the decision, he will be informed of his right to appeal. The announcement to the congregation will be held in abeyance. —See 6:54.

- Resignations and deletions for judicial reasons or death: The Congregation Service Committee will immediately inform the circuit overseer of deletions of elders or ministerial servants because of judicial reproof, disassociation, disfellowshipping, or death. The circuit overseer will thereafter inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2). In cases of reproof, he will also generate a deletion letter to the body of elders. If the Congregation Service Committee notifies the circuit overseer that a brother desires to resign for personal reasons and the circuit overseer accepts the resignation, the same procedure should be followed.

54. Appeals Involving Deletions of Elders and Ministerial Servants: If an elder or a ministerial servant disagrees with his deletion by the circuit overseer, he should be asked immediately to write a brief letter to the Service Department, with a copy to the body of elders and the circuit overseer, explaining why he disagrees with the deletion. The announcement of deletion will be held in abeyance. Thereafter, the Service Department will select an experienced circuit overseer who will then rehear the entire matter with the original circuit overseer. These two brothers will listen to the brother carefully and deal with him kindly and justly. They may consult with the Service Department for advice. After the two circuit overseers have heard the elder's concerns and reached a joint decision, there is no further appeal. If it is decided that the brother should be deleted, the announcement will be made at the next Service Meeting and the circuit overseer will inform the Service Department using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion (S-2).

55. In very rare situations, the Service Department oversight may see a need to select a special committee to consider an appeal involving the matter of brothers' qualifications to continue serving as elders. For example, a special committee may be needed in unusual and complex cases that involve the qualifications of multiple elders or perhaps even an entire body of elders. The deskman, in consultation with Service Department oversight, will select the special committee from names provided by the circuit overseer and then provide direction to the special committee on its handling of the matter. (See 6:40.) After a thorough investigation and a meeting with the brothers involved, the special committee will then submit its comments and provide a recommendation to the original circuit overseer and the other experienced circuit overseer. (See 6:54.) If needed, the circuit overseers may consult with the Service Department. However, the two circuit overseers, not the special committee nor the branch office, will make the final determination regarding the qualifications of the brother(s) in question and inform the Service Department accordingly.

56. Distributing Documents on jw.org: Branches are notified when new and revised forms, letters, and outlines are posted on MDS. The Branch Committee will determine whether the item can be used in the branch territory without any adjustments. If so, it may be possible for the Service Department to create a link to the item under the Documents tab on the Web site. If only minor adjustments are needed, such as the insertion of letterheads, signature stamps, and the like, the Service Department may make the necessary adjustments and then upload the document to the local jw.org directory and create a link on the site. If the version posted on MDS requires significant adjustments, the Branch Committee should request approval from the appropriate Governing Body committee.

Processing Judicial Reports

57. Disfellowshippings and Disassociations: The elder serving as the chairman of a judicial committee (or "a committee" in the case of disassociation) is to submit one copy of the Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) to the Service Department. Usually there is no need for the elders serving on the committee to submit additional correspondence about the case.

58. Role of Service Desk Secretary: The Service Desk secretary will be responsible to review the S-77 form to make sure it is complete. If there is anything on the form that is not clear or is missing, the secretary will contact a member of the committee that submitted the form. It may be possible to obtain missing information by means of a telephone call. Once the Service Desk secretary has verified that the form is complete, he will enter the record into the electronic file used by the branch office. If the S-77 form is scanned into an electronic file, there is no need to keep a hard copy. Depending on local circumstances, it is left to each branch office to decide whether there is a need to send a brief acknowledgment to the chairman of the committee that the S-77 form has been received.

59. Role of Service Department Deskman: Though it is not necessary for the deskman to review all S-77 forms, the secretary should be trained to alert the deskman to any unusual or weighty cases. The following list is not comprehensive but simply provides some examples of cases that should be forwarded to the deskman for consideration and careful handling:

- There is a question as to whether there is a valid judicial charge or sufficient evidence to support the charge.—ks10 5:2-37.
- The S-77 form reveals that the committee did not inform the individual of the decision.—ks10 6:9-10; 7:29-30.
- The individual does not agree with the decision of the original committee and the appeal committee and is now appealing his case to the branch office.—ks10 8:14-15.
- The original committee and the appeal committee do not agree on the decision.—ks10 8:16-18.
- The committee has submitted correspondence about the case in addition to the S-77 report.

60. The Service Department deskman and desk groups should not be quick to second-guess how a committee cared for a particular matter unless it is clear from the S-77 form and any additional correspondence submitted that the published guidelines in the Shepherding textbook and current letters to bodies of elders were not followed. In such cases, the deskman should write to the committee in an effort to help them bring the matter to a conclusion. Thereafter, the deskman or the secretary will update the branch office's files accordingly.

61. With reinstatements, the deskman would not usually need to review the information submitted unless there are some unusual factors. One exception is when it appears that sufficient time was not allowed for the individual to prove that his repentance is genuine. (ks10 11:3-5) Depending on the nature of the matter, the deskman may determine to provide the committee with some helpful reminders.

62. Use of Admin and jw.org Inbox Feature: Branches using these tools will be able to process and store S-77 forms electronically. The following is a brief explanation of the procedure that they may choose to use:

- A member of the committee submits the S-77 form using the jw.org Inbox feature.
- Upon receipt, the S-77 form is assigned to a Service Desk secretary for review.
- When the secretary has determined that the form is complete, he will enter the record in the electronic file used by the branch office, such as Tracking Persons. An incident could be created linking the form to the tracked person. In the case of a reinstatement, the secretary would update the electronic record and retain the notification in the electronic file system.

CONFIDENTIAL

- If the S-77 form needs further review by a deskman, the secretary will pass this on to him. After the deskman has completed his review, he will return the correspondence to the secretary who will then update any electronic record of the matter.
- If needed, hard copies of S-77 forms can be scanned into Admin. A record of the matter can be entered into Tracking Persons. Any hard copy should be shredded.

63. Rescissions: On occasion, the deskman may determine that the elders have erred in announcing a disfellowshipping. Perhaps the wrongdoing committed did not warrant a judicial committee or some other error in judgment occurred. The disfellowshipping may need to be rescinded. Before proceeding, the Branch Committee should review the case. If the Branch Committee agrees that the judicial action should be rescinded, then the deskman will write to the judicial committee to explain the errors in judgment. The letter to the judicial committee should explain that the announcement to the congregation should state: "The announcement that [name of person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses has been rescinded." The letter to the judicial committee will request that the committee reply in writing to the branch office, providing the date when the rescission was announced. Once the date is received, the records should be updated.

64. Appeal Committees: The circuit overseer is authorized to appoint an appeal committee. For details on the formation of an appeal committee and the correspondence to be received from it, see Circuit Overseer Guidelines, chapter 14.

Forming Congregations

65. A circuit overseer will assist in organizing the formation of a new congregation if and when it is advisable to do so. A completed Congregation Application Information (S-51) form may be submitted to the branch office. Generally, the circuit overseer will sign the application.

66. In congregations with no appointed elders, one or more experienced ministerial servants (or a baptized sister if a baptized brother is not available) may be designated to handle the work in lieu of an appointed coordinator of the body of elders until one can be appointed.

67. When the Service Department gives approval for the formation or dissolution of a congregation, the circuit overseer will proceed with the appointment of elders and ministerial servants in their respective congregations, using the Notification of Appointment or Deletion. (See 6:52.) Care should be taken to see that all elders and ministerial servants are accounted for and appointed to serve with one of the congregations involved. The territory assignment for each respective congregation should be provided. In addition, various printed letters that the new congregation needs for its files should be sent. If there is a large amount of literature on hand, it would be best for the congregations to divide it instead of requesting additional literature for the new congregation. The branch office will determine how many copies of Our Kingdom Ministry to send, based on the number of publishers and pioneers associated with each respective congregation.

Territories

68. Territory Assignments: The Service Department gives each congregation an assignment of territory to work. The Branch Committee and the deskmen monitor the preaching activity in the field, making all reasonable efforts to ensure that the branch territory is thoroughly covered.—See 6:168.

69. Congregations With Seldom Worked Territory: If congregations are in need of assistance in working their assigned territory, the congregations and circuit overseers will report this to the branch office. The deskman will consider what can be done to provide assistance. If it is not possible to make arrangements to assist the congregation to cover its territory and the territory has not been worked for two years, the circuit overseer should recommend to the branch office which sections of the congregation's territory should be assigned to other nearby congregations or listed as unassigned territory.

70. Caring for Unassigned Territory: The Branch Committee should make all reasonable efforts to cover all unassigned territory at least once a year. A letter may be sent each year to congregations, inviting publishers to apply to work unassigned territory. This letter should include a list of the territories that need to be worked. Individuals willing to assist may indicate to the branch office which territory they would like to work, the number in their group, and the amount of time they can spend in an assignment. (Groups should not be made up solely of single brothers and single sisters.) A group captain should be designated. This information is to be given to the Congregation Service Committee for approval and forwarding to the branch. The Service Department considers the information, makes an appropriate territory assignment, and informs the group captain. After the assignment is completed, the group captain should submit a report to the branch office, outlining what was accomplished and any outstanding experiences.

71. In countries where there are few publishers and large densely populated areas to cover, the Branch Committee may feel that a special campaign would be beneficial. In some cases, it may be possible to invite native publishers who are living in other lands to return and share in the special campaign. Publishers in other countries who speak the local language may also be invited. The Branch Committee should send a recommendation to the Service Committee for its consideration and approval.

72. Publishers Living in Isolated Territory: The Service Department should send the names of isolated publishers to the congregations nearest them. Perhaps an elder or pioneer can visit them from time to time to encourage them and to work with them in the field ministry. The branch office should make arrangements for them to receive literature and Our Kingdom Ministry, along with any other necessary information. If practical, they could send their field service reports through the nearest congregation and obtain literature there as well. Otherwise, they may request literature from the branch office and report their field service directly to the branch each month, marking "isolated publisher" or "isolated pioneer" on the report. Only one person in the group should make arrangements for obtaining literature.

73. The role of the circuit overseer in caring for isolated publishers and pioneers is outlined in Circuit Overseer Guidelines. If reasonably possible, the circuit overseer should adjust his schedule in order to visit such ones each year. After receiving the circuit overseer's report for the annual visit, the Service Desk will send the isolated publisher, pioneer, or group a warm and encouraging letter. A record should be kept of all such publishers and groups, with a separate file for each, until such time as they can either be associated with a nearby congregation or be organized into a new congregation. Then the information in this file is put into the file for that congregation.

74. Special pioneers have been assigned to visit isolated publishers and groups, with good results. Where there is potential to form a new congregation, temporary special pioneers or special pioneers could be assigned.

75. When a regular pioneer requests a permanent assignment to care for an unassigned territory, the branch office will write a letter, enclosing an Isolated Territory Assignment (S-63). Only one regular pioneer would be given a certain isolated territory assignment. If more than one pioneer will be working in the same isolated assignment, the other pioneers are assigned by a letter from the office to work with the pioneer holding the territory. The pioneer holding the territory is responsible for making the necessary reports to the branch office on the progress being made in the territory.

76. Foreign-Language Territory: The Branch Committee and the deskmen should be aware of immigrant communities or indigenous language groups that need to receive a witness. The Service Department and circuit overseers should be guided by what is published on this subject in Circuit Overseer Guidelines, Circuit Organization Guidelines, the letter to all bodies of elders dated October 2, 2014, and the letter to all circuit overseers dated October 3, 2014.—See also km 11/09, pp. 3-5.

77. If there is a sizable population of foreign-speaking people in the branch territory and few publishers are available who speak their language, a foreign-language class may be held to train capable publishers and pioneers. Before a language class is held, the branch must identify and train language instructors. Potential instructors must meet the qualifications outlined in Instructions for Organizing Language Classes (S-367). A request to train the recommended foreign-language instructors should be submitted to the Service Committee for approval. The Service Committee will arrange for those who have been approved to attend the course "Teaching Methods for Accelerated Language Learning." Following the training course, the branch may arrange to hold the foreign-language classes. (Helpful forms for organizing the classes are posted on MDS.) These classes should not be held at the branch office. They should be conducted in the foreign-language territory that is being targeted.—See 7:131; tg chap. 17.

78. Prison Witnessing: The Service Department should organize the preaching work in prisons according to the latest direction received from the Service Committee. (See the letter to all bodies of elders dated September 8, 2011.) A record should be maintained of congregations assigned to care for each prison facility in the country. It should also be noted whether literature can be taken into the prison by the publishers or must be mailed directly from the branch office.

79. Harbor Witnessing: The Service Department should organize harbor witnessing in harmony with the guidelines provided by the Service Committee. (See "Materials for Harbor Witnessing" on MDS as well as the letter to all bodies of elders dated July 15, 2014.) Each branch office may need to adapt the material to the local circumstances of its territory. In most cases, official authorization to enter port terminals and to board ships must also be obtained. Fees for processing applications and making photo identification may be required, which is the personal responsibility of the applicant. Publishers should not get involved with seaman's missions or other religious organizations in carrying out harbor witnessing.

Conventions and Assemblies

80. Regional Conventions: Annually, circuit overseers submit the Convention Program Participant Ratings form (S-306) to the branch office. This form identifies the elders who are qualified as convention speakers and their individual ratings. In larger branch offices, these records are kept in Admin. Brothers who are approved Bethel speakers may be invited to inform the Service Department of the convention(s) that they will attend so that they may be assigned talks. If Bethel speakers volunteer to attend additional conventions using their own personal time away and at their own expense, they may be assigned where there is a need for convention speakers. —See 7:13-32, 71-72.

81. The Service Department will make assignments based on each brother's speaker ratings and the convention speaker grid provided annually by the Teaching Committee. Generally, the chairman and the drama directors are assigned and notified first, followed by the Bethel speakers, and then local speakers are assigned the remaining parts. Service Department oversight will approve all convention speaker assignments before assignment letters are mailed out. –See 7:30, 71-72.

82. Circuit Assemblies: Two one-day circuit assemblies will be held each year. One assembly (CA-br) will have a visiting branch representative assigned to speak. The other assembly (CA-co) will be served by the circuit overseer without a branch representative being assigned. Arrangements are made according to the guidelines provided each year by the Teaching Committee. Helpful guidance is also found in Circuit Organization Guidelines (S-330).–See 7:2-12, 73.

83. The branch will assign the dates of circuit assemblies based on the number of publishers in a circuit and the size and availability of meeting locations. It may be necessary to divide a circuit into two or more sections and have separate assemblies. Circuit overseers will be notified preferably one year or more in advance in order to obtain assembly facilities. If possible, the two annual circuit assembly programs should be separated by at least three or four months. Circuit Overseer Guidelines has additional information.

Regular Pioneers

84. Direction regarding the appointment and activity of pioneers is found in the latest publications on congregation organization and in the letter to all bodies of elders dated August 25, 2014. Those leaving an assignment of special full-time service will not experience an interruption in their full-time service history if they are appointed as regular pioneers within three months. Regular pioneers who are sentenced to prison because of their Christian neutrality will have their full-time service history recorded as uninterrupted if they resume the full-time ministry within three months of their release from prison. (See 4:24-25.) Regular pioneers who accept alternative civilian service may continue serving as regular pioneers if they can reasonably meet the requirements for regular pioneers. When reviewing their overall activity, the elders should show consideration for their unique circumstances when determining whether they qualify to continue serving as pioneers. A person who is performing alternative civilian service may be appointed as a regular pioneer if he is otherwise qualified and is able to fulfill the hour requirement.

85. Transfers to Other Branch Territories: When a pioneer moves to another country, the local branch should send to the new branch the regular pioneer record from Admin. If questions arise about the pioneer's history, the new branch may communicate with the other branch offices that are involved.

86. Infirm Regular Pioneers: When recommendations are received and an individual meets the requirements as outlined in Circuit Overseer Guidelines, chapter 19, he may be designated as an infirm pioneer. The Service Department will write to the pioneer, explaining the arrangement, and a copy of this letter will be sent to the body of elders. This adjustment in the pioneer's enrollment should be noted in the records of the branch office.

Temporary Special Pioneers

87. Temporary special pioneers serve in the same manner as special pioneers. However, they are appointed to serve in one-year increments for up to a maximum of three years. This temporary assignment will enhance their qualifications, allowing them to gain experience and to be further evaluated by the branch office. It could be a stepping-stone to a future assignment as a substitute circuit overseer, a special pioneer, a circuit overseer, or a field missionary or to Bethel service. Temporary special pioneers receive their assignment from the Service Department; they do not select their own. Individuals do not apply to become temporary special pioneers. Rather, well-qualified, local single regular pioneers and married regular pioneer couples without children are identified and invited to submit a Questionnaire for Prospective Temporary Special Pioneer (S-207).—See 6:110.

88. Assignments: Single temporary special pioneers will ordinarily be assigned in pairs. If married, both mates would need to qualify to serve together as temporary special pioneers. Generally, temporary special pioneers are assigned to remote areas with a ratio of 1 publisher to at least 3,000 or more inhabitants to open up new territories, including those in foreign- or indigenous-language fields. Most branches have territories that are seldom worked or are remote and isolated where there are interested ones and where there is good potential for forming a congregation. Many countries have densely populated urban centers with few publishers in the inner cities. In many lands there is a great need for qualified brothers to help men reach out to become ministerial servants and elders or where the brothers need more training to care for their congregation responsibilities.—See 6:110.

89. Qualifications: A prospective temporary special pioneer is a well-qualified and effective regular pioneer and is usually a graduate of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers or a graduate of the former Bible School for Single Brothers or Bible School for Christian Couples. The candidate should be a citizen or legal resident, must be between 21 and 45 years of age, baptized three years or longer, in full-time service at least two years, in good health, and able to maintain an active schedule. Any exceptions must be approved by the Service Committee. If a branch has additional needs in the field, circuit overseers may recommend others who are not graduates of the above-named theocratic schools by submitting a Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) to the branch office for review. There is no arrangement for appointing as temporary special pioneers those who have a minor child still living at home. It is preferred that the focus be on appointing single men and married couples who have the potential for taking on greater responsibility. However, if such ones are not available, well-qualified single sisters may serve as temporary special pioneers. If there is an exceptional need that cannot be cared for locally, then the Branch Committee should submit a Request for Field Missionaries (S-218) form to the Service Committee. Unless directed to do so by the Service Committee, the Branch Committee should not request help from other branch offices to fill special needs in the field.—See 6:106.

90. Quota: The Service Committee establishes the total number of temporary special pioneers that may be appointed in each country. If the Branch Committee sees a need to increase the quota of temporary special pioneers, a request should be sent to the Service Committee, stating the number to be added, why they are needed, the number expected to graduate from the School for Kingdom Evangelizers in the coming year, and the publisher-to-population ratios of the language fields where they would be assigned.

91. Graduates of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers: Based on the recommendations of the instructors, the Service Department will determine which graduates in each class could be recommended to the Branch Committee to serve as temporary special pioneers. For more details, see chapter 10 of School for Kingdom Evangelizers Office Guidelines.

92. Nongraduates of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers: A candidate who is a local regular pioneer will be evaluated by the Service Department, based on the Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) and any recommendation submitted by the circuit overseer. The Service Department will decide whether to recommend to the Branch Committee that a regular pioneer be appointed as a temporary special pioneer. If approved, the regular pioneer can be sent a letter (S-225) explaining the temporary special pioneer arrangement with the request that he fill out a Questionnaire for Prospective Temporary Special Pioneer (S-207). The completed questionnaire is to be carefully checked by the Service Department and thereafter reviewed by two members of the Branch Committee. If they approve, the Service Department will prepare a letter (S-220) appointing the temporary special pioneer and informing him of the location of his assignment, copying the elders of the congregation he will be working with and the circuit overseer.

93. File: A file folder is made to hold a copy of the assignment letter, the questionnaire, and other correspondence related to the temporary special pioneer. His enrollment code in Admin is adjusted to show his start date as a temporary special pioneer (FTS). A record of his monthly field service is maintained in Admin.

94. Hour Requirement: The temporary special pioneer hour requirement is 130 hours a month. Sisters who are 40 years of age or older have a requirement of 120 hours a month. It is understood that a temporary special pioneer who serves as a congregation elder in a remote area may at times be needed for additional short-term theocratic assignments. For example, he may need to serve on a special committee or a Disaster Relief Committee, help with circuit or convention organization, assist in the construction or renovation of his own Kingdom Hall, or serve as a substitute circuit overseer. In addition, he may be needed for a brief period of time to train local elders to care for their responsibilities on a Hospital Liaison Committee. In exceptional situations, the travel time to attend an assigned circuit assembly, regional convention, or Kingdom Ministry School may be unusually long. If such assignments prevent him from making his hour requirement, a brief explanation, as well as the number of hours spent, should be included on the monthly report submitted on jw.org or on his monthly S-212 report. An explanation should also be written in the "Remarks" column of the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card. However, the hours spent should not be included in the "Hours" column. The branch will also mark the Admin records and consider the remarks when performing the annual review.

95. Evaluation Program: All temporary special pioneers are enrolled in an evaluation program that includes an annual review by the Service Department. The purpose of this evaluation program is to allow the Branch Committee to test the fitness, abilities, circumstances, and effectiveness of a temporary special pioneer and to determine how he may best be used in the future. It is not expected that all temporary special pioneers will be given an extension for a second or a third year. During the annual review, the Branch Committee should extend only those who are effective in this role and who are qualified to take on greater responsibility. For more information, see chapter 13 of School for Kingdom Evangelizers Office Guidelines.

96. After a temporary special pioneer has been in his assignment for ten months, the Service Department should request and review the Personal Qualifications Reports (S-326) submitted by the circuit overseer. The department will determine whether the temporary special pioneer is reaching his hour requirement, is productive in starting and conducting Bible studies, is showing a keen interest in aiding those associated with the congregation, and is enjoying and promoting good relations with others. If the report is positive, two members of the Branch Committee can extend the temporary special pioneer appointment for another year. Only productive individuals obtaining good results should be given an extension in the temporary special pioneer work for an additional year. If the report is negative or if it is clear that a brother, a sister, or a married couple is not able to serve effectively in the temporary special pioneer work, it would be appropriate for the Service Department to write a letter directing that the individual or the couple return to the regular pioneer work. The letter would also express appreciation for their service.

97. At any time, the branch office may determine that a temporary special pioneer could be used more effectively in some other form of special full-time service. For example, brothers who are graduates of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers may qualify to receive training in the circuit work.–See chapters 10 and 13 of School for Kingdom Evangelizers Office Guidelines.

98. Completion of Evaluation Program: It is understood that temporary special pioneers who have successfully completed the three-year evaluation program have proved themselves and have potential for greater service. The Branch Committee must determine how best to use them.

99. Some temporary special pioneers who have successfully completed the three-year evaluation program may be appointed as special pioneers. Other individuals may qualify for the circuit work, and the branch may appoint such individuals as special pioneers, inviting them to complete the Questionnaire for Prospective Circuit Overseer (S-323). If after reviewing the questionnaire the Branch Committee agrees that the individual qualifies to be a circuit overseer, it may submit a recommendation to the Governing Body.–See 2:30.

100. In exceptional cases, the Branch Committee may feel that certain temporary special pioneers who have completed the three-year evaluation program have the circumstances and stamina to serve well as field missionaries in another country. In most cases, each mate must be between the ages of 25 and 45. Fluency in English is not a requirement. In addition to their spiritual qualities, they may speak a foreign language or be adept at learning new languages or their ethnic and family background or citizenship might equip them to fill a specific need in another land. The branch may appoint such individuals as special pioneers and send them the cover letter for field missionary candidates (S-251), inviting them to complete the Questionnaire for Prospective Field Missionary (S-214). The completed questionnaire and, if needed, an English translation of the candidate's responses along with a numbered letter should be submitted to the Service Committee, explaining in detail the qualifications, language abilities, ethnic and family background, and citizenship(s) of each individual. Please include an English translation of the latest Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) that was submitted by the circuit overseer.–See 6:117.

101. Those who have completed the three-year evaluation program and who are fluent in English may in time be included in the Branch Committee's consideration of exceptional candidates to be recommended for additional training at Gilead School.–See 6:190.

102. Allowances: Temporary special pioneers receive the same monthly allowance as special pioneers. (See 6:121.) In addition to the regular monthly personal allowance, temporary special pioneers may request a travel and housing allowance up to the amount approved for the country by the Publishing Committee. The housing allowance may be given to temporary special pioneers according to the actual amount they pay for housing and utilities up to the maximum shown on the Record of Allowance form (A-29). Any exception for high-rent areas should be referred to the Publishing Committee. Temporary special pioneers who are using personal time away or who are ill are eligible to continue to receive their regular monthly allowance. Temporary special pioneers are allowed to do limited secular work as long as it does not interfere with their meeting the hour requirement. If a temporary special pioneer needs some assistance to cover his actual round-trip travel expenses to attend his assigned circuit assembly, regional convention, or Kingdom Ministry School, the Branch Committee may reimburse actual travel expenses upon request. This provision is not to be advertised and is intended only to cover unusually high travel expenses that may be involved to reach the assigned assembly or school.

103. Temporary special pioneers receive the same Personal Expense Account (PEA) credits as special pioneers. (See 5:22.) They may also benefit from an Automobile Expense Account (AEA) if that arrangement is available in the country.—See 5:14.

104. Moving Expenses: If it is necessary to reassign temporary special pioneers, it is usually best to select a territory that is not too distant from their preceding assignment in order to avoid unnecessary expenses. If a temporary special pioneer cannot personally cover the expense of the transfer, he may request assistance from the branch. The Branch Committee may reimburse each temporary special pioneer up to USD 500, depending on his needs. If the cost is more, then the recommendation for reimbursement should be referred to the Service Committee.

105. Experiencing Difficulties: If a temporary special pioneer falls short of his hour requirement for two or three months or encounters serious health issues and is physically unable to meet the requirement, the Service Department may submit a recommendation for his deletion to two members of the Branch Committee for approval. It would be appropriate for the Service Department to write a letter to the temporary special pioneer, expressing appreciation for his service and encouraging him to continue working hard but directing that he return to the regular pioneer work. If the temporary special pioneer objects to the recommendation, he may submit a letter of appeal to the Branch Committee. The entire Branch Committee is responsible for making the final determination.

106. Marriage: If a single temporary special pioneer becomes engaged to be married, he or she should inform the Service Department right away. If the temporary special pioneer indicates that he or she wishes to continue in the temporary special pioneer work along with his or her prospective mate, the branch should immediately request a confidential Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) from the temporary special pioneer's body of elders and one from his or her circuit overseer.

- If the prospective mate lives in the branch territory, the branch should send him or her a Questionnaire for Prospective Temporary Special Pioneer (S-207) to fill out. In addition, the prospective mate's body of elders and circuit overseer should be asked to complete separate Personal Qualifications Reports (S-326).
- If the prospective mate does not live in the branch territory, the Branch Committee should obtain the S-207 and S-326 forms from the respective branch office along with their recommendation.

The Branch Committee will review the temporary special pioneer's qualifications and those of his or her prospective mate, taking into consideration the reputation and the physical health and stamina of each one. (See 6:89.) If there is a great difference in age between the two who are planning to marry, the Branch Committee should carefully consider whether this would cause negative talk or be a stumbling block to others. If the temporary special pioneer and the prospective mate are qualified, the Branch Committee may enroll them as temporary special pioneers together, effective the date of their marriage. Otherwise, the temporary special pioneer should discontinue his service prior to his marriage. (See 6:130.) It could be that, in time, the couple would qualify to serve together as temporary special pioneers.

CONFIDENTIAL

107. Pregnancy: A temporary special pioneer couple who learn that they are to be parents should inform the branch immediately. The couple should be given a period of three months to get settled, during which they will continue to receive their monthly allowance. During this three-month period, the couple will need to locate suitable accommodations and find employment, so it is not expected that they will meet their monthly hour requirement. If one or both mates wish to become regular pioneers, they will have an additional three months to make the transition and their full-time service history would continue uninterrupted.

108. Personal Time Away: A sample letter to all special pioneers that explains the personal time away arrangement is available on MDS. A copy of this letter should be sent to newly enrolled temporary special pioneers along with their appointment letter (S-220).

Special Pioneers

109. As members of the Worldwide Order, special pioneers are provided with a modest allowance to assist them with their living expenses. They receive their assignment from the Service Department; they do not select their own. Individuals do not apply to become special pioneers. Rather, qualified temporary special pioneers are identified and approached as to their willingness and availability to accept an assignment.

110. Assignments: Single special pioneers will ordinarily be assigned in pairs. For married couples, both mates would need to qualify to serve together as special pioneers. Generally, special pioneers are assigned to open up new territories, including those in foreign- or indigenous-language fields in remote areas that have a ratio of 1 publisher to at least 3,000 or more inhabitants. Most branches have territories that are seldom worked or are remote and isolated but have interested ones and good potential for forming a congregation. Many countries have densely populated urban centers with few publishers in the inner cities. In many lands there is a great need for qualified brothers to help men reach out to become ministerial servants and elders or where the brothers need more training to care for their congregation responsibilities.

- If there is an exceptional need, the Branch Committee may assign temporary special pioneers, special pioneers, and circuit overseers to any country overseen by the branch office. Care should be taken so that the costs involved in such transfers and the acquiring of legal residency are kept to a minimum. Since a key objective of the School for Kingdom Evangelizers and the temporary special pioneer arrangement is to help more local brothers and sisters to reach out to meet the needs within their own country, those who are assigned by the branch office to serve in another country should keep that focus in mind. Any exceptional situations should be referred to the Service Committee.—See 6:87-88.
- Branch offices are not authorized to transfer special pioneers to other branch territories. Such requests or recommendations should be referred to the Service Committee.

111. Qualifications: Care should be exercised in appointing special pioneers. Since temporary special pioneers will fill most needs, any who are appointed as special pioneers should be exceptional individuals who have proved themselves as temporary special pioneers for three years. The Branch Committee also needs to consider carefully the age, health, and circumstances of an individual before appointing him as a special pioneer.

- There is no automatic arrangement for transferring those serving at Bethel or in some other form of special full-time service into the special pioneer work. The branch office has the weighty responsibility of appointing qualified candidates to serve as special pioneers. As an exception, the Branch Committee may appoint as special pioneers those who have been in special full-time service for many years (usually 15 years or more). Some might have less than 15 years of special full-time service but are in good health and have the stamina and spiritual qualifications to serve anywhere the branch office may need them. All circuit overseers reaching 70 years of age will be transferred to serve as special pioneers.—See 6: 152-153.

112. Consideration should be given to those who have demonstrated a genuine interest in helping people, an ability to get results, and a determination to stick with an assignment when things are difficult. We want dedicated, hardworking brothers and sisters to be special pioneers, not those who may be disinterested in the work or who are more concerned about material benefits than about the privilege of sharing in this spiritually upbuilding work. We desire to appoint those who are devoted to God and who take seriously their commission as ministers. The primary purpose behind the special pioneer work is to add impetus to the preaching of the good news in areas where little is being done. In addition, the rigorous schedule requires stamina and good health. In isolated areas, upbuilding association may be limited. Appointees should be encouraged to view themselves and their circumstances realistically.

113. Quota: The Service Committee establishes the total number of special pioneers that may be appointed in each country. If the Branch Committee sees a need to increase the quota of special pioneers, a request should be sent to the Service Committee, stating the number to be added, why they are needed, and the publisher-to-population ratios of the language fields where they would be assigned.

114. Appointing New Special Pioneers: If the Service Department identifies a need in the field that cannot be met by the use of temporary special pioneers, it can consider appointing special pioneers. A candidate for special pioneer service should be selected from those who have successfully completed three years in the temporary special pioneer work. If the Branch Committee approves the recommendation from the Service Department, the temporary special pioneer should be sent a letter explaining the special pioneer arrangement, with the request that he fill out a Questionnaire for Prospective Special Pioneer (S-208). The completed questionnaire is to be carefully checked by the Service Department, and if all is in order, it is forwarded to the Branch Committee for approval. If the appointment is approved, the Service Department sends the special pioneer an assignment letter, copying the elders of the congregation he will be working with and the circuit overseer.

- In branch territories with just a few circuits, the branch office may have in mind assigning an appointed circuit overseer to serve temporarily as a special pioneer. Before doing so, please provide the Service Committee with information about the brother you plan to reassign. If the brother and his wife, if married, could be used in the circuit work in another land for perhaps up to three years, provide a recent Personal Qualifications Report (S-326), translated into English, along with a cover letter describing his qualifications, his citizenship, and the language(s) in which he is fluent. It may be that he could be used in a nearby country where there is a need for circuit overseers.

115. File: A file folder is made to hold a copy of the assignment letter, the questionnaire, the vow of poverty, and other correspondence related to the special pioneer. His enrollment code in Admin is adjusted to show his start date as a special pioneer (FS). A record of his monthly field service is maintained in Admin.—See 6:181.

COPYRIGHT

116. Hour Requirement: The special pioneer hour requirement is 130 hours a month. Sisters who are 40 years of age or older have a requirement of 120 hours a month. It is understood that a special pioneer who serves as a congregation elder in a remote area may at times be needed for additional short-term theocratic assignments. For example, he may need to serve on a special committee or a Disaster Relief Committee, help with circuit or convention organization, assist in the construction or renovation of his own Kingdom Hall, or serve as a substitute circuit overseer. In addition, he may be needed for a brief period of time to train local elders to care for their responsibilities on a Hospital Liaison Committee. In exceptional situations, the travel time to attend an assigned circuit assembly, regional convention, or Kingdom Ministry School may be unusually long. If such assignments prevent him from making his hour requirement, a brief explanation, as well as the number of hours spent, should be included on the monthly report submitted on jw.org or on his monthly S-212 report. An explanation should also be written in the "Remarks" column of the Congregation's Publisher Record (S-21) card. However, the hours spent should not be included in the "Hours" column. The branch will also mark the Admin records and consider the remarks when performing the annual review.

117. Annual Review: Each September, the Service Department should review the activity of all special pioneers to see whether they are productive and are fulfilling the requirements of their special form of service. The Branch Committee may feel that certain younger special pioneers with a minimum of three years in special full-time service could serve well as field missionaries in another country. The factors to be considered and the steps to be followed to make such recommendations are outlined in 6:100.

118. If concerns about the activities of a special pioneer are reported, the Service Department may write to the elders and/or the circuit overseer to obtain their observations. Once the facts are known, the Service Department may write a letter of counsel and offer helpful suggestions or may direct the circuit overseer to approach the pioneer privately about the area of concern. If the special pioneer is a single sister, the circuit overseer should be accompanied by a local elder.

119. The special pioneer should be given the opportunity to improve over a reasonable period of time and be commended on any progress made. If there is no response to repeated efforts to assist the special pioneer and the Service Department is convinced that he no longer qualifies, a recommendation can be made to the Branch Committee that he be deleted from that privilege of service. In most cases, a special pioneer with less than 15 years of special full-time service who is consistently unable to meet his monthly hour requirement because of serious and debilitating health problems, perhaps for six months or so, should leave special full-time service. If married, careful consideration needs to be given as to whether the other mate should continue as a special pioneer. What would be in the best interests of the couple and of the organization? Would it be good to transition both of them out of special full-time service? (See 6:130.) If the Branch Committee feels that one mate should continue as a special pioneer while the other should not, then please provide your recommendation to the Service Committee. Extra consideration should be shown to those who are 50 years of age or older, or who have 15 or more years in special full-time service.—See 6:124.

120. Reassignment: If necessary, special pioneers may be moved after three years. However, there is no need to adjust an assignment of a special pioneer unless circumstances necessitate such a move. If a special pioneer requests to be assigned to another congregation, the Service Department should consider the needs of the field, factoring in any extenuating circumstances.

COPYRIGHT

121. Allowances: A special pioneer's personal, travel, PEA, and housing allowances are established for each country by the Publishing Committee. (See 5:10.) A special pioneer may also benefit from an Automobile Expense Account (AEA) if that arrangement is available in the country. (See 5:14.) A special pioneer may not receive a double allowance unless exceptional approval is given by the Service Committee. The housing allowance may be given to special pioneers according to the average of the actual amount they pay for housing and utilities up to the maximum shown on the Record of Allowance form (A-29). Any exception for high-rent areas should be referred to the Publishing Committee. Special pioneers who are on an approved leave of absence, who are using personal time away, or who are ill are eligible to continue to receive their regular monthly allowance and PEA as long as they continue as special full-time servants. If a special pioneer needs some assistance to cover his actual round-trip travel expenses to attend his congregation's assigned circuit assembly, regional convention, or Kingdom Ministry School, the Branch Committee may reimburse actual travel expenses upon request. This provision is not to be advertised and is intended only to cover unusually high travel expenses that may be incurred in order to reach the assigned assembly or school.

122. Allowances and PEA credits are given regardless of the time spent in the field service month by month. Special pioneers are allowed to do limited secular work as long as it does not interfere with their meeting the hour requirement.

123. Moving Expenses: When reassigning special pioneers, it is good to select a territory that is not too distant from their preceding assignment, in order to avoid unnecessary expenses. If a special pioneer cannot personally cover the expense of the transfer, he may request assistance from the branch. The Branch Committee may reimburse each special pioneer up to USD 500, depending on his needs. If the cost is more, then the recommendation for reimbursement should be referred to the Service Committee.

124. Infirm Special Pioneers: If a special pioneer with less than 15 years of special full-time service is consistently unable to meet his monthly hour requirement because of serious and debilitating health problems, perhaps for six months or so, then it may be best for the person to leave the special full-time service. On the other hand, for those who are 50 years of age or older or who have 15 or more years in special full-time service, a reduced hour requirement may be appropriate. To determine a reasonable hour goal, the branch office should receive a recommendation from the special pioneer's body of elders and one from the circuit overseer before submitting the recommendation to the Service Committee. For reporting purposes, all special pioneers with an approved reduced hour requirement should be given the FSI enrollment code. Periodically, the branch should review the circumstances of the special pioneers to determine whether the reduction is still needed or whether a further reduction should be recommended to the Service Committee. If an infirm special pioneer is once again able to reach the full hour requirement, the branch may adjust the person's enrollment to FS without consulting with the Service Committee. In most cases, a reduced hour requirement is better than no hour requirement at all. The recommendation that a special pioneer have no hour requirement is usually reserved for special pioneers who have extremely limiting circumstances because of advanced age or life-threatening health issues and whose hour requirement has already been progressively reduced.—See 6:119, 128.

125. Marriage: If a single special pioneer becomes engaged to be married, he or she should inform the Service Department right away. If the special pioneer indicates that he or she wishes to continue in the special pioneer work along with his or her prospective mate, the branch should immediately request a confidential Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) from the special pioneer's body of elders and one from his or her circuit overseer.

- If the prospective mate lives in the branch territory, the branch should send him or her a Questionnaire for Prospective Special Pioneer (S-208) to fill out. In addition, the prospective mate's body of elders and circuit overseer should be asked to complete separate Personal Qualifications Reports (S-326).
- If the prospective mate does not live in the branch territory, the Branch Committee should obtain the S-208 and S-326 forms from the respective branch office along with their recommendation.

The Branch Committee will review the special pioneer's qualifications and those of his or her prospective mate, taking into consideration the reputation and the physical health and stamina of each one. The prospective mate should be at least 21 years old, baptized three years or longer, in full-time service for at least two years, in good health, and able to maintain an active schedule. If there is a great difference in age between the two who are planning to marry, the Branch Committee should consider carefully whether this would cause negative talk or be a stumbling block to others. If the special pioneer and the prospective mate are qualified, the Branch Committee may enroll them as special pioneers together, effective the date of their marriage. Otherwise, the Branch Committee will need to consider carefully whether it would be best for the special pioneer to discontinue his or her service prior to marriage. If the special pioneer does not agree with the Branch Committee's decision or if the case is unusual, the Branch Committee may submit the matter along with its recommendation to the Service Committee. If the prospective mate does not qualify, then the engaged special pioneer should be informed that he or she will need to discontinue special full-time service prior to his or her marriage. If there is a situation that merits an exception to this policy, please provide details to the Service Committee. It is understood that in some exceptional situations it may be appropriate for one mate to continue as a special pioneer while the other mate does not.—See 6:130.

126. Pregnancy: A special pioneer couple who learn that they are to be parents should inform the branch immediately. The couple should be given a period of three months to get settled, during which they will continue to receive their monthly allowance. During this three-month period, the couple will need to locate suitable accommodations and find employment, so it is not expected that they will meet their monthly hour requirement. If one or both mates wish to become regular pioneers, they will have an additional three months to make the transition and their full-time service history would continue uninterrupted.

127. There is no provision for former special pioneers to be reappointed when a minor child is still living at home. If in the past the branch allowed a special pioneer couple to continue in that work while raising one or two children, it would be good to review the special pioneers' activity to determine whether they are still effective in their ministry. In all cases, it is up to the Branch Committee to evaluate the circumstances of special pioneers to decide whether they should remain in special full-time service. For information on transitional financial assistance, see 6:130.

128. Personal Time Away: A sample letter to all special pioneers that explains the personal time away arrangement is available on MDS. A copy of this letter should be sent to newly enrolled special pioneers along with their assignment letter and supply of forms. There may be no need for the Service Department to maintain personal time away records for infirm special pioneers who because of advanced age or chronic ailment no longer have a specific monthly hour requirement. That matter can be decided by the Branch Committee.—See 6:124.

129. Leave of Absence: The branch office is authorized to grant leave of absence time to all special full-time servants in the field, such as special pioneers, circuit overseers, field missionaries, and field instructors. If a serious health matter or a family emergency arises, the person should write or telephone the branch office and explain the situation in detail. There is no need for the person to use all of his accumulated personal time away to care for a serious health matter or a family emergency. However, it may be reasonable for the person to combine some of his personal time away with a leave of absence granted to him by the branch office. The Service Department overseer or his assistant is authorized to grant special full-time servants in the field up to 14 calendar days, including Saturdays and Sundays, of leave of absence in any service year. The Service Department overseer or his assistant and a member of the Branch Committee may grant these individuals up to 30 calendar days of leave in any service year. Any additional request for leave of absence should be handled by the Branch Committee. Though the granting of leave of absence to special full-time servants in the field is left to the Branch Committee to handle, any case that would involve granting more than 90 calendar days of leave of absence in any service year should be referred to the Service Committee. The Branch Committee should grant leave of absence time progressively, based on the circumstances, rather than immediately granting the person a full 90 calendar days, including Saturdays and Sundays, of leave time in any service year. In some cases, the Branch Committee should consider whether it would be better for a person or a couple to terminate special full-time service and inform the branch office when their circumstances have changed. These situations must be carefully reviewed and handled on a case-by-case basis.—See 5:23.

- During an approved leave of absence, the person's permanent enrollment code will remain the same. While on emergency leave, the person is not expected to meet a monthly hour requirement. If needed, the branch office is authorized to increase a circuit overseer's monthly allowance up to the amount provided to special pioneers during the time that he and his wife, if married, are on an approved leave of absence.

130. Transitional Financial Assistance: At the time that it is determined that an individual will discontinue special full-time service, the Branch Committee may see a need to provide the person, depending on his circumstances, with some transitional financial assistance. The amount given is not to exceed the equivalent of a special pioneer's allowance per month for a period of up to three months. This arrangement is confidential and is not for the general information of those in special full-time service. It is not expected that the Branch Committee would need to extend this provision to every person departing special full-time service. If the branch office has an arrangement to provide basic health-care support to those in the Worldwide Order, the Branch Committee may feel that it is appropriate to allow the person to continue benefiting from this arrangement as well. The Branch Committee is authorized to grant up to three months of such transitional financial assistance. If at the end of the three-month period there is an urgent need for transitional assistance to continue, the Branch Committee may consider approving up to three additional months. In a rare case, when this period has elapsed and it is felt that additional transitional assistance is needed, a recommendation and detailed explanation should be sent to the Service Committee for consideration. A person is not expected to meet an hour requirement in the ministry in order to receive transitional financial assistance.—See 5:150, 213; 6:4, 106, 119, 125, 127, 143, 155.

Circuit Overseers

131. Circuit Overseer Guidelines and the latest correspondence from the Service Committee provide detailed information regarding the activity of circuit overseers.

132. Substitute Circuit Overseers: The qualifications for substitute circuit overseers are outlined in Circuit Overseer Guidelines. Generally, substitute circuit overseers are given access to Circuit Overseer Guidelines and to the letters addressed to all circuit overseers. Substitute circuit overseers should not be used on a regular basis to care for an entire circuit. Thus, branches will want to have a reasonable number of approved circuit overseers available for use when needed, such as when a circuit overseer will be away for more than three months. Perhaps such brothers could serve as temporary special pioneers while waiting for the next permanent assignment to become available.

133. Circuit overseers may submit recommendations for new substitute circuit overseers using the Personal Qualifications Report (S-326). Before a brother is recommended to serve as a substitute circuit overseer or a circuit overseer, he must have attended the Ministerial Training School, the Bible School for Single Brothers, the Bible School for Christian Couples, the School for Kingdom Evangelizers, or the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead. The Service Department should check to see whether he is qualified to serve on special committees and has been recommended as a convention speaker. After the S-326 is evaluated and if everything is positive, the body of elders should be asked to provide its observations and its recommendation of the brother and, if married, his wife, using the S-326 forms. If a positive recommendation is received from both the body of elders and the circuit overseer, the brother may be sent a Questionnaire for Prospective Substitute Circuit Overseer (S-324).

134. Substitute circuit overseers are appointed by the Branch Committee. The Service Department should submit the completed questionnaire and the S-326 forms from the circuit overseer and the body of elders, as well as any other information that would be helpful to the Branch Committee for its evaluation. If the brother is appointed, a letter should be sent to him informing him of this. A copy of the letter is sent to the circuit overseer with instructions that he provide two weeks of training.

135. Circuit Overseer Guidelines outlines how circuit overseers can assist substitute circuit overseers who are not meeting the high standard expected of those serving in this capacity. If a substitute circuit overseer is reproved or disfellowshipped or is removed as an elder for any other reason, the date of his deletion as a substitute circuit overseer should be entered in Admin. The Service Department may refer complex cases involving a substitute circuit overseer's qualifications to the Branch Committee for consideration.

136. Circuit Overseers: In view of the great trust placed upon circuit overseers, the Branch Committee must give these recommendations very careful and prayerful consideration.—Luke 12:48b.

137. Qualifications: The qualifications for circuit overseers are outlined in Circuit Overseer Guidelines. Since the responsibility that is entrusted to circuit overseers of appointing and deleting elders and ministerial servants is a weighty one, those recommended should be kind, impartial, and just. (Ex. 18: 21) When handling recommendations, whether for appointment or deletion, the circuit overseer must avoid imposing his personal viewpoints and opinions or setting arbitrary rules. (1 Cor. 4:6) Before being recommended to serve as a circuit overseer, he should have proved that he strives to imitate Jehovah and His Son by caring for matters with love and patience. (Deut. 10:17; 16:18, 19; Isa. 42: 1-4) In this way, he demonstrates deep respect and submission to Jehovah and to the Head of the Christian congregation, Jesus Christ.—Eph. 1:22.

- All brothers recommended as circuit overseers should be graduates of the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead, the School for Kingdom Evangelizers, the Bible School for Christian Couples, or the Bible School for Single Brothers.
- Those being recommended should display evidence of good judgment, spiritual depth, loyalty to God's Word and organization, and soundness of mind. Such qualities are more important than having a compelling, charming personality.
- Those recommended for circuit work should have served as congregation elders for a minimum of three years and have at least two years in full-time service, preferably longer.
- Brothers who are 25 years of age or younger and those 50 years of age or older would usually not be recommended.—See 6:139.
- If the brother is married, his wife should be at least 21 years old, baptized three years or longer, and in full-time service for at least two years.

138. Circuit overseers may submit recommendations of substitute circuit overseers for circuit work, using the S-326 form. After the S-326 is evaluated and if everything is positive, the body of elders should be asked to provide its observations and its recommendation of the brother and, if married, his wife, using the S-326 forms. If a positive recommendation is received from both the body of elders and the circuit overseer, the brother should receive two weeks of training with an experienced circuit overseer. If all is well, he may be sent a Questionnaire for Prospective Circuit Overseer (S-323). See School for Kingdom Evangelizers Office Guidelines with regard to providing circuit training to graduates. Before a recommendation is sent to the Governing Body, the substitute circuit overseer should have served congregations a minimum of ten full weeks. An exception would be when a brother has previously served in circuit work or is a graduate of the Bible School for Single Brothers, the Bible School for Christian Couples, the School for Kingdom Evangelizers, or the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead and has already received ten weeks of training and may have served only a few weeks as a substitute circuit overseer since then.

139. Appointments: Circuit overseers are appointed by the Governing Body. (See 2:26, 30.) There is no need to supply more information than what is requested on the recommendation form unless there are unusual factors that the Governing Body should know. For example, if the Branch Committee is recommending a brother who is not yet 25 years old or a brother who is 50 years of age or older, the reasons for making such an exceptional recommendation should be fully explained. Because of the rigors of this assignment, it is the Governing Body's preference that brothers under the age of 50 be trained to care for this responsibility. If a brother being recommended previously served as a traveling overseer, the reason for his deletion from that privilege of service should be explained. Once the branch office has received an approved recommendation form from the Governing Body, the Service Department will then send the brother an appointment letter (S-308) along with instructions concerning his new assignment.—See 6:137.

140. Correspondence: Circuit overseers should be kept up-to-date with access to copies of all form letters, such as letters to pioneers, bodies of elders, and so forth. Any of the circuit overseer's personal mail received at the branch office should be forwarded to his current address. At the close of each month, circuit overseers send in a Monthly Report

(S-301), which shows their assignments that month, their expenses, their field service report, and dates of personal time away.

141. Size of Circuits: Circuits are generally made up of approximately 16 to 20 congregations, including isolated groups. One factor to take into consideration in determining the number of congregations to be placed in each circuit is the availability, capacity, and distance to the nearest Assembly Hall. In most cases, a circuit overseer should cover his circuit twice annually.

142. Routing: The circuit overseer submits his routing to the branch office three months in advance using the Circuit Overseer's Route Sheet (S-300). At the same time, he will send the congregation a Notice of Visit of Circuit Overseer (S-302) advising of the dates of his visit. Once the branch office and the congregations have been informed, the circuit overseer should adhere to the routing he submitted. If he feels that a change needs to be made to the routing, he should contact the Service Department and request permission.

143. Death: If a circuit overseer dies, the Service Department should inquire about any expenses incurred for the funeral arrangements. The Service Department can recommend to the Branch Committee that the expenses be covered, giving complete information. Branch Committees may approve the cost of a modest funeral according to local circumstances but should write to the Service Committee for additional approval if the cost will exceed the local approval threshold. The Service Department and Branch Committee should take an active interest in comforting the widow. If the widow has been in the special full-time service for many years, the Service Department can recommend to the Branch Committee that she be appointed as a special pioneer. The Service Department should also assist her with housing and see whether there are any other needs she may have. In the case of a widow who has not been in the special full-time service for many years, the Service Department may recommend to the Branch Committee that she serve as a regular pioneer and that consideration be given to offering her some transitional financial assistance.–See 6:130.

144. When a circuit overseer loses his wife in death, every effort should be made to comfort him. The Service Department may need to allow him a leave of absence from his assignment. (See 6:146.) If he wishes to continue in the circuit work, the Service Department should monitor matters, bringing any concerns or recommendations to the attention of the Branch Committee.

145. Allowances and PEA Credits: See 5:6-8, 18-21, 23-24.

146. Leave of Absence: Situations that may necessitate granting a circuit overseer or his wife a leave of absence are discussed at 6:129 and in Circuit Overseer Guidelines.–See 5:23.

147. Questions About the Qualifications of Circuit Overseers: The branch office should follow up on any concerns or complaints received about a circuit overseer that raise serious questions about his qualifications. First, the office needs to obtain the facts. (Prov. 18: 13, 17) In some cases, it may be best to write to the circuit overseer, informing him of what has been reported, and provide him with the opportunity to reply. Serious matters should be referred to the Branch Committee.

148. If what was reported is valid and has raised serious questions about a circuit overseer's qualifications, it may be that a kind letter that outlines the observations and provides loving Scriptural counsel will be sufficient to address the concern. (Prov. 27:9; 1 Tim. 5:1; w99 1/15 pp. 21-24) If needed, the Service Department may ask an experienced circuit overseer or branch representative to discuss the matter privately with the circuit overseer and provide him with appropriate Scriptural counsel during the next scheduled shepherding visit. (See 6: 158) If the matter needs to be handled sooner, an experienced circuit overseer could be asked to care for the matter. When a personal visit is made, the assigned brother should submit a report to the Service Department that includes a summary of the counsel he provided to the circuit overseer. The report should also comment on how the circuit overseer responded to any counsel given. Following the visit by an experienced circuit overseer or by a branch representative, the branch office could follow up in writing to express sincere appreciation for the circuit overseer's efforts in making improvement and to reinforce the counsel given. (1 Thess. 4:1) If this is not the first time that a similar concern has been brought to his attention, the letter from the Service Department could remind the brother of the previous counsel and encourage him to make a more concerted effort to improve. In such cases, the Service Department should copy the Branch Committee on such letters sent to assist the circuit overseer. If, over a reasonable period of time, the circuit overseer does not improve in spite of repeated efforts to assist him, it may be necessary for the Branch Committee to recommend to the Governing Body his deletion as a circuit overseer. A brief summary of the efforts made to assist him should be included in a numbered letter that is sent along with the Recommendations to Governing Body form.—See 2:30.

149. On occasion, complaints may be received involving the wife of a circuit overseer. Out of respect for the headship principle, the Service Department will write to the husband, informing him of the negative report and asking for his comments. He may be encouraged to help his wife. (The brother assigned to make the next shepherding visit on the circuit overseer and his wife should receive a copy of any correspondence to the circuit overseer so that the brother can offer assistance and counsel if needed.) Appropriate follow-up should be in harmony with the general principles outlined in the preceding paragraph.

150. When an allegation of serious wrongdoing is made about a circuit overseer, the Service Department should appoint two experienced circuit overseers to investigate. If it is established that there is substance to the report and evidence is available that a serious sin has been committed, the two brothers should notify the Service Department so that a judicial committee can be appointed. If there is insufficient evidence to prove that the allegations are true, the two brothers will make a full report of their findings to the Service Department for evaluation. Although a gross sin may not have been committed, it may be that the circuit overseer's conduct is seriously in question. In such cases, the report should be referred to the Branch Committee for its consideration and direction.—See 2:30.

151. If a circuit overseer confesses to serious wrongdoing, two experienced circuit overseers should be directed by the Service Department to investigate. After confirming the nature and extent of the sin(s) committed, they should report back to the Service Department. The Service Department will appoint a judicial committee consisting of three circuit overseers. Likely, the two who investigated the matter would serve on the committee. The committee's decision, whether reproof or disfellowshipping, is reported to the branch in the normal way. The Service Department would designate a congregation that would hold the records in its confidential file. (It may be the congregation where the former circuit overseer indicates that he will attend meetings.) An announcement of reproof or disfellowshipping would also be made in that congregation. If the former circuit overseer seeks reinstatement, a local congregation judicial committee should hear the plea for reinstatement and seek observations from the branch office before reaching a final decision. If the decision is to reinstate, the appropriate notification should be sent to the Service Department.

152. Age and Health of Circuit Overseers: Circuit overseers will discontinue their assignment on August 31 of the service year that they reach 70 years of age. The brother and his wife, if married, will be transferred to serve as special pioneers.—See 6:111.

153. If a circuit overseer who is not yet 70 years of age is experiencing challenges because of age, chronic health problems, or other circumstances, the Service Department should review the situation. If he is a longtime special full-time servant, an encouraging letter can be sent acknowledging his challenges along with the assurance that he will be assisted with his needs if he transfers from the circuit work. This may move him to request an adjustment in his service. He should be invited to contact the Service Department for direction in making the transfer to serve as a special pioneer. The letter may outline what special pioneers receive by way of financial assistance and health care. If the circuit overseer is not inclined to discontinue, it may be good to address the matter during the next scheduled shepherding visit by an experienced circuit overseer or by a branch representative. If the circuit overseer accedes and decides to discontinue, he should submit his decision in writing. The Branch Committee will review any recommendation from the Service Department regarding a reduced special pioneer hour requirement, his allowance and housing, appointment as a substitute circuit overseer, and so forth. When the Branch Committee approves the recommendation, the Service Department will write the circuit overseer a warm, encouraging letter acknowledging his many years of faithful service, the date that his (and his wife's) special pioneer appointment will become effective, and the arrangements that have been made for him and his wife.—See 2:30; 6:111.

154. In cases where the circuit overseer feels strongly about remaining in the work even though this would prove detrimental to his health, the Service Department should present the matter to the Branch Committee. If it agrees, the Branch Committee should submit its recommendation for deletion to the Governing Body. (See 2:30.) If the Governing Body determines that the circuit overseer should discontinue, the Branch Committee may direct that the Service Department draft a letter for the Branch Committee's review, empathizing with his struggles and informing him of the decision made that is in his best interests and those of the congregations. The letter would provide information about a new assignment and arrangements in place that will help him and his wife in connection with the transition.

155. When a circuit overseer with less than 15 years of special full-time service needs to discontinue his service, perhaps to care for parents or because of a health problem afflicting him or his wife or because of pregnancy, he should notify the Service Department. The Service Department could recommend to the Branch Committee that they be encouraged to serve as regular pioneers and that consideration be given to offering them some transitional financial assistance.—See 6:130.

156. Marriage: If a single circuit overseer becomes engaged to be married and desires to continue in the circuit work, he should inform the Service Department right away. The Service Department will send a questionnaire (S-323) for him and his fiancée to fill out. Additionally, the Service Department will make discreet inquiries, confidentially writing to the body of elders of the sister's congregation and to her circuit overseer about her qualifications. (If the sister is in her fiancé's circuit, another circuit overseer who knows the sister could be contacted.) In addition to their letters, the elders and the circuit overseer should submit separate Personal

COUNCIL COPY

Qualifications Reports (S-326). These reports, whether favorable or unfavorable, and the questionnaire should be submitted to the Branch Committee with a recommendation. The Branch Committee will review the sister's qualifications, her reputation in the congregation and circuit where she serves, and her physical health and stamina. She should be at least 21 years old, baptized three years or longer, and in full-time service for at least two years. If there is a great difference in age between the two who are planning to marry, the Branch Committee should carefully consider whether this would cause negative talk or be a stumbling block to others. In all cases in which the circuit overseer has requested to stay on in the circuit work after he gets married, the Branch Committee should submit its comments and recommendation to the Service Committee for its decision. This should be done well ahead of the wedding date if at all possible. If the Service Committee approves that the circuit overseer continue in the circuit work following his marriage, then his wife would immediately be enrolled as the wife of a circuit overseer and they would start serving congregations right away. The Service Department will write the circuit overseer and inform him of the decision.

157. If it is decided that a longtime circuit overseer should not remain in the circuit work after he gets married, he can be appointed as a special pioneer. However, if the sister he is engaged to marry does not have many years in the special full-time service, she may continue as a regular pioneer. Any exceptional cases should be referred to the Service Committee.

158. Shepherding Visits: Circuit overseers and their wives, if married, should receive a shepherding visit at least once every two years. Such visits should be made during a circuit overseer's regular visit to a congregation, not during the week of a circuit assembly. In larger branches, most circuit overseers will receive a visit from another experienced circuit overseer. The experienced circuit overseer in turn will receive a shepherding visit from a branch representative. In smaller branches, branch representatives may visit all the circuit overseers. The Branch Committee is responsible for selecting the brothers who will be used to make such shepherding visits. As soon as the branch representative or the experienced circuit overseer is provided with the names of the circuit overseers he is to visit, he should contact those brothers to determine the best time for the visit.—See 6:148.

159. Circuit overseers assigned to shepherd other circuit overseers should be men who are older in years and experienced as traveling overseers. They should be known as ones who maintain a good personal schedule of Bible study and meditation and who keep up-to-date with published information from 'the faithful slave' and with letters from the branch office. (Matt. 24:45) They should be balanced in judgment, show genuine humility, have a sincere interest in helping others, and have a high regard for the importance of the disciple-making work. (Phil. 4:5; Jas. 3:17; 1 Pet. 5:5) It is especially important that they be men who are compassionate and who are able to be encouraging and helpful to others.—Isa. 32:1, 2; Col. 3:12.

160. Branch representatives assigned to shepherd circuit overseers may be members of the Branch Committee, experienced Service Department deskmen, or responsible brothers in the branch office who have had experience in the traveling work. Each branch representative would normally make no more than one or two such visits per year.

161. Writing Letters to Former Traveling Overseers: In many countries, there are faithful brothers who formerly spent many years in the traveling work. To encourage such older brothers, branch offices may write a personalized letter from time to time. This shows that the organization is interested in their welfare and appreciates what they accomplished in the traveling work during a big part of their life.—Phil. 2:4; 1 Pet. 5:12.

Other Desks in the Service Department

162. Convention Desk: In larger branch offices, a Convention Desk is assigned to ensure that practical and beneficial arrangements are made for holding conventions. Helpful guidance is found in Convention Organization Guidelines (CO-1). The desk maintains all files pertaining to regional conventions, including speaker ratings (S-306), convention volunteer reports (CO-53), and so forth.

163. Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls: A brother in the Service Department should be designated as the contact for the Local Design/Construction Department (LDC). His responsibility will be to determine where Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls are needed. He will work closely with the LDC to develop a master plan of the number of Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls that are needed and their priority. The master plan is submitted for approval to the Branch Committee. Once approved, the LDC will use this plan to prioritize and administer construction, renovation, and maintenance projects for Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls in the branch territory. The brother in the Service Department will work closely with the LDC to review and study regularly the needs for Kingdom Halls and Assembly Halls in order to update the master plan.—See 5: 172.

164. Speaking Assignment Desk: The Teaching Committee provides letters and direction that outline the arrangements for Bethel speakers. These guidelines should be followed regarding assignments, expenses, and so forth.—See 7:71-80.

165. Territory Desk: Territory maps should be prepared using the best map available in the country. Indicate on the state or province maps the territory assigned to each congregation and the boundaries of all circuits. Unassigned territory should also be indicated on this map or on a separate map. The names of circuit overseers followed by the circuit numbers may be placed within the boundary of the area they serve. A territory assignment letter (S-54) is sent to each congregation with the exact written description of the outlined territory. It may also be possible to send a map clearly outlining the congregation's assigned territory. The procedure for congregations to follow in adjusting territory boundaries is outlined on the form Territory Adjustment Request (S-6).

166. Theocratic Schools Desk: This desk cares for the various theocratic schools, such as the Pioneer Service School, the School for Kingdom Evangelizers, the Kingdom Ministry School, the School for Congregation Elders, and language seminars.

167. Circuit Overseer Desk: In larger branch offices, a desk may be designated to care for circuit overseers and their needs in harmony with organizational guidelines. The desk assists with the identification, training, and recommendations for appointment of substitute circuit overseers and regular circuit overseers.

Service Reports

168. Monthly Field Service Report: Branch offices should follow the instructions provided in Admin for compiling and sending the Field Service Report (S-81) to the Service Committee. The figures for the S-81 are taken from a careful compilation of the Congregation Reports (S-1), Special Pioneer Reports (S-212), Home Reports (A-24), and circuit overseers' Monthly Reports (S-301). All publishers are encouraged to report through a congregation. Isolated publishers and pioneers send their reports on the publisher's Field Service Report (S-4), indicating that it is from an "isolated publisher" or "isolated pioneer." The figure for the "Public by Mail" column on the S-81 can be obtained from the month-to-month record of books, brochures, and magazines sent from the branch to the non-Witness public. In addition, all magazines or literature sent out in response to coupons are listed as "Public by Mail." Comments about new peaks in publishers, general highlights of the work, or trends may be submitted in the "Remarks" column. Questions or significant figures should be sent to the Service Committee in a separate letter.—See 6:68.

169. A separate Field Service Report (S-81) should be submitted monthly for each political entity under the oversight of the branch. Reports should be sent no later than the 28th of the following month. Late or missing reports may be included in the report for the following month. Be sure that any peaks shown do not include reports in excess of the total number of congregations for that month.

170. Annual Field Service Report: Branch offices should follow the instructions provided in Admin for compiling and sending the end-of-year figures.

Files and Filing

171. Since the files in the office are used by many to do their work, all correspondence must be promptly and correctly filed so that it can be readily located. As a general guideline, items should be filed within one week of their being completed. The secretary has the responsibility for this and should have a regular routine for filing.

172. Permanent congregation files are stored in a very secure, locked area of the branch. Each congregation file has four sections: (1) circuit overseers' reports, (2) general correspondence, (3) reinstatements, and (4) disfellowshippings and disassociations. [See Chart 6.1.]

173. Circuit Overseers' Reports: S-303 and S-2 forms and supplemental letters are kept in the front of the file in date order with the most recent at the front. When a new report is received, a red mark is made on the upper right corner of the preceding report, and the new report is inserted in front of it. If the first report in the file has this red mark, then the most recent report has been removed.

174. General Correspondence: This material is filed directly behind the circuit overseers' reports in date order with the most recent at the front of the general correspondence. The Congregation Application (S-51), or in its absence the oldest Report on Circuit Overseer's Visit With Congregation (S-303), is filed at the back of the general correspondence. If the last circuit overseer's report prior to the elder arrangement in 1972 is available, it should be stamped "DO NOT DESTROY" and retained just in front of the S-51 form. Correspondence regarding an individual accused of child abuse should be marked "DO NOT DESTROY."

175. Reinstatements: Whether recorded on S-77 forms or in letters from judicial committees, correspondence related to reinstatements is filed directly behind the general correspondence and S-51 form in the date order of reinstatement, with the most recent reinstatement in the front of this section. The S-77 form and attached correspondence about those reinstated are kept at least five years. The S-77 form may be marked "DO NOT DESTROY" by the Service Desk if the material should be kept longer.

176. Disfellowshippings and Disassociations: These are kept at the back of the file. The most recent disfellowshipping record is filed at the very back of the folder. When an individual is reinstated, the date of reinstatement is recorded on the S-77 form, which is then filed with the reinstatements, as noted above.

177. Hold File: Each Service Desk maintains a HOLD FILE for pending items. This file typically contains correspondence on matters for which the deskman has requested further information or comments from circuit overseers or elders. It may be best also to keep in the hold file a complete copy of any material routed to Service Department oversight or to the Branch Committee. Every month the secretary should go through the hold file, checking to see whether a response has been made. If the office has not received the requested information or comments within three months, he should check with the deskman to see whether a reminder letter should be sent. When sending a reminder letter to a body of elders, a courtesy copy is provided to the circuit overseer with a blind PS asking him to make certain that the elders respond promptly.

178. Files for Isolated Pioneers and Publishers: When it is not feasible for an isolated group of publishers to be cared for by a congregation, a file folder for each isolated publisher group that cannot yet be formed into a congregation is made and arranged alphabetically according to the name of the place where the publisher receiving mail for the group resides. All correspondence to and from the group, as well as reports from the circuit overseer for his visits to the group, is placed in this file. When a group is established as a congregation, the contents of the folder are added to the CONGREGATION FILE. A file folder is also made for ISOLATED PIONEERS. The S-4 forms from isolated pioneers are kept for a year in this folder. These files are kept together and not with the congregation files.

179. Circuit Files: The S-2 forms showing the appointment of assembly overseers and assistant assembly overseers are kept in these files.—See 6:52.

180. Branch Correspondence Files: When other branches send correspondence to your branch for forwarding to individuals in the field, they usually include a courtesy copy for your branch file. Such copies are filed in the appropriate folder of the BRANCH CORRESPONDENCE FILES, not in the congregation files. If much mail is received from other branches, it may be helpful to sort the mail into categories, such as Branch Accommodations, Donation Letters, Kingdom Hall Information Requests, and Miscellaneous. The respective retention policy should be followed for each category.

181. Special Pioneer Files: A file folder is made for each special pioneer or, if married, for each couple. The files are arranged alphabetically. The special pioneer's current congregation assignment, his Application for Regular Pioneer Service (S-205), and the S-208 are a permanent part of the file. Also filed here are the two most recent S-326 forms submitted by the circuit overseer and the file copy of the personal annual encouragement letter sent by the Service Desk. (The personal encouragement letter is sent after the receipt of the first S-326 form each service year.) General correspondence may be disposed of when the files are weeded according to the branch's document retention policy.—See 6:115, 186.

182. Active and Inactive Circuit Overseer Files: An active file folder is made for each circuit overseer by the secretary. This folder contains correspondence from the circuit overseer pertaining to his circuit as a whole, including any S-326 forms that were submitted on the circuit overseer and his wife, the file copies of correspondence written to the circuit overseer in connection with these reports, and correspondence regarding his field activity or his personal affairs. When a circuit overseer discontinues the circuit work, the folder is placed in the inactive file.

183. Active and Inactive Substitute Circuit Overseer Files: An active file folder is made for each substitute circuit overseer. This folder contains the correspondence regarding his appointment, including the S-324, any S-326 forms, and so forth. When a substitute circuit overseer discontinues the circuit work, the folder is placed in the inactive file.

184. "Declaration Pledging Faithfulness" Files: If used, a "Declaration Pledging Faithfulness" is filed by the last name of the person on the declaration. A separate list of names of those in the file should be maintained.—See Correspondence Guidelines, pp. 73-74.

185. Files for Those Disfellowshipped and Disassociated: A permanent file of those disfellowshipped and disassociated is kept. If S-79a/b cards are used by the branch office, they are filed alphabetically by last name, first name, and middle name and should be stored in a very secure, locked room.

186. Weeding Section Files: Deskmen are responsible for weeding the congregation files for their section. Not to be weeded are any S-2 or S-52 forms. These are to be kept indefinitely in the congregation file. Any correspondence dealing with the transfer of appointed brothers from one congregation to another should also be kept indefinitely. At least the last five copies of the S-303 forms and supplemental letters are kept. Older S-303 forms marked "DO NOT DESTROY" are also kept. The schedule for file retention is to be followed. A secretary may weed the files if directed to do so by the deskman. However, the deskman must carefully check the items slated for shredding within a short time of their being weeded by the secretary so that nothing of significance is discarded. The secretary should not shred anything from the files without getting the approval of the deskman.—See 6:181.

187. Electronic Files: The work of the Service Department should be maintained on a computer network system, which is backed up regularly. Admin supports scanning documents into the Correspondence and Workflow modules. However, before undertaking a project to scan large volumes of historical documents, please first consult with the WHQ Computer Department. Once hard copy paperwork has been scanned and verified, then it can be shredded. Electronic files not stored in Admin should be labeled and kept in the following structure. In the work folder, a subfolder should be designated for the YEAR (2010, 2011, and so on) and a subsubfolder for each MONTH (January, February, and so on). Each file should be labeled with the year, month, day, desk symbols, state or province abbreviation, city name, congregation number, and name of individual or brief description of the matter. For example: 2009_02-16_SASSA_NY_Pawling_12345_John_Publisher.docx and 2009_02-16_SFSSF_CA_Los_Angeles_West_98765_BOE_Korean Group.docx.

WATCHTOWER BIBLE SCHOOL OF GILEAD

188. Purpose of the School: The purpose of this 20-week school is to provide intensive training in Bible study and theocratic organization for experienced and well-qualified special full-time servants who have already proved that they are mature Christians. With this additional training, these individuals should be able to do more to stabilize and strengthen the field and branch organization.

189. Basic Requirements:

- Married couples, single brothers, and single sisters between the ages of 25 and 50 who have been in special full-time service for at least three consecutive years.
- Candidates must have the potential for strengthening and stabilizing the field or branch organization to a greater degree and must have demonstrated that they enjoy serving their brothers and can help others in a kind way to learn and adhere to Scriptural and theocratic direction.
- They must be exemplary in all aspects of Christian living.
- Married couples must have served the last three years together in special full-time service.
- A brother must be an elder who has been serving for a minimum of two consecutive years.
- Must be able to read, write, and speak English fluently.

CONFIDENTIAL

- Must be in good health. Those who have chronic ailments, who have physical or emotional disorders, who require regular visits to a doctor or a chiropractor, who suffer from severe allergies, or who require a special diet should not be recommended for Gilead training.
- Neither past graduates of Gilead nor current members of a Branch or Country committee should be recommended.
- Circuit overseers must have already attended the School for Circuit Overseers and Their Wives.

190. Selecting Candidates: When considering candidates to be recommended for Gilead School training, the Branch Committee should have clearly in mind the current and long-term needs at Bethel and in the field. (See 6:101.) The following points should be considered:

- In reviewing a candidate's strengths and limitations, spiritual qualities such as humility and submission to theocratic instruction are more important than a person's age, seniority, nationality, or secular education.—1 Sam. 16:6, 7; Acts 16:2; Jas. 3:17; 1 Pet. 3:4.
- It is the Governing Body's preference that brothers who are being considered for appointment to the Branch or Country committee attend Gilead School.
- Which special full-time servants would readily apply themselves to the intensive training at Gilead and, as a result, be spiritually strengthened so as to be of greater use to the organization?—Phil. 2: 20-22; 1 Tim. 4:15.
- With Gilead training, which brothers would serve as effective and discerning overseers in key Bethel departments, as deskmen in the Service Department, as field instructors, or as circuit overseers?
- Since the spirituality of translators is critical to the production of high-quality spiritual food, which translators would benefit the most from an in-depth study of the Bible and organizational matters at Gilead?
- In the field, which special full-time servants have proved themselves to be outstanding evangelizers, maintaining their joy despite challenging circumstances?
- Among the single sisters, which ones are excellent teachers in the field, balanced, modest, respectful of authority, sound in mind, and able to get along well with all types of personalities?
- In lands where the Kingdom work is well-established and where there are many spiritually mature brothers and sisters, the Branch Committee should give consideration to recommending those who could fill needs in other lands after Gilead training.

191. Processing Questionnaires: Gilead recommendations are to be submitted to the Service Committee each year during the month of December. In December, each branch should submit recommendations for four married couples and four single persons. If a person indicates on the questionnaire that he does not have the circumstances to be sent to another country, he may still be recommended for Gilead training if the Branch Committee firmly believes that the person will make a major contribution to the Kingdom work locally.

192. Qualified candidates being considered should be provided with (1) a copy of the Questionnaire to Attend the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead (G-12), (2) a copy of the G-16 cover letter, and (3) the A-63 letter. To ensure that the Branch Committee has a complete picture of the strengths and limitations of those being considered, a Personal Qualifications Report (S-326) should be obtained from the candidate's local body of elders and circuit overseer. If the candidate is serving at Bethel, a report should also be obtained from his department overseer and elder group. Before the Branch Committee reviews the completed G-12 questionnaires, it should confirm that each question has been answered correctly and completely. The Branch Committee should review the G-12 questionnaires and other reports very carefully before making final selections. Each recommendation should be sent electronically to the Service Committee with a very brief covering numbered letter that includes the following attachments:

- Gilead Student Recommendations (G-7) form. The branch should provide specific comments on each candidate's qualifications and future potential and how the person would be used after Gilead. Gilead recommendations are valid until the following December.
- Questionnaire to Attend the Watchtower Bible School of Gilead (G-12). In addition to this completed questionnaire, a quality full-length color photo should be included as an electronic file or scanned document.

BRANCH VISITS

193. Branch Visits: The Service Committee assigns headquarters representatives to make branch visits. Such visits are usually arranged each year. The headquarters representative's primary work is to encourage the Bethel family, to aid the members of the Branch Committee in caring for their assignments, and to see that matters are being conducted in accord with the Scriptures and in harmony with direction from the Governing Body. (Acts 16:4, 5; Rom. 1:11, 12; Phil. 1:8-11) During his visit to the Bethel departments, the headquarters representative makes himself available to the members of the Bethel family who wish to speak about their service or personal matters. To get a firsthand report of the progress of the Kingdom work in the field, the headquarters representative will meet with some of the circuit overseers. During the visit, he will also arrange to meet with all of the field missionaries. Following his review of branch operations, the brother will provide a brief report to the Branch Committee, outlining points of commendation. As needed, the headquarters representative will also report on any significant matters that he feels may be adversely affecting the progress of the preaching and disciple-making work as well as the smooth operation of the work at the branch.—1 Cor. 14:40.

194. The Branch Committee should prepare well for the branch visit in harmony with direction received from the Service Committee. (See 7:67-70.) Prior to the headquarters representative's arrival, the Branch Committee should already have completed the Branch Visit Questionnaire (A-26) for the current service year. At the end of his visit, the headquarters representative will provide his additional comments on the form and give to the Branch Committee a letter providing his observations, commendation, and counsel, if needed. The A-26 questionnaire, as well as his letter to the Branch Committee, is then sent to the Service Committee, which in turn will send each respective section of the report to the appropriate Governing Body committee. The Governing Body committees will not send routine acknowledgments of the report. If a matter is raised that requires specific direction from world headquarters, the Branch Committee should write further about it to the appropriate Governing Body committee.

195. Shepherding Visits: Governing Body members are assigned to make two shepherding visits per year to selected branches for the encouragement of the Branch Committees and Bethel families. (1 Pet. 5:2, 3) Such visits are about one week in length. Usually, a shepherding visit and the annual branch visit will be scheduled some months apart from each other. The shepherding visit will require less preparation than a typical branch visit. For example, field missionaries and Bethelites serving in remote offices are not invited to the branch office during the shepherding visit. In addition, prior to the visit, there will be no need for the Branch Committee to complete a Branch Visit Questionnaire (A-26). A copy of the latest Branch Visit Questionnaire (A-26) should be made available to the Governing Body member on his arrival. There is no need for the branch office to arrange an extensive schedule of visits to Bethel departments. Rather, at the time of the arrival of the Governing Body member, he will inform the Branch Committee of how he will carry out the visit.

196. A feature of the shepherding visit is a special program for congregations. If possible, the special program should be streamed to locations throughout the branch territory. In years when both a branch visit and a shepherding visit are scheduled, the special program held during the branch visit will be kept smaller, perhaps being held at a nearby Assembly Hall. That program will not be streamed to other locations.

ORGANIZATION OF PERMANENT CONGREGATION FILES

TEACHING COMMITTEE

1. The Teaching Committee's focus is on providing instruction that highlights the practical value of the fine spiritual food that we receive from "the faithful and discreet slave." (Matt. 24:45; 1 Tim. 4:16) This committee's general scope of operation is summarized at the end of this chapter. [See Chart 7.1.]

CIRCUIT ASSEMBLIES

2. Circuit assembly programs and outlines are provided yearly by the Teaching Committee. These events are to be conducted in accord with Circuit Organization Guidelines (S-330). Taking into account the recommendations of the circuit overseers, the Branch Committee will arrange to hold two one-day circuit assemblies a year for each circuit or section of a circuit. Normally, a visiting speaker will be sent from the branch to serve one of the events (CA-br). A circuit overseer will handle the main talk(s) for the other assembly (CA-co). Where practical, the Branch Committee may assign visiting speakers from the branch to serve circuit assemblies in other countries under its oversight, following the guidelines given in 7:9-10. Only circuit overseers or regular members of the Bethel family (BBR) who are currently appointed as visiting speakers at circuit assemblies may be used for these assignments. (See 7:73 for guidelines on these appointments.)

3. If it is felt that the published CA-br program should be adjusted for a certain locality, a proposal should be sent to the Teaching Committee for approval. In countries with only one circuit or where publishers are very poor and cannot afford to travel to three events in a year, the Branch Committee could consider any of the following optional arrangements: (1) obtaining a DVD of an earlier CA-br program in the language of the circuit for showing at the Kingdom Hall(s) where the affected publishers meet, (2) merging the two yearly events for the affected circuit into one weekend, or (3) not holding the CA-br program. In countries where restrictions make it impossible to hold regional conventions or circuit assemblies, arrangements may be made to present abbreviated programs in Kingdom Halls or at other appropriate locations.

4. Foreign-language circuit assemblies are organized when at least 200 attendees can convene in that language and if there are enough qualified speakers to hold the program. If the Branch Committee feels that an exception is needed, a request may be sent to the Teaching Committee.

5. For the benefit of smaller foreign-language congregations and groups, assemblies may be interpreted simultaneously. When a foreign-language session has been approved, the circuit overseer assigns qualified speakers to present selected parts, such as the baptism talk and the Watchtower Study summary, in the foreign language of the audience. This session is held concurrently with the program in the primary language of the event. Depending on the availability of interpreters, other parts can be interpreted simultaneously for the benefit of the foreign-language audience. (Branches without enough fluent speakers in a particular foreign-language field may request a branch where assemblies and conventions are held in that language to provide DVDs of a video file of such events. If a branch can provide such a recording, it should display only what transpires on stage. Footage of the audience or other areas of the venue should not be shown. Moreover, while reasonably good video is desired, high-quality audio is of foremost importance.) Portions of the recorded program may be shown interspersed with live presentations by the available speakers or interpreters. These sessions are usually held in a separate room or area of the venue and are organized so that they will not distract the audience attending the main program. (Where possible, an FM transmitter and small FM receivers with earphones may be used. The circuit may have to purchase the FM transmitter.) If a circuit overseer for a foreign-language field feels that enough qualified speakers and interpreters are available, he should recommend to the branch office that sessions be held in that language. This request should be sent well in advance of the scheduled event. In his report he should answer the following questions: How many publishers and interested persons would benefit from this program? How many elders and ministerial servants qualify to give talks or interpret the program? How many parts could the appointed brothers realistically present? How many other publishers qualify to interpret the program? —See 7:15.

6. If simultaneous interpretation is approved for circuit events, a qualified brother should oversee the arrangement, under the direction of the assembly overseer. If possible, the brother selected should know the foreign language. The circuit overseer should meet with this brother to decide on such matters as a practical location for the foreign-language session, lighting, and sound.

7. Interpreters should be exemplary publishers approved by the Congregation Service Committee to assist in this way. Accurate knowledge of the truth of God's Word is required in order to interpret Scriptural thoughts correctly into another language. It is essential that an interpreter have a good comprehension of both languages, particularly of the target language.—See 7:53, 70.

8. The brother overseeing the interpretation should schedule the assignments well in advance. If at all possible, qualified brothers, rather than sisters, should be used for the principal talks, particularly those of the circuit overseer or the visiting speaker from the branch. When qualified sisters must be used, they should be referred to the published direction given on this matter. (w09 11/15 pp. 12-13) A copy of the talk outline may be given in advance to the assigned interpreter, who will use it for preparation purposes only. In addition, the speaker may be able to give the interpreter a copy of his personal notes prior to the presentation. Either way, those copies are only to be used by the interpreter to prepare for his assignment. Neither one of the copies nor a translation thereof should be used by the interpreter during the actual presentation of the talk. Rather, he should listen carefully to the speaker's delivery and convey to the audience in his own words an accurate interpretation of the speaker's statements. (See be p. 55.) Any copies of the talk outline or the speaker's notes given to the interpreter beforehand should be returned to the speaker or destroyed after the program. Before the actual delivery of the talk, the speaker would do well to meet with the assigned interpreter to discuss pertinent details of his presentation. This guideline may be followed for all interpreted events. If a Governing Body member or a helper to a Governing Body committee is present and he is comfortable with the arrangement, his prayer may be interpreted, either consecutively or simultaneously. In all other cases, the prayer should be said by a brother fluent in the target language. However, if the brother speaks another language that most in the audience also understand, he could give the prayer using that common language. —See 7:15, 53.

9. Travel Expenses Associated With Circuit Assembly (CA-br) Assignments: The circuit should cover the transportation expenses of the visiting speaker and his wife (if married) even if he uses a branch vehicle to travel to his assignment. The branch is authorized to fund or supplement any financial shortfall for circuits unable to cover these travel expenses. In any case, a visiting Bethel representative should be assigned every year. Even if the branch must initially cover the travel expenses of the visiting speaker and his wife (if married), the insolvent circuit might still be able to contribute "something" to assist. (1 Cor. 16:1, 2) As a possible option, Branch or Country committee members could serve such circuits in conjunction with their annual visits to nearby missionaries or remote translation offices.—See 7:2.

10. Time Away for Circuit Assembly (CA-br) Assignments: Generally, Bethel speakers would need no more than a total of two days to travel to and from most circuit assembly (CA-br) assignments. (For these assignments, wives would be granted the same amount of time away from work as their husbands.) Those closer to Bethel may require little or no time away. In some branches overseeing vast territories that span many time zones or in lands where travel is very difficult, more than a day's time might be needed for a speaker to reach his assignment. In such rare cases, the visiting speaker should make a reasonable determination of the amount of travel time needed, considering such local circumstances as the reliability of the transportation, the schedules, and the travel costs. (See 7:2.) Occasionally, a brother from Bethel might be assigned to serve a circuit assembly (CA-br) in a remote area if he will be able to reach the assembly either en route to or returning from another distant assignment, such as a visit to a remote translation office. Also, if a brother will be taking personal time away in a distant part of the branch territory, some thought might be given to having him care for a circuit assembly (CA-br) being held in the vicinity.

11. If the circuit assembly (CA-br) is scheduled on Sunday and reaching the site will require a significant amount of travel time, the brother would usually travel on Saturday as long as suitable transportation is available and travel costs would not be much higher than on Friday. Typically, he would travel back to Bethel on Monday. When the event is scheduled on Saturday, the speaker would normally leave from Bethel on Friday so as to reach his accommodations for that evening at a reasonable time. Likely, he will return to Bethel on Sunday, providing circumstances allow for a reasonable itinerary that day. If it is normally possible to keep to the aforementioned travel schedule but a speaker opts to leave earlier or return later, he is expected to use personal time away from Bethel.

12. If the above guidelines do not answer questions that could arise regarding this subject, the Branch Committee should feel free to contact the Teaching Committee, explaining what is involved in a particular situation.—See 6:82.

CONVENTIONS

13. In its annual letter to all branches, the Governing Body sets out the program for the coming year, including information about future conventions and general arrangements for holding regional, national, international, or special conventions. Special conventions are held every year unless international conventions have been scheduled for that year. They take place in smaller venues that hold from 7,000 to 12,000 attendees, including about 1,500 foreign delegates (1,000 from the United States and 500 from nearby lands.) Branch-planned activities also take place before and/or after the convention. International conventions are held every four or five years. They take place in larger venues that hold a minimum of 20,000 attendees, including about 3,000 foreign delegates (2,000 from the United States and 1,000 from other countries around the globe). Branch-planned activities also take place before and/or after the convention. An arrangement is made for those in foreign service to be funded to attend the convention of their choice. For more information on how these events should be conducted, please see Convention Organization Guidelines (CO-1). Also, when international or special conventions are held, please note that a special provision of time away is made for special full-time servants who are selected as delegates. (This is separate and in addition to the usual personal time away or hour credits that are granted to attend one annual regional convention. The two provisions of time away are different and cannot be combined to attend only one event.) The special provision of time away is as follows: Bethel family members and circuit overseers and their wives who are selected as delegates to attend a special or an international convention will be granted one and a half days of personal time away in order to attend all program sessions at one such event. This provision also applies to field instructors and their wives, Assembly Hall servants, and construction servants who are selected as delegates. As for special pioneers, temporary special pioneers, and field missionaries who are selected as delegates to a special or an international convention, they will receive a five-hour credit for each day of the special or international convention.

14. Programs: Convention programs address concerns from Branch Committees regarding specific needs in their part of the field. If a Branch Committee desires to adjust a program because of local needs, it should write the Teaching Committee for direction before proceeding. An abbreviated regional convention program is sent to all branches, as this may be helpful to smaller language groups and territories.

15. Conventions and assemblies should be practical and in good taste and should prove to be a spiritual blessing to those in attendance. These events should be held at a time of year when the majority of the brothers will be able to attend. If the Branch Committee approves simultaneous interpretation into a foreign language for some or all of the parts of the program, a qualified brother should oversee that arrangement. He should work under the oversight of the convention chairman. As with circuit events (see 7:5), if a circuit overseer for a foreign-language field feels that a sufficient number of qualified speakers are available, he may recommend to the branch office that a foreign-language session be held in conjunction with a regional convention in that area. This request should be sent by mid-January, at least one year in advance of the scheduled event. He should inform the branch how many publishers and interested persons would benefit from this arrangement, how many qualified brothers would be available to give talks, and how many parts each of them could handle. (If there are enough publishers, consideration might also be given to presenting the drama at the foreign-language session.) This arrangement would require a program overseer for the foreign-language session who would work under the direction of the Convention Committee. Therefore, the circuit overseer should recommend a qualified brother for this responsibility. Based on the ratings received from the field, the branch office will assign the speakers for all foreign-language sessions. The program overseer appointed to serve the foreign-language sessions will oversee the functioning of the sessions. If approval is given to hold a foreign-language session concurrent with a regional convention program on the same premises where a member of the Governing Body, a helper to a Governing Body committee, or a Branch Committee member is assigned to share on the program in the primary language, such talks should be simultaneously interpreted for the benefit of the foreign-language session. If qualified interpreters are not available, those talks will be assigned to local brothers and presented in the foreign language of the session.–See 7:8.

16. Location of Conventions: When national, international, or special conventions are arranged, one of the larger cities in the country should be selected. Regional conventions should be held in cities that can accommodate the anticipated attendance. For the sake of the witness that will be given, it is best to hold conventions in as many different large cities as possible and practical.

17. Expenses: The branch will cover the expenses involved in holding conventions in its territory and will accept contributions from those in attendance. Well-organized conventions are a real stimulus to the brothers and an encouragement to interested people. If the convention runs smoothly because of good organization and loving oversight, the brothers will generally support it well. It is appropriate to remind the brothers that it is a privilege to support the convention and the worldwide work monetarily.–Luke 16:9-13; 2 Cor., chaps. 8-9.

18. Attendees are encouraged to bring their own food and beverages. If because of local circumstances a branch finds it necessary to provide some basic food items or a beverage at regional conventions or circuit events, a request should be sent to the Teaching Committee clearly explaining why this is needed and how the expenses will be covered. The Teaching and Publishing committees will consider the request.

19. Releasing Newly Translated Publications: When an approved translation is completed on a publication that was not released simultaneously with the English edition, the Branch Committee will need to determine how best to release the item. If the publication will not be available when regional conventions are held, it may be released by means of a general letter to the congregations or with a brief announcement in Our Kingdom Ministry. There is no provision for releasing a newly translated publication at a circuit assembly or a special meeting held in connection with a branch visit.

20. If a newly translated publication will be available before the regional convention, the Branch Committee may write the Teaching Committee, recommending that the item be released at that time. This should be recommended only for new publications in the primary language(s) of the branch territory. Along with their recommendation, the Branch Committee would need to supply the title and language of the publication, the proposed ratio of distribution at the regional convention, and at what point during the program they recommend making the announcement. For some items, such as songbooks, the release announcement would likely be made early in the program so that the brothers could begin using them right away. Most often, however, it would be more practical to announce such releases during the final talk of the convention.

21. If it is known that a newly translated publication will be ready for distribution shortly after the local regional conventions, a release announcement could be made during the final talk on the program, stating when the item will be available for request through the congregations. The wording for such brief announcements may follow the pattern used on past convention talk outlines or manuscripts.

22. If regional conventions of the same language will be held in various countries, the release announcement for a new edition of the New World Translation should be made first at a regional convention in the country overseeing that language. However, for any other translated publication, its release may be announced at the first convention of the season, regardless of the country, as long as the item is available in the language of the convention. (See 7:19-21.) Good communication and cooperation between the branches involved is encouraged. If you desire to have a member of the Governing Body release the Bible, please write and make this request. You should answer the following questions: (1) What is the estimated timetable for printing and shipping? (2) What are the scheduled dates for the first regional convention in that language? (3) In what city will the event be held, and what will be the venue? (4) What is the estimated attendance figure? (5) Will other locations be tied in with the main venue for the talks of the Governing Body member? (6) Will you be able to tie in other regional conventions? (7) What transportation arrangements would need to be made to get to the convention city? Is travel safe? (8) Where will the Governing Body member be accommodated? (9) Are you aware of any local regulations that would impede the participation of a member of the Governing Body on the program? (10) If so, do you foresee the possibility of requesting an exemption from the local authorities? Please note that if the Bible is ready for release at a time other than your convention season, a special program similar to what was organized for the release of the revised English edition may be organized. Such an event may be scheduled as soon as printed copies of the new Bible are available for distribution. In this way, a branch would have two options: (1) Release a revised edition in conjunction with a regional convention whenever that is practical or (2) hold a special event. When a special event is arranged, a large venue may be rented from which the program will originate. The program may be video streamed to Assembly Halls and Kingdom Halls within the branch territory so that as many publishers as possible can benefit. If the language of the release is also the primary language of a country outside the branch territory where the program is being held, arrangements can be made for Assembly Halls and Kingdom Halls in those areas to be tied in as well. The video stream could be delayed as needed for the benefit of locations in different time zones. In this way, many publishers fluent in the language of the release will hear the news simultaneously instead of over a period of months. The program could start at 9:30 a.m. or 10:00 a.m. and last for about three hours, but it might run a bit longer if the talks by a visiting Governing Body member require interpretation. The program will have the following format:

10 min: Opening song and prayer. The chairman follows with a warm welcome to the audience and a few encouraging comments.

30 min: Watchtower Study summary. (To be included when the event is held on a Sunday or when a program held on Saturday will need to be video streamed also on Sunday and regular congregation meetings will not be held that weekend.)

15 min: As an optional feature, the 15-minute video presentation entitled A Precious Gift From God, about the New World Translation of the Holy Scriptures, could be included as it was when the revised English edition was released. Of course, this would need to be translated in advance.

10 min: Group interview of two or three local publishers who remember the original release of the New World Translation in the local language.

25 min: Release talk by the visiting Governing Body member.

5 min: Song.

10 min: After inviting the audience to be reseated, the chairman announces that the new Bible will be distributed at this time.

15 min: Talk by a Branch Committee member, based on an outline provided by the Teaching Committee.

15 min: Talk by a Branch Committee member, based on an outline provided by the Teaching Committee.

CONFIDENTIAL

40 min:	Talk by the visiting Governing Body member on a topic of his choice.
5 min:	Brief closing comments by the chairman, followed by song and prayer.

23. Convention Committee: The branch office should appoint a Convention Committee made up of the Convention Committee coordinator, the program overseer, and the rooming overseer. These elders should be good organizers and have the time available to care for the assignment. A circuit overseer may be assigned if necessary. It is essential that these brothers be spiritual men who fully manifest the fruitage of the spirit, even under pressure. The Convention Committee should be alert, capable of dealing with officials and other business concerns. In addition to providing oversight to the overall convention operation, the Convention Committee assigns all other department heads.

24. The committee members should be well-respected by the publishers and exhibit good teaching ability. If a brother appointed to a Convention Committee is rated as an average speaker, he should be used on the program in harmony with his speaking ability. If a brother is recommended to serve on a Convention Committee because of outstanding spiritual and organizational qualifications but is not recommended to give a talk on the program because of his limitations as a speaker, the Branch Committee will need to think carefully about whether to appoint him. If he is appointed, perhaps he could be assigned to serve as a session chairman or to offer one of the prayers.

25. Accident Prevention and Security: Give attention to safety when setting up and dismantling at conventions. Do so also when transporting equipment, chairs, or groups of brothers to and from the convention site. Make sure that well-trained and responsible adults are selected in connection with any installation or the use of potentially dangerous equipment, including electrical equipment. Be aware of the danger of theft and vandalism. Ensure that alert brothers are assigned to keep watch over money and valuable equipment, such as sound equipment, at the convention site.

26. Regional Convention Assignments for Branch Committee Members: Branch Committee members should attend one or more regional conventions of their selection at their own expense or through private funding. Please note that as is the case with all Bethel family members, a day and a half of time away from work will be granted to Branch Committee members and their wives in connection with only one yearly regional convention of their choice.

27. In addition, particularly in larger branches, Branch Committee members are encouraged to attend two additional conventions assigned by the branch. For these two special assignments, convention and travel time necessary will be granted to the brothers and their wives. At times, because of location or other circumstances, a number of regional conventions might not be visited by a Branch Committee member or another responsible Bethel representative. Where that is the case, the talks given by a Branch Committee member could be video streamed to such regional conventions as long as the technology is available. This provision would allow the audiences at those locations to have some exposure to a Branch Committee member.

28. Convention funds may not be used to defray the Branch Committee member's travel costs resulting from these two additional conventions. However, if no local private funds are offered, the related travel expenses incurred by the Branch Committee member and his wife, if she accompanies him, may be reimbursed by the organization.

COPY FOR TRIAL

29. If it were practical for a Branch Committee member to use a branch vehicle in order to attend any of the two additional conventions to which he is assigned, the fuel charge would be noted as an organizational expense. Such factors as the distance to be traveled and the length of time a brother would be away from his Bethel assignment would need to be weighed to determine whether it would be practical to use a branch vehicle. In case the Branch Committee member is unable to drive, a Bethel driver may need to be assigned to assist him. If so, the driver would be granted the necessary time away from work.

30. Speakers Attending a Convention in Another Country: At times Bethel speakers, missionaries, and circuit overseers make personal plans to attend a regional convention outside of their branch territory. If a qualified speaker serving in one of these forms of special full-time service will be attending a regional convention in another country, using his personal time away and private travel funds, his speaker's ratings may be forwarded to that branch office. (It is not necessary to survey the brothers to find out if they will be attending conventions in other lands.) The responsible brothers in the country that he will be visiting may assign him a part on the program in harmony with his qualifications. Or he may be interviewed during one of the parts. However, a branch need not feel obligated to include such a visiting speaker on the program.—See 6:81.

31. News Service for Circuit and Regional Events: Each year an updated package containing timely guidelines is made available to all branches via the Materials Distribution System (MDS).

32. Annual Report to Teaching Committee: An annual report should be sent to the Teaching Committee, outlining the total number of conventions held in the branch territory, the peak attendance, and the baptism figure. If a branch oversees the work in other countries, a separate report should be submitted for each country. This information should be listed in two columns —one showing the figures for the current year and the other showing the figures for the preceding year. Please also state in one paragraph which features of the program were particularly effective for your field and why.

CONGREGATION MEETINGS

33. Unless there are extreme extenuating circumstances, congregations worldwide hold one midweek meeting sometime Monday through Friday. This meeting is formatted as follows: After an opening song and prayer, the Congregation Bible Study is conducted for 30 minutes, followed by the Theocratic Ministry School for 30 minutes. Then, after an introductory song, the Service Meeting is held for 30 minutes. The entire meeting is closed with song and prayer. The aforementioned three meetings should not be combined with the Public Meeting and Watchtower Study, which are to be held on the weekend (Saturday or Sunday), unless extreme circumstances exist.

34. For the Public Meeting, after an opening song and prayer, a 30-minute public talk is presented from one of the approved outlines on the list "Public Meeting Talk Titles" (S-99) or as otherwise provided by the organization for special occasions, such as the circuit overseer's visit. Normally, following the Public Meeting and after an introductory song, the scheduled Watchtower Study article is reviewed by the congregation as a question-and-answer session lasting one hour. The discussion includes the reading of all the paragraphs and all the scriptures marked "read," as well as a brief consideration of the review box. The scriptures marked "read" should not be read before the reading of the paragraph unless the lesson is a verse-by-verse discussion with the scripture cited at the very beginning of the paragraph. Paragraph reading should be uninterrupted.

35. The above-mentioned format varies only during the visit of the circuit overseer as outlined in Circuit Overseer Guidelines (tg), chapter 4. When several congregations meet in one Kingdom Hall, those not being visited will adjust meeting times as needed for that week. Any schedule of meeting times that involves rotation is worked out through the elders in a spirit of mutual concern and brotherly love.—Phil. 2:2-4; 1 Pet. 3:8.

36. Audio transmissions of our regular congregation meetings may be made for those truly unable to attend. Official audio recordings are another option. (Helpful comments appear on MDS regarding the technical aspects associated with this provision.) Video transmission of our meetings over the Internet is not approved. Easy Internet video access to our meetings could stifle live attendance and increase the potential for misuse of the information being transmitted. However, if the technical means is available and the body of elders knows that a member of the congregation is truly housebound on a long-term basis, the elders may decide to make available a video recording of the meetings for that person.

37. Meetings for Foreign-Language Groups: When there are only a few publishers working a foreign-language field, a group can be formed under the supervision of a host congregation. (km 11/09 p. 5 par. 10; tg chap. 17) Such foreign-language groups may hold their Congregation Bible Study in a separate room at the Kingdom Hall at the same time as the meeting of the host congregation. In cases of severe space constraints, the group may hold this 30-minute meeting just prior to the host congregation's midweek meeting. If this is not possible, a less preferred option would be to have the group meet just before or after the host congregation's Public Meeting and Watchtower Study. A foreign-language group that has grown in size may be transferred to another host congregation that meets at a Kingdom Hall with a larger auxiliary room. In any event, the foreign-language group should be encouraged to attend the midweek meeting of the congregation officially appointed as its host.

- Audio and video tie-in: Conducting congregation meetings locally is preferable. However, if such is not yet possible and the congregations are willing to obtain the necessary equipment, a pregroup, group, or small congregation may request permission from the circuit overseer to tie in to the meetings of a foreign-language congregation holding meetings in the target language. The circuit overseer will approve which pregroups, groups, or small congregations in his circuit will tie in to the meetings of another congregation and to what extent. The circuit overseer must consider all of the factors surrounding the request in deciding whether to give approval for such an arrangement or not. If a small congregation is approved to tie in to the meetings of another congregation periodically, it is expected that the small congregation will strive to conduct all of its own meetings as soon as possible. Congregations transmitting video should not transmit footage of the audience or any other areas of the Kingdom Hall.—See letter to all bodies of elders, October 2, 2014, regarding "Foreign-language field."

38. If a group is making good progress, has responsible ones available to take the lead, and has reasonable prospects for further growth, consideration may be given to forming a congregation. (tg chap. 13) Meetings should be conducted in the language of the group even if only a few publications are available. For example, the Congregation Bible Study and the Theocratic Ministry School may be conducted using just the first few publications on the translation priority list. Understandably, the schedules and the content of such meetings would differ from those of the major languages.

39. In the event that no responsible brothers in the group are available to conduct the meeting on a particular day, an interpreter could be used so that most would be able to understand the comments of the assigned conductor or public speaker for that occasion. This would harmonize with the precedent found in 1 Corinthians chapter 14. Also, it should be noted that many languages have a suitable vernacular Bible translation or at least a portion of it. The brothers should be encouraged to use these Bibles at their meetings and in the field ministry.

40. When no publications are available in a certain language, meetings could be conducted using our publications in another language as long as most in the group are able to follow along. For example, an indigenous group may also understand a major language in which publications are readily available. However, all talks, prayers, question-and-answer sessions, and meetings should be conducted in the language of the group. As mentioned above, if the assigned conductor does not speak the language of the group, a qualified interpreter may assist him. Also, when a group is started, it may be possible for the brother assigned as reader for the Congregation Bible Study or the Watchtower Study to make a personal translation of the material under discussion, although this is not ideal. Once meetings are held regularly in the language of the group and the formation of a congregation is imminent, the Branch Committee should contact the Writing Committee, outlining the needs of the congregation and providing the names of any baptized Witnesses who could be used as translators.—See 8: 25-27.

DEDICATION PROGRAMS

Branch Dedications

41. Dedication programs are special occasions of great spiritual encouragement for Jehovah's people. These programs are held in connection with newly acquired or newly built facilities that are fully owned by the organization. Months in advance of a branch dedication, an overview of the plans, including details about the program content, rooming for guests, feeding, and so forth, should be sent to the Teaching Committee for final review and approval. If an exception to the following guidelines is necessary, the Branch Committee should contact the Teaching Committee before proceeding.

42. If a four-page printed program is planned, the branch should submit the recommended text and a PDF of the proposed design directly to the Writing Committee. The text in the program sample will be reviewed and approved by the Teaching Committee, while the actual design of the program will be reviewed and approved by the Writing Committee.

43. Day and Time for Program: It seems practical that a branch dedication program be held on a Saturday. A program approximately three hours in length should be arranged. If one or more talks need to be interpreted, the program may take another 30-40 minutes. The following may be adjusted to fit local circumstances.

44. Sample Program Format:

10 min:	Opening song and prayer.
20 min:	History of work in the country. (Includes interview of two or three longtime missionaries if available.)
30-40 min:	Construction project and experiences. (May include interviews with key workers.)

CONFIDENTIAL

20 min:	Reports from other branches. (If available.)
15 min:	Song, announcements, and greetings.
45-60 min:	Dedication talk. (If interpreted, additional time may be needed.)
10 min:	Closing song and prayer.

45. The chairman will give the opening words of welcome. Then for about 20 minutes, a member of the Branch Committee should relate the history of the Kingdom work in that country, followed by how Jehovah opened up the way for a new branch to be constructed. If there are longtime missionaries present, approximately eight minutes can be dedicated to interview them. They may comment on their share in the early development of the work and relate any personal experiences involved. Then 30-40 minutes should be used to discuss the construction project itself. A member of the Branch Committee who served on the construction committee is usually assigned this part. It could be developed as a discussion by three brothers, two of whom would be members of the construction committee. It may include a few interviews with key workers on the project. These interviews could highlight problems that were overcome, relate any outstanding experiences that took place in obtaining equipment and accomplishing the work, or indicate how a witness was given to the community. This discussion could conclude by referring to the fine cooperation of the local brothers and the way Jehovah blessed the activity.

46. If there are a few Branch Committee members present from nearby branches, a representative from each may use from four to six minutes to relate outstanding experiences and reports about the progress of the work in those countries. This segment could be about 20 minutes in length. It would be followed by song, announcements, and the reading of any greetings, all of which should take no longer than 15 minutes.

47. Dedication Talk: If a member of the Governing Body is assigned to attend the dedication, he will give the dedication talk. This discourse is usually about an hour in length, but if interpreted, it may take 90 minutes or more.

48. Invitations and Seating: The program will generally originate from the branch's main auditorium. Overflow seating may be set up in a Kingdom Hall or an Assembly Hall on the property of the branch being dedicated. Extra chairs may also be set up in dining rooms and in other locations on the premises. The number invited will depend on the size of the facilities, the number in the Bethel family, the size of the construction staff, and the number of visitors from other branches. In some branches, those in the field who have served faithfully in the truth for 40 or more years have been included.

49. What is outlined herein for the dedication program on Saturday (and the special meeting on Sunday, as discussed later) should produce a program that will be spiritually upbuilding. A tour of the facility and association with the Bethel family and others can encourage visitors to continue doing Jehovah's will. However, there is no need to arrange for a family night program. Family night should be scheduled at another time, exclusively for the Bethel family and any approved guests. Entertainment programs for visitors require many hours of rehearsal and therefore should not be approved for presentation. By keeping the arrangements simple and on a high spiritual level, such occasions will be delightful and beneficial for all.

50. Printed Invitations: Some branches have printed badge cards for attendees, similar in size to the badge cards used at regional conventions. This helps to ensure that only those invited will be permitted entry. This can also be done for the special program on Sunday if seating is limited.

Only In Print

51. Food Arrangements: If Saturday morning is devoted to tours, there could be a light buffet meal at noon or light packed lunches for the visitors. The dedication program could begin at 1:30 p.m. or 2:00 p.m. A light buffet meal in the evening would be appropriate for the Bethel family, the construction staff, and any overnight guests staying at the branch. However, there should be no elaborate arrangements for feeding everyone who attends the dedication program. If there are questions about this, please write to the Teaching Committee before plans are finalized.

52. Special Meeting on Sunday: If practical, a special program may be held on Sunday at a larger hall or stadium. The program could begin at 9:30 a.m. or 10:00 a.m. The format for this special meeting may be as follows: After an introductory song and prayer, the chairman will extend a warm welcome to the audience and make a few encouraging comments. Then he will introduce a 30-minute summary of the Watchtower Study for that week. Afterward, a 20-minute review of the dedication program that was held on the preceding day may be presented as a discussion between two Branch Committee members. Next, Branch Committee members or representatives from other branches may present four or five reports, as they did the day before. This segment could last up to 30 minutes, depending on whether interpretation is needed. After another song, announcements can be made along with the reading of any greetings. Then the visiting speaker will give a one-hour service talk. (If interpreted, this talk may take 90 minutes or more.) The special meeting would end with a closing song and prayer.

53. Use of Interpreters: It is preferred that the most qualified brothers be assigned to interpret talks given by members of the Governing Body, even if it is necessary to use younger brothers. A brother's depth of experience in theocratic and organizational matters does not necessarily make him the finest choice of interpreter. Those assigned should be able to communicate the emphasis, intensity, and emotion of the speaker into the target language, while not calling undue attention to themselves. Those who are selected for this privilege should be reminded of the principles expressed at Romans 12:3 and 1 Corinthians 12:28-31 so that they maintain a humble disposition while carrying out this special responsibility. —See 7:7-8, 70.

Assembly Hall Dedications

54. When a new Assembly Hall is built or an existing facility has undergone extensive renovation resulting in a significant change of its floor plan and overall appearance, a dedication program would be in order. Generally, there would be only one guest speaker assigned to an Assembly Hall dedication. Organization funds may be used to cover the travel expenses of only one Branch Committee member and his wife. Also, only one Branch Committee member should share in the dedication program. When the dedication speaker is a member of the Governing Body, the program should be held on a Saturday. In this case, one Branch Committee member may be assigned to present a report on the advancement of the Kingdom work in the country, while focusing on the progress of the work in the area of the Assembly Hall. (See 7:56.) As described below, an additional special program should be arranged for Sunday of the same weekend. During that program, the same Branch Committee member may be assigned to present a 30-minute summary of the Watchtower Study for that week or an additional report on the work in the local branch territory. Other Branch Committee members may attend both programs if they wish, but they would not be assigned a part and their travel expenses should be covered by private funds. Please note that a visiting Governing Body member would not normally be assigned to visit the branch and conduct morning worship in conjunction with the dedication of an Assembly Hall unless the facility is very close to Bethel. Any exceptions would need to be approved by the Teaching Committee.

55. The dedication program may be video streamed, if possible, to the Kingdom Halls of the congregations that will make use of the Assembly Hall. If video streaming is not possible, only those who can be accommodated in the Assembly Hall would be invited to the dedication program on Saturday. (In order to make it possible for more brothers to attend, the visiting Governing Body member may agree to give his dedication talk again during a second program that would be presented later on Saturday, but this decision is left to the visiting Governing Body member.) The Branch Committee determines who will be invited.—See 7:62.

56. The dedication program need not be longer than two and a half hours. A brief history of the progress of the Kingdom work in the area may be presented, possibly including an interview of one or two longtime Witnesses. Experiences and comments by those being interviewed should be to the point. Participants should emphasize, not so much how the building was constructed, but how Jehovah blessed the work and the effect the project has had on the community and on the brothers. —Acts 14:27.

57. Slide or video presentations should be no more than 15 minutes in length. Just a few of the main construction phases should be featured. The presentation should be dignified and the content in good taste, forasmuch as the program is an occasion to praise Jehovah for his blessing on the project.

58. The dedication talk may be up to one hour in length. If interpreted into another language, it will be somewhat longer.

59. The Assembly Hall is to be dedicated only once, by means of a prayer. When it is practical to schedule a second program later in the day or on the next day, the speaker will explain that the building was dedicated at the preceding program.

60. A tour of the Assembly Hall or an open house may be arranged before the dedication program. If the program is scheduled in the afternoon, the open house could be organized in the morning. Or, if more convenient, it may be arranged on the day before or even one or two weeks prior to the dedication. If practical, arrangements can be made to serve light snacks or refreshments but no alcoholic beverages. Many brothers have found this to be a fine time to invite businessmen and officials who may have become familiar with our work and who may have expressed a desire to see the completed building. It is appropriate for an elder to be assigned to escort these individuals and to make their visit informative and pleasant. Other guests may also be given a brief tour by one of the attendants. Such tours are generally scheduled for the morning or early afternoon prior to the dedication program.—See 7:64-65.

61. Program participants should be exemplary, active Jehovah's Witnesses. There is no provision for government officials or others to address the audience on any occasion, just as is the case at any theocratic meeting. If an official wishes to make a brief speech or offer expressions of appreciation at a dedication program, he may be received hospitably and given audience by a few responsible brothers in a separate room before or after the program.

62. Seating: The hall should be filled for the dedication program, but it may be necessary to limit the number invited in order to avoid overcrowding. In some cases, those invited are limited to those in special full-time service, elders, ministerial servants, regular pioneers, and their families, along with those who have been baptized for a certain number of years. Invitations are often extended to those who contributed much in the way of time, effort, or materials toward the construction.—See 7:55.

63. Sunday Program Format: If the visiting dedication speaker is a Governing Body member, an additional special program lasting about two hours (or two and a half hours if interpretation is required) should be arranged for Sunday. Depending on local circumstances and the practicality of the arrangement, the special Sunday program could be video streamed from the Assembly Hall being dedicated to the Kingdom Halls of the congregations that will make use of the new facility. If local circumstances do not allow video streaming of the special program to most of the publishers in the congregations making use of the Assembly Hall and the country is one seldom visited by a member of the Governing Body, a larger facility could be rented for a special Sunday program if that is practical. The program will have the following format:

5 min:	Opening song and prayer, followed by a few encouraging comments by the chairman.
30 min:	Watchtower Study summary. (To be presented by a Branch Committee member if a report about the work in the branch territory will not be included on the program.)
20 min:	(Optional) If the Branch Committee has a report about the work in the branch territory, it can be presented by the Branch Committee member sharing the program. (Another experienced local brother could be assigned to handle the Watchtower Study summary.)
10 min:	Song and any needed announcements.
60 min:	Talk by the visiting Governing Body member. (When interpreted, this service talk could take 90 minutes or more.)
5 min:	Closing song and prayer.

Dedications of Remote Translation Offices (RTOs)

64. A dedication program may be organized in connection with a new remote translation office (RTO) as long as the premises are owned by the organization. Hence, no dedication program will be arranged when a rental facility is being used. A visiting Governing Body member, a Branch Committee member, or another qualified brother could be assigned to give the dedication talk in conjunction with a scheduled trip to the region, such as a visit to the missionaries or the translation team. The program may be held at the Kingdom Hall closest to the RTO and should follow a format similar to that used for Kingdom Hall dedications. If necessary, the dedication program could be held at a rented facility near the RTO. Appropriate arrangements should be made for all in attendance to tour the RTO, preferably prior to the dedication program. —See 7:60.

Kingdom Hall Dedications

65. The most up-to-date guidelines on this subject, as provided to all bodies of elders and circuit overseers, should be followed when arranging for these events. (See 7:60.) Travel expenses for a Bethel speaker must be covered by the congregation or by private funds. If it is not possible to invite a speaker from Bethel, a circuit overseer or a local elder should be assigned to deliver the Kingdom Hall dedication talk.

66. Normally, other facilities will not be tied in for these programs. But if there are extenuating circumstances warranting an exception, the Branch Committee may decide to give approval. For example, when several congregations share in a project, it may not be possible to include all the publishers who worked on the building. Hence, it might be necessary to tie in a neighboring Kingdom Hall so that all can benefit from the dedication program. The Teaching Committee should be contacted for approval if the Branch Committee feels that something more than what is outlined above will be necessary.

CONFIDENTIAL

BRANCH VISITS

67. Special Program: Arrangements should be made to hold a special program at a suitable location for the brothers living in the branch territory. Since this is a special event, branches may arrange for an audio or audio/video tie-in to Assembly Halls even in other countries under their oversight so that as many publishers as possible may hear the program. Please note that dedication programs for newly acquired or newly built facilities should not be scheduled during a branch visit. Normally, all such events are arranged at a different time. If a Branch Committee feels that extenuating local circumstances would warrant an exception in this regard, an inquiry including all pertinent details may be submitted to the Teaching Committee.

68. If the cost is not excessive, the branch may rent one large facility, such as a stadium or a sports hall, relatively close to the branch office to accommodate a larger crowd. With a rented facility, if possible and the costs are not excessive, Kingdom Halls or Assembly Halls in other parts of the branch territory may be connected by an audio or audio/video tie-in. The rental of additional facilities for tie-in purposes is viewed as an exception based on extenuating circumstances. The Teaching Committee will decide on a case-by-case basis.

69. If the branch territory spans many time zones, the program may be delay-streamed or recorded for broadcasting later on the same day or on the very next day at Assembly Halls and Kingdom Halls located in other time zones. This would especially be true if a Governing Body member is making a branch shepherding visit. Any questions or unusual circumstances related to the special program should be sent to the Teaching Committee.

70. The program should include a 30-minute summary of the Watchtower Study for that week. A 20-minute report on the progress of the Kingdom work in the country can be included as well. The total time for the program would be approximately three hours, especially if the headquarters representative's talk needs to be interpreted. (See 7:7, 53.) In such instances, the headquarters representative may give a copy of his talk outline or notes in advance to the assigned interpreter. This copy is to be used only for preparation purposes. It should not be used by the interpreter during the actual presentation of the talk. The notes should be returned to the speaker or destroyed after the program. Before delivery of the talk, the headquarters representative should meet with the interpreter to cover pertinent information. While the headquarters representative may speak from an outline, it is best if the interpreter does not follow a translated copy of that outline. Rather, the interpreter should listen carefully to the speaker's delivery and convey an accurate interpretation to the audience. (be p. 55.) Branches that may have more than one language group represented at these occasions should make arrangements to hold the program in the language of the majority. At times, if practical, it may also be possible to arrange for simultaneous interpretation into any other language(s) represented, as long as this would not serve as a distraction to the rest of the audience. Generally, with the exception of the headquarters representative (who may not know the language of the land), all speakers should present their talks uninterrupted in one language for the benefit of the majority present. Since the program would include the Watchtower Study summary and it is a spiritually rich program, the scheduled public talk and Watchtower Study for the invited congregations will be suspended for that week. Therefore, depending on the itinerary of the headquarters representative, it might be advantageous to schedule this program on a Sunday if possible. Even if the special program is scheduled during the week, the publishers can be encouraged to concentrate on sharing in the field ministry on the weekend, since there will be no meeting.—See 6:194.

BETHEL SPEAKERS

71. Evaluation and Selection of Bethel Speakers: Pertinent guidelines for bodies of elders and circuit overseers about "Recommending Local Elders as Regional Convention Speakers" and "Regional Convention Speaker Ratings" are posted on MDS. Yearly evaluations received from the circuits for all brothers recommended as regional convention speakers can be used as a basis for selecting new Bethel speakers. All elders serving at Bethel should be rated even if they have had only limited exposure on circuit assembly programs. Those serving in foreign-language congregations should be rated both for the language of their congregation and for the primary language of the country. Usually, those appointed as Bethel speakers would be ones who were rated higher than average in their circuits and have served at Bethel for some years, as noted in 7:72. Brothers called to Bethel from the circuit work, however, may be appointed as Bethel speakers upon completing Bethel Entrants' School.

72. An elder serving as a regular Bethel family member (BBR) who has been on a regional convention program for two years will be eligible for consideration as a Bethel speaker, as long as he meets the following additional criteria: (1) His speaker rating is B or higher; (2) he has served at Bethel for a minimum of three years, including consecutive periods of temporary service; (3) he has a reputation worthy of representing Bethel; and (4) he is able to hold an audience's attention for one hour. Furthermore, when a brother is first notified of his appointment as a Bethel speaker, it is recommended that about six months be allowed to pass before his first assignment so that he may have time to prepare a suitable one-hour service talk. In view of this, when deciding whether a brother should be appointed as a Bethel speaker, those recommending Bethel speakers should give serious consideration to whether he could give an effective one-hour service talk. Since a brother's qualifications for presenting a one-hour talk would need to be much higher than for presenting a nine-minute convention talk, an individual might be qualified to serve as a regional convention speaker but not as a Bethel speaker. As an example, those recommending Bethel speakers would do well to ask themselves if they view the brother in question as qualified to address their own congregations for one hour. Hence, as a general rule, a brother would qualify to be used on a regional convention program before he could serve as a Bethel speaker. Temporary volunteers serving at Bethel during the convention season may be asked to indicate the convention they will attend. Talks may be assigned to them according to the need and their qualifications. —See 6:80-81.

73. Circuit assembly branch representatives are selected from among the better qualified and highest rated Bethel speakers. In large branches, those considered for this privilege have served at Bethel for many years. At smaller branches, the Branch or Country committee may need to consider using brothers who have served for fewer years, bearing in mind that Bethel representatives should nonetheless be exemplary in their conduct and public speaking.—See 6:82; 7:2; 1 Tim. 4:12.

74. Weekend Speaking Assignments: Congregations near the branch office may request that approved Bethel speakers be assigned to give a service talk and public talk. A Speaking Assignment Desk may be set up in the Service Department for scheduling these assignments. When an assignment is made, the "Notice to Congregation of Bethel Speaker Assignments" (S-35) is sent to the congregation and the "Notice to Bethel Speaker of Assignments" (S-37) is sent to the speaker.

COPYRIGHTED

75. Generally, Bethel speakers would not receive more than three weekend speaking assignments per year. Likewise, individual congregations will be officially assigned only three Bethel speakers each year. Bethel speakers may not be requested by name for these assignments. They may be sent to congregations within 200 miles (320 km) of Bethel, if that distance is practical. Whatever the radius from Bethel, the speaker should be able to travel safely to and from the assignment with minimal impact on his Bethel work. The brother (and his wife) should be able to arrive back at Bethel and get a good night's sleep on Sunday evening. If the Public Meeting is held late on Sunday and the location is a considerable distance from Bethel, the speaker may return early Monday morning without taking personal time away as long as he is back at his work assignment after lunch.

76. Brothers who are regular Bethel family members serving at remote translation offices may be appointed as Bethel speakers and assigned to visit congregations within 200 miles of their location. However, the branch office may opt to make the travel radius less than 200 miles if local circumstances would make it difficult for the brothers to travel that far in a weekend and still return in good time to carry out their weekly Bethel routine.

77. The speaker's travel expenses should be covered by the local congregation. If that is not possible, the branch may reimburse the speaker's travel expenses, having in mind the cost of public transportation, the distances involved, and the current price of fuel if a personal vehicle is used. If the speaker's wife travels with him and they use public transportation, he would not submit her fare for reimbursement. If the congregation does not supply meals, the speaker may be reimbursed for that expense. However, when a congregation chooses to invite a particular Bethel speaker for a special weekend of activity apart from those arranged by the Speaking Desk, all travel expenses for the speaker (and his wife) should be covered either with private contributions or with congregation funds as approved by a resolution. Also, the Bethel speaker (and his wife) would need to deduct personal time away from work if their trip to or from any such private commitments must be done during Bethel workdays.

78. Bethel speakers are expected to share with the congregation in field service on the weekend of their public talks, according to local arrangements.

79. Slide shows, PowerPoint, or video presentations are not approved for use on Bethel speaking assignments. Saturday service talks should be Scriptural and encouraging discussions, generally only one hour in length. Such talks may be shortened to 30 minutes if they must be presented after the regular one-hour Watchtower Study.

80. Only approved Bethel speakers are to present service talks to the congregations. As an exception, visiting missionaries who are qualified may present a special service talk but only at the Kingdom Hall and at a time other than that scheduled for regular congregation meetings. For these special presentations, a missionary could use a few visual aids, including pictures from the area where he serves. However, such pictures should not overshadow the Scriptural message of his talk. Visiting missionaries might also give a brief report during a local needs part on the Service Meeting or after an unabbreviated Watchtower Study, if requested.

MORNING WORSHIP AT BETHEL

81. General Guidelines: Diligence is essential in preparing information that is of benefit to the Bethel family. Those entrusted with this serious assignment ought to handle it in accord with the principle found at Romans 12:8. The assigned chairman should arrive at the table approximately ten minutes before the start of the program so that he can settle in and get any needed observations from the sound technicians or other responsible brothers at Bethel.

82. In most branches, morning worship begins at 7:00 a.m., with the chairman taking no more than a few seconds to welcome the family. He then calls on the brother assigned to offer a brief opening prayer of one minute or less. This prayer should include giving thanks for the breakfast meal to follow. Thereafter, the daily text is read, and the chairman calls on each of those assigned to offer a one-minute comment. Although it is appropriate to acknowledge each comment, care should be exercised not to exalt any one participant over the others. After the last one on the panel has commented, the chairman takes eight or nine minutes to develop a few Scriptural thoughts for the encouragement of the family. Quoted scriptures should be read directly from a hard copy of the Bible or from an electronic device rather than from printed notes except when paraphrasing certain verses.

83. The chairman should strive to conclude his comments by 7:15 a.m. at the latest. Then, he calls on the brother assigned to read the printed comments from Examining the Scriptures Daily. Next, he invites the family to enjoy their breakfast.

84. At approximately 7:30 a.m., the chairman makes announcements. Selected greetings may be read once a week at the discretion of the Branch or Country committee. Greetings and table announcements should be approved by the Bethel Office or by a member of the Branch Committee. Next, an assigned brother will read a scheduled segment from either the Bible or the Yearbook. On Wednesdays, Bible highlights are presented. Bible highlights will be five minutes in duration, while department or branch visit reports may be up to ten minutes in length and presented after the Bible highlights. The chairman should make announcements regarding memorial services or judicial action just before his concluding prayer. He should kindly allow a few seconds for the family to stand up before saying the concluding prayer. This format for morning worship at Bethel should be followed at other sites outside of Bethel, such as remote translation offices (RTOs). While this same general format can be followed at the various field schools, the brothers should be guided by the instructions provided in the School for Kingdom Evangelizers Office Guidelines (skeog).

85. Transmissions to Other Sites: Inasmuch as Morning Worship programs are designed exclusively for the spiritual benefit of regular members of the Bethel family and temporary volunteers at the branch, such programs should not be transmitted to outside locations other than as explained below. Although local Morning Worship programs may be held at remote translation offices (RTOs) as long as sufficient qualified personnel are on hand, transmissions to and from the branch may be arranged if such would not require a great expenditure. Where implemented, such a local arrangement should give all RTO personnel an opportunity to share in the program in a way similar to what is done at the branch. (Approved overnight guests staying at the branch may attend morning worship along with the Bethel family.) Those in special full-time service working on remote construction projects, primarily construction servants (BCS), expatriate construction servants (BCF), and construction volunteers (BCV), may be tied in to the Bethel Morning Worship program up to four days each week. Each location should arrange for at least one local Morning Worship program each week. The Branch Committee may determine how many times a week those on a specific project will benefit from the Bethel program. If there are also local volunteers working on the same project, they are permitted to enjoy the program along with those who are in special full-time service. If because of time-zone differences the program will be delay-streamed or a recording of the program is made, prayers should be said locally. Assembly Hall servants (BAS) are also permitted to view morning worship under the same arrangements as outlined above for construction workers in special full-time service. However, BAS are not to invite local volunteers to join them for the program.

86. Visiting Morning Worship Chairman: A brother visiting from another branch is not to be invited to serve as chairman for morning worship —even if he is used in that capacity at his home branch—unless he is a member of the Governing Body or an appointed helper to one of the Governing Body committees and serves as Morning Worship chairman at world headquarters. A headquarters representative will preside over the program on the days that he is assigned to visit the branch.

87. Additionally, a brother visiting a remote translation office under the oversight of his home branch may be asked to conduct morning worship only if (1) the branch has assigned him to make the visit, (2) he already serves as Morning Worship chairman at the branch, and (3) there are very few local brothers approved to conduct.

88. Recommendations of Morning Worship Chairmen: These should be submitted on the most current Recommendations to Teaching Committee form. This is true for ones who will serve in this capacity at the branch or at an RTO. The details requested on this form should guide the Branch Committee and the Teaching Committee in evaluating who is qualified for this special privilege. Elders may be considered who have served in an exemplary way at Bethel for a number of years, who enjoy the respect of the Bethel family, who are viewed as solid spiritual men, and who are good teachers. Brothers serving as construction servants may be recommended as well if they are qualified. In addition, time spent in some form of special full-time service before coming to Bethel may be taken into account. Those recommended should be capable of giving good Scriptural encouragement to the Bethel family.

89. Selection of Other Morning Worship Participants: Brothers and sisters who are regular members of the family (BBR), as well as those serving as temporary Bethel family members (BBT), may be assigned to give a one-minute text comment upon completion of Bethel Entrants' School or their first year of Bethel service, whichever comes first. Construction servants (BCS), expatriate construction servants (BCF), and construction volunteers (BCV) should be assigned to give comments at morning worship during their stay at the branch regardless of the length of time they have been assigned to serve at Bethel. Full-time commuters (BBL) may also be assigned as commenters during morning worship. Part-time commuters (BBV), on the other hand, may attend on the days they work at Bethel but would not usually be approved as commenters.

90. If the Branch or Country committee feels that an exception is warranted in the case of a potential Morning Worship commenter, the matter should be brought to the attention of the Teaching Committee for review. In smaller branches where commenters are not specifically assigned in advance, the Branch Committee can determine whether part-time commuters may participate.—See 7:98.

91. After a sister has given her first text comment, she has the option of sending a note to the Bethel Office requesting to be exempted from a future Morning Worship assignment.

92. Bethel Family Prayers: At larger branches, noon prayers are generally assigned to elders who have served at Bethel for at least one year. After serving at Bethel and as an elder for five years, a brother may be assigned to represent the family in prayer at morning worship.

93. Readings and Bible Highlights: Generally, Bethel speakers are used to read assigned portions of the Bible at morning worship, present Bible highlights, and read at the Bethel Family Watchtower Study.

94. At times, a Branch Committee may decide that circumstances warrant using other qualified elders not yet appointed as Bethel speakers for these assignments.

95. Text and Yearbook Readings: Ministerial servants who have served at Bethel for one year and who have passed the reading evaluation test may be assigned to read the daily text and printed comment and the Yearbook at morning worship.

BETHEL FAMILY WATCHTOWER STUDY

96. The weekly Watchtower Study is a customary feature of Bethel family life at all branches. Conductors are usually circuit assembly branch representatives. In smaller branches, Bethel speakers may also be assigned.

97. General Guidelines: It is especially important for those assigned as Bethel family Watchtower Study conductors to adhere closely to published direction, and these brothers should be encouraged to review such direction periodically. (ks10 2:24-25; w03 9/1 pp. 21-22) Elders who conduct the Watchtower Study in their congregations view the Bethel family Watchtower Study as a model to follow. The conductor should prepare thoroughly. He should not introduce additional material from his own personal research, as it could overshadow what has been published in the study article. Extensive research has already been done in producing the study material, and the points to be emphasized are those included in the paragraphs under consideration. He should not comment excessively. In some branches, the Watchtower Study starts at 6:15 p.m. with the conductor's welcoming expressions and introduction to the opening song and prayer. The call for the concluding song and prayer is at 7:15 p.m. Therefore, the Bethel Watchtower Study is conducted within 55 minutes (including appropriate brief comments on the artwork and good use of the teaching boxes). This requires that the conductor apportion the time carefully so as to allow for balanced coverage of the material. The conductor should prepare well, maintain eye contact with the brothers as they offer their comments, and warmly commend the participants. Conductors are to be reminded of these points as needed. Readers for the Bethel family Watchtower Study should be chosen from among appointed Bethel speakers.

98. In larger families, about 20 brothers may be assigned to participate as commenters. Regular Bethel family members (BBR), temporary Bethel family members (BBT), construction servants (BCS), and full-time commuters (BBL) may be used for these assignments. Part-time commuters (BBV) may attend but would not usually be approved as commenters. (See the exception in 7:89-90.) As an additional exception, believing marriage mates of BBLs and BBVs may attend the Bethel family Watchtower Study and other spiritual programs typically held on Monday evenings, whether at Bethel or at a remote translation office. Also, well-behaved children still residing at home may join their parent(s) for such programs if there is adequate space for all such ones to attend. (This provision does not include morning worship.) Each week, those in special full-time service working on remote construction projects

(primarily BCS, BCF, and BCV) may be tied in to the Bethel family Watchtower Study (and any additional spiritual program on that evening). Local volunteers working on the project who are not in special full-time service would not be invited to this program. If because of time-zone differences the program will be delay-streamed or a recording of the program is made, prayers should be said locally. Assembly Hall servants (BAS) are also permitted to tie in to the Bethel family Watchtower Study under the same arrangements as outlined above for construction workers in special full-time service.

SCHOOLS FOR THEOCRATIC TRAINING

99. Watchtower Bible School of Gilead: This 20-week course provides intensive training in Bible study and theocratic organization. Invitations to attend this school are issued by the Service Committee. The Teaching Committee is responsible for the curriculum.

100. School for Branch Committee Members and Their Wives: The Service Committee invites qualifying members of Branch and Country committees and their wives to this eight-week course in accord with current guidelines. The Teaching Committee is responsible for the curriculum.

101. School for Circuit Overseers and Their Wives (SCOTW): Unless the Service Committee has granted an exception, this school is not to be held on branch property. If permission was given in the past to hold this school at the branch and it has not been verified that this is still acceptable, the Service Committee should be informed of the current circumstances and, if desired, the branch may request that this arrangement continue. The Service Committee oversees the scheduling of SCOTW worldwide. However, any questions regarding the curriculum for this four-week course should be directed to the Teaching Committee. In the event that an exception has been granted and the school is held at the branch, arrangements should not be made for class introductions to the Bethel family. Instead, a general Morning Worship table announcement welcoming the new class as a whole can be made to the Bethel family at the beginning of the schooling period. If desired, a parting announcement could also be read to the Bethel family on the last day of class. None of the students should be assigned to give a report to the Bethel family. Additionally, only the brothers attending the SCOTW on branch property should be assigned to give a one-minute comment at morning worship. The Teaching Committee is responsible for the curriculum.

102. School for Kingdom Evangelizers (SKE): All reasonable efforts should be made to hold the SKE in the field. Exceptions have at times been made, but only when special circumstances have warranted them. In such cases, however, none of the students attending this school on branch premises would be invited to present reports to the Bethel family or to offer Morning Worship comments. Any questions regarding these matters should be addressed to the Teaching Committee. Qualified single brothers and sisters as well as couples between the ages of 23 and 65 who have been married for at least two years and have been in full-time service for at least the last two consecutive years may apply to attend this eight-week course. (Ps. 68:11) Any applicants between the ages of 50 and 65 must be able to provide for themselves and be in no need of financial or medical assistance from the organization. If enrolled in this school, they will continue to serve as regular pioneers wherever they are assigned by the organization but will not be invited to become members of the Worldwide Order of Special Full-Time Servants.

103. Application forms and related material may be requested from the congregation secretary. Procedures for holding this course as well as for arranging graduations have been outlined in the School for Kingdom Evangelizers Instructor Guidelines (skeig) and the School for Kingdom Evangelizers Office Guidelines (skeog). While the Service Committee oversees the scheduling of these classes worldwide, any questions regarding the curriculum should be directed to the Teaching Committee.

104. Graduations: When Kingdom Halls are not available for holding SKE graduations, a multipurpose room at an Assembly Hall may be used as long as its use does not interfere with any other scheduled event. If it is believed that circumstances warrant the use of the main auditorium of an Assembly Hall and such use would not interfere with a scheduled circuit assembly, the Branch Committee can make the decision without inquiring of the Teaching Committee. Attendance at these graduations should not exceed 350.

105. A Bethel representative may be assigned to serve an SKE graduation only when it is possible to care for his travel expenses in one of the following ways: (1) the graduation occurs on the same weekend as a circuit assembly served by the branch representative and the circuit covers the travel expenses; (2) brothers defray the travel expenses from private funds; (3) the Bethel representative uses his own funds to cover the travel expenses; (4) organization funds are used to cover expenses in conjunction with an official work assignment for the branch, such as visiting a remote translation office or missionaries near the graduation site. Where it is not possible to have a Bethel representative present, one of the regular class instructors will serve as chairman for the program, give the graduation talk, and hand out the graduation certificates.

106. In the event that a Bethel representative is present for the graduation, he might be able to conduct morning worship on Saturday from 7:45 a.m. to 8:00 a.m.; yet, it is up to him to decide if he can accept this responsibility, taking into account his other assignments that weekend—especially if he is also the visiting speaker at a circuit assembly (CA-br).

107. After breakfast and perhaps commencing at 8:30 a.m., the Bethel representative might also be able to present an encouraging talk to the class on a theme of his choice. Or he may prefer to give this talk toward the end of the morning, perhaps commencing at about 11:40 a.m. If serving a circuit assembly (CA-br) on Saturday, he would need to give this discourse either before or after his first talk to the circuit. This Scripturally upbuilding talk may be up to 45 minutes in length.

108. On Sunday, the Bethel representative would ordinarily serve as chairman for the graduation program, although there may be times when it would be better to have the A instructor serve as chairman. In either case, the Bethel representative would present a 20-minute graduation discourse.

109. School Instructors: The Teaching Committee appoints the instructors for the SKE, based on recommendations from Branch Committees. In order to help local brothers qualify as instructors, the Branch Committee appoints them as observers of the class instruction. To appoint a new instructor, the Branch Committee must send its recommendation to the Teaching Committee. All field instructors turning 70 years of age should be transferred to special pioneer service as soon as reasonably possible without adversely impacting any previously scheduled classes. Additional instructors for the SCOTW would be selected from among the most qualified instructors of the SKE. Some who are over 70 years of age might still be qualified as instructors for the one-week School for Congregation Elders (SCE). Hence, if an SCE class is held near a brother's special pioneer assignment, he may be assigned to teach it on occasion.—See 7:123.

110. Bethel Entrants' School (BES): The Teaching Committee has prepared a series of lectures and classroom discussions designed to give new Bethelites a spiritual outlook on their new form of service while quickly acquainting them with the Bethel arrangement. Regular Bethel family members (BBR), temporary Bethel family members (BBT), expatriate Bethel family members (BBF), visiting members (BBB), full-time commuters (BBL), or construction servants (BCS) who are approved to serve at Bethel for one year or longer and who have not attended BES in the past ten years may be enrolled, whether serving at a Bethel complex or a remote translation office. Moreover, in cases where a wife would qualify to attend this school at Bethel in accord with the aforementioned guidelines, her husband would also be automatically enrolled. This instruction is to be presented on 16 Mondays, following the Bethel family Watchtower Study. Bethelites should commence this school very soon after their arrival. If there are not enough new members to form a full class, instructors may cover the curriculum informally with those on hand.

111. The curriculum may be adjusted to fit a less formal setting if the intent of the material is not compromised. Some branches find it practical to ask the students to give only one five-minute presentation instead of two while covering sessions 2, 4, 6, 8, and 10 and excluding the presentation for session 12. The rest of the reports may be discussed during the appropriate session. The few participants and the instructor could be seated around a table after the Watchtower Study. These classes are not to be held during working hours.

112. Before completing their first year at Bethel, new members are expected to read the entire Bible, from Genesis to Revelation. The branch office should maintain a record of when each new member completes his Bible reading. Bethel family members often express appreciation for this arrangement.

113. If a Bethelite is getting married to someone not serving at Bethel and the couple are approved for regular Bethel service, both would be enrolled in this course. They should be informed of this when they are interviewed for possible Bethel service. If a marriage takes place between two regular Bethel family members, they would not be enrolled in the course or be required to complete the one-year Bible-reading program for new arrivals. This also applies to regular Bethelites transferring from one branch to another.

114. Additional Provisions: New family members are also given a series of lectures related to Bethel life, work habits, health, study, dress and grooming, and other topics. Branch Committees may adjust these lectures as needed.

115. Pioneer Service School (PSS): This school provides training for regular pioneers and special full-time servants. These include regular Bethel family members (BBR), expatriate Bethelites (BBF), temporary Bethel family members (BBT), full-time commuters (BBL), construction servants (BCS), expatriate construction servants (BCF), and Assembly Hall servants (BAS). Special pioneers, field missionaries, and wives of circuit overseers who have served as such for at least a year may attend the school again. Field classes should be held at central locations, usually Kingdom Halls. Regular pioneers are invited to attend PSS toward the end of their first year of pioneering. Multiple invitations may be extended to one who is in the aforementioned forms of service as long as he or she has not attended in at least the last five years and classes are not full. There should generally be 20 to 25 students in a class. However, in branches with a sizable number of pioneers, consideration may be given to increasing the class size to as many as 50 students.

116. The curriculum for this school is based on the textbook "Fully Accomplish Your Ministry"–2 Timothy 4:5. (pt14) Capable instructors, usually circuit overseers, will conduct the course. This course is designed to be covered in six days. However, if local circumstances require an adjustment, the Branch Committee should consult with the Teaching Committee about the matter.

117. Since some special pioneers and others attending PSS may have to travel some distance, the school instructors may need to organize rooming accommodations. It may be that local publishers will be happy to provide temporary accommodations. Where possible, students will not be asked to come from too great a distance.

118. The branch will care for the travel and food expenses of special pioneers and field missionaries attending the schools. Congregations may also wish to contribute in some measure. The local circuit will cover the circuit overseer's expenses. (See S-330 2:5.) The organization does not wish anyone to be unduly burdened in financing a PSS. Instructors should inform the branch office of the needs at each school location.

119. The Service Committee oversees the preparation of the annual pioneer session that is held in conjunction with the circuit assembly (CA-co).

120. School for Congregation Elders (SCE): This one-week school is for the benefit of appointed elders. Its curriculum is posted on MDS. Circuit overseers and Branch Committee members are generally not invited to this school, since they attend either the School for Circuit Overseers and Their Wives or the School for Branch Committee Members and Their Wives. All other elders serving at Bethel and in the field should be invited. Bethelites will be granted time away from work so that they may attend. Also, a time credit may be given to elders serving as special pioneers equivalent to one quarter of their monthly hour requirement. Regular pioneers may receive a 20-hour credit.

121. It is preferred that a student attend the school to which he is assigned. Exceptions may be made if the Branch Committee feels that such are warranted. For example, if a brother requests permission to attend an SCE being conducted in a different language within the branch territory and the Branch Committee agrees that his request is reasonable, the brother may be authorized to do so. If a student wishes to attend a school in another land and there is a good reason for this exception, the two branch offices may work out the necessary details. The brother should be informed that he will be assigned to one SCE only and that he will be responsible to cover all travel expenses involved.

122. On occasion, someone in special full-time service may request permission to attend an SCE in a nearby country where a class is scheduled in his dominant/preferred language. Such may be approved. The branch office may cover the brother's travel expenses and all entry visa costs. In determining where the brother will attend the SCE, the branch office should select the country with the most economical round-trip travel fares. If expenses would be unusually high, the branch office should send its recommendation to the Teaching Committee for consideration. If the brother is married and he chooses to bring his wife along, the couple would be responsible for the wife's travel expenses inasmuch as the husband's attendance at the SCE is not a branch work assignment. The sister would also need to take personal time away for the extent of the trip.–See 4: 113; 7:125.

123. The Branch Committee selects the instructors for this school from among experienced circuit overseers in the local territory, preferably those who serve as SKE instructors, if they are available.—See 7:109.

124. Kingdom Ministry School (KMS): The curriculum for this program is prepared for appointed elders and, at times, ministerial servants. It is presented in the form of lectures, demonstrations, interviews, and class discussions. Circuit overseers and, at times, Bethel representatives are assigned to conduct this school.

125. Because the Service Committee schedules these schools, it will answer any questions about the inviting of students. Wherever practical, all elders in a given area will convene for the school over a two-day period; when invited, ministerial servants will meet for one day. The school may be conducted on a weekend or for three hours per evening for five nights. In some cases, midweek daytime classes may be preferable, with the course running for two days. The entire body of elders of a congregation should attend at the same time. Requests for permission (as an exception) to attend elsewhere may be handled in harmony with the guidelines given in 7:121-122. The branch office may schedule school sessions in harmony with what is best locally, keeping in mind that all elders in the branch territory should attend the course in a comparatively short time, spanning perhaps three to five weeks. The branch should make arrangements for adequate facilities. Assembly Halls may be used where practical.

126. The most recent KMS textbook is entitled "Shepherd the Flock of God" —1 Peter 5:2. (ks10) Refresher courses may be offered periodically, using other suitable material provided by the Teaching Committee. In countries under ban or serious restrictions, Branch Committees may supply congregations with at least one copy of the current textbook to be kept in a safe place for the local elders to use and study on their own. When the circuit overseer visits, he can help the elders by teaching them from the material they already have on hand.

127. Theocratic Ministry School: Instructions on how the school is to be conducted appear on page one of the Theocratic Ministry School Schedule each year. That schedule indicates which publications are to be used during the year. Branches do not have to request permission from the Teaching Committee to use alternative source material for the school if they select publications available in the local language. This direction applies to the preparation of both the Theocratic Ministry School Schedule (ss) and the Theocratic Ministry School Answer Sheet (sa). If the cited reference material for the Theocratic Ministry School Review is not available in a language used in the local territory, the branch office may formulate new questions and answers based on references that are available in that language, without receiving specific approval from the Teaching Committee.

128. Literacy Classes: The Branch Committee should inform congregations of the provision for learning how to read and write, and they should make definite arrangements for assisting those needing help. In multilingual societies, the best results usually come from teaching people to read and write the primary language spoken at home and in the community where they live. Classes may be held using the brochure Apply Yourself to Reading and Writing.

129. Different options are available for organizing literacy classes. Each body of elders should carefully survey the needs of any associated with their congregation and then make arrangements as needed. Material from the weekly Bible reading or from a publication such as My Book of Bible Stories may be used for these classes.

COPYRIGHTED

130. Oftentimes, classes are held in conjunction with the Theocratic Ministry School. When this is done, the class would be held in a separate room in the Kingdom Hall after the Bible highlights. The Kingdom Hall could also be used at other times during the week, as long as the arrangements would not conflict with another congregation's meeting. Those needing additional help may be tutored on a personal basis. Keep in mind, however, that it would be ill-advised for two individuals of the opposite sex to meet alone unless they are close relatives.

131. Foreign-Language Classes: For details regarding this provision, see 6: 76-77.

AUDIO AND VIDEO PRODUCTION

132. The Teaching Committee oversees the work of Audio/Video Services (AVS) at world headquarters, which involves the following areas of responsibility:

133. Audio publications include magazines, books, brochures, dramas, dramatic Bible readings, and choral and orchestral music recordings. The Teaching Committee oversees the recording and distribution of audio publications, whereas the Writing Committee gives approval to translate and record an audio publication because most of these programs are based on printed publications. Thus, new requests for approvals should be addressed to the Writing Committee.

134. The Teaching Committee prepares and produces live-action dramas, sound-only dramas, and dramatic Bible readings and will answer any questions regarding the production of these items.

135. Video publications include general-release videos, jw.org-posted videos, and all sign-language publications. The Writing Committee gives the initial approval to translate and produce a new video publication, whereas the Teaching Committee cares for both the content and the production of all general-release video publications. Because most sign-language publications are based on a printed publication, the content of these videos is the responsibility of the Writing Committee.

136. Audio and Video Equipment and Facilities: The Teaching Committee approves the type of equipment and the design of facilities for producing audio and video publications. This committee works in concert with the Publishing Committee and the Worldwide Design/Construction Department regarding equipment purchases and construction of audio and video studios.

137. Regional Audio/Video Centers (RAVCs): Under the Teaching Committee, AVS cares for the audio and video needs of the world field. AVS supervises the work of RAVCs in four branches, namely, Brazil, Japan, Netherlands, and South Africa. These branches support the production of audio and video publications in their region of the world. While a number of branches have audio equipment for producing their own vernacular audio publications, an RAVC is available to assist if technical problems arise. The RAVC also assists, as needed, in recording and mixing the vernacular audio for general-release videos and thereafter conveying the necessary assets to AVS for authoring to DVD, uploading for replication, and posting on jw.org.

138. RAVC Support of Sign-Language Publications: The RAVC supports the production of the various sign-language publications in its region. The level of support varies, depending on the number of deaf publishers using the language. Branches with fewer than 200 deaf publishers and a temporary translation team are considered entry-level branches and receive a workstation on loan with minimal RAVC support. Branches with more than 200 deaf publishers and one or more permanent translation teams are termed mid-level branches and receive the full support of the RAVC. Branches approved to produce the study edition of The Watchtower–On DVD in sign language are considered advance-level branches and are thoroughly equipped and trained to care for their own sign-language production, though still under the general direction of the RAVC.

139. Audio and Video on jw.org: After Web Publishing creates a Web page for a publication, AVS is responsible for uploading audio and video publication files in the various languages. Unless directed otherwise, the RAVC will assist entry- and mid-level branches in preparing the files for this purpose. Generally, if a language has already been approved for release of an audio or video publication on physical media (CD, DVD, or other), no additional approval is needed to have these posted on the Web site.

140. Branch Tour Videos: Branches desiring to produce an on-site tour video for visitors should request approval from the Teaching Committee. These videos should not describe the history of the work in the country but should show what currently transpires at the branch in support of the preaching work. A branch tour video should last ten minutes or less. When submitting a new proposal, please keep the following in mind:

- New audio or video equipment should not be purchased for this purpose. If none is available at the branch, it may be possible to use the equipment and expertise of a local brother.
- Please send the Teaching Committee a narrative script in English and a description of the proposed visuals for review and approval before recording.
- If prerecorded music will be included, Kingdom Melodies are often used. For any original music donated for such a project, the branch should obtain a signed release from the owner.

RADIO AND TV PROGRAMS

141. Questions concerning such programs may be sent to the Teaching Committee.

142. Periodically, all branches receive an updated listing of approved videos with guidelines on how to use them.

143. Approved programs should be shown unedited and without interruption except for station identification. No editing of any sort should be done without prior authorization from the Teaching Committee. None of the approved programs should be shown for commercial purposes. Permission will be granted to show our programs only in public service, educational, or noncommercial venues. They should not be shown in a context that could make it appear that we endorse any political or interfaith movement, hospital, or group.

144. The above guidelines should be provided to the broadcasting station for compliance every time one of the approved programs is to be aired. All branches have been sent a formatted sample of these guidelines for use as intended.

BROADCASTING DEPARTMENT

145. The Teaching Committee oversees the work of the Broadcasting Department at world headquarters, which involves the following areas of responsibility: (1) assisting branches with technical issues involving video streaming so as to link various venues to one originating location and (2) answering branch questions about convention and Assembly Hall audio and video sound equipment. This includes specification and installation issues.

WHQ TRAVEL DEPARTMENT

146. The Teaching Committee oversees the work of the WHQ Travel

Department, which involves the following areas of responsibility: (1) researching and securing air travel for headquarters personnel caring for their organizational assignments, (2) researching and securing air travel for those in foreign service who are eligible to be funded to a convention of their choice, (3) overseeing the collection and management of accrued hotel reward points and other headquarters travel activities, and (4) reviewing convention venue rental expenses and assisting with hotel negotiations and usage.

WRITING COMMITTEE

Web Publishing

1. The Web Publishing Department maintains the organization's Web sites. (See 3:89.) It works with departments at world headquarters and in the branches to develop Web content in many languages. This material includes answers to questions raised about the Bible by the public, information about our headquarters and branches, and news releases about events involving Jehovah's Witnesses. Selected publications can be read online or downloaded in various digital, audio, and video formats.

Writing Archives

2. The Writing Committee oversees Writing Archives, which is responsible for gathering, cataloging, and preserving material related to our theocratic history. Archival records and artifacts come from branches, congregations, individuals, and secular institutions. The Archives collection includes publications, clippings, documents, photographs, audiovisual recordings, and other items of historical value. Detailed life histories of longtime servants of Jehovah are also kept on file. Over time, such material is being digitized in order to provide electronic access and avoid damage to the original items. Archival research is used in preparing material for publication, display, and other educational purposes.

3. Many branches have assembled similar items during the preparation of Yearbook accounts and for other projects. The Writing Committee is interested in the preservation of such material, either at individual branches or at world headquarters. Consideration should be given to the proper organization and storage of such items, thus increasing their potential value for future research and publication.

Writing Articles for The Watchtower and Awake!

WRITING DESKS

4. The Governing Body has approved the setting up of Writing Desks in a number of branch offices. This arrangement has these objectives: (1) publish articles that reflect an understanding of local cultures found in various parts of the earth, (2) distribute the writing workload, and (3) find additional individuals who are qualified to write.

5. All Writing Desks come under the oversight of their respective branches. Thus, the branch can decide whether additional staff is needed to handle replies to inquiries received from the field that deal with Scriptural doctrine and our published material. However, Branch Committees need to obtain approval from the Writing Committee before adding permanent writers whose main work is to handle writing assignments for our publications.

6. The Writing Desk overseer is to supply copy to the Writing Department according to the schedule and instructions received from the Assignment Desk at world headquarters. If the Writing Desk overseer contacts other branches to request information not available locally, copies of such correspondence should be sent to the Assignment Desk in the Writing Department.

7. Those privileged to write articles should have writing ability and must be baptized, spiritually mature, and in good standing. They should be balanced, exemplary, modest, and not inclined to talk freely about their writing activity. In most cases, writers should be elders. (Qualified sisters may be used to write certain articles, especially on subjects of interest to women. However, they should not be used to prepare material on cover subjects or articles that are expositions of Scripture.) Anyone assigned to write an article for The Watchtower or Awake! should be given a copy of the memorandum "Writing for Our Journals." Although it is not required that the writer read the English Standards Manual, he might find it beneficial to become familiar with some of its content. The brother in the branch who is responsible for sending in articles should be well-acquainted with it and should apply its standards to copy that is submitted to the Writing Department.

PREPARING MATERIAL

8. All writers should be conscious of the target audience for each of our journals:

Awake!

Readers of Awake! typically have little or no knowledge of the Bible. They may know nothing about Christian teachings, they may be somewhat distrustful of religion, or they may be unaware that the Bible has practical value. A primary objective of Awake! is to convince its audience that God exists. This journal also aims to help the reader to build faith in the Bible and to understand that Jehovah's Witnesses are different from other religious groups.

Awake! articles may deal with such subjects as animals, plants, customs, geography, history, religion, science, natural history, and occupations. Since the articles will be read by people of many cultures, the subjects and titles should have broad appeal. The articles do not have to be about the country where the writer is located, although they may contain material reflecting the relationship of that land to the subject. This can be accomplished by doing research in books and periodicals published in that country and by mentioning places and customs peculiar to it if doing so is appropriate.

The Watchtower—Public Edition

This journal focuses more on spiritual matters because its target audience may have a measure of respect for God and for the Bible. They have some knowledge of the Bible but do not accurately understand its teachings. Many readers of the public edition are not familiar with Witness terms and concepts. If such are used in articles, they should be explained.

The Watchtower—Study Edition

This edition is written primarily for Jehovah's Witnesses as well as for those who attend our meetings, are familiar with the Scriptures, and understand Witness terms and concepts.

9. Preview outlines are usually submitted for approval before articles are written. A template is used for submitting a preview outline. In a branch that has a Writing Desk, the overseer of the desk is expected to work closely with the Writing Department at world headquarters and should be convinced that an outline is satisfactory before submitting it. [See Sample 8.1.] When a writing assignment is made, the length of the article is specified. Suggestions may also be made as to what the article may include. The writer may make limited changes in the outline as he works on the article. Preview outlines should be sent to the Assignment Desk with a covering memorandum.

10. Time to do the work of writing varies. Those not in full-time service can do their writing in the time they have available. The Writing Desk overseer and anyone who may be working with him full-time are expected to do such work during working hours. Other Bethel family members assigned to write articles may be asked whether they can do so on their own time or will need to use some work time. Evenings or weekends may be used for this work, but no one should be discouraged from asking permission to use some work time for such an important assignment. The Branch Committee can grant a missionary, a special pioneer, or a regular pioneer a time allowance for writing. Some writing assignments may not require much time, whereas more time may be needed for others. It is best for a missionary or a special pioneer to care for a writing assignment within a single calendar month.

11. Field experiences and life stories submitted for our magazines often reflect the circumstances, attitudes, and customs of people living in the country where the material originated. Be sure that a worthwhile point is made by the experience or life story. Regarding the qualifications of those featured in life stories, see the memorandum "Writing for Our Journals."

12. Other articles may be suggested that would benefit our readers. Even if there is no one in the branch territory in a position to write articles, the Writing Department is glad to receive suggested topics or questions that can be handled in Scriptural or other articles. Remain alert to what is happening in the branch territory. When an event occurs that would be of interest to our readers (for example, if a natural disaster strikes), quickly send the Writing Department at least a report and copies of news clippings (with a good English translation if needed). At such times, the Assignment Desk may assign a writer to submit a completed article through the Writing Desk and/or Branch Committee. Act quickly when a newsworthy event occurs, as we may want to publish the article as soon as possible. Of course, copy submitted under these circumstances should be well-written and ready for publication. Articles based on personal experiences and interviews have human interest that cannot be conveyed by an article based only on other news sources. Be careful when covering political events, since we are neutral and must avoid taking sides.

13. Send noteworthy news clippings to the Writing Department. By observing the material appearing in shorter articles and in the feature "Watching the World," determine what kinds of clippings are likely to be useful. Items and quotations from periodicals and books originating in the local branch territory should be accompanied by the full name of the author, the publication, and the publisher as well as the place of origin, the date, and the page number(s) involved. Indicate the specific article, and put a mark in the margin next to statements of particular interest. Send the entire clipping to the Writing Department along with a good English translation of any foreign-language material. Direct such correspondence to the Writing Department, Clippings Desk.

DOCUMENTING ARTICLES

14. Throughout an article, place reference numbers in brackets after quotations and facts requiring documentation. Attach separate reference pages listing the sources after the corresponding numbers. [See Sample 8.2.] This information is useful in many ways, and having it may even determine whether an article is published. For details, see the memorandum "Writing for Our Journals." With articles containing quotations from newspapers, magazines, books, or sources other than the New World Translation, send photocopies, with English translations if needed. Keep the originals for translation work or other use. If a certain quotation appeared previously in our literature, state where it was used. An article must be accurate in every detail, and that responsibility rests chiefly with the writer. Use only writers who do dependable research and carefully present the facts. When the Branch Committee coordinator or the Writing Desk overseer reads the article and sees something that raises a question, that point should be checked with the writer or looked up to make sure it is correct. If it is wrong, delete it or make a correction. Clarify ambiguous statements.

SUBMITTING ARTICLES

15. Before submitting an article to the Writing Department, the Writing Desk overseer should read the article very carefully and appraise it in the light of what is said in the memorandum "Writing for Our Journals." The article should be worthy of publication. Also have in mind the possible effect of the article on people living in the local territory. Sometimes it is best not to say certain things, even though they are true. Do not submit material for publication that might cause difficulty for our brothers locally or elsewhere. Many things can be written that will not hurt our work and may even engender goodwill. The truth should be presented, of course, but in a tactful way.

16. An occasional article of local interest may be prepared for use in certain language editions of Awake! If such an article is written, include nothing that could put Jehovah's people in a bad light or cause us legal or other problems locally or elsewhere. The article must have Branch Committee and Writing Committee approval before it is scheduled for a magazine. Therefore, send it (with a good English translation) to the Writing Committee for approval. Completed articles must be submitted through the Branch Committee coordinator.

17. If possible, send photographs with an article, as these help the Art Department to prepare good illustrations. Photographs should be accompanied by signed releases, as explained in "Writing for Our Journals." If you learn that a model in a photograph that you supplied has become disqualified, please follow the guidelines provided in the letter dated HWC:HWG November 12, 2014, No. C-33346W.

18. Articles and related materials should be submitted electronically via the Materials Distribution System (MDS) by accessing "Transfers" under the "Writing Transfer" section. Detailed submission guidelines are available on MDS. If electronic submission via MDS is not possible, articles and related materials may be submitted with a covering numbered letter via branch mail.

19. Every article sent to the Writing Department must be dated and must bear the names of the branch and the writer and the name or signature of the Branch Committee coordinator and the Writing Desk overseer. These signatures or names indicate that the article is approved for publication.

Translation Responsibilities

OVERVIEW

20. While the Writing Committee oversees the translation of our publications worldwide, the Branch Committee oversees the translation work that has been assigned to its branch.

Note: Bracketed references can be found at the end of this chapter. [See List 8.1.]

DECIDING WHAT TO TRANSLATE

21. In addition to publications that will be printed, the Branch Committee supervises the production of audio and video material and publications for the deaf and the blind. They also coordinate the translation of materials for our Web site.

Languages That Have Literature

22. Before making recommendations to the Writing Committee:

a. Consult the Priority List issued annually. Written languages and sign languages have separate Priority Lists. [1]

CONFIDENTIAL

b. The Writing Committee regularly informs all branches of new publications under development, provides contents listings, and explains the purpose of each publication.

c. The Branch Committee decides whether a new publication should be translated into a language. The committee consults with the respective language overseers to determine whether the translation team would be able to translate additional publications. Dated publications and seasonal work (Yearbook, Examining the Scriptures, Research Guide, publications Index, assembly and convention outlines, and drama scripts) take precedence over new publications.

23. The Translation Department translates only publications used for field service, meetings, assemblies, and conventions. Materials needed by Legal, Construction, Maintenance, Hospital Information Services, Correspondence, and the Service Department are translated by individuals in those departments or by commuters.

24. These workers who are not part of the Translation Department may have access to the section of the Watchtower Translation System (WTS) that deals with general translation, and they are welcome to attend weekly team meetings of the Translation Department to stay up-to-date with the latest techniques and guidelines of translation. [2]

Starting Translation Into a New Language

25. The Branch Committee regularly reviews the spiritual needs of every language group under its care. The Service Department initiates the request to provide publications in a language into which we have not previously translated. The following information should be provided to the Branch Committee for its consideration:

- Are publications needed although meetings are not regularly held in a language?
- Even though a group may use publications and/or attend meetings in another language, do the publishers find it difficult to participate in the meetings?
- Is there a language field that we do not reach because there are few, if any, publications in that language?

26. If we arrange meetings, assemblies, and conventions in a language and there is a large enough publisher base, we are committed to providing a steady supply of publications, namely, The Watchtower, Our Kingdom Ministry, a songbook, public talk outlines, and study material for the meetings. [See Chart 8.1.]

27. When the Branch Committee decides that a language group needs publications, the Service Department takes the lead in investigating what publications are needed.–See 7:40.

Procedure to investigate needs:

a. Download the latest version of New Language Translation Request, available on the Publication Processing Documentation (PPD) site, under Translation>Translation and Language Overseers>General. Gather and review available information about the language and those who use it. Consult circuit overseers, pioneers, and publishers.

b. Present findings to the Branch Committee.

c. If the Branch Committee agrees to provide some literature, make sure that you have potential candidates who could qualify to be trained for translation work.

CONFIDENTIAL

d. The candidates should (1) be baptized, (2) know the target language very well—it should preferably be their mother tongue—and (3) be available for some weeks to receive training and to translate their first publications. You may invite publishers of varying backgrounds as candidates for training (male, female, older, younger, well-educated, having basic education, single, married, and so forth).

Procedure to start translation:

e. Request permission from the Writing Committee to translate some publications, and include the completed New Language Translation Request form in the correspondence. Specify the format(s) being recommended for the publications (audio, print, video, Web).

f. Once permission is granted, arrange for training to be given where the translators are located so that they do not need to travel far. Where possible, it is practical to train more than three candidates in order to have a larger pool of translators for future projects.

g. Provide equipment and accommodations for the trainer. The trainer teaches the candidates basic translation techniques and works closely with them as they translate the first publications.

h. The translated publications are reviewed by a panel of native speakers to ensure natural language.—See 8:49c.

i. The translation is corrected and proofread, and the project team gives the translated publications a final check.

j. The publications are composed at the branch or by the trainer. Audio recordings are made if equipment and appropriate readers are available.

k. When the project is completed, the temporary translators return to their previous assignments.

l. The Service Department informs the congregations that publications are available in a new language, provides guidelines on how to use the publications, assigns pioneers and publishers to the territory where the language is spoken, monitors the response from the field and, after a few months, provides a report to the Branch Committee.

m. When the Branch Committee requests additional publications in a new language, the request should be accompanied by a report of (1) how many copies of each publication in that language are left in stock, (2) how many Bible studies are being conducted in that language, and (3) if congregation meetings are held in that language.—See 7:40.

28. When giving permission to begin translation, the Writing Committee provides specific direction on how to train the prospective candidates. The publication is printed at the printing branch. In exceptional cases, it may be printed locally, with approval from the Publishing Committee. Audio publications are usually recorded locally.

29. Sign-Language Translation: When starting translation in a sign language, the same procedure is followed as with spoken languages. The Writing Committee provides a separate Priority List for sign languages and arranges specialized training when permission is given for the first publication in a sign language. If needed, additional training may be requested. [3]

CONFIDENTIAL

Special Publications

30. Bible: The New World Translation is high on the Priority List, and translating it involves years of work. Branch Committees need to ensure that they have enough qualified translators to translate the Bible and at the same time keep up with the other approved publications. In some cases, however, it may be necessary to change a nonstudy magazine to a less frequent edition or to delay the release of other publications in order to complete Bible translation first. For example, a monthly edition of the public Watchtower or Awake! could become a bimonthly or a quarterly edition. When the Writing Committee gives permission to translate the Bible, it arranges initial and periodic training for the Bible translators by Writing Committee representatives. Branch Committees may ask for additional training when needed. A Bible translation team is composed of a minimum of one project team, a secretary, and an elder to serve as the translation coordinator. The Branch Committee usually recommends the most qualified translators for Bible translation, including brothers and sisters. It is permissible to use younger translators if they have special abilities. [4]

31. Nonstandard Magazine Editions: If a nonstandard edition of The Watchtower or Awake! (combination, bimonthly, or quarterly edition) is produced, the Branch Committee approves suitable articles that have been selected from a number of issues. [5]

32. Braille Publications: Braille publications can be transcribed using WTS. A large field of blind people is not required in order to justify making Braille publications in any language in which we have printed publications.

33. A branch desiring to transcribe publications into Braille should first request approval from the Writing Committee. The approval will be followed up with direction on how to proceed.

- While there is no Priority List for Braille publications, it is best to begin with a small nondated item, such as a tract or a brochure.
- Publications that can be transcribed into Braille generally include tracts, invitations, brochures, books, the New World Translation, The Watchtower, Awake!, and Our Kingdom Ministry.
- Specialized publications can also be transcribed, such as public talk outlines, invitations, programs, the Pioneer textbook, and the Shepherding textbook.
- On request, electronic text may be provided for blind and visually impaired readers who use Braille notetakers or computers with screen readers. These files can be posted on jw.org in notetaker (BRL) format and RTF format. [6]

34. Simplified Editions [7]

35. Songbook [8]

36. Multimedia Publications [9]

DEPARTMENT ORGANIZATION

37. Each language overseer assigns individuals to specific project teams.

38. Translation Capacity: The workload must be scheduled in such a way that team members do not have to work overtime for months on end. The Branch Committee carefully monitors the workload of the translators to make sure that they are not burdened with unreasonable schedules.

39. The Branch Committee requests permission for each new publication before translation work can begin. When requesting permission to translate a dated journal, specify which edition will be produced. When permission is granted, obtain the source text of the publication from MDS. The master copy of the

English Final mailing contains all corrections and approved updates.

40. Schedules: Local schedules for translating new and dated publications are based on the schedules for English publications provided by the Writing Department. For most publications, the Writing Department sends two different mailings:

(1) Early mailing: This contains early text to start translation and a preliminary PDF of the composed pages. At this point the text and artwork are subject to change. Nevertheless, translators should start working on these publications as soon as possible after this mailing is received. The compositors prepare the early composition pages for an audible reading check and a mechanical check of the translation.

(2) Final mailing: This mailing contains the finalized text and artwork. The project team compares the final adjustments of the English text with its translation to check whether any changes will affect the translated text.

41. Correction notices should be handled according to the guidelines provided by the Writing Committee. [10]

42. Translation errors in publications that have already been published in any format may be corrected with the approval of the Branch Committee. The printing date on the publishers' page should be updated. Complete retranslations requiring new copyright dates, corrections of serious translation errors that call for destroying copies in stock, and corrections to videos already produced need to be approved by the Writing Committee. [11]

Local Adjustments (Text and Art)

43. The Branch Committee recommends replacement material if the material in the English could cause problems in the local field. The Writing Committee will review recommendations for replacement text.

44. The Branch Committee may give local approval for adjustments in the following matters:

- Replace illustrations or examples in the text that may be inappropriate for the local field.
- Replace references to our publications that are not available in the target language.
- Replace Scripture citations if the cited scriptures in the vernacular language do not support the point being made in English. Replacing "read" scriptures requires approval via the Translator Help Desk unless the change involves simply the citation range. [12]

45. When adjusting the text to adapt it to the local field, care must be exercised that facts are not distorted.

46. In rare instances, artwork may be unacceptable for some cultures. The Writing Committee will provide alternate artwork only if an image would endanger the safety of the brothers. [13]

Translation Questions

47. The Writing Committee handles the bulk of the translation questions. These are submitted using WTS. They are sent directly via e-mail by the language overseer to the Translator Help Desk Inbox.

48. Before sending a translation question to the Translator Help Desk, the project team first checks to see whether the question has already been submitted by another team. The language overseer reviews the question for clarity and completeness.

a. During the translation process, editorial, cultural, legal, organizational, linguistic, procedural, and other questions need to be resolved.

COPY FINAL

b. It is important that questions are submitted using WTS. This program packages the questions in the proper format so that they can be registered in the central database for efficient handling.

c. The Translator Help Desk sends answers to all translation teams in daily hyperlink packages.

d. Answers for one language may be applied to another language that has the same question. Project teams do not need to ask permission to apply such answers. [14]

e. Questions should be submitted as early in the translation process as possible to avoid delays. All queries must be resolved prior to final composition.

f. Teams should not be discouraged or hindered from sending questions.

Ensuring High-Quality Publications

49. The goal of the Governing Body is that all our publications be accurate, easy to read, and clearly understood by common people.

a. The language overseer makes sure that each project team has the necessary training, experience, and maturity to produce a natural, accurate translation.

b. Each translation team should actively seek feedback from the audience for whom they translate.

c. Publications to be used extensively in the field should be reviewed by a small group of selected publishers who are representative of the field and of an age appropriate to the publication. The members of the review panel should preferably use the target language as their first language.—See 8:27h. [15]

d. It is necessary that project teams keep in touch with how people in the field use their language.

e. Personal preferences are not to be imposed on the project team. The language overseer has the responsibility to ensure that all project teams produce translations that are appealing and at the same time in harmony with the way the language is generally used.

f. Project teams must take care not to use out-of-date expressions that are not understood by the majority of the readers.

50. Branch Committees rarely need to override the translation decisions of teams that have been carefully selected and thoroughly trained.

Workflow

51. All procedures for translation, checking, proofreading, composition, and mechanical checking should be performed as directed in Translation Workflow and Composition and Mechanical Checking Workflow. All in the department should be familiar with the latest version of these documents, which are posted on PPD.

52. The language overseer ensures that every publication is clean and press-ready before it is mailed to the file maintenance branch. He does this by making sure that all the necessary steps in the workflow are properly followed and that all involved in the process are thoroughly trained. Once the text leaves the translators for final composition, it should not be recalled for translation adjustments, except for changes needed because of correction notices. The goal is to send to the printing branch press-ready materials that can be printed without further correction.

CONFIDENTIAL

53. Printing branches do not proofread or perform mechanical checks on publications they print for other branches. The printing branch may make necessary adjustments to the publishers' page to meet local legal requirements.

Office Equipment

54. Translators need a quiet office environment. Project teams should have sufficient office space to work without disturbing others. Everyone in the department should have:

- A suitable desk and comfortable chair
- Adequate lighting
- Good ventilation
- A computer as specified by the Computer Department at world headquarters
- Access to the research library for translators, which should be updated regularly

55. Reference Materials: All translators should have ready access to reference works that are frequently needed. The following is a partial list:

- Standard vernacular Bible(s)
- The latest electronic English dictionaries
- An up-to-date English-vernacular dictionary
- Target-language grammar books and dictionaries
- The revised English New World Translation (2013 Edition)
- Watchtower Research (English, plus vernacular library synchronized)
- A dictionary of English idioms
- The team dictionary [16]
- Where possible, translators should have Internet access on their computer. [17]

56. All members of the department should have full access to guidelines, translation training material, and correspondence that apply to their work. To this end, make sure that the members of the department are added to the role groups that correspond to their assignments so as to have access to PPD.

57. Standards Manual: All languages should endeavor to compile a Standards Manual for the target language that sets out grammar rules and style guidelines. It will differ from the English Standards Manual. [18]

58. Confidentiality: Translators must keep confidential what is being translated and who works on each publication. The following materials are confidential and are strictly for the use of the Translation Department:

- Publications being translated
- Correction notices
- Translator comments
- Translator Help Desk questions and answers
- Research information
- Training materials

59. The above items are not for personal use and should not be distributed outside of the department. Every precaution should be taken to make sure that confidential material, either on paper or by electronic means, is not divulged to and cannot be accessed by anyone who is not authorized. Failure to comply with these guidelines could lead to the termination of one's Bethel service.

60. All members of the Translation Department, including temporary volunteers, must sign the Watchtower Information Resources Confidentiality Affirmation Statement and Acknowledgement of Use of Work Software before they start to work in the department.

TRANSLATION ORGANIZATION

61. The following functions are necessary for translation:

- Translation overseer (and assistants if needed)
- Language overseer(s)

CONFIDENTIAL

- Team secretary(ies)
- Translation project team(s)
- Compositor(s)
- Digital publisher(s), Technical Support [19]

Note: Translators serving Service Department, Legal Department, and Printery needs are part of their respective departments and not part of the Translation Department.

Translation Overseer

62. He supervises the Translation Department and usually serves on the Branch Committee. He cares for the following matters: the size of the translation team (number of permanent workers and commuters), offices (recommends where they are located and whether facilities are rented or owned), language needs (sign language, Braille, Web site translation, composition, digital publishing), training (procedures, techniques, production), and all translation personnel. Although it would be preferable, it is not necessary for the translation overseer to have translation experience. However, he must be up-to-date with translation guidelines, translation techniques, production workflow, and be thoroughly familiar with the circumstances and needs of the languages under his oversight. If his workload is too heavy, an assistant(s) may be appointed to help him. If an assistant translation overseer is needed, a brother who is reliable and responds in good time to the needs of the translation teams should be selected. He cooperates with the language overseers to ensure that schedules are met and that directives from the Branch Committee and the Governing Body are implemented. Capable language overseers may be used in this capacity. [20]

Language Overseer

63. He works under the direction of the translation overseer. The language overseer should have translation experience. He must speak the language well (ideally a native speaker), understand translation principles, have good oversight skills, and be able to organize the work efficiently. He must be communicative, loving, and kind. When a temporary team is formed, a temporary language overseer should be appointed to work with the team.

64. Responsibilities: Each language overseer keeps the translation overseer informed on worker needs and issues, translation recommendations, and production matters.

- His role is not simply administrative; it is a full-time assignment requiring interaction with the project teams on a daily basis. His office should be located where the project teams are to facilitate such communication.
- He thoroughly understands the translation process as set forth by the Writing Committee, and he is thoroughly familiar with translation principles and procedures.
- He does not institute his own workflow procedures.
- He ensures that proper procedures are followed when assigning responsibilities to Translation Department workers.
- He assigns work to the project teams, and he schedules production.
- He is responsible for ongoing translation training.
- He should be sensitive to direction and feedback from his oversight and the field, and he should be able to give clear direction.
- He should always be on the lookout for prospective translators.
- He should have access to MDS and PPD, as well as be given a printed copy or electronic access to this chapter of Branch Organization.

CONFIDENTIAL

- At times, he will sit in with project teams as they translate in order to ensure that they function well and are following proper procedures.

Assistant Language Overseer

65. When three or more project teams are needed, it is necessary for the language overseer to select an assistant. One of the brothers serving on a project team should be trained to substitute for the language overseer when he is ill, away, or otherwise unavailable.

66. Responsibilities: The language overseer keeps his assistant fully informed of all matters concerning the department so that he will be able to replace the overseer seamlessly when circumstances require it. The assistant has access to MDS and PPD, just as the overseer has.

67. The assistant language overseer is authorized to make decisions in the absence of the overseer.

Team Secretary

68. This is a well-organized brother who must be able to keep track of translation files, schedules, and correspondence.

- The secretary should be capable of communicating clearly in written correspondence.
- This assignment requires some skill in organizing and maintaining accurate electronic files.
- If a brother is not available, a sister may be assigned as secretary.

69. Responsibilities: The team secretary is responsible for downloading and organizing electronic source materials from MDS, updating team dictionaries, backing up publications, and sending completed materials to the printing branch, as well as keeping track of other correspondence.

70. At least one other person in the department should know the basic functions of the secretary and be kept up-to-date with procedures so as to be able to replace the secretary on short notice if necessary.

Project Teams

71. A project team is made up of three members who perform the roles of translator, checker, and proofreader. A detailed description of the various responsibilities of each member is presented in the Translation Workflow document. If possible, each language team should have the full number of project teams as specified by the Governing Body. [21]

72. Responsibilities: Working as a team of three (or four in some cases), the team translates, checks, and proofreads its own work. It is therefore a requirement that the team members be able to work cooperatively in a team setting.

- Although the project team translates, checks, and proofreads together, each member performs a specific function in the process.
- Each member must have a good command of his or her own language, and at least two members of the team must clearly understand the source language. It is not expected that one individual will have all the skills needed to translate, check, and proofread.
- Project team members also serve as audio coaches and followers.
- Each project requires different skill levels. Select individuals who will fit into a project team according to their skill level.
- Sisters can be used for most translation assignments, including the Bible.
- Whatever the translation assignment, each member of the project team must have a thorough understanding of Scriptural truth so that accurate and faithful translations can be produced.

CONFIDENTIAL

73. It is expected that the cooperative translation process, as set forth in the Translation Workflow document, will be followed by the project team.

74. It is recommended that the project team members attend congregations that have meetings in their language and are using the target-language literature. This enables them to keep up-to-date with the language. It also means that they will personally use the target-language literature in the field.

75. Because brothers have the responsibility to teach in the congregation, at least one brother, preferably an elder, should work on each project team if at all possible. Branch Committees should search for qualified brothers who can be assigned to serve on project teams.

Compositors

76. The compositor must be familiar with computers, be a quick learner, and be attentive to detail. He or she should have an eye for making the text appealing in appearance and layout. The compositor needs to work in close cooperation with the translation team and be able to follow instructions carefully. Each language team needs a regular compositor and a backup compositor.

77. Responsibilities: The compositors must become completely familiar with all computer programs related to making publications. One compositor prepares early and final composition of the translated material. The second compositor does publication checking of the composed pages.

- Both compositors need to work regularly in composition to maintain their skills at a high level.
- Compositors may be given other work assignments within the department, such as digital publishing or Braille transcription, especially when few publications are being translated and composition is not a full-time assignment.
- Thorough training is required and is available on request to the Writing Committee.

78. Composition is part of the Translation Department, not the Printery or Graphics. The compositors should work in the same physical vicinity as the translators to facilitate good communication. Remote translation offices will usually have on-site compositors.

Technical Support

79. A well-qualified computer support person must be assigned to the Translation Department. He has to be familiar with WTS and other programs used by the translators. The person must be available whenever needed to assist the translators and be personable in his dealings.

80. Responsibilities: He maintains the Translation Department's computer program data files. He backs up the production files every day. He trains all workers to use the translation programs provided by the organization.

81. Remote translation offices must have resident computer support to guarantee security and reliable service.

Digital Publisher(s)

82. Research libraries need to be well maintained and up-to-date. They are needed to produce EPUB and WPUB files for the Web site, the Research Guide, Watchtower Library, Watchtower ONLINE LIBRARY, the Watch Tower Publications Index, and Braille transcription.

83. As more publications become available in a language, it will be necessary to assign enough personnel to care for the items listed in 8:82. Training for this specialized work is available on request from the Writing Committee.

84. Additional workers are needed to produce the Watch Tower Publications Index. Those working on research libraries should not be assigned to work simultaneously on a translation project team.

CONFIDENTIAL

Finding New Translators

85. Only baptized publishers in good standing are used as translators.

a. Check to see if there are regular Bethelites who may qualify.

b. Check new Bethel applications for prospective translators.

c. Meetings held at regional conventions for those interested in Bethel service provide a good opportunity to locate prospective candidates. Those interviewing the prospective applicants should be alerted to the need for translators. [See Chart 8.2.]

Evaluating Prospective Translators

86. When evaluating prospective translators, please follow the latest instructions from the Writing Committee.

a. The spirituality of the applicant needs to be carefully assessed. Humility and modesty are essential.

b. The prospective translator must be able to work in a team environment.

c. It is rare to find a translator who is highly skilled as a translator, checker, and proofreader.

d. The testing process should reveal potential in one of the areas. Training will be required, since it is not expected that fully qualified translators will be found. Individuals who have good basic skills can be trained.

e. When searching for sign-language translators, look for individuals who have keen insight into the way deaf people think and communicate.

Training New Translators

87. It drains valuable resources to train someone who does not have the aptitude. Potential will usually be evident after an initial three-month training period. However, it usually takes 12 to 24 months for new members of a project team to find their place in the team and to make a substantial contribution.

- New translators may at times be assigned to work on a project team as a fourth member.
- After approximately three months, qualified translators meet with the language overseer to decide whether the trainee exhibits sufficient progress to warrant further training.
- If it becomes clear during the initial training period that the trainee does not have the necessary aptitude, he could be reassigned to another department in Bethel or to the field.

88. Training too many people at the same time places an unreasonable load on experienced workers.

Replacement and Backup Workers

89. When a member of the Translation Department needs to be replaced, it normally takes some years before a replacement reaches the desired level of proficiency. This loss can take a heavy toll on the other members of the department and on the quality of translation.

90. Even if the team already has its required quota of workers, backup workers may be given training. They may be available to help out on a temporary basis when a regular member of the team is sick or away. They would therefore be able to fill in should someone leave unexpectedly.

91. When a department member gets married and asks to remain at Bethel, the Branch Committee should seriously consider what can be done to retain him if the prospective mate qualifies for Bethel. There must be available accommodations and a work assignment for the mate. In some cases, the branch is able to retain the services of a translator as a commuter Bethelite while the mate serves in the field.

Training Members of the Department

92. Everyone in the Translation Department needs ongoing training, since it is important that the workers do not get into a rut and stagnate in their abilities.

- The language overseer and his assistant are responsible for directing and monitoring the training of every individual under their oversight.
- Please ensure that you select those who have specialized skills or, at least, have the aptitude to serve as compositors, translators, checkers, proofreaders, secretaries, computer technicians, research indexers, coaches, or overseers.
- Project teams should keep up-to-date with their language, the source language and, more important, stay up-to-date with the truth as revealed through the faithful and discreet slave.
- All must have direct access to the training materials provided by the Writing Committee.
- Compositors must stay up-to-date with the latest methods and style adjustments made by the Writing Committee.

Training at Weekly Meetings

- Material from translation questions and answers, translator comments, current translation problems, policy letters from the Writing Committee, and Translating for Our Publications and its appendixes can be considered. [22]
- Letters and comments from the field on the quality of the vernacular translation can be discussed.
- Refresher courses can be presented by experienced workers on how to use WTS, research tools, and reference materials.
- Suggestions that would improve work habits, productivity, accuracy, and so forth should be scheduled for general discussion.
- In addition to their initial training, members of the department should be helped to stay up-to-date with the latest computer tools, policies, techniques, and directives from the Writing Committee.

93. Those working on the Watch Tower Publications Index, the Research Guide, and Watchtower Library need to review carefully all aspects of their work for every new edition they produce.

94. The team secretary should alert the language overseer of new directives so that he can arrange appropriate training.

Training Resources

- Training courses are provided by the Writing Committee. Such courses include training in translation techniques, indexing, workflow, composition, and organizing the department.
- The Branch Committee may ask the Writing Committee to provide this or other specialized training.
- The Writing Committee automatically arranges training for new translation teams and for Bible projects.

REMOTE TRANSLATION OFFICES (RTOs)

95. The Branch Committee locates RTOs where the target language of the translation team is predominant. It is best to relocate a translation team if the branch office is situated where the translators cannot attend meetings using their language and they are rarely exposed to that language. When considering an RTO, the branch should review the latest Remote Translation Office Facility Guidelines. [23]

CONFIDENTIAL

WORKERS AT A REMOTE TRANSLATION OFFICE (RTO)

96. The Branch Committee should recommend three elders to take the lead at the RTO—a language overseer, a home overseer, and a maintenance overseer.

Language Overseer

97. The language overseer ensures that the translation work is well-organized.

Home and Maintenance

98. The home overseer cares for the personal needs of all workers at the RTO. He is also responsible for purchasing, cleaning, and meals. The maintenance overseer cares for buildings, security, and property. These brothers may be part-time commuters. For larger teams, it may be necessary for these brothers to work full-time, depending on the need. If some need to reside at the RTO, it may be good if the language overseer is one of the residents.

Part-Time Commuters and Temporary Volunteers

99. Part-time commuters, often regular pioneers, may serve at the RTO on an ongoing basis. In order to translate assembly and convention materials, experienced translators may be invited for a few days, some weeks, or even a month or two. If a volunteer is expected to serve more than a total of six months in a year, his application needs to be reviewed by the Personnel Committee. [24]

Full-Time Commuters and Permanent Members

100. The branch arranges living quarters for some workers, while others commute. If rooming at the RTO is limited, priority should be given to the language overseer and to other members of the translation team. Full-time commuters work five days a week and receive many of the same privileges as regular members of the Bethel family, with the exception that they do not live at the RTO. Whenever a recommendation is made to the Personnel Committee for someone to serve as a full-time commuter, the branch should include a recommendation for an appropriate allowance to cover housing, transportation, and personal expenses.

Spiritual Programs

101. Ensure that all the Bethel spiritual programs are provided at the RTO. Morning worship and the Bethel family Watchtower Study should be conducted regularly. Where possible, RTOs can be tied in with the branch office for these programs.

Article Title: Was There Really a Garden of Eden?

Provide a one-sentence summary of the proposed article: Many say that the Eden account in Genesis is mere myth, but the facts show that we can trust this record, which is essential to understanding the rest of God's Word.

Briefly outline below the main points and the secondary points the article will cover:

Introduction: People the world over know of the garden of Eden but may dismiss it as a myth

Discuss and answer four common objections to the Eden account

1. Was the garden a real geographical place?
2. Is it realistic to say that God made Adam from dust and Eve from a rib?
3. Do the trees of life and of knowledge seem more mythical than real?
4. Does not a talking serpent seem like the stuff of fairy tales?

Why does it matter whether the garden of Eden was real?

The garden reveals much about God's original purpose for the earth

God intended that mankind fill the earth as a perfect, united family

Jesus referred to that hope as a real one (Lu 23:43); God's purpose never changes

To examine and value the Eden account is to embrace a thrilling hope for the future

How to Determine the Needs of a Language

Established Translation

- What is next on the Priority List?
- Review Writing Committee's description of the content and the purpose of a new publication.
- For publications yet to be released, discuss with the language overseer any details that have been provided as well as the workload.
- Are there any special needs? (Bible, Insight, audio, video, Braille, large-print, simplified, Internet distribution, Watchtower Library)
- Before recommending a new project, review the Publications and Formats document on PPD.

New Translation

- How many publishers speak the language?
- Are meetings regularly held in this language?
- How many are dependent on this language for spiritual food?
- In what language do those attending comment?
- See additional questions on the New Language Translation Request form on PPD.

Make recommendations to the Writing Committee.

Re: BCH - Request for reinstatement

Dear Brothers

We met with BCH and explained what he needed to do for reinstatement. He is very repentant about what he did in the past and is willing to take whatever steps are necessary to restore his relationship with Jehovah.

There are some things he feels he has been accused of that were not true and therefore, would be a lie to admit to them. Jehovah is the one who knows all and is the one he wants to restore his relation with. It would be simple for him to confess to everything. Although that might satisfy us, it would not be right with Jehovah. Hence we appreciate his reluctance to confess to things he feels were not true.

We suggested he supply some information to explain his feelings and to offer proof of his claims. We are sending on to you his new plea for reinstatement and some of the information he has provided. You will notice references to various documents. This is a large file which we have not enclosed, however it is available should need it. We are also enclosing a comment from his wife who is an active, faithful sister in the congregation.

We appreciate that we are only hearing one side of the case. Obviously there are other matters and questions that the committee who dealt with this case would know of or would like to ask about. However it is our belief that the man displays the degree of repentance commensurate with the degree of deviation of his sins. He is cooperative with any direction provided and is regular with his meeting attendance. We have observed the man and feel that he could be reinstated.

Subject: BCH request for reinstatement

Dear Brothers

We write to you regarding a recommendation for reinstatement for BCH that we have received from the Kalamunda congregation. We have enclosed a copy of the Kalamunda Committees letter along with Mr BCH request for reinstatement. We felt it was prudent to keep you up to date with this latest development and also we would greatly appreciate your observations & comments.

We note that Mr BCH has now confessed to immoral dealings with one of his daughters, yet still is maintaining his innocence of improper dealings with his other daughters. He claims there were either, extenuating circumstances, or his daughters are themselves guilty of lying.

We also note Mr BCH makes repeated references to court cases, and events that happened throughout his life with his daughters, that we find confusing and difficult to understand, since we were not present at the court proceedings and have very limited knowledge of his past.

However it appears to us that Mr BCH has only partially admitted to his sins and has not made restitution with his daughters. Hence we are of the opinion that Mr BCH is still continuing his lies and is not demonstrating true repentance worthy of reinstatement.

As already stated our knowledge of these unsavoury events is very limited and hence we seek your assistance. We would greatly appreciate any comments you may deem appropriate that will assist us in making our decision.

We thank you for your continued assistance and look forward to your reply

Dear Brothers:

We received your letter of April 29, regarding BCH request for reinstatement, and trust the following comments will be helpful.

Your letter states, "It appears to us that BCH has only partially admitted to his sins and has not made restitution with his daughters. Hence we are of the opinion that Mr BCH still continuing his lies and is not demonstrating true repentance worthy of reinstatement." As highlighted in our previous correspondence, at least three of Mr BCH daughters have provided clear and credible allegations of sexual abuse by their father. In addition, there are unsubstantiated accusations of him sexually abusing others. We also note in his current 'Plea for reinstatement' letter, that, after admitting to "touching" one of his daughters, Mr BCH now blames her for the incident.

Therefore, as the situation appears to be unchanged, we can only repeat the comments from our letters to the Kalamunda elders dated November 9 and December 21, 2010:

> You mention that BCH "admits to one occasion in which he molested one of his daughters." Nonetheless, other daughters also accused him of sexually abusing them, and he has both admitted to and denied these accusations on different occasions. In this regard, a judicial charge of lying was connected to his denying the allegations of child abuse in court. We note his current admission to you that "he has a tendency to stretch the truth at times." In fact, over many years the various committees established a pattern of lying. Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offences, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he was repentant. In view of this, and in harmony with the new ks10 elders' textbook, on page 118, "two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform him."

While we understand BCH refuses to admit to allegations he now claims are not true, there is overwhelming evidence that he did commit the offences and now continues in a pattern of lying. In view of the nature and extent of Mr BCH offences and the established pattern of lying, extreme caution should be exercised in considering his requests, particularly until he provides an open and honest confession to the judicial committee.

We trust these observations will be helpful and commend your handling of this difficult matter. Please accept our warm Christian love and greetings.

Dear Brothers:

We received your letter of October 30, regarding BCH s request for reinstatement. Further to our letter of October 30, 2010, and the Loganholme body of elders' letter dated March 26, 2010, to your body of elders, we are pleased to add the following direction.

You mention that BCH "admits to one occasion in which he molested one of his daughters." Nonetheless, other daughters also accused him of sexually abusing them, and he has both admitted to and denied these accusations on different occasions. In this regard, a judicial charge of lying was connected to his denying the allegations of child abuse in court. We note his current admission to you that "he has a tendency to stretch the truth at times." In fact, over many years the various committees established a pattern of lying. Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offenses, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he was repentant. In view of this, and in harmony with the new ks10 elders' textbook, on page 118, "two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform him."

Dear Brothers:

We received your letter of April 24, regarding BCH For your information, earlier this year, BCH sent a letter directly to the branch asking for advice on being reinstated. As he appeared to be associating with Wattle Grove Congregation at that time, we forwarded his letter and our response to the body of elders there, providing the following brief direction.

BCH was accused of sexually abusing all four of his daughters. He confessed to this at the appeal committee hearing. While he claims one of the daughters has forgiven him, we understand that he has never apologised to his daughters. A charge of lying was connected to his denying the allegations of child abuse in court. He has served time in prison for his offences. Until he acknowledges his sins, namely child abuse, which constituted por·nei´a, and lying in connection with these sins, it would be difficult to consider that he was repentant.

We are not asking you to approach BCH to discuss these matters, and have provided this information so that you will be aware of his past if he does request reinstatement. While at some point a local judicial committee may need to respond to his request for a meeting, we would not recommend that the committee meet repeatedly with Mr BCH while he continues to deny the allegations. You should not hesitate to contact the Loganholme judicial committee for further details if there is a question over any future request for reinstatement.

Thank you for seeking our advice in this matter. We count it a privilege to be associated with you in caring for congregation interests. Please accept our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Dear Brothers:

Thank you for your August 28 letter regarding BCH. Mr BCH should be well aware of his daughter's accusations of sexual molestation against him. We understand that is why he is in prison. We would not recommend that you continue to meet with Mr BCH while he continues to deny these allegations. In July, 2008, we wrote the following which we believe still applies in his case:

> You mentioned that after hearing that there are pending allegations of sexual abuse he "is still claiming his innocence and then expressed despair at not being able to approach his daughters about these allegations due to a court order that prohibits him from making contact with them for 10 years." You seek our comments since he is "unable to make contact with his daughters to either confront this new allegation of abuse, or to apologise and make restitution."
> Since BCH continues to claim his innocence, it is obvious that he has not repented from his sins. As mentioned in our previous correspondence, these sins are clearly established. Therefore, we do not see how his being unable to contact his daughters has any bearing on his application for reinstatement. Surely, he must first confess his sins to Jehovah and before the judicial committee. After he has genuinely taken this initial step, any works befitting and evidencing repentance, such as apologising to his daughters, can be evaluated by the judicial committee. The judicial committee will then determine if his claimed repentance and accompanying works are commensurate with his degree of deviation.—Please refer to our letter dated LLD June 14, 2007.

We hope that these few comments are of assistance to you and take this opportunity to convey our best wishes and warm Christian love.

Dear Brothers:

After reviewing your letter of August 27, we are pleased to provide the following comments on BCH 's further request for reinstatement.

Your letter states that Mr BCH was asked, "Did he also mean he confessed to the charges that he had abused his other daughters besides BCG ? His answer was that he did not abuse them and that this is not what he intended to convey." You ask "if there are some other sins that he is accused of that have not yet been settled, is it possible to know what they are? . . . Why would he continue to deny abuse of other daughters if they were true? It would be so easy for him to admit and confess and finish the matter?

As highlighted in our previous correspondence of May 5, 2011, at least three of Mr BCH 's daughters have provided clear and credible testimony of sexual abuse by their father. This includes the daughter who serves as a missionary. Her testimony is balanced and reliable, as opposed to Mr BCH 's long-established pattern of lying to elders and judicial committees. In addition to the conclusions drawn by various judicial committees, his deceitfulness is well known to responsible brothers here at the branch. As the matters have been clearly established judicially, and despite his repeated requests, there is no need for the local committee to review the original case with him. Rather, as the situation remains unchanged, we can only repeat the comments from our previous letters:

> Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offences, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he was repentant. In view of this, and in harmony with the new ks10 elders' textbook, on page 118, "two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform him."

Despite his persuasiveness and the difficulty of the situation, we again advise extreme caution in recommending the reinstatement of a child abuser who has a proven history of dishonesty. If responding to future requests, two elders could briefly remind him that the only basis for reinstatement would be "genuine repentance" over the sexual abuse of his daughters and the associated lying.—ks10 11:4; 7:10; Prov. 6:16-19.

We trust these observations will be helpful. Please accept our warm Christian love and greetings.

Dear Brothers:

In response to questions regarding BCH as raised by the circuit overseer on his S-303 report dated December 19, we are pleased to provide the following observations.

In his report, Brother Roberts asks whether anything can be done to assist BCH BCH and reference is made to our May 11 letter to the body of elders. The question is raised, "if he can't confess to his daughters personally, because they don't want anything to do with him, then would it be appropriate for him to do so in writing to the elders and they could pass it on (to) the daughters? If he feels there is any misunderstanding in regards to the situation where he is accused of lying, then the burden of proof is upon him not the elders."

Until now, BCH has not acknowledged the extent of his offenses to the judicial committee or his daughters and has continued in a pattern of lying. Rather than there being a "misunderstanding in regards to the situation where he is accused of lying," he was disfellowshipped for lying. Nonetheless, if he now proposes to submit a written confession and apology for the elders to forward to his daughters, he may choose to do so. He should also provide a copy for the judicial committee.

By way of reminder, please note the following recent direction provided to the body of elders in our letter dated November 9, 2010:

> You mention that BCH "admits to one occasion in which he molested one of his daughters." Nonetheless, other daughters also accused him of sexually abusing them, and he has both admitted to and denied these accusations on different occasions. In this regard, a judicial charge of lying was connected to his denying the allegations of child abuse in court. We note his current admission to you that "he has a tendency to stretch the truth at times." In fact, over many years the various committees established a pattern of lying. Until he fully acknowledges to Jehovah and the judicial committee his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offenses, it would be difficult for a committee or the victims to consider that he was repentant. In view of this, and in harmony with the new ks10 elders' textbook, on page 118, "two members of the committee should acknowledge receipt of the request and briefly inform him."

In view of the nature and extent of BCH offenses and his pattern of lying, caution should be exercised in considering his requests, particularly until he provides an open and honest confession to the judicial committee. We trust these further reminders will be helpful and take the opportunity to send our warm Christian love and greetings.

Dear Brothers:

Thank you for your letter dated 28 July, 2007, regarding Mr. BCH

You mentioned that after hearing that there are pending allegations of sexual abuse he "is still claiming his innocence and then expressed despair at not being able to approach his daughters about these allegations due to a court order that prohibits him from making contact with them for 10 years." You seek our comments since he is "unable to make contact with his daughters to either confront this new allegation of abuse, or to apologise and make restitution."

Since BCH continues to claim his innocence, it is obvious that he has not repented from his sins. As mentioned in our previous correspondence, these sins are clearly established. Therefore, we do not see how his being unable to contact his daughters has any bearing on his application for reinstatement. Surely, he must first confess his sins to Jehovah and before the judicial committee. After he has genuinely taken this initial step, any works befitting and evidencing repentance, such as apologising to his daughters, can be evaluated by the judicial committee. The judicial committee will then determine if his claimed repentance and accompanying works are commensurate with his degree of deviation.—Please refer to our letter dated LLD June 14, 2007.

We hope that these few comments are of assistance to you and take this opportunity to convey our best wishes and warm Christian love.

Your brothers,

Watchtower B. & T. Society

Donald Angus WILSON states:

1. I am 56 years of age and live at an address known to police.

2. I am a travelling minister with the Jehovah's Witnesses religion involved in visiting and serving different congregations each week in and around the Canberra area in New South Wales.

3. I first met BCH when I attended the Mareeba Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in around 1983. I served there as an appointed elder for approximately one year. During this time, I continued living in Atherton and travelling to Mareeba each week.

4. In the late 1980's, I served as a member of a committee of elders who heard an appeal from BCH concerning a decision made by three of the local elders to disfellowship BCH from the Mareeba Congregation. The two other elders making up that committee along with me were Jim BENNETT and Joe MIRAZIZ. I recall that Jim BENNETT was the chairman for that meeting.

5. I also remember that Ron de ROOY and Kevin BOWDITCH were also present during the appeal with BCH There was also a third elder present but I am unable to remember his name.

6. At some point during the course of our meeting with BCH BCH I remember that his daughter, BCG raised an allegation that her father had gone into her bedroom and sexually interfered with her by touching or fondling her inappropriately. While I do not recall the details of what she alleged that he did do to her, or how many times it had occurred, I do recall that it involved touching and fondling her inappropriately in a sexual way.

7. Initially BCH denied his daughter's allegation, but I recall that he finally admitted that he had done what BCG alleged.

8. We as a committee upheld the original committee's decision to disfellowship BCH from the Mareeba Congregation.

The complainant could not recall the dates of the two week period, but said that she was between 16 – 17 years of age at the time, and that she thought that it happened during the later part of the year (See pg. 40, Ln1 – 10). (see also XXN Pg. 50, Ln 20 – 60, Pg.51, Ln 1 -55).	The complainant's mother took her younger siblings to Expo '88 – so only the complainant and her father occupied the family dwelling during that period.

CT 8		S.350 – Indecent assault	called her into his bedroom and had the following conversation with her. He said, BCG I want you to do something for me." She said, "What?' He said, "I know that you wax and I want you to wax this bit here for me." At the time of the defendant asking her to do this he has pulled his shorts down and exposed part of his penis at the complainant. She was unable to see the head of his penis but she saw the shaft of his penis and the pubic hair. The complainant said, "No, do it yourself or get someone else to do it, I'm not doing it." He said, "I want you too." She said "No" and walked away (See Pg. 31 EIC). "GUILTY PASSION" EVIDENCE (not indicted as unable to be particularised – a number of other incidents of same nature – 2 or three separate, indistinguishable occasions) The complainant recalls the defendant coming into her bedroom when she was asleep and being awoken by feeling someone lying next to her in her bed. The complainant felt the defendants arm over her arm and his hand touching her breasts over the top of her clothing and feeling something hard pushing against the top of her legs and bottom. The complainant said, "What are you doing?" The defendant said, "I'm cold." She said, "Get some clothes on." He said, "I just want to snuggle up, I'm lonely." The defendant moved his body closer to the complainant and moved his hand under her pyjamas and rubbed her breasts. The defendant also sucked her nipples of her breast and the complainant protested with the defendant to stop touching her. The defendant said, "Shhhhhh, it's okay I'm your father." She said, "No don't." He said, "Be obedient to your father." The complainant recalls that she used to wear underpants to bed and remembers that she wasn't wearing any and has no memory of how they came off. The defendant put his hand between the complainant's legs and started rubbing her vagina with his fingers. The complainant felt and saw the defendants finger going in and out of her vagina. During the whole incident the complainant recalls protesting and defendant telling her to be quiet, to be obedient to him because he was her father. The complainant kept pushing his hand away and telling him "Don't." The complainant can not remember why the defendant stopped but she stated it went on for about an hour. Complainant recalls that this happened on two or three other occasions (refer to pages 31 – 33 EIC, particularly lines 1 – 30 on Pg.32) (See also XXN at pg. 51, Ln.60, Pg. 52, Ln.1 – 35). "GUILTY PASSION" EVIDENCE The complainant also described how the defendant had obtained a sexually explicit videotape to watch – she said that it showed two people having sex in a shower (NB sounds like a scene from "The Kentucky Fried Movie" – an R-rated general release video tape of around that vintage). He showed her the video while they were eating their dinner (See EIC Pg. 33, Ln.10-20), (See XXN Pg. 60 – 61).	Bowditch, Dino Ali and Ron de Rooy)

			"GUILTY PASSION" EVIDENCE The complainantn recalled that she would have to get dressed up for meetings and that her father would make comments to her like, "Oh you're sexy BCG , you've got it. BCK hasn't" (See EIC Pg. 31, Ln.50). "GUILTY PASSION" EVIDENCE The complainant also recalls that the defendant would perve on her in the shower during this time and she recalls catching him one day looking though the bathroom window and him smiling at her (See EIC at Pg. 37). "GUILTY PASSION" EVIDENCE XXNof witness BCJ Please note the witnesses answer at Pg. 110, Ln.50 in relation to him noticing the defendant's taking liberties with his teenage daughters, that he considered inappropriate. GENERAL VIOLENCE AND DOMINANCE (displays part of a pattern carried on during the sexual assaults) ...when he used to call you at that time you'd have to be there in an instant, you couldn't just like let – if he called you twice you got a belting for it (See EIC at Pg. 31, Ln.20 -30) You can't backchat to my father. It's very likely you'd get knocked down (Pg. 59, Ln.5) Complainant describes beatings given to her by father (Pg.59, Ln.20 - 40) My father was not the type of person you would punch (Pg. 60, Ln.20) See evidence of BCJ at Pg. 108, Ln. 30 – "...she was really scared because he did belt her , he kicked the bathroom door in , in her face, she had black eyes at some stages...he was ver physical with her at times..." (HEARSAY – see XXN page 113, Ln.25) COUNT 1 The complainant recalls the defendant calling her into the main bedroom (where her parents slept) to say goodnight. The defendant asked the complainant to come over to give him a kiss goodnight. She went to the queen size bed and remembers giving him a kiss on the cheek and then being on her back on the bed on top of the covers. The defendant started to touch her breasts above her clothing and put his hands underneath her pyjama top and touched her breasts with his hands and also sucked her nipples. The complainant recalls protesting the whole time with the defendant and telling him to stop. He kept telling her to be quiet and to stop talking and to be obedient as he was the father (Pg. 33, Ln 40 – 50 EIC).	Only incident of this nature to happen in main bedroon (involving general sexual assult and then contact between penis and vagina).

COUNT	DATE	OFFENCE	PARTICULARS	PARTICULARS	COMPLAINANT
			COUNT 2 ALT 3 The defendant moved up and down and pushed the bottom half of his body very hard against her vagina she could feel his penis against her vagina above her pyjamas. The complainant could feel the defendant pushing his penis through her pyjama bottoms and underpants and felt his penis a little inside her but felt her clothing being forced into her vagina from the pressure of the defendant's penis. At the same time as the defendant was trying to force his penis into the complainant vagina he was touching her breasts. The defendant took the complainant pyjama pants off and climbed on top of her and tried to put his penis in her vagina through her underpants. The complainant could feel the defendant's penis in her vagina and it was hurting her. The complainant was telling the defendant to stop and kept saying to her to be obedient and to be quiet. The complainant recalls the defendant trying to remove her underpants off at the same time and she kept protesting with him and wouldn't let him remove her underpants. Throughout the whole incident the complainant recalls saying "No" and telling the defendant to stop. The complainant managed to move away from the defendant and was facing the other end of the bed was lying on her side trying to get off the bed. The defendant put his right arm over her right side of her body and moved her legs apart. The defendant pushed his body against the complainant's back and she could feel his penis (which was still hard) against her bottom and between the top of her legs. The complainant felt the defendant's penis trying to go through her underpants and he was pushing very hard against her. She stated she was telling him to stop and he was telling her to be obedient to him that he was her father. The complainant felt the defendant's penis sitting between her legs on her skin and could feel him pushing his penis against her skin. The complainant can not recall why it stopped but recalls telling him that she wanted to go to bed (See Pg. 33 Ln.51 – 60, Pg.34, Ln. 1- 20 EIC). NB Under XXN at Pg.53, Ln.20 the complainant said "...it probably went past the entrance". At Ln.25 she says that she was positive that the penis did go past the entrance because it was hurting her. Undoubtedly the defence will argue that she can not be sure whether she was penetrated – my view is that the complainant's answer on this point is not inconsistent with her evidence in chief, and she remains adamant that he pushed his pnis into her vagina, albeit her underwear was forced inside her. COUNT 4 The complainant said that she and the accused travelled to Cooktown to participate in a working bee to build a new Kingdom Hall. She said that she travelled with the accused to Cooktown on a motorbike. She said that the return trip was very bumpy and she got a sore back. She said that the accused offered to massage her back for her - he told her to lay	SEE ABOVE Incident happened directly after trip to Cooktown.

			down on his bedroom floor, and began to massage her back - he started to pull her pants down below her waist onto her hips when she pulled them back up. The accused said, "Oh no you've got to massage this part too". The complainant said, "No". The accused continued pulling her pants down until her whole bottom was exposed. The accused then used a massage device that her mother had for her neck. The accused touched her between them cheeks of her bottom and touched her on her skin and her vagina – she kept saying –"No don't", and she kept trying to pull her pants up – the accused said, despite her repeated protests, "Be obedient to your father". She said that the accused just stopped and she got up (Pg. 36, Ln. 30 – 50). COUNT 5 The complainant recalls the last occasion the defendant tried to have sexual intercourse with her was just before her mother and siblings returned from Expo 88. It was in the morning sometime. The defendant called to the complainant whilst he was in her sister BCK bedroom. The complainant went into the bedroom and saw her father standing just inside the bedroom with no clothes on from the bottom down. The defendant said to the complainant, "I want you to touch it." At this time the defendant grabbed the complainant's hand and was pulling it towards his penis which she could see was circumcised. The complainant touched the defendant's penis only because the defendant was forcing her to touch him, she was trying to pull her hand away and told him "I don't want to touch it." The defendant started to touch his penis in front of the complainant. He was stroking his penis with his hand back and forth saying, "Like this." She recalls that he didn't do this for long he then said, "I want you to do something else for me." The complainant. recalls seeing money in the defendant's hand he said, "I'll give you $300.00 to help you with your car and $300.00 after if you bend over on the bed." COUNT 6 ALT 7 ALT 8 She said, "I don't want to do it. I don't need your money." The defendant became angry and grabbed the complainant around her waist and moved her to side of her sister's bed and he said, "Bend over." At the same time the defendant pushed the complainant in the back and forced her down on the bed. The complainant recalls feeling the defendants penis pushing between her legs and trying to force his penis into her vagina through her underpants. At this time the complainant remembers going "berserk" and telling her father to stop touching her and hurting her. She managed to get out of the room and run from the house. She ran to a friends house and returned sometime later. Under XXN at Pg.53, Ln 35, the complainant acknowledged that this incident was different from the first incident because she freaked out and the defendant was trying to	In main bedroom of house at Biboohra Only incidents to have happened in BCK bedroom at Biboohra house. SEE ABOVE remove her pants – she struggled and got away from him – whereas she was certain that during the first incident in the main bedroom that he did penetrate her vagina. The complainant recalls that after each incident with her father he seemed to act as if everything was normal and never said anything to her, he acted as if nothing had happened which seemed to confuse the complainant more. ADMISSIONS BY ACCUSED During the 1980's the accused and his family were members of the Jehovah's witness congregation of Mareeba. In 1989 the accused was being investigated by a group of Elders of the Jehovah's witnesses in relation to another matter (infidelity on his part). As part of that investigation the accused met with the elders on several occasions. The complainant approached one of the elders (Dino ALI) during this process, and advised him of the assaults committed upon her by the accused (See EIC Pg. 41, Ln.20 – 40). The complainant also told her then boyfriend (and future husband) BCJ of the assaults (See EIC Pg. 42). She said that she and BCJ actually spoke to Dino ALI together – she did not tell him of the specific incidents , only about generalised touching (ALI was a friend of her father) (See EIC Pg. 43, Ln.1 - 20). Dino ALI organised a Jehovah's Witnesses Committee meeting (constitued by Dino ALI, Ron BOWDITCH, Ron De ROOY) between the elders of the local church and the accused, and the complainant was invited. The complainant confronted the accused with the allegations (she describes the content of her accusations at Pg, 43 of EIC – apparently she was asked if the accused tried to have sexual intercourse with her – the complainant said that she replied that she didn't know - because of her relative innocence about things sexual), and the accused denied the allegations and called the complainant a liar, a troublemaker – he threatened to belt her after the meeting (See EIC Pg. 44, Ln.1 – 20). Thje elders found that there was insufficient evidence to substantiate her claims – no action was taken. PLEASE NOTE – defence subpoenaed docucuments from Jehovah's Witnesses which arrived on final day of CH – none were separately admiited into evidence. NOTES OF CONGREGATIONAL MEETINGS Among these documents are note of various congregational meetings held to discuss the defendant's actions in many respects, including allegations made by the complainant – refer to pages 4 - 6f the notes in this respect – it is recorded on Pg. 4 that the complainant alleged molestaion on 4 – 5 occasions. On Pg. 5 – the defendant's denial is recorded –

			however it is also recorded that he admitted that he had kissed his daughter on the mouth and hugged her "tightly" – he said that it was all part of his parental training of the complainant. In relation to her allegatio that he looken in on her as she was showering – he said that he may have been walking past, In relation to an allegation that he chased his daughter – he said that they were playing with a bucket of water. In relation to the allegation that he broke into the bathroom – he said that he may have been in a hurry to bathe, or his glasses may have been inside with a note "despite nakedness of BCG See also the second last page of the notes – where the complainant was admonished not to talk about "family matters" with other people!!!! On Pg. 6 the defendant is reported to have said – if any improper acts, then BCG was looking for the opportunities Another meeting was held only a couple of days later and the same people were present , but no action was taken (see EIC Pg. 160, Ln.20 - 35) The complainant said that the defendant was shortly thereafter disfellowshipped in relationship to his committing adultery with another woman (Pg. 44, Ln. 25). CAUTION – the notes are littered with mention of inadmissible and highly prejudicial matters [particularly offences alleged in relation to other children of the family, and the issue of his infidelity]– must be carefully edited. LETTER TO JUDICIAL COMMITTEE AT BEENLEIGH FROM RON DE ROOY AND DINO ALI – dated 23/4/90 The letter is a good summary of all of the allegations levelled against the defendant, and the punishment meted out to him – it also makes it quite clear that the defendant was considered deceitful. LETTER BY DEFENDANT TO SERVICE DESK WATCHTOWER SOCIETY SEEKING EXPLNATION FOR NOT BEING RE INSTATED– dated 7/7/91 The defendant's letter acknowledges that he was justly disfellowshipped. In the second paragraph he says that he is remorseful for having disappointed Jehovah and said that he stopped his wrongdoing. On page 2, par 2, he admits that he has sinned and says "I was not disfellowshipped for nothing". I expect that these references are not specific enough in relation to the actual offending – and if admitted would give rise to the possible admission of the later more self serving correspondence

COUNT	DATE	OFFENCE	PARTICULARS	PARTICULARS	COMPLAINANT
			LETTER FROM BEENLEIGH CONGREGATION EXPLANING WHY DEFENDANT WAS NOT RE-INSTATED – dated 16/8/91 The letter makes it clear that the defendant denied the "porneia" – molestation of the complainant – and told the congreagetion that he considered that he had been forced into making the admissions. It is very clear from all of the internal correspondence from Jehovah's witnesses that the defendant moved about from congregation to congregation desperately seeking to be re-instated NB – I have spoken to Vincent Toole – solicitor for Watchtower – he will see if a Director of the Watchtower will be wiling t o provide s S.93 Evidence Act Statement in relation to the entirety of the documents subpoenaed by defence – which should cover the admissibility of the documents allegedly authored by the defendant and by congregational members from Beenleigh, St.George and the Service desk – where no witness statements have been obtained. See also evidence of: Dino ALI – said that complainant told elders that defendant had touched her on the breasts and other parts of her body. That he had come into her bedroom late at night and was touching her then. On another occasion when she was showering he had looken through the window. On another occasion he had come in through the door – or he had smashed the door down and entered the bathroom while she was showering (see EIC Pg. 157, Ln.30 – 60). Defendant was present when accusations were made - and denied them - saying that if anything had happened that it was all part of his parental training and in response to her questions about sex (EIC Pg. 158, Ln.1 - 20). Kevin BOWDITCH – he said that the complainant told the meeting that her father came into the bedroom wearing only a towel and that her father grabbed her and molested her. He admitted that the complainant may have said that the defendant touched her breasts and genitals (EIC Pg. 169, Ln. 15 – 35). He said that the defendant admitted entering the room but not to touching the complainant (EIC Pg. 170, Ln.15). Under XXN the witness agreed that the complainant made no mention that the defendant had sexual intercourse with her (Pg. 175, Ln.30). He described the defendant's demeanour as uptight and the complainant's as weepish and upset (Pg. 177, Ln.20 – 30). Ron De ROOY - He remembered that the complainant told the meeting that the defendant would look at her in the shower, that he would come to her at night in her bedroom and sexually interfere with her – he remembered that the defendant made the comment that he was teaching her things to do with marriage (EIC Pg.180, Ln.20). The defendant denied her accusations (See Pg. 180, Ln.45). During a later meeting (approximately one or two weeks after the first) the complainant repeated the allegations, in the presence of the accused, the original elders, and on this occasion an appeal comitte of elders (James BENNETT, Joseph MIRAZIZ, Donald WILSON) - the accused admitted that what the complainant had alleged was true. The minutes of the meeting, held on 23 July 1989, revealed that the accused had admitted to "... gross sexual acts against his teenage daughter (five or six times) during the latter part of last year." See also the evidence of: James BENNETT – (Statement admitted per S.110A) – paragraph 5 – one of the defendant's daugters told the meeting that the defendant would come into bathroom while she was showering and that he had interfered with her in some way – could not recall the exact words. Par 6 – when the defendant was confronted with the allegations he admitted they were true. XXN – the witness agreed that the complainant did not use the word "rape". However he did believe that the allegation did involve sexual intercourse (Pg. 193, Ln. 10 – 20). Joseph MIRAZIZ - (Statement admitted per S.110A) - Par 4 – he recalled that the complainant made some very serious allegations aginst the defendant – they involved him sexually interferring with her. He recalled that she said that her father came into her room during the night and sexually abused her by fondling and massaging her private parts. Hen also recalled that the complainant's sister BCK also made allegations that the defendant had sexually interfered with her. Par. 5 – he recalled that during the meeting the defendant acted in a very menacing way toward his daughters – even standing up and raising his voice and pointing his finger at them He recalled that on two occasions he asked the defendant to cease his actions and to sit down. Par. 6 – he said that he told the defendant that based opn the evidence of the complainants that it had been established beyond doubt that he did molest them -. Par 8 – the defendant replied – "yes, yes, yes. Ok. Get on with it". The witness said that he was completely satisfied that his reply was an admission that he had done the things alleged. XXN – the witness did not recollect that the complainant ever said that she had been raped He could not remember mention of sexual intercourse – but did rember her saying that he had fondled and massaged her private parts (Pg. 207, Ln.10 - 20). RXN – I asked the witness to describe the defendant's demeanour – see Pg.208, Ln.1-20. Donald WILSON – (NB statement not tendered at CH and witness not called) – Par 6 - witness remebered that the complainant raised an allegation that the defendant had gone into her bedroom and sexually interferred with her by touching or fondling her inappropriately – he did not recall any further details – but did remember that the allegation involved touching and fondling the complainant ina sexual way. Par 7 – the defendant initially denied his daughter's allegation – but finally admitted that he had done what the complainant alleged. PRETEXT PHONE CALL BETWEEN COMPLAINANT AND DEFENDANT Peter Godsall has already read the transcript and formed a view in relation to its usefulness. On Tuesday the 27th of February, 2001 Detectives from the Child and Sexual Assault Investigation Unit attended at the defendant's home. The defendant sought legal advice and as a result was advised not to partake in a formal interview. The defendant was arrested and conveyed to the Brisbane City Watchhouse were he was formally charged.

			OTHER WITNESSES BCJ – FRESH COMPLAINT? (boyfriend and former husband of complainant) – lived with complainant's family for a short time in 1987 – developed, then revealed to defendant, romantic feelings for complainant – was then asked to move out. Kept up a clandestine – but non-sexual – relationship with complainant, and claimed that complainant was often punished by father as a result of real or imagined contact with him (Refer to Pg. 104 – 107 EIC). Said that for a period in 1988, while part of complainant's family was away in Brisbane for Expo 88, he house sat a property close to and behind the complainant's dwelling for as period of about four days (Pg. 107, Ln.1 -10). Said that the complainant told him that her father had tried to rape or molest her – he said that she did not use the word rape – but she said something to the effect that he tried to have sex with her (Pg.106, Ln.10 - 30 EIC). He couldn't remember when she told him this information – he said that he remembered that she said it at a meeting he attended at the congregation in REDAC (EIC Pg.106, Ln. 10 – 20). He said that the complainant told him about the incident [in late 1988 or early 1989 – par 6 of statement] sometime after it happened. Her explanation for the delay in telling him of the assault – was that she was afraid of her father and that he would not let her talk to him (EIC Pg. 106, Ln.45). He said that he had another discussion with the complainant the following day – [she told him that it happened while the rest of her family was away at Expo 88 and that it happened over a few different nights. He remembered that she said that he tried to get her to watch dirty movies and that he tried to have sex with her. Statement Par.10]. The complainant also said that that she had tried to run to see him at the house (EIC Pg.107, Ln.10). He said that he spoke with the defendant on the telephone the following day and questioned directly about the complainant's allegations. He said that at first the defendant denied her allegations – said that she was mental and dreaming it up. After a while he said that it was nothing to be concerned about, (EIC Pg.107, Ln.45). He also recalled that the defendant admitted that the complainant had tried to seduce him (EIC Pg.108, Ln.1) [he also recalled that the defendant said that the complainant had seduced him – that they were playing around and that she got the wrong idea and was curious about things – statement Par 13] He thought that the delay between the assaults and the complainant telling him was a matter of months, a couple of months (EIC Pg. 108, Ln.30). XXN – Please note the witnesses answer at Pg. 110, Ln.50 in relation to him noticing the defendant's taking liberties with his teenage daughters, that he considered inappropriate. Please note that the witness was asked about the complainant's mental state after he revealed that she had seen a psychologist – Merilee Frankish – the witness did not agree that the complainantconfused reality with fiction – he did agree that she had bee prescribed Zoloft and posibly Prozac in order to treat her condition (XXN Pg.124) The witness also said that the complainant purchased her car, a Morris 1100, AFTER Expo'88 (see XXN Pg.125 – 126 – please note that this ties in with the complainant's assertion that the accused offered her money to purchase a car during the final assault) PLEASE NOTE – TO THE BEST OF MY KNOWLEDGE THE COMPLAINANT'S PSYCH

BCI - (former wife of defendant, mother of complainant) – Witness thought that the family trip to Expo'88 was in about October for a period of two weeks (EIC Pg.130, Ln.1 – 20). Said that her husband left the family home to move away in about April 1989. She said that a couple of days after he left he returned home again – she said that she tried to convince the defendant not to leave. There was an argument between the defendant and complainant in the hallway of the dwelling – the complainant said, "Mum, dad's been rude to me" – the witness said that the defendant then tried to hit the complainant.. The defendant then suggested that the witness should believe him rather than the complainant – the witness said that she told him that she believed the complainant (she then referred to a complaint made by the complainant's sister BCK some years earlier) (See EIC Pg.131, Ln. 10 – 20). She said that the complainant later went into some detail in a later conversation – possibly on the same day – the complainant said that the defendant tried to break into her room a few times and he fondled her breasts a few times (XXN Pg.132, Ln.20). The witness remembered that the complainant obtained her car after Expo'88 (XXN Pg.139, Ln.10 – 25). The witness recalled the shower door incident - she did not see it happen but heard the yelling and saw the complainant's bruised eye afterward (XXN Pg.140 – 141). NB I HAVE NOT SUMMARISED THE EVIDENCE OF THE POLICE PRE-TRIAL ISSUES 1. Admissibility of alleged admissions made in Congregation meeting – Paul Smith has already advised that he will object to the admissions being led. The basis for this objection will surely be that (1) they were co-erced in the sense that there was an obligation in the Jehovah's witness faith to admit guilt before a person could be forgiven; and (2) that the content of the admission (based on witness recollections) is of a character to suggest that it was made in order to end the meeting and obtain a favourable outcome, rather than being a truthful statement (see EIC of De Rooy Pg. 184). The prosecutor must have reference to the evidence of the elders who were present at the meetings: Dino ALI – was aqsked about the powers of the committee – he agreed that it had the power to disfellowship a person from the congregation "if it was necessary and if the person was unrepentant" (XXN Pg. 162, Ln.50). Please note the further XXN at Pg. 166 – the witness agreed that an individual's willingness to repent was an important factor in the decision as whether or not they were to be disfellowshipped. At Pg. 167 the witness agreed that if a person was repentant and admitted to what he had done then it made it easier for them to remain in the church. The above is particularly relevant given the actual wording of the record of the result of the meeting where the complainant's accusations were upheld – the document signed by BENNETT, WILSO and MIRAZIZ dated 23/7/89 record the decision thus: "1. Porneia, in the form of gross sexual acts against his teenage daughter (five or six times) during the latter part of last year. Under pressure of witnesses he confessed to this charge." 2. Admissibillity of pretext "admissions – Paul Smith has already advised Peter Godsall in relation to this point and Peter does not require any further instruction.

Dear Brothers:

We are writing in connection with our correspondence SD:SSB February 26, 1996. One of the elders telephoned the Society in March regarding this matter involving Brother BCH Brother BCH daughter says that he has not apologized for sexually, mentally, and physically abusing her, and the elder confirmed that this was the case.

Was this factor taken into consideration when hearing his plea for reinstatement? If Brother BC BCH is genuinely repentant for his wrong conduct, he ought to do what he can to assist his family members who have suffered because of his wrong actions. In our letter to Sister BCG we mentioned that this matter would be pursued. Please reassure her that this is the case.

We look forward to hearing from you shortly and send our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Dear Sister BCG

Your letter of December 19, 1995 has just been received in our office. We were saddened to hear of the very serious circumstances which you outline in your correspondence. In response, we have made enquiries into the matters you raised from the brothers who handled the situation.

We are sure you have appreciated Jehovah's loving attention to your situation in various Watchtower articles to help victims of child abuse. You will no doubt also very much appreciate the article in The Watchtower April 1, 1996, with the theme, "Always Throw Your Burden On Jehovah." You can be confident that Jehovah knows the truth about every matter and considers you precious, especially as you are using your life to worship him. He is not insensitive to what you have gone through. The heart warming prayer of David is appropriate where he entreated Jehovah to preserve his tears in his "skin bottle." As David had confidence that Jehovah would not overlook the extreme suffering that he had experienced, you can have the same trust. (Ps. 56:1, 5, 8, 11) As you correctly say, you were victimised, just as someone who was raped. However, in Jehovah's sight, you are viewed as one who is loved and spiritually clean.

We note your reasons for concern that your father may have been reinstated prematurely. As mentioned, we will follow through on the points you have raised. By continuing to keep active in Jehovah's service and close to him, you will be assisted to cope with your emotional wounds so that these do not dominate your thinking. With Jehovah's help and your own efforts, you can look forward to the new world of peace. Even now, you will continue to be able to have the "peace of God that excels all thought."—Philippians 4:6-9.

Do not overlook the help that can come from those who have been appointed to oversight in the congregation. (Isa. 32:1, 2) Be assured of our prayers on your behalf to the end that you will continue to rely on the strength "beyond what is normal" from Jehovah. (2 Cor. 4:7) With our letter we are pleased to send an expression of our warm Christian love and best wishes.

Dear Brothers: We are sending you a copy of Sister BCG letter. Could we please have your comments on the specific points she makes with regard to the reinstatement of her father. If, as she states, he has never apologised to her, we wonder about the basis for reinstating him into the Christian congregation. Kindly reassure Sister BCG your desire to support her. Thank You. We send our warm Christian love and greetings.

Dear Bros,

I'm writing to you on a matter of great importance. I rang the Bros at the Spruce desk last week + it was suggested I write a letter.

My name is BCG at Moreton congregation.

Some years back I was sexually, mentally + physically abused by my stepdad father BCH who is now in Logan Long. Who at the time was serving as a Ministerial Servant in Maroochy Long (1988).

A little history. My father appeared to be a very spiritual man. He drummed into our heads never to trust anyone (except him of course) Never to speak to the elders unless he would be there, + if we disobeyed him we would be kicked out + treated like a disfellowshipped person.

I never had any close friends my father kept us secluded. So I have a strong nature + he had 'training' for me.

1988 towards the end of the year it started. Ranging from touching me everywhere to offering me money (like a prostitute) to engage in relations. + trying to have intercourse with me.

Let me explain how you feel in a situation like that.

First of all you have a numb paralysed feeling from head to toe. Then eventually your mind says that this can't be happening - he is your father, a ministerial servant, your role model. So you try to stop it + he says "I'm your father, I'm your father, be obedient." But still protesting you say stop, 'don't', you try locking your door, trying to run away, asking, excuse. ect.

The next day comes + it haunts you - but your fathers back to normal, telling you your stupid, + your a troublemaker + best of all Mental. ect. I was told that so many times it is still in my head, so essentially I believed it. I convinced myself that they were nightmares and that it was all in my head. But there allway a part of me who knew what really happened.

One day he wanted to get in the shower, when I was already in there. He started violently banging on the door, I had just enough time to grab a towel then went to open the door just as he kicked it + busted the lock + hit me in the face - I had a black eye. No, he said he was not sorry. The next meeting Zini Ali (one of our elders) asked what happened to my eye? I told him that 'My father kicked the bathroom door in my face. Zini just laughed + said 'Oh did he.' - He obviously thought I was joking. I'm mentioning things like this to show how even elders can be fooled.

I have never felt so trapped, alone confused + frightened in all my life. Except I had Jehovah. I used to cry + pray to Jehovah at night + beg him to help me + to put his angels all around my bed to protect me from my father.

But it just kept happening each time getting bolder + more brazen about it. I felt there was no way out I tried to cut my wrists to run away, even get runted over by the trucks. And as a result of the stress I suffered from facial hives, lost a lot of weight, developed a nervous cough, migraines that made me be sick + mysterious pains in the stomach. I was also very erratic in my emotional behaviour.

To outside looking in, I looked mental. It was that bad; that all my family nicknamed me 'Nutty Fruit Cake' + 'Mental'. On that basis no one would believe anything I had to say or even take me seriously.

Months went by + Much to my surprise my father left us 7 children + Mother. Of course Mother was devastated & the congregation was in complete shock.

Since he had left; my safety was not an issue + now I thought I should do my part to keep the congregation clean as well as for my own piece of mind. It was then that I told your Brother in the cong' (now my husband) I thought surely he'd believe me. When I told him his reply was 'Are you trying to get back at your father?' As it was common knowledge to a lot of people that I took the brunt of his anger. I lost all hope again. But to my surprise BCJ came back the next day (he'd done some research) + had confronted my father + he admitted it to BCJ but tried to 'weasel' his way out + said that it wasn't his fault, So we then approached the elders who insisted on hearing every detail about 3 times before they started the committee — I was a wreck Bro Keen (P.O at the time) told me I'd have to tell my mother. Thing were definatly going from bad to worse. When I spoke to Mother I found out that she already knew he was like that. As she caught him molesting BCK when I was a baby. But thought it wouldnt happen again My father got the truth about 4 years after that Incident, at St George.

I was devasted that she knew and took it so lightly. She never once warned us girls or even told us what to do if it ever happened. I spoke to my older sis BCK and she said it happened all along while he was in the truth. And then I found out he abused my little sister as well BCL 4 + BCM 2½, + I hadn't stopped him!

Hoping to find comfort + understanding from my mother, I got just the opposite She was angry at me, said that I wanted it to happen + blamed me as to the reason he left + broke up the family. Yet she still tried to get him to come home. I felt abandoned + just wanted to die.

My father eventually admitted in the appeal committee to the incest — the first + only time I actually heard it.

My father hated me with a vengence was continually threatning me, following me + demanding I get in his car + talk to him about what I said. By this stage I feared for my life, even the sight of him collapsed me both physically and emotionally — My knees would literally knock together! All the time denying that anything of that nature had ever happened.

On the other hand, Mother told the whole congregation + most of the town what had happened. Now my 'greatest fear' was alive and running and not one thing I could do about it.

After 2 Meely years he got re-instated in the congregation of St George. I really think that a very, very, small price to pay for scheming to leave his wife + children for a younger woman. Not to mention what he did to his 4 daughters in sentencing them for life, trying to heal the wounds + memories.

When he got reinstated I asked the elders. why??? They said, there comes a point when they can no longer hold him back, as they can't read hearts!

* According to the columns doesn't it say that more is involved than just doing all the right things. (meetingsect)
- Anyone can do that.
- Insight Book Pg 773 Comparing Judas to the apostle Peter .... note the different types of repentance Mt 26:75 compare Luke [redacted]. 22:31,32
- Pg 774 Paragraph 2. Righting the wrong 'Absence of concern for rectifying the wrong shows lack of TRUE REPENTANCE.' Compare Eze 33:14,15. Luke 19:8
+ the Insight Book sums it up when it says that the heart motive is the determinative.

My father is only interested in pleasing men, not Jehovah other wise he would not have done the following

1. Abused all his 4 daughters - men couldn't see as Jehovah could.

2. Be so proud of himself when he returned (early last year) to Mareeba long. Shaking everyones hand as though he'd done nothing. He also brought REDACTED his wife.

3. After his reinstatment continued on with his scheme to marry REDACTED the younger woman.

4. When he came to Mareeba last year he made a point of going out witnessing in Mareeba - even though he stayed in Cairns. This happened on several occasio - only for show to man.

5. Made no attempt to apologise to any of the children (except BCK his favourite) for what he had put them through.

6. Craftily 'wiseled' his way out of paying an ongoing maitance for his children. He had a special order made up saying he could only pay maitance when he work full-time. Do children only eat when your working full-time?
Would not a repentant attitude move you to go without computers + new cars in order to feed your children?
- Once again only for Man - not Jah as he says in the bible that, 'those not caring for their own are worse than those without faith.'

7. Continuing to deny that he did anything at all to his daughters, surely shows a haughty unrepentant spirit. Once Again Jehovah knows, men can't. If you want proof at this there is a letter enclosed from my father, to my mother. He is starting to make mistakes again.

8. Here he has taken Jehovah's laws lightly an dsneering.

9. Not concerned in the slightest what affect he has had on Marcella Corp. On the way he so arrogantly came back shaking everyones hand.

10. And last but most important, what it's done to Jehovah's name.

11. Not once apologising to me - but rather the haughtiness, pride + refusal to accept that he did any wrong. Quite the opposite from what you would expect from a repentant child molesterer. See magazine on Child Abuse.

May I also a few questions?
If you were in his shoes - now .... what would you do?
And what if a brother previously before knowing the truth - raped someone. Then became a 'witness' raped another young sister in the corp, then another who were too scared to say anything. This brother then raped another - this time the sister spoke up + told the elders. The elders then found out about the 3 previous 'rapes' + And also found out he left his wife for a younger woman. And abandoned seven children. How would you handle it?

The same as what has happened already - with my father?

In effect that is what he has done? The article on 'abuse' says 'incest is worse than rape'.

• Four times → all of his daughters - he then denies it verbally, but is very careful not to have anything written.

• The way he doesn't come out and say that he was disfellowshipped strongly: but suggests it.

Wouldn't you be cautious of a man like this - I am quite shocked that the way he fooled the brothers and got reinstated - only after 2 yrs. Has Jehovah's organization got loopholes for 'crafty wicked men' like my father?

I know I can't expect justice now. But hasn't + shouldn't Jehovah's organization have more of a measure of justice than, worldly churches + Authorities.

I feel as though what he has done to me + my sisters is just swept under the carpet. — He WILL DO IT AGAIN! + in Jah's Organization if he is permitted to stay.

In the 'Watching The World' it says that even these TYPE of people do receive professional help - not many are cured of this revolting sickness. And been likend to an alcholoic. THEY ALWAYS HAVE A PROBLEM, STILL.

I'm very very very concerned of about who will be the next victims + Jehovahs Name AGAIN.
* I honestly think that his reinstatement committee may have overlooked a few areas.

Right through this whole matter I have always prayed things scriptually.

I felt it my obligation to warn you of what most likely will happen again in the Logan Cong.

- And to let you know how cunning he is. And that I have done all in my scriptual power to protect the unwary, new people in the cong. Now whatever he does again is on your heads.

Please don't consider me abrupt and disrespectful. As unless you have been through my situation I am only trying to stress the importance of this issue. And of how it affects you in the years to follow. I NEVER want anyone else to go through what I am still battling.

I am still a faithful servant of Jehovah + plan to be as long as I live.
I'm only 24yo old + have a very supportive loving husband. Together we have Two young boys. Jehovah has blessed me in that way.

But I am still battling - you see I've had 3 nervous breakdowns, on the verg of being labelled 'schizophrenic'. And diagnosed as major depression.
To this day I still have terrible nightmares - that I have difficulty in believing that they are not real.
And the ongoing guilt feelings that come from such an experience.
I'm still living in Mareeba, where all of the past is 'Common' Knowledge to everyone in the comg.
So as a result of that I find it difficult to sit through the meetings, and coping with the frequent panic attacks! for which I'm on medication too
I have often contemplated suicide as the pain is so great. The memories pictures, + voices [redacted] are always there to haunt me, just as I start to get on my feet.
My heart truly feels crushed + broken all up inside. And only wish it had never happened.
And I hurt all the more when I see my little sisters, BCL + BCM now 13yo + 10yrs starting to come to grips with what their own father did to them. I've enclosed a letter BCM sent to her father. (NOT ENCLOSED)

And I only wonder what decision they are going to make when it comes to Jehovah or the world.

Unfortunatly they have only seen hypocricy when it comes to the kind of families that they were and are now in. My mother + REDACTED are not good examples of loving parents.

I can relate: as looking back on my childhood I feel cheated and failed of having parents who were supposed to love and protect you. Instead I had to protect myself from my parents.

I hope + pray that the end of the system is not too far away. Where the former things will not be called to mind.

And that along with my husband + children, my little sisters will be there too. (in the system)

Now I can only leave the matter in your hands + Pray Jehovah directs the outcom what ever it may be.

Please don't just read this letter, and not reply to me. As I would really apreciate your reassurance that the matter has been handled. And that I've done all I can. Thank you very much for your time + hearing my concerns.

P.S My husband has always given my father the opportunity to talk but only with 2 elders present.

Body of elders,

Dear brothers,

We thank you for your letter concerning BCH and his appeal for reinstatement.

From your comments and observations of BCH it appears that he is earnstly seeking Jehovah's forgiveness by"works befitting repentance" (2 COR.7:8-11)

Because of the complexity of the case involving BCH and others involved,we have been hesitant about recommending his appeal for reinstatement in the past.

However,your comments in your letter show that you are satisified that he is demonstrating Godly sorrow and true and genuine repentance..

Therefore we,the Judicial committee in Mareeba go along with your recommendation for reinstatement Brothers,we realize the responsibility of judging matters that affect peoples lives and relationships is certainly a weighty one. So we must rely on Jehovah's guiding spirit in these matters knowing that ultimately all will be accountable to him through our saviour Jesus.

We take this opportunity to send you our love and greetings!

Dear Brothers.
Greeting from St.George.

The purpose of this letter is in regards to BCH appeal for re-instatement.

After ten months of observation and after applying the counsel received from the society inletters SD:SSA April 3 ans SD:SSA May 16 1992, we feel that there is ample reasons for his re-instatement. Acts 26:20.

Since our meetind with him after receiving the above letters we have noticed a marked change in his attitude towards the brothers who have been appointed to positions of oversight by Holy spirit.

He has also expressed his sincere remorse over his past conduct and has seen the truthfulness of Gal.6:7 and has humbly accepted scriptural counsel given him.

Since January 1992 he has been living in a tent in the council caravan park which is very simple and by no means comfortable in the hot months or the cold months out here.

He has moved here to distance himself from the enviroment in Beenleigh that was not good for his circumstances .

The fact that he has lived under these conditions,in itself, indicates to us that he has a sincere desire to return to Jehovah,s organization at any cost to his personal comfort.

He has rarely missed a meeting since moving here and has observed ll restrictions placed upon a disfellowshiped person.

He witnesses to all and sundry in the caravan park and at his work in an informal way and has actually brought along an interested person to the Public talk.

We wish you Jehovah,s rich blessing as you responsibly care for this matter.Your continued coorperation with other mature brothers will assure Jehovah,s willis accomplished.(Matt.18:18-20). We know you will keep this matter before Jehovah in prayer, looking for his direction. Be assured of our desire to be of assistance and we send our very warm Christian love and Greetings.

Judicial committee
St.George congregation

Dear brothers,
We have received a letter from the Elders in the Beenleigh East congregation as well as a letter from the Society (April 3.1992) regarding BCH and your recommendation for his reinstatement.

In their letter,the Beenleigh judicial committee has outlined a number of areas that concerned them in the case of BCH

One area of concern is that BCH is still holding to a pattern of deceit. It seems that on a number of occasions he has changed his story or denied certain events that he had already admitted before a Judicial Committee(s) in the past. On the subject of 'Judgement related to Repentance', the R.S Scot (page 114) says; "Is the person cooperative? When questioned are his answers forthright?" Our concern is that over the years this problem of deception still exists. During his hearing BCH the Mareeba judicial committee, the Appeals Committee and always understood before the Beenleigh Committee. BCH was continued a pattern of admitting or denying stories depending on whom he is talking to.

We concur with the observations and remarks made to you brothers by the Beenleigh Judicial Committee also with the comments and suggestions made in the Society letter regarding this case that caution be exercised. We feel also that it would not be wise to recommend BCH at this time.

Because of the complexity of this case we would encourage you brothers to contact the Beenleigh Committee for further information that they have compiled in this matter. This may help you to get a 'clearer picture' of things. However if more information is required please let us know and I will gladly assist you in whatever way we can.

Thank you brothers for your consideration of the above comments. The

The responsibility of judgement is a weighty one and we pray that Jehovah's holy spirit will guide you brothers as you judge this matter.We also take this opportunity to send you our warm Christian love and greetings.

Your fellow brothers.

Dear Brothers:

We have received a letter from the elders in the Beenleigh East congregation with regard to BCH We were a little surprised to hear that you have recommended his reinstatement seeing that he has only recently moved into your area.

The elders in the Beenleigh East congregation have encouraged caution in recommending the reinstatement of this person due to his persistent pattern of deception. Of course, while we do not want to hastily reinstate a person, if he is Scripturally qualified for reinstatement we would not want to delay his return to the Christian congregation. Pages 114-115 of the textbook "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock" provides fine Scriptural guidelines for judging matters related to repentance. Genuine, godly repentance should be in evidence before considering reinstatement. We would like you to consider the Bible principles on these pages in relation to BCH Perhaps he wishes to be reinstated quickly so that he can marry REDACTED

With regard to his past wrong conduct, he seems to change his story depending upon whom he is talking to. Do you believe he has a genuine regret over his wrong conduct and the reproach he has brought upon Jehovah's name and congregation? Does he have a heart-motivated rejection of his wrongdoing? Page 130 of the above-mentioned publication mentions: "Where there is evidence of conspiracy between individuals to put away their mates and marry each other, considerable time should elapse before a hearing for reinstatement may be held." The length of time that has elapsed since a person was disfellowshipped is not the chief determining factor in deciding when a person may be reinstated. Rather, a person should prove his profession of repentance and his overall pattern of life should indicate that he wishes Jehovah's approval.

Thank you for considering these matters and the comments of the brothers from Beenleigh East congregation. No doubt the judicial committee from the Mareeba congregation will be in contact with you shortly as well. May Jehovah bless you with insight and wisdom by means of his holy spirit as you endeavour to effect his will. (Matt. 18:18-20) Be assured of our warm Christian love and greetings.

Dear Brothers,

Greetings from the St.George Congregation. We are writing this letter with regard to the written plea for re-instatement that we have received from BCH

Some three months ago he moved into our congregation from Beenleigh.He has conducted himself in all respects as a person wishing earnestly to come back into Jehovah's organization.

He has not missed a meeting since his arrival here and even travelled 400 k.m. to attend a circuit assembly within weeks of arriving here.

In talking to brother Monte Baker from Beenleigh he mentioned that they too felt that his conduct of late met with their approval and they were contemplating a favorable recommendation too.

As BCH is now in our congregation the brothers asked us to observe him and make the recommendation when we saw fit.

As his recent letter to us indicated it is his earnest appeal and desire to return to Jehovah's organization we therefore unitedly request that you give this matter your earliest,heartfelt and prayerful consideration.

We look forward to your early reply so that we know how the matter has been decided.

Attention Service Desk

Dear Brothers

Thank you for your time regarding my case.

Unfortunately, things are no better than before. No mercy has been shown only a keen bent to review the past case.

I have for the last 27 months had the same experience as King David, referred to in the magazine article (April 15 page 20, par 1)

" Jehovah IS more merciful than humans"

The committee meeting last night (along with others), has confirmed that yet again. No mercy.

The brothers wanted to go through everything I did wrong 2 or 3 years ago and exact a point by point admission that, everything had occurred as charged.

Everything had NOT occurred as charged, that is why I appealed.

I tried to help them see the point that the society has said that "instead of reviewing the past case they... should warmly reflect their merciful concern" (page 23 par 14), but to no avail.

They misintrepreted my desire to follow the socitey's article as not wanting to "come clean" with all my sins. The Mareeba Brothers did exactly the same, because I was concerned that the truth was not being told by my accusers they thought I was not coming clean and not repentant. I was concerned about the facts.

In the end because of the pressure they were putting me under I came clean with even things I did NOT do. It is EXTREMELY TRAUMATIC to face 3 more human judges (They have your life in their hands) wanting to review the case all over again.

Since I have been in Beenleigh East congregation I have been forced to review the case in part or whole, with a total of 6 different judges. It is nothing to them, they do this every other day.

Brother Clarkson misinterpreted my nervousness and emotional trauma (after more than 2 years of being kept in limbo), not knowing whether to rejoice or to die. And he expects me to be calm cool and collected. Also in extreme anxiousness since writing to the society 2 months ago waiting, not knowing what is going on.

He thought I was holding back. That was NOT the case
The truth is my life. I cannot work and help support my family. I cannot concentrate like I used to. I cry a lot over it all still. My doctor gave me a certificate for 3 months sick leave, because of "acute anxiety and depression"

I'm sorry if I have not got the casual "not be worried" attitude you think I should have had bro clarkson.

It is NOT TRUE (as the elders have said many times) that if you are telling the truth you have nothing to be nervous about. A person who has repented of a lying charge is ten times more concerned about getting every statement evry thought correct because if he makes a mistake in one thing, he is immediately branded a liar. This extreme concern makes one nervous.

Because of the EXTREME, EXTREME, EXTREME, pressure that a disfellowshipped person is put under, emotional, mental and spiritual, in every case they are willing to say they DID things which they did in fact NOT do.

This is what has happened with all the "disfellowshipped" brothers I had spoken to in times past. See below.

[I did not want to write a chronology of events because the Mareeba brothers said the beenleigh brothers had been sent ALL the information already.

I did not write down notes of every meeting like they did. And to detail EVERY SINGLE event over the last 3 years was impossible for me as my memory is not what it used to be. I knew it would be used against me, the same as it was in mareeba]

The brothers interpreted this as bad, and seemed to me to be of the opinion that if I thought I had been "wrongly done by", I may not be the type of person they want in the congregation as I may be a disruptive influence, because of being hurt and resentful.

....A legitimate...., but mistaken concern.

If I were of that inclination would I be informal witnessing now? Would I be attending meetings? Would I have taken my mother to a circuit assembly 2 months ago? Hardly! Also this weekend one person I have witnessed to a few times, intends coming to a meeting for the first time.

Some time ago, I had spoken to a number of people who had been once disfellowshipped in times past, and it seems they were correct when they all said,

"the elders are not interested in the TRUTH of what really happened. Even if you didn't do half the things you were accused of, you have to say yes you did it otherwise they think you are not repentant"

Is this how the faithful slave wants things to operate?

I had repented and ceased the wrongdoing a NUMBER OF YEARS AGO. It had all been gone through and confessed and dealt with then.

page 23, end of par 12, says "When that man had repented and ended his immorality. Paul directed the congregation to reinstate him." likely no more than 6 months after he ended his ONGOING immorality.

Why did the congregation have to be "directed"? His repenting and leaving his wrong course was not understood by the elders.

I hate and loathe the wrong things I did and would never entertain even the thought of doing those things again or allowing my spirituality to get to such a low ebb to be influenced by bad association and desires as a result. I repented and ceased the wrongdoing BEFORE I was disfellowshipped, 27 months ago.

Since then I have led a clean life. I have abstained from fornication, drugs, drunkeness, bad association etc.

Every day I am at the meetings and do some bible study, the day text and pray. I am extremely discouraged by the mercilessness of the brothers and their requiring me to review the case again though not in every minute details, verbally.

At our previous meeting I was reluctant to review the case again as it was going against the society's direction. At the elders request I nevertheless supplied them with a written statement of events that occurred. At the meeting last night instead of reading the scripture recommended on page 23 par 14 namely James 5:20 about "covering" sins, the brothers were more interested in "exposing" the sins which I had already confessed to years ago.

PLEASE WRITE AND TELL ME WHAT IS WHAT. If I am wrong let me know so that I can adjust my thinking. I may be misunderstanding the article that indicates a point by point rehashing of sins is not the wise thing to do.

Please write and tell me..did I make a mistake? Are the present judges supposed to review the case or are they not? I have said I was willing to go to Mareeba to have my reinstatement dealt with by the original brothers.

"It is very distressing to me. Please, let me fall into the hand of Jehovah for many are his mercies; but into the hand of man do not let me fall."

I have not been told when I can reapply, could you please let me know so I will not be kept in Limbo again.

I am writing to ask for your help.

As you are already aware, I went to Mackay as a disfelowshipped person over two years ago. I had repented and stopped the wrong nearly a year before that, and two years ago in the case of Sis REDACTED when we parted company.

During the past two years I have "never missed" a meeting. I read a few chapters of the Bible nearly every day. I read the magazines from cover to cover, and meditate on what I learn.

I have moved away from beenleigh, at Bro. Bakers suggestion. He spoke to me again and suggested to move away because it may help me to be reinstated. Also I pray to Jehovah for many hours every week.

IN HARMONY WITH THE WATCHTOWER OF APRIL 15 p23 par 14 COULD YOU "KINDLY EXPLAIN WHAT STEPS I SHOULD TAKE" IN ADDITION TO WHAT I AM ALREADY DOING, SO THAT I CAN BE RE INSTATED.

Please write it down for me in a letter so there will be no mis understanding as my life is at stake. (After more than two years of this terrible punishment I dont want to live any more - if Jehovah doesnt want you it is no use living - is it?

Incidentally, the man in Corinth, according to the Society was re instated 6 MONTHS AFTER HE LEFT HIS SINFUL COURSE. Read the SI book.

Dear Brother Baker,

This is a plea for reinstatement. The fact that I now have evidence (since May this year) of BCI repeated acts of adultery, will no doubt help you to view my reinstatement plea in a different light. She admitted these to me back in Mareeba in May 89 and vowed she would "never admit it to the Elders."

She LED me to believe there had been only one act. Whereas there had been multiple acts. The evidence shows that she says "I dont know how many times" it occurred. I had forgiven her one act of adultery already, thanks to the strength and merciful example of Jehovah.

Jehovah is a merciful and a loving God, he does not forever keep finding fault and even though I made some mistakes a year or two ago I abandoned the "sinful course of conduct" back then, and kept my integrity to Him."If errors were what you watch, O Jah, O Jehovah, who could stand? For there is the true forgiveness with you, in order that you may be feared."

(My coming to Brisbane turned out for the better because I was able to be here when my mother was given a 50/50 chance of living a few months ago, when she had a heart attack. She had been complaining of travelling chest pains since last December, [That's when I decided to come down] and even up till the morning she collapsed, but the doctors tests she had since January, did not show a heart problem).

I am sure you are aware of the fact too, that I.. AM desirous of having a good relationship with Jehovah and his organization. I appreciate the meetings as a valuable source of corrective counsel, together with Jehovahs word and the publications of the "faithful and discreet slave".

I "devour" every Watchtower and Awake and Jehovah has opened the way for quite a number of opportunities for informal witnessing and has blessed those efforts enabling the placing of a number of publications, (aside from family). Also I have the older magazines displayed in the waiting room at work (some, not many, have been taken)

I am really and truly sorry that I have wronged Jehovah and am before Him just as the tax collector in Jesus' illustration...

"who was not even willing to raise his eyes heavenward...

but kept beating his breast, saying...

' O God ... be gracious to me .....a sinner ' "

Dear Brothers,

Re: Reinstatement request by BCH

Enclosed is a further request for reinstatement by BCH As you can see by the date of the request we have held on to it for a couple of months. We have done this for a couple of reasons, as follows:

1. So that we can make further investigations as to whether BCH is having any further communications with REDACTED

2. We felt it was almost too soon after the earlier request which was subsequently declined by your committee. Especially in view of the notoriety of the case and the deception that was involved in the hearings. Therefore, we agree with Bro. Bennett, that some time should lapse before he is considered again.

In relation to the above point No.1. We have not found any evidence of either REDA or BCH purposefully making any effort to contact each other, but we gather there must at least be eye contact with each other as both congregations do share the same Kingdom hall and there are times when our arrivals and departure times do clash. Also up until September 1990 both congregations were in the same circuit.

Interestingly, even though we were in the same circuit, the congregation REDAC attends was in a different section, thus they actually had a different asembly date and even a different assembly site. Nevertheless, whilst giving a talk in that section, I did notice BCH present. Just as to why he attended her assembly and not ours I really can not say. He may have had good reason to do so, or he may still be wanting to keep eye contact with her.

BCH seems to be doing all the right things for one who desires to be reinstated; coming to all the meetings, observing the rules of conduct for a disfellowshipped person and so forth, but unfortunately we cannot read the hearts of men. So we can not honestly make a recommendation to your committee just yet as to how we feel about his reinstatement. We feel you brothers are far more aware of gravity of his wrongdoing than we are. So we would like you Brothers to reply to us, as soon as you wish, as to your decision on his reinststement.

May Jehovah's spirit continue to guide your thoughts and deeds as you serve the brothers in your area.

Dear Brothers,

I have left that cong. & intend to stay at Bruce & Dads temporarily, they are both pretty crook. The reason for this letter is to make a plea for re-instatement. I can see clearly that my attitude back then was haughty & my thinking was way off. I really regret believing that way, for some time now.

I can't believe that I was so stupid, I'm really shocked at what I did.

I showed disrespect for Jehovahs way, & hurt the most precious relationship I had. I want to show him I regret for that way of thinking. Please give me a chance. I have gone to every meeting and am usually the first one there (except book study) They told me I couldn't go (at the hall) Warmest Regards

Dear Brother,

I wish to appeal unto say I was right, because I can see my thinking was all wrong. Being on my own the last few days has enabled me to put my heart to Yahweh & beg for his mercy. I have brought reproach on his name & from the one taunting him. Who I think I was getting involved with another woms wife, I don't know how I could allow myself to get led along by my own heart to that situation.

I really feel shaken up by what I allowed to happen. I want Yahweh Holy Spirit with me is more important than that. That is why I am determined to follow through on this wicked curse.

I am thankful to Yahweh & you brother for being enough to discipline me & bring me to realize the stupid thing I was doing & every time I think of it they come to my eyes & I find it difficult to work or eat. Thankfully at last I can sleep very well sometimes 10 - 12 hours the ground is read through.

I am sorry for causing you all this trouble & to the approach on friends Name. 1.6.89:

(Ron De Rooy – Chairman; K. Bowditch; D. Ali)

Meeting with REDACTED REDACTED BCH BCI BCK BCG

REDACTED

Due to marriage problems, REDACTED sleep separately for 2 months and about 1 May 89, REDACTED discusses leaving REDACTED, who feels he is failure in providing for household.

(Many years ago, both had committed fornication).

- Plan is formulated between REDACTED and BCH first that, since REDACTED marriage has broken down and BCH and BCI similar, that REDACTED should consider BCH as marriage partner – and REDACTED and BCK could do same (once free).

REDACTED feels that, ignorance in knowing that resuming sexual relations sufficient to divorce, free himself and REDACTED to consider new mates.

- BCH considers this a good idea _ tells REDACTED that BCK has liked him etc.
- All plan to leave Mareeba, start fresh elsewhere.

perhaps Mackay or Brisbane!

Incest of BCH to BCG is now exposed – BCJ phones BCH wants him to approach elders. BCH denies.

(In meantime, BCG and BCJ approach Dino about this problem).

On 1.6.89 (meeting at K.H.) meeting already set up to meet with all concerned. Events develop where BCH tells REDACTED of him not attending. All meet REDACTED BCH at C.E.S that day; REDACTED visits Dino to confirm meeting to go ahead, goes back to BCH and REDACTED then all three drove back to REDACTED caravan – BCH and REDACTED drive off together from there, all day and comes home late.

Have a get together for tea – includes BCH BCK REDACTED where they pair off - BCH and REDACTED leave soon and REDACTED BCK hold hands

About middle of May '89; BCH comes with divorce papers to REDACTED and REDACTED for REDACTED to help fill out.

- Later, REDACTED lies down leaving BCH and REDACTED alone.

REDACTED sees BCH and REDACTED kissing, hugging, whispering about intimate things e.g. where to kiss after [married?].

(REDACTED doesn't think anything wrong of above actions).

REDACTED and BCK desperate to get married – have discussed prospect although REDACTED not proposed. He plans to go to Brisbane to finalise parting, earn money while REDACTED goes to Mackay to live.

Seems BCH intends to help them move.

NOTE: Unbelievable of level of immaturity of all part. REDACTED yet REDACT has been honest, straight forward with evidence.

Seems BCH and REDACTED have spent time together in van with REDACTED in back asleep. BCK invited to go with REDACTED to Mackay.

With REDACTED

Denies any serious involvement. Has spent time with BCH but always with others. Trying to support BCH she claims!

(Also mentions failure of her marriage and intention to separate).

Helped fill divorce papers for BCH of marrying BCH herself = possible but not definite; only idea!

- About 2 weeks ago, REDACTED and BCH discussed marriage plans to each other.

- Admits that her and BCH drove off alone together to Cairns and back (1.6.89) to discuss accusations

against BCH

Asked of any intimacy with BCH - denies it.

(At the time, BCH walks in with chips and coffee for REDA only).

Of BBQ on Sat night last?

- BCH and REDACTED were in van alone with REDACTED – sick and REDACTED asleep inside.

  Shortly, BCH and REDACTED leave.

BCG and BCI - molesting! 4 – 5 times.

- BCJ knows; perhaps too REDACTED - REDACTED

  BCG very shaken and upset, therefore, during BCI holiday to expo BCH fondles BCG and this happens several times after and during which BCG claims she runs to REDACTED home where BCJ REDACTED are living, to expose BCH BCH also looks through shower window when BCG taking bath, sees him and tells him to go; "stop perving" (???)

  BCG has tried to talk to REDACTED only talks of her anger to her dad – counsel = respect father.

BCI

- that BCH has gone to REDACTED [with?] story of V.D = fornication of BCI

  REDACTED tells REDACTED tells BCI

  BCH filing for divorce on this basis – BCH awaits medical results).

- Says BCH has abused 2 younger children, possibly - BCK too at age 2.

BCK (by herself)

- Tells of problems at home, of REDACTED as secretary and her mum's jealousy and BCI abuse of BCH with punching and episode with knife.

On attachments of BCH and REDACTED – admits it came and was discussed by BCH REDACTED and BCK

- Says REDACTED have grounds for divorce

- Says plans between self and REDACTED

On abuse of BCG – didn't know really but that BCH explained it as BCG wanting to learn.

On abuse to BCK

Yes, at age 3 (remembers vividly).

Also mentions that REDACTED appears to know of BCG abuse!

BCH BCG BCI

When faced and hears accusations; denies all.

- Says all part of parental training and yes kissed on mouth and hugged tightly but that's all!

  That BCG asked questions about subject.

- On looking into shower: - walking past perhaps? and remembers BCI was home.

- Chasing BCG to REDACTED - playing with bucket of water!

- Breaking down bath door? – hurry to bathe as glasses may have been in there (despite nakedness of BCG

BCH also stated that IF any "improper acts"

- BCG looking for the opportunities!

About BCM and BCL

- Father bathes children, wipes backsides etc i.e. normal parenthood responsibilities

---

BCH (-about REDACTED

- Denies firmly any involvement. Good friends only.
- Maintains problems in own marriage and BCI subjections.
- Said about REDACTED and marriage that anything is possible but not really considering it. Only discussed plans with REDACTED and self and then only during trucking for Atherton assembly.
- Denies any kissing, hugging.

BCH maintains own conduct above reproach due to physical abuse/ headship not respected / BCI low spirituality.

NB → Told by Committee of dangers and standing to cong.

[End of Meeting] Pt: (BCK and REDACTED sitting very close together – cuddling?

Pt: all go to REDACTED place, pick up children, and as we hear later, proves to be an eventful evening with REDACTED staying at REDACTED until about 7:00am and with BCK while BCH and REDACTED drove off in car for several hours on their own, BCH returning about 5:00am alone, claimed to have taken REDACTED home.

BCK REDACTED later individually tell of same events and all quite accurately. It seems that BCH and REDACTED are at tennis courts when police pull up to investigate.

Later when REDACTED encourages BCH to talk to elders, he feels there is no need since he can speak to any sis whenever!

REDACTED not happy with all these happenings under her roof and finds out involvement too with REDACTED and BCK

Next day, REDACTED leaves home and kids to REDACTED to disappear for couple of days to sort herself out, she says to a telephone call to Dino.

That night, Ron and Dino go to REDACTED to consider scriptural principles of his actions, being married and talk on material from WT 80 Aug 1, P.30,31 and WT 81 Mar 1 P31, upon which he gets very emotional, hearing of Jehovah's attitude to such circumstances. He seems to comply and we encourage reconciliation and help for the marriage. We indicate a meet with both of them might be appropriate.

[While there BCH calls in and asks after REDACTED who is not home].

Note too that REDACTED had called Kevin for bros involved to come out there so he can bring up to date on events at REDACTED

Same night, we visit BCK for some talk on WT articles

over

Commendably, she responds honestly of the involvement with REDACTED and BCH with REDACTED Also speaks of BCH insisting her relationship with REDACTED is good. Again we recommend caution in involvement and although visibly upset, appreciates information and notes how different it is from her Dad's.

- She does not like what her dad is doing with REDACTED and commendably, when pulled up before REDACTED by BCH to deny charge of molestation to BCK she insisted on the truth despite BCH efforts to the contrary.

On a later phone call to Dino (and subsequently after discussion with her sister BCG who recommended she report it to the elders concerned). BCK admits to BCH and REDACTED having kissed on several occasions, once on cheek and another time on mouth. She did not witness this personally but that BCH had told her that during conversation that he had never really felt like this with a woman (meaning REDACTED

BCK readily admitted also that she had done some with REDACTED and that when BCH heard, said that was alright.

3.6.89: Go to see REDACTED and REDACTED

They see no future for their marriage. Given up all hope.

Yet discussion revealed serious problem – sexual perversion.

As to the exact nature we were not explicitly told but it was serious enough that REDACTED broke down emotionally.

We continued to show from scriptures the scriptural position of the marriage and the need for BOTH to work on role of husband/wife. However, the sexual perversion seemed only one of a number of problems involved.

More encouragement is needed here with very frank discussions. REDACTED still seemed determined to separate, even for a little while.

- Advised also that of need to be conscious of contact with BCH 31st May – met as judicial committee with BCH and REDACTED separately and together).

- REDACTED admitted kissing had occurred between herself and BCH Comments otherwise were same as at other meetings.
- BCH on other hand, denied any wrong associations despite counsel to quit association with REDACTED Maintained a hard attitude and continued to reiterate innocence.

Despite shown articles from W.T., he felt justified in his course, presenting a letter of notification of divorce and reasons for it.

Commented on elders in Cairns had been consulted and agreed with him.

[Even?] when REDACTED asked if BCH could continue studying with her children and was asked not to go ahead with that but do it herself. BCH expressed some opposition to it.

We felt that to counsel BCH on his actions before REDACTED about their personal contact and [unclear] may impress on [mind & heart?] of seriousness once again of principle of conscience of bros and sis and Jehovah's view on "courting".

12.6.89: with BCK again, further impressed [unclear] to break any contact with REDACTED We felt there was strong feeling when she wept over counsel. She asked if future held any possibility with REDACTED after "divorce".

We again reinforced suggestion strongly not to consider it but break contact, advising that even if REDACTED may make further contact, she should stop it at once [unclear] employing us to approach REDACTED to quit.

- Met also with REDACTED today.

  Informed us BCH had told them of his intention of leaving family and over fornication on BCI part.

Mentioned [Mt Isa?] as event on which to proceed on divorce.

- BCH has asked Mt Isa hospital for any records of V.D. on his part and perhaps on BCI too – for both would have had to be treated; if this was really the case!

Attitude of BCH was very clam, deliberate as if all planned according to REDACTED

Definitely had told REDACTED of having VD!!

- ([unclear] being BCI therefore, BCI had fornicated)

Seems this event and perhaps another one has happened before BCI in truth.

NOTE: REDACTED had attempted to get REDACTED against BCH

On Tues last (5.6.89) had mentioned in book study to REDACTED REDACTED that REDACTED had left Mareeba and "that it was the best thing" etc. (in a loud manner, according to REDACTED – also a comment from REDACTED that if anyone wished to discuss the subject (and take BCH 's side) she would "tear them to pieces".

17.6.89

- Met with BCI and BCG

Counsel given on confiding matters of family to cong. members – used articles and scriptures.

Counsel given to BCG also of same matters using above articles.

- Also on attitude to mother; encouragement also given for her honesty and in seeking help (1 Tim 5:4)

Counsel given to BCI on her part as subjection to BCH could have helped cause separation and consequent matters. Used article and scriptures of her responsibility – encouragement to help family.

Interesting that both mentioned BCK as admitting to another "attempt" of molesting by BCH when going to school at later age (primary?) Need to check statement.

Quest: Should one be studying with younger children – even for short time until thing settle?

BCH took BCK hand to place it on his private parts.

– she pulled hand away and refused to speak with him for some time.

28.6.89 – Met as committee with North Cns elders to discuss BCH and REDACTED and involvement and comments about REDACTED and his comments to BCH about Alan.

(Seems BCH was gaining (?) support for his actions).

[unclear] disfellowshipping and [unclear]
due to wrongful action on elders part in this matter.

After discussing with us about the goings-on, elders left to meet with BCH and possibly phone us to be witnesses. Not called in – elders counselled BCH on his conduct with REDACTED – using same articles as we had.

Met on 10.7.89 to discuss disfellowshipping on BCH through charges of "LOOSE CONDUCT" and "Lying".

Appointment made with REDACTED and BCH – who were in Mackay – over phone (and we spoke to both of them) for appointment to meet on 12.7.89, 7.30pm at Kingdom Hall. Both accepted and determined to be there.

Our discussion as Judicial Committee also involved removal of privileges for REDACTED and BCK over their previous conduct though they have complied with counsel given since. To be invited to meeting = REDACTED BCK [lock?], REDACTED REDACTED and REDACTED BCI as witnesses to charges made.

(12 – 7 – 89)

REDACTED –
Most upset with BCH 1. Domination of REDACTED
2. Running around with wife, REDACTED

Questions in certain matters:
Eg: time of plot (6.5.89) visited BCH in Cns:

On trip from Mackay to Mt Isa tonight – carried on together from time in [Lemonts?]; kids told REDACTED BCH REDACT smooching etc.

- REDACTED raided bank, cleared out of $50.

- of arrangement, one most spiritual to get caravan, kids.

1 – 5 - 89
NB: REDACTED [instituted?] separation etc in [Mt Isa?]
Initially.

- Couple days later visited BCH

- (- occasions BCH RE DA CTE spent alone (NOTES [AT FRONT?]).

- On beach 6.5.89 BCH REDACTED = BCH REDACT held hands spoke confidentially of family problems.

- Later BC H E A held hands, arms over shoulders walking together along beach, while REDACTED waits.

- Arrangement from previous nite and day on beach to form alliances BCH idea to team REDACTED with BCK For she likes REDACTED

- Says "why don't you get to know BC K better" and urged/suggested REDACT to seriously think.

REDACTED on nite in caravan BCH RED ACT hugging and RE DA reclining against BCH kissing and discussing where to kiss etc.

When married RE DA discusses to RE DA next morning on immoral way RE DA apologises that RE DA saw it. Approaches BCH and expresses disgust at scene.

On other occasions of kissing etc RE DA admits to REDACTED when he comes from Brisbane and asks her, have been [unclear?]

On trip here, kids say BCH RED ACT arm around neck of BCH

[- Note BCH has lied to us about NOT TOUCHING REDACTED in any way immorally]

BCH uses [unclear] W.T.
(W 74 671, 672 QFR - using articles on divorce when speaking to us)

Supposedly shown elders in CNS to shut them up.

REDACTED

- Check if BCH RE DA in same van?
- Ask RE DA what occasions kissed etc with BCH

REDACTED (use script Heb 13:17,18) - BCH sits behind us and REDACTED
- so as not to influence REDACTED

How coping? Not sure which way to go – confused.

Romantic notions between BCH REDACTED in future perhaps.

Occasions of kissing, holding hands? – holding hands but not in public.

Kissing? Goodnight kiss every night

(over)

Believes Dad: [redacted] script free but not legally.

Discussed W68 P255 and AID book (divorce) to clarify position.

Again asked how often kissing? At least twice!

In tropical van park – [redacted] in tent [redacted] in van.

[redacted] Heb 13:17:

Asked of occasions where kissed/cuddled?

- Several occasions but not passionately
- Kissed yes and on mouth
- Yes in caravan and discussed with [redacted] about intimacys to be after marriage!
- We've become closer but not physically.

On why ignored our counsel? - needed time!

- Read WT 74 P671 [redacted] marriage dissolved due to not forgiving.
- Didn't keep counsel in mind
- (Reads W1968 on dating) + 1974 P671

Stressed seriousness of being together even at work.

"work + coupled with kissing and cuddling etc = loose conduct

- Seemed shocked.

BCH - told of charges "Loose conduct + lying"

Asked on our counsel? – could not remember much.

Also said clearly CNS[4] elders are wrong, inaccurate in what they told BCH at their meeting with him – "browbeaten", "threatened".

Been together? – maybe! / on several occasions (as REDACTED said).

Dating? No (eventually admitted grudgingly)

Kissing, embracing? – yes, in caravan, again grudgingly admitted. Felt bad BCI was there - would do it without REDACTED Didn't think it was really wrong!

Discussed marriage recently on a few occasions.

Lying! – On V.D. and fornication on BCI part; had mentioned to REDACTED

No; BCI has not admitted to another act.

Call in REDACTED tells BCH he tells her about V.D. and BCI

BCH has admitted to all things and also said that whatever BCG had said on molesting was true

discuss REDACTED and BCI

Cns Bros: Case prior to truth [unclear] now comes to light because BCI supposedly admitted to him!

BCH - about BCI that BCH asked BCI about acts of adultery of which one can count on one hand, she supposedly admitted.

In early March, other acts came to light – then separated.

When came home, BCI admitted fornication before marriage (Jan 15 1980)

Yet during our meeting, denied any admission on BCI part.

Ron explains to BCH on seriousness of [courting?] and loose conduct WT18 P255.

Tell BCH of decision to disfellowship! on GROUNDS OF "LOOSE CONDUCT" and procedure to take for reinstatement.

REDACTED shown Gal. 5:19 – again as above.

Not disfellowshipped yet.

Told not to have ANY CONTACT WITH BCH AT ALL

19.7.89 = BCH APPEALS, fax to Kevin.

To discuss with REDACTED on decision to public reprove.

- along with restrictions such as commenting at meetings and participating in demos/parts.

- also encouragement to work on marriage.

1 Tim 5:20 = pt to REDACTED of script. procedure of reproof
(REDACTED understands procedure)

Heb 12:11 = discipline = limits/restrictions placed.

Noted too that in body in another cong. will note advancement made by REDACTED to restore privileges in time.

Encouraged to cont. meetings and preaching And elders apply study program by mature person to help progress.

Discussion with REDACTED

About BCK on any personal contact?

- Appears to have broken contact.

- (Pt on REDACTED – appears REDACTED rys into business by ringing REDACTED at least twice).

Ron explains reason of being misled due to spiritually low! – REDACTED understood.

We show REDACTED W68 P255 on QFR on not being free and dating not approved.

REDACTED comments has no present intention to apply for divorce.
but see on developments with REDACTED

Due to positive response to counsel given in previous discussions with Judicial Committee RED ACT ED has restrictions placed re: no commenting, prayer, parts or privileges with meetings, pioneering etc for time until progress made to extent restrictions lifted/removed – cont. witnessing etc.

On above shown Heb 12:11 = discipline.

REDACTED – encourage to maintain marriage relationship (WT 74 P511-12.)

- We emphasise P512 (actually read and explain scriptural viewpoint on last 3 paragraphs).

- Consider seriously Jah's standard together, separately/privately + seek help of elders – here or in CNS.

- Told both of restrictions on each other being husband and wife out of consideration for each other.

BCK

Discipline on dating WT68 P255

- shown incorrectness of dating with above WT to again establish counsel previously given.

- James 5:14,15 = spiritually low person needing attention to progress spiritually.

  Therefore, program instituted to help e.g. STUDY with spiritual sister.

- Informed of restrictions = comments at all meetings and parts or demos.

  encouraged to attend and prepare for all meetings and field service.

Personal observation

(Reluctance about returning home, due to family problems could be slightly "jealous" (?) of BCG and BCJ future marriage. Too, freedom enjoyed in these 2 months to be curtailed perhaps by her mum).

Worried about announcement from platform – assured no!

BCG

To counsel BCG on talking too much to many others (including writing letters to friends about situation.)

1 Tim 5:13 applies – even of talking of family matters to BCJ unloving to other members.

(-letter written to Mackay prior to counsel given) about gossiping!

Therefore, demo's response since talked to and cautioned.

- BCI has talked to REDACTED about BCG being molested; seems REDACTED has asked leading quests about BCG feelings on it, discussing topics she has no right to.

BCI

On Gossip: 1 Thess 5:13

(I disagree) ?? WT 81 1 Sept P.20

→ slander → serious enough – disfellowshipped.

BCI denies talking to REDACTED (as BCG stated) about molesting!!

Rom 15:2 = speak upbuildingly, therefore, not gossip.

BCI mentions BCG and BCJ been together very often, holding hands, walking up street during tobacco festival as such, but spending huge amounts of time at home together. BCI has restricted this to about 2 or 3 times/week.

BCH has told BCI she's not his wife!!

REVISED COPIES ISSUED
State Reporting Bureau
Date: 15 December, 2004

DISTRICT COURT

CRIMINAL JURISDICTION

JUDGE SHANAHAN

v.

..DATE 03/12/2004

SENTENCE

HIS HONOUR: Would you stand up, please? BCH the jury have convicted you of five counts of unlawful and indecent assault and one count of attempted rape. The offences occurred in September or early October of 1988 and the complainant, the victim, is your daughter. She was aged around 17 years at the time. You were 40 years old at the time.

In my view the offences have clearly an element of hypocrisy about them. You were purporting to the community to be a God-fearing man and member of your church but at home you were subjecting your daughter to unwanted and unwarranted sexual advances.

Those sexual advances and contact were repeated over a number of occasions. They were in the face of her resistance. They involved fondling, digital penetration, and as the jury has found one count of attempted rape where you must have intended to have sexual intercourse with your daughter.

They are very serious offences in my view. They obviously involve contact, sexual contact with your own daughter and have had a lasting and lifelong impact upon her from the victim impact statement placed before me.

In my view, the seriousness of the offences themselves outweigh your personal circumstances and I take into account the fact that you have got no previous convictions, and I take into account these references that have been tendered on your behalf, but in my view the serious nature of these offences outweigh those and other matters personal to you.

There is some element of delay in this. The offences occurred in 1988. You faced trial on a number of occasions and through no fault of your own the matter has continued for quite some time. It's obviously caused not only difficulties to you, but also to the witnesses, particularly the complainant.

Taking all those matters into account, I am of the view that imprisonment of three years is warranted in relation to the offence of attempted rape. I set that sentence in terms of the entire conduct involved here which, as I say, involved repeated sexual assaults upon your daughter.

In relation to count 5, I order that you be imprisoned for a period of three years.

In relation to each of counts 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 I order that you be imprisoned for a period of 18 months.

Those sentences are to be served concurrently with each other.

I see no reason to ameliorate that sentence in any way.

I am also satisfied it is appropriate to make the order sought by the Crown in relation to you having no contact with the complainant and her sister, your other daughter. My order is as initialled by me and placed with the papers.

The content of that order is that you are to have no contact directly or indirectly with the complainant or BCK for a period of 10 years from your release from custody. It also involves prohibiting you from attending within 1,000 metres of either women's place of residence or work for that period of time.

Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse

Statement

Name	BCG
Address	Known to the Commission
Date	10 July 2015

1. This statement made by me accurately sets out the evidence that I am prepared to give to the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. The statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

2. Where direct speech is referred to in this statement, it is provided in words or words to the effect of those which were used, to the best of my recollection.

3. I was born BCG in Brisbane, Queensland, REDACTED 1971. My full name is now BCG a name my children chose for me. I had previously been known as BCG and BCG having taken the surnames of my partners at the time. I am 43 years old and have four children, the oldest of whom is 23 years old.

4. I am currently in my final year of a law degree and I work in the hairdressing and beauty industry.

5. I was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness when I was about 16.

Early life in the Jehovah's Witnesses Church

6. My father is BCH (sometimes called BCH and my mother is BCI Together my mother and father had seven children, of whom I am the second eldest. I have an older sister who is two years older than me. I also have three younger brothers and two younger sisters. REDACTED

7. I don't know exactly when my parents became Jehovah's Witnesses, but I think my father joined a congregation in St George in Queensland when I was very young. My mother joined the same Jehovah's Witnesses congregation a short time after my father. My father initially worked as a REDACTED and later worked as an REDACTED My mother stayed at home to look after the children.

8. When I was about ten years old, my family moved to REDACTED of Mareeba in Queensland. My parents joined the Mareeba Jehovah's Witnesses Congregation.

9. My father was a very strict and highly regarded Jehovah's Witness. When I was about 13 he was appointed as a Ministerial Servant at the Mareeba Congregation. Jehovah's Witnesses believe that when a man is appointed as an Elder or a Ministerial Servant, he is appointed by God's (Jehovah's) Holy Spirit to judge others. My father took his role as a Ministerial Servant very seriously. He used to quote the scriptures constantly, both at the Congregation's Kingdom Hall and at home. He regularly delivered talks from an elevated platform at the Jehovah's Witnesses meetings at the Kingdom Hall. My father was also given special responsibilities by the Congregation Elders, including conducting private bible studies with other congregation members, managing groups of Jehovah's Witnesses for Field Service (or door-to-door preaching), and teaching and counselling the Congregation.

10. When I was a child my father made me and my siblings attend meetings at the Kingdom Hall at least three times a week. There was a two hour meeting every Sunday, another two hour meeting on a Friday, and usually a one hour meeting mid-week. The meetings involved the Elders and Ministerial Servants teaching and counselling the Congregation about keeping the Congregation "clean" and righteous. In order to prepare for the meetings, my brothers and sisters and I had to study the bible and read daily scriptures.

11. During the meetings my father would pressure me and my siblings to offer answers to questions posed by the Elders and Ministerial Servants leading the meetings. He would also make me deliver scriptural talks before the Congregation from the platform in the Kingdom Hall and take part in Field Service.

Jehovah's Witnesses rules

12. In the Jehovah's Witnesses Church, men are at the top of the hierarchy and hold all of the authority next to Jehovah. Man is the head of the house and his wife and children have to obey him and refrain from questioning his authority. Adult females are next in line, and then children are at the bottom of the hierarchy.

13. There were many rules to comply with and things that I had to do in order to be a good Jehovah's Witness. As head of the household, my father was the person who dictated and enforced compliance with the rules in our house. He was also answerable to the Elders in the Congregation and I think he was therefore really keen to impress the Elders and show how obedient his family was. In our house for example, we were only allowed to watch certain television programs and listen to certain radio programs. We were not allowed to read anything other than Jehovah's Witness material.

14. As a child growing up in a strict Jehovah's Witness family, the Church and my father dictated who I was and wasn't allowed to associate with. I certainly wasn't allowed to associate with anybody outside of the Jehovah's Witnesses community, other than the children at the school I attended. Even when I was at school, the Jehovah's Witnesses Church decided which lessons I could and couldn't attend. For example, I was not allowed to attend sex education lessons at school as the Jehovah's Witnesses counselled that it was the responsibility of Jehovah's Witness parents to teach their children about sex. My father also never allowed me to attend any form of extra-curricular activity (for example, sports) because the Church advised against it.

15. In the late 1980s, school attendance in Years 11 and 12 was not compulsory. My parents didn't allow me to stay at school after Year 10 because choosing higher education over Jehovah was frowned upon by the Church. Even after I finished school in Year 10, I wasn't allowed to pursue full-time work because I needed time to dedicate to preaching.

Isolation and the threat of disfellowshipping

16. My father used to tell me I was headstrong and that I needed more training to be more obedient, but it didn't matter how hard I tried, I was never good enough. He used to tell people in the Congregation and my family that I was a troublemaker. To the Congregation he appeared righteous and spiritual, but at home my father had a very short fuse and could become violent and abusive. He used to beat me frequently, often using a black leather strap that left welts on my skin. Out of my siblings, I was the one who bore the brunt of his aggression.

17. As a Jehovah's Witness I was taught to love and fear Jehovah and to respect my father and be obedient to my parents. I was taught never to question my parents or their decisions.

18. My father always threatened to kick me out and treat me as though I was disfellowshipped if I ever disobeyed him. A person would be disfellowshipped if they had sinned and did not adhere to the counsel given by Elders in a committee meeting. Disfellowshipped means excommunicated from the Church and nobody (family and friends included) would be allowed to associate with or talk to you until you were reinstated. Disfellowshipped people were ostracised and actively avoided by members of the congregation.

19. I was always terrified of being kicked out of home or disfellowshipped because I feared what Jehovah would do to me. I was taught from a young age that people outside the Church (referred to by Jehovah's Witnesses as "worldly people") were bad and not to be trusted as they served Satan. Even the prospect of speaking to the police was extremely scary as they were also considered to be very bad people.

20. I felt enormous pressure from the Church and from my father to be a perfect obedient child. By the time I was in my early to mid-teens, I felt very isolated and alone. I became quite depressed and at times suicidal. I was allowed to see a "worldly" doctor about my depression, but I was forbidden from speaking about the Church as it would bring reproach on Jehovah's name.

21. By the time I was about 16, I was determined to leave home for many reasons, including that I wanted to escape the Jehovah's Witnesses without being disfellowshipped; I wanted to do it on my own terms. By this I mean that I wanted to fade away from the Church and become inactive while retaining my faith as this course was less likely to result in punishment from Jehovah. It is hard to explain, but I didn't want to be shunned by the only people that I knew as well as live in fear of Jehovah.

Sexual abuse

22. I think my father abused me when I was about five years old. I don't remember anything specific from that time, but I do recall feeling extremely uncomfortable and scared when my father put a nappy on me at night before bed. That memory made a lot more sense to me once I discovered what my father did to my sisters at a similar age.

23. When I was in Year 7, I recall my father asking me and my older sister to give him a kiss. It was a really sloppy kiss on the lips and I remember thinking that it wasn't right. I didn't like it at all. My father used to tell me I was "sexy" and would sometimes say to me "You have it, but your sister doesn't". My father often removed my bedroom door because I would either shut it to get dressed or lock it to try to keep him out.

24. I don't remember any other clear instances of feeling so uncomfortable again until I was 17. I suspect that I may have blocked a lot of things out.

25. In October of 1988, my mother took my siblings to Brisbane to see Expo '88. They were away for about two weeks. I had just turned 17 years old and I wanted to save money to buy a car, so I stayed at home with my father. Although my father beat me a lot, he could also treat me like a normal person. I wanted him to be proud of me, to accept me, and to recognise that I wasn't bad or evil. I thought it would be a good idea to stay at home with him and cook for him whilst my mother was away. I didn't think anything of staying alone at home with him because he was my father.

26. While my mother and siblings were away at Expo '88, my father sexually assaulted me on a number of occasions. The first time that he tried to have sex with me, he came naked into my bed at night whilst I was sleeping and touched me all over my body. When I protested I remember him saying to me "Shhhh, it's okay I'm your father. Be obedient to your father". I couldn't believe what was happening. After the first time, I tried to lock my bedroom door but this made him so angry. While my mother was away, my father touched me and tried to have sex with me on at least four or five different occasions. I resisted as much as I could each time, but he was a violent man and prone to snap. I was absolutely petrified of him and tried not to make him angry. While my father sexually assaulted me, he quoted bible scriptures and referred to the scriptures about being more obedient that he made me put up on my bedroom wall. He said to me while he sexually assaulted me "You have to be obedient to me".

27. While my mother was away my father also gave me alcohol and made me watch pornographic movies with him.

28. After my father had touched me and tried to have sex with me, he behaved completely normally towards me, as if nothing had happened. I convinced myself that it was all nightmares, but I always knew that it was real. I used to pray to Jehovah to put angels around my bed to stop my father from coming to me, but he didn't help me and my father didn't stop.

29. While my mother and siblings were away at Expo '88, my father took me on a motorbike to a Jehovah's Witness working bee in Cooktown. When we got home, my back was really sore from the motorbike ride and my father told me he would massage my back for me. He started massaging my back, but moved down and started touching me where I didn't want him to. I told him I didn't want him to do that, but he said "Shhh, be quiet. I am your father. Be obedient".

30. On the last occasion that I remember my father sexually assaulting me while my mother and siblings were away in Brisbane, he started touching himself and tried to make me touch him as well. When I refused, he said to me with money in his hand, "I'll give you $300 to help with your car and $300 after if you bend over the bed". I said to him "I don't want to do it. I don't need your money". My father became very angry and pushed me onto the bed. I managed to get away from him and ran outside the house. My father chased me through the backyard of our house, but I managed to escape to a neighbour's property.

31. Once my mother and siblings returned from Expo '88, my father started to tell everyone that I was "mental", a "nutcase", and that I "served the devil". He also continued to tell everyone I was a "troublemaker". I think that because he was so respected in the Congregation, the way he treated me dictated how everybody else in the Congregation, including my own mother and family, treated me. My father also tightened his control over who I could talk to in the Congregation, forbidding me to speak to anybody who he thought I might tell about the abuse. If I broke his rules, he flogged me.

32. I knew that as a Jehovah's Witness it was my duty to report any wrongdoing to the Elders in the Congregation. Although I wanted to tell them, I was terrified of doing so. My father had threatened to beat me and to kick me out of home if I ever spoke to anyone without him present.

Physical abuse

33. I am sure that everyone in the Congregation knew that my father was a violent man and beat me frequently. I was often forced to attend meetings having just been beaten by my father with his belt and still bleeding from the welts.

34. On one occasion after my mother returned from Expo '88, I remember that my father wanted to get into the bathroom when I was in there. He couldn't get in because I had locked the door, which I wasn't allowed to do. He bashed so violently on the door that it finally broke down. Just before the door broke, I had managed to grab a towel to cover myself and I was standing just behind the door. The door hit me in the face. Not long after that, I went to a meeting at the Kingdom Hall with a black eye. I remember that one of the Elders, Zini Ali (Dino Ali's brother), asked me "What happened to your eye?". I replied to him "My father kicked the bathroom door in my face". Zini just laughed in response and said "Oh did he!". I felt that Zini was dismissing what I had told him as though it were a joke.

35. After my mother returned from Expo '88 the sexual abuse stopped but my father kept knocking me around. He took the door to my bedroom off its hinges. There was no privacy and no safety for me at home, not even in the toilet, which had no lock or properly closing door.

36. Some months after the sexual abuse that happened while the rest of my family was away, I started to leave Watchtower magazines open around our house so that my father could see the articles on misconduct. I remember saying to him on one occasion "I know what you did to me and it's wrong". He said to me in reply "You're mental".

Reporting my father's abuse

37. My father left home some eight or nine months after October 1988. Before my father left, I tried to talk about the abuse to Lyn Bowditch, who was married to one of the Elders at the Congregation, Kevin Bowditch. Kevin was a friend of my father's who had helped build parts of our house. I said to Lyn "I need to talk about some stuff that's happened between me and dad". Lyn spoke to Kevin and reported back to me "Kevin says that he can't speak to you without your father present".

38. I also tried speaking to another Elder called Dino Ali. Dino was also a good friend of my father's. I remember calling Dino on one occasion from the pay phones near the Post Office in Mareeba while on my lunch break from my part-time job. I remember sobbing and saying to Dino "I want to talk to you about things in my family that you don't know about. What my father is doing". Dino said to me "No, you have to talk to your father first or he must be present". I said to him "I can't do that". All I can remember after that is crying. I called Dino to try to talk to him about my father at least twice.

39. In May or June of 1989 — about eight months after my father sexually abused me while the rest of my family was away — my father left my mother for another woman and moved out of the family home. Once my father left, I found the courage to tell my friend (who later became my husband), BCJ about the abuse. I told him that "My father has been rude to me".

BCJ 's first response after I said this was "Are you making this up to get back at your father for belting you all the time?". I said to BCJ "No and if you don't believe me then no one will". The next day when I saw BCJ again he told me he had spoken to my father, and he said to me "It all makes sense now". BCJ did not tell me everything that he and my father spoke about. I don't recall what BCJ said to me, but I do remember getting the impression that my father had admitted to BCJ that something had happened. After that BCJ said to me "We need to go to the Elders". At the time, BCJ and another friend of mine were probably the only people in the whole congregation who treated me nicely.

40. Soon after I told BCJ he arranged a meeting between us and Dino Ali at Dino's workplace. I remember saying to Dino Ali "My father has been rude to me". He seemed incensed and said to me "You do know that this is a very serious allegation you are making". I said to Dino "I know; that's why I'm saying it". I assume that Dino then spoke to Kevin and to another Elder called Ron de Rooy because within the next couple of days they wanted me to attend what I understood to be a "Committee Meeting".

41. I didn't tell my mother about what had happened because she was an emotional wreck after my father had left.

The Committee Meetings

42. I remember meeting with the Elders (Dino, Ron, and Kevin) by myself on a number of occasions for a couple of hours at a time. On one occasion, they brought my father into the room so that I could tell him what I had told the Elders. I cannot recall exactly how many times I had to meet with the Elders. I didn't want to be there and I felt so uncomfortable. I had nobody to support me. I don't remember anyone really explaining the purpose of the Committee Meetings to me, but I understood at the time that the Elders were investigating what I had alleged.

43. At the first Committee Meeting, the Elders sat me in a room at the Kingdom Hall and came in one at a time and asked me to tell them what had happened. After that they came in together and asked me more questions. They repeated this process several times. It felt like I was being interrogated and that the Elders were trying to find inconsistencies in my story to catch me out. Now in hindsight I understand that the Elders were investigating whether or not I was a credible witness and if my allegations could have been truthful.

44. Because the Elders were all male, and all were friends of my father's, I was reluctant to speak to them about what had happened. Unless they asked me a direct question, I didn't really offer the full detail of the sexual abuse.

45. I never felt as though any of the Elders believed me. In fact, they seemed incensed by what I was saying and took the allegations personally. They asked me questions like "Did you enjoy it?" and "How did you react to that?". At times, it felt as though they were getting off on what I was telling them.

46. The Elders told me that I had to tell my mother about my abuse. When I told her that my father had abused me, she asked "Really? What did he do?". I didn't want to tell my mother any detail so I said to her "He has been rude to me". She said to me "He did that to [your older sister] when she was two". I was absolutely gutted and upset. I asked my mother "How could you have left us alone with him knowing what he had done to my sister?". My mother said to me "I didn't think he would do it again because he had become a Jehovah's Witness".

47. After my mother told me about what my father had done to my older sister, it occurred to me that I should check with my two younger sisters if he had ever done anything to them. Together my mother and I spoke to my younger sisters. They were about five and seven or eight at the time. Both of them said to me "Yes, dad has been rude". I remember my youngest sister saying words to the effect of "He put his penis between my legs when we were laying down in the lounge room watching TV". I remember my other younger sister saying words to the effect of "He made me have a shower with him and he touched me and massaged my pee in the shower".

48. My mother came with me to tell the Elders about my younger sisters. I remember that Ron de Rooy said to us "We don't want to talk to your sisters because they are too young to know what they are taking about". This response made me so upset because irrespective of their ages, my sisters were victims too and the abuse should have been considered by the Elders.

49. At some point after I told the Elders about my younger sisters, the Elders told me that I had to meet with my father and put my allegations of sexual abuse to him. I remember being in the room at the Kingdom Hall when they brought my father into the room. They sat him down at the opposite end of the table at which I was sitting. I was extremely terrified but I was trying to be strong and brave; I kept thinking of my little sisters. I remember my hands shaking and my knees knocking together with fear.

50. The Elders asked me to tell my father what I had told them, which I did. My father became angry and I remember him saying to me "I will flog you", "I'll hit you", and "Just wait till I get you out of this room". The Elders didn't stop him from saying all of those things. I remember that later in the meeting my father said to me "You seduced me". I responded by saying to him "You are my father, you are big and fat, why would I want to seduce you?".

51. Then I confronted my father about my sisters. I said, "You touched my little sisters. I suppose you are going to say that a four year old and a six year old seduced you as well. How could you do that? You always taught us not to lie and here you are sitting here lying! You are a hypocrite". My father got very angry and said to me "I will kill you!". He stood up and started to move towards me but the Elders stopped him. I felt very intimidated and anxious about the threats that he made and I didn't feel at all protected by the Elders.

52. The Elders decided to disfellowship my father. I remember that Ron de Rooy came to visit me at home and said to me "We want to make it very clear that we are not disfellowshipping him for what he did to you, but for other 'loose conduct'". I asked in reply "Why?". Ron said to me "Well, we need to have two or more witnesses to the same event". I said in reply "What about my sisters though?". Ron said to me "It has to be the same event".

53. I was mortified and devastated. It felt so wrong that my father's abuse affected me so much yet it did not even qualify as something wrong in the eyes of the Jehovah's Witnesses, who professed to be acting with the authority of Jehovah and the Holy Spirit, which is considered to be above Australian law. I felt betrayed by my mother because she didn't protect my sisters and me or warn us when she knew what my father was capable of. I consider her to be complicit in my abuse and in the abuse of my sisters.

The Appeal Committee Meetings

54. About a week after he was disfellowshipped, my father appealed the decision of the Elders. In or around July 1989, I remember that an Appeal Committee was formed. Three Elders from other congregations in the area, Joe Mirarziz, Don Wilson, and Jim Bennett, sat on the Appeal Committee. Don Wilson was the father of my best friend at the time. The Elders from the first Committee Meetings, Kevin, Dino, and Ron, also attended the Appeal Committee meetings.

55. I was called back to appear alone before the Appeal Committee, although no one explained to me why. This time my father was sat in a corner of the room and was not allowed to speak to me or threaten me. The Appeal Committee Elders asked me questions and I had to say everything about the abuse all over again. This time, they were not as accusing as the Elders in the original Committee Meetings.

56. Towards the end of the Appeal Committee meeting, I remember that Kevin Bowditch said to the room "Can BCH confirm what he did to BCG for her sake?". My father said words to the effect of "Yes, I stepped out of line". At the time I understood that in saying this, my father was admitting to having sexually abused me.

57. At some point not long after the Appeal Committee finished their meeting, one of the Elders came and told me that my father's disfellowshipping had been upheld. I don't remember which Elder spoke to me or exactly what he said.

58. After his appeal was rejected, my father moved away from Mareeba to live in Cairns. Before he left, he used to stalk me and tamper with my mail by opening it and adding handwritten notes, which I tore up and never read. I remember telling Kevin Bowditch about what my father was doing as it was very intimidating. At one point I moved out of home to stay with another Jehovah's Witness couple to try to escape my father's stalking and intimidation, but he still managed to find me.

59. I am aware that my mother told a lot of people in the Congregation about what my father had done to me. After he was disfellowshipped, many people said things to me like "I don't believe this happened", and "I think you lied". I felt worthless, helpless, and embarrassed.

60. I continued to live in Mareeba and remained a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses Mareeba Congregation. In November 1989, I married BCJ Not long after I married BCJ still felt worthless and alone and I tried to commit suicide by taking an overdose. I had to report my suicide attempt to the Elders as it was a sin against Jehovah. I remember that I spoke to Ron de Rooy about it and I was chastised because attempting suicide is viewed as a serious wrongdoing within the Church.

Reinstatement of my father

61. A few years later, I can't recall exactly when, Ron de Rooy came to tell me that my father was going to be reinstated. Nobody had ever asked me if my father had apologised to me so I said to Ron "Why are you letting him be reinstated?". Ron replied to me "There comes a time when we can't hold him back any more. He is doing all the right things." I asked Ron "What right things?". Ron replied, "He's attending meetings". I said to Ron "How can you say that? He was attending all the meetings and giving talks from the platform while he was touching all four of his daughters. He's been tampering with my mail. He's been stalking me. He's not sorry". Ron said to me "We can't judge that".

62. After Ron de Rooy told me about my father's reinstatement, I said to Ron "Well, I want to take it to the police because the congregation is not safe. Children are at risk". Ron replied to me "He is now a Brother again" and he quoted me the scripture that says that we don't take brothers to court. Ron said to me "So if you take it to the police, you will bring reproach upon Jehovah's name and you will be disfellowshipped for doing that". I was very upset and disappointed. It seemed that there was to be no justice or acknowledgement for what my father had done to my sisters and me. I felt like we didn't matter; that the abuse was not considered bad enough in the eyes of Jehovah. Once again I felt helpless because I feared Jehovah and I feared being disfellowshipped; my life would be worse than it already was.

63. In or around November 1992, my father returned to Mareeba to be reinstated. I remember that when it was announced to the Congregation, all of the Brothers crowded around my father, shaking his hand and patting him on the back. Despite many people in the Congregation knowing what he had done to me and my sisters I heard members of the Congregation say "Welcome back BCH " and "Congratulations BCH it's good to see you". I was petrified to be so close to my father, but I stood my ground and refused to acknowledge him.

64. On 19 December 1995, I wrote a letter to the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society about the reinstatement of my father. In my letter I described what he had done and the way in which the Elders had responded to my allegations. That letter is at QLD.0068.001.1410. In response I received a letter from the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society dated 26 February 1996, which said that the Watchtower would look into the points of concern that I raised in my letter. The letter also counselled faith in Jehovah. That letter is at QLD.0068.001.1409.

65. I did not believe that the Watchtower would or could do anything and I considered the letter to be a token gesture only. I had already put my faith in Jehovah and prayed to him to protect me from the abuse when it was happening, and he didn't. I had already put my faith in the Elders when I reported the abuse to them and they didn't protect or support me either. I felt angry, upset and let down, and I began to feel suicidal again because I felt as though there was no way out for me.

Reporting to the police 66. In or around 1998 or 1999, my then husband BCJ and I moved to Townsville with our two sons. Not long after I had my third son in Townsville, BCJ and I separated and I left the Jehovah's Witnesses Church. I couldn't stand the hypocrisy anymore and I was finding it hard to believe that the Elders and Ministerial Servants were really appointed by the Holy Spirit. Once I left the Church my three children and I were completely shunned, ostracised and actively avoided by members of the Townsville Jehovah's Witnesses Congregation.

67. The very first thing I did after I left the Church was call the police. I was initially scared of the police because I had grown up being taught that everyone outside of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church was to be feared. But the officer in charge of my case, Natalie Bennett, had an awesome manner and was very supportive. Throughout the court cases, my only support was from the police and a support person assigned by the court.

68. I gave a statement to police in about September 2000. In my statement I limited what I said to the police about my interactions with the Elders. I didn't include in my statement that I had tried to speak to Dino Ali and Kevin Bowditch whilst my father was still at home, and I didn't go into detail about the Committee Meetings. When I made that statement to the police, I had only just left the Jehovah's Witnesses Church and I was still very fearful that if I said too much about the Elders at the Mareeba Congregation I would bring reproach upon Jehovah's name. I was still scared of making Jehovah angry and suffering punishment from him. I didn't immediately give my letter to the Watchtower of December 1995 to the police for the same reason.

69. At trial my father denied all charges against him. It took six years and three trials before he was finally convicted for the indecent assault of me. The Elders who presided over the Committee Meetings and the Appeal Committee Meeting gave evidence at the committal and at a voir dire during the first trial, but that trial resulted in a hung jury. The second trial was declared a mistrial. My father was convicted at the third trial at the end of 2004. He was sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

70. The trials were easy compared to what I had been through with the Elders during the Committee Meetings. I would go through it twenty more times if I had to. At least the court has rules when questioning survivor witnesses; the Jehovah's Witnesses can do and insinuate whatever they want and there are no protections for the victim at all.

71. I have had no contact with any of the Elders involved in the Committee Meetings, or from the Mareeba Congregation, or from the Watchtower since my father was convicted.

Impact of the abuse

72. During my teens I was at times depressed and suicidal and this became worse after my father's sexual abuse of me while my mother was away at Expo '88. I also attempted suicide several months after the Committee Meetings in 1989 as a result of my experience of the Committee Meetings with the Elders. I couldn't bear the judgement of those around me, the public vilification and ostracism. I wanted to dig a hole and die.

73. My relationship with my mother is now strained, but civil. This is because I still hold her partly responsible for the abuse of my sisters and me. To this day, I never felt I had her full support or protection. The only time I felt my upset feelings were heard was when I went to police. Nobody else, up until that point, had acknowledged that what my father did to me was wrong and that he should be made to answer for it.

74. I have at times lived a life in fear of being ostracised, shunned, and vilified by those around me. I have always lived in fear of my father. I have lived in fear of Jehovah. I thought I had done all the right things. I had put my trust in Jehovah, but nobody protected me. They only made it worse.

75. During the criminal trials, I felt as though all of my nightmares had gathered together in the one place and I was terrified that Jehovah would kill me for having reported to the police and for bringing reproach upon his name.

76. I now have four children of whom I am fiercely protective. When I separated from my partner last year, I felt like I didn't belong anywhere and didn't really have a name that wasn't associated with an unhappy past. I talked to my eldest son about it and he suggested that he make up a name for me. He did this REDACTED and made up my current surname.

Victims of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses Church

77. Jehovah's Witnesses Elders sit in judgment of congregation members in relation to matters of wrongdoing. My experience is that when a person reports wrongdoing, the Elders judge that person's credibility as a witness by reference to his or her position within the congregation, their age, their sex, and their outward displays of spirituality. In assessing spirituality, the Elders will take into consideration how frequently a person attends and offers answers at congregation meetings, how well they know the bible, how they are treated by their family and that family's reputation within the congregation, how often they go out preaching, and how submissive they are to the Elders.

78. I had reported my father's abuse to the Elders because that was what I believed I was supposed to do in accordance with Jehovah's expectations. I thought Jehovah and the Elders would protect me and my sisters. Instead I felt that rather than protect me as the victim, the Elders primarily sat in judgment of me and of my credibility as a witness. The Elders refused to speak to my younger sisters because of their ages at the time and did not even entertain consideration of their credibility as witnesses to their own abuse.

79. Even when a victim is assessed by Elders as a credible witness, if an alleged abuser denies an allegation then the Elders will only believe the victim's testimony if there are two or three credible witnesses to the same incident of abuse (see Deuteronomy 19:15; John 8: 17).

80. Although they receive reports and investigate wrongdoing, and then make assessments as to a witness's credibility, it is my understanding that Elders have no training in interviewing techniques, counselling, or psychology. Elders interview and interrogate child victims of sexual abuse and, in my experience, cause more damage to the victim. In my case the Elders, who were friends of my father, interrogated me, offered me no emotional support or protection, and made me feel as though I was insulting them and that I was to blame.

81. The Jehovah's Witnesses believe that they should not take one another to court (see 1 Corinthians 6:1-8). I understand that this includes reporting child sexual abuse to the police. I was told and believed that to take such matters outside the Church would bring reproach upon Jehovah's name. Child sexual abuse is a crime. The Church and the Elders have no right to interfere with, prevent or threaten victims of abuse if they choose to report their abuse to the police. I felt unable to report my father to the police when the events were was fresh in my mind, and in the minds of others who were or could have been witnesses. If I hadn't been so scared of reporting to police, I don't think I would have been subjected to such a drawn out criminal process in which I had to relive the abuse and the subsequent interrogation by the Elders over and over again.

82. I feel that the children in the Jehovah's Witness Church are vulnerable and will continue to be easy targets. This is because in my experience, the Church's current beliefs and practices — such as the rule requiring two witnesses to the same event, the practice of dealing with allegations privately and within the Church, and the factors that are taken into consideration by Elders when determining whether to reinstate a person against whom an allegation of child sexual abuse has been made — appear to favour and even protect paedophiles. I think it is paramount that uniform mandatory reporting laws are introduced across Australia to apply to institutions like the Jehovah's Witnesses Church in order to protect children. I believe that making the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society and the Church financially accountable is essential for the protection of children and to redress the suffering of past, present and future victims of child sexual abuse within the Church.

83. I hope that my traumatic experience of abuse and of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church beliefs, practices, and processes can be used in a positive way. I have come forward today because I want to advocate for all victims who have been sexually assaulted within the Jehovah's Witnesses Church. I know so many victims of sexual abuse within the Church whose fear of repercussion prevents them from coming forward. I would like to promote change and set a precedent by exposing the way my case of sexual abuse was handled and encouraging other victims to speak out.

Statement

Name	RODNEY PETER SPINKS
Address	12-14 Zouch Road Denham Court NSW 2565
Occupation	Service Desk at Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses
Date	10 July 2015

INTRODUCTION

1. This statement is in response to a letter dated 26 June 2015 addressed to me from the Commission, as attached (marked "Annexure 1").

2. My statement sets out the evidence that I wish to give to the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. The statement is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

3. I am pleased to answer the questions raised in connection with my role in the Service Department and matters that I am personally aware of. In my statement, I have followed the format of the questions in the letter, using the headings set out in (A) - (H) below.

A. MY BACKGROUND

4. I have associated with Jehovah's Witnesses since 1965 and been a baptised member for over 40 years. (Public baptism indicates an individual's personal decision to dedicate their life to God as one of Jehovah's Witnesses.)

5. I was born in Tasmania in 1959 and have five siblings. After my parents moved to Victoria, they both studied the Bible with Jehovah's Witnesses. They were baptised as Jehovah's Witnesses when I was 6 years old.

6. I went to primary school and high school in country Victoria. After high school, I completed a 4 year trade apprenticeship in the transport industry.

7. Following my marriage, I moved to Queensland where I was trained for various management roles in the transport industry. During this time, our son was born.

8. I became the National Operations Manager for a large interstate transport company during the 1980s. In my role I was responsible for the human resource issues of several hundred employees.

9. Commencing in 1989, I operated my own family business in the transport industry for a number of years. This enabled me to divide my time equally between operating our business and becoming more fully involved with my volunteer responsibilities with Jehovah's Witnesses.

10. As part of my greater participation in the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses, I have now spent many years teaching others the value of a balanced Christian life. Together with my wife, I have found that Scriptural principles are still very relevant in assisting others to deal with modern family challenges.

11. As a result of our increased involvement, since January 2007, my wife and I have been based at the Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses in Sydney, where we are able to devote our full time and energy to our faith-based activities.

12. In more recent years, I have become a grandparent to two grandchildren and enjoy being a part of their lives.

13. As a parent and grandparent, I am genuinely concerned with the prevention of and appropriate response to the sin and crime of child sexual abuse. As an elder in the faith of Jehovah's Witnesses, I have personally assisted a number of individuals suffering from past sexual abuse. I have also worked closely with fellow elders to ensure allegations of sexual abuse are promptly addressed and that victims of sexual abuse are given support and care.

i. Congregations

14. I have been a member of the following congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses:

    a. 1965–1978 Bairnsdale Congregation in Victoria;

    b. 1978–1990 Beenleigh (later Beenleigh East) Congregation, Queensland;

    c. 1990–1995 Rockhampton West Congregation, Queensland;

    d. 1995–2000 Rockhampton South Congregation, Queensland;

    e. 2000–2004 Blaxland Congregation, New South Wales;

    f. 2004–2007 Western New South Wales as a circuit overseer (ie. an experienced elder who serves full-time with his wife as a travelling overseer visiting approximately 20 congregations twice a year for a week at a time);

    g. 2007–2011 Campbelltown Congregation, New South Wales;

    h. 2011–2013 Green Valley Australian Sign Language Congregation, New South Wales;

    i. 2013–2015 Auburn Congregation, New South Wales;

    j. 2015–present Illawong Congregation, New South Wales.

ii. My Roles

15. I served as a ministerial servant from the early 1980's and as a congregation elder since 1987. In 1999, I was trained to visit congregations as a travelling overseer on a part-time basis. Then from September 2004 until January 2007, I was a full-time travelling overseer.

16. From January 2007, I have worked in the Service Department at the Branch Office. I respond to telephone and written inquiries from travelling overseers, congregation elders, congregation members, the general public and the media on all aspects of our preaching work and organisational arrangements.

B. MY KNOWLEDGE OF THE SYSTEMS, POLICIES AND PROCEDURES OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES IN THE PREVENTION OF AND RESPONSE TO CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

Overview

17. I understand that Mr O'Brien will address the organisation's overall structure and approach in relation to the prevention and handling of child sexual abuse and Mr Toole will address the role of the Legal Department in advising elders as to their mandatory reporting obligations.

18. From when I was appointed as an elder in 1987 until 2007, I was provided with access to all letters from the Branch Office to local bodies of elders. This included all letters that provided spiritual advice and guidance on how to handle child abuse matters over that period that have now been replaced with the letter of October 1, 2012 (WAT.0001.004.0066 – WAT.0001.004.0071).

19. An important article "Abhor What Is Wicked" (WAT.0001.004.0306 – WAT.0001.004.0309) was published in 1997. It concerned the congregation implications for a former child abuser. As a result of this article and in harmony with our long standing policy based on the Scriptures, it was emphasized that a former child abuser would not be irreprehensible and therefore not qualified for a congregation appointed position. (See also paragraph 81 below.)

20. In my Service Department role since 2007, I have been responsible for assisting congregation elders to implement the Branch Office's spiritual advice and the guidelines for handling child abuse allegations and in providing victim support. In this way, I am able to answer the questions set out in the letter dated 26 June 2015.

21. In particular, I provide support and guidance to elders:

    a. in actively promoting the long-held Scriptural view that Jehovah's Witnesses abhor child sexual abuse;

    b. ensuring that congregation elders provide spiritual support and comfort to victims of abuse; and

    c. in taking reasonable measures to safeguard children from abuse.

22. This is in harmony with what is stated in the letter dated October 1, 2012, para. 9 – (WAT.0001.004.0068) as follows:

> We abhor the sexual abuse of children and will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of his gross sin. (Rom. 12:9) Elders should take seriously their responsibility in this matter so that the congregations will be safeguarded from any valid accusation of neglect in protecting children from sexual abuse.

23. I am responsible for advising congregation elders in their support of victims of abuse and in ensuring that Scriptural procedure is followed when dealing with any accusation of child sexual abuse involving a congregation member or meeting attender.

24. These procedures are set out in a. the Bible (in this statement I refer to the New World Translation of the Holy Scriptures);

    b. the Elders' Handbook, entitled Shepherd the Flock of God, and referred to in letters by the mnemonic ks10 (WAT.0003.001.0001 – WAT.0003.001.0143);

    c. Watch Tower Society publications, such as the Organized to Do Jehovah's Will book (WAT.0003.001.0296 – WAT.0003.001.0519); and

    d. in letters sent to all bodies of elders, in particular the letter of October 1, 2012 (WAT.0001.004.0066 – WAT.0001.004.0071), which consolidated into one letter the spiritual advice and guidance provided in various letters from preceding years as to how Jehovah's Witnesses handled allegations of child abuse.

25. The Service Department assists congregation elders in identifying offences that constitute child sexual abuse, as outlined in paragraph 3 of the October 1, 2012 letter (WAT.0001.004.0066):

> Child sexual abuse generally includes sexual intercourse with a minor; oral or anal sex with a minor; fondling the genitals, breasts, or buttocks of a minor; voyeurism of a minor; indecent exposure to a minor; soliciting a minor for sexual conduct; or any kind of involvement with child pornography. Depending on the circumstances of the case, it may also include "sexting" with a minor. "Sexting" describes the sending of nude photos, seminude photos, or sexually explicit text messages electronically, such as by phone.

26. If congregation elders become aware of a child abuse allegation, they are instructed to contact the Legal Department in relation to reporting requirements and then the call is transferred to the Service Department [October 1, 2012 para. 4 & 5 (WAT.0001.004.0066 – WAT.0001.004.0067)].

27. I have prepared and attached to my statement (marked Annexure 2) a document called Summation of Branch Office Handling of Child Abuse Matters which summarises our response to allegations of child sexual abuse, together with the references from our publications and letters. A number of the significant procedures are highlighted between paragraphs 28 and 47 of my statement.

Branch Office response: Victim Safety and Support

28. The first thing I ask the elders is the current age and circumstances of the victim. If there is a possibility that a victim may remain in danger of further abuse, I advise the elders to immediately go back to the parent/guardian to ensure that the child is physically protected, as they would for their own child.

29. This is in harmony with paragraph 10 of the October 1, 2012 letter (WAT.0001.004.0068), which states:

> Regardless of whether the law requires the elders to report an accusation to the authorities, steps need to be taken to protect children.

30. I explain that, as a father and grandfather, if this was my child or grandchild, I would do everything necessary to ensure that the child is safe. For the elders, that may involve supporting the parent/guardian in contacting the authorities or personally contacting the authorities. The August 28, 2002 letter (WAT.0004.001.0001 – WAT.0004.001.002) that was read to all congregations stated:

> We have long instructed elders to report allegations of child abuse to the authorities where required by law to do so, even where there is only one witness. In any case, the elders know that if the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so.

31. In relation to supporting a victim of child sexual abuse, my role involves advising congregation elders as to how they may provide spiritual refreshment and encouragement, as it states in the Bible that they "speak consolingly to those who are depressed, [and] support the weak." (1 Thessalonians 5:14) I encourage the elders to review the Bible-based resources we have provided to assist them in supporting the parent/guardian and the victim. These references, which have been provided to the Commission, are quoted in the Elders' Handbook (WAT.0003.001.0001 – WAT.0003.001.0143) and are updated and indexed in WT Library, which is available both online and in CD-ROM format.

32. Spiritual comfort provided by elders to a victim is not viewed as a substitute for professional therapy. As stated in the Elders' Handbook page 54, paragraph 22 (WAT.0003.001.0055), "It must be recognized that elders as such are not mental-health professionals or therapists but are spiritual shepherds. (1 Pet. 5:2)" Elders are encouraged to support the parent/guardian in reassuring the victim that he or she is in no way to blame, that they are loved by God, and that they have the care and full support of the elders and the congregation.

33. I often quote the Awake!, January 22, 1985, page 8 (WAT.0001.004.0210), which states:

> [T]he child must be given a lot of love and emotional support. Parents must make it very clear that the little victim is not to blame. The crime and anything that happens as a result of it—even if a close relative goes to prison—is not her (or his) fault. But that reassurance will have to be given many times, so that the victim comes to believe it—and to believe that the parents believe it too!

Responding to Reports and Allegations

34. When an allegation is made against any congregation member of a gross violation of God's law, especially child sexual abuse, the body of elders is instructed to investigate according to Bible guidelines. To do so, they select two elders to look into the allegation. [Elders' Handbook pg. 72, para. 38 (WAT.0003.001.0073)]

35. The two elders, with the consent of the parent/guardian, would talk to the victim with the parent/guardian present. If the victim is a very young minor, the two elders would talk just with the parent/guardian alone to ascertain the exact nature of the allegation. The elders would also privately talk to the alleged offender, without the victim being present. The elders would ask the accused questions about the allegations, and if necessary, seek information from any other witnesses.

36. The two elders investigate whether a sin has been committed and report to the body of elders. In line with Bible principles, the evidence may be in the form of an admission, the testimony of witnesses, compelling circumstantial evidence, or a combination of these factors.

37. If there is insufficient evidence to proceed in accordance with Bible principles and the matter has to be held in abeyance at the time, then a record is kept in the event that further evidence becomes available in the future. In any case, our October 1, 2012 letter, Para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068) directs that "the elders should remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused."

Congregation Judicial Committee

38. If sufficient evidence is discovered, the body of elders arranges what Jehovah's Witnesses refer to as a 'judicial committee'. [Organized to Do Jehovah's Will book pg. 151, para. 2 (WAT.0003.001.0446)]

39. A judicial committee is a special congregation arrangement for handling matters where an individual is allegedly involved in a serious violation of God's law. The Bible-based procedure for a congregation judicial committee is outlined in chapters five, six and seven of the Elders' Handbook (WAT.0003.001.0059 - WAT.0003.001.0103).

40. As directed in our letter of October 1, 2012, paragraph 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068), the elders contact the travelling overseer to designate an experienced elder from the circuit to serve as chairman of any judicial committee involving child sexual abuse. Two or more elders from the congregation are also appointed to serve on this committee. I comment below on the possible outcomes.

41. Unrepentant individual disfellowshipped: Where the judicial committee determines that the offender is unrepentant, he is disfellowshipped from the congregation in accordance with the Scriptural principle at 1 Corinthians 5:13, which states to "Remove the wicked person from among yourselves." Following a disfellowshipping, an announcement of the decision is made to the congregation informing them that the perpetrator is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses. A disfellowshipped person will be treated by all Jehovah's Witnesses in harmony with the Bible's admonition: ". . . do not receive him into your homes or say a greeting to him." (2 John 10) So, in the case of child sexual abuse, disfellowshipping is clearly a strong measure toward protecting the congregation [Elders' Handbook pg. 100-101, para. 26-34 (WAT.0003.001.0101 - WAT.0003.001.0103)].

42. Reinstatement after disfellowshipping: If the individual eventually qualifies for reinstatement as a member of the congregation, the final decision is made by a judicial committee in the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action. This applies regardless of the congregation to which the individual submits his request for reinstatement. If he has moved congregations, a unanimous decision of two committees is required: a judicial committee in the present congregation and a judicial committee in the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action [Elders' Handbook pg. 120-121, para. 7-10 (WAT.0003.001.0121 – WAT.0003.001.0122)].

43. Individual repentant and publicly reproved: Even if the offender is determined by the judicial committee to be genuinely repentant of past offences, the committee will follow the Scriptural procedure to "Reprove before all onlookers those who practice sin, as a warning to the rest." (1 Timothy 5:20) This includes an announcement made to the congregation that the wrongdoer "(Name of person) has been reproved." [(Elders' Handbook pg. 96-98, para. 18-21 – WAT.0003.001.0097 – WAT.0003.001.0099)]

44. Warning lecture: Soon after an announcement of reproof is made, a warning lecture about the type of sin and how to prevent it will generally be presented to the entire congregation. [(Elders' Handbook pg. 99, para. 23 – WAT.0003.001.0100)] In cases of child sexual abuse, this will serve as a warning to help parents protect their children from any potential danger. Therefore, whether the judicial committee disfellowships or reproves the wrongdoer, congregation members are aided in their ability to protect children from child sexual abuse.

Congregation Judicial Restrictions

45. In every instance, an individual who is judicially reproved or who is disfellowshipped and later reinstated does not qualify for privileges and is subject to congregation restrictions. Initially, these restrictions include commenting at congregation meetings and sharing in any congregation assignments. [(Elders' Handbook pg. 97, para. 19 - WAT.0003.001.0098)]

46. Also, whenever discussing restrictions with the elders, I remind them of the direction provided in our letter of October 1, 2012, para. 12 (WAT.0001.004.0068- WAT.0001.004.0069), that the individual must be instructed to:

. . . refrain from displaying affection for children, to avoid hugging or holding children on their lap, never to be alone with a child (other than their own), not to allow children to spend the night in their home, not to work alone in field service (hence, they should always be accompanied by another adult), and not to cultivate friendships with children.

47. Elders are instructed to contact the Service Department if a former child abuser does not follow the restrictions from the elders or is considered to be acting in a predatory manner. If this is the case, the Service Department directs the elders to immediately meet with the parent/s of minor children in the congregation to provide a warning. [October 1, 2012, letter, para. 13 (WAT.0001.004.0069)] In addition, depending on the circumstances, instructions are then provided to the elders to either strongly counsel the individual or take congregation judicial action to determine whether the individual should be disfellowshipped on the Scriptural basis of "brazen conduct." (Galatians 5:19; Elders' Handbook pg. 60-61, para. 9-10 (WAT.0003.001.0061 – WAT.0003.001.0062)

Preventing Child Sexual Abuse

48. I have read and distributed articles published by Jehovah's Witnesses for the general public, from as far back as the 1970s, which have addressed the issue of preventing child abuse. Recently, the jw.org website has also provided worldwide coverage to educate parents and young people in the prevention of child abuse. From my position as an elder, my work in the Service Department, and as a parent and grandparent, I have come to appreciate that loving and well-informed parents are in the best position to prevent child abuse, as explained in many of our publications.

49. The Branch Office and Service Department continue to ensure that all meetings and conventions of Jehovah's Witnesses are designed for families. Children are not separated from their parents for any activities of Jehovah's Witnesses. The ongoing efforts by Jehovah's Witnesses to educate parents and children about child abuse, and the fact that Jehovah's Witnesses do not sponsor programs that separate children from their parents, are pivotal aspects of Jehovah's Witnesses' beliefs and practices for the prevention of child abuse.

C. FUNCTIONS OF THE SERVICE DEPARTMENT

50. Please see my explanation under section B.

D. SERVICE DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL

51. Eleven out of the 13 current members of the Service Department are elders with many years of practical experience in the application of Scriptural principles and there are administrative assistants who are responsible for administrative support.

52. The Service Department cares for all aspects of our spiritual activities in Australia as follows:

- Kingdom Hall and congregation details - one elder and his assistant;
- arrangements for regular conventions – two elders;

- processing of general correspondence – two elders;
- training seminars for travelling overseers and elders - one elder;
- data entry – one assistant;
- Service Desks – three Service Desk elders and two assistant elders.

53. I serve as the senior Service Desk elder and, amongst other duties, am specifically responsible for inquiries related to child sexual abuse. Over many decades, this Service Desk role has been cared for by spiritually experienced elders who have volunteered to work at the Branch Office for varying periods of time.

54. In addition, I am assisted in my role in responding to child abuse allegations by an experienced elder, Joel Hurley, who has been associated with Jehovah's Witnesses for 40 years.

55. Mr Hurley has a Diploma in Education (Teaching), Bachelor's Degree in Arts (majoring in Linguistics) and a Master's Degree in Education (Honours). Prior to joining the Service Department in August 2011, Mr Hurley worked as a teacher in government schools in New South Wales, Western Australia and the Australian Capital Territory. He was also a university lecturer in Education at Macquarie University.

56. During Mr Hurley's career as a teacher and lecturer, he was trained in child protection awareness, which included training in relation to reporting requirements and supporting children and young people, as well as monitoring and evaluation. Specifically, he was trained to be aware of the indicators of abuse and neglect and to assist in complying with mandatory reporting requirements.

E. TRAINING

57. While I have no formal qualifications, my approach to dealing with child sexual abuse allegations is based on my extensive experience as an elder and as a travelling overseer in providing spiritual counsel to families, using Scriptural principles and publications based on the Bible.

58. Over the past 30 years, I have also attended regular Bible-based seminars known as Kingdom Ministry Schools for elders, including a two-month intensive course for travelling overseers in 2005. I have also been involved in presenting various training seminars for congregation elders and travelling overseers over a number of years.

59. During those years, local congregation elders' meetings, meetings conducted by travelling overseers with elders, and the various schools and seminars scheduled by the Branch Office, have included sessions addressing the issue of child sexual abuse and victim support.

F. ROLE OF SERVICE DEPARTMENT IN PROCESSES THAT RELATE TO OR INVOLVE CHILD ABUSE

i. Baptism

60. The Service Department is not involved in the consideration of individual prospective members of a congregation for baptism. Rather, this is the responsibility of the body of elders in each congregation who have observed and assisted the spiritual progress of the candidate over many months or years.

61. However, as an elder I am fully aware of the processes involved in baptism. In addition to meeting with the individual in the course of his or her extensive Bible study program and after receiving a request for baptism, the local body of elders reviews with him or her the detailed Questions For Those Desiring To be Baptized as set out in the Appendix of the publication entitled Organized To Do God's Will. (WAT.0003.001.0477 – WAT.0003.001.0510)

62. These questions and Scripture references gauge the candidate's understanding of: 1. Elementary Bible Teachings; 2. Jehovah's Righteous Requirements, which deals with the Bible's high moral standards; and 3. Jehovah's Arrangement of Things, which considers family life and congregation organisation. (WAT.0003.001.0477 - WAT.0003.001.0510)

63. This screening process, to determine whether an individual is qualified for baptism, is conducted by three different elders in harmony with the 'Instructions For Congregation Elders' located in the Appendix of Organized To Do God's Will (WAT.0003.001.0512 - WAT.0003.001.0513).

64. One year after baptism, two elders again meet with the person to review their progress and provide appropriate encouragement and suggestions. [Elders Handbook p. 17, para. 12 (WAT.0003.001.0018).

65. If a former child abuser, after studying the Bible and harmonising his life with Bible principles, eventually qualifies for baptism, the same restrictions and warnings set out in paragraphs 46 and 47 would also apply [letter of October 1, 2012, para. 12 (WAT.0001.004.0068-WAT.0001.004.0069)].

ii., iii., vi., vii. Congregation Appointments and Deletions

66. Regular Pioneer: Refers to an exemplary congregation member who has volunteered to spend a certain amount of time in the public preaching activity each month. An Application for Regular Pioneer Service form, which is annexed to my statement (marked "Annexure 3"), must first be completed by an individual which includes two questions as follows:

- "Have you ever engaged in child sexual molestation?"
- "If yes, when? (w97 1/1 pp.26-29; w97 2/1 p.29)"

67. This application form is reviewed by three congregation elders and an assessment is made of an individual's qualifications. The elders then submit a request for the Service Department to check whether anything might affect the application, in particular any record of child abuse. If there is nothing on record, the local body of elders is then responsible for approving regular pioneers.

68. Any regular pioneer involved in child abuse would be immediately deleted by the local body of elders. An announcement would be made to the congregation and the Branch Office informed. Any perpetrator would also be subject to congregation judicial action, as previously outlined in my statement.

69. Special Pioneer: Serves full-time in the preaching work. The Service Department selects special pioneers from among experienced long-serving regular pioneers.

70. Any special pioneer involved in child abuse would be immediately deleted and an announcement would be made to the congregation. Any perpetrator would also be subject to congregation judicial action, as previously outlined in my statement.

71. Ministerial servants: are appointed by the local body of elders and the travelling overseer in consultation with the Service Department, to care for administrative support tasks in the congregation, such as Kingdom Hall cleaning, literature supplies and accounting. They do not have a shepherding role in the congregation. They must meet the Scriptural requirement to be "free from accusation" and have a "fine standing". (1 Timothy 3:10, 13)

72. Any ministerial servant involved in child abuse would be immediately deleted by the local body of elders and the travelling overseer and an announcement would be made to the congregation that "Brother [name of person] is no longer serving as a ministerial servant." The travelling overseer would advise the Branch Office in writing of the deletion. [Elders' Handbook pg. 42, para. 26, 27 (WAT.0003.001.0043)] Any perpetrator would also be subject to congregation judicial action, as previously outlined in my statement.

73. Elders: are appointed by the local body of elders and the travelling overseer in consultation with the Service Department. Elders must be experienced men who have displayed a pattern of integrity in their lives over a period of time as ministerial servants. Some of the requirements to serve as an elder are listed in the Bible, in Scriptures such as 1 Timothy 3:2-13 and Titus 1:5-9:

    - irreprehensible
    - moderate in habits
    - qualified to teach
    - not a drunkard
    - not violent
    - presiding over his own household in a fine manner
    - not a newly converted man
    - fine testimony from outsiders
    - lover of goodness
    - self-controlled

74. Any elder involved in child abuse would be immediately deleted by the local body of elders and the travelling overseer, and an announcement would be made to the congregation that "Brother [name of person] is no longer serving as an elder." The travelling overseer would advise the Branch Office in writing of the deletion [Elders' Handbook pg. 42, para. 26, 27 – (WAT.0003.001.0043)]. Any perpetrator would also be subject to congregation judicial action, as previously outlined in my statement.

Service Department Involvement

75. In relation to the appointment of elders and ministerial servants, for many decades, after receiving a unanimous recommendation from a body of elders and the travelling overseer (during one of his six-monthly visits to each congregation), the Service Department reviewed the recommendation. After checking available records and, more recently, subject to the individual receiving a Working With Children Check ("WWCC") where required to do so under relevant State or Territory legislation, the Service Department would confirm the appointment and an announcement would be made in the congregation if the individual was considered qualified.

76. As a further refinement, since September 2014, prior to any recommendation being considered by the body of elders with the travelling overseer, a written request is submitted to the Branch office where a check is made to determine if there is anything that may disqualify an individual from being considered as an elder or ministerial servant, including any record of child abuse.

77. The Service Department then provides written confirmation to the travelling overseer as to whether there is any reason within our records that prevents the travelling overseer from considering the recommendation of the individual with the local body of elders. [Letter July 14, 2014 para. 3 – (WAT.0002.001.0039 – WAT.0002.001.0040)]

78. If the local body of elders and travelling overseer unanimously agree to proceed with the appointment, arrangements are then made for the travelling overseer and a representative of the local body of elders to meet with the individual at which time he is informed of the recommendation and asked the following questions as outlined in the letter July 14, 2014 – (WAT.0002.001.0039 – WAT.0002.001.0044):

    "Is there anything from your past, even before baptism, or in your personal or family life that disqualifies you or that would prevent you from accepting this appointment?

    Is there any reason why your appointment should not be announced to the congregation?

    Have you ever been involved at any time in the past with child sexual molestation?"

79. If, following that meeting, it is determined that there is no obstacle to the appointment proceeding, the individual is advised that before his appointment can be confirmed he must obtain a WWCC in States and Territories where that is required. Once there is confirmation that the process with the WWCC is complete, an announcement of the appointment can be made in the local congregation. The appointment is confirmed in writing to the Branch Office and to the congregation by the travelling overseer.

iv. Judicial Reproof

80. Please see my detailed explanation in paragraphs 43 & 44 above.

v. Privileges

81. Even in the case of child abuse that took place many years ago, the Service Department must be consulted before an individual would be considered for any privilege, if ever. This would include even smaller privileges, such as assisting with literature supplies or other non-teaching Kingdom Hall duties. This is explained in the letter dated October 1, 2012, paragraphs 22-24 (WAT.0001.004.0070 WAT.0001.004.0071) as follows:

> Elders should keep in mind what is stated in the January 1, 1997, Watchtower article "Let Us Abhor What Is Wicked," page 29, paragraph 2: "Child sexual abuse reveals an unnatural fleshly weakness. Experience has shown that such an adult may well molest other children. True, not every child molester repeats the sin, but many do. And the congregation cannot read hearts to tell who is and who is not liable to molest children again. (Jeremiah 17:9) Hence, Paul's counsel to Timothy applies with special force in the case of baptized adults who have molested children: 'Never lay your hands hastily upon any man; neither be a sharer in the sins of others.' (1 Timothy 5:22).
>
> Hence, privileges of service should never be extended hastily. Considerable time should always pass before one who has sexually abused a child is recommended, if ever. It would be up to the local body of elders to determine whether such a recommendation should be made to the branch office, taking into account all factors in each individual case. Please note that unless specifically approved by the branch office, one who has sexually abused a child should not be used to conduct any meetings held in the congregation or in a prison, and he does not qualify to work on any Kingdom Hall project other than one involving the congregation where he serves as a publisher.
>
> If the elders as a body conclude that one who has sexually abused a child in the distant past may now qualify for privileges, they should assign two elders to call the Service Department.

H. BCH - *My Experience

82. In relation to the Commission's question regarding the case involving BCH I first came into contact with him early in 1990 while I was serving as an elder in the Beenleigh East Congregation, in South East Queensland. BCH started to attend public meetings at our Kingdom Hall. As a disfellowshipped person, in harmony with our Bible based principles and practices he was not allowed to communicate with any congregation members.

83. After some months, he applied to the body of elders to be reinstated into the congregation and I was one of the three elders appointed to the local judicial committee to review his request.

84. As is the standard procedure for all judicial committees prior to meeting with an individual, we reviewed the relevant guidelines to bodies of elders and then conducted an extensive interview with BCH

85. After our meeting with BCH and in line with the guidelines, we communicated with the original judicial committee that disfellowshipped him in Mareeba. As a result of the discussions of both committees, it was determined that BCH did not display "godly sadness" nor have a record of "works that befit repentance" for his established offences. (2 Corinthians 7:10 and Acts 26:20) Therefore, he did not qualify to be reinstated into the congregation and our committee informed him accordingly.

86. Later in 1990, I shifted to Rockhampton in Central Queensland and did not have any further contact with BCH or involvement with his requests for reinstatement until after 2007.

G. BCH – Service Department

87. In January 2007, I began working in the Service Department at the Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses in Sydney. Since that time, I again became aware of BCH who was in a disfellowshipped state in relation to the sexual abuse of his daughters and his denial of those offences. In processing correspondence, I noticed that he had been convicted by a court of law in relation to sexual offences against his daughters.

88. While he has repeatedly requested reinstatement into a congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, the Service Department has assisted the local judicial committee in the congregation where he attends meetings in Western Australia, and the judicial committee where he was disfellowshipped in Queensland, to closely follow published procedure in reviewing his situation.

89. Clear direction has been provided to the elders that, until he fully acknowledges his sins of child abuse and of lying in connection with these offences, it would be difficult for the committees or the victims to consider that he was repentant. He remains disfellowshipped at this time.

SUMMARY

90. In summary, the Service Department guides and assists congregation elders in supporting child and adult victims of sexual abuse, and in addressing the prevention of and response to child sexual abuse. As with the wider community, the worldwide procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses have been refined over the years. We will continue to pursue the best possible approach for protecting children from the crime and sin of child sexual abuse.

The above matters are not intended to limit you in any way, and you should provide any other information that you consider to be relevant. We ask that you please provide copies of any documents not already produced to the Royal Commission which record the matters referred to above.

We ask that you prepare your statement by no later than 10 July 2015. At such time, the Royal Commission will issue a notice for its production, and may summons you to give evidence in the public hearing.

ANNEXURE 2 - SUMMATION OF BRANCH OFFICE HANDLING OF CHILD ABUSE MATTERS

1. ALLEGATION PROCEDURE

1.1 An allegation is made to an elder of child sexual abuse [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 4 (WAT.0001.004.0066)] or that an individual has viewed child pornography [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 14 (WAT.0001.004.0069)].

1.2 Every such allegation of child sexual abuse is spiritually investigated [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068)]. Elders are to act promptly when they receive a report of serious wrongdoing so as to spiritually safeguard the congregation and provide spiritual assistance to the wrongdoer [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 4 (WAT.0001.004.0066); Elders' Handbook Chapter 12, para. 18 (WAT.0003.001.0132)].

1.3 The elder to whom an allegation of child abuse is made contacts another elder.

1.4 All elders have been informed that they should never suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or other authorities [Elders' Handbook Chapter 12, para. 19 (WAT.0003.001.0132)]. This decision is "a personal one" for each individual to make and "there are no congregational sanctions for either decision" [Elders' Handbook Chapter 12, para. 19 (WAT.0003.001.0132-0133)].

Legal Department

1.5 The two elders who learn of the allegation of child abuse "should immediately" contact the Legal Department [October 1, 2012 letter para. 4 (WAT.0001.004.0066). The Elders' Handbook [Chapter 12, para. 18 (WAT.0003.001.0132)] states that "You should immediately call the branch office".

1.6 The Legal Department gives advice only about legal issues, such as mandatory reporting requirements: "We have long instructed elders to report allegations of child abuse to the authorities where required by law to do so, even where there is only one witness" [Letter read to all Congregations in Australia August 28, 2002 (WAT.0004.001.0002)].

1.7 It is the Branch Office approach to encourage the elders to fully co-operate with the authorities. Congregation elders are instructed to abide by any request from the authorities to not investigate the matter until they have completed their investigation.

1.8 Regardless of legal requirements, the Branch Office informs congregation elders that steps need to be taken to protect the child – "whatever the cost" [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 10 (WAT.0001.004.0068) and January 22, 1985, The Awake! (WAT.0001.004.0210)].

Service Department

1.9 The two elders who called the Branch Office are then directed by the Legal Department to the Service Department "regarding theocratic or judicial aspects of the case or regarding how to protect children"[October 1, 2012 letter para. 5 (WAT.0001.004.0067)].

2. SPIRITUAL INVESTIGATION

2.1 When "elders first hear reports of serious wrongdoing on the part of a baptized member of the congregation, an initial investigation will be made by two elders" [Organized to Do Jehovah's Will book pg. 151, para. 2 (WAT.0003.001.0446)]. The Elders' Handbook states that "If wrongdoing has not been established but serious questions have been raised the body of elders should appoint two elders to investigate the matter promptly" [Elders' Handbook Chapter 5, para. 38 (WAT.0003.001.0073)].

Evidence

2.2 For internal congregational purposes, regard is to be had to Biblical direction, and thus there is no authorisation to take "congregational action" unless:

(a) "there are two credible witnesses" to the incident or two persons are witnesses to two separate incidents of the same kind [October 1, 2012 letter para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068); Elders' Handbook Chapter 5, para. 37, bullet point 3 (WAT.0003.001.0072-0073)]; or

(b) the accused confesses [October 1, 2012 letter para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068)]; or

(c) there is strong circumstantial evidence "testified to by at least two witnesses [Elders' Handbook Chapter 5, para. 11 (WAT.0003.001.0062)]; or

(d) in some instances a combination of the above criteria may be used as a basis for taking congregational action.

3. CHILD ABUSE ALLEGATION NOT SCRIPTURALLY ESTABLISHED

3.1 If the elders are not Scripturally authorised to take judicial action because there was insufficient evidence, elders are directed to "remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused" [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068)].

3.2 If such an individual moves congregations, elders are to consult the Branch Office before sending any information regarding the accusation that has not been Scripturally established to the elders in the new congregation [Elders' Handbook, Chapter 12, para. 21 (WAT.0003.001.0133)].

3.3 The elders are to provide to the Branch Office "a detailed summary of the matter" [Elders' Handbook, Chapter 12, para. 21 (WAT.0003.001.0133)].

3.4 After consideration the Branch Office will provide direction as to what information about the allegation (that has not been Scripturally established) should be shared, if any, with the elders of the new congregation [Elders' Handbook, Chapter 12, para. 21 (WAT.0003.001.0133)].

4. SCRIPTURALLY ESTABLISHED CHILD ABUSE ALLEGATION

4.1 If sufficient evidence is discovered by the investigating elders, the information is presented to the body of elders in the local congregation. [Elders' Handbook Chapter 6, para. 1 (WAT.0003.001.0082)].

4.2 A decision is then made by the body of elders to determine whether a disfellowshipping offence has actually been committed and whether or not to form a judicial committee [Organized To Do Jehovah's Will book pg. 151, para. 2 (WAT.0003.001.0446)].

4.3 The judicial committee is a special shepherding arrangement comprised of three or more elders to determine if the individual is guilty or not and to determine whether he or she is repentant [Organized To Do Jehovah's Will book pg. 151, para. 2 (WAT.0003.001.0446); [Elders' Handbook Chapter 8, para. 9 (WAT.0003.001.0107)]. "An elder who is a close relative or has been in business with the accused or has had a special friendship with him would not normally serve on the committee" [Elders' Handbook Chapter 6, para. 2 (WAT.0003.001.0082)].

4.4 If a judicial committee is formed in relation to child abuse, the circuit overseer responsible for the congregation appoints an experienced elder from the congregations in his circuit to act as chairman on the judicial committee [October 1, 2012 letter para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068)].

4.5 Firstly, the judicial committee of three or more elders assesses the available evidence in accordance with the Elders' Handbook Chapters 5, 6 and 7 (WAT.0003.001.0059 - WAT.0003.001.0103) and the October 1, 2012 letter, para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068) to confirm that a disfellowshipping offence has taken place. Denial of an established disfellowshipping offence or a failure to accept responsibility will result in disfellowshipping [Elders' Handbook Chapter 7, para. 10, bullet point 8 (WAT.0003.001.0094)].

4.6 Secondly, the judicial committee must also determine whether there is genuine repentance "commensurate with the degree of deviation" [Elders' Handbook Chapter 7, para. 8 (WAT.0003.001.0092)].

4.7 If the accused is unrepentant then disfellowshipping is warranted [October 1, 2012 letter para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068); Elders' Handbook Chapter 7, para. 26 (WAT.0003.001.0101)].

4.8 In the case of a practice of child abuse, the individual would unlikely "be able to demonstrate sufficient repentance to the judicial committee at the time of the hearing. If so, he must be disfellowshipped" [Elders' Handbook Chapter 7, para. 9 (WAT.0003.001.0093)].

4.9 If the judicial committee is convinced that there is genuine repentance of past sins, a judicial reproof will be administered [October 1, 2012 letter para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068); Elders' Handbook Chapter 7, para. 18 (WAT.0003.001.0097 – WAT.0003.001.0098)].

4.10 In the case of child abuse, a reproof must be announced to the congregation, which "serves as a protection to the congregation" [October 1, 2012 letter para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068)].

4.11 Sometime after the public reproof, a warning lecture is generally given to the entire congregation as to the wrongness of the conduct and how to avoid it [Elders' Handbook Chapter 7, para. 23 (WAT.0003.001.0100)].

4.12 The record of child abuse, proved or otherwise, is marked "Do Not Destroy" and kept indefinitely in congregation confidential files. This includes any "Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77)" notice [October 1, 2012 letter para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068)].

4.13 Steps are taken to protect children when a judicial committee determines that a former child abuser should be judicially reproved [October 1, 2012 letter para. 12 (WAT.0001.004.0068)].

4.14 Steps are taken to protect children if a disfellowshipped person is later reinstated [October 1, 2012 letter para. 12 (WAT.0001.004.0068)].

4.15 These steps include ensuring newly appointed elders know of a person's past wrongdoing, cautioning the person not to cultivate friendships with children (other than their own), not to allow children to stay alone in their house and not to work alone in field service (ie. he must always to be accompanied by an adult) [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 12 (WAT.0001.004.0068-WAT.0001.004.0069)].

4.16 In all cases of judicial reproof and reinstatement restrictions are imposed [Elders' Handbook Chapter 7, para. 19 (WAT.0003.001.0098); October 1, 2012 letter para. 12 (WAT.0001.004.0068 – WAT.0001.004.0069)].

4.17 If an individual does not follow the elders' directions in relation to these restrictions, the Service Department is immediately called by the elders [October 1, 2012 letter para. 13 (WAT.0001.004.0069)].

4.18 The Service Department is also called if the elders believe that the individual is acting in a predatory manner [October 1, 2012 letter, para. 13 (WAT.0001.004.0069)].

4.19 The Branch Office determines whether a person is considered a predator [October 1, 2012 letter para. 13 (WAT.0001.004.0069)].

4.20 If a determination that the individual is a predator is made by the Branch Office, two elders inform and warn all parents with minors in the congregation. At the same time, the elders also inform the individual that this is occurring [October 1, 2012 letter para. 13

(WAT.0001.004.0069)] Where there is no response to the further strong caution the individual will face further judicial action for the disfellowshipping offence of 'brazen conduct' [Elders' Handbook Chapter 5, para. 9 (WAT.0003.001.0061)].

4.21 If a former child abuser moves to another congregation, the elders "send a letter of introduction with full and complete information about his background and current situation" [Elders' Handbook, Chapter 12, para. 20 (WAT.0003.001.0133)].

I am applying for regular pioneer service because of my own desire to share in this activity. Having dedicated myself without reservation to Jehovah God, I am interested solely in the doing of his will and magnifying his name. I am well aware that sharing to a greater extent in the field service does not relieve me of other Scriptural responsibilities, that I must continue to be diligent to work what is good toward those who are already in the congregation, and that I must at all times apply in both speech and conduct the high moral standard of God's Word. As I carry on my service, I will be diligent to cooperate with the legal corporations used by the faithful and discreet slave and to follow through on the instructions that are issued for those sharing in the regular pioneer service. Second Statement

Address	12-14 Zouch Road Denham Court NSW 2565
Occupation	Service Desk at Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses
Date	24 July 2015

INTRODUCTION

1. I refer to my first statement dated 10 July 2015.

2. I have been asked to elaborate on the changes made to Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia's ("WTA") document retention policy to comply with the requirements of the Privacy Act 1988 (Cth) following WTA's acceptance in February 2009 that it fell within the jurisdiction of the Privacy Act.

IMPLEMENTATION

3. The implementation of the document retention policy was handled by the Service Department in a four-stage process as follows.

4. Stage 1: On November 20, 2008 a letter was sent from the Branch Office to all bodies of elders in Australia explaining a 'New Arrangement for Notification of Disfellowshipping and Disassociation' [WAT.0001.004.0047 - WAT.0001.004.0048].

5. The November 20 letter outlined the simplified procedure that would apply for processing and filing future judicial matters in general and introduced a revised 'Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation' (S-77) form [WAT.0012.001.0027 - WAT.0012.001.0028] and Instructions (S-77) [WAT.0004.001.0060 - WAT.0004.001.0061] for use in Australia.

6. Stage 2: On November 21, 2008 a letter regarding 'Retention of Confidential Records' was sent out which addressed the process for reviewing existing judicial records held by the congregation to "minimise the unnecessary accumulation of confidential information." (November 21, 2008, para. 1) [WAT.0001.004.0049 - WAT.0001.004.0050] This stage involved transferring necessary information from existing records to the simplified S-77a form and/or a one page summation.

7. The November 21, 2008 letter stated, in the context of reinstatement, that certain records were to be destroyed [WAT.0001.004.0050]:

> "unless there is a good reason for retaining it (For example, a matter involving child abuse).

8. The direction in relation to child sexual abuse documents was

   a. in keeping with to the long-standing policy (recorded , for instance, in Letter to all bodies of elders dated July 20, 1998) [WAT.0002.001.0003] that:

      > "any correspondence put in the confidential congregation file about an individual accused of child molestation, proven or otherwise, should be marked "Do Not Destroy" and kept indefinitely."

   b. (which was) subsequently restated in the letter of October 1, 2012, paragraph 11 [WAT.0001.004.0068], as follows:

      > "Information concerning an individual accused of child molestation, proved or otherwise, should be placed in the congregation confidential file and marked "Do Not Destroy" and kept indefinitely. This includes Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) forms on individuals who have been disfellowshipped for child sexual abuse and then later reinstated."

9. Stage 3: On February 1, 2009 a further letter was sent to all bodies of elders dated [WAT.0002.001.0015] regarding 'Retention of confidential records' which introduced the next stage of the document review process under the heading "Child abuse matters." In paragraph 4 it stated:

   > "All documents relating to the matter should be sent to the branch office, instead of being destroyed. This will facilitate the congregation retaining only a stamped S-77 form in matters resulting in disfellowshipping, or a single page summation for all other situations."

   Also, paragraph 6 of the letter added that [WAT.0002.001.0016]:

   > "any letter of introduction that refers to matters of child abuse should be retained in the confidential file for as long as the accused person remains in the congregation."

10. Stage 4: In addition to ensuring that the records of judicial matters conformed to the requirements of the Privacy Act, the Service Department merged the child abuse records submitted by the congregations with the records held at the Branch Office.

11. Duplicate or unrelated documents were destroyed and documents material to the matter were retained as a permanent case file at the Branch Office.

INTRODUCTION

1. This statement is given in response to a letter of 26 June 2015 (which is attached and called Annexure 1), in the matter of the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. I address the matters set out in the letter in my statement below and have used (A) – (M) as my headings in an effort to follow the same structure as the questions.

2. I believe this statement is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

3. As a director of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia and member of the Branch Committee, I am qualified to answer the questions in the letter from the Commission from an administrative perspective. However, some of the questions concern technical details about the procedures in the Legal Department and Service Department. Whilst I can provide a general overview of those matters, I understand that the statements of Mr Toole for the Legal Department and Mr Spinks for the Service Department will provide specific responses. I do not work in either of those two departments. I should add that I am not the Branch Committee member who has direct responsibility for the Service Department.

4. Just a little about my background. I am 63 years old. I grew up on the Gold Coast in Queensland and am one of six children. My family were nominal Catholics but non-practicing. I became interested in the Bible and the understanding that Jehovah's Witnesses had of it at age 20. None of my family members are or have ever been Jehovah's Witnesses.

Despite the difference in religious beliefs, I have a close relationship with my three sisters and their grown children. My parents and two brothers have passed away. I completed my year 10 high school education and left school to complete an apprenticeship as a baker-pastry cook, working for a time as a TAFE lecturer in Adelaide School of Food, before accepting an invitation to become a circuit overseer, visiting congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses with my wife.

A. HISTORICAL OVERVIEW OF JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES

5. The modern organization of Jehovah's Witnesses had their beginnings in the 1870's with small Bible groups in the United States, England and Europe, later establishing more groups in different countries. You can read much more about Jehovah's Witnesses by accessing the jw.org website, the official website provided by Jehovah's Witnesses.

6. History of Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia: Jehovah's Witnesses have been active here since 1896, with a Branch Office first established in 1904. At present there are 821 congregations in Australia with over 68,000 active members. We base our teachings on the Holy Bible using a variety of translations and Bible commentaries. The quotations in this submission are from the New World Translation of the Holy Scriptures, English language edition. The Bible book of Acts relates the history of the early structure of the Christian Congregation which received direction and teachings from a central body, the apostles and other elders in Jerusalem. (Acts Chapter 15) Today we follow that pattern and accept direction from a Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses, based at our world headquarters in New York.

7. We believe that the structure of the organization of Jehovah's Witnesses and the individual congregations today is essentially the same as it was in the first century when it was established by Jesus Christ and his apostles.

8. Perhaps the most significant change in structure today is that the Governing Body assigns a large measure of responsibility to more than 90 Branch Offices, Australia being one of these. The Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses based in Sydney, has a Branch Committee which coordinates the activities of the 821 congregations in Australia. As you know, the laws of governments vary considerably from country to country, and this is true of laws regarding child sexual abuse. Despite this, the theocratic or Scriptural direction that the Governing Body provides, is the same in every branch and for all of Jehovah's Witnesses, worldwide.

9. Each congregation is cared for by a body of elders. The majority of elders are themselves family men and maintain secular employment to support their families. Our congregation structure does not involve a salaried clergy and as such, our organisation has no employees. Therefore, we have no contractual arrangement that enables us to direct such persons to move from one congregation to another.

10. Governing Body members, Branch Committee members and elders have no special titles such as 'Reverend', 'Father' etc., but follow Jesus counsel that "all of you are brothers."—Matthew 23:8.

11. Regarding your question as to the relationship between the Governing Body and The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania, the Governing Body is the theocratic body of elders located at our world headquarters in New York. They oversee the spiritual activities of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide.

12. The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania is a legal corporation in the United States used by Jehovah's Witnesses. No member of the Governing Body serves as an officer, director or member of this legal entity or any other corporation.

B. OVERVIEW OF THE ROLE AND FUNCTIONS OF THE CURRENT GOVERNING BODY – STRUCTURE, MEMBERSHIP AND SUB-COMMITTEES

13. The Governing Body of Jehovah's Witnesses is made up of Christian elders, presently numbering seven members from various countries. The Governing Body publishes spiritually encouraging literature in many languages. This teaching is based on God's Word. So, what is taught is not from men but from Jehovah God.—Isa. 54:13. Matt. 24:14, 45-47.

14. The members of the Governing Body also serve on various committees. In caring for spiritual interests of the world wide faith of Jehovah's Witnesses, each committee has its own area of oversight. Here is a summary of their responsibilities.

15. Coordinators' Committee: The elders serving on this committee respond to disasters, outbreaks of persecution, and other emergencies affecting Jehovah's Witnesses anywhere in the world. They also oversee legal matters as well as the use of the media when it is necessary to convey an accurate picture of our beliefs.

16. Personnel Committee: This committee is entrusted with the oversight of arrangements for the physical and spiritual welfare and assistance of members of Bethel families' earth wide. Bethel families are full time, unpaid volunteers who care for the various work assignments at branch offices. Each volunteer is a member of the Worldwide Order of Special Full-Time Servants of Jehovah's Witnesses.

17. Publishing Committee: Those serving on this committee supervise the printing and shipping of Bible literature worldwide. They oversee printeries and properties owned and operated by the various corporations used by Jehovah's Witnesses, as well as all construction worldwide, including the work of building meeting places of Jehovah's Witnesses known as Kingdom Halls.

18. Service Committee: The elders who make up this committee oversee all areas of the evangelizing work and matters affecting congregations and their members.

19. Teaching Committee: This committee oversees the instruction provided at assemblies, conventions, and congregation meetings. It also has oversight of various schools used for spiritual training, none of which isolate children from parents. In addition, this committee oversees the development of audio and video programs.

20. Writing Committee: The elders serving on this committee supervise the preparation of spiritual instruction in written and electronic form for fellow believers and the general public. Additionally, this committee responds to questions about the meaning of certain scriptures and points presented in the publications.

C. RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN WATCHTOWER AUSTRALIA AND OTHER PARTS OF THE ORGANISATION:

21. The Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania is a corporation used by Jehovah's Witnesses in the United States. Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia is a company limited by guarantee that is used by Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia. They are two separate legal entities. Neither of these organisations formulates spiritual teachings.

22. The Governing Body is entirely separate from any legal corporations; no members of the Governing Body are directors or members of the Australian corporation, as stated in paragraph 11.

23. Legal connection between the congregations in Australia and Watchtower Australia. Each congregation in Australia is a separately registered charity with the Australian Taxation Office ("ATO") and the Australian Charities and Not-for-profits Commission ("ACNC"). They each have an autonomous committee that administers the secular affairs and business of the congregation. Each congregation is an unincorporated association made up of members who collectively choose to follow the religious beliefs of the Jehovah's Witness faith as set out in the Scriptures.

D. OVERVIEW OF SOME OF THE BELIEFS OF THE JEHOVAH'S WITNESS FAITH

24. I am happy to provide a brief overview of the beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses on the subjects you have asked about. I have attempted to answer these questions as best I can, given their doctrinal complexity. I must admit I found it difficult to see the relevance of these doctrinal questions to the topic of child sexual abuse, nonetheless I have attempted to answer them as simply as I can. If you would like more information on our beliefs, our website, jw.org, has much more information. I have also attached as an annexure, a more detailed answer based on published information from Jehovah's Witnesses for your further consideration (Annexure 2).

i. Separateness from the world (see pages 1 -5 in Annexure 2)

25. Being separate from the world does not mean Jehovah's Witnesses do not have any association with those who do not profess our faith. Most of us either work with non-witnesses, have relatives who are non-witnesses and our children go to school with other children of many religious and non-religious persuasions. And of course we share our message with everyone in our community.

26. However, we do avoid mixing with persons who would try and influence us to pursue a course that we believe is in violation of Bible standards. As an example, we would encourage our children and teenagers to avoid those who may promote a drug or alcohol culture, or sexually permissive lifestyle. I am sure many parents and grandparents who are not Jehovah's Witnesses feel the same as we do.

27. But what we principally understand separateness from the world to involve is to remain politically neutral, based on what the Bible teaches. This means we do not lobby, vote for political parties or candidates, run for government office, or participate in any action to change governments. We believe that the Bible gives solid reasons for following this course.

28. As an example, Jesus Christ refused to accept political office. (John 6:15) He taught his disciples to be "no part of the world" and made it clear that they should not take sides in political issues.—John 17:14, 16; 18:36; Mark 12:13-17.

29. Since we avoid political divisions, we are united as an international brotherhood. (Colossians 3:14; 1 Peter 2:17) It is for this reason, as well as other Scriptural commands, that Jehovah's Witnesses in every land do not join in armed conflicts, but are conscientious objectors. Nonetheless, we also respect the rights of others to make their own decisions in political matters. For example, we do not disrupt elections or interfere with those who choose to vote.

ii. Role of evangelizing (see pages 5 – 8 in Annexure 2)

30. Jehovah's Witnesses evangelize to glorify God and to make known his name. (Hebrews 13:15) This is in obedience to Christ Jesus' command to: "Go, therefore, and make disciples of people of all the nations, . . . teaching them to observe all the things I have commanded you."—Matthew 28:19, 20.

31. Jehovah's Witnesses view evangelizing as a personal responsibility and the extent to which they engage in this activity is a personal decision that they make as an expression of their love for God and neighbour. (Matthew 22:39) Of course, we realize that most people have their own religious beliefs and that not everyone is interested in our message. Still, we feel that Bible teachings are lifesaving. That is why we continue "without letup teaching and declaring the good news about the Christ," as did the first-century Christians.—Acts 5:41, 42.

32. Last year, well over 8.2 million individual Jehovah's Witnesses preached the "good news of the kingdom" in 239 lands. The vast majority of that 8.2 million were parents, grandparents, and young people. Almost 9.5 million people studied the Bible with Jehovah's Witnesses, many making major changes for the better in their lives. Last year alone, Jehovah's Witnesses collectively spent almost 2 billion hours in the evangelizing work. All of this activity was done on a voluntary basis.

iii. Purported belief of "End Times" (see pages 8 - 11 in Annexure 2)

33. I have not been able to locate any reference to a doctrine of Jehovah's Witnesses termed "End Times." So my comments are based on the assumption that this is referring to our doctrinal understanding of Bible prophecies to do with the "conclusion of the system of things", which is also referred to as "the last days." (Matthew 24:3; 2 Timothy 3:1)

34. Much information has been published on the subject 'last days" that can be readily located on the official jw.org website. Whilst it is true that the Bible foretells the end of the present system of things, the message that forms part of the sign indicating the nearness of the end was the preaching work just described. Rather than focusing on the troubles of the last days, the message is one of "good news."

35. Immediately following the end of the present system, Jesus taught that God's Kingdom will cause God's will to "be done on earth, as it is in heaven." (Matthew 6:10) This is the kingdom millions have prayed for over many centuries. This is the good news that Jehovah's Witnesses preach in fulfilment of one significant part of an overall sign Jesus gave.

36. Some of the noteworthy prophetic features mentioned in the Bible about the conclusion of this system of things can be found in the article in Annexure 2.

iv. Male headship (see pages 11- 13 in Annexure 2)

37. Today the idea of headship may seem to be an offensive notion. However, the Bible's view is quite the opposite. When properly understood, headship in the family and congregation is not an arbitrary, domineering or authoritarian rule by husbands over family or in the congregation by elders over the flock. On the contrary a husband is instructed to treat his wife and children "as the Christ does the congregation." (Ephesians 5:25-29) Likewise elders are to treat the congregation in a kind and loving way, "becoming examples to the flock" — 1 Peter 5:1-3

38. First Corinthians 11:3 says simply that ". . . the head of every man is the Christ, in turn the head of a woman is the man . . ." This applies in the marriage arrangement, where we accept this divine standard.

39. Today, Jehovah's Witnesses—male and female—have an active share in carrying out the evangelizing work as Jesus foretold: "This good news of the kingdom will be preached in all the inhabited earth for a witness to all the nations; and then the end will come."—Matthew 24:14.

40. In the congregations, mature men are Scripturally appointed as elders with the God-given responsibility to care for the flock of God. This is clear from Scriptures such as Titus 1:5, 6 which says "For this reason I left you in Crete, that you might . . . make appointments of older men in city after city." It further says "if there is any man free from accusation, a husband of one wife." Similar instructions are set out at 1 Timothy 3:1, 2: "If any man is reaching out for an office of overseer, he is desirous of a fine work. The overseer should therefore be irreprehensible, a husband of one wife . . ."

E. MY INVOLVEMENT WITH JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES

41. I have been one of Jehovah's Witnesses for 40 years. I began actively serving with Jehovah's Witnesses in 1975 and was baptized in January 1976. The congregations I have served with have been

    a. Southport, Qld (1975-77);
    b. Townsville South Qld (1977-81);
    c. Cabramatta NSW (1981-84);
    d. Mount Druitt NSW (1984-1986);
    e. Parafield Gardens SA (1986-1987);
    f. Ingleburn NSW (2003);
    g. Penshurst NSW (2004-8) and
    h. Minto NSW (2008-present).

42. I served as a ministerial servant from 1977-1980 and since 1980 as an elder.

43. During the years 1987-1997 I served as a circuit overseer visiting congregations in most states of Australia. A circuit overseer travels weekly to different congregations in a circuit, usually comprising about 20 congregations. This means a circuit overseer visits each congregation in his assigned circuit at least twice each year. During the week, he will work in the preaching activity with the congregation and have meetings with the congregation and with the elders.

44. From 1997 until 2003 I served in the India branch of Jehovah's Witnesses as a member of that Branch Committee.

45. Since 2003 I have served at the Australia Branch in Sydney. I presently serve as the coordinator of the Australia Branch Committee, having been a member of the Branch Committee since March 2, 2005. I have also been a member of the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia since July 1, 2005 and a director since December 19, 2009.

46. As a Branch Committee member I care for a number of administrative responsibilities as I do also in my role as a director for Watchtower Australia. In addition to those responsibilities, part of my role is to deliver speaking assignments at conventions throughout the year and also to visit congregations in other states from time to time. As I have time, I also have the role of Branch Committee contact with a number of Branch Office departments. This primarily involves bringing matters from those departments that require Branch Committee decisions to the Branch Committee meetings. The departments that I am contact for include our Correspondence, Computer, Legal and Writing Departments. However, I do not play an active day-to-day role in those departments.

F. SYSTEMS, POLICIES AND PROCEDURES IN PLACE WITHIN JEHOVAH'S WITNESS IN AUSTRALIA

47. Jehovah's Witnesses regard child abuse of any kind as a violation of every standard of righteousness that the Bible upholds for Christians.

48. Having said that, you ask for my comments on four aspects of our procedures in dealing with allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse. I can say that the following established procedures have been provided to every congregation elder in this country, but think Mr Spinks can provide a more comprehensive and specific statement, since this falls more into his area of responsibility at the Branch Office's Service Desk. So as an elder, I am able to comment as follows.

i. Response to allegations

49. In my 35 years as an elder I have not been involved in a case of child abuse of any kind. However, I know that the procedure in handling cases of child abuse has been consistently the same for many years. If an allegation had been reported to an elder it would have been investigated by two elders. If a person was proven to have sexually abused a child, a judicial committee would have been formed and the person either disfellowshipped or reproved if judged as being repentant. If the person had held any position of service in the congregations, such as an elder, he would have been removed from that immediately. While direction to contact the assistance of the Branch Office's Legal and Service Departments may not have been so clear in the 1980's, the action by the elders was basically the same as it is today.

50. As far as published direction on how to handle child abuse, many of the letters that were sent to bodies of elders were mailed after I moved to India (1997-2003). However, the previous handbook for elders which I received after being appointed as an elder in 1980, entitled Pay Attention to the Flock. On page 93 [WAT.0003.001.0232] it provided the following explanation as to sins for which a judicial committee should be formed: "Also included are sexual abuse of children, including practices that involving a catamite (a boy kept for purposes of sexual perversion.)"

51. The same reference page included the following in caring for the victim. "Victims of sexual abuse need to be treated with extreme thoughtfulness and kindness. Elders should always do what they reasonably can to protect children from further abuse; follow the Society's directives on such matters (g85 1/22 p.8)" [WAT.0003.001.0232] This reference, g85 1/22 p.8, refers to the comments in the Awake! of January 1, 1985 issue on page 8 where the two paragraphs in a feature box on that page gave the following comments [WAT.0001.004.0210]:

> "First, the child—and other children too—must be protected from any further abuse. This must be done, whatever the cost. In many cases the accused molester will have > to be confronted. But whatever it takes, it is important that the child should feel confident that the molester will never be able to get at her (or him) again. Second, the child must be given a lot of love and emotional support. Parents must make it very clear that the little victim is not to blame. The crime and anything that happens as a result of it—even if a close relative goes to prison—is not her (or his) fault. But that reassurance will have to be given many times, so that the victim comes to believe it—and to believe that the parents believe it too!"

52. I make specific mention of these references to show that the procedure in elders and parents being helped to be aware of what they needed to do in caring for the prevention and handling of child abuse was made clear. As with society in general though, as the issue of child abuse achieved a greater awareness, our organization gave more attention to helping parents and elders to try and meet the challenges child abuse presents.

53. I can also recall one letter that was sent to all Bodies of Elders dated August 1, 1995 [WAT.0001.004.0005-0006] which gave direction that when an accusation of child abuse was made to an elder, the elders were to contact the Branch Office immediately. The letter also directed elders in providing care for any victims and how a former child abuser should be cautioned and how restoring privileges of any kind should be handled. I recall that letter very well as I used it in discussions with bodies of elders when I visited a number of congregations as a circuit overseer.

54. The most recent direction on the subject was in a letter to the Bodies of Elders dated October 1, 2012, paragraph 11 [WAT.0001.004.0068], which states ". . . the elders should investigate every allegation of child sexual abuse." Upon receiving a complaint, elders are directed to have two elders contact the Branch Office's Legal Department immediately they learn of an allegation of child abuse. This is done to ensure that elders understand and will fully comply with any legal requirements that may be applicable in the State in which they reside. They then will speak to the Service Department as well to ensure that the matter is fully dealt with according to theocratic procedures.

ii. Prevention

55. For decades, The Watchtower and Awake! journals and other Bible-based publications have featured articles designed to educate both Jehovah's Witnesses and the general public on how to protect children from sexual abuse and to be alert to any inappropriate behaviour. In recent years, our jw.org website has also made such resources accessible to a wider audience. These resources include advice for parents on how to initiate an age-appropriate conversation with each child concerning what to do if confronted by any inappropriate behaviour. We believe that parental education of children about sex and the dangers of child sexual abuse in this way can be a major factor in helping to prevent child sexual abuse.

56. Concerning reporting of child abuse to the authorities, we believe that a victim or parent/guardian has the absolute right to do so. As far back as January 1985, The Awake! [WAT.0001.004.0210] magazine informed elders that in any circumstances, where they learn that the victim remains in danger of further abuse, the direction is "First, the child—and other children too—must be protected from any further abuse. This must be done, whatever the cost."

57. In 1997, a pivotal article "Abhor What Is Wicked" [WAT.0001.004.0306-0309] was published, clarifying the long-term implications for an individual who has been involved in child sexual abuse with a view to further protecting the congregation.

58. A letter dated August 28, 2002, was sent to every congregation in Australia, outlining various issues everyone should take notice of in the matter of preventing child abuse. This was because we were then, and still are, concerned that congregation members were aware of their right to report child abuse to the authorities. For example, a letter was sent to all congregations and read at a congregation meeting. In part it said "We have long instructed elders to report allegations of child abuse to authorities where required by law to do so., even where there is only one witness. (Romans 13:1) In any case, the elders know that if the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so." [WAT.0004.001.0002]

59. Later The Watchtower, August 1, 2005, page 14 (Please refer to Annexure 2), stated: "In our time, rape is also a major crime with severe penalties. The victim has every right to report the matter to the police. In this way the proper authorities can punish the offender. And if the victim is a minor, the parents may want to initiate these actions."

60. Then in 2010, elders have been given clear instruction in this regard in chapter 12 of the Shepherding Book ("Elders' Handbook"), page 131, paragraph 19 [WAT.0003.001.0132-0133], which states:

> Child abuse is a crime. Never suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or other authorities. If you are asked, make it clear that whether to report the matter to the authorities or not is a personal decision for each individual to make and that there are no congregation sanctions for either decision. Elders will not criticize anyone who reports such an allegation to the authorities. If the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so.

61. More recently, in 2012, a very detailed letter was sent to all elders which detailed how reports, investigations and handling of child abuse should be handled according to the Scriptures. Also, how help should be extended to victims of abuse was discussed.

62. Elders have been directed that any Jehovah's Witness who sexually abuses a child is either to be disfellowshipped from the congregation or is to receive severe discipline, part of which will always include a public announcement for the protection of the congregation. In the case of being reproved the announcement will read "[Name of the person] has been reproved." If disfellowshipped the announcement will read "[Name of the person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses." (1 Corinthians 5:13) However, if the guilty individual serves in any appointed capacity in the congregation, such as an elder, even prior to any decision being made as to whether or not he is to be disfellowshipped, he will immediately be removed from any appointed position and an announcement will be made to the congregation confirming his removal. —1 Timothy 3:1-7, 10; Titus 1:7.

iii. Record allegations of child sexual abuse

63. The letter to All Elders, October 1, 2012 par 11 [WAT.0001.004.0068] states the following: "Information concerning an individual accused of child molestation, proved or otherwise, should be placed in the congregation confidential file and marked "Do Not Destroy" and kept indefinitely. This includes Notification of Disfellowshipping or Disassociation (S-77) forms on individuals who have been disfellowshipped for child sexual abuse and then later reinstated."

iv. Identifying child sexual abuse:

64. This is a difficult question for me to answer. Congregation elders are not given training in this specific area, other than in what has been published in our literature. However, as most elders are themselves family men, they have read our publications and would be observant to any suspicious signs. Of course, parents who are not elders, both mothers and fathers along with any congregation member who felt a need to report suspicions to elders would have their reports taken seriously.

65. As far back as the 1970s, in harmony with growing community awareness, our publications increasingly drew attention to behavioural aspects of perpetrators, dispelled misconceptions about who could be an offender, created awareness and highlighted the shocking impact that child sexual abuse inflicts on victims. Over the decades our publications have continued to focus on the need to take strong measures to educate parents and to identify, prevent and respond appropriately to child sexual abuse.

66. Our approach has been refined over time, resulting in our current way of dealing with the matter as outlined in the Elders' Handbook [WAT.0003.001.0001-0143] and the letter to All Bodies of Elders, October 1, 2012 [WAT.0001.004.0066-0071].

67. I believe our congregation structure and meetings for worship arrangements further minimise the potential for child abusers. We do not have any programs in which we take custody of children from their parents. We do not have Sunday Schools, youth groups, camps or social activities that separate children from parents. All of our congregation meetings involve entire family groups. Children, even teenagers, are not separated into groups from parents. Nor do we have secular educational schools, orphanages, hospitals, day care centres and the like. We believe that loving and protective parents are the best deterrent to child abuse. We continue to educate parents and provide them with valuable tools to help them educate and protect their children.—Deuteronomy 6:6, 7.

G. MECHANISMS TO ENSURE COMPLIANCE WITH SYSTEMS, POLICIES OR PROCEDURES

68. As a Branch Committee, we ensure the clear instructions set forth in correspondence to elders are followed up with meetings with circuit overseers when they meet with all bodies of elders in their circuit, at seminars with elders and through correspondence.

69. As noted in paragraph 53, elders are directed that on hearing any allegation of child sexual abuse, they are to immediately contact the Branch Office. Firstly, they speak to the Legal Department to determine what their reporting obligations are and then they are transferred to the Service Department to review the published procedures in relation to handling child abuse allegations.

70. Also, when an individual who is found guilty of child abuse moves congregations, a copy of the letter of introduction is forwarded to the Service Department for review, to ensure the new congregation body of elders is fully apprised of the persons background and any counsel, warnings and restrictions that he has received from his previous congregation.

71. In addition, prior to extending any congregation privilege, the elders are instructed to contact the Service Department to review the case. The Branch Office takes an active role in ensuring that local elders comply with the current procedures.

H. TRAINING IN RESPONDING TO ALLEGATIONS, PREVENTION AND/OR DETECTION OF CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

72. The training that we can provide is that with which we are qualified to give and that is the Scriptural principles that relate to this problem of response, protection and help for victims and their families.

73. To that end, regular classes are conducted for elders, and at times ministerial servants. These are known as Kingdom Ministry Schools. Following the distribution of our October 1, 2012 letter to all Bodies of Elders (WAT.0001.004.0066-0071), we conducted seminars with over 5,500 elders throughout Australia to ensure that they were thoroughly familiar with the spiritual directions provided therein. Since then, we have conducted additional classes with elders, again reviewing some of these points including training on our procedures.

74. Thousands of congregation elders in this country are parents or grandparents. Even for those who are not, as Christians, we want to do whatever we can to protect children from all forms of abuse. Personally, if I felt the protection of a child necessitated reporting a matter to the authorities, I would do so, regardless of whether or not there was a mandatory reporting requirement.

I. INDEPENDENT EXPERTS

75. Although I understand that secular research has been undertaken and is incorporated into our published information on child abuse as with many other matters, greater regard is given to Scriptural principles and guidance.

J. MY UNDERSTANDING OF OBLIGATIONS THAT JEHOVAH'S WITNESS HAVE IN RELATION TO:

76. Since much of this section pertains to Legal aspects of our procedures, I will give a brief outline of what I understand and leave a more detailed explanation to Mr. Toole.

i. Reporting

77. My understanding is that there are different requirements in various states. This is one of the reasons we ask elders to contact the Branch Office's Legal Department as soon as they hear an accusation of child sexual abuse. As an organisation, our approach has been that where mandatory reporting laws apply to congregation elders, they are instructed to comply with the law.

ii. Working With Children Checks

78. We comply fully with the legislative requirements to ensure all relevant persons have the necessary Working With Children Checks in those States and Territory where we are required to do so. If those States that do not presently require elders to obtain a WWCC, were to change the law requiring them to do so, then we will fully comply as we currently do in other states.

iii. Sharing Information

79. Importantly, the direction is given to elders regarding what information should be shared with congregations and/or parents in order to prevent future child sexual abuse. The October 1, 2012 letter to All Bodies of Elders, paragraphs 13 and 16 (WAT.0001.004.0069) sets out the direction for elders to follow.

K. ROLE OF WATCHTOWER AUSTRALIA AND/OR THE AUSTRALIAN BRANCH OFFICE IN SPECIFIED PROCESSES

80. As a congregation elder, I am able to provide an overview on these points. However, since Mr. Spinks cares for these matters in his function as the senior Service Desk elder, he will be able to provide a more detailed response in his statement.

i. Baptism (Organized to Do Jehovah's Will book, pages 180-218 - WAT.0003.001.0475-0513)

81. This is not a matter for either Watchtower Australia or the Australian Branch Office. Every candidate for baptism undergoes a course of Bible study where they are taught the moral standards of anyone who wants to have a dedicated relationship with God. These Bible studies are conducted under the oversight of a local congregation body of elders. If the person of their own volition requests baptism as one of Jehovah's Witnesses, they undergo a series of questions with the elders to ensure they clearly understand God's requirements regarding what is moral and acceptable, along with other doctrinal matters. It is the responsibility of the congregation's body of elders to approve persons for baptism, since they know them personally.

ii. Elders and Ministerial Servants (Organized to Do Jehovah's Will book, pages 29-37 - WAT.0003.001.0324-0332)

82. Firstly, the individual must meet the Scriptural requirements for an elder (1 Timothy 3:1-7,Titus 1:6-9) or ministerial servant (1 Timothy 3:8-10, 12-13). If the local body of elders and the circuit overseer all agree that he qualifies, before an individual can be appointed as an elder or ministerial servant he must answer the following three questions (WAT.0002.001.0034-0035):

- "Is there anything from your past, even before baptism, or in your personal or family life that disqualifies you or that would prevent you from accepting this appointment?

- Is there any reason why your appointment should not be announced to the congregation?

- Have you ever been involved at any time in the past with child sexual molestation?"

83. If the answers are acceptable and the individual is appointed, the Branch Office is notified.

84. In those States and Territory where an appointed minister must have a Working With Children Check, his appointment is neither confirmed nor announced to the congregation until the process involved with such a check is completed.

Regarding other congregation assignments

85. The Branch office checks the background of any who apply to serve as pioneers, special pioneers and/or any other position of status in the congregations.

iii. & iv. Deletions and public or private reproval (Elders' Handbook page 96 paragraphs 18-25 - WAT.0003.001.0097-0101)

86. This is a decision for the local body of elders in line with the Scriptural guidelines to this effect. However, if it involves an elder, ministerial servant, pioneer, special pioneer and/or any other position of status in the congregations, the Branch Office is notified since a person who is reproved by a judicial committee of elders automatically ceases to qualify for such assignments.

v. Congregation privileges

87. Congregation privileges (such as handling of microphones during meetings, serving as an attendant, caring for congregation accounts) are decisions for the local body of elders to make. For the body of elders it would also include determining which teaching parts an elder may handle, which duty of service each would perform on behalf of the congregation.

88. However, if it concerned anyone who had been guilty of child sexual abuse, it would be many, many years, if ever, before he would be given any small privilege and this would be done only after consultation with the Branch Office (October 1, 2012, paragraphs 22-24 - WAT.0001.004.0070).

vi. Disfellowshipping and/or disassociation (Elders' Handbook Pages 58-72 WAT.0003.001.0059-0073; Pages 89-96 - WAT.0003.001.0090-0097)

89. The Scriptural process known as disfellowshipping is a matter that is handled by congregation elders. A person may be disfellowshipped if they commit what the Bible has determined are serious sins such as those outlined in the 1 Corinthians 6:9-10 and is judged as being unrepentant.

90. If a person is disfellowshipped a simple announcement is made to the congregation as I mentioned in paragraph 62.

91. The Elders handbook, Chapter 5, paragraphs 5 [WAT.0003.001.0060] and 10 [WAT.0003.001.0061] explains that child sexual abuse would include "fondling of breasts, an explicitly immoral proposal, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, indecent exposure, and so forth." Paragraph 5 [WAT.0003.001.0060] discusses more serious types of sexual abuse that would also be considered as disfellowshipping offences.

92. In the case of child sexual abuse, both the Legal Department and the Service Department are involved in accordance with the instructions set out in our Guideline letter. A record is maintained in the congregation and also sent to the Branch Office.

93. Disassociation is an action taken by an individual for whatever reason they choose. This is handled by a local body of elders who appoint a committee of three. If the person is adamant that they no longer want to be known as one of Jehovah's Witnesses, the same simple announcement is made and the Branch Office is notified in the same way as one who is disfellowshipped.

94. A disfellowshipped or disassociated person may apply to be reinstated into the congregation. If so, it will be decided by a judicial committee of the original congregation that handled the case. The judicial committee will meet with the individual and determine if they have abandoned the reason(s) for which they were removed from the congregation. If they have done so and are truly repentant the individual may be reinstated. If they still need to make necessary changes to qualify to be one of Jehovah's Witnesses again, the elders will help them see what they need to do in this regard.

vii. Reinstatement (Elders' Handbook Page 118-122 paragraphs 1-15 - WAT.0003.001.0119-0123)

95. If a formerly disfellowshipped or disassociated person is reinstated the Branch office is notified of that.

L. ROLE OF WATCHTOWER AUSTRALIA AND/OR THE AUSTRALIAN BRANCH OFFICE IN THE CASE OF BCH

96. As I understand, the Branch Office was not involved in the 1989 disfellowshipping case of BCH I have not personally been involved in anything to do with this case. I understand that both Mr Spinks and Mr Toole will explain their dealings with BCH in their statements.

M. CLAIM(S) FOR COMPENSATION OR REDRESS

97. I am not aware of any claims for redress or compensation having been made in relation to child sexual abuse concerning Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia.

SUMMARY

98. Jehovah's Witnesses do not believe we have all the answers to the prevention of child sexual abuse. As with a number of other organisations, we have undergone a system of revision on our procedures for some decades. We will continue to do so in making every effort to protect children. We are repulsed by this crime against conceivably the most defenceless members of society. We share with you the hope that this Royal Commission will be able to provide answers to some of the most disturbing and complex questions confronting every community, in how to prevent this from happening.

Dear Mr O'Brien,

Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse (Royal Commission)
Case Study 29 (Jehovah's Witnesses) – request for statements

As you are aware, the Royal Commission is holding a public hearing in Sydney commencing on 27 July 2015 to inquire into the responses of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia Ltd (Watchtower Australia) to complaints of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses Church in Australia.

The scope and purpose of the public hearing is to inquire into:

Major Offenses Against Individuals

Under the Law that God gave to ancient Israel, there were serious consequences for major offenses against individuals. For instance, if a thief came into a house at night and the householder killed him, there was no bloodguilt on the part of the householder. He was an innocent victim of a major crime. Hence, we read: "If a thief should be found in the act of breaking in and he does get struck and die, there is no bloodguilt for [the householder]."—Exodus 22:2.

A woman who has been raped has a right to be highly offended, as this is a major crime in God's eyes. Under the Mosaic Law, a man who raped a woman was to die "just as when a man rises up against his fellowman and indeed murders him." (Deuteronomy 22:25, 26) While we are no longer under that Law, it gives us insight into how Jehovah feels about rape—a horrible wrong.

In our time, rape is also a major crime with severe penalties. The victim has every right to report the matter to the police. In this way the proper authorities can punish the offender. And if the victim is a minor, the parents may want to initiate these actions.

SEPARATENESS FROM THE WORLD

The Watchtower* 2012 , May 1 pages 3-11

A Question for Jesus

Many God-fearing people feel that religion should be involved in politics. They believe that religion can play a vital part in solving humankind's problems. However, other sincere believers think that religion and politics should be separate. What do you personally think of religion's role in politics? Should those powerful forces work hand-in-hand?

JESUS CHRIST has been described as "the most influential figure in the religious history of mankind." So, imagine that we could ask him the question, Should religion be involved in politics? What would he say? While on earth, he answered that question by his words and deeds. For instance, in his renowned Sermon on the Mount, Jesus gave guidelines that help his followers to discern what role they should play in their communities. Let us consider some points from that famous sermon.

Jesus described the attitude his followers should have toward the world. He stated: "You are the salt of the earth; but if the salt loses its strength, how will its saltness be restored? It is no longer usable for anything but to be thrown outside to be trampled on by men. You are the light of the world. . . . Let your light shine before men, that they may see your fine works and give glory to your Father who is in the heavens." (Matthew 5:13-16) Why did Jesus compare his followers to salt and light?

Jesus' words imply that his followers are like salt, not for just a small group, but for all of mankind. They are like light, not for a limited number of people, but for all who want to see clearly. By using those word pictures, Jesus made it clear that he did not want his followers to isolate themselves from society. Why not?

Note the following: Salt cannot preserve food if it is not mixed with a food item. A lamp cannot dispel darkness from a room if the lamp is kept away from that room. It is, therefore, no wonder that Jesus never commanded his disciples to move to an isolated corner of the earth to establish communities of believers. Nor did he encourage his followers to live insulated lives behind the walls of religious institutions. Instead, as salt needs to touch food and light needs to dispel darkness, so Christians need to have an impact on the lives of others.

"No Part of the World"

However, Jesus' instructions that his followers should interact with their fellow men raise an important question about a Christian's attitude toward politics. Why so? Shortly before his death, Jesus prayed to God in behalf of his followers: "I request you, not to take them out of the world, but to watch over them because of the wicked one. They are no part of the world, just as I am no part of the world." (John 17:15, 16) So, then, how is it possible for Christians to be no part of the world but, at the same time, be involved in their local community? To find out, let us consider three additional questions:

How Did Jesus View Politics?

THE Gospel writers describe several events in Jesus' ministry that brought him face-to-face with politics. For instance, shortly after Jesus' baptism at about the age of 30, the Devil offered him the position of world ruler. Later in his ministry, a crowd wanted to make him their king. Still later, people tried to turn him into a political activist. How did Jesus react? Let us consider these events.

World ruler. The Gospels state that the Devil offered Jesus rulership over "all the kingdoms of the world." Think of how much good Jesus could have done for suffering mankind if he had wielded the power of a world ruler! What politically oriented individual sincerely concerned with mankind's advancement could resist such an offer? But Jesus refused it.—Matthew 4:8-11.

King. Many of Jesus' contemporaries were desperate for a ruler who could solve their economic and political problems. Impressed by Jesus' abilities, the people wanted Jesus to join the political process. What was his reaction? Gospel writer John states: "Jesus, knowing they were about to come and seize him to make him king, withdrew again into the mountain all alone." (John 6:10-15) Clearly, Jesus refused to become involved in politics.

Political activist. Note what happened days before Jesus was put to death. Disciples of the Pharisees, who favored independence from the Roman Empire, joined by Herodians, members of a political party favoring Rome, approached Jesus. They wanted to force him to take a political position. They asked if the Jews should pay taxes to Rome.

Mark recorded Jesus' response: "'Why do you put me to the test? Bring me a denarius to look at.' They brought one. And he said to them: 'Whose image and inscription is this?' They said to him: 'Caesar's.' Jesus then said: 'Pay back Caesar's things to Caesar, but God's things to God.'" (Mark 12:13-17) Commenting on the reason for Jesus' response, the book Church and State—The Story of Two Kingdoms concludes: "He refused to act the part of a political messiah and carefully established both the boundary of Caesar and that of God."

Problems such as poverty, corruption, and injustice did not leave Christ unmoved. In fact, the Bible shows that he was deeply touched by the pitiful state of the people around him. (Mark 6:33, 34) Still, Jesus did not start a campaign to rid the world of injustices, although some tried hard to get him embroiled in the controversial issues of the day.

Clearly, as these examples show, Jesus refused to get involved in political affairs. But what about Christians today? What should they do?

What Should Christians Do Today?

TRUE Christians today do not participate in politics. Why not? Because they follow Jesus' example. He said about himself: "I am no part of the world." Regarding his followers, he stated: "You are no part of the world." (John 15:19; 17:14) Consider some reasons why Christians should not become involved in politics.

1. Human ability is limited. The Bible states that humans have neither the ability nor the right to govern themselves. "It does not belong to man who is walking," wrote the prophet Jeremiah, "even to direct his step."—Jeremiah 10:23.

Just as humans were not created to fly successfully on their own strength, so they were not created to rule successfully by themselves. Speaking about the limits of government, historian David Fromkin noted: "Governments are composed of human beings; therefore they are fallible and their prospects are uncertain. They exercise a certain power, but only a limited one." (The Question of Government) No wonder the Bible warns us not to put our trust in man!—Psalm 146:3.

2. Wicked spirit forces currently have an influence. When Satan offered Jesus world rulership, Jesus did not deny that the Devil had the power to offer him all the kingdoms of the world. In fact, on a later occasion, Jesus called Satan "the ruler of the world." Some years later the apostle Paul described Satan as "the god of this system of things." (John 14:30; 2 Corinthians 4:4) Paul wrote to fellow Christians: "We have a wrestling . . . against the world rulers of this darkness, against the wicked spirit forces in the heavenly places." (Ephesians 6:12) Behind the scenes, wicked spirit forces are the real rulers of this world. How should that fact influence our view of politics?

Think of this comparison: Just as small boats are swept along by powerful sea currents, human political systems are pulled along by powerful, wicked spirit forces. And just as the sailors in those boats can do little to change those powerful currents, politicians can do little to change the influence of those powerful spirit forces. Those forces are bent on corrupting humans beyond reform and on causing "woe for the earth." (Revelation 12:12) Therefore, real change can be brought about only by a person who is more powerful than Satan and his demons. That Person is Jehovah God himself.—Psalm 83:18; Jeremiah 10:7, 10.

3. True Christians give allegiance only to God's Kingdom. Jesus and his disciples knew that at a set time, God himself would establish a government in heaven to rule over the entire earth. The Bible calls this government God's Kingdom and reveals that Jesus Christ has been appointed as its King. (Revelation 11:15) Since that Kingdom affects all humans, Jesus made "the good news of the kingdom of God" the main subject of his teachings. (Luke 4:43) He also taught his disciples to pray: "Let your kingdom come." Why? Because under that Kingdom, God's will is sure to be done in heaven and on earth.—Matthew 6:9, 10.

What, then, will happen to man-made governments? The Bible answers that the governments "of the entire inhabited earth" will be destroyed. (Revelation 16:14; 19:19-21) If an individual truly believes that God's Kingdom is about to remove all man-made political systems, he logically would refrain from supporting those political systems. After all, if he tried to prop up doomed, man-made governments, he would, in effect, be taking a stand against God.

While true Christians do not participate in politics, does that mean that they have no interest in trying to improve the communities in which they live? Consider the answer given in the next article.

How Do Christian Teachings Affect Communities?

THE preceding articles considered why genuine Christians do not participate in politics. How, though, can Christians show that they are interested in improving the communities in which they live? One way is by following Jesus' command: "Go therefore and make disciples of people of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit, teaching them to observe all the things I have commanded you."—Matthew 28:19, 20.

There is a link between following Jesus' command to "make disciples" and carrying out his instruction to be like salt and light to the world. (Matthew 5:13, 14) What is the connection? And what effect can that work have on people?

Christ's Message—Preserving and Enlightening

Salt is a preservative; it can prevent decay. Similarly, the message that Jesus instructed his followers to carry to people in all nations has a preserving influence. Those who accept and apply Jesus' teachings protect themselves from the moral decay so prevalent today. In what way? They learn how to avoid practices that are harmful to health, such as smoking, and they develop such qualities as love, peace, long-suffering, kindness, and goodness. (Galatians 5:22, 23) Those qualities make them an asset to society. Christians who share this preserving message with their neighbors make a valuable contribution to their community.

What about the metaphor of light? Just as the moon reflects the light from the sun, so Christ's followers reflect the "light" from Jehovah God. They serve as reflectors by means of the enlightening message they preach and the good works they do.—1 Peter 2:12.

Jesus further highlighted the similarity between being a light and being a disciple by saying: "People light a lamp and set it, not under the measuring basket, but upon the lampstand, and it shines upon all those in the house. Likewise let your light shine before men." A shining lamp placed upon a lampstand is clearly visible to all those around it. Similarly, the preaching activities and other fine works that true Christians perform should be clearly visible to those living around them. Why? Jesus said that those who see the fine works will give glory, not to the Christians, but to God.—Matthew 5:14-16.

A Collective Responsibility

When Jesus said, "You are the light of the world" and "let your light shine," he was addressing all his disciples. Jesus' commission cannot be accomplished by a few individuals scattered in different religions. Instead, all believers are "the light." Seven million Jehovah's Witnesses, who live in more than 235 lands, believe that it is their collective responsibility to visit their neighbors to share the message that Christ wants his followers to proclaim.

What is the theme of the message of Jehovah's Witnesses? When Jesus gave his preaching commission, he did not instruct his followers to preach social or political reforms, union of Church and State, or any other secular ideology. Instead, he foretold: "This good news of the kingdom will be preached in all the inhabited earth for a witness to all the nations." (Matthew 24:14) Thus, in obedience to Jesus' instructions, true Christians today continue to speak to their neighbors about God's Kingdom—the only government capable of bringing an end to Satan's wicked system and ushering in a righteous new world.

Sincere Believer and Responsible Citizen—How to Be Both

WHAT were two of the characteristics of Jesus' ministry? First, Jesus sought to change individual hearts, not political institutions. For instance, note what Jesus stressed in his Sermon on the Mount. Just before he spoke about the need to be like salt and light, he told his audience that true happiness belongs to those who are "conscious of their spiritual need." He added: "Happy are the mild-tempered ones, . . . the pure in heart, . . . the peaceable." (Matthew 5:1-11) Jesus helped his followers to see the importance of adjusting their thinking and feelings to God's standard of what is good and bad and the importance of serving God wholeheartedly.

Second, when Jesus saw human suffering, his compassion for his fellow men moved him to alleviate their misery. However, he did not make it his goal to eliminate all suffering. (Matthew 20:30-34) He cured sick people, but sickness remained a fact of life. (Luke 6:17-19) He brought relief to the oppressed, but injustice continued to cause suffering. He provided food for the hungry, but famines continued to plague mankind.—Mark 6:41-44.

Changing Hearts and Alleviating Suffering

Why did Jesus focus on changing hearts and alleviating suffering but not on changing institutions or eliminating distress? Jesus knew that God had purposed to use His Kingdom at a future time to put an end to all human governments and erase the causes of all suffering. (Luke 4:43; 8:1) Therefore, when the disciples once urged Jesus to spend more time on curing the sick, Jesus said to them: "Let us go somewhere else, into the village towns nearby, that I may preach there also, for it is for this purpose I have gone out." (Mark 1:32-38) Jesus alleviated the physical suffering of many, but he gave priority to preaching and teaching God's word.

In their preaching work today, Jehovah's Witnesses strive to imitate Jesus. They are moved to alleviate suffering by giving practical help to individuals in need. But the Witnesses do not strive to eliminate the world's injustices. They believe that God's Kingdom will erase the causes of all suffering. (Matthew 6:10) Like Jesus, they endeavor to change hearts but not political institutions. That approach is realistic because man's main problems are, not political, but moral.

Responsible Citizens

At the same time, Jehovah's Witnesses believe that it is their Christian responsibility to be good citizens. Hence, they honor and respect governmental authority. Through their publications and their witnessing work, they encourage their neighbors to be law-abiding. However, when a government demands what is in direct conflict with what God commands, the Witnesses do not comply. They "obey God as ruler rather than men."—Acts 5:29; Romans 13:1-7.

Jehovah's Witnesses visit all those in their community to offer Bible education free of charge. As a result of this education, millions of hearts have been changed. Each year, hundreds of thousands of people are helped to overcome such damaging practices as smoking, drunkenness, misuse of drugs, gambling, and sexual promiscuity. They have become morally responsible citizens because they have learned to apply Bible principles in their lives.—See the article "The Bible Changes Lives," on page 18 of this magazine.

In addition, Bible education helps family members to deepen their respect for one another and to improve communication—between spouses as well as parents and children and among the children themselves. These are factors that strengthen family bonds. Stronger families, in turn, result in stronger communities.

After reviewing the points that have been considered in these articles, what do you think: Does the Bible approve of those who mix religion and politics? The answer is clear; it does not. But should true Christians be responsible citizens? Yes, they should. How can they do so? By following Jesus' command to be like salt and like light to the world.

Those who strive to apply these practical directions of Christ will bring benefits to themselves and their families—as well as to the community in which they live. Jehovah's Witnesses in your area will be glad to share more information with you about the Bible education program that is currently being carried on in your community.

THE ROLE OF EVANGELIZING

The Watchtower* 2004 January 1 pp. 8-12

Let All Declare the Glory of Jehovah

> "Ascribe to Jehovah glory and strength. Ascribe to Jehovah the glory belonging to his name."—PSALM 96:7, 8.

DAVID, the son of Jesse, grew up as a shepherd lad in the vicinity of Bethlehem. How often he must have gazed up into the vastness of the starry heavens in the stillness of the night while watching over his father's flocks in those lonely sheep pastures! No doubt, such vivid impressions sprang to his mind when, inspired by God's holy spirit, he composed and sang the beautiful words of the 19th Psalm: "The heavens are declaring the glory of God; and of the work of his hands the expanse is telling. Into all the earth their measuring line has gone out, and to the extremity of the productive land their utterances."—Psalm 19:1, 4.

[2] Without speech, without words, without voice, Jehovah's awesome created heavens declare his glory, day after day, night after night. Creation never ceases to declare God's glory, and it is humbling to contemplate this silent testimony going into "all the earth" for all its inhabitants to see. However, the silent witness of creation is not enough. Faithful humans are urged to join in with audible voice. An unnamed psalmist addressed faithful worshipers with these inspired words: "Ascribe to Jehovah glory and strength. Ascribe to Jehovah the glory belonging to his name." (Psalm 96:7, 8) Those who have a close relationship with Jehovah are thrilled to respond to that exhortation. What, though, is involved in ascribing glory to God?

[3] More is required than mere words. The Israelites of Isaiah's day glorified God with their lips, but most lacked sincerity. Through Isaiah, Jehovah said: "This people have come near with their mouth, and they have glorified me merely with their lips, and they have removed their heart itself far away from me." (Isaiah 29:13) Any praise uttered by such individuals was meaningless. To be meaningful, praise must spring from a heart filled with love for Jehovah and a sincere recognition of his unique glory. Jehovah alone is the Creator. He is the Almighty, the Just One, the epitome of love. He is the author of our salvation and the rightful Sovereign to whom everyone living in heaven and on earth owes subjection. (Revelation 4:11; 19:1) If we truly believe these things, let us glorify him with all our heart.

[4] Jesus Christ told us how to glorify God. He said: "My Father is glorified in this, that you keep bearing much fruit and prove yourselves my disciples." (John 15:8) How do we bear much fruit? First, by sharing whole-souled in preaching the "good news of the kingdom" and thus joining with all created things in "telling" about God's "invisible qualities." (Matthew 24:14; Romans 1:20) Moreover, in this way we all have a share—directly or indirectly—in the making of new disciples who swell the chorus of praise to Jehovah God. Second, we cultivate the fruitage produced in us by holy spirit and strive to imitate Jehovah God's superlative qualities. (Galatians 5:22, 23; Ephesians 5:1; Colossians 3:10) As a result, our daily conduct glorifies God.

"Into All the Earth"

[5] Paul in his letter to the Romans stressed the responsibility of Christians to glorify God by sharing their faith with others. A major theme of Romans is that only those who exercise faith in Jesus Christ can be saved. In chapter 10 of his letter, Paul showed that natural Israel of his day was still trying to achieve a righteous standing by following the Mosaic Law, whereas "Christ [was] the end of the Law." Hence, Paul says: "If you publicly declare that 'word in your own mouth,' that Jesus is Lord, and exercise faith in your heart that God raised him up from the dead, you will be saved." From that time on, "there [has been] no distinction between Jew and Greek, for there is the same Lord over all, who is rich to all those calling upon him. For 'everyone who calls on the name of Jehovah will be saved.'"—Romans 10:4, 9-13.

[6] Then Paul logically asks: "How will they call on him in whom they have not put faith? How, in turn, will they put faith in him of whom they have not heard? How, in turn, will they hear without someone to preach?" (Romans 10:14) Of Israel, Paul says: "They did not all obey the good news." Why did Israel not obey? Their lack of response was due to lack of faith, not lack of opportunity. Paul shows this by quoting Psalm 19:4 and applying it to the Christian preaching work rather than to the silent witness of creation. He says: "Why, in fact, 'into all the earth their sound went out, and to the extremities of the inhabited earth their utterances.'" (Romans 10:16, 18) Yes, even as the inanimate creation glorifies Jehovah, first-century Christians preached the good news of salvation everywhere and thus praised God in "all the earth." In his letter to the Colossians, Paul also described how widely the good news had spread. He said that the good news had been preached "in all creation that is under heaven."—Colossians 1:23.

Zealous Witnesses

[7] Likely, Paul wrote his letter to the Colossians about 27 years after the death of Jesus Christ. How could the preaching work have spread as far as Colossae in such a relatively short time? It happened because first-century Christians were zealous, and Jehovah blessed their zeal. Jesus had foretold that his followers would be active preachers when he said: "In all the nations the good news has to be preached first." (Mark 13:10) To that prophecy, Jesus added the command recorded in the final verses of Matthew's Gospel: "Go therefore and make disciples of people of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the holy spirit, teaching them to observe all the things I have commanded you." (Matthew 28:19, 20) Shortly after Jesus' ascension to heaven, his followers began to fulfill those words.

[8] After the outpouring of holy spirit at Pentecost 33 C.E., the first thing the loyal followers of Jesus did was to go out and preach, telling the crowds in Jerusalem "about the magnificent things of God." Their preaching was most effective, and "about three thousand souls" were baptized. The disciples continued to praise God publicly and zealously, with good results.—Acts 2:4, 11, 41, 46, 47.

[9] The activities of those Christians soon came to the attention of the religious leaders. Disturbed by the outspokenness of Peter and John, they commanded the two apostles to stop preaching. The apostles responded: "We cannot stop speaking about the things we have seen and heard." After being threatened and released, Peter and John returned to their brothers, and all joined in prayer to Jehovah. They courageously asked Jehovah: "Grant your slaves to keep speaking your word with all boldness."—Acts 4:13, 20, 29.

[10] That prayer was in harmony with Jehovah's will, as became evident a little later. The apostles were arrested and then miraculously released by an angel. The angel told them: "Be on your way, and, having taken a stand in the temple, keep on speaking to the people all the sayings about this life." (Acts 5:18-20) Because the apostles obeyed, Jehovah continued to bless them. Hence, "every day in the temple and from house to house they continued without letup teaching and declaring the good news about the Christ, Jesus." (Acts 5:42) Clearly, determined opposition was completely unable to stop Jesus' followers from publicly ascribing glory to God.

[11] Soon Stephen was arrested and stoned to death. His murder sparked bitter persecution in Jerusalem, and all the disciples except the apostles were forced to scatter abroad. Were they discouraged by the persecution? By no means. We read: "Those who had been scattered went through the land declaring the good news of the word." (Acts 8:1, 4) That zeal for declaring God's glory was seen again and again. In Acts chapter 9, we read that the Pharisee Saul of Tarsus, while traveling to Damascus to initiate persecution of Jesus' disciples there, saw a vision of Jesus and was struck blind. In Damascus, Ananias miraculously healed Saul's blindness. What was the first thing that Saul—later known as the apostle Paul—did? The record says: "Immediately in the synagogues he began to preach Jesus, that this One is the Son of God."—Acts 9:20.

Everyone Shared in Preaching

[12] It is widely acknowledged that everyone in the early Christian congregation shared in the preaching work. Of Christians in those days, Philip Schaff writes: "Every congregation was a missionary society, and every Christian believer a missionary." (History of the Christian Church) W. S. Williams states: "The general testimony is that all Christians in the primitive Church, especially those who had the charismatic gift [gifts of the spirit], preached the gospel." (The Glorious Ministry of the Laity) He also maintains: "Preaching was never meant by Jesus Christ to be the exclusive privilege of certain ranks of the ministry." Even Celsus, an ancient enemy of Christianity, wrote: "Wool-workers, cobblers, leather-dressers, the most illiterate and vulgar of mankind, were zealous preachers of the gospel."

[13] The accuracy of those statements is seen in the historical record of Acts. At Pentecost 33 C.E., after the outpouring of the holy spirit, all the disciples, men and women, publicly declared the magnificent things of God. After the persecution following the murder of Stephen, all Christians who were scattered abroad spread the good news far and wide. Some 28 years later, Paul was writing to all Hebrew Christians, not merely to a small clergy class, when he said: "Through him let us always offer to God a sacrifice of praise, that is, the fruit of lips which make public declaration to his name." (Hebrews 13:15) Describing his own view of the preaching work, Paul said: "If, now, I am declaring the good news, it is no reason for me to boast, for necessity is laid upon me. Really, woe is me if I did not declare the good news!" (1 Corinthians 9:16) Clearly, all faithful Christians in the first century felt the same way.

[14] Indeed, a genuine Christian has to share in the preaching work because it is inseparably linked to faith. Paul said: "With the heart one exercises faith for righteousness, but with the mouth one makes public declaration for salvation." (Romans 10:10) Is it only a small group within the congregation—like a clergy class—that exercises faith and thus has the responsibility to preach? Of course not! All true Christians cultivate a living faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and are moved to make a public declaration of that faith to others. Otherwise, their faith is dead. (James 2:26) Because all loyal Christians in the first century of our Common Era demonstrated their faith in this way, a great shout of praise to Jehovah's name was heard.

[15] In the first century, Jehovah blessed his people with growth despite problems inside and outside the congregation. For example, Acts chapter 6 records a disagreement between Hebrew-speaking and Greek-speaking converts. The problem was handled by the apostles. As a result, we read: "The word of God went on growing, and the number of the disciples kept multiplying in Jerusalem very much; and a great crowd of priests began to be obedient to the faith."—Acts 6:7.

[16] Later, political tensions developed between King Herod Agrippa of Judea and the people of Tyre and Sidon. The inhabitants of those cities made flattering peace overtures, and in response Herod gave a public address. The assembled crowd began to cry: "A god's voice, and not a man's!" Instantly, Jehovah's angel struck Herod Agrippa, and he died "because he did not give the glory to God." (Acts 12:20-23) What a shock to those whose hope was in human rulers! (Psalm 146:3, 4) The Christians, however, went on glorifying Jehovah. Consequently, "the word of Jehovah went on growing and spreading" despite such political instability.—Acts 12:24.

Then and Now

[17] Yes, the worldwide Christian congregation in the first century was made up of zealous, active praisers of Jehovah God. All loyal Christians shared in spreading the good news. Some met responsive ones and, as Jesus said, taught them to obey all the things he commanded. (Matthew 28:19, 20) The result was that the congregation grew, and more and more individuals joined King David of old in ascribing praise to Jehovah. All echoed the inspired words: "I laud you, O Jehovah my God, with all my heart, and I will glorify your name to time indefinite, for your loving-kindness is great toward me."—Psalm 86:12, 13.

[18] In view of this, the words of theology professor Allison A. Trites are thought provoking. Comparing modern-day Christendom with first-century Christianity, he said: "Churches today grow usually by biological growth (when the children within a local church family make a personal profession of faith) or by transfer growth (when a newcomer transfers his or her membership from another local church). In Acts, however, the growth was conversion growth, for the church was just beginning its work." Does that mean that true Christianity is no longer growing in the way that Jesus said it should? Of course not. True Christians today are every bit as zealous in publicly ascribing praise to God as were Christians in the first century.

LAST DAYS

The End of the World—Fear, Fascination, and Frustration

How do you feel about December 21, 2012, the date on the Maya calendar that many have been saying would bring worldwide change? Depending on what you expected, you might be relieved, disappointed, or indifferent. Was it just another incorrect prediction for the end of the world?

What about "the end of the world" described in the Bible? (Matthew 24:3, King James Version) Some fear that the earth will be burned up. Others are fascinated by end-time scenarios. Many have simply grown tired of being told that the end is near. But could those be reactions to fiction rather than to fact?

You might be surprised to learn what the Bible really says about the end of the world. Not only does the Bible give reasons to look forward to the end but it also acknowledges the frustration that can set in if the end seems to be overdue. We invite you to consider the Bible's answers to some common questions about the end of the world.

Will the earth be burned up?

THE BIBLE'S ANSWER: "[God] has founded the earth upon its established places; it will not be made to totter to time indefinite, or forever."—PSALM 104:5.

The earth will not be destroyed, either by fire or by any other means. Instead, the Bible teaches that this planet is mankind's eternal home. Psalm 37:29 says: "The righteous themselves will possess the earth, and they will reside forever upon it."—Psalm 115:16; Isaiah 45:18.

After God created the earth, he said that it "was very good," and he still feels that way. (Genesis 1:31) Far from planning to destroy it, he promises to "bring to ruin those ruining the earth"—and to protect it from permanent damage.—Revelation 11:18.

You may wonder, though, about 2 Peter 3:7. That Bible verse says: "The heavens and the earth that are now are stored up for fire." Does this not show that the earth will be burned up? Actually, the Bible sometimes uses the terms "heavens," "earth," and "fire" figuratively, as symbols. For example, when Genesis 11:1 says: "All the earth continued to be of one language," it uses "earth" to mean human society.

The context of 2 Peter 3:7 shows that the heavens, earth, and fire mentioned there are also symbols. Verses 5 and 6 draw a parallel with the Flood of Noah's day. On that occasion, an ancient world was destroyed, yet our planet did not disappear. Instead, the Flood wiped out a violent society, or "earth." It also destroyed a kind of "heavens"—the people who ruled over that earthly society. (Genesis 6:11) In the same way, 2 Peter 3:7 foretells the permanent destruction of wicked society and its corrupt governments as if by fire.

What happens at the end of the world?

THE BIBLE'S ANSWER: "The world is passing away and so is its desire, but he that does the will of God remains forever."—1 JOHN 2:17.

"The world" that is to pass away is, not the earth, but the world of mankind whose lives are not in harmony with God's will. Just as a surgeon might remove a cancerous tumor to save a patient's life, God will "cut off" the wicked so that good people can truly enjoy life on earth. (Psalm 37:9) In that sense, "the end of the world" is a good thing.

Such a positive view of "the end of the world" is implied by the Bible translations that render this expression "the conclusion of the system of things" or "the end of the age." (Matthew 24:3; New International Version) Since both humankind and the earth survive the end, does it not seem reasonable that a new age, a new system of things, would follow? The Bible answers yes, for it speaks of "the coming system of things."—Luke 18:30.

Jesus called that future period "the renewal of all things." At that time, he will restore humanity to the conditions that God originally intended. (Matthew 19:28, NIV) We will then enjoy

- A paradise earth with security and prosperity for all.—Isaiah 35:1; Micah 4:4.
- Work that is meaningful and satisfying.—Isaiah 65:21-23.
- The curing of all disease.—Isaiah 33:24.
- The reversal of aging.—Job 33:25.
- The resurrection of the dead.—John 5:28, 29.

If we do "the will of God," what he asks of us, we need not fear the end of the world. Instead, we can look forward to it.

Is the end of the world really near?

THE BIBLE'S ANSWER: "When you see these things occurring, know that the kingdom of God is near."—LUKE 21:31.

In the book The Last Days Are Here Again, Professor Richard Kyle writes that "sudden change and social chaos create an atmosphere conducive to predictions of the end of the world." That is especially the case when the change and chaos seem hard to explain.

However, the Bible prophets who spoke about the end were not trying to explain baffling events of their day. Instead, they were inspired by God to describe conditions that would indicate an imminent end of the world. Consider some of those prophecies and decide for yourself whether they are being fulfilled in our time.

- Wars, famines, earthquakes, and epidemics of deadly disease.—Matthew 24:7; Luke 21:11.
- Significant increase in crime.—Matthew 24:12.
- The ruining of the earth by mankind.—Revelation 11:18.
- People who love themselves, money, and pleasures but do not love God.—2 Timothy 3:2, 4.
- The breakdown of the family.—2 Timothy 3:2, 3.
- General apathy toward the evidence of the approaching end.—Matthew 24:37-39.
- The preaching of the good news of God's Kingdom worldwide.—Matthew 24:14.

As Jesus said, seeing "all these things" lets us know that the end of the world is near. (Matthew 24:33) Jehovah's Witnesses believe that the evidence is convincing, and they share their faith with others by preaching in 236 lands.

Do mistaken expectations about the end mean that it will never come?

THE BIBLE'S ANSWER: "Whenever it is that they are saying: 'Peace and security!' then sudden destruction is to be instantly upon them just as the pang of distress upon a pregnant woman; and they will by no means escape."—1 THESSALONIANS 5:3.

The Bible likens the world's destruction to the onset of labor—the mother's pain is inevitable and comes suddenly. The time leading up to the end is also like a pregnancy, for an expectant mother is aware of ever-increasing signs of the coming birth. Her doctor might estimate the birth date; yet, even if the event should delay, she would still be sure that her baby will soon be born. Similarly, any mistaken expectations about the end do not alter the unmistakable features identifying these as "the last days."—2 Timothy 3:1.

'If the sign that we are near the end is so obvious,' you might ask, 'why do so many people fail to recognize it?' The Bible shows that when the end is near, many will belittle the evidence. Rather than acknowledge the fundamental changes during the last days, they would scoff: "From the day our forefathers fell asleep in death, all things are continuing exactly as from creation's beginning." (2 Peter 3:3, 4) In other words, the sign of the last days is clear, but many will ignore it.—Matthew 24:38, 39.

This article has considered just some of the Scriptural evidence that the end is near. Would you like to learn more? The only cost is your time, and the potential benefits are priceless.

HAVE JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES GIVEN INCORRECT DATES FOR THE END?

Jehovah's Witnesses have had wrong expectations about when the end would come. Like Jesus' first-century disciples, we have sometimes looked forward to the fulfillment of prophecy ahead of God's timetable. (Luke 19:11; Acts 1:6; 2 Thessalonians 2:1, 2) We agree with the sentiment of longtime Witness A. H. Macmillan, who said: "I learned that we should admit our mistakes and continue searching God's Word for more enlightenment."

Why, then, do we continue to highlight the nearness of the end? Because we take seriously Jesus' words: "Keep looking, keep awake." The alternative, to be found "sleeping" by Jesus, would prevent us from gaining his favor. (Mark 13:33, 36) Why?

Consider this example: A lookout in a fire tower might see what he thinks is a wisp of smoke on the horizon and sound what proves to be a false alarm. Later, though, his alertness could save lives.

Likewise, we have had some wrong expectations about the end. But we are more concerned with obeying Jesus and saving lives than with avoiding criticism. Jesus' command to "give a thorough witness" compels us to warn others about the end.—Acts 10:42.

We believe that even more important than focusing on when the end will come, we must be confident that it will come, and we must act accordingly. We take seriously the words of Habakkuk 2:3, which says: "Even if [the end] should delay [compared to what you thought], keep in expectation of it; for it will without fail come true. It will not be late."

MALE HEADSHIP

The Watchtower* 2010 May 15 pages 8-12 Headship?

Men, Do You Submit to Christ's Headship?

"The head of every man is the Christ."—1 COR. 11:3.

"YOU are worthy, Jehovah, even our God, to receive the glory and the honor and the power," states Revelation 4:11, "because you created all things, and because of your will they existed and were created." By reason of his Creatorship, Jehovah God is the Supreme Sovereign of the universe and is above all of his creation. That Jehovah "is a God, not of disorder, but of peace" can be seen by the way in which his angelic family is organized.—1 Cor. 14:33; Isa. 6:1-3; Heb. 12:22, 23.

[2] Before anything was created, God existed by himself for countless ages of time. His very first creation was the spirit creature known as "the Word" because he was the Spokesman for Jehovah. The Word is the one through whom all other things came into existence. Later, he came to earth as a perfect human and became known as Jesus Christ.—Read John 1:1-3, 14.

[3] What do the Scriptures say about the relative positions of God and his firstborn Son? Writing under inspiration, the apostle Paul tells us: "I want you to know that the head of every man is the Christ; in turn the head of a woman is the man; in turn the head of the Christ is God." (1 Cor. 11:3) The Christ is under the headship of his Father. Headship and subjection are essential for peace and order to prevail among intelligent creatures. Even the one 'by means of whom all other things were created' is required to submit to God's headship.—Col. 1:16.

[4] How did Jesus feel about submitting to Jehovah's headship and coming to earth? The Scriptures state: "Christ Jesus, who, although he was existing in God's form, gave no consideration to a seizure, namely, that he should be equal to God. No, but he emptied himself and took a slave's form and came to be in the likeness of men. More than that, when he found himself in fashion as a man, he humbled himself and became obedient as far as death, yes, death on a torture stake."—Phil. 2:5-8.

[5] At all times, Jesus humbly submitted to his Father's will. He said: "I cannot do a single thing of my own initiative; . . . the judgment that I render is righteous, because I seek, not my own will, but the will of him that sent me." (John 5:30) "I always do the things pleasing to [my Father]," he declared. (John 8:29) Toward the end of his life on earth, Jesus said in prayer to his Father: "I have glorified you on the earth, having finished the work you have given me to do." (John 17:4) Evidently, Jesus had no problem with recognizing and accepting God's headship over him.

Submission to the Father Brings Benefits to the Son

[6] When on earth, Jesus demonstrated many wonderful qualities. Among them was the great love he displayed for his Father. "I love the Father," he said. (John 14:31) He also demonstrated great love for people. (Read Matthew 22:35-40.) Jesus was kind and considerate, not harsh or overbearing.

"Come to me, all you who are toiling and loaded down," he said, "and I will refresh you. Take my yoke upon you and learn from me, for I am mild-tempered and lowly in heart, and you will find refreshment for your souls. For my yoke is kindly and my load is light." (Matt. 11:28-30) Sheeplike people of all ages, especially those who were downtrodden and oppressed, found great comfort in Jesus' delightful personality and uplifting message.

[7] Consider how Jesus dealt with women. Throughout history, many men have treated women very badly. That was true of the religious leaders in ancient Israel. But Jesus treated women with respect. This is made evident in his dealings with a woman who had been sick for 12 years with a flow of blood. "She had been put to many pains" by physicians and had spent all her resources trying to get well. Despite all that effort, she "had got worse." Under the Law, she was considered unclean. Anyone touching her would also become unclean.—Lev. 15:19, 25.

[8] When the woman heard that Jesus was healing the sick, she joined the crowd surrounding him, saying: "If I touch just his outer garments I shall get well." She touched Jesus and immediately got well. Jesus knew that she should not have touched his garment. Nevertheless, he did not scold her. On the contrary, he was kind to her. He understood how she must have felt after all those years of illness and discerned that she was desperate for help. Compassionately, Jesus told her: "Daughter, your faith has made you well. Go in peace, and be in good health."—Mark 5:25-34.

[9] Even children could feel at ease in the presence of Jesus. When people brought children to him on one occasion, his disciples reprimanded them, evidently feeling that he would not want to be bothered with children. But that is not the way Jesus felt. The Scriptural account tells us: "At seeing this Jesus was indignant and said to [the disciples]: 'Let the young children come to me; do not try to stop them, for the kingdom of God belongs to suchlike ones.'" Further, "he took the children into his arms and began blessing them, laying his hands upon them." Jesus did not just tolerate children; he warmly welcomed them.—Mark 10:13-16.

[10] How did Jesus come to possess the qualities he displayed during his life on earth? In his prehuman existence, he observed his heavenly Father for aeons of time and absorbed his ways. (Read Proverbs 8:22, 23, 30.) In heaven, he had seen Jehovah's loving way of exercising headship over all His creation and had made that way his own. Would Jesus have been able to do that had he not been submissive? It was a delight for him to be in subjection to his Father, and it was a pleasure for Jehovah to have such a Son. When on earth, Jesus reflected perfectly the marvelous qualities of his heavenly Father. What a privilege it is for us to be in subjection to Christ, God's appointed Ruler of the heavenly Kingdom!

Imitate Christ's Qualities

[11] All in the Christian congregation, especially the men, should continually work hard to imitate Christ's qualities. As already noted, the Bible declares: "The head of every man is the Christ." As Christ imitated his Head, the true God, Christian men should strive to imitate their head—the Christ. Upon becoming a Christian, the apostle Paul did just that. "Become imitators of me," he exhorted fellow Christians, "even as I am of Christ." (1 Cor. 11:1) And the apostle Peter said: "To this course you were called, because even Christ suffered for you, leaving you a model for you to follow his steps closely." (1 Pet. 2:21) The admonition to imitate the Christ is of particular interest to men for still another reason. They are the ones who become elders and ministerial servants. As Jesus found joy in imitating Jehovah, Christian men should find joy in imitating Christ and his qualities.

[12] The elders in the Christian congregation are under obligation to learn to be like Christ. Peter gave the older men, or elders, this exhortation: "Shepherd the flock of God in your care, not under compulsion, but willingly; neither for love of dishonest gain, but eagerly; neither as lording it over those who are God's inheritance, but becoming examples to the flock." (1 Pet. 5:1-3) Christian elders are not to be dictatorial, domineering, arbitrary, or harsh. Imitating Christ's example, they endeavor to be loving, considerate, humble, and kind in their dealings with the sheep entrusted to their care.

[13] Those taking the lead in the congregation are imperfect men, and they should constantly be aware of that limitation. (Rom. 3:23) So they must be eager to learn about Jesus and imitate his love. They need to ponder over the way that God and Christ deal with people and then strive to imitate them. Peter exhorts us: "All of you gird yourselves with lowliness of mind toward one another, because God opposes the haughty ones, but he gives undeserved kindness to the humble ones."—1 Pet. 5:5.

[14] In their dealings with God's flock, the appointed men in the congregation are to exhibit fine qualities. Romans 12:10 states: "In brotherly love have tender affection for one another. In showing honor to one another take the lead." Elders and ministerial servants show honor to others. Like Christians in general, these men are 'to do nothing out of contentiousness or out of egotism but with lowliness of mind are to consider that the others are superior to them.' (Phil. 2:3) Those taking the lead should certainly view others as being superior to them. By doing so, the appointed men will be following Paul's counsel: "We, though, who are strong ought to bear the weaknesses of those not strong, and not to be pleasing ourselves. Let each of us please his neighbor in what is good for his upbuilding. For even the Christ did not please himself."—Rom. 15:1-3.

'Assigning Wives Honor'

[15] Consider now Peter's counsel to married men. He wrote: "You husbands, continue dwelling in like manner with [your wives] according to knowledge, assigning them honor as to a weaker vessel, the feminine one." (1 Pet. 3:7) To honor someone means to hold that individual in high esteem. Thus, you would consider the opinions, needs, and wants of such a person and may defer to that one where there is no vital issue at stake. That is how a husband should deal with his wife.

[16] When telling husbands to honor their wives, Peter adds a warning: "In order for your prayers not to be hindered." (1 Pet. 3:7) That clearly shows how seriously Jehovah views the way a man treats his wife. Failure to show honor to her could hinder his prayers. Moreover, do not wives generally respond positively to being treated honorably by their husbands?

[17] On the matter of loving one's wife, God's Word counsels: "Husbands ought to be loving their wives as their own bodies. . . . For no man ever hated his own flesh; but he feeds and cherishes it, as the Christ also does the congregation . . . Let each one of you individually so love his wife as he does himself." (Eph. 5:28, 29, 33) To what extent should husbands love their wives? "Husbands," wrote Paul, "continue loving your wives, just as the Christ also loved the congregation and delivered up himself for it." (Eph. 5:25) Yes, a husband should be willing even to lay down his life for his wife, just as Christ did for others. When the Christian husband deals with his wife tenderly, considerately, attentively, unselfishly, it is easier for his wife to submit to his headship.

[18] Is assigning honor to wives in this way too much to expect from husbands? No, Jehovah would never ask them to do something that is beyond their capabilities. Besides, Jehovah's worshippers have access to the greatest force in the universe—God's holy spirit. Jesus said: "If you, although being wicked, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more so will the Father in heaven give holy spirit to those asking him!" (Luke 11:13) In their prayers, husbands can ask that by means of his spirit, Jehovah will help them in their dealings with others, including their wives.—Read Acts 5:32.

[19] Indeed, men bear a heavy responsibility to learn how to be submissive to Christ and imitate his headship. But what about women, wives in particular?

Second Statement

Name	Terrence John O'Brien
Address	12-14 Zouch Road Denham Court NSW 2565
Occupation	Minister, Director
Date	16 July 2015

INTRODUCTION

1. This statement is supplementary to my statement dated 10 July 2015 (first Statement) and is given in response to the letter dated 16 July 2015 from the Royal Commission (Commission) into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. As requested, this statement addresses the matters set out in paragraphs 4(a) – (f) of the letter dated 14 July 2015 from the Commission. I have used those paragraphs as headings.

2. I believe this statement is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

3. As a director of Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia (Watchtower Australia) and a member of the Branch Committee in Australia, I believe I am the most well-placed person to answer the questions in the letter from the Commission.

A. What is the extent to which, if any, information, including statistical information, relating to incidence and/or prevalence of child sexual abuse within Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia, is provided to the Governing Body and/or Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania (Watch Tower Pennsylvania)

4. No information relating to the incidence or prevalence of child sexual abuse in Australia, including statistical information, is provided by either Watchtower Australia or the Branch Office of Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia (Branch Office), which is located in Sydney, to the Governing Body, Watch Tower Pennsylvania, or to any other entity outside Australia.

B. Where information of the kind referred to in paragraph 4(a) is provided by Watchtower Australia to the Governing Body and/or Watch Tower Pennsylvania, what is the use to which, if any, that information is put in the development of the systems, policies, and/or procedures promulgated by the Governing Body and/or Watchtower Australia, for raising and responding to allegations of or concerns about, and managing the risk of, child sexual abuse within Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia

5. The answer to this question is the same as the one I have given above since it is the responsibility of the Australia Branch Committee (Branch Committee) to respond to allegations of and manage the risk of child abuse in Australia.

C. Provide details of any insurance policy held by Watch Tower Pennsylvania or the Governing Body since 1975 which provides or has provided insurance cover for any claim for compensation or redress of any kind arising from an allegation(s) of child sexual abuse within Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia

6. Watchtower Australia does not hold, and has not held, any insurance policy which provides or has provided insurance cover for any claims relating to child sexual abuse. However, as a result of the Commission's letter dated 16 July 2015, I have made further inquiries with the Legal Department of the World Headquarters of Jehovah's Witnesses in New York since this is not information which could be supplied by any member of the Governing Body. I have been informed that although Watch Tower Pennsylvania has never had a claim for compensation arising from an allegation of child sexual abuse in Australia, it possibly had liability insurance coverage for such claims for the following years. D. What is the relationship between and respective roles of Watch Tower Pennsylvania and the Governing Body, and the relationship between and the respective roles of Watchtower Australia and the Australian Branch Committee/Branch Office

7. Watch Tower Pennsylvania: is a non-profit corporation established in the United States to support the activities of Jehovah's Witnesses. It produces and publishes Bibles and Bible-based literature, art and videos, supports missionary work, and provides humanitarian assistance especially to people around the earth who have been adversely affected by a typhoon, earthquake or other natural disaster.

8. Governing Body: is an ecclesiastical body of elders that oversees the preaching and teaching activity of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide. The Governing Body uses Watch Tower Pennsylvania, as it does other corporations, to accomplish its goal of preaching the good news worldwide. No members of the Governing Body are directors or officers of Watch Tower Pennsylvania or any other corporation used by Jehovah's Witnesses.

9. Australia Branch Committee: is an ecclesiastical body of elders serving at the Branch Office that oversees the preaching and teaching activity of Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia, New Zealand, and various other islands (Branch Territory). The Branch Office is the regional headquarters of Jehovah's Witnesses operating under the oversight of the Branch Committee which provides spiritual direction to Jehovah's Witnesses in its Branch Territory. The Branch Committee functions to ensure that the spiritual needs of the congregations under its oversight are adequately cared for.

10. Watchtower Australia: is a company limited by guarantee that is used by Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia. Although Watchtower Australia is a separate entity from the Branch Committee, it is used by the Branch Committee and Branch Office to assist in handling matters that require the services of a legal corporation. This includes printing, distribution of Bibles and Bible literature, holding title to property and other related legal matters. At times, members of the Branch Committee may also serve as directors or officers of Watchtower Australia.

E. What is the relationship and source of authority between the Governing Body and the Branch Offices and between the Branch Offices and Congregations within their Branch Territory

11. The Governing Body is the highest ecclesiastical body of Jehovah's Witnesses. They examine and apply the Scriptures to provide spiritual guidance and direction to Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide. They have the responsibility of giving direction to the Kingdom-preaching activity, for which Jehovah's Witnesses are well-known worldwide. (Matthew 24:14) The Governing Body does not have any legal authority over Branch Offices, Branch Committees or congregations. The Governing Body is not involved in the administration and implementation of child sexual abuse policies and procedures in Branch Offices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

12. The relationship of the Governing Body to all Branch Offices and congregations is modelled on the first century Christian arrangement. The Bible book of Acts provides the clear Scriptural basis for this twenty-first century arrangement. In Chapter 15 of the book of Acts, a doctrinal matter that needed clarification was brought to the Apostles and older men, who acted as a decision-making governing body (verses 1-21). That first century governing body made a decision which was then conveyed by letter to the various congregations (verses 22-31). Each individual heard the spiritual direction and decided whether to accept it. I use this account to demonstrate that the role of the Governing Body in the first century and the one today both consisted of a group of elders who provide clarification on Scriptural teachings.

13. The same principle is true of the relationship between the Branch Office and the congregations. Under the oversight of the Branch Committee, the Branch Office supports and facilitates the preaching and teaching activity of, and provides spiritual direction to Jehovah's Witnesses in its Branch Territory, including providing spiritual direction in the matter of the prevention and response to child abuse.

14. Each congregation is an unincorporated association which is separately registered as a charity with the Australian Taxation Office and the Australian Charities and Not-for-profits Commission. As such, each congregation has an autonomous committee that administers the secular affairs of the congregation. In turn, every congregation is made up of members who individually choose to follow the religious beliefs of the Jehovah's Witness faith as set out in the Scriptures.

15. The spiritual oversight of each congregation is cared for by the Scriptural arrangement of a body of elders. — Acts 14:23; 20:17.

F. The role of the Governing Body in appointing members of the Branch Committee or any other position in Australia

16. An experienced elder is recommended for appointment as a member of the Branch Committee to the Governing Body by the current members of the Branch Committee. If the Governing Body approves the recommendation, the elder is then appointed to serve on the Branch Committee.

17. The same arrangement exists in relation to the appointment of circuit overseers (also referred to as travelling overseers), where a recommendation of an experienced elder is made by the Branch Committee to the Governing Body for their approval. If approved by the Governing Body, the elder is then appointed to serve as a travelling overseer.

18. There are a number of other assignments that follow the same procedure. These include members of the religious order who work at the Branch Office (also known as Bethel) and instructors for theocratic schools for full-time evangelizers and travelling overseers. These schools are only for baptised adults.

19. The Governing Body does not appoint legal corporation members, officers or directors in Australia.

Third Statement

Name	Terrence John O'Brien
Address	12-14 Zouch Road Denham Court NSW 2656
Occupation	Minister, Director
Date	24 July 2015

1. The purpose of this statement is to correct an error in my first statement dated 10 July 2015 of which I have subsequently become aware of in preparing for the Public Hearing for Case Study 29.

First Statement: paragraph 49

2. In paragraph 49 of my first statement dated 10 July 2015, I stated that

> "In my 35 years as an elder I have not been involved in a case of child abuse of any kind."

3. Since making that statement, I have been shown documents relating to an incident in 1987 involving REDACTED. My involvement in that matter was as a circuit overseer. Although at the time of making my first statement, I did not have any recollection of the matter, it is apparent from a letter dated 2 June 2000 which I have been shown REDACTED that I was involved in the deletion of REDACTE as an elder for confessing to child sexual abuse that had occurred between 1970-1975. Having been shown the letter and reflecting on it, I now recall my involvement with the incident.

4. When initially preparing my statement, I had not considered this situation as my involvement was only to make a report to the Service Department recommending his removal as an elder. Following that, I had no further involvement in his case. Any pursuant action was followed up by the body of elders concerned.

5. Similarly, I have been shown an undated document (but it appears from the surrounding documents to date from the 1990s), relating to an allegation of child abuse by REDACTED REDACTED. It appears from the document that I received a phone call in relation to the incident. Although I have reviewed the document and the relevant records, I have no recollection of the incident. I can only assume that I was on duty answering telephone calls that day. From my review of the documents, REDACTED was deleted as an elder in 1992 and disfellowshipped in 2011.

Statement

Name	VINCENT JOSEPH TOOLE
Address	12-14 Zouch Road Denham Court NSW 2565
Occupation	Solicitor
Date	10 July 2015

1. This statement made by me accurately sets out the evidence that I am prepared to give to the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. The statement is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

2. This statement is in response to a letter dated 26 June 2015 (which is attached to my statement and marked as Annexure 1) addressed to me from the Commission, which sets out various questions in paragraphs A-H.

3. I have answered the questions raised in connection with my role in the Legal Department and matters that I am personally aware of by the reference to the questions set out in the Commission's letter. I understand that Mr Spinks will address the role of the Service Department in handling child abuse matters.

A. OVERVIEW OF MY INVOLVEMENT WITH THE JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES CHURCH

4. I was baptised as one of Jehovah's Witnesses in October 1972 in the Manly Congregation in Sydney. In 1974, I commenced serving as a regular pioneer and in 1976 I commenced serving as a special pioneer. Around 1974 or 1975, I was appointed as a ministerial servant and in 1977, I was appointed as an elder.

5. In 1977, I moved to the Wagga Wagga Congregation where I continued serving as a special pioneer until 1980 when I moved to Bairnsdale where I continued serving as a special pioneer for approximately six months.

6. Commencing in late 1980 and up until 1989, I served as a circuit overseer in various locations in Australia. I served for approximately two and a half years in Tasmania, four and a half years in Brisbane and approximately one and a half years in Melbourne.

7. In 1989, I commenced doing voluntary work at the Branch headquarters of Jehovah's Witnesses in Denham Court, Sydney, and have continued doing so up to the present. Since 1989, I have served in:

    a. the Chester Hill Congregation,

    b. the Illawong Congregation, and

    c. the Randwick Congregation.

8. In December 1993, I completed my legal studies and was admitted as a solicitor.

9. Since then, I have assisted in doing legal work for the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia ("the Branch") on a voluntary basis in the Legal Department.

10. Towards the end of 1995, I established my own legal practice, Vincent Toole Solicitor.

11. Since 2010, I have cared for the oversight of the Legal Department.

B. FUNCTIONS OF LEGAL DEPARTMENT IN RESPONDING TO ALLEGATIONS AND MANAGING THE RISK OF CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

12. From 1989, Mr John Mouritz, the then overseer of the Legal Department, primarily handled calls from elders in relation to child sexual abuse. However, on occasions I took calls from elders if Mr Mouritz was away or not available.

13. All elders serving in congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses throughout the world have been directed to contact the Legal Department in their local Branch Office as soon as they learn of an allegation involving child abuse. The primary reason for this direction is to ensure that the elders are made aware of any reporting obligations that they may have under the law in the State where they live. The direction is clearly stated in the October 1, 2012 letter to All Bodies of Elders in Australia under para. 4 (WAT.0001.004.0066):

    Some states have child-abuse reporting laws that, depending on the facts, mandate elders to report an accusation to the authorities. Thus, when elders learn of an accusation of child abuse, two elders from their congregation should immediately call the Legal Department for legal advice.

14. The letter to all bodies of elders dated August 1, 1995 contains similar direction (WAT.0001.004.0005):

    When a member of the congregation is accused of child molestation, the elders should contact the Society immediately. Some states make it mandatory that elders report an accusation to the proper authorities but other states do not.

15. Where the law does not require ministers of religion to report allegations of child abuse, the Legal Department has been instructed to direct the elders to clearly explain to the victim and/or their families that they have an absolute right to report the matter to the authorities and that they should feel completely free to do so. If they decide to report the matter, the elders will fully support them.

16. As a religious organisation, Jehovah's Witnesses highly value confidentiality in line with the Scriptural admonition "do not reveal what you were told confidentially" (Proverbs 25:9). Therefore, it has always been the organisation's direction that elders receive any confession in a setting covered by confessional privilege, if one is available. When receiving calls concerning allegations of child sexual abuse, the Legal Department also highlighted this direction. However, the letter from world headquarters dated January 21, 1999, to Watch Tower Society Australia, page 1, para. 2 clarified the position in connection with information received in this way obtained by elders (WAT.0001.004.0020):

> Where the law does not obligate elders to report cases that come to their attention, there is no need for them to do so, but if the matter becomes known to the authorities and they are required to disclose information they have in their possession, they will do so unless they can claim ecclesiastical privilege.

17. On this basis, in relation to child abuse cases, since receipt of this letter, elders, with the assistance of the Legal Department, have disclosed information being sought when the authorities have compelled them to do so.

18. Where the elders advise that the police or other authorities are already involved in the matter they are calling about, the elders are instructed to ensure that their actions do not interfere in any way with the police investigation. When this occurs, the elders are directed not to make inquiries or interview anyone concerning the allegations until the matter has been fully handled by the relevant authorities.

19. After the elders have been given the above advice from the Legal Department, they are then transferred to the Service Department where they are given whatever assistance and direction is needed to ensure that the matter is handled in harmony with the scriptural directions and procedures provided for handling allegations and instances of child sexual abuse.

20. On occasions when the police or other authorities are involved and they have sought documents from elders in connection with a matter that has been reported, the Legal Department has assisted the elders in obtaining and producing the documents sought.

21. The Legal Department is not involved in managing the risk of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses Church.

C. PERSONS SERVING IN THE LEGAL DEPARTMENT

22. Those serving in the Legal Department are:

    - Vincent Toole, Solicitor;
    - Benjamin Hamnett, Accountant;
    - Rachel van Witsen, Solicitor; and
    - Three support staff.

D. THE ROLE OF THE LEGAL DEPARTMENT IN HANDLING CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE ALLEGATIONS

23. The Legal Department is not involved in the spiritual aspects of the religion of Jehovah's Witnesses. Specifically, the Legal Department is not involved in handling of these matters:

    a. the consideration of prospective members of any congregation of Jehovah's Witness and their subsequent suitability for baptism;

    b. the selection and appointment of elders, ministerial servants, pioneers, special pioneers or any other position within congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses;

    c. the deletion or removal of elders, ministerial servants, pioneers, special pioneers, or any other position within congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses;

    d. the public or private reproval of members of Jehovah's Witnesses;

    e. the awarding and removal of congregational privileges to members of the congregation, including the nature of those privileges;

    f. the disfellowshipping and/or disassociation of persons who are members of Jehovah's Witnesses congregations;

    g. the reinstatement of individuals as members of any congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

E. THE ROLE OF THE LEGAL DEPARTMENT IN CASE OF CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE OF BCH

24. As far as I am aware, and based on my review of the file, the Legal Department had no involvement in the case of child sexual abuse by BCH that was handled in 1989.

25. I note from the file that I provided a memorandum to the Service Department dated January 23, 2003 concerning BCH The memorandum simply points out how untruthful he was being concerning his molestation of his daughter that he had previously admitted to before the appeal committee in 1989.

F. THE ROLE OF THE LEGAL DEPARTMENT AND VINCENT TOOLE SOLICITORS IN INVESTIGATION AND CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS OF BCH

26. The Legal Department was not involved in the investigation of, and subsequent criminal proceedings against, BCH commencing in 2001.

27. In the criminal proceedings against BCH commencing around 2001, Vincent Toole solicitor was involved in my capacity as an independent solicitor as follows:

    a. Vincent Toole solicitor received instructions from the six elders involved with the judicial and appeal committees who disfellowshipped BCH in 1989, namely, Ronald de Rooy, Dino Ali, Kevin Bowditch, James Bennett, Donald Wilson and Joseph Miraziz, to accept service on their behalf and to assist them with the preparation of their statements for the police and arranging for the production of subpoenaed documents;

    b. Vincent Toole solicitor acted for the Branch by accepting service on its behalf and arranging for the production of subpoenaed documents; and

    c. Vincent Toole solicitor also acted for the elders in the Beenleigh Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses by accepting service on their behalf and arranging for the production of subpoenaed documents.

28. The Branch, the Beenleigh Congregation and the elders involved willing cooperated with the police in this criminal proceeding based on the direction provided in the letter from world headquarters dated January 21, 1999 to Watch Tower Society Australia, page 1, para. 2 (WAT.0001.004.0020):

> Where the law does not obligate elders to report cases that come to their attention, there is no need for them to do so, but if the matter becomes known to the authorities and they are required to disclose information they have in their possession, they will do so unless they can claim ecclesiastical privilege.

G. MANDATORY REPORTING OBLIGATIONS AROUND AUSTRALIA AND POLICE CHECKS

29. All Australian States and Territories have enacted legislation imposing varying mandatory reporting obligations. South Australia, Victoria and the Northern Territory, impose the following specific obligations:

    a. In South Australia, a number of nominated persons in various professions, including ministers of religion as well as the employees and volunteers in organisations formed for religious or spiritual purposes, are required to report if he or she suspects on reasonable grounds that a child (under 18) has been or is being abused provided that the suspicion is formed in the course of the person's work or in carrying out their official duties with the exception of disclosures made in the confessional. (Children's Protection Act 1993, ss. 6, 10, and 11.)

b. In Victoria, all adults, including ministers of religion, who form a reasonable belief that a sexual offence has been committed by an adult against a child under 16 years of age, have an obligation to report the matter to the police. A sexual offence includes grooming for sexual conduct a child under the age of 16 years. (Crimes Amendment (Grooming) Act 2014, s. 3.) This obligation does not apply if the belief was obtained in a religious confession. Additionally, under the transitional provisions, the obligation to report applies if the victim was under 16 years of age on 3 June 2014, irrespective of when the information forming the basis of the reasonable belief is received. However, the obligation does not apply if the victim was aged 16 or over on 3 June 2014 and requests that the offence not be reported provided that the victim has the capacity to make an informed decision about the matter. (Crimes Amendment (Protection of Children) Act 2014, s. 4.)

c. In the Northern Territory, all adult Territorians are required to report anyone under 18 years who they believe is involved in sexual activity and who is, or has suffered, or is likely to suffer, harm or exploitation (including sexual abuse of a child). Where there is a relationship of special care between the offender and a child over 16 years of age, and an adult believes the child has been or is likely to be a victim of an offence, adult Territorians are required to report. If a child is under 14, and the Territorian believes that the child has been or is likely to be a victim of a sexual offence, then he or she must report the matter. (Care and Protection of Children Act, s 26.)

30. While the other jurisdictions have enacted legislation imposing mandatory reporting obligations on nominated persons or professions, ministers of religion have not been included in the list of those who have a mandatory reporting obligation

31. In New South Wales, Northern Territory, Tasmania, Victoria and Western Australia, approximately 7,000 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses have obtained police checks . In these states they are required by law to do so.

a. In New South Wales, everyone doing child-related work must hold a Working with Children Check (WWCC) clearance. With religious organisations, work carried out by a minister, or other like religious leader or spiritual officer where children are part of the congregation is child-related work. All 3,254 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in congregations in New South Wales have WWCC clearances. (Child Protection (Working with Children) Act 2012, s. 8; Child Protection (Working with Children) Regulation 2013, reg. 13.)

b. In the Northern Territory, anyone involved in child-related work, including those involved in religious organisations as volunteer ministers, must hold a current clearance notice if their work involves or may potentially involve contact (as defined) with children. All 77 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in congregations in the Northern Territory have obtained clearance notices. (Care and Protection of Children Act, ss. 185 and 187.)

c. In Tasmania, as explained in the Tasmanian Government's Guide for those working or volunteering in Child Related Religious Activities, "A person must apply for working with children registration when working or volunteering in a child-related activity. Child-related religious activity means: a religious service conducted by a minister, priest, rabbi, mufti, acolyte or other religious leader or spiritual officer in a religious organisation for a congregation that consists of or includes children". All 251 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in congregations in Tasmania have obtained working with children registrations. (Registration to Work with Vulnerable People Act 2013 (Tas), ss. 5, 6, 7, and 17.)

d. In Victoria, all ministers of religion are required to hold a working with children assessment notice because they are involved in doing child-related work. If a minister of religion is the appointed leader of a local religious congregation in an organised religious institution and the congregation contains any children, work engaged in as a minister of religion is child-related work. All 2,025 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in congregations in Victoria have obtained working with children assessment notices. (Working with Children Act 2005, ss. 8, 9 and 35.)

e. In Western Australia, everyone engaged in child-related work, including volunteers who are ministers of religion or persons who, in any other capacity, are carrying out the work for the purposes of a religious organisation must have a current assessment notice if the work involves or may potentially involve contact with children. All 1,258 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in congregations in Western Australia have obtained assessment notices. (Working with Children (Criminal Record Checking) Act 2004, ss. 4, 6, 22 and 24.)

32. Under the existing law in the Australian Capital Territory, Queensland, and South Australia, elders and ministerial servants in congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are not required to obtain police checks for the following reasons:

    a. In the Australian Capital Territory (ACT), everyone involved in a regulated activity must have a working with vulnerable people registration. With religious organisations, an activity or service provided is a regulated activity if it is specifically for, or mainly used by children, or for people accessing a regulated activity mentioned in the Schedule 1, Part 1.2 of the Working with Vulnerable People (Background Checking) Act 2011. Jehovah's Witnesses do not conduct any activity or provide any service specifically for, or mainly used by children, nor do they provide any of the services mentioned in Schedule 1, Part 1.2. Therefore, elders and ministerial servants in congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses in the ACT are not required to obtain working with vulnerable people registration in relation to their congregation activities. (Working with Vulnerable People (Background Checking) Act 2011, ss. 8, 12, and Schedule 1, Part 1.23.)

    b. In Queensland, everyone involved in regulated employment needs to have a current positive notice. With religious organisations, employment is regulated employment if the usual functions of the employment include, or are likely to include, providing services directed mainly towards children or conducting activities mainly involving children. (Commission for Children and Young People and Child Guardian Act 2000, ss. 188, Schedule 1, Part 1, ss. 5 and 10.) Jehovah's Witnesses do not conduct any activities or provide any services that are directed mainly towards children or mainly involving children. The structure and activities of congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses differ from most of the more well-known religions. For example, Jehovah's Witnesses do not sponsor or engage in any activities that separate or isolate children from their parents in any way. They do not conduct Sunday schools, camps, excursions, or any other activities involving children. Therefore, under the existing legislation, elders and ministerial servants in Queensland are not required to obtain a positive notice in relation to their congregation activities.

c. In South Australia, persons acting in a prescribed position in an organisation must have an assessment of their relevant history (which includes criminal history) undertaken. However, organisations and individuals are exempt from this requirement if the person who undertakes, or a position only involves, work that is not for the exclusive benefit of children and is not provided to any child on an individual basis or a position in which all work involving children is undertaken in the presence of the children's parents or guardians and in which there is ordinarily no physical contact with the children. (Children's Protection Act 1993, ss. 8B, 8D and Children's Protection Regulations 2010, reg. 14.) Jehovah's Witnesses do not engage in any work that is for the exclusive benefit of children or that separates children from their parents or guardians. Therefore, under the existing legislation, elders and ministerial servants in congregations in South Australia are not required to obtain a relevant history assessment in connection with their congregation activities.

H. THE BRANCH'S DOCUMENT RETENTION POLICY

33. The Branch has had a long-standing practice of indefinitely retaining files involving child sexual abuse.

34. This practice is, by way of example set out in the direction given to all bodies of elders in a letter dated July 20, 1998, page 1, para. 2: (WAT.0002.001.0003):

> Furthermore, any correspondence put in the confidential file about an individual accused of child molestation, proven or otherwise, should be marked "Do Not Destroy" and be kept indefinitely.

35. A modification to this practice occurred as a result of the Branch coming under the Commonwealth privacy legislation, in particular the Privacy Act 1988 (Cth).

36. In 2009, the Commonwealth's Assistant Privacy Commissioner wrote to the Branch stating that, in his view, the Branch's annual turnover for the purposes of the Privacy Act should include donations received during the year, which meant that the Branch could no longer rely on the "small business" exemption (before that, the Branch had operated on the understanding that it came under the "small business" exemption of the Act). The Branch accepted the decision and advised that it would do what was necessary to ensure its compliance with privacy legislation.

37. This meant the Branch was required to review all its files to ensure that it conformed to the requirements of the Act, in particular, in relation to keeping confidential, personal information in circumstances where it was unreasonable to do so.

38. As a result, the Branch introduced a policy for maintaining files and retaining documents for all files, including those relating to child sexual abuse.

39. The procedures for implementing of the policy as it pertained to serious matters and child sexual abuse matters was outlined in a letter to the bodies of elders dated February 1, 2009 which stated as follows (WAT.0002.001.0015):

> Other serious matters: We have, however, received many inquiries concerning document retention relating to serious matters that do not result in disfellowshipping. These may concern persons judicially reproved, allegations of serious wrongdoing that cannot be established, and matters that are investigated and handled by two elders. In these and other similar situations, a summation of no more than one page should be written and held in the confidential file. All other documents and correspondence relating to the matter should then be destroyed. Summations concerning persons judicially reproved should be kept for a minimum period of five years. All other summations may be retained for as long as the body of elders deems necessary.
> Child abuse matters: In regard to all matters involving allegations or established cases of child abuse, the above-mentioned direction will apply, with one exception. All documents relating to the matter should be sent to the branch office, instead of being destroyed. This will facilitate the congregation retaining only a stamped S-77 form in matters resulting in disfellowshipping, or a single page summation for all other situations.

40. The documents involving child sexual abuse sent to the service department at the Branch as a result of this direction were then placed in the file relating to the matter already held by the Branch.

41. The service department then carried out an assessment of the documents that were duplicative or unnecessary to keep in accordance with, and in order to comply with, the Act.

42. All material documentation was, of course, retained (and has now been provided to the Commission).

43. Further, the Branch continues to have a long-standing document replacement policy in connection with letters to congregations providing updated policy direction. When a letter is received that adjusts an existing policy in some way, the previous letter dealing with that policy is to be destroyed and replaced with the letter containing the adjusted policy. This reason for this is to avoid any confusion or mistake being made about what the current policy is in connection with the matter dealt with in the letter. The Branch keep copies of these superseded documents for a period of time.

44. For example, the most recent letter setting out the importance of retaining the information relating to child abuse the 1 October 2012 letter. This letter supersedes the previous letters as set out in para. 1 (WAT.0001.004.0066). Among other matters it deals with, at para. 11 (WAT.0001.004.0068) it states:

> "Information concerning an individual accused of child molestation, proved or otherwise, should be placed in the congregational confidential file and marked "Do not destroy" and kept indefinitely".

45. Those files are kept at the Branch with a summary held by the congregation.

STATEMENT OF JOE BELLO

   a. the congregations you have attended;

   b. any roles you have held within the Church; and

   c. your role as an elder in the REDACTED Congregation.

1.1. I was baptized as one of Jehovah's Witnesses in 1973.

1.2. I was appointed as an elder in 1991 in Beldon Congregation.

1.3. REDACTED Congregation was formed in late 1991 and I was appointed as an elder there. I have served as an elder in REDACTED Congregation since 1991.

2. Your knowledge and understanding of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church to:

   a. respond to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse made within the Church; and

   b. prevent child sexual abuse within the Church; and

   c. identify child sexual abuse within the Church;

including but not limited to, your understanding of those systems, policies and procedures as they related to your role as an elder in the Church.

2.1. When the elders become aware of an allegation of child sexual abuse, it is reported immediately to the Branch Office. The Branch advises the elders of any requirements of mandatory disclosure to the relevant authorities, and gives advice as to handling the wrongdoing according to scriptural principles.

2.2. Apart from reporting to the Branch and acting as advised, the body of elders treats child sexual abuse like any serious wrongdoing. Two elders are directed to investigate the complaint and, if substantiated, a judicial committee of three elders is appointed to deal with the matter. If the wrongdoer is repentant, he is reproved and loses privileges in the congregation. If he is an elder or ministerial servant he is removed from this position immediately. If the wrongdoer is not repentant he is disfellowshipped from the congregation and the congregation is notified of this fact (though they are not notified of the grounds for this).

2.3. Elders have the responsibility to teach all in the congregation to adhere to the clean moral standards in God's Word the Bible. They also help parents understand their responsibility is to protect their children. Assistance is given in various articles in the Watchtower and Awake magazines, and publications such as "Young People Ask" volumes 1 and 2, and "Learn from the Great Teacher".

2.4. Where a person has been found guilty of child sexual abuse, the elders privately counsel him as to appropriate behaviour with children, such as not spending time with them without another adult present, not inviting them to his home, not engaging in displays of affection with children and so on.

2.5. Detailed measures for protecting children in the congregation are provided to elders in the confidential letter dated 1 October 2012 from the Branch to all elders, and the elders' book "Shepherd the Flock of God in your Care" which was issued in about 2010.

2.6. Congregation members are reminded in our Bible instruction that they are obliged to report any serious wrongdoing (including child sexual abuse) to the elders if the wrongdoer will not come forward.

3. Any training that you have received, participated in, and/or delivered in relation to responding to allegations, prevention, and/or identification of child sexual abuse.

3.1. I have attended many elders' schools, which are courses held over 1 or 2 days every 2 or 3 years. At several of these schools, we have covered the topic of the elders' responsibilities in regard to preventing and dealing with cases of child sexual abuse.

3.2. There has been a series of letters from the Branch dealing with child sexual abuse, the latest being the October 1 2012 letter I referred to in paragraph 2.5.

3.3. The current elders' book "Shepherd the Flock of God in your Care" also deals with child sexual abuse. The previous book "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock" gave guidance on handling cases of serious wrongdoing which included cases of child sexual abuse.

3.4. I personally review the information in this publication and letter, and the information in relevant Watchtower and Awake articles, if ever I have any concern about possible child sexual abuse in the congregation.

4. A summary of your experience, both prior to and since the allegations made by BCB REDACTED in 1991, of responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Church.

4.1. The case involving BCB is the only one concerning child sexual abuse in which I have been involved.

5. The response of the REDACTED Congregation to allegations of child sexual abuse made in or around 2012 or 2013 by BCB in relation to William (Bill Neill), with specific reference to:

   a. when, and in what circumstances, you became aware of the alleged abuse;
   b. any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the REDACTED Congregation, had with the Legal and/or Service Departments of Watchtower Australia after you became aware of the alleged abuse;
   c. any discussion(s) or meeting(s) that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the REDACTED Congregation, were involved in, including the substance of those discussions or meetings, with any person about the alleged abuse, including but not limited to any discussions or meetings with:

      i) BCB

      ii) BCC

      iii) Robert Boardman;

      iv) David Wood.

d. Any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the REDACTED Congregation, had with any other Jehovah's Witness Congregation and/or the Watchtower Australia relating to the allegation of child sexual abuse made by BCB

5.1. Sometime in 2012, I can't remember the exact date, BCB asked the elders to visit her to discuss an issue. I and David Wood visited her and her husband BCC at her home.

5.2. In the course of that visit, BCB described how when she was a teenager staying at Bill Neill's home in Narrogin, she had been subjected by Bill Neill to sexual abuse on a number of occasions. That abuse involved Bill Neill kissing her on many occasions and putting his tongue in her mouth; touching her breasts through her nightgown, and looking at her when she was taking a shower. Later in her letters, BCB alleged that Bill Neill had performed oral sex on her.

5.3. When BCB initially advised us of this matter she said to David and me words to the effect, "I don't want to do anything about it myself but I feel the society should know so others can be protected."

5.4. Following this initial meeting with BCB David and I put the details in a letter which we sent to the Branch office.

5.5. Over subsequent months BCB was very upset and depressed. She said she had difficulties with what she felt were unkind actions toward her and her family by some others in the congregation, and she was having some troubles with the behaviour of her own children. She felt that her depression stemmed from the abuse she had suffered as a child. David Wood and I offered support and shared some scriptural thoughts, and suggested helpful articles from our publications which she and her husband could look over, to help deal with the matter.

5.6. Sometime later BCB 's mother provided an envelope to me at one of our meetings. It was from BCB and had a hand written summary substantially in accordance with what she had disclosed to David and me, which we had sent on to the Branch, with some minor elaboration.

J. Bello

Joe Bello
10 July 2015

5.7. When I next saw BCB at the meeting she gave me another envelope with a printed summary with a little more detail but no explanation other than saying "This is the last one".

5.8. At a subsequent meeting I saw BCB husband BCC and he asked for the envelope to be returned, so I returned the latest printed summary and destroyed the previous hand written summary.

5.9. Sometime later David Wood and another elder, Robert Boardman went to visit BCB and I understand they sent a letter with an updated summary of BCB s complaint, with more details, to the Branch Office. They showed me the summary they had prepared before sending it so that I could confirm matters from my previous involvement.

5.10. Over a period of some months about 4 elders including myself were involved in providing shepherding care and assistance, with many visits to BCB and her family. She appeared to be very depressed. I spent many hours with her and BCC I felt for her pain and the difficulties the whole family was going through.

5.11. During this period, BCB husband BCC said to me words to the effect, BCB has seen a psychiatrist about her depression but she isn't getting better so we are seeking your help."

5.12. On one occasion BCC and I were having a conversation. We were throwing around ideas about how to help BCB move on from the abuse she had suffered as a young teenager. BCC said they were considering bringing the matter up with the Royal Commission. I said to BCC thinking out loud, "What would that accomplish other than dragging Jehovah's name through the mud? Would it help BCB move on from this at all?" He said, "It will achieve a measure of closure for her and possible financial compensation." I said, "I see your point, yes, a measure of closure could help BCB

5.13. Almost as soon as I had said it, I realized I should not have made that remark to BCC as it might seem to question going to the Royal Commission. I was wrong to say it and I never would want to discourage someone going to the authorities with a complaint of child sexual abuse. This is also against the direction we receive as elders from the Branch.

J. Bello

Joe Bello
10 July 2015

5.14. After this conversation we both went to BCC home because he said BCB was very depressed and in need of encouragement and we shared some encouraging Scriptural thoughts and I encouraged BCB to focus on positive thoughts that might help her rise above her depressed feelings.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION INTO INSTITUTIONAL RESPONSES TO CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

STATEMENT

I, Jason Davies, Principal Legal Officer, Department of Education and Training, C/- Crown Law, 50 Ann Street, Brisbane, in the State of Queensland, state as follows:

1. I am a Barrister admitted to practice in Queensland in September 1998.

2. I am presently employed as a government lawyer and I hold the position of Principal Legal Officer at the Department of Education and Training ('the Department'), having commenced employment with the Department in June 2004.

3. Prior to commencing this role, I was a Legal Officer at the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions ('ODPP'). I held this position from August 1999 to August 2003.

An overview of my role and responsibilities at the Queensland DPP between 1 January 2000 and 31 December 2004, with particular reference to my role and responsibilities in relation to criminal proceedings against BCH

4. In my role as a Legal Officer at the ODPP I was engaged in the preparation and conduct of Committal proceedings concerning criminal matters at the Brisbane Magistrates Court, and the preparation of indictments for presentation in the superior courts of Queensland, concerning matters that I had conducted at Committal on behalf of the ODPP, and certain other matters that were conducted at Committal by the Queensland Police Service.

5. In relation to criminal proceedings against BCH I have had reference to file material provided by the ODPP to refresh my memory.

6. I recall that at some point in 2001 I took over the cypher 'CPA' in the Committals Workgroup at ODPP from Legal Officer, Ms Belinda Merrin. The cypher CPA is a designation of a particular legal officer position in the Committals Workgroup.

7. In taking over the CPA cypher, I became responsible for all of the prosecution files prepared or awaiting preparation and allocated to the CPA cypher. The prosecution file of BCH was one of those files.

Signature: Jason Davies ..... Witness: John C. Hornsby .....

8. I recall that the Committal proceeding for BCH was part heard when I took over the cypher (the committal of BCH had already had two days of hearings conducted by Ms Merrin and a further day was listed). I recall that I undertook the remainder of the hearing, which involved telephone evidence from several witnesses, on 24 October 2001.

9. After the conclusion of BCH Committal I was responsible for generally getting the matter ready for trial in the District Court, which in the main involved the preparation of the indictment and Schedule of Facts.

My recollection of the involvement of the Jehovah's Witness Church in the criminal proceedings against BCH, in particular in relation to the assistance, if any, that the Church provided to the Crown in the preparation of the Crown's case.

10. I do not recall having any difficulty in obtaining co-operation from the witnesses I examined who were, in the main, lay representatives of the Jehovah's Witness Church as elder members of the congregation attended by BCH

11. I do recall at one point contacting a lawyer who acted on behalf of the Jehovah's Witness Church as I was trying to locate records of meetings between BCH and church elders relevant to the proceedings. I do not recall any reluctance or hesitation to assist me in obtaining the records in question.

12. In respect of the witnesses I examined, I do not recall feeling that they had been uncooperative or mendacious in any respect.

13. I have been asked to explain my knowledge and understanding of the annotation outlined at the top of the Schedule of Facts I prepared, namely:

> A crucial factor in this trial is the social environment created by the congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses which has strongly influenced the behaviour of the defendant and all witnesses

14. To the best of my recollection I made the annotation because I wanted to warn any officers that subsequently handled the file (including other Legal Officers, Crown Prosecutors) that there was a unifying dynamic underpinning all of the evidence in the matter, namely the Jehovah's Witness faith.

15. On reflection, before I undertook the committal process in this matter, I was naïve enough to think that people of faith would be so horrified by sexual abuse in respect of children and women that they would not hesitate to contact the police and let justice take its course.

16. Subsequently, I was also concerned that the inculpatory admissions made by BCH in the context of meetings with elders of his congregation, which made the matter superficially seem more likely to lead to a conviction, would be rendered inadmissible at trial.

Signature: ..... Witness: .....

17. This concern arose due the risk that an application could be made at trial by BCH to exclude the evidence on the basis of unfairness, because the admissions were made in circumstances in which BCH could claim they were involuntary and also subject to inducement.

18. My understanding from the evidence I heard was that BCH would be treated less harshly by the congregation for his sins if he confessed and that even if he was disfellowshipped (excluded from the Jehovah's Witness Church), his confession would count in his favour if he later sought reinstatement on the basis of repentance.

19. As a consequence of the committal I finally understood that matters of faith sometime take precedence over secular, moral obligations and norms, namely referral of such matters to police.

20. It was also my opinion, based on the evidence and discussion with the victims, that the victims were not treated well by some members of the congregation, at least at the time of Mr BCH disfellowshipping and immediately afterward, and that their privacy was not preserved.

21. The annotation was meant to ensure that whoever followed me in the handling of this file understood that this was not a "run of the mill" sex offence matter. That the religious persuasion of those involved was integral to understanding the behaviour of the accused, the victims and witnesses, at least in their reluctance to go to the police. In my opinion, the annotation supplied valuable context in what was, at that stage, a very busy and under resourced office.

22. I have no knowledge as to whether the context expressed in my annotation had any impact, positive or negative, over the course of the criminal proceedings against BCH between 2001 and 2004.

I make this statement of my own free will believing its contents to be true and correct.

Dated at Brisbane this eighth day of July 2015.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION INTO INSTITUTIONAL RESPONSES TO CHILD SEXUAL ABUSE

STATEMENT

I, Jason Davies, Principal Legal Officer, Department of Education and Training, C/- Crown Law, 50 Ann Street, Brisbane, in the State of Queensland, state as follows:

1. This statement is an addendum to the statement I provided to the Royal Commission dated 8 July 2015.

2. I have been asked to address the following additional matters, outlined in bold below.

The factual basis of your understanding, as referred to or otherwise expressed in paragraphs 15, 19 and 21 of your Statement, of the relationship between the faith of members of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church and the reluctance to report child sexual abuse to police or other authorities.

3. The factual basis of my views expressed in paragraphs 15, 19 and 21, is simply the chain of events between the time of the alleged offences and the time when the complainants approached the police. It was apparent to me that church elders appeared to seek to deal with the offending internally rather than by reference to police. The only explanation I could find for that attitude, in respect of the adults, was that they were all acting strictly in accordance with the rules governing their faith.

4. For example, BCG related that when she revealed her sexual assault to BCJ BCJ she was counselled to speak to the Church Elders about it. When BCG subsequently spoke to Elder Ali, she was further referred onto Elder Bowditch and then Elder De Rooy. This led to a meeting of the judicial committee within the church, which caused a meeting to be conducted where BCG was had to reveal her allegations in the presence of her alleged attacker and the Elders. She also relates a further meeting where six elders were present and she had to recount matters again.

5. At no stage during or after this process did BCG relate that she was advised to speak to the police to report the crimes against her. I also do not recall any evidence that any of the church Elders or even BCG mother approached the police to report the matter, even after Mr BCH made admissions.

With reference to paragraphs 16 to 18 of your statement, the prejudicial impact, if any, of the practices of the Jehovah's Witnesses in relation to investigation and adjudication of allegations, reports, or complaints of child sexual abuse, on the criminal proceedings generally.

6. My concern was entirely practical. The inculpatory statements made by Mr BCH had, from a prosecutor's perspective, potentially great evidential value. I was alert to this because in most complaints of this nature it is usually a contest of credibility between accuser and accused with little or no independent, corroborative evidence.

7. I recall speaking to my legal practice manager at the time I was preparing the matter (I believe it was Todd Fuller) and discussing the admissibility issue. I thought that the admissions would be excluded and he did not.

8. In hindsight, a more pressing concern should have been the delay in the allegations coming to police attention. I attribute this to the church processes and disfellowshipping, which given the religious mindset of all relevant parties at the time, was seemingly accepted as the end of the matter with no need to refer matters to the secular authorities.

The factual basis of your opinion, as expressed in paragraph 20 of your statement, that the privacy of the victims of Mr BCH was not preserved following those victims' reports of child sexual abuse to elders at the Mareeba Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses.

9. I recall that BCG said that some of the details of her allegations against her father had got out into the local community where they lived when the matter was dealt with by the Elders. I recall that she said that she had been subject to gossip and innuendo as a consequence.

10. In my view this was in part a consequence of the process adopted by the church for dealing with BCG complaints. The sheer number of people that were involved in hearing the complaints, the closeness of the Jehovah's Witness Community, and the nature of disfellowshipping Mr BCH makes it somewhat inevitable that embarrassing details would leak into the community.

I make this statement of my own free will believing its contents to be true and correct.

Dated at Brisbane this twentieth day of July 2015.

STATEMENT OF ALBERT RONALD DE ROOY

REDACTED

D.O.B: 16 December 1955

1. An overview of your involvement with the Jehovah's Witnesses Church, including but not limited to an overview of:

(a) the congregations you have attended;

(b) any roles you have held within the Church; and

(c) your role as an elder in the Mareeba Congregation

1.1. I was associated when very young with the Belgrave Congregation in Victoria and then the Narrabeen Congregation in New South Wales. As a teenager I attended the Rockhampton Congregation in Queensland and the Glen Iris Congregation in Victoria. In the 1970's I moved to the Cairns Congregation in Queensland and married my wife there. My family and I moved from there in 1981 to the Mareeba Congregation which I have attended since then.

1.2. I was appointed to serve as a Ministerial servant when about 28 years of age. At the age of 30 I was appointed to serve as an Elder in the Congregation.

1.3. As an Elder in the congregation I have been appointed to be a shepherd in the congregation to help and protect spiritually the members of the congregation. This involves teaching from God's word at the meetings to strengthen the faith of those in attendance . Also taking the lead in our preaching work and training ones who I work with. Also included is the role of keeping the congregation spiritually clean and healthy which sometimes involves handling matters of wrongdoing.

1.4. I am now 59 years of age.

2. Your knowledge and understanding of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church between 1988 and 2000 to;

a. respond to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse made within the Church;

b. prevent child sexual abuse within the Church;

including but not limited to, your understanding of those systems, policies and procedures as they related to your role as an elder in the Church.

2.1. When a charge of sexual abuse is made, as an elder I have to follow that allegation through. This would include informing the body of elders of the allegation. 2 elders then are assigned to investigate the accusation, and report back to the body of Elders.

A. Ron Rooy

The body of Elders from that report determine if the accusation has substance and if there is, then appoint a Judicial Committee of 3 elders.

2.2. If an allegation of child abuse is raised, the body of elders is also obligated to report the allegation to the Branch Office immediately. I believe this reporting procedure began in the 1990's. Prior to that, child sexual abuse was handled in the same way as other cases of serious wrongdoing, as I have stated in 2.1 above.

2.3. Child sexual abuse is absolutely not tolerated in the congregation. Any Elder or Ministerial Servant guilty of this is immediately removed from serving in that capacity. An unrepentant child abuser will be disfellowshipped from the congregation, and others from the congregation do not associate with him.

2.4. The procedures for preventing sexual abuse of children are:
* keeping the congregation clean by disfellowshipping unrepentant sinners;
* teaching the congregation members the high moral standards of the Bible at our meetings;
* being vigilant as elders to follow through on any accusation made.

2.5. Also, all members of the congregation are taught that, if they learn of serious wrongdoing including child abuse, they have a personal responsibility to report the wrongdoing to the elders if the wrongdoer does not come forward himself.

3. Any training that you have received, participated in, and/or delivered in relation to responding to allegations, prevention, and/or identification of child sexual abuse prior to and/or during your consideration of the allegations made by BCG in 1989.

3.1. As an elder I received training at a number of schools for elders which included teaching on handling cases of serious wrongdoing including child sexual abuse, and handling judicial matters on such wrongdoing.

3.2. I also received a number of articles for elders based on Bible principles for handling cases of serious wrongdoing judicially (including child sexual abuse), which were compiled into a publication "Pay Attention to Yourselves and All the Flock".

3.3. I also personally studied God's Word the Bible and various articles in our magazines Awake and the Watchtower that dealt with child sexual abuse.

3.4. From the 1990's I and other elders received specific instruction in the form of letters from the Branch Office which instructed us to report matters of child sexual abuse immediately to the Branch, and we commenced receiving instruction on the subject at elders' schools.

10 July 2015

3.5. My wife and I made sure we warned our own daughters when very young about the danger of sexual abuse and what kind of behaviour was unacceptable even from one of us parents.

3.6. I therefore treated as very serious the accusation that BCG made against her father.

4. A summary of your experience, both prior to and since the allegations made by BCG BCG in 1989, of responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Church.

4.1. I recall I was involved in one other case of child sexual abuse in the early 1990's. A brother in the congregation was strongly counseled and was deleted as an elder when the allegations of abuse first came to light. However a number of other complaints were reported in the next couple of years and he was therefore disfellowshipped.

4.2. Since BCG 's case and this other case, more information on the subject has been dealt with in our magazines, also since that time more instructions have been given to elders in dealing with child abuse.

5. The response of the Mareeba Congregation to allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCG in relation to BCH in or around May 1989, with specific reference to:

a. when, and in what circumstances, you became aware of the alleged abuse;

b. any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Mareeba Congregation, had with the Legal and/or Service Departments of Watchtower Australia after you became aware of the alleged abuse;

c. any discussions or meetings that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Mareeba Congregation, were involved in, including the substance of those discussions or meetings, with any person about the alleged abuse, including but not limited to any discussions or meetings with:

i) BCG

ii) BCH

iii) any other member of the REDACTED family; and/or

iv) BCJ

5.1. My memory is vague because of time elapsed but I seem to recall that BCJ BCJ and BCG came together to inform the elders of the accusation against BCH. At that time BCH was already being handled by a judicial committee, of which I was a member, to look into his improper conduct with a married sister REDACTED and his lying about this. The judicial committee was investigating the view that BCH wanted to divorce his wife BCI on a technicality and marry REDA who we understood was also planning to divorce her husband on the same technical grounds. It was in the context of this committee that BCG made her allegations of sexual abuse by BCH and the body of Elders immediately investigated it, but BCH denied it vehemently and with aggression towards BCG

5.2 I tried to focus on doing my job as an elder to deal with the matter in the judicial committee setting, to discipline BCH and give spiritual help to his family. Other members of the congregation were giving support to BCG such as Kevin Bowditch and his family. I do not recall the question of going to the police being discussed at any time. I did not make any comment as to this. I am not surprised that BCG reported the abuse to the police some years later.

5.2. I cannot remember any correspondence with the Legal or Service Department after I became aware of the alleged abuse. Other than stated above, I cannot recall details of any discussions with other members of the Congregation, as it is too long ago. I do recall that I was a member of the judicial committee that disfellowshipped BCH that he appealed against the disfellowshipping and that I attended the appeal committee proceedings.

6. The decision of the Elders in the Mareeba Congregation to disfellowship BCH in 1989 and the reasons for that decision.

6.1. From memory, BCH was disfellowshipped for loose conduct with REDACTED and for lying about this. In the view of the judicial committee, we were unable to make a conclusive finding about the abuse allegation, as it amounted to one person's word against another's, and we were bound by the scriptural principle that all facts should be established by 2 or more witnesses. BCH appealed his disfellowshipping.

6.2. It was during the appeal committee hearing that BCH admitted in front of 6 persons present that what BCG had alleged was true. The original decision of the judicial committee to disfellowship him was confirmed by the appeal committee, with the admissions by BCH added as additional grounds for disfellowshipping him.

7. The decision of the Elders in the Mareeba Congregation to reinstate BCH in 1992 and the reasons for that decision.

7.1. I recall very soon after BCH was disfellowshipped, he moved away from Mareeba Congregation to another congregation.

10 July 2015

7.2. I believe BCH first went to Brisbane and then to St.George Congregation in western Queensland. I recall that the elders in Mareeba Congregation received a recommendation for BCH to be reinstated from the elders at St George Congregation, but we rejected this recommendation. Later we received another recommendation from St George Congregation and BCH was subsequently reinstated. I can no longer recall the grounds for reinstating him including whether he had apologized to BCG

8. Your knowledge of any correspondence between the Mareeba Congregation and any other Congregation and/or Watchtower Australia relating to the allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCG

8.1. I do not recall what correspondence there was with other congregations or with the Branch, other than the fact that the original judicial committee sent a report to the Branch, and that there was correspondence with St George Congregation about reinstating BCH

9. Your knowledge and/or understanding of any specific systems and/or procedures that the body of elders in the Mareeba Congregation put in place in relation to BCH contact with children while he was a member of the Mareeba Congregation.

9.1. All I recall is that BCH left Mareeba Congregation very soon after his disfellowshipping, and I do not recall any such systems or procedures. I do recall that the body of elders in Mareeba Congregation were protective of BCG and at the time BCJ provided good support for her.

9.2. I also recall that BCG moved in and lived with Kevin Bowditch and his family for a time. They were very supportive of her and treated her like a daughter. I believe Kevin helped pay for her wedding to BCJ and gave her away at her wedding.

10. Your involvement, if any with the Queensland Police in relation to their investigation of BCH

11. Your involvement, if any, in the criminal proceedings against BCH

11.1. I recall that a police officer named Natalie Bennett was helping to prosecute BCH As I recall all the elders on the original judicial committee and the appeal committee provided statements and any documents we held at the time to the police, and we were all involved in giving evidence in the trial at Brisbane. The case was dismissed. Later it went to court again but I was not involved this time. This time BCH was convicted.

STATEMENT OF DINO ALI

REDACTED

D.O.B: 20 July 1949

1. An overview of your involvement with the Jehovah's Witnesses Church, including but not limited to an overview of:
   (a)the congregations you have attended;
   (b)any roles you have held within the Church; and
   (c)your role as an elder in the Mareeba Congregation.

   1.1. I have served 2 periods as an elder in the Mareeba Congregation, from 1986 to 1997, then from 2006 to 2015.

2. Your knowledge and understanding of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church between October 1988 and November 2000 to;
   (a) respond to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse made within the Church;
   (b) prevent child sexual abuse within the Church;
   including but not limited to, your understanding of those systems, policies and procedures as they related to your role as an elder in the Church.

   2.1. My understanding of the procedures to deal with child sexual abuse in the congregation is to take seriously any such allegations, and immediately call the Branch office who will give direction for such cases.

   2.2. Two elders will investigate the allegation promptly. If they find it has substance, the body of elders will nominate three elders to form a judicial committee to deal with the wrongdoing.

   2.3. If the wrongdoer is unrepentant they are disfellowshipped from the congregation. This is announced to the congregation without giving the reasons for the disfellowshipping. Congregation members do not associate with disfellowshipped persons.

   2.4. In the congregation we are taught from the Bible that we have a personal responsibility to report wrongdoing to the elders if we become aware of it and the wrongdoer does not come forward himself.

   2.5. Child abuse is considered a crime by Jehovah's Witnesses. Reporting it to the Police is a personal decision for the victim and his or her parents (if a minor). We respect his or her absolute right to do so.

2.6. Spiritual education is a priority in the congregation and the high morals of God's Word are consistently emphasized. Family values are most important and discussed at our meetings, and open communication is encouraged for young or old, to approach an elder for help.

2.7. 'Shepherding calls' are made regularly by 2 elders to families and individuals. The elders will provide whatever shepherding assistance they can.

2.8. Publications are provided for parents and children (and members of the public generally) to be educated as to child sexual abuse and also how to respond if and when it occurs. For example, the books "Young People Ask", Volumes 1 and 2, "Learn from the Great Teacher" and articles in the Watchtower and Awake magazines from time to time.

3. Any training that you have received, participated in, and/or delivered in relation to responding to allegations, prevention, and/or identification of child sexual abuse prior to and/or during your consideration of the allegations made by BCG in 1989.

3.1. Courses (or Schools) were conducted for elders for 1 or 2 days every 2 or 3 years. The instruction at those schools included handling all sorts of serious wrongdoing including child sexual abuse.

3.2. The Branch regularly sent all elders letters and updates on handling judicial matters of serious wrongdoing including child sexual abuse.

3.3. From about the 1990's the elders received specific direction and instruction in handling cases of child sexual abuse, in the form of letters from the Branch and discussion of the subject at elders' schools.

4. A summary of your experience, both prior to and since the allegations made by BCG in 1989, of responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Church.

4.1. Apart from BCG case, I was aware of only 1 other case, in the late 1980's. The body of elders including me were informed by one of our elders that an individual in the congregation had committed child sexual abuse and that we needed to be vigilant as to his not having contact with children. I understand this individual was later disfellowshipped when more cases of abuse came to light. I was not on any judicial committee that dealt with him.

5. The response of the Mareeba Congregation to allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCG in relation to BCH in or around May 1989, with specific reference to:
   - (a) when, and in what circumstances, you became aware of the alleged abuse;
   - (b) any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Mareeba Congregation, had with the Legal and/or Service Departments of Watchtower Australia after you became aware of the alleged abuse;
   - (c) any discussions or meetings that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Mareeba Congregation, were involved in, including the substance of those discussions or meetings, with any person about the alleged abuse, including but not limited to any discussions or meetings with:
     - i) BCG
     - ii) BCH
     - iii) any other member of the REDACTED family; and/or
     - iv) BCJ

1. As these events took place over 25 years ago, I am unable to recall the details to any great degree. As I recall, at the time BCG made the allegations of child sexual abuse, Ron de Rooy, Kevin Bowditch and I were in a judicial committee considering BCH leaving his wife and family for a sister in another congregation, REDACTED and his lying to the elders about his behaviour.

2. I was informed of the allegations by one of the other elders on the committee, I think Kevin.

3. I recall that BCG allegations were acted on immediately by the elders. BCG left the family home immediately when she had made the allegations and was taken in by Kevin Bowditch and his family for a while. Gavin Belcher and his family also helped care for BCG

4. We elders on the judicial committee spent many sleepless nights following through to support BCG and to deal with the allegations.

5. When BCH was confronted with the allegations by the judicial committee, he repeatedly denied them, saying words to the effect "It's a crazy accusation".

6. The judicial committee did not feel it had clear proof of the allegations of child sexual abuse from either party, as it was one person's word against another's. However the committee concluded it had a basis for disfellowshipping BCH for his conduct with REDAC and his lying.

7. I recall that BCH appealed the disfellowshipping but the appeal committee upheld the disfellowshipping.

8. I am happy BCG pursued the matter, within the congregation and later with the police.

9. I don't recall any discussion with BCG or her family as to reporting the matter to the authorities and I do not believe this was discussed.

10. I recall there was correspondence with the Branch but I do not recall the substance of that correspondence.

6. The decision of the Elders in the Mareeba Congregation to disfellowship BCH BCH in 1989 and the reasons for that decision.

6.1. The decision to disfellowship BCH was based on his immoral relationship with REDACTED and leaving his wife and family, not having the scriptural grounds for a divorce (Matthew 19:3-9). BCH would not give up this course of conduct and was dishonest to the elders about it. As he would not repent and make the necessary changes required by God's Word, the Bible, he was removed as a member of the congregation.

7. The decision of the Elders in the Mareeba Congregation to reinstate BCH BCH in 1992 and the reasons for that decision.

7.1. I recall Mareeba Congregation received a letter from St George Congregation (where BCH had moved to after his case in Mareeba), recommending BCH be reinstated. The body of elders in Mareeba Congregation did not agree to reinstate him, as we believed his manner and attitude and his treachery to his wife and family were so serious, and we did not believe enough time had passed for him to demonstrate repentance.

8. Your knowledge of any correspondence between the Mareeba Congregation and any other Congregation and/or Watchtower Australia relating to the allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCG

8.1. I cannot recall anything regarding such correspondence.

9. Your knowledge and/or understanding of any specific systems and/or procedures that the body of elders in the Mareeba Congregation put in place in relation to BCH contact with children while he was a member of the Mareeba Congregation.

Dino Ali

9.1. Almost immediately after his disfellowshipping, BCH left Mareeba Congregation and moved to Townsville. Later I heard that he had moved further south. He didn't hang around Mareeba Congregation at all.

9.2. I do not recall any specific measures at the time. Being disfellowshipped, all members of the congregation would apply the direction from the Holy Scriptures to avoid any contact with BCH so he therefore not be a threat to other children in the congregation.

9.3. In child abuse cases since that time, the elders have a policy of informing those who are in close association with the person socially, not to allow their children to stay overnight or be left alone with him under any circumstances.

10. Your involvement, if any with the Queensland Police in relation to their investigation of BCH

11. Your involvement, if any, in the criminal proceedings against BCH

11.1. I recall a Police Officer, Natalie Bennett, approached the elders in Mareeba Congregation and the appeal committee elders for background details of BCH We provided full assistance and made statements and gave the police access to all documents.

11.2. I appeared in court proceedings in Brisbane as a witness for the prosecution and in support of BCG

11.3. I am grateful to have been there as a witness for BCG at the trial, to help her get justice for herself.

STATEMENT OF DOUG JACKSON

ADDRESS: REDACTED

D.O.B: OCTOBER 18, 1943,

1. An overview of your involvement with the Jehovah's Witnesses Church, including but not limited to an overview of:

a. the congregations you have attended;

b. any roles you have held within the Church; and

c. your role as an elder in the Narrogin Congregation.

1.1. I was baptized as one of Jehovah's Witnesses in 1963.

1.2. I was appointed as an elder in Swan Hill congregation in Victoria in 1971.

1.3. In 1975 I moved to Seymour congregation in Victoria and served as an elder there.

1.4. In 1979 I served in Mount Evelyn congregation in Victoria and served as an elder there.

1.5. I retired from my job with the Victorian public service in 1981 and moved to Hope Valley congregation in South Australia, and served as an elder there.

1.6. In 1988 I moved to Paradise congregation in South Australia and served as an elder there.

1.7. In 1990 I moved to Perth to assist my elderly mother. I served as an elder in Thornleigh congregation.

1.8. In August 1990 I was invited by the Branch to serve as a circuit overseer. This involved visiting around 20 congregations twice a year, spending 6 days with them giving talks. At that time we had 3 congregation meetings during the week. As circuit overseer I also arranged meetings for field service and shared in the house-to-house ministry. I also had meetings with the elders and ministerial servants in the congregation. The purpose of the visit was to encourage all in the congregation.

Doug Jackson

1.9. I served as a circuit overseer in Western Australia between 1990 and 1998. I served in the circuit including Narrogin congregation from 1990 to the end of 1992. After then I served a circuit covering parts of Perth.

1.10. In 1998 I was appointed as a district overseer which involved visiting 12 circuits.

1.11. In 2014 I retired as district overseer as I had reached the age of 70. I now serve as an elder in Windsor Gardens congregation in South Australia.

1.12 REDACTED [redacted]

1.13. I am in reasonable health although my REDACTED condition has slowed me down. I am now 71 years old.

2. Your knowledge and understanding of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church between 1980 and 1986 to:

a. Respond to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse made within the Church; and

b. prevent child sexual abuse within the Church; and

c. identify child sexual abuse within the Church;

including but not limited to, your understanding of those systems, policies and procedures as they related to your role as an elder in the Church.

2.1. In the period referred to, I recall that child sexual abuse was dealt with the same as other cases of serious wrongdoing. 2 elders were appointed to investigate the allegation and if they found it substantiated, a judicial committee of 3 elders was formed to deal with the matter. The wrongdoer, the victim and other witnesses were interviewed and gave evidence. The judicial committee would then reprove the wrongdoer if he was repentant and disfellowship him if he was not. In either case any of the wrongdoer's privileges (such as serving as an elder or ministerial servant) would be withdrawn immediately. The policy for dealing with such cases was drawn from Bible principles.

2.2. From about the 1990's I recall that matters of child sexual abuse began to be dealt with as a special category and elders were directed to report any such complaints or allegations immediately to the Branch Office and to follow their direction in regard to reporting the matter to the authorities and handling the wrongdoing scripturally.

2.3. Prevention and identification of child sexual abuse was handled by instructing the congregations in applicable Bible principles. These included upholding God's high moral standards and also impressing on the congregation that they each have a personal responsibility before God to report any wrongdoing to the elders, if the wrongdoer will not reveal it voluntarily, to keep the congregation clean and free of reproach.

2.4. Our magazines the Watchtower and Awake, and other publications, dealt with child sexual abuse from time to time. These provided specific instruction to parents and children to help protect children from abuse, supported the right of victims to report abuse, and recognized their pain and the problems caused by abuse. These are offered to congregation members and the public free of charge.

3. Any training that you have received, participated in, and/or delivered in relation to responding to allegations, prevention, and/or identification of child sexual abuse prior to and/or during your consideration of the allegations made by BCB in 1991.

3.1. As an elder and later a circuit overseer, I recall that we received instruction on handling cases of serious wrongdoing, including child sexual abuse, in the form of schools and courses for elders, letters from the Branch and articles specifically designed to instruct elders in the scriptural principles and procedures to follow.

3.2. From the 1990's the Branch issued a series of letters to bodies of elders on how to handle cases of child sexual abuse, as well as articles which were later compiled into a book, "Shepherd the Flock of God". Elders' schools and courses began to provide specific instruction on responding to such allegations.

Doug Jackson
10 July 2015

3.3. Our magazines and publications as referred to above provided instruction on preventing child abuse to all members of the congregation as well as members of the public who accepted them.

4. A summary of your experience, both prior to and since the allegations made by REDACTED BCB in 1991, of responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Church.

4.1. BCB 's case is the only case involving child sexual abuse in which I have ever been involved.

5. The response of the Narrogin Congregation to allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCB in relation to William (Bill Neill) in or around 1991, with specific reference to:

a. when, and in what circumstances, you became aware of the alleged abuse;
b. any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Narrogin Congregation, had with the Legal and/or Service Departments of Watchtower Australia after you became aware of the alleged abuse;
c. any discussion(s) or meeting(s) that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Narrogin Congregation, were involved in, including the substance of those discussions or meetings, with any person about the alleged abuse, including but not limited to any discussions or meetings with:

i) BCB

ii) William (Bill) Neill;

iii) BCC

iv) any other member of the Neill family; and/or

v) Max Horley.

5.1. During a visit I made as circuit overseer to Narrogin congregation in early 1992, Max Horley informed me that BCB had made a complaint of child sexual abuse against Bill Neil. As there were only 2 elders in the congregation, Bill and Max, I decided to investigate the complaint with Max.

Doug Jackson
10 July 2015

5.2. I recall Max and I sent a letter to the Branch Office reporting the complaint, and that Bill Neil had stood down as an elder.

5.3. The only discussion about the matter in the Narrogin congregation that I can recall was with Bill Neill, Max Horley and BCB I do not recall the substance of those discussions, though to the best of my recollection BCB s complaint involved her discovering Bill Neill looking at her as she was taking a shower. Bill Neill admitted that he did so. I do not recall any detail of other conduct alleged against Bill Neill except that BCB said that Bill Neill had touched her breasts from the outside of her night clothing when kissing her goodnight. Bill Neill did not admit this conduct other than to say if it had occurred it was inadvertent. I do not recall talking to any other members of the Neill family or BCC

6. The decision that William (Bill) Neill step down as an elder of the Narrogin congregation in 1992, and the reasons for that decision.

6.1. Max Horley and I discussed the matter and we concluded that Bill Neill no longer met the scriptural qualifications for serving as an elder since he was guilty of uncleanness, and was not free from accusation. I recall feeling concern about the negative impact on BCB if Bill Neill continued serving as an elder. We therefore recommended to Bill Neill that he step down as an elder and he agreed to do so.

7. Any decision that William (Bill) Neill be reappointed as an elder of the Narrogin congregation, and the reasons for that decision.

7.1. As far as I can remember, I was not involved in Bill Neill's reappointment. When I left the circuit which included Narrogin congregation, he had not been reappointed. I did not know that he was recommended for reappointment or when this happened.

8. Any correspondence between you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Narrogin congregation, and any other Jehovah's Witness congregation and/or Watchtower Australia relating to the allegations of child sexual abuse made by REDACTED BCB

10 July 2015

8.1. As stated in 5.2 above, Max Horley and I reported the matter to the Branch Office in a letter. I do not have a copy of that letter.

9. Your knowledge and understanding of William (Bill) Neill's attendance at and membership of the Narrogin Congregation following the decision in 1992 for him to stand down as an elder, including but not limited to:

a. The period of his membership in the Congregation from 1992;
b. His role(s) within the Congregation from 1992;
c. Any privileges or restrictions applied to him by the Narrogin congregation;
d. Any specific systems and/or procedures that the body of elders of the Narrogin congregation put in place in relation to his contact with children.

9.1. I do not recall how long Bill Neill stayed in Narrogin congregation after being removed as an elder.

9.2. To the best of my recollection, after Bill Neill was removed as an elder, he had no privileges in the congregation. I do not recall if any systems or procedures were placed on him in relation to children.

9.3. At the time Bill Neill stood down as an elder, I recall Max Horley and I gave him strong counsel from the Bible and helped him with scriptures and articles from Jehovah's Witnesses' publications to strengthen him never to repeat such conduct and to hate such behaviour.

REDACTED

STATEMENT OF MAX HORLEY

REDACTED

D.O.B: 3rd January, 1960

1. An overview of your involvement with the Jehovah's Witnesses Church, including but not limited to an overview of:

   a. the congregations you have attended;

   b. any roles you have held within the Church; and

   c. your role as an elder in the Narrogin Congregation.

1.1. My parents became Jehovah's Witnesses around the time they were married so I have been associated all my life. I attended the congregation in Pingelly until the year I started school when the family moved to Narrogin in 1966. I got baptized in 1978 and was appointed a Ministerial Servant in 1985. I was appointed as an Elder in 1988 and served as the congregation Secretary until Bill Neil was removed in 1992 and I was appointed the Presiding Overseer (now known as the Coordinator of the Body of Elders). At the end of 1997 I moved to Halls Head along with my young family and was appointed an Elder in the Halls Head congregation in January, 1998. I became the Secretary around May, 2010. When the Dawesville congregation was formed in November, 2012 I was appointed an Elder and continue to serve as Secretary.

2. Your knowledge and understanding of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church between 1980 and 1986 to:

   a. Respond to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse made within the Church; and

   b. prevent child sexual abuse within the Church; and

   c. identify child sexual abuse within the Church;

including but not limited to, your understanding of those systems, policies and procedures as they related to your role as an elder in the Church.

Max Horley

2.1. I was not appointed an elder until 1988 so my knowledge of policies and procedures was limited to what was contained in Watchtower articles that I could reference. After my appointment, I received some handbooks (dated 1977, 1979, 1981) which had limited additional references. These were combined into one publication in 1991 entitled "Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All The Flock". This publication contained only two references to responding to cases of child sexual abuse and nothing specifically on how to identify or prevent this from happening. The publication did provide information on how to proceed in all cases of sexual misconduct, that is, sexual relations outside of the marriage arrangement. A judicial committee would hear all evidence and then the wrongdoer would be reproved if repentant and removed from the congregation if unrepentant. Evidence would have to include a confession or testimony of two or more witnesses to the same conduct.

2.2. Our monthly magazines the Watchtower and Awake! deal with the issue of child sexual abuse from time to time, from the point of view of stating how wicked it is, helping parents protect children and children protect themselves, and helping victims deal with it and encouraging them to report it.

2.3. Also, the congregation is instructed from the Bible that, if they become aware of a case of serious wrongdoing, including child abuse, they are obligated to approach the wrongdoer and encourage him/her to speak to the elders about it, or if this does not happen, to report the wrongdoing themselves to the elders. The relevant Bible principle makes it clear that failure to report another's wrongdoing can make one responsible before God, and this is emphasised to the congregation.

3. Any training that you have received, participated in, and/or delivered in relation to responding to allegations, prevention, and/or identification of child sexual abuse prior to and/or during your consideration of the allegations made by BCB in 1991.

3.1. Over the years elders have received a number of letters from the Watchtower Society with references to child sexual abuse namely, but not limited to, 8/89, 4/92, 11/95, 5/97, 12/98, 2/09, 10/12. The later letters provide updated information and often replaced the earlier ones. In 2010 we received the publication "Shepherd the Flock of God" which also contained information on how to handle reports and cases of child sexual abuse and included references to printed material, i.e. letters to the body of elders. I have also attended a number of training days provided to congregation elders; some of which included information on child sexual abuse. These were conducted in 1992, 1995, 1998, 2002, 2006, 2010, and 2012. Now we are directed to contact the branch office legal department if any cases are brought to our attention.

Max Horley

4. A summary of your experience, both prior to and since the allegations made by BCB REDACTED in 1991, of responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Church.

4.1. The case involving BCB is the only one concerning child sexual abuse in which I have been involved.

5. The response of the Narrogin Congregation to allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCB in relation to William (Bill Neill) in or around 1991, with specific reference to:

a. when, and in what circumstances, you became aware of the alleged abuse;
b. any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Narrogin Congregation, had with the Legal and/or Service Departments of Watchtower Australia after you became aware of the alleged abuse;
c. any discussion(s) or meeting(s) that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Narrogin Congregation, were involved in, including the substance of those discussions or meetings, with any person about the alleged abuse, including but not limited to any discussions or meetings with:

i) BCB ;

ii) BCC ;

iii) William (Bill) Neill;

iv) Bronwyn Neill;

v) any other member of the Neill family; and/or

vi) Doug Jackson.

5.1. Unfortunately my recollections are vague as it was a very long time ago and I did not keep any notes at the time. I remember BCB visiting me at home and I think BCC was with her although I do not remember if they were already married or only dating at the time. I did not contact the Watchtower Society. I do not remember talking to Bill Neil about the allegations on my own however we must have been expecting a visit of the

7 July 2015

Circuit Overseer and, when he did visit, both Doug Jackson and I met with Bill and also BCB separately to discuss the allegations. When BCB left school she was working RE DA REDACT ED in Narrogin. As her family lived on a farm a 45 minute drive from town, BCB stayed with Bill's family during the week and went home on the weekends. She became a part of the Neil family while living with them and shared a room with one or more of the daughters. The accusation was that Bill touched BCB 's breasts through her nightgown on more than one occasion either when he went to the room to kiss the girls good night or at other times when he was showing affection. Bill denied that he had deliberately done anything improper and, if anything had happened, it had been unintentional. Due to the lack of clear proof from either party, it became a case of one person's word against another. However, it had cast a cloud over the qualifications for Bill to remain an elder. I do not recall talking to Bronwyn Neil or any other members of the Neil family.

5.2. I don't recall BCB mentioning any other abuse by Bill Neill other than him touching her breasts. I am not saying that she did not, it is just that after more than 20 years I cannot remember it.

5.3. I do recall having a conversation with BCB around this time, in the course of which I said to her words to the effect, "It would be better not to talk about this matter within the congregation, because there's a fair bit of talk going around about why Bill [referring to Bill Neill] has stood down as an elder." I said this because I believed that gossip and speculation about the matter would be hurtful to BCB and her family, and to Bill and his family. I said this of my own initiative and was not asked to say it by anyone.

5.4. I never said anything to BCB about whether she should or should not report Bill's behaviour to the authorities.

6. The decision that William (Bill) Neill step down as an elder of the Narrogin congregation in 1992, and the reasons for that decision.

6.1. Prior to this issue being raised, I was involved with Bill Neil in handling another situation that had arisen in the congregation. I felt that the comments he made to the people involved was out of character for an elder, not given in a loving and caring manner. The comments he made on that occasion and other comments around that time then coupled with the case involving BCB cast doubts on his qualification to serve. I felt that he no longer had freeness of speech, that he was no longer 'Irreprehensible' or 'free from accusation'.(1Tim. 3:2, Titus 1:6,7). Doug Jackson agreed with me to recommend his removal as an elder. This was conveyed to the Watchtower Society along with a report on what had occurred. His deletion was then announced to the congregation without mentioning the reasons.

7. Your involvement, if any, in any decision to reappoint William (Bill) Neill as an elder of the Narrogin congregation, and the reasons for that decision.

7.1. Bill did speak to me on a few occasions about being reappointed in the years between 1992 and 1995. However, I did not feel enough time had passed to live down any negative feelings from the rest of the congregation. Bill and his family moved to Willeton congregation in Perth in about 1995. I later heard that he had been reappointed as an elder in that congregation. He was not reappointed in Narrogin congregation.

8. Any correspondence , including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Narrogin congregation and/or Doug Jackson, had with any other Jehovah's Witness congregation and/or Watchtower Australia relating to the allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCB

8.1. As mentioned above, the only correspondence I recall is the report sent to the Watchtower Society along with the recommendation to remove Bill as an elder by Doug Jackson. I do not have a copy of that report.

9. Your recollection of William (Bill) Neill's attendance at and membership of the Narrogin Congregation following the decision in 1992 for him to stand down as an elder, including but not limited to:
   a. The period of his membership in the Congregation from 1992;
   b. His role(s) within the Congregation from 1992;
   c. Any privileges or restrictions applied to him by the Narrogin congregation;
   d. Any specific systems and/or procedures that the body of elders of the Narrogin congregation put in place in relation to his contact with children.

9.1. Bill continued to attend meetings along with his family. In fact, he was rarely missing. I do not recall any specific restrictions applied to him. I understand he and his family moved to Perth in 1995 and attended meetings in the Willeton congregation.

STATEMENT OF KEVIN BOWDITCH

ADDRESS:

D.O.B:

1. An overview of your involvement with the Jehovah's Witnesses Church, including but not limited to an overview of:
   (a) the congregations you have attended;
   (b) any roles you have held within the Church; and
   (c) your role as an elder in the Mareeba Congregation.

1.1. I was baptized as one of Jehovah's Witnesses in 1964.

1.2. Between 1964 and 1969 I attended Mareeba Congregation, where I was appointed as a ministerial servant in 1968.

1.3. Between 1969 and 1976 I attended Bowen Congregation.

1.4. I was appointed as an elder some time in the 1970's, I do not recall exactly when.

1.5. Between 1976 and 1994 I attended Mareeba Congregation and served there as an elder.

1.6. From 1994 to the present I have served as an elder in Mossman Congregation apart from a period from 1994 to 1998.

2. Your knowledge and understanding of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church between 1988 and 2000 to;

   (a) respond to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse made within the Church;

   (b) prevent child sexual abuse within the Church;

   including but not limited to, your understanding of those systems, policies and procedures as they related to your role as an elder in the Church.

2.1. All complaints were taken seriously and where possible acted on right away.

2.2. Two elders investigated the allegation, and when they found it had any substance, the body of elders appointed a judicial committee of three elders to deal with the wrongdoing.

2.3. If the judicial committee found that the wrongdoer was repentant, he would immediately lose any privileges (such as serving as an elder or ministerial servant) and would be allowed no role where he could have contact with children. The wrongdoer would be reproved and this would be announced to the congregation.

2.4. In speaking with a victim who was a child, the elders always made sure the innocent parent was present.

2.5. If the judicial committee formed the view that the wrongdoer was not repentant, he would be disfellowshipped from the congregation. The disfellowshipping would be announced to the congregation. Other members of the congregation would then not associate with him.

2.6. I recall that earlier the reasons for the disfellowshipping or reproof would also be announced, but by the end of the 1970's the reasons were no longer announced.

2.7. The elders would also privately inform parents with children when a case of child sexual abuse was established, that they should exercise vigilance with their children and not allow them contact with the abuser, because of the potential danger he posed.

2.8. All members of the congregation were informed from time to time that they were responsible to inform the elders of cases of wrongdoing they were aware of, if the wrongdoer would not come forward himself.

2.9. Jehovah's Witnesses also publish information in magazines and books for the public and congregation, warning of the dangers of child sexual abuse, how it can be identified, how to protect children from it, and how to support and assist victims.

2.10. Since the 1990's, elders have been directed to contact the Branch in cases of child sexual abuse, for advice on their obligation to report to the authorities and on handling the case in the congregation.

3. Any training that you have received, participated in, and/or delivered in relation to responding to allegations, prevention, and/or identification of child sexual abuse prior to and/or during your consideration of the allegations made by BCG in 1989.

3.1. Elders received training at elders' schools, which were held every 2 or 3 years, in handling cases of serious wrongdoing including child sexual abuse.

3.2. Elders also received articles and letters from time to time from the Branch Office which assisted us in dealing with such cases.

3.3. From about the 1990's the elders received specific direction and instruction in handling cases of child sexual abuse. We received this direction and instruction at elders' schools and in letters from the Branch.

3.4. Our magazine articles (Watchtower and Awake) also provided training, as I have stated at paragraph 2.9 above.

4. A summary of your experience, both prior to and since the allegations made by BCG BCG in 1989, of responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Church.

4.1. Apart from BCG case, I have been involved in about 4 judicial committees dealing with allegations of child sexual abuse.

4.2. In 1 of these cases the abuser was repentant and was reproved, lost all privileges and as far as I know was never reappointed as an elder or ministerial servant.

4.3. In 3 of these cases the abuser was unrepentant and was disfellowshipped.

5. The response of the Mareeba Congregation to allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCG in relation to BCH in or around 1989, with specific reference to:

   (a) when, and in what circumstances, you became aware of the alleged abuse;

   (b) any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Mareeba Congregation, had with the Legal and/or Service Departments of Watchtower Australia after you became aware of the alleged abuse;

   (c) any discussions or meetings that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Mareeba Congregation, were involved in, including the substance of those discussions or meetings, with any person about the alleged abuse, including but not limited to any discussions or meetings with:

   i) BCG;

   ii) BCH;

   iii) any other member of the REDACTED family; and/or

   iiii) BCJ

4.1. The case of BCH took place about 26 years ago and I don't recall the exact sequence of events or the details.

4.2. I was in Mareeba Congregation when the REDACTED family moved there, some years before the allegations were raised. My family and I soon became friends with the REDACTED family. We had children of a similar age. I have a daughter a bit younger than BCG and the 2 of them were friends.

4.3. As I recall, BCH came before a judicial committee for carrying on an inappropriate relationship with a married sister in the congregation, and resisting the counsel of the elders and lying to them when confronted with his conduct. The committee consisted of Ron de Rooy, Dino Ali and myself.

4.4. BCH left his family at this time and BCG moved into my home for a few months. She was engaged to BCJ at the time. My daughter was living at home at this time.

4.5. My family and I helped BCI BCG 's mother) and the other 6 REDACTED children find a home to live in, and helped them move in. BCI said she couldn't bear to stay in the family home any more. My family and I often had BCI and the children over for meals and to spend time with us at this time.

4.6. BCG married BCJ a few months later. She asked me to give her away at her wedding. My family and I helped her with her wedding plans and organization. We contributed to the cost of the wedding. We wanted to give her the best we could.

4.7. Around the time she moved into my home, BCG disclosed to me and (I think) Dino Ali that her father BCH had been abusing her sexually when she was a child. Her first disclosure to me was vague but was enough to raise my suspicions. As I recall, BCG revealed more details bit by bit over time, with support from BCJ who I recall was very supportive of her. I and the other elders on the committee did not push BCG but allowed her to reveal the information in her own time.

4.8. The judicial committee informed BCH of the allegations but he strongly denied them at first and was quite verbally aggressive towards BCG At the committee hearing I recall his body language was physically threatening and BCG appeared frightened of him.

4.9. On further questioning by the judicial committee, BCH said he could see her side but it was not his intent to molest her. He said because of his upbringing by an Eastern European father he had become a disciplinarian.

4.10. I recall the judicial committee had discussions with other members of the REDACTED family but I cannot remember the details. One thing I recall telling BCJ was that BCG would need a lot of support.

4.11. We as a Committee informed the Service Department at the Branch that we had disfellowshipped BCH. I cannot remember the details of that or any other correspondence.

4.12. BCH appealed the disfellowshipping. At the appeal committee hearing, when confronted with BCG 's allegations against him, he eventually agreed with them, saying "Yes, yes, I did do it, let's get this over with."

4.13. The appeal committee confirmed the decision to disfellowship BCH

5. The decision of the Elders in the Mareeba Congregation to disfellowship BCH BCH in 1989 and the reasons for that decision.

5.1. The decision to disfellowship BCH was based on his immoral relationship with another woman and leaving his wife and family, and his lying about this to the elders. I recall also that we felt the sexual abuse had been established. The appeal committee confirmed the decision to disfellowship him. Both committees found that he was unrepentant.

6. The decision of the Elders in the Mareeba Congregation to reinstate BCH in 1992 and the reasons for that decision.

6.1. I do not recall as I was not involved in this decision.

7. Your knowledge of any correspondence between the Mareeba Congregation and any other Congregation and/or Watchtower Australia relating to the allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCG

7.1. I cannot recall the details of such correspondence.

8. Your knowledge and/or understanding of any specific systems and/or procedures that the body of elders in the Mareeba Congregation put in place in relation to BCH BCH 's contact with children while he was a member of the Mareeba Congregation.

8.1. The congregation was informed that BCH had been disfellowshipped but not the reasons for this. BCH left Mareeba Congregation very soon after this announcement.

8.2. I do not recall any specific measures put in place at the time.

9. Your involvement, if any with the Queensland Police in relation to their investigation of BCH .

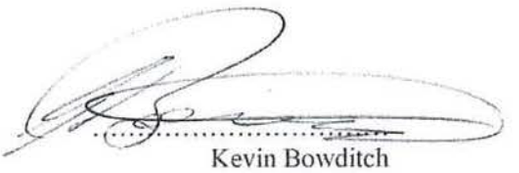
9.1. I gave a statement to the Police and was pleased to do so.



9.2. I recall the police also subpoenaed the congregation records. We had notes concerning BCH 's original committee hearing and provided these to the police.

10. Your involvement, if any, in the criminal proceedings against BCH .

10.1. I gave evidence in court against BCH at 3 trials concerning the sexual abuse of BCG . I recall the other elders involved in the committee hearings gave evidence at the first trial.

10.2. I recall that the first 2 trials were mistrials but at the third trial BCH was found guilty of the abuse and was convicted.

10.3. I was happy to give evidence for the Crown at each trial.

Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse

Statement

Name	BCB
Address	Known to the Royal Commission
Date	10 July 2015

1. This statement made by me accurately sets out the evidence that I am prepared to give to the Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse. The statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

2. Where direct speech is referred to in this statement, it is provided in words or words to the effect of those which were used, to the best of my recollection.

3. My full name is BCB. I was born on REDACTED 1967 and I am 47 years old.

4. I am married to BCC and we have two daughters. My husband owns a REDACTED business and I work for him keeping the books.

5. I was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness when I was 18 years old.

Early involvement with the Jehovah's Witnesses

6. I grew up on a farm near Wickepin in Western Australia. I lived on the farm until I was around 19 with my dad, my mum and my younger brother.

7. In 1977 when I was about 10 years old, my mum became a Jehovah's Witness. Between about 1977 and 1979, my mum used to take me and my brother with her to a couple of Jehovah's Witnesses meetings each week in Corrigin. Corrigin was about an hour's drive away from where we lived.

8. My Dad and I were quite close up until I was about 10 years old. However, when I started attending Jehovah's Witness meetings with my mum, we drifted apart emotionally. My dad wasn't a Jehovah's Witness and never attended Jehovah's Witnesses meetings with us. He never stopped my mum, my brother or me from attending Jehovah's Witnesses meetings.

9. In or around 1979, my mum and dad decided that I should go to high school in Narrogin. Narrogin was about an hour's drive from where we lived. Because I was at school in Narrogin, my mum decided to join the Narrogin Congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. My mum, brother and I attended meetings there every Wednesday, Friday and Sunday.

10. The Sunday and Wednesday meetings of the Narrogin Congregation were held at the Narrogin Kingdom Hall and were attended by the whole congregation. At these meetings, one of the Elders would usually deliver a public talk from the platform based on a reading from The Watchtower magazine or give a talk from the Bible. At these meetings, the Elders would also lead question and answer sessions and give specific training about our door-to-door preaching.

11. The Wednesday meeting was referred to as the Theocratic Ministry School and children were allowed to give talks about the Jehovah's Witnesses beliefs at this meeting. I remember that I sometimes gave talks at these meetings.

12. The Friday meeting was referred to as Book Study and usually took place at someone's house. At this meeting, a small group of families would come together to discuss Biblical scripture.

The Neill Family

13. I first met Bill and Bronwyn Neill and their children at a large Jehovah's Witness party in or around 1979 when I was about 12 years old. Bill and Bronwyn had a daughter named BCE who was two years younger than me. BCE and I became very good friends.

14. In or around 1980, Bill Neill was one of two Elders at the Narrogin Congregation. At the time, I understood that Bill's position as an Elder gave him authority in the Jehovah's Witness community. He used to give talks at the weekly congregation meetings from the platform in the Kingdom Hall. The other Elder in the Narrogin Congregation at the time was Jack Shaylor.

15. I looked up to Bill because he was an Elder. Everybody in the congregation respected and trusted Bill, including my mum.

16. Between about 1980 and 1986 I spent a lot of time with BCE at the Neill family house. I used to stay at BCE house at least once a week. Often, I would attend the Friday night Book Study meeting led by Bill at the Neill's house, and then stay over at the Neill's house until the Sunday meeting at Kingdom Hall. BCE mum, Bronwyn, treated me like a daughter and I felt really close to her. I used to call Bill "Uncle Bill".

17. I recall that the Neill family talked a lot about church issues in the house. They used to discuss their belief in Jehovah. Bill in particular used to explain that all ideas and ways of behaving should be figured out according to what the Bible says. I remember that Bill would discourage BCE and me from forming friendships with other children who were not Jehovah's Witnesses at school.

18. The Neill family always seemed to me to be an affectionate family, which I really liked. For example, everyone always kissed each other on the lips when they said goodnight or goodbye to one another.

19. I remember that Bill and Bronwyn were very open with their kids about sex. Bill would often make sexual jokes in front of me. My mum never talked about anything to do with sex. I had grown up understanding that it was not something that you were supposed to talk about.

Sexual abuse

20. In or around 1982, when I was about 14 years old, I was staying over at BCE house, as I did almost every week. I was having a shower and BCE who I often shared the bathroom with, said "what's that on your tummy?" I looked down and noticed I had a rash on my stomach. Despite me not wanting her to, BCE went and got her mum. I only had my knickers and a singlet on. Bronwyn said she wanted to show Bill. I said "I don't want him to see me". I never let my Dad see me in my knickers so I was really embarrassed. Bill came and looked at my stomach and I remember feeling really uncomfortable about him seeing me like that.

21. Later in 1982, I was again staying over at BCE's house. On this night, as I was saying goodnight to Bill in the hallway of their house, he kissed me goodnight on the lips. Initially, this did not seem unusual to me, but he then stuck his tongue into my mouth. I pulled away and looked at him in shock. He looked at me and gave me a queer smirk-type smile. I found myself half-smiling back. I was so surprised by what he had done that I just froze. I didn't know what else to do.

22. Every time I stayed at the Neill family house after that night until the end of 1986, I had to endure Bill tongue-kissing me goodnight. This often occurred in the hallway just outside BCE bedroom.

23. Apart from putting his tongue in my mouth when I stayed over at BCE 's house, Bill's behaviour towards me did not seem to change. He continued to behave the same way around his family. He continued to lead the Jehovah's Witnesses meetings and to be respected by the rest of the congregation. Since nothing was said about what he was doing to me, I felt like I had to act like nothing was happening.

24. I didn't really know what to do. I was scared and ashamed. I felt that I was somehow responsible for what Bill was doing to me. I felt like I couldn't say anything about it, because I was worried I would get into trouble and that Bill would belt me like he belted his kids when they were naughty.

25. I respected Bill because he was an Elder. He was also BCE dad, and the head of the Neill household. But I had also come to fear him. Because of his position as an Elder, I felt that I couldn't tell anyone about what he was doing to me. I felt that if I told someone, it would upset Bronwyn and BCE as well as the members of the congregation.

26. Every time I thought about bringing what was happening to me out in the open, the consequences were too scary, so I stopped thinking about it. I felt like no one would believe me.

27. A few months later, after Bill had once again tongue-kissed me goodnight at his house, BCE said to me "Did my Dad just kiss you for a long time?". I assumed that BCE must have seen Bill kiss me. I was scared of getting into trouble and so I said to BCE "Don't worry, it's okay". I thought at the time that by not telling BCE what was happening, I was protecting her. I thought that if she found out, it might cause her family to break up. I now wish I had told her.

28. On one occasion in or around 1983, Bill and I were out doing door-to-door preaching together. I remember that at some point, we were alone in Bill's Combi van. Bill said to me "What shall we do about our little problem?". I said to him "I don't know". Bill then asked me "Do you want me to talk to Brother Shaylor about it? You know if I do that though, your mum and dad will find out". I replied "No" to Bill because when he mentioned that my parents would find out, I got scared.

29. I was surprised that Bill suggested speaking to Brother Shaylor. At the time, I already felt guilty about what Bill was doing to me. But when Bill suggested speaking to Brother Shaylor, it removed any doubt in my mind that what was happening between Bill and me was my fault.

30. At the end of 1983, having completed Year 10, I left high school. The following year, I studied a business course and in around April 1984, I got a job REDACTED REDACTED I continued to stay at the Neill house regularly from around this time until the end of 1986.

31. One night, in or around 1984 when I was about 17, I stayed overnight at the Neill family house. While I was showering in the bathroom with the door locked I heard a noise. I looked up and saw Bill perving on me over the top of the shower curtain. I guess he must have been standing on the basin to be able to see. I don't know how, but I assume that Bill had unlocked the bathroom door from the outside. I screamed "Get out!" at Bill and he left the room. Bill and I never spoke of the shower incident.

32. On another night, also in 1984 and not long after the shower incident, I remember that Bill came into BCE room where she and I were making lots of noise and threw me over the bed. He started belting me across my buttocks with his belt. It really stung me and afterwards I had a dark welt across my backside. Apart from the physical pain, I remember feeling humiliated, angry and shocked by what Bill had done.

33. On 26 October 1985, I was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness in a ceremony that involved being submerged in a pool of water. At the baptism, many of the other girls wore modest swimming costumes with t-shirts over the top. I remember that Bill refused to let BCE or I wear t-shirts over the top of our swimming costumes.

34. In or around 1985, when I around 18, I noticed Bill's behaviour towards me became more sexual. He used to say things to me in front of his wife Bronwyn and in front of BCE like "You're a nymphomaniac" and "If you weren't in the truth, you'd be a prostitute". What he said didn't make sense to me because I was a virgin.

35. I recall that on one occasion in or around the end of 1985, Bill tongue-kissed me in his lounge room. As he was doing it, I heard Bronwyn say sharply "Bill!". I remember thinking that we would be trouble but nothing more was said about the incident by Bronwyn or Bill.

36. Up until the summer of 1985-86, I thought Bill's behaviour was just something unpleasant that I had to put up with so I could have a good time with BCE and the rest of the Neill family, who I liked.

37. One day in the summer of 1985-86, while I was in the pantry in the kitchen of the Neill family house, Bill came in, shut the door and started kissing me. As I was older by then, I felt able to try and resist his kissing. Bill yelled at me and said to kiss him. He pushed me up against the wall and told me to pull my dress up so he could see my underwear. Thankfully, someone came into the kitchen at that point and Bill stopped and left me alone in the pantry.

38. In or around October 1986, I left my job REDACTED I was very unhappy at the time because I was feeling pressured by people in the Narrogin Congregation to preach full-time.

39. After I left my job REDACTED, I moved in to the Neill's house for a couple of months, while I was looking for a new job in Narrogin. BCE was still living at home when I moved in with the Neill family.

40. Bill continued to harass me while I lived at the Neill house. At the same time, he remained a respected Elder in the Congregation. I became really resentful of him. I stopped referring to him as "Uncle Bill" and instead referred to him as "Bill". Looking back, I think this was my way of rebelling against him.

41. One day, at the end of 1986 when I was 19, I had been having a shower in the family bathroom at the Neill's house. Although the rule in the Neill house was not to lock the bathroom door, I used to lock the door because I wanted my privacy. That day, I had just stepped out of the shower and was naked when the door suddenly opened and Bill walked in. I don't know how Bill unlocked the door. I guess that he may have unlocked it with a knife, or even his finger nail. I know that Bill didn't walk in by accident because of the way he quickly opened the door, closed it again behind him, and stood against it, trapping me inside.

42. Bill then told me "Sit on the floor and open your legs". I didn't want to do what he was asking but his manner was very threatening. I felt humiliated and scared. Bill then started fondling me and put his finger in my vagina. He then told me to stand up and he proceeded to perform oral sex on me. I felt disgusted and uncomfortable. I knew that sex was something that people were meant to enjoy and I remember thinking that there must be something wrong with me because I didn't like what was happening.

43. The next day I was lying in bed in my room feeling sick when Bill came into the room. He said to me "Did you like it?". I assumed he was referring to the bathroom incident. Pointing at his crotch he said to me "It's better with this in". I asked him to leave and he did. Once he had left the room, I got up, packed my bags, and went home to my parents' farm without saying goodbye to BCE

44. In or around early 1987, I remember telling BCE that I had been seeing a couple of boys. Not long after I told her that, BCE told me that Bill wanted to talk to me about my relationship with boys. She told me to meet Bill at the Neill family house. Even though the meeting was at his house, I understood that I was being asked to see Bill in his capacity as an Elder and that I had to do as I was told. I would never have chosen to speak to Bill about my relationships with boys otherwise.

45. When I got to his house, Bill asked me to wait in BCE 's room. He came into the room and asked me: "Can you show me your boobs?". Although I had come to expect this behaviour from Bill, I remember feeling shocked that he was asking me this. I remember that I let him look down my top. I don't know why I did what he asked. Looking back, I feel as though he could control me. Bill then said to me something like: "Can you make yourself orgasm?". I said "Yes" and he replied to me "I thought so, you dirty bitch."

46. Bill was an Elder for as long as I knew him. I wasn't able to see at the time, but everything he did to me was in complete disregard of all the Jehovah's Witness rules, some of which he preached, about sex and association between Brothers and Sisters.

Disclosure of the abuse

47. In 1989, I told my now husband, BCC that Bill used to kiss me. I dreaded telling him and I couldn't bring myself to tell him any more detail about what happened than this. When I told him, he started asking me questions about what exactly had happened and I said to him "Don't worry, it's all over now". I didn't want to say anything more because I was scared that BCC would tell someone.

48. Later, in or around 1991, a Jehovah's Witness acquaintance of mine, BCF told me that she had been abused by her uncle and that she had tried to commit suicide. I told her what happened to me but I didn't mention any names. Somehow she guessed that I was talking about Bill. I freaked out and asked her not to tell anyone.

Response of the Jehovah's Witnesses to the abuse

49. I guess that BCF did tell others in the congregation as, a week or so later, a young Elder from the congregation called Max Horley came to speak to me. Initially, I had no idea why he had come to see me, but he eventually revealed that he had come to talk to me about Bill and me. When he said this, I burst into tears.

50. I told Max about most of what Bill had done, but I couldn't mention the final bathroom incident when Bill had had oral sex with me. I was so ashamed. Max was very kind and supportive. He told me that what had happened was not my fault and that I shouldn't blame myself.

51. Soon after, Max arranged a meeting with Bill, BCC and me at my house. I don't remember anyone explaining the purpose of the meeting to me. At that meeting, Max said to me "I believe Bill asked you if you wanted to see his penis, and you said no". I assumed that he was referring to the incident in the bedroom the morning after Bill had oral sex with me in the bathroom, even though I had not told him about this incident myself. Bill looked at me and said "Don't you think I was joking?" and I said "I don't know". I didn't understand why someone would joke about that sort of thing. Nobody at the meeting said anything about Bill's comment. I still don't understand why no one at the meeting told Bill that you shouldn't joke about those sorts of things.

52. I did not talk about the incident in the bathroom at the first meeting. I didn't feel comfortable talking while Bill was in the room.

53. After that first meeting, I felt like there was a lot of stuff I had been unable to say in front of Bill. I decided to go to Max's house after the meeting to clarify things. As a result of our conversation at his house, Max organised a second meeting at my house.

54. The second meeting was attended by Max Horley, Doug Jackson, Bill, my husband BCC and me. Doug Jackson was the Circuit Overseer for the Narrogin Congregation. Max told me this meeting was a "Committee Meeting". I was not aware at the time what the purpose of the meeting was, or why Doug Jackson was attending.

55. During the Committee Meeting, Bill was defensive. He said that I used to wear revealing clothing. I remember that Doug Jackson made it quite clear to both of us that the Church has never allowed the victim's clothing as an excuse.

56. Throughout the meeting, Bill looked at me defiantly. I felt like he was challenging me to tell the full story of what he had done. I felt uncomfortable and could not bring myself to tell the Elders everything that had happened. I felt like I was still Bill's victim. I was still so scared of saying anything that would get me or Bill into trouble.

57. I remember that at one point in the meeting, Max said to me "is there anything else you wish to tell us?". I remember looking across the room at Bill and saying "no". It was already very hard to talk about sex in a room full of men. It was especially hard to talk about what Bill had done to me while he was sitting there in front of me. I didn't feel like it was a safe environment and I was scared of what the consequences would be if I told the whole truth. Perhaps if a Sister who I was comfortable with had been there too, it might have been easier.

58. At the end of the meeting, the Elders asked Bill to say something to me, so he said "I'm sorry". I took that to mean that he was sorry for everything that had happened, although his demeanour was not in any way remorseful and I could tell that he wasn't sorry. Nobody explained to me what the outcome of the meeting was or if anything would happen to Bill as a result of what I had reported.

59. After the meeting, Doug Jackson gave me a magazine article that had been published by the Watchtower a few years before. He encouraged me to read through it. The article was about child sexual abuse. At the time, I don't think I had thought of what had happened to me as child sexual abuse, because Bill hadn't had sex with me. But reading that article made me realise that what happened to me was child sexual abuse.

60. I don't remember discussing contacting the police with anybody at any time either before or after the Committee Meeting.

61. Not long after the Committee Meeting, Bronwyn Neill rang me and asked me about my conversation with BCF I said to Bronwyn BCF told me that she had been abused by her uncle and I told BCF what had happened to me". Bronwyn said to me "Bill didn't abuse you". I got scared so I said to Bronwyn "I didn't actually say that". What I told Bronwyn was true. I had never actually used the word "abuse" when I spoke to BCF or during my discussions with Elders as I hadn't understood at the time that I had been abused.

62. As soon as I got off the phone to Bronwyn, I rang Max Horley to tell him about what Bronwyn had said to me. He told me that he'd sort it out. Later that day, Max rang me back and said to me BCB the Neills have asked that you not tell any more people about Bill out of respect for the family". I respected Max and did as I was told. I didn't tell anyone else about what had happened to me, not even my best friend at the time. Thinking back, I now see that I was being asked to respect the man who had done those things to me, but nobody was offering me any respect or proper support.

63. A few weeks after the Committee Meeting, the Elders announced to the congregation that Bill had stepped down as an Elder. I was sitting in the congregation at the time. The Elders did not announce to the congregation why Bill was standing down. Although I understood the reasons for privacy, I have since felt that people in the congregation should have been warned about someone like Bill.

64. After the Committee Meeting, I don't recall being offered any support by Doug Jackson or Max Horley, though it's possible that they may have said something to me. Overall however, I remember that I didn't feel supported. No one in the congregation talked to me about what had happened to me, and Bill's wife, Bronwyn, ignored me for some time. This was especially hard because I loved Bronwyn like a mother.

Life after reporting the abuse

65. Even though I had reported what Bill had done, I was still expected to attend Book Study meetings that were being held at the Neill's house. I continued to see Bill several times a week at congregational meetings and at annual district conventions. Everything just seemed to carry on as normal, but I felt physically sick every time I saw Bill.

66. I continued to attend the Narrogin Congregation for three more years, and continued to see Bill at meetings during this period. In 1994, I moved out of the area and started attending a different Jehovah's Witnesses congregation.

67. I understand that Bill has since died, although I don't know when.

68. I still consider myself to be a Jehovah's Witness, and until very recently, attended meetings at the REDACTED Congregation in Western Australia.

Reporting to the Royal Commission

69. In or around December 2012, I provided a written statement to two Elders in the REDACTED Congregation. Their names are Joe Bello and David Wood. The statement summarised Bill's sexual abuse of me. I provided Joe and David with my statement as I thought that others might have also been abused by Bill and that my statement might be able to help to support their cases.

70. In or around July 2014, Joe Bello came to visit BCC and me at my house on an unrelated matter. During this visit, I raised the subject of Bill's sexual abuse of me and told Joe that I was considering reporting my story to the Royal Commission.

71. Around the same time, Joe Bello rang and had a conversation with BCC on the phone. During the conversation, Joe said to BCC "You should ask BCB if she really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud". When BCC told me what Joe had said, I felt upset. It was not me that gave Jehovah a bad name, it was Bill.

72. For some time after the visit from Joe Bello, I was quite upset. My mother encouraged me to write down my feelings, so I wrote a note recording my feelings at the time about Bill's sexual abuse of me, the response of the Elders at Narrogin congregation, the response of the Elders at the REDACTED Congregation and my reasons for reporting my story to the Royal Commission. Some time after, my mother handed this note to David Wood, one of the Elders in the REDACTED Congregation. The handwritten note is at WAT.0001.002.0497.

73. In around September 2014, I contacted the Royal Commission and reported my story. I have huge feelings of guilt about coming forward with my story. I feel as though I am betraying the Jehovah's Witnesses and bringing reproach onto them. When I speak to officers at the Royal Commission, my chest gets tight, I have heart palpitations, and I have difficulty breathing because of my anxiety about the betrayal.

74. Since reporting my story to the Royal Commission, I have stopped attending meetings at REDACTED Congregation. I am sad about this, because it means that I no longer see a lot of my friends from the congregation. Telling my story to the Royal Commission has brought up a lot of feelings of anger in relation to what Bill did to me, and the way I have been treated by the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Impact of the abuse

75. I've spent too many years suffering over this whole situation. It has held me back from living a normal life and I really want to move on.

76. The abuse definitely changed who I was. It destroyed my confidence and my self-esteem. Even though the sexual abuse stopped when I was 19, I have continued to feel like Bill's victim well into my adult life.

77. I continued to keep Bill's sexual abuse of me a secret for a long time. Over the years of our marriage I have told BCC more detail of what happened with Bill. It wasn't until just before my nervous breakdown 10 years ago that I finally confided fully in some of my friends. Once I started talking about what happened, it was like opening a can of worms, and I became very ill. I was lucky to get help from a wonderful psychiatrist.

78. I've had a lot of therapy to address what Bill did to me, but I still have trouble feeling a sense of closure about what happened. I still feel that Bill was never made to face any consequences for what he did to me.

79. I feel like Bill's position as an Elder contributed to his power over me. I now think that I was brainwashed into thinking that speaking to people outside the church, or to the "worldly" people, would bring reproach upon Jehovah's name. I think that had I been allowed to speak to other non-Jehovah's Witness children at school, maybe someone might have reported what happened to me and I wouldn't have become the victim that I feel I am now.

80. As Bill is now dead, I don't have to worry about seeing him at Jehovah's Witnesses conventions anymore. I still struggle with my thoughts and feelings about the abuse, but I have an amazing group of "spiritual" sisters and friends, as well as my lovely husband BCC and my two beautiful daughters.

81. I would like to see a number of things change in the way that the Jehovah's Witnesses deal with child sexual abuse. First of all, I would like the Jehovah's Witnesses to take allegations of child abuse more seriously and report them to the police.

82. I also think that those victims that are brave enough to report to Elders should be properly supported and protected. I definitely did not feel protected when I disclosed my abuse to Max Horley and Doug Jackson in 1991. I found the experience of reporting my abuse to a room full of men, including the man who had abused me, very distressing.

83. I have never been offered any compensation by the Jehovah's Witnesses for what happened to me. I have never made any claim for compensation because I didn't think that I would be entitled to any. I am worried about what others will think of me asking for compensation. I know that many people have been through worse suffering than me in their lives. I don't want more than I am entitled to. I only want to be treated fairly as a victim of abuse that was perpetrated by a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses. I just want fair and just compensation for what Bill did.

STATEMENT OF ALLAN PENCHEFF

REDACTED

D.O.B: 13/09/1953

1. An overview of your involvement with the Jehovah's Witnesses Church, including but not limited to an overview of:

   a. the congregations you have attended;

   b. any roles you have held within the Church; and

   c. your role as an elder in the Loganholme Congregation.

1.1. I have been one of Jehovah's Witnesses for the past 41 years.

1.2. During that time I have been a member of the following congregations: Newtown Sydney, Marrickville Sydney, Woodridge Brisbane, Loganholme Brisbane, Coorparoo Brisbane, Manly Brisbane.

1.3. During that time I have served as a publisher, ministerial servant and an elder.

1.4. In the Loganholme Congregation I served as an elder which involved sharing the general oversight of the congregation.

2. Your knowledge and understanding of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church between 1992 and 2004 to:

   a. respond to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse made within the Church; and

   b. prevent child sexual abuse within the Church; and

   c. identify child sexual abuse within the Church;

including but not limited to, your understanding of those systems, policies and procedures as they related to your role as an elder in the Church.

Allan Pencheff

2.1. During the period between 1992 and 2004, if an allegation of child sexual abuse came to the attention of the elders, the procedure was to contact the Australia Branch Office in Sydney to make them aware of it.

2.2. The elders then would form a judicial committee of 3 elders to meet with accused and the accusers, to determine the validity of the allegations. In the event that the allegations were substantiated, and the perpetrator had been deceptive or unrepentant about what he had done, he would be disfellowshipped from the congregation to protect the members of the congregation from them. The congregation was notified that the perpetrator had been disfellowshipped, but not of the grounds for disfellowshipping. If the perpetrator was found to be repentant, he would lose all privileges (for example be removed as an elder or ministerial servant), and be reproved.

2.3. To prevent child abuse, perpetrators would be disfellowshipped from the congregation and members of the congregation who may come into contact with the perpetrator would be discreetly warned by the elders about him.

2.4. Our organisation also published articles in our magazines the Watchtower and Awake, outlining steps that parents could take to prevent their children becoming victims of child sexual abuse.

3. Any training that you have received, participated in, and/or delivered between 1992 and 2004 in relation to responding to allegations, prevention, and/or identification of child sexual abuse.

3.1. Our organisation provides training for elders annually on our role as elders including handling child sexual abuse cases in line with the above. In the period 1992 to 2004 I attended several training courses that clearly outlined what to do when child sexual abuse allegations are made.

3.2. The Branch Office also provided letters on handling cases of child sexual abuse from time to time.

3.3. As elders we investigate every allegation of child sexual abuse. We make every effort to protect our children from such. We abhor the sexual abuse of children and we will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts from the consequences of their actions.

4. A summary of your experience of responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Church.

4.1. To the best of my recollection I only have dealt with a couple of these cases as they are a very rare event amongst Jehovah's Witnesses. In each case the procedure outlined in 2. above was followed.

5. The response of the Loganholme Congregation to criminal proceedings against BCH BCH between about 2001 and 2004 in relation to allegations of child sexual abuse made by BCG at the Mareeba Congregation in 1989, with specific reference to:

a. when, and in what circumstances, you became aware of the alleged abuse and the related criminal proceedings;

b. any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Loganholme Congregation, had with the Legal and/or Service Departments of Watchtower Australia after you became aware of the alleged abuse and the related criminal proceedings;

c. any discussion(s) or meeting(s) that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Loganholme Congregation, were involved in, including the substance of those discussions or meetings, with any person about the alleged abuse and related criminal proceedings, including but not limited to any discussions or meetings with:

i) BCG

ii) BCH and/or

iii) any other member of the REDACTE family; and

d. any correspondence, including the substance of that correspondence, that you, alone and/or together with any other member of the Loganholme Congregation, had with any other Jehovah's Witness Congregation and/or the Watchtower Australia relating to the allegation of child sexual abuse made by BCG

5.1. I became aware of the allegations being made against BCH at the time that the victims were taking legal action. I can't recall exactly where that information came from as it was a long time ago.

Allan Pencheff
10 July 2015

5.2. I had a conversation with the Branch Office about what was taking place and what steps needed to be taken to protect the members of our congregation from any danger they may be in.

5.3. The body of elders in Loganholme Congregation then proceeded as outlined above at 2.

5.4. I have never met or spoken with BCG .

5.5. The body of elders of Loganholme Congregation appointed a judicial committee, of which I was a member. We met with BCH and discussed the allegations being made against him. It became apparent to us that he was being deceptive, as he kept changing his story. As a result the judicial committee decided that he should be disfellowshipped for lying. This was prior to the court case being finalised.

5.6. The only other member of the REDACTED family that I have spoken with about this matter was REDACTED his second wife, at the time. She was not the mother of the daughters making the accusations. She said that she felt that the allegations were false.

5.7. I don't recall any correspondence regarding this matter apart from sending the Branch a report of the decision to disfellowship BCH . I had spoken with the Branch Office about the allegations, and they had advised to proceed as outlined above at 2.

6. Your recollection of BCH attendance at and membership of the Loganholme congregation until his disfellowshipping in 2003, including but not limited to:
   a. The period of his membership in the congregation;
   b. His role within the congregation; and
   c. Any privileges or restrictions applied to him by the Loganholme Congregation;
   d. Any specific systems and/or procedures that the body of elders of the Loganholme congregation put in place in relation to his contact with children.

6.1. I cannot remember exactly how long BCH was a member of the Loganholme Congregation but it was several years.

6.2. I don't recall if BCH had any position of responsibility in the congregation.

6.3. When BCH first arrived he was restricted from answering at our meetings and giving any talks from the platform. After about a year these restrictions were lifted.

Allan Pencheff
10 July 2015

6.4. As far as I recall we were not aware of any reason to restrict his contact with children when he arrived. However after he was disfellowshipped no one in the congregation would have had any contact with BCH, apart from his wife.

7. The decision of the Elders in the Loganholme Congregation to disfellowship BCH BCH in 2003 and the reasons for that decision.

7.1. We met with BCH and discussed the allegations being made against him. It became apparent that he was being deceptive as he kept changing his story. As a result he was disfellowshipped for lying prior to the court case being finalised.

Royal Commission request for statement

I would at the outset like to inform you that my memory is fading regarding events that happened 22 years ago. Please excuse any vague recollections. I have made no efforts to engage anyone to jog my memory as this would be awkward for myself and them. Also I have not been a member of the Church since 1993/4. The procedures and positions mentioned in my answers may not be the same today

Answers to questions of matters listed in your request.

1a Congregation attended?

Mt. Albert congregation NZ

Glen Eden congregation NZ

Loganholme congregation QLD Aust.

Beenleigh East congregation QLD Aust.

1b All roles held in church?

Congregation Member One who is viewed as a baptised servant of God's name Jehovah through the name of his son Jesus Christ. One who engages in Evangelising work to the extent his family or other commitments allow.

Regular Pioneer One who, due to circumstances, is able to devote his/her full time to the preaching activity.

Ministerial Servant A member of the congregation who assists the Elders in the functional duties of the congregation. These are men who have shown they have a desire to further the cause of God Kingdom on earth by bible study and active preaching of Gods kingdom.

Congregation Elder A Ministerial Servant who qualifies by meeting the scriptural requirements to be considered an Older man in a spiritual sense. Reflecting God's Love and displaying the attributes of Knowledge, Wisdom and Understanding were essential to be considered an Elder. He works as part of the body of Elders. He is appointed by the Watchtower through the recommendations of the rest of the body and the travelling appointed Representative of the Watchtower called the Circuit overseer.

Congregation Overseer (Formerly called a Congregation Servant and then changed to Coordinater) A Servant to Organize a Body of Appointed Elders who bring their contributions together to form a coherent or efficient congregation. This involved Chairing Elders Meetings and assigning duties with the agreement of the whole body. Such duties as forming Committees to handle Judicial matters to keep the congregation clean and irreprehensible. Duties of the body of Elders also include teaching at congregation meetings and dispensing directions given by the Watch Tower Worldwide Governing Body.

Assembly Overseer (Involves organising different department overseers to work together in sequence or in time with one another in order to facilitate the smooth running of the assembly. For example: The cleaning department organises his volunteers for an early arrival so as to assist the Food Service Department. Auditing and Attendance Departments Etc.

Logan City Overseer A rather flattering title for someone to Coordinate the annual Yellow pages and phone listings. From memory there were 3 congregations in Logan City. A position of which I would be surprised if it still exists due to the digital age we live in.

All of the above voluntary positions did not receive any payments or stipends from the Watchtower Society. Apart from the initial stage of being a baptised member, all the other positions are appointed by the Watchtower Society through the recommendations of their representative called the Circuit Overseer. The Circuit Overseer, a direct representative of the Watchtower, travelled to congregations within his designated circuit to see that the congregations were fulfilling their spiritual roles and functioning according to the directions from God's Organisation.

1c My role in the Beenleigh East congregation?

Congregation Overseer (Formerly called a Congregation Servant and then changed to Coordinater) A Servant to Organize a Body of Appointed Elders who bring their contributions together to form a coherent or efficient congregation. This involved Chairing Elders Meetings and assigning duties with the agreement of the whole body. Such duties as forming Committees to handle Judicial matters to keep the congregation clean and irreprehensible. Duties of the body of Elders also include teaching at congregation meetings and dispensing directions given by the Watch Tower Worldwide Governing Body.

2a Response to allegation or complaints?

If after investigations the allegations prove to founded, the first response of the body of elders would be to the condition and welfare of the victim/s, making sure they were cared for during their traumatic ordeal. After that, a committee of three elders would be formed immediatly to meet with the offender to render whatever discipline was needed according to Scriptural Laws. This would include disfellowshipping and in the case of a violation against the Law of the land, the various authorities would be notified. (Romans Chapter 13)

2b

Child sexual abuse is considered abhorrent to the congregation. Zero tolerance is applied to this sin. As a result of this stance, all members of the congregation would be vigilant to any hint of this activity and would report their suspicions to a member of the Body of elders for further examination. If an incident of such gravity like this was to occur, the congregation would be given a speech at the first available opportunity to make them aware of this particular serious sin. Without naming names of the offender or the victim, the congregation would be encouraged to see the need to keep the congregation clean remembering they represent the name of the Holy Sovereign God Jehovah. (1 Peter 1:16)

3 Any training received in relation to child abuse?

As I recall, no specific training was given in regards to child abuse. This was not endemic within the JW's church, as in some religious Institutions. In fact this is the only case I ever came across in the 25 years with the church. The only training that I can recall was the general overall scriptural references that were applied to any serious violations to Gods law which would also include the Laws of the land that do not contradict God's Law. (In Australia the laws of the land very rarely differ from God's Law. But this not the case of some other countries.)

4. A summary of my overall experience re BCH ?

Most of the answers to this question are covered in the next few questions that are asked. My overall experience was one of disgust for the individual. In the letter for this request, 'You' (The Commission) stated that I was involved in at least two requests by BCH for reinstatement. Well I am quite sure that I personally was only involved in 'One' request by BCH for reinstatement.

(NB) There were one or two other Elders of the body who seemed to be very familiar with the case, which leads me think there may have been an earlier request by BCH before I was sent to the Beenleigh East congregation in the early 1990's. I am unable to recall the name/s of these one or two protagonist/s, but I am sure they were existing member/s of the body of elders prior to my moving to Beenleigh East congregation. I use the term 'Protagonist' not to denigrate them but to indicate they took the lead in the discussion.

I also seem to recall that after he was denied reinstatement by our Beenleigh East congregation, he moved to another congregation to request reinstatement. I do not know the outcome of that request. I may have exited the church by then.

5a. Relationship with BCH prior to the request for reinstatement that I was involved with?

I had never heard of him.

5b When did I become aware of his request for reinstatement?

An elders meeting was called by the above mentioned protagonist/s (NB) to consider a request for reinstatement. As I was unfamiliar with the situation, I must confess I took a back seat in the proceedings.

5c My understanding of reasons for his disfellowshipping?

At the above mentioned Elders meeting it was revealed by the protagonist/s (NB) that he was expelled from the Mareeba congregation for his abusing his two daughters. At the meeting my only input was to ask about the welfare of his two daughters. In view of the statement that the mother his daughters was aware of the wrongdoing at the time of the abuse. This would unlikely make her a fit person to care for them. Also mentioned at this Elders meeting, was that BCH was sent to prison for his actions. Therefore the question arose, "In whose care had the daughters been placed?" This was my concern.

5d Specific considerations made for his reinstatement?

Normal procedure was to write to the congregation of his disfellowshipping to find out first any details we should consider regarding his request. The Beenleigh Elders needed to determine that he was truly repentant and had stopped the activity that caused him to be removed. Also if he had fulfilled any reparations necessary for the wrongdoing he committed. He would also had to have proven that he was now a person of good character, fit to be called a Witness of Jehovah.

5e Any correspondence with Watchtower?

Not that I can recall. If other elders in the Body of Elders had correspondence with them, then I was not aware.

5f Any correspondence with any other congregation?

Upon receiving BCH 's request, there would have been a letter sent by the Beenleigh East Body of Elders to the Mareeba Body of Elders to determine the reason for his removal and any relevant matters regarding things we need to take notice of. I do not recall the reply from the Mareeba Body of Elders. I have no copies of any correspondence. All paperwork I had accrued over the years with the church were voluntarily handed back when I exited the church.

6a BCH 's period of membership in Beenleigh East congregation?

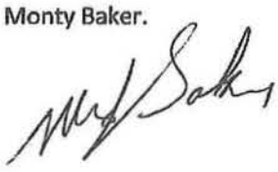
He was never a member of the Beenleigh East congregation. I do recall possibly seeing him sitting during a meeting, at the rear of the congregation meeting hall. This was the usual requirement for a disfellowshipped person. They are required to have arrive at the very commencement of the program, and then to leave immediately at the conclusion of the program, having no interaction at all with the members of the congregation.

6b 6c 6d Role?

No role at all.(See 6a)

I feel that the questions above may apply to any future requests for reinstatement that BCH may have made to another congregation after my time as a Jehovah's Witness.

Yours Faithfully



Monty Baker.

I feel that the questions above may apply to any future requests for reinstatement that BCH may have made to another congregation after my time as a Jehovah's Witness.

Due to my disfellowshipped status with JW's, I have had no contact with anyone in the organisation regarding this case or any other matter.

Yours Faithfully

Monty Baker.

Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse - Case Study 29

Statement of Monica Applewhite, Ph.D.
Expert Consultant in the Field of Prevention and Response to Child Sexual Abuse by Religious Organizations

INTRODUCTION

1. I have been asked by the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia to provide my opinion in relation to matters raised by the Royal Commission's Terms of Reference dated January 25, 2013. In particular, I have been asked to consider issues 3 and 4 of Case Study 29 as set out in a letter of instruction dated July 7, 2015, from Milton Bray & Associates, solicitors for Watchtower and Bible Tract Society of Australia. A copy of the letter of instruction is attached and marked "MA 1".

Qualifications

2. My qualifications include my academic background and years of experience in the field of preventing and responding to sexual abuse in organizations. I have a Bachelor's degree in Social Work, a Master's of Science in Social Work, and a Ph.D. in Clinical Social Work. I have extensive experience working directly with sexual offenders who have perpetrated abuse in organizations, as well as 22 years of conducting root cause analysis of such cases for the purpose of determining the methods used by sexual offenders to access children within churches, schools and other organizations. I have worked directly with more than 300 organizations that serve children, youths and vulnerable adults in the United States, Canada, Italy, Ireland, Poland, the Philippines, Australia, and New Zealand.

3. Throughout my experience working with organizations, I have focused on sexual offending against children that occurs within and around religious organizations. My experience includes working directly with the Episcopal and Anglican Church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the United Methodist Church, the American Rabbinical Society, the Salvation Army, and the Roman Catholic Church.

4. On three separate occasions in the United States, and on one occasion in the United Kingdom, I have been asked by Jehovah's Witnesses to review civil liability cases and subsequently to provide testimony regarding my opinions in those cases. In that capacity, it has been necessary for me to become knowledgeable about the beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses with respect to sexual abuse allegations and prevention, as well as to develop a broad understanding of the religious organization's structure and governance as they relate to sexual abuse. I have not worked with Jehovah's Witnesses or any corporation used by them to develop published materials, policy, or procedures to prevent or respond to child sexual abuse or exploitation.

5. My primary work focus continues to be education and consulting work with organizations to prevent and respond to child sexual abuse; a comprehensive listing of my consulting client relationships is appended to this document.

Duty to the Royal Commission (Commission)

6. I understand that my overriding duty is to assist the Commission impartially on matters relevant to my area of expertise. I also understand that this duty overrides any obligation to those who have retained or instructed me.

7. I confirm that I understand my duty to the Commission, that I have complied with this duty, and will continue to comply with it. I further confirm that I am not an advocate for any party.

8. I have been provided with "Practice Note CM 7, Expert Witnesses in proceedings in the Federal Court of Australia" which sets out Guidelines for expert witnesses in that court. I have considered all the matters contained in these guidelines when formulating the opinions set out in my statement and acknowledge that my opinions are based on my expertise as set out above.

Background Information regarding the Religious Structure and Practices of Jehovah's Witnesses

9. The religion known as Jehovah's Witnesses is overseen by a "Governing Body" made up of elders who reside in Brooklyn, New York. Congregations are organized into "circuits". Circuits of certain geographical areas are organized into "Branches." A Branch is the largest territorial arrangement and each Branch is overseen by a separate "Branch Committee." Circuit Overseers are also called "Traveling Overseers." Traveling Overseers visit congregations to provide spiritual encouragement to congregations and to give spiritual help and support to congregation "Elders" who comprise a "Body of Elders" that is responsible for oversight of its respective local congregation. Potential elders are recommended by existing elders within the congregation and appointed by Circuit Overseers.

10. Jehovah's Witnesses do not require elders to make any particular pledge or promise of obedience or loyalty to others within the governing structure of the religious organization. Thus, there is no particular sustained relationship between an elder and a circuit overseer the way there is with a pastor to a bishop in other organizations. Jehovah's Witnesses teach that elders should avoid taking a superior position with reference to other congregation members. Elders are viewed as fellow workers by their fellow elders and by other congregation members.

11. Jehovah's Witnesses rely on scriptures (passages from the Bible) to form their religious beliefs and practices and internal religious governance. This distinguishes them from most other Christian denominations that use the Bible to shape thinking, guide behavior, and teach lessons, but not to directly set the religious beliefs and practices of the organization. Written documents describing the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses often quote specific Biblical references.

12. Jehovah's Witnesses base their religious beliefs and practices on their understanding of Bible scriptures. Their understanding of various scriptures is laid out in publications produced by Jehovah's Witnesses which are made available to all members of each congregation and the public. These publications are distributed worldwide in many languages.

Signature: _____ Witness: _____

13. The religious beliefs and practices for operating individual congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are provided in the publications Shepherd the Flock of God and Organized to do Jehovah's Will (WAT.0003.001.0001 – WAT.0003.001.0143 & WAT.0003.001.0296 – WAT.0003.001.05190). These publications set out the religious governance and procedures followed by elders and other congregation members in individual congregations. Additional information for all congregation members is provided in Our Kingdom Ministry, which is a newsletter, and in The Watchtower and Awake! magazines which are widely published and publically available, as well as in various brochures and online resources. Changes, clarifications and supplemental instructions to elders are provided in Letters to all Bodies of Elders and Letters to all Congregations which are distributed by their respective Branches. These letters, along with the regular publications provide the consistent spiritual direction and internal religious governance that Jehovah's Witnesses strive for throughout the worldwide community of Jehovah's Witnesses.

14. Like the majority of Christian denominations, such as Anglican, Catholic, Lutheran, and others, the meetings for worship of Jehovah's Witnesses are open to the public. Also similar to other Christian organizations, current members, former members (including those who may have been disfellowshipped), and those who have no particular affiliation with the religion may attend meetings for worship.

15. Meetings for worship are generally held in a place of worship called a "Kingdom Hall." All of the meetings for worship are open to the public, there is no collection taken, and congregation members are not required to tithe. Children sit with their families during meetings for worship which are generally held in one big room.

16. Meetings for worship are held twice per week. Unlike many religions where only the spiritual leader speaks during services, ordinary congregation members, including women and children, have the opportunity to give comments during congregation meetings and can volunteer to be assigned a periodic speaking assignment, generally about 5 minutes in length, if they so wish. Thus, many congregation members have the opportunity to speak during congregation meetings for worship; this privilege is not limited to local spiritual leaders.

17. Jehovah's Witnesses may also refer to a congregation member who participates in some form of public ministry as a "publisher." The door to door ministry that is often associated with Jehovah's Witnesses is also called "field ministry" by Jehovah's Witnesses. This practice is patterned after the early Christians who went from "house to house" to share the "good news" of the Bible.

18. Elders are the local spiritual leaders of the congregations, and they offer spiritual guidance to congregation members on their own initiative or to those who ask for such help. They are the only members of the congregation authorized to provide pastoral care, which is meant to provide for the spiritual well-being of all congregation members.

19. Most congregations have multiple elders and they are not considered infallible. They work with one another consultatively and decisions are generally made by a group of elders in each congregation called a "body of elders," rather than by an individual elder.

Signature: _____ Witness: _____

20. Ministerial servants are members of the congregation who provide non-pastoral practical assistance and service to the elders and the congregation. Ministerial servants are not authorized to provide spiritual guidance, counseling or any other pastoral services to members of the congregation.

21. The duties of a ministerial servant may include the stocking and distribution of publications to congregation members, handling the microphones and other sound equipment for congregation meetings, keeping the Kingdom Hall clean and organized, or serving as attendants during congregation meetings. None of the responsibilities of a ministerial servant or elder allow or require that he be alone with children or otherwise separate a child from his or her family.

Issue 3 Case Study 29 Information regarding the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witnesses Church for raising and responding to allegations of or concerns about child sexual abuse within the Church.

In this section, I have been asked to provide information regarding Jehovah's Witnesses' policies and procedures with respect to receiving and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse.

22. Jehovah's Witnesses are taught the beliefs, practices, and values of their faith through Bible-based publications, including The Watchtower and Awake! and online articles and videos. These publications and the website contain information about family life, religious practices, current events, Bible prophecy and Biblical accounts. It is the normal practice of the Jehovah's Witnesses to use these Bible-based publications and Online articles and videos to provide congregation members, and the general public, with Scriptural principles that provide practical guidance for managing and coping with the various situations that arise in life generally, and that specifically confront Jehovah's Witnesses because of their personal religious beliefs or the practice of their faith. It is within these Bible-based publications, online articles and videos, and letters to congregations that Branch offices communicate with individual and families about how to protect children from sexual abuse and what to do if abuse happens. These same Bible-based publications are also used to provide spiritual comfort and encouragement to those who have been abused and to encourage those who have perpetrated abuse to come forward and receive spiritual help from the elders.

23. Beginning in the early 1980's, The Watchtower and Awake! published articles that describe the experiences of survivors of sexual abuse and encouraged individuals who have experienced abuse to disclose to others. As described in the Brief Review of Contemporary Sexual Offence and Child Sexual Abuse Legislation in Australia, this was the same period of time that society at large began studying and publishing information about sexual abuse. One example of the publications of Jehovah's Witnesses that reaches out to victims and survivors can be found in The Watchtower October 1, 1983. An article entitled "Help for Victims of Incest" (WAT.0001.004.0325 – WAT.0001.004.0329) articulates the experiences of victims and the damage that can be done by sexual abuse. The article tells the story of an elder who erred by telling a woman to just forget about the abuse and urges readers to listen and show compassion. After telling elders to be thoughtful, the article also points out that some victims of abuse may need to talk with an experienced professional counselor.

24. Jehovah's Witnesses strive to live by a strict code of moral conduct based on Bible principles. The conduct that is expected of Jehovah's Witnesses is taught at their meetings for worship and described in their Bible-based publications (The Watchtower and Awake! and Online articles). In addition to describing the Christian standards of conduct that all of Jehovah's Witnesses should strive to maintain, these Bible-based publications provide the Scriptural principles on which such standards of conduct are based and reasons why adherence to such standards of conduct benefits individuals and society. For example, current articles published by Jehovah's Witnesses that can be found online teach teens how rules about abstaining from sexual contact are similar to traffic laws in that these may interfere with individual choices, but are designed to keep people safe.

25. Along with other "sins" and transgressions of themselves and others, Jehovah's Witnesses are expected to report known sexual abuse to the body of elders within the congregation. Elders, in turn, are instructed to treat victims with kindness and to follow the established internal ecclesiastical procedures for allegations of child sexual abuse (Shepherd the Flock of God: WAT.0003.001.0001 – WAT.0003.001.0143).

26. Child sexual abuse is regarded as a crime by Jehovah's Witnesses. Elders are instructed to report crimes according to the law and never to discourage anyone from reporting abuse to law enforcement. The following passage is included in Shepherd the Flock of God: (WAT.0003.001.0132 - WAT.0003.001.0133)

> Child Abuse -- Child abuse is a crime. Never suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or other authorities. If you are asked, make it clear that whether to report the matter to the authorities or not is a personal decision for each individual to make and that there are no congregation sanctions for either decision. Elders will not criticize anyone who reports such an allegation to the authorities. If the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so.

27. Bodies of elders have been instructed to follow the mandatory reporting laws of their state or country and to call the Branch Legal Department for legal advice regarding reporting requirements if anyone reports an allegation of sexual abuse to them. The Branch Service Department is also available to provide congregation elders with spiritual advice regarding how to provide spiritual comfort to victims, and internal ecclesiastical procedures that elders should follow to protect children from further abuse by the alleged offender.

    a. The August 28, 2002 letter (WAT.0004.001.0002) to all congregations in Australia stated, "We have long instructed elders to report allegations of child abuse to the authorities where required by law to do so, even where there is only one witness."

    b. The October 1, 2012 "Letter to all bodies of elders, Re: Child abuse" contains the current procedures for elders to follow in cases of child abuse (WAT.0001.004.0066 – WAT.0001.004.0071). This resource contains the following instructions:

> "Some states have child-abuse reporting laws that, depending on the facts, mandate elders to report an accusation to the authorities. Thus, when elders learn of an accusation of child abuse, two elders from their congregation should immediately call the Legal Department for legal advice" and "Regardless of whether the law requires the elders to report an accusation to the authorities, steps need to be taken to protect children. Elders should help the parents of the children involved to understand that they have the primary responsibility for protecting their children. Obviously, such parents will be keenly interested in taking precautions in this regard. Our publications contain helpful information on how parents can protect their children."

28. In addition to following state-mandated reporting, congregation elders have received internal ecclesiastical procedures to follow if a congregation member is accused of committing a serious sin, including child sexual abuse. These procedures require the body of elders to assign two elders to conduct a spiritual investigation of all allegations of child sexual abuse against a congregation member. Based on Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the scriptures, elders are only authorized to take congregational action if there is sufficient scriptural evidence of either two credible witnesses to the same incident of abuse by the alleged offender (or two different persons who witnessed similar incidents of abuse by the alleged offender), or a confession by the alleged offender. If congregational action proceeds, the Circuit Overseer appoints an experienced elder from the circuit to serve as the chairman of the judicial committee. If the elders on the judicial committee find that the individual is repentant for his sin, they will provide the individual with spiritual counsel and reproof to help him avoid the sinful behavior in the future and protect children.

29. If an individual who committed child sexual abuse is found to be repentant, the reproof would also involve an announcement to the congregation that the individual has been reproved by a judicial committee, but the sin for which the individual was reproved would not be mentioned. In the case of other serious sins, depending on the facts and circumstances, the reproof may involve a similar announcement to let the congregation that the individual has been reproved by a judicial committee Announcements to let the congregation know that the individual has been reproved are made during a regularly scheduled congregation meeting.

30. If the individual who was reproved by a congregation judicial committee was in an appointed congregation position such as an elder or ministerial servant, he would automatically be removed (deleted) from that position because he would no longer meet the Scriptural qualifications. When a ministerial servant or elder is deleted from his appointed position, an announcement is made during regularly scheduled congregation meetings to inform them of his deletion, but the reason for his deletion would not be mentioned.

31. If the judicial committee finds that the individual is not repentant for the sinful conduct, he or she may be disfellowshipped (excommunicated) from the congregation. In that case, an announcement would be made to the congregation that the individual is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses, but the nature of the sin for which he was disfellowshipped would not be mentioned.

32. When a judicial committee finds that a congregation member has sinned but is genuinely repentant. The individual is not disfellowshipped. However, such a repentant individual would be reproved and restricted from full participation in meetings for worship. For Jehovah's Witnesses, genuine repentance involves a sincere change in attitude and a heartfelt regret for the wrongs committed. Repeated incidents of sinful conduct may be taken as evidence of a lack of repentance even if the individual professes to be sorry and repentant for his sinful conduct. In the case of multiple instances of sinful conduct, the individual may be disfellowshipped because the repetition of the behavior may be viewed as evidence of a lack of genuine repentance and remorse.

33. Regardless of the outcome, the deliberations of a judicial committee and the information they consider are kept confidential. Like most Christian denominations, Jehovah's Witnesses strive to create a spiritual environment that allows the opportunity for sinners to make an honest disclosure of sinful conduct with the knowledge that he or she can trust that the information divulged to an elder or group of elders will be kept confidential and will not be shared with others.

34. Although "it cannot be said that in every case one who has sexually abused a child can never qualify for privileges of service in the congregation," (Letter to All Bodies of Elders, October 1, 2012) both the publications of Jehovah's Witnesses and letters to All Bodies of Elders have verified on multiple occasions since 1997, that a "known child molester" does not qualify for a responsible positions or "privileges" within the congregation such as being an elder or ministerial servant because he does not have the Scriptural qualifications to serve in those positions. The article, "Let us abhor what is wicked" in The Watchtower, January 1, 1997 (WAT.0001.004.0306 - WAT.0001.004.0309) publically clarified that a former child molester would not qualify for congregational privileges and instructions to bodies of elders in 1997, 2001, and 2002 affirmed that a child molester should not be recommended for an appointed congregation position.

35. Congregation elders keep records of congregation members who have been accused of child sexual abuse, proven or unproven, such records are kept in a confidential congregation file, marked, "Do Not Destroy." Such records are kept indefinitely.

36. In my opinion, the current messages to those who have experienced abuse and the guidelines that have been provided to elders in congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are consistent with, and in some respects better than, the current practices of religious organizations throughout the world. However, because I have not reviewed any specific cases, I am not able to offer opinions regarding whether the implementation of these guidelines have ultimately resulted in law-abiding responses, good practice of child protection, or compassionate care of those who have experienced abuse.

Issue 4 Case Study 29: Information regarding the systems, policies and procedures in place within Jehovah's Witnesses Church and the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia Ltd to prevent child sexual abuse within the Church

In this section I have been asked to provide a summary of the systems in place within Jehovah's Witnesses to prevent sexual abuse within the faith.

37. Jehovah's Witnesses are unique in that they do not offer or sponsor programs that separate children or youths from their families. They have no Sunday school for children, and no non-state schools, camps, or youth ministry programs. Jehovah's Witnesses do not authorize or sponsor programs for children in out-of-home care or programs that involve parents turning the care and custody of their children over to authority figures within the congregation. The pattern and practice of not separating parents and children is distinctive to Jehovah's Witnesses, as children's and youths' programming is quite common in other religious organizations.

38. Central to the rationale for not offering or sponsoring programs that separate children or youths from their families, is the over-riding religious belief and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses that parents have the Scriptural responsibility to teach their own children and that it is not appropriate to "outsource" this responsibility to others. Fathers are expected to be involved in the teaching of the Bible to their own children and, if the father is unavailable to teach the children, the responsibility to teach the children falls to the mother.

39. Because of Jehovah's Witnesses' distinct approach to teaching children, they have not, as an organization, created the child-related volunteer or paid positions that are so common in other religious organizations. There are no rules that require an individual to be involved with children who are outside of the direct care and control of their parents or guardians.

40. Elders and ministerial servants are assigned positions within the organization; they are volunteer positions without pay. Neither elders nor ministerial servants are assigned to work with groups of children by the congregations. There is no such position as children's bible study instructor or youth minister. As such, the responsibilities of elders and ministerial servants within the congregations do not provide a greater level of access to children beyond the natural contact with children that would occur in any religious environment. Neither an elder nor a ministerial servant is a position of special access or trust with children.

41. During the 1960's and 1970's, the publications of Jehovah's Witnesses began to address child physical abuse and violence in the home, with articles such as "Parents can be Cruel," published in 1963 and "Child Abuse – Things you can do about it (Awake! July 22, 1976: WAT.0001.004.0216 – WAT.0001.004.0218). This latter article explains the damage that can be done to children through physical abuse, shaking a young child, screaming at a child or "vocally assaulting" youngsters. It also addresses the concern that over-disciplining can turn into physical abuse and provides scriptural and practical steps to take to overcome a temper. The article suggests that parents recall what it was like to be a child in order to increase empathy and nurturing as well as suggesting "Parents Anonymous" and pro-actively addressing the loneliness and isolation abusive parents often experience.

42. Beginning in the early 1980's, The Watchtower and Awake! also provided families with information to raise awareness of sexual abuse. Articles such as "Incest—the hidden crime," and "Rape at Home" were published in 1981 and 1982. "The New Morality – How will it affect them?" Awake! June 22, 1982 (WAT.0001.004.0223 – WAT.0001.004.0224) described prostitution of children and the distribution of images of child sexual abuse. Contemporary perspectives from psychologists, social workers and psychiatrists who opposed the new morality were set against the "pro-sexual abuse" propaganda of that era that sought to allow children "their sexual rights" and increase acceptance of sexual activities between adults and children. Suzanne Sgroi , a seminal contributor to understanding effects of sexual abuse, was quoted describing negative outcomes for children who experience sexual abuse. Parents were encouraged to maintain open communication with children as well as setting a good example for them with their own behavior.

43. On January 22, 1985, Awake! magazine (WAT.0001.004.0205 – WAT.0001.004.0212) published an issue of the magazine that focused on teaching parents about child sexual abuse and how to prevent and detect potential abuse. Five articles were included with the following:

    a. Child Molesting – Every Mother's Nightmare. (WAT.0001.004.205 – WAT.0001.004.0206) The publication began by describing the prevalence of child sexual abuse: One in 4 girls and 20 to 25 percent of sexual abuse victims are boys. It explained that sexual abuse is more likely to be perpetrated by a known adult or older child, and not by a stranger. It gave examples of sexual offenders who appear to be nice people and uses the example of a minister. David Finkelhor and Gail Sheehy, both of whom are experts in the field, were quoted.

    b. Child Molesting – Who Would do a Thing like That? (WAT.0001.004.206 – WAT.0001.004.0207) This article confronted the myth that abuse is only perpetrated by strangers. It gave examples of abuse by a church leader, an aunt, a physician and a father and addressed the fact that sexual abuse is often not violent, and may be perpetrated by someone the child genuinely cares for and trusts.

    c. Child Molesting – You Can Protect Your Child (WAT.0001.004.0208 – WAT.0001.004.0210). This document read much like an abuse prevention program aimed at parents. The article described the dynamics of sexual abuse and included cautions about creating overly obedient children who do not question what adults ask of them. It urged parents to be active protectors of their children, to keep their children out of dangerous situations such as having a child share a room with an adult or leaving their children in the care of older children during parities or large gathering. Communication between parents and children was emphasized and multiple concrete examples were given to clarify the information. Specific methods for how parents should talk with their children were also provided.

    d. If the Worst Should Happen (WAT.0001.004.0210 – WAT.0001.004.0212). In this article, parents were taught things to watch for that could be warning signs of sexual abuse. They were also taught how to respond if their child were to disclose abuse. The article states that particularly if a close family member has to go to prison, the child needs to be assured that the abuse was not his or her fault.

    e. Response on Child Molesting. This section includes Letters from Readers, including those from readers who experienced sexual abuse and had children who experienced abuse.

44. Throughout the 1990's and 2000's publications of Jehovah's Witnesses have continued to address sexual abuse and give advice to congregation members and the public who have experienced abuse. For example:

Signature: _____ Witness: _____

a. The Awake! magazine's article, "A Time to Heal" (October 8, 1991) (WAT.0001.004.0229 – WAT.0001.004.0233), includes the following section:

> Getting Support. If you are a victim of childhood sexual abuse, do not ride out the storm of returning memories by yourself. It helps to talk out your feelings. (Compare Job 10:1; 32:20.) Some who are extremely distressed may decide to seek the help of a qualified physician, counselor, or mental-health professional. In any case, a trusted friend, a marriage mate, family members, or Christian overseers who will listen with empathy and respect can also be valuable allies.

b. The October 8, 1993 edition of Awake! (WAT.0001.004.0238 – WAT.0001.004.0247) includes an article entitled, "If Your Child Is Abused" that states:

> Parents must therefore make every reasonable effort to protect their children! Many responsible parents choose to seek out professional help for an abused child. Just as you would with a medical doctor, make sure that any such professional will respect your religious views. Help your child rebuild his or her shattered self-esteem through a steady outpouring of parental love.

45. In my opinion, Jehovah's Witnesses were well in advance of other religious organizations in providing educational materials to parents and families. The quality of the materials they provided during the 1980's and 1990's exceeded the standards of care for the time and continue to be more substantial than what many religious organizations offer parents and guardians today.

46. Since 2002, extensive programs of sexual abuse prevention have been initiated by other religious organizations and the standards of care in this respect have developed significantly over the past decade. However, most of the efforts of these religious organizations have naturally focused on prevention within their own programming for children and youths. In my own experience, I have not found examples in Australia of religious organizations that have provided parents, guardians, and the general public with the quality or consistency of information about prevention and response to sexual abuse or about how to support for those who have been abused that Jehovah's Witnesses have provided in their publications.

Other Specific Opinions

47. Regarding the instructions given to bodies of elders to contact the Branch office if there is a report of abuse (October 1, 2012), I offer the following opinion based on my experience. Over the past twenty years, I have observed many instances in which local religious leaders lack the experience and confidence to contact authorities in cases of child sexual abuse. Reporting to police or protective agencies falls so far outside of their ordinary practice of working with people, that they hesitate and often fail to fulfill their reporting duties, at times without even realizing they are mandated reporters. In my experience, I have found that when they are able to contact an objective authority it dramatically increases the likelihood of following established practice and legal requirements instead of judging the individual circumstances and "personalizing" the situation.

Signature: _____ Witness: _____

48. On the whole, I have found that the ability to access professionals in the field who are part of the religious organization to be a valuable resource for local religious leaders who are dealing with disclosures of abuse, as well as dealing with the more nuanced situations in which suspicions are raised, but no disclosure has occurred. It is particularly useful in providing advice to local religious leaders concerning reporting obligations, given the substantial differences among state laws on the subject and the range of circumstances that may be involved. In my experience, many of the mistakes that have been made by religious leaders dealing with an offender who is well-known to the leader could have been avoided if the leader had been advised and encouraged by a more experienced and neutral third party.

49. In my opinion, the best methods to prevent abuse in environments where children are separated from parents are different from those that are effective in an environment where parents maintain control and custody of their children. In the former type of environment, the organization is responsible for selection of personnel, monitoring and supervision, training and decisions to retain staff if problems arise. In the latter type of environment, parents are making decisions about access to their children, supervising the access and determining whether a specific adult should or should not continue to have contact with their child. From my perspective, the best method for preventing sexual abuse in an environment where parents maintain control and custody of their children is to provide quality educational materials directly to parents and family members to help them make educated decisions about allowing access to their children. Jehovah's Witnesses excel in providing such educational materials to parents and family members, and the substance of their materials concerning child abuse is exceptionally clear and helpful.

CASE STUDY 29 - Statement of Geoffrey William Jackson

Name	GEOFFREY WILLIAM JACKSON
Address	124 Columbia Heights Brooklyn, New York United States of America
Occupation	Minister

INTRODUCTION

1. This statement is to supplement my testimony given to the Royal Commission on 14 August 2015 in respect of the following three Scriptural issues, on which I undertook to Justice Peter McClellan AM to make further inquiries:

   a. the use of male judges in the Christian congregation;

   b. a specific reference in material published by Jehovah's Witnesses about the use of secular courts in cases of abuse; and

   c. whether Deuteronomy 22:25-27 is an exception to the Scriptural requirement of "two witnesses".

Issue 1: Use of Male Judges

2. At 15954.29 of the transcript, His Honour asked me whether there was "any biblical impediment to a determination, a judicial determination, being made by a body which includes women..... ?. I responded in part by noting that although women can be involved in this very sensitive area, the role of judges in the congregation lies with men. I then referred to 1 Timothy 3:1 and following a further request by His Honour, I informed His Honour that I would provide further Scriptural references as to the use of male judges in the Christian congregation (T.159555.35). The following exchange then took place:

> Q. We would appreciate it, because one possible modification to meet this issue of the lack of women as judges of allegations brought forward by women against men may be a modification of your process to include women in the judicial determination step. You understand?
> A. I do understand, your Honour, and we will make sure you get those references.

3. My response to His Honour's request is as follows.

Judging in the Old Testament

4. With the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt, Moses, as Jehovah God's representative, became a judge. Moses thereafter appointed "capable men" as chiefs of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens. (Exodus 18:13-26) The nation was organised with male chiefs authorised to handle smaller cases whenever necessary. But anything unusually complicated or difficult, or a matter of national importance, was to be brought to Moses or to the sanctuary before the priests, all of whom were male. (Numbers 3:1-51; Deuteronomy 17:8-12) The judges were not only to render judicial decisions regarding established wrongs but, if alleged offences were reported to them or they otherwise heard about such, they were to "investigate the matter thoroughly" to confirm if the accusation was true.—Deuteronomy 17:2-7.

5. The men selected as judges were to be capable, trustworthy men, fearing Jehovah God and hating dishonest profit. (Exodus 18:21) They were generally family heads or heads of tribes, older men of the city in which they acted as judges. Male Levites, who were set aside by Jehovah God as special instructors in the Law, also served prominently as judges.—Deuteronomy 1:15; 1 Chronicles 23:3, 4; 2 Chronicles 19:8.

Judging in the New Testament

6. On Pentecost 33 C.E., the Mosaic Law ended and spiritual oversight (including judging) of the congregation was entrusted to elders ("overseers"). However, the principles espoused in the Old Testament (Hebrew Scriptures) guided the first-century Christian congregation and served as the context for future practices. Thus, in setting forth the qualifications for elders, the apostle Paul identifies only male members of the congregation as potential elders when he states:

> "This statement is trustworthy: If a man is reaching out to be an overseer, he is desirous of a fine work." (1 Timothy 3:1)

That Paul's use of the terms "man" and "he" were not generalities referring to both men and women is confirmed in verse 2, where he lists being "a husband of one wife" as one of the requirements. And in verse 11 of the same chapter, Paul specifically offers counsel to women.

7. In Paul's letter to Titus, he restates the Scriptural qualification that men serve as elders, notice Titus chapter 1, verses 5 and 6:

> "I left you in Crete so that you would correct the things that were defective and make appointments of elders in city after city, as I instructed you: if there is any man free from accusation, a husband of one wife, having believing children who are not accused of debauchery or rebelliousness."

8. In addition, James chapter 5, verses 14 to 16, says:

> "Is there anyone sick among you? Let him call the elders of the congregation to him, and let them pray over him, applying oil to him in the name of Jehovah. [15] And the prayer of faith will make the sick one well, and Jehovah will raise him up. Also, if he has committed sins, he will be forgiven. [16] Therefore, openly confess your sins to one another and pray for one another, so that you may be healed. A righteous man's supplication has a powerful effect."

9. The sickness referred to in James chapter 5, verse 14 is spiritual, not physical, as can be discerned from the fact that verses 15 and 16 identify prayer and confession as aids in recovery. As indicated in verse 15, this admonition to "call the elders" (male overseers) is not limited to only those who need to confess wrongdoing, since the verse says "if he [the one calling the elders] has committed sins, he will be forgiven." The context indicates that "anyone suffering hardship" who needed assistance beyond what might be obtained through personal effort and prayer is directed by the Scriptures to "call the elders" for help. (James 5:13)

10. Such ones "suffering hardship" would include an alleged victim of child abuse who would stand to gain a measure of spiritual and emotional recovery in knowing that the alleged actions of an abuser would appropriately be looked into by the Christian congregation in accord with Scriptural guidelines.

11. These Scriptural passages and my comments regarding judging matters in the Christian congregation (including allegations of child sexual abuse or any other serious sin), are, of course, looking at things from a spiritual, not a secular, perspective.

12. As I have previously testified, Jehovah's Witnesses do not view this ecclesiastical process as a replacement for any criminal and/or civil inquiry into such conduct.

Issue 2: Use of Secular Courts in Cases of Abuse

13. At T.15986.33-T15990.10 the Commissioner explored with me the position of an elder who "absolutely believed" a victim of abuse, but in a situation where there was insufficient Scriptural evidence for a Judicial Committee to act against the perpetrator due to the lack of corroborating evidence. At T15988.23 the following exchange occurred:

> Q. Yes, but I'm putting to you the proposition that you have one witness who you absolutely believe.
> A. Yes.
>
> Q. What do you do?
> A. Well, for the ultimate protection of that child, I could □ if they feel that child, and other children, are in danger, I can □ well, I would hope that the conscience of the elders would notify the police if the parent is not willing to do that.
>
> Q. So you would hope that the elders would act in that way. Is there any □□
> A. Yes.
> Q. □□ instruction that they are to act in that way?
> A. You know, your Honour, this is not my field. I can't tell you all the sections where we've said that, but that is my understanding, but if that instruction isn't given, that's perhaps something that we need to look at.

14. The book "Keep Yourselves in God's Love," published by Jehovah's Witnesses, has been the basis for study at our congregation meetings worldwide and has been reviewed on a one-on-one basis with all newly baptized Jehovah's Witnesses since 2009. (An extract is found at Tender Bundle 127: WEB.0053.001.0001). The publication has the following comment on page 223:

> "In rare instances, one Christian might commit a serious crime against another—such as rape, assault, murder, or major theft. In such cases, it would not be unchristian to report the matter to the authorities, even though doing so might result in a court case or a criminal trial."

Issue 3: Explanation of Deuteronomy 22:25-27

15. At T15970-15974, Counsel Assisting suggested that the requirement of at least two witnesses in relation to cases of sexual abuse had no proper Scriptural foundation, relying upon references to Deuteronomy 22:25-27 to support this proposition.

16. While these verses might appear to be an exception to the Scriptural requirement that there be at least two witnesses to establish a matter, that is not a correct reading of the passages.

17. Five chapters earlier, at Deuteronomy 17:6, the Mosaic Law clearly states without exception:

> "On the testimony of two witnesses or of three witnesses the one who is to die should be put to death. He must not be put to death on the testimony of one witness."

And in Deuteronomy chapter 19, verse 15, it says:

> "No single witness may convict another for any error or any sin that he may commit. On the testimony of two witnesses or on the testimony of three witnesses the matter should be established."

18. It is important to note that the two contrasting situations in verses 23 to 27 of Deuteronomy chapter 22 do not deal with proving whether the man is guilty in either situation. His guilt is assumed in both instances. In saying that he:

> "happened to meet her in the city and lay down with her"

or he:

> "happened to meet the engaged girl in the field and the man overpowered her and lay down with her".

in both instances, the man had already been proved guilty and worthy of death, this being determined by proper procedure earlier in the judges' inquiry. But the question at this point before the judges (having established that improper sexual relations had occurred between the man and the woman) was whether the engaged woman had been guilty of immorality or was a victim of rape. This is a different issue, although related, to establishing the man's guilt.

19. The elders had guidance in determining if any guilt should be charged to her. In the second instance (verse 27), the woman would not die, > "for he happened to meet her in the field, and the engaged girl screamed, but there was no one to rescue her".

Such a cry for help might be admitted by her assailant, which would confirm her claimed innocence. On the other hand, if the assailant denied that the woman had screamed for help, the judges would not have a basis for refusing her claim, since, in effect, it would be her word against his and there was no one nearby either to rescue her or to serve as a witness one way or the other as to her scream for help. Thus, the judges would not have a basis for taking any action against her because any claim contrary to her professed innocence could not be established by two or more witnesses. The woman, as claimed, would be judged innocent. In that case (verses 25 and 26),

> "the man who lay down with her is to die by himself, and you must do nothing to the girl."

This is because (verses 26 and 27):

> "[t]he girl has not committed a sin deserving of death. This case is the same as when a man attacks his fellow man and murders him. For he happened to meet her in the field, and the engaged girl screamed, but there was no one to rescue her."

20. So it is not as though the woman at this point in the inquiry is seeking to prove the man's guilt and finds herself as the only witness against him. However, it is of interest that the raping of a woman is said to be "the same as when a man attacks his fellow man and murders him." (Deuteronomy 22:26) Thus, the crime of rape is made parallel to murder, equated not only as to reprehensibility but also evidently as to being established by the same Scriptural rules of evidence, which included having the testimony of two witnesses (Numbers 35:30).

21. Understandably, there is concern in child abuse situations because there is seldom an additional eyewitness to such a crime. Even in those circumstances, the Christian congregation does not ignore the accusation. I refer the Royal Commission to the testimony of Mr Rodney Spinks of the Service Department in which he set out the further protective steps which are taken following an allegation. In addition, in those jurisdictions with mandatory reporting, elders would be required to report accusations regardless of the number of eyewitnesses.

Introduction

About the public hearing

1 The 29th public hearing of the Royal Commission was held in Sydney from 27 July to 5 August 2015 and on 14 August 2015.

2 The scope and purpose of this public hearing was to inquire into:

a) The experience of survivors of child sexual abuse within the church of the Jehovah's Witnesses (the Jehovah's Witness Church) in Australia.

b) The responses of the Jehovah's Witnesses Church and its corporation, the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia Ltd (Watchtower Australia), to allegations, reports or complaints of child sexual abuse within the Church.

c) The systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witnesses Church and Watchtower Australia for raising and responding to allegations of or concerns about child sexual abuse within the Church.

d) The systems, policies and procedures in place in the Jehovah's Witnesses Church and Watchtower Australia to prevent child sexual abuse within the Church.

e) Any related matters.

3 During the public hearing, the Royal Commission heard evidence from two survivors, BCB and BCG, who were abused by those in positions of authority within the Jehovah's Witness organisation in the period between approximately 1982 and 1988.

4 The Royal Commission also heard evidence from:

a) eight congregational elders who were involved in handling the allegations of child sexual abuse reported by the survivors

b) three senior members of the Australia Branch Office of the Jehovah's Witness organisation

c) a member of the Governing Body of the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation

d) a consultant in the field of prevention and response to child sexual abuse by religious organisations engaged by Watchtower Australia, and

e) a former solicitor of the Queensland Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions.

What the case study considered

5 The case study explored in detail the experiences of two survivors of child sexual abuse and the Jehovah's Witness organisation's response to their complaints of sexual abuse whilst they were members of the organisation. Twelve institutional witnesses gave evidence about the organisation's response.

6 The case study also examined the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness organisation for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse, and the mechanisms in place to prevent child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness organisation.

7 The case study also considered the role of Watchtower Australia and the Governing Body in the organisation's response to allegations of abuse.

Part 1 Overview of the Jehovah's Witnesses

8 The Jehovah's Witness organisation was founded towards the end of the 19th century in Pennsylvania by a small group of Bible students led by Charles Taze Russell.[1] Russell had become disillusioned with mainstream Christianity, which he argued had strayed from the first century vision of Christianity described in the Bible.[2] In 1884, Taze's Zion's Watch Tower Tract Society was incorporated and carried on the business of publishing and disseminating millenarian literature – that is, literature based on the belief that the end of the world is imminent.[3]

9 Today, the religion has a worldwide presence of 8.2 million active members in 239 countries.[4] Over the last 25 years, the active membership of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide has increased from four million members in 1990.[5]

10 The Jehovah's Witness organisation has been active in Australia since 1896, with a Branch Office first established in 1904 (the Australia Branch Office).[6] The Australia Branch Office is based in Sydney and coordinates the activities of all congregations in Australia, New Zealand and 'various other islands'.[7]

1.1 Organisational structure

11 The primary legal entity used by the Jehovah's Witness organisation today is the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania (Watchtower Pennsylvania).[8] The headquarters of Watchtower Pennsylvania is in Brooklyn, New York and is also known as 'Bethel' meaning 'House of God'.[9]

The Governing Body

12 The activity of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide is overseen by the Governing Body.[10] The Governing Body is a council of elders who consider themselves to be anointed by Jehovah God and who look to Jehovah and to Jesus Christ for direction in all matters.[11] It is based at the world headquarters of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in the United States and is at the apex of a highly centralised and hierarchical structure.[12]

13 The Royal Commission heard evidence from one of seven current members[13] of the Governing Body, Geoffrey Jackson. Mr Jackson has been a member of the Governing Body since September 2005.[14] He was appointed to the Governing Body because of his spiritual qualifications.[15] The work of the Governing Body is undertaken by several committees on which serve a total of 30 'helpers', and the work of each committee is overseen by the Governing Body itself.[16] Each member of the Governing Body is assigned to one or more of those committees.[17] Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that he serves on three committees, namely the Teaching, Writing, and Personnel Committees.[18]

14 Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that the Governing Body is 'a spiritual group of men who are the guardians of our doctrine' and is responsible for 'giving direction and impetus to Kingdom Work' in all matters.[19] When asked if the Governing Body members saw themselves as disciples of Jesus, Mr Jackson did not answer in the affirmative but told the Royal Commission that the members of the Governing Body 'hope to be [Jesus's] disciples'.[20]

15 Similarly, when asked if the Governing Body members saw themselves as 'Jehovah God's spokespeople on earth', Mr Jackson did not answer, instead telling the Royal Commission that it 'would seem to be quite presumptuous to say that we are the only spokesperson that God is using'.[21] Mr Jackson's professed humility is not, however, supported by the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own publications. The organisation's handbook for members, Organised to Do Jehovah's Will, teaches with reference to the 'faithful and discreet slave' (and thus, the Governing Body)[22] for instance, that the congregation hopes to 'draw ever closer to Jehovah by manifesting complete trust in the channel that He is using to direct His people today'.[23] A confidential manual produced by the Governing Body and entitled Branch Organization January 2015 (the 2015 Branch Organization Manual) records that the Governing Body 'is organized to take the lead as Jehovah directs it by Holy Spirit'.[24] Thus the Governing Body is believed by Jehovah's Witnesses to be the 'channel' by which Jehovah's will is communicated to the 'Christian' congregation and the Governing Body is directed by Jehovah in all that it does. It was Mr O'Brien's evidence that the Governing Body is Jehovah God's representative on earth providing definitive Scriptural interpretation.[25]

16 Mr Jackson said that the members of the Governing Body regard themselves as having been appointed by the Holy Spirit and as among the 144,000 anointed Jehovah's Witnesses who will go to heaven when they die.[26]

Branch Offices

17 The pattern of organisation and operation of the Jehovah's Witness organisation today is said to adhere to that of first century Christian congregations.[27] The Governing Body provides 'unified theocratic direction to Branch and Country committee members worldwide' in the 2015 Branch Organization Manual.[28]

18 The Governing Body supervises more than 90 branches worldwide.[29] A Branch Office is the headquarters for the Jehovah's Witness organisation in a particular country or region and is also referred to as 'Bethel'.[30]

19 Each Branch Office is supervised by a Branch Committee which oversees districts within the branch.[31] The Australia Branch Office is represented around Australia by circuit overseers, who have pastoral responsibility for about 20 congregations (that is, a circuit).[32] A circuit overseer travels weekly to different congregations in his circuit and is responsible for, among other things, ensuring that each congregation is complying with all theocratic direction given by the Governing Body.[33] Branch Committee members and circuit overseers are appointed by the Governing Body.[34]

20 Congregations form the basic organisational unit of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[35] Each congregation is overseen by a body of elders.[36] Each congregation in Australia is, in the legal sense, a voluntary association and a separately registered charity.[37]

The Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia

21 There are currently 821 congregations in Australia with over 68,000 active members.[38] Over the past 25 years, the active membership of the organisation in Australia has grown

22 The Australian Branch Office relevantly comprises the following structures:

a) the Branch Committee, an ecclesiastical body of (currently) 12 full-time elders,[41] which oversees and manages the operation of the Australia Branch Office[42]

b) the Legal Department,[43] and

c) the Service Department and Desk, which care for all aspects of the spiritual activities of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[44]

23 The function of each of the above structures is relevant to the Royal Commission's examination of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's response to child sexual abuse in its ranks. The Royal Commission heard evidence from three institutional witnesses who serve in each of these structures.

24 Terrence O'Brien is the Coordinator of the Branch Committee and a director and Secretary of Watchtower Australia.[45] He has actively served with the Jehovah's Witness organisation for 40 years.[46]

25 Rodney Spinks is the senior Service Desk elder who has served in the Service Department since January 2007.[47] He is specifically responsible for inquiries relating to child sexual abuse and for assisting congregation elders to implement the Australia Branch Office's guidelines for handling child abuse allegations and providing victim support.[48] The Service Desk currently comprises five Branch Office staff.[49]

26 Vincent Toole is a solicitor who has, since 2010, overseen the operation of the Legal Department within the organisation's Australia Branch Office.[50] Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that he has been involved with the Legal Department since 1989.[51]

The Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia Ltd

27 Watchtower Australia is the legal entity which facilitates the production and distribution of Bible-based literature for the organisation throughout Australasia.[52] Watchtower Australia is a public company limited by guarantee and a registered charity.[53] For ease of reference and unless otherwise specified, a reference to the Branch Office or Australia Branch Office will include a reference to Watchtower Australia.

1.2 Congregational membership

Elders and ministerial servants

28 Within each congregation, the members comprise elders, ministerial servants and publishers.[54] Publishers are the ordinary congregation members. Only a male publisher can make spiritual advancement by first becoming a ministerial servant and then an elder.[55] Mr Jackson and Mr O'Brien each gave evidence that a woman can never be an elder in the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[56]

29 Congregational responsibilities are split between elders and ministerial servants. Elders and ministerial servants are volunteer roles taken up by men who have been actively involved in the congregation for a period of time. The Jehovah's Witness organisation does not have a salaried clergy and therefore considers that it has no employees.[57] Appointments are based on Scriptural qualifications and there is prescriptive guidance as to how a ministerial servant and an elder should serve, act and behave at all times.[58] Mr Spinks and Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that elders must be experienced men who have displayed a pattern of integrity in their lives over a period of time as ministerial servants.[59]

30 Each congregation is overseen by a body of elders.[60] Elders are appointed to shepherd the congregation and oversee spiritual matters.[61] Their primary responsibilities include organising field work (or door-to-door preaching), running congregational disciplinary committees, leading the congregation services and Bible studies and attending to the pastoral care of the congregation.[62] Upon appointment, each elder is given a copy of the Shepherd the Flock handbook which is designed to 'supply vital information that will help them care for congregation matters'.[63]

31 Ministerial servants predominantly provide administrative support and practical assistance to the elders and service to the congregation.[64] They care for organisational tasks such as acting as an attendant at congregation meetings, handling sound equipment, distributing literature, managing congregation accounts, and general maintenance at the Kingdom Hall (the place of worship for Jehovah's Witnesses).[65]

32 Mr Jackson confirmed that it is the belief of Jehovah's Witnesses that elders and ministerial servants are appointed by the Holy Spirit.[66]

Publishers

33 Members of the congregation are called 'publishers' and call each other 'brother' and 'sister'.[67] Publishers may be baptised or unbaptised. Baptism is a symbol of the publisher's dedication to Jehovah.[68] Un-baptised publishers are those who have not been baptised but have been given approval to join the congregation's formal ministry and to identify themselves publically with the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[69]

34 When a publisher qualifies to share in the Jehovah's Witnesses' preaching work, just prior to baptism he or she is provided with a copy of the Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook.[70]

35 Publishers who wish to devote many hours to field service preaching may be appointed as pioneers.[71] Regular pioneers are exemplary congregation members who have volunteered to spend a certain amount of time in the public preaching activity each month.[72] Special pioneers serve full-time in preaching work and are selected from experienced long-serving regular pioneers.[73]

1.3 The practice of being a Jehovah's Witness

Publications

36 The Jehovah's Witnesses believe that the teachings promulgated by the Governing Body are 'based on God's Word. So, what is taught is not from men but from Jehovah God. – Isa. 54:13. Matt. 24:14, 45-47'.[74] The teachings and direction of the Governing Body take the form of Awake! and Watchtower magazines, letters containing directives to branch offices and elders, handbooks, and other publications.[75]

37 The Jehovah's Witness organisation told the Royal Commission that the Awake! and Watchtower magazines are the most widely distributed periodicals in the world.[76] The Awake! magazine is published by the Jehovah's Witness organisation for those with little knowledge of 'Christian teachings' to 'build faith in the Bible and … understand that Jehovah's Witnesses are different from other religious groups'.[77] The Watchtower magazine is published as a public edition (for those who are unfamiliar with Jehovah's Witness concepts) and as a study edition (for Jehovah's Witnesses and those who attend meetings).[78]

Scriptural literalism

38 The key imperative belief of the Jehovah's Witness organisation is that the Bible is the inspired word of God.[79] Jehovah's Witnesses interpret much of the Bible literally and take living in accordance with Bible principles extremely seriously.[80] The Bible is used by the Jehovah's Witnesses to set policy and religious practice[81] and was described by Mr Jackson as the Jehovah's Witness organisation's 'constitution'.[82]

Way of life

39 Being a Jehovah's Witness is a way of life for all members.[83] Devotees are expected to adhere to all doctrines established by the Governing Body through its interpretation of the Bible, the implementation of which is overseen by the Branch Committees and congregational elders.[84] Members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation are taught to be obedient and submissive to those in the organisation in positions of authority, including elders.[85] Members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation are expected to adhere to a strict code of moral conduct based on the Scriptures and enforced by a highly formalised disciplinary process for dealing with wrongdoing.[86]

Separateness from the world

40 The Jehovah's Witness organisation teaches that 'it was of great importance to Jesus that his followers keep separate from the world' and offers guidance as to how its members might themselves go about keeping separate from the world.[87] The organisation encourages its members to exercise caution when associating with those who are not members.[88] Non-Jehovah's Witnesses are referred to within the organisation as 'worldly' people and those who are 'not in the Truth'.[89]

41 The Jehovah's Witness organisation acknowledges that its members can benefit from a basic secular primary and high school education.[90] However the organisation counsels against pursuit of further education, the involvement of children in extra-curricular activities and attendance in sex education classes.[91] Documents in evidence show that Jehovah's Witness parents are encouraged by the organisation to school their own children in matters of sex education, because the alternative of school-based sex education is considered likely to result in immorality.[92]

42 Mr Spinks and Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that members of the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation are instructed to subject themselves to secular laws and government to the extent that such subjection does not conflict with Biblical law.[93] The Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook explains that this is because secular authorities have been 'placed in their relative positions by God'.[94] However, the same handbook considers 'circumstances under which a Christian would refuse to obey worldly rulers' and counsels that '[w]e must obey God as ruler rather than men. – Acts 5:29'.[95] Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that 'Jehovah's Witnesses will always obey Scripture … [specifically Acts 5:29] … where there is a clear Bible principle that' conflicts with secular law.[96]

43 Further, relatively recent publications such as Keep Yourself in God's Love counsel that, as Paul says in Ephesians 6:12, '[w]e have a struggle … not against blood and flesh, but against the governments, against the authorities, against the world rulers of this darkness, against the wicked spirit forces in the heavenly places'.[97] Moreover, the same publication states that Paul's use of the words 'governments' and 'authorities' suggests that 'attacks from the spirit realm are highly organized and deliberate'.[98]

44 In the light of such doctrinal teachings, it is submitted that the message published to members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation about their relationship with secular authorities is not as simple as that described by Messrs Toole and Spinks. It is submitted that, in fact, the organisation presents its members with conflicting and ambiguous teachings regarding their relationship with secular authorities, thereby fostering a distrust of such authorities.

Millenarianism

45 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that the Jehovah's Witnesses have a doctrinal understanding of Bible prophecies regarding the 'conclusion of the system of things', which is also referred to as 'the last days'.[99] He said that 'the Bible foretells the end of the present system of things',[100] meaning the 'end of the world'.[101]

46 The Jehovah's Witnesses are taught that the end of the world is something to look forward to and that 'God will "cut off" the wicked so that good people can truly enjoy life on earth'.[102] A June 1982 edition of Awake! magazine, for instance, tells readers that the only way to finally end child abuse is to 'embrace God's Kingdom under Christ' and to 'love God with all your heart and your neighbour as yourself' so as to be saved when the end comes.[103]

47 The Jehovah's Witnesses recognise that they 'have had wrong expectations about when the end would come'[104] following 'failed prophecies of 1914, 1918, 1925 and, most significantly, 1975'.[105] However, the Jehovah's Witnesses are counselled that 'even more important than focusing on when the end will come, [they] must be confident that it will come, and … act accordingly.[106] Mr Geoffrey Jackson told the Royal Commission that the world's end is now imminent as the 'Jehovah's Witnesses believe these are the last days'.[107]

Evangelism

48 Members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation evangelize to glorify God and are instructed to go and make disciples of all people.[108] Jehovah's Witnesses view evangelizing as a personal responsibility and the extent to which they engage in this activity is a personal decision that they make as an expression of their love for God.[109] Documents in evidence show that the Jehovah's Witness organisation expects that each member places his or her evangelising obligations above secular employment.[110]

49 Jehovah's Witnesses worship and praise Jehovah by attending organised meetings, Bible study, Theocratic Ministry Schools and field service.[111] Jehovah's Witness meetings are generally held in the Kingdom Hall.[112] A study edition of The Watchtower magazine containing four to five articles is published by the Governing Body each month for study by the congregations over the course of that month.[113]

Male headship

50 Documents in evidence show that the Jehovah's Witness organisation teaches that being in subjection to God is essential and that it is important to observe the headship principle.[114] Mr O'Brien explained that the headship principle accepted by Jehovah's Witnesses is that 'the head of every man is the Christ, in turn the head of a woman is the man'.[115] Mr O'Brien's evidence revealed that this belief is reflected in the patriarchal structure of the organisation, where men hold positions of authority within congregations and headship in the family.[116] Women are expected to defer to the authority of their husbands and children are taught to obey their parents.[117]

Available findings on the Jehovah's Witnesses relationship with secular authorities

F1 The Jehovah's Witness organisation presents its members with conflicting and ambiguous teachings regarding their relationship with secular authorities, thereby fostering a distrust of such authorities.

Part 2 Historical child sexual abuse data

51 In investigating the response of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to child sexual abuse, the Royal Commission sought from Watchtower Australia all documents evidencing or relating to allegations or complaints of child sexual abuse involving members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia.[118]

52 In response to the Royal Commission's summons to produce, Watchtower Australia produced some 5,000 documents comprising, among other things, files relating to some 1,000 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse dating back to 1950. Royal Commission staff analysed those files and produced the following data which was for the most part uncontested by the organisation.[119]

2.1 Data extracted from Watchtower Australia files

53 Since 1950, Watchtower Australia has recorded allegations, reports or complaints of child sexual abuse against 1,006 members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia.[120]

54 Those recorded allegations, reports or complaints relate to at least 1,800 alleged victims of child sexual abuse.[121]

55 The files record that 579 of those against whom allegations were made confessed to having committed child sexual abuse.[122]

56 Of the 1,006 members against whom allegations of child sexual abuse were made, 108 were elders or ministerial servants at the time of the first instance of alleged abuse.[123] The files do not reveal how many of the alleged perpetrators were elders or ministerial servants at the time of any subsequent instances of alleged child sexual abuse. The files record that 28 alleged perpetrators were appointed as elders or ministerial servants after having been the subject of an allegation of child sexual abuse.[124]

57 Finally, the files record that 401 alleged perpetrators were disfellowshipped in relation to an allegation of child sexual abuse,[125] and that 230 of those alleged perpetrators were subsequently reinstated.[126] Of those disfellowshipped, 78 were disfellowshipped on more than one occasion in relation to an allegation of child sexual abuse.[127]

Oral evidence on the number of recorded alleged perpetrators

58 Mr Spinks pointed out that while he did not wish to diminish the significance of the number of alleged perpetrators identified in the case files, 199 of the 1,006 alleged perpetrators were not Jehovah's Witnesses at the time of the first reported allegation.[128] He however accepted that it 'was probably true' that the 199 alleged perpetrators identified in the case files went on to become Jehovah's Witnesses, and that in many cases they were the subject of subsequent allegations of child sexual abuse while they were Jehovah's Witnesses.[129]

59 Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that for approximately the last two years he has been responsible for receiving telephone calls from congregational elders about allegations of child sexual abuse on behalf of the Legal Department.[130] He estimated that, over that period, he had received and continues to receive 'three, sometimes four' calls each month.[131]

60 Mr Toole's evidence as to frequency of calls regarding child sexual abuse is consistent with the number and frequency of allegations of child sexual abuse that is evidenced in the files produced to the Royal Commission.

2.2 Data on reporting to police

61 The analysis conducted by Royal Commission staff showed that of the 1,006 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse identified by the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia, not one was reported to police or other secular authority by the Jehovah's Witness organisation (including by elders within the organisation).[132] With reference to the files, no instance was identified by the Jehovah's Witness organisation of an allegation having been reported by the organisation to the police or other authorities.[133]

62 It was put to Mr Toole that there is no record in the case files of an elder having ever reported an allegation of child sexual abuse to the police or secular authorities.[134] Mr Toole accepted that 'if that is the way the files read, I assume that must be correct'.[135]

63 The analysis demonstrated that 161 of the alleged perpetrators recorded in the files had nevertheless been convicted of a child sexual abuse offence,[136] indicating that in spite of it not having been reported by the organisation, the alleged perpetrator had still come to the attention of police.

64 In a letter dated 20 July 2015, Watchtower Australia advised the Royal Commission that it had conducted a search of key words in the case files (such as 'police', 'child services', 'authorities', 'charge', 'court', 'welfare').[137] According to the results of its search, Watchtower Australia contended that '383 alleged perpetrators had been dealt with by either police or secular authorities in the respective States or Territories in which they reside'.[138] This figure was reiterated by Mr Spinks in oral evidence.[139]

65 Mr Toole accepted in examination that the conclusion asserted in the letter of 20 July 2015 was questionable because the search methodology may have yielded results even in cases where there was, for example, an instruction not to involve secular authorities.[140]

Available findings on historical child sexual abuse data

F2 Since 1950, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia has received allegations of child sexual abuse against 1,006 of its members relating to at least 1,800 victims, and has in that period not reported a single allegation to the police or other authorities, even though 579 of those against whom allegations were made confessed to having committed child sexual abuse.

F3 The Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia receives approximately three to four reports of allegations of child sexual abuse each month.

Part 3 Historical policies and procedures

66 The Royal Commission heard evidence from two survivors of child sexual abuse, BCB and BCG, whose complaints of abuse were first handled by the Jehovah's Witness organisation in or around 1992 and 1989 respectively.

67 This Part of these submissions provides an overview of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness organisation for responding to complaints of child sexual abuse at the time that BCB and BCG first raised their abuse with the organisation, and in the years following. The policies and procedures governing the organisation's ongoing response to the management of BCG's abuser from 2010, and to BCB's second disclosure to the organisation in 2012, are dealt with in Parts 7 and 8 of these submissions.

68 Broadly speaking, allegations of child sexual abuse were handled in the relevant periods in the same way as any sin was handled according to a system requiring reporting of serious wrongdoing to congregational elders. The elders would then investigate with a view to determining the veracity of an allegation. If an allegation was proved in accordance with Scriptural standards, then the elders would form a judicial committee to determine the degree of repentance of the accused and the appropriate sanction.

3.1 Key documents recording systems, policies and procedures in 1989 and 1992

69 In 1989 and 1992, the Jehovah's Witness elders handling BCG's and BCB's complaints of child sexual abuse was required to be governed by the policies and procedures set out in the Pay Attention to Yourselves and All the Flock elders' handbooks of 1981 and 1991 respectively (hereinafter, Pay Attention 1981 and Pay Attention 1991).[141] Those elders' handbooks were from time to time supplemented by letters from the Branch Office containing direction on the application of Scriptural principles and procedures,[142] and by other Jehovah's Witness organisation publications including the Awake! and Watchtower magazines.[143]

3.2 Reporting child sexual abuse

Reporting within the Jehovah's Witness organisation

71 In 1989 and 1992, ordinary publishers within the Jehovah's Witness organisation were encouraged to report serious sins such as fornication, adultery and homosexuality to the elders.[145] Once a sin was reported to elders, publishers were advised that they could 'leave the problem in the hands of the responsible members of the congregation and trust in Jehovah that it will be resolved'.[146]

72 From 1991, elders were instructed that a person with knowledge of 'wrongdoing' had an obligation to report that wrongdoing in order to keep the congregation clean.[147]

73 Elders themselves were obliged, from 1991, to report their own 'gross wrong[s]' to the body of elders as they would no longer be qualified to continue in their 'appointed' role.[148]

74 From at least 1991, the types of sin that a person might report to elders as child sexual abuse included one or a combination of the following:[149]

a) 'Uncleanness includes an intentional momentary touching of sexual parts or caressing of breasts. (1 Thess. 4:7, 8; 1 Tim. 5:1,2)'

b) 'Loose conduct is a shocking, flagrant disregard for Jehovah's moral standards. (Gal. 5:19; w83 3/15 p. 31; w739/15 pp. 574-6)', and

c) 'Por-nei'a involves immoral use of the genitals of at least one human (whether in a natural or a perverted way) …' and includes the 'sexual abuse of children'.

75 With respect to 'porneia', Pay Attention 1991 instructed elders to 'do what they reasonably can to protect children from further abuse; follow the Society's directives on such matters'.[150]

76 On the evidence before the Royal Commission, it was not until at least 1992 that elders were given an explicit directive to immediately contact the Branch Office for advice if they received a report or allegation of child sexual abuse.[151]

Reporting to authorities

77 In 1989 and 1992, elders were under no specific direction to either report child sexual abuse to authorities themselves or to encourage the survivor of the alleged abuse to report to authorities. Instead, Pay Attention 1981 advised elders that 'the law on ecclesiastical privilege in many countries does not require elders to report the offender or the offense to secular authorities'.[152] Pay Attention 1991 suggested that the elders encourage the accused to report himself to authorities.[153]

78 Pay Attention 1991 otherwise discouraged Jehovah's Witnesses from taking fellow Christians to secular courts to settle personal disputes and counselled that such disputes should be settled with the help of the congregation elders.[154] Failure to observe this injunction could result in restriction of congregational privileges.[155]

Investigation and establishment of a judicial committee

79 In both 1989 and 1992, reports or allegations of serious wrongdoing were to be investigated by elders in order to determine if there was substance to a given report or allegation and if there was therefore a need to form a judicial committee.[156]

80 Elders were instructed that an accusation had substance if it was an 'offense serious enough to result in disfellowshipping',[157] and if there are 'either two witnesses or a confession of wrongdoing'.[158] Pay Attention 1981 also specifically instructed that testimony from 'another witness to the same type of sin on the part of the accused person … would be basis to convoke a judicial committee' (sic).[159]

81 If there was insufficient evidence to form a judicial committee but 'serious questions' were raised then, from 1991, two elders might have investigated the matter further in any event.[160] In the case of reports of 'gross' or 'serious' sins that might 'contaminate' the congregation or that have brought the congregation into disrepute, a body of elders was directed to investigate and, if necessary, establish a judicial committee to handle the matter.[161] Pay Attention 1991 does not, however, specifically define what constitutes a 'gross' or 'serious' sin.

82 More minor transgressions such as 'minor uncleanness' could be handled 'at the discretion of an elder or two' and did not require the formation of a judicial committee.[162] The Pay Attention 1991 handbook did not offer specific guidance as to what might constitute 'minor uncleanness'.

83 Ultimately though, if an accused person denied wrongdoing and there was only one witness to the alleged wrongdoing, then a judicial committee would not be formed and the matter would be left in Jehovah's hands.[163]

Investigating elders and judicial committee members

84 The role of an elder in handling an allegation of wrongdoing was described in Pay Attention 1981 and 1991 as being to act as a judge and 'readjust', 'reprove' those who are repentant, or 'remove unrepentant wrongdoers' from the congregation.[164]

85 Pay Attention 1991 directed elders to be impartial at all times.[165] Accordingly, '[a]n elder who … has had a special friendship with [the accused] should not normally serve on the [judicial] committee …'.[166]

Judicial committee

86 Pay Attention 1991 provided that evidence and testimony of witnesses were to be considered by a judicial committee prior to any decision about the action necessary in respect of the accused person.[167] That handbook further provided that no action should be taken by a 'committee' against an accused person 'unless the evidence clearly proves this necessary'.[168]

87 Pay Attention 1991 then set out the types of evidence that would be acceptable in clearly proving that action in respect of the accused was necessary:[169]

a) 'the testimony of two or three eyewitnesses …; no action could be taken if there was only one witness (Deut.19-15; John 8:17)' (the two-witness rule)

b) a confession from the accused, 'which may be accepted as conclusive proof without other corroborating evidence. (Josh. 7:19)'

c) strong circumstantial evidence 'such as pregnancy or evidence (testified to by at least two witnesses) that the accused stayed all night in the same house with a person of the opposite sex … under improper circumstances', and

d) the testimony of two or three witnesses to the same kind of wrongdoing but each is a witness to a separate incident.

88 From 1981, elders were directed that the judicial committee was to probe in an effort to establish facts, ascertain the attitude of the accused, and determine if there was evidence to establish serious wrongdoing.[170] From 1991, however, elders were instructed to avoid 'probing questions [that] go into needless details, especially in regard to sexual misconduct, unless this [was] absolutely necessary, such as in determining whether 'por-neia' had been committed'.[171]

89 From at least 1981, in the absence of a confession by the accused, the accuser was required, even in cases of sexual abuse, to make her allegation before her abuser during either or both of the investigation and judicial committee stages of the process.[172] Both Pay Attention 1981 and Pay Attention 1991 instructed elders that the rationale for this was that an accuser should be willing to assume responsibility 'as was the case in Israel'.[173]

90 From at least 1981, elders were instructed to invite the accused person to make a statement at the commencement of a judicial committee hearing. From 1991, elders were also directed to treat the accused kindly, making sure that he was put at ease.[174] Pay Attention 1991 directed all elders on a judicial committee to weigh carefully both the interests of the accused and those of the congregation as a whole.[175]

91 From 1991, provision was also made for the accused to bring witnesses who could speak in his defence.[176] No equivalent entitlement was prescribed in respect of the complainant.

92 Although not explicitly stated in either Pay Attention 1981 or 1991, it would appear that in 1989 and 1992 elders handling a complaint of child sexual abuse were required by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to assess the evidence of the complaint before them according to the Scriptures at both investigative and judicial committee stages of the process.

Assessment of repentance

93 When elders had determined that there was sufficient evidence to establish the truth of an allegation, Pay Attention 1991 and 1981 directed them to assess whether the wrongdoer was repentant in order to determine the appropriate judicial sanction.[177]

94 Pay Attention 1991 instructed elders that a judicial committee's primary consideration in determining the appropriate sanction is the 'the individual's sincere repentance or the lack of it'.[178] Among other things, whether the individual had apologised to the person offended by his conduct (in the case of child sexual abuse, the victim) was a relevant consideration in the assessment of repentance.[179] Elders were instructed that '[n]either the gravity of the wrong nor bad publicity finally determines whether the person should be disfellowshipped'.[180]

3.3 Outcomes and sanctions

Deletion of elders

95 Pay Attention 1991 directed that a wrongdoer who was an elder, ministerial servant or a pioneer would not qualify to continue in his appointed position of service and should be removed.[181] This is because elders, ministerial servants and pioneers were required to be irreprehensible and serve with a clean conscience.[182] It also instructed that an elder or a ministerial servant who committed a 'gross wrong' was morally obligated to inform the body of elders of his being reprehensible.[183]

Disfellowshipping and reproval

96 Depending upon the degree of repentance of a person found by investigating elders to be guilty of child sexual abuse, that person would either be disfellowshipped or reproved.

97 From at least 1981, elders were directed to expel unrepentant wrongdoers who were guilty of 'gross, serious' sins from the congregation, thus denying them fellowship with Jehovah's clean congregation.[184] Disfellowshipping action served to protect other members of the congregation from the bad influence of the wrongdoer, safeguard the purity of the congregation and uphold Jehovah's good name.[185]

98 From at least 1981, elders were directed that a truly repentant wrongdoer should be reproved rather than disfellowshipped.[186] Administering reproof, either privately or before onlookers concerned in the case, served to discipline the wrongdoer and instil a wholesome fear in the onlookers.[187]

99 In 1983, Organized to Accomplish Our Ministry advised publishers that the judicial committee would inform the wrongdoer of the decision to disfellowship him from the congregation and would clearly state the Scriptural reason(s) for the disfellowshipping action.[188] A direction to this effect was included in Pay Attention 1991.[189]

100 Following a decision to disfellowship or to publicly reprove, a brief announcement would be made to the congregation stating only that the person had been disfellowshipped[190] or reproved,[191] but not the reason for the sanction. This announcement served to alert faithful members of the congregation to stop associating with the disfellowshipped person.[192]

101 Members of the congregation were counselled against having contact and spiritual association with disfellowshipped persons[193] and told that it was necessary to shun disfellowshipped persons in order to have a good relationship with Jehovah.[194]

102 Both Pay Attention 1981 and Pay Attention 1991 provided that if a disfellowshipped person believed that a serious error in judgment was made, he was allowed seven days to appeal the committee's decision by writing a letter to the body of elders of the congregation which took the disfellowshipping action clearly stating his reasons for the appeal.[195]

103 An appeal committee would hear the original evidence and any new evidence relevant to the case.[196]

3.4 Reinstatement as a Jehovah's Witness

104 Pay Attention 1981 and Pay Attention 1991 provided that a disfellowshipped person could be reinstated in the congregation when he gave clear evidence of repentance, demonstrating that he has abandoned his sinful course of conduct and was desirous of having a good relationship with Jehovah.[197]

105 Elders were directed not to be hasty in reinstating individuals, being careful to allow sufficient time, perhaps many months, a year or even longer, for the disfellowshipped person to prove genuine repentance.[198]

106 Generally, the decision to reinstate was made by a judicial committee of the congregation that took the disfellowshipping action.[199] If the disfellowshipped person moved congregations, the reinstatement plea could be heard by the new local judicial committee.[200] Thereafter, that local committee would give the body of elders of the original congregation that disfellowshipped the individual its recommendation.[201]

3.5 Support offered for survivors of child sexual abuse

107 Pay Attention 1991 directed elders to treat victims of sexual abuse with extreme thoughtfulness and kindness and to do what they reasonably could to protect children from further abuse.[202]

108 In 1992, the Branch Office directed elders to '[h]elp [victims] see that their worth as individuals is not diminished by the shameful way they were treated. The important thing is how Jehovah views them'.[203]

Part 4 BCB

109 BCB grew up on a farm in Western Australia.[204] She began associating with the Jehovah's Witness organisation when she was 10 years old and was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness at age 18.[205]

110 BCB is now 47 years old and is a mother of two children.[206] BCB is still a Jehovah's Witness[207] but since reporting to the Royal Commission in about September 2014, she has stopped attending congregational meetings.[208]

4.1 BCB's abuse by Bill Neill

111 Between 1980 and 1986 when BCB was aged between 12 and 18, she regularly stayed overnight at the home of her friend, her friend's father, Bill Neill, and their family.[209] Bill Neill was an elder in the Narrogin congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Western Australia.[210] BCB attended weekly Bible studies led by Bill Neill at the Narrogin Kingdom Hall and at the Neill family house.[211]

112 Bill Neill discouraged BCB from forming friendships with non-Jehovah's Witnesses.[212] BCB left high school at the end of Year 10,[213] encouraged by the Neill family who preferred marriage or full-time preaching over pursuit of a further education.[214]

113 The Royal Commission heard that from 15 years of age, BCB was groomed and sexually abused by Bill Neill.[215] Bill Neill remained a respected elder within the congregation whilst he continued to abuse BCB.[216] Notwithstanding his abuse of her, BCB continued to respect Bill Neill and felt unable to disclose the abuse because of his position of authority in the congregation.[217]

114 BCB told the Royal Commission that Bill Neill's position as an elder contributed to his power over her.[218]

4.2 BCB's disclosure to the Narrogin Congregation elders

115 BCB first disclosed her abuse by Bill Neill to a Jehovah's Witness acquaintance in about 1991.[219] BCB gave evidence that about a week after she disclosed to her acquaintance, another elder in the Narrogin congregation, Mr Horley, approached her about Bill Neill's conduct.[220] Implicit in that is that the acquaintance had passed on BCB's disclosure to Mr Horley.

116 Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that, on his recollection, he first came to hear of the allegations against Bill Neill when BCB and her husband, BCC, came to visit him at his home to disclose the abuse.[221]

117 This difference in these recollections of BCB and Mr Horley as to how Mr Horley came to learn of BCB's allegations against Bill Neill is unimportant for present purposes and is therefore not necessary to resolve.

4.3 The response of the Narrogin congregation elders to BCB's disclosure

118 At the time of BCB's disclosure, Mr Horley and Bill Neill were the only two elders serving in the Narrogin congregation.[222] At that time, Mr Horley had known Bill Neill for 16 years.[223]

119 Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that he did not remember speaking to Bill Neill about BCB's allegation on his own and that he and Mr Doug Jackson, the then circuit overseer, spoke to Bill Neill together during one of Mr Doug Jackson's visits to the congregation.[224]

BCB's meeting with Mr Horley and Bill Neill

120 BCB gave evidence that shortly after she initially spoke with Mr Horley, he arranged a meeting at her house between himself, Bill Neill, BCB and BCC.[225]

121 Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that he was unable to recall this first meeting with BCB.[226]

122 BCB gave evidence that, during this first meeting, Bill Neill made inappropriate jokes about his alleged conduct.[227] BCB also gave evidence that she was pressed by Mr Horley for intimate details or her abuse.[228]

123 BCB told the Royal Commission that it was very distressing for her to have to discuss her abuse in front of a room full of men, including her abuser.[229] BCB said that she felt unable to report the full extent of Bill Neill's abuse at the meeting.[230]

BCB's meeting with Mr Horley, Mr Doug Jackson, and Bill Neill

124 BCB gave evidence that Mr Horley also arranged a second meeting, again at her house, between himself, BCB, BCC, Bill Neill, and Mr Doug Jackson.[231]

125 As noted above, Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that it was at this meeting that he recalls BCB first making her allegations against Bill Neill.[232]

126 BCB gave evidence that during the second meeting Bill Neill was defensive and said that she used to wear revealing clothing.[233] BCB also gave evidence that she did not feel supported and that her credibility was being tested by the elders.[234]

127 The Royal Commission heard that again BCB felt too uncomfortable to disclose to the elders the full extent of her abuse by Bill Neill.[235]

128 BCB told the Royal Commission that nobody explained to her the purpose of either meeting.[236] Mr Horley gave evidence that he could not recall what was explained to BCB.[237]

129 BCB said that after the second meeting, Mr Doug Jackson encouraged her to read an Awake! magazine about child sexual abuse, but that nobody explained to her what the outcome of the meetings was or if anything would happen to Bill Neill.[238]

Mr Horley's evidence about the investigation of BCB's allegation

130 Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that at the time, he understood that Biblical principles required the accuser to face the accused[239] and that the relevant procedure was that set out in Pay Attention 1991.[240]

131 Mr Horley accepted in evidence that it is inappropriate to require an accused and his accuser to meet together, but said that he did not reflect on it at the time because he was just following the then procedure.[241] He agreed that it would be very hard for an abused person to disclose the full detail of her abuse before the accused and at least two other men.[242]

132 It is submitted that Mr Horley's application of the procedure set out in Pay Attention 1991, which required BCB to face her abuser, caused significant distress to BCB and prevented her from the disclosing the full extent of her abuse.

133 Mr Horley accepted, and it is submitted, that it was totally inappropriate of him to take a person accused of child sexual abuse into the victim's home.[243]

Mr Doug Jackson's evidence about the investigation

134 Mr Doug Jackson agreed that the purpose of the meetings with BCB and Bill Neill was to establish the truth of BCB's allegation in accordance with the Jehovah's Witness organisation protocol.[244] He did not accept that BCB was unaware of the purpose of those meetings, because, he said, although he couldn't remember what he told BCB, he 'would have told her why we were meeting'.[245]

Sufficiency of evidence

135 Mr Horley gave evidence that because Bill Neill denied any intentional misconduct or deliberate touching on his part, the rule requiring two or more witnesses meant that BCB's allegations could not be proven according to the Scriptures and so the matter could not progress to a judicial committee.[246] This was the case even in circumstances where he had no reason to disbelieve BCB's allegations.[247]

Further disclosure / reporting

136 BCB gave evidence that following the committee meeting, Mr Horley discouraged her from discussing her abuse 'out of respect for the Neill family'.[248] Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that he had discouraged further disclosure because he believed 'that gossip and speculation about the matter would be hurtful to BCB and her family, and to Bill and his family'.[249] Mr Horley denied that he was trying to cover the matter up.[250]

137 However, Mr Horley accepted that BCB would have felt silenced and unsupported by his instruction not to speak with others about her abuse.[251]

138 BCB did not remember discussing reporting her complaint to the police with anybody before or after the meetings.[252]

139 Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that he never said anything to BCB about 'whether she should or should not report Bill Neill's behaviour to the authorities'.[253] Mr Horley said that he gave no consideration to whether he or BCB should report the matter to police.[254]

140 Mr Horley said that there were very few internal policies and procedures at the time about whether elders should go to police when faced with allegations like those brought by BCB.[255]

4.4 Bill Neill's removal as an elder

141 BCB told the Royal Commission that a few weeks after the meetings with Mr Horley and Mr Doug Jackson, Bill Neill stepped down as an elder.[256] The fact, but not the grounds, of Bill Neill's deletion as an elder was announced to the congregation.[257]

142 Mr Horley said that BCB's allegations had cast a cloud over Bill Neill's qualifications as an elder[258] and that he, together with Mr Doug Jackson, recommended that Bill Neill step down.[259] Mr Doug Jackson also said that he considered that Bill Neill no longer met the Scriptural qualifications for serving as an elder since he was guilty of uncleanness and not free from accusation.[260]

143 BCB gave evidence that even after she had disclosed her abuse by Bill Neill, she was still expected to attend Bible study organised by Mr Horley[261] and held at Bill Neill's house.[262] She said that she continued to see Bill Neill several times a week at congregational meetings.[263]

144 BCB gave evidence that she was left feeling unsupported by the congregation and was instead encouraged to respect her abuser.[264]

145 Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that he and Mr Doug Jackson did not consider it necessary to impose any specific restrictions on Bill Neill.[265]

146 Mr Horley agreed, and it is submitted, that restricting Bill Neill's privileges would have been appropriate in relation to some situations.[266]

The report to the Branch Office

147 In a letter dated 1 February 1992, Mr Horley and Mr Doug Jackson reported to the Branch Office on the outcome of their investigation into BCB's allegations.[267] The letter reported the recommendation that Bill Neill step down as an elder because Mr Horley and Mr Doug Jackson had concluded that 'uncleanness' had been committed 'on several occasion (sic)'.[268]

148 The letter of 1 February 1992 further reported that both Mr Horley and Mr Doug Jackson were 'impressed by Brother Neill's acceptance of counsel and his humility throughout the ordeal' and recommended that he be appointed as an elder again 'once this has died down'.[269] Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that in this regard the letter used 'unfortunate wording' and he acknowledged that '[m]atters of this nature take many years, if ever, to die down completely'.[270]

149 The Pay Attention 1991 handbook to which Messrs Horley and Jackson would have had regard directed that the privilege of serving as ministerial servant or elder could be recommended only after the individual had ample time to prove himself to be irreprehensible and again 'free from accusation' and had 'freeness of speech'.[271] It is submitted that to simply wait for the matter to 'die down' before reappointing Bill Neill would not have been in accordance with the direction of the Governing Body as recorded in Pay Attention 1991.

150 Mr Horley gave evidence that although he signed the letter to the Branch Office, [272] he did not believe that Bill Neill had only committed uncleanness 'on several occasions'. Mr Horley accepted that BCB had made other allegations against Bill Neill, but could not explain to the Royal Commission why those allegations had not been detailed in the report to the Branch Office.[273]

151 The letter of 1 February 1992 also reported that 'unfortunately there may be worldly people who also know' about Bill Neill's conduct.[274] Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that he had included an expression of concern about how widely known BCB's allegations were because he had wanted to preserve the cleanness of the congregation and was concerned about the reputation of Jehovah's name.[275]

152 Mr Horley ultimately accepted that he was concerned with Bill Neill's efficacy as an elder, his qualification to teach, and the proper functioning of the organisation.[276] Mr Horley conceded that his concern was 'probably not' about protecting children in the congregation.[277]

Available findings on BCB's first disclosure

F4 The elders bringing the man whom BCB accused of abusing her to her home was unjustified and traumatising for BCB and should not have occurred.

F5 Although the elders may have been following the documented procedure at the time and they may have believed that Scriptural principle required that the accuser face the accused with her allegations, it was distressing to and unsupportive of BCB to require that of her.

F6 It was distressing for BCB to be required by the elders to tell of what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCB disclosing the full extent of her abuse.

F7 It was inconsistent with the elders' professed sympathy for BCB for them not to have offered her the opportunity of the support and involvement of women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

F8 The elders did not explain to BCB the purpose of their investigation and the meetings with her such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

F9 The application of the two-witness rule meant that there was insufficient evidence for the elders to act against BCB's abuser even though they believed her, which left her feeling disbelieved and unsupported, and it left the abuser in the congregation where he may have been a risk to other children.

F10 Mr Horley telling BCB that she should not discuss her abuse with anyone left her feeling silenced and unsupported.

F11 BCB was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

F12 In circumstances where both investigating elders agreed that there was substance to BCB's allegations, they should have taken steps against Bill Neill, at least by imposing some restrictions on his activities involving children and thereby addressing the potential risk that he posed to other children.

F13 It was traumatic for BCB and inappropriate of Mr Horley for him to have required BCB to attend Bible study at Bill Neill's home when he knew that BCB accused Bill Neill of abusing her.

F14 The recommendation of the elders to the Branch Office that Bill Neill be reinstated as an elder 'once this has died down' and their expressed concern 'that there may also be worldly people who also know' demonstrates that they were more concerned about the reputation of Bill Neill and the congregation than about the risk that he posed to children.

4.5 BCB's disclosure in 2012

153 In 2012 in a written statement, BCB disclosed her abuse by Bill Neill to two elders in her local congregation, Joe Bello and David Wood.[278]

154 In a letter dated 18 December 2012, Messrs Bello and Wood forwarded BCB's written statement to the Branch Office.[279]

155 BCB told the Royal Commission that in July 2014, when Mr Bello was visiting her house on an unrelated matter she told him that she was considering reporting her abuse to the Royal Commission.[280] BCB gave evidence that at around the same time, Mr Bello telephoned her husband, BCC, and asked if BCB 'really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud'.[281]

156 Mr Bello accepted, and it is submitted, that he was wrong to have said what he said to BCC and that he should never want to 'discourage someone from going to the authorities'.[282] It is further submitted that Mr Bello's discouragement of BCB through what he said to BCC was in direct contravention of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's explicit directive to '[n]ever suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or other authorities'.[283]

157 Upset by Mr Bello's visit, BCB wrote a second letter recording her feelings about her abuse.[284] Under cover of a letter dated 17 December 2014, Mr Bello, Mr Wood, and Mr Robert Boardman of BCB's local congregation forwarded BCB's second letter to the Branch Office.[285]

Mr Horley's correspondence with the Branch Office in 2015

158 In a letter dated 6 January 2015, Mr Horley provided, at the request of the Service Desk at the Branch Office,[286] a brief summary of events leading to the deletion of Bill Neill as an elder in 'in around 1993'.[287] In his letter, Mr Horley reported that '… it became a matter of her word against his as there were no witnesses to the alleged events. BCB was an attractive young sister and often got around the house in her nightwear …'.[288] Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that this latter observation was in fact a comment that Bill Neill had made to him.[289] Mr Horley said that Bill Neill's comment 'should have raised stronger warning bells than it did at the time'.[290]

159 Mr Horley accepted, in evidence, that a child cannot validly consent to being sexually abused or be blamed for it.[291]

Available findings on BCB's second disclosure

F15 It was wrong of Joe Bello, and contrary to the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own direction in that regard, to discourage BCB from reporting to the Royal Commission by asking whether she 'really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud'.

F16 The elders in BCB's present congregation should have supported BCB in her reporting to the Royal Commission if that is what she wanted to do.

4.6 The impact on BCB of the abuse and of the organisation's response

160 BCB told the Royal Commission about the long term effect that Bill Neill's abuse has had on her. She said that the abuse changed who she was, destroyed her confidence, and held her back from living a normal life.[292] BCB continued to feel as though she was Bill Neill's victim well into her adult life.[293]

161 BCB told the Royal Commission that she had a nervous breakdown 10 years ago[294] and has had a lot of therapy to address Bill Neill's abuse.[295] The Royal Commission heard that the abuse has impacted on BCB's health such that she has required ongoing medical and therapeutic treatment.[296] BCB gave evidence that her medical treatment has cost her money and that she would welcome compensation if it were to be offered to her by the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[297]

162 BCB said that she felt brainwashed into believing that speaking with 'worldly' people would bring reproach upon Jehovah's name.[298] BCB said that, as a result of reporting her story to the Royal Commission, she is riddled with guilt for betraying the Jehovah's Witness organisation[299] and for 'dragging Jehovah's name through the mud'.[300]

163 BCB told the Royal Commission that, in her view:

a) the elders should have encouraged her to go to the police[301]

b) she should not have been confronted by her abuser in her own home,[302] and

c) there should have been women involved to support her through the process.[303]

Part 5 BCG

164 BCG was born in Queensland and grew up in a strict Jehovah's Witness family.[304] BCG's father, BCH, joined a congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses in Queensland when she was very young, and her mother joined the same congregation a short time thereafter.[305] BCG was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness when she was about 16 years old.[306]

165 BCG is 43 years old and the mother of four children.[307] She is currently in the final year of a law degree[308] and is no longer a Jehovah's Witness.[309]

5.1 BCG's abuse by her father, BCH

166 BCG's father, BCH, was appointed as a ministerial servant in the Mareeba Congregation in Far North Queensland when BCG was about 13.[310] BCH was well respected within the congregation and was given special privileges by the congregation elders, including conducting private Bible studies, managing door-to-door preaching and teaching and counselling the members of the congregation.[311]

167 As head of the household, BCH dictated and enforced compliance with household rules.[312] BCG said that her father would make her deliver Scriptural talks before the Congregation from the platform in the Kingdom Hall and take part in door-to-door preaching.[313] As a Jehovah's Witness, BCG was taught to love and fear Jehovah and to never question her parents or their decisions.[314]

168 BCG was not permitted to associate with people outside the Jehovah's Witness community.[315] She was taught from a young age that 'worldly' people, including the police, were bad and not to be trusted as they served Satan.[316] BCG's parents did not allow BCG to attend sex education classes at school or participate in extra-curricular activities, such as sport, because the organisation advised against it.[317] BCG said that she was not permitted to attend school after Year 10 because choosing higher education over Jehovah was frowned upon by the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[318]

169 The Royal Commission heard that when she was 17, BCG was sexually abused by BCH on a number of occasions over a two week period whilst her mother and siblings were away on holiday.[319]

5.2 BCG's attempted disclosure to the Mareeba Congregation elders

170 BCG told the Royal Commission that she initially tried to report her father's abuse to Mr Ali and Mr Bowditch, two elders in the Mareeba Congregation who were also friends of her father's.[320] BCG said that both elders refused to speak with her before she spoke to her father, or without her father being present.[321]

171 Mr Ali told the Royal Commission that he had no recollection of any such conversation with BCG.[322] Mr Ali agreed, however, that to require a person to speak to her father in the first instance was 'consistent with the teaching of the [organisation]'.[323]

172 Mr Bowditch recalled his wife raising with him that BCG needed to talk with him but could not recall his response.[324] He did not however accept that he would have required BCH to be present before speaking with BCB.[325]

5.3 Investigation and judicial committee

173 About eight months after BCG was sexually abused by her father while her mother and siblings were away, BCH left BCG's mother for another woman and moved out of the family home.[326] It was not until this time that BCG found the courage to tell her male friend, BCJ, about the abuse.[327] BCJ approached BCG's father to confront him about the abuse and subsequently arranged for BCG to meet with the elders of the Mareeba Congregation.[328]

174 At the time that they became aware of BCG's allegation, Messrs Ali, Bowditch and De Rooy, were already members of a judicial committee considering BCH's extra-marital relationship.[329] Mr Bowditch said that there was a lot of overlap between BCG's complaint and the matters already before the judicial committee and therefore some of BCG's complaint was investigated concurrently.[330] Mr Ali said that the same judicial committee members also dealt with BCG's allegations and that 'it was tied in pretty much together'.[331]

Interviewing of BCG

175 BCG told the Royal Commission that she was interviewed by Mr De Rooy, Mr Ali and Mr Bowditch on a number of occasions.[332] BCG said that, on each occasion, she was alone and without any support.[333] On at least one occasion, BCH was also present at the meeting.[334]

176 BCG said that did not remember anyone explaining the purpose of the meetings to her, but that she understood that the elders were investigating her allegations.[335]

177 BCG told the Royal Commission that instead of being protected and supported as a victim of child sexual abuse, she felt that the elders sat in judgement of her credibility as a witness and made her feel to blame for what had happened.[336] She said that because the elders were all male and were friends of her father's she was reluctant to speak in any detail about BCH's abuse.[337]

178 BCG said that, at one of the meetings, the elders forced BCG to directly confront her father with her abuse allegations.[338] BCG told the Royal Commission that when her father was brought into the room she was extremely terrified.[339] In the meeting, BCH threatened BCG verbally and physically and blamed her for seducing him.[340]

179 Mr Bowditch and Mr Ali accepted that requiring BCG to make her allegations in front of BCH would have been a traumatising experience for BCG and that the process of requiring a victim of child sexual abuse to make her allegation in the presence of her offender was not conducive to arriving at the truth.[341]

Allegations of sexual abuse of BCG's sisters

180 Not long after disclosing her abuse to the elders, BCG disclosed to her mother, BCI. BCI told BCG that her father had previously abused BCG's older sister.[342] At around the same time, BCG's two younger sisters each told BCG and her mother that they had also been sexually abused by BCH.[343]

181 BCG said that although she told the elders about her sisters' sexual abuse allegations against BCH, the elders did not take those allegations into account in their consideration of BCG's allegation against BCH.[344] BCG said that Mr De Rooy told her that the elders could not consider the evidence of her sisters' abuse as they were too young to know what they were talking about and were not witnesses to the 'same event'.[345]

182 Mr De Rooy, Mr Ali and Mr Bowditch each told the Royal Commission that they did not recall being told about the abuse of BCG's sisters during the judicial committee meetings.[346]

The investigating/judicial committee's conclusion as to the sufficiency of evidence

183 Mr De Rooy, Mr Ali and Mr Bowditch all believed that BCG had been abused by BCH.[347] Despite their belief as to the truth of BCG's allegations, they concluded that without a confession by BCH they were bound by the two-witness rule and had insufficient proof to take action.[348] Mr De Rooy accepted that this outcome was 'not fair' for BCG, but told the Royal Commission that the elders were bound by their Biblical principles.[349]

Mr Ali's notes of the judicial committee

184 During the public hearing, Mr Ali was shown a document comprising some 23 pages of photocopied handwritten notes.[350] He told the Royal Commission that the document constituted notes that he had taken during the judicial committee process regarding BCH.[351] He agreed that the page numbers also appeared to be in his handwriting.[352]

185 Mr Ali did not dispute that the pages appeared to be ordered consecutively starting at '1', with each page following the numbered page being the reverse of its respective numbered page.[353] He acknowledged that where a page, such as the page between the pages numbered 14 and 15, was unnumbered, it stood to reason that the unnumbered page was the reverse of the preceding numbered page.[354]

186 Mr Ali agreed that the first page of the notes was dated 1 June 1989, or possibly 1 May 1989.[355] It is submitted that it can be accepted that the date is 1 June 1989: the manuscript is clear enough and each of the dates appearing thereafter is either that date or a later date with there being no date recorded between 1 May and 1 June.

187 At the foot of the reverse of the page numbered 14 was written '19-7-89 [BCH] appeals, fax to Kevin'.[356] Mr Ali told the Royal Commission that the pages which precede the reverse of page 14 'possibly' record matters dealt with by the judicial committee prior to the date on which BCH lodged his appeal against the committee's decision to disfellowship.[357] It is submitted that the notes clearly record such matters, there being no other sensible reading of them.

188 Mr Ali accepted that his notes appeared to be structured in such a way as to first record the name of the person to whom the notes refer, then either by use of a colon or a dash, record what that person told the committee.[358]

What Mr Ali's notes say about the abuse of BCG's sisters

189 Mr Ali was taken to pages 4 and 5 of his notes, which relevantly record the following:[359]

> She does not like what her dad is doing with [redacted] and commendably, when pulled up before [redacted] by [BCH] to deny charge of molestation to [BCK] she insisted on the truth despite [BCH's] efforts to the contrary.

191 Mr Ali agreed that the 'she' referred to on page 8 of his notes as extracted above was BCG's older sister, BCK.[361] He agreed that the notes record that BCK herself told the judicial committee of himself and Messrs De Rooy and Bowditch, about having been sexually abused by her father. [362]

192 Mr Ali was taken to the foot of page 11 of his notes which records the date '17.6.89' and below the date 'Met with [BCI] and [BCG]', and then to the reverse of page 11 of his notes, which relevantly records the following: [363]

193 Mr Ali agreed that, on or around 17 June 1989, during the judicial committee process before himself and Messrs De Rooy and Bowditch, BCG and her mother reported to the committee an incident of abuse against BCK by BCH.[364]

What Mr Ali's notes say about BCH's confession

194 Page 12 of Mr Ali's notes records that the judicial committee met on 10 July 1989 to discuss disfellowshipping BCH on 'charges of "LOOSE CONDUCT" and "Lying"'.[365] On the same page, the notes record that an appointment was made over the telephone with BCH and someone else to meet at the Kingdom Hall at 7.30pm on 12 July 1989.[366]

195 Mr Ali was taken to page 14 of his notes, which relevantly recorded the following: [367]

> [BCH] – told of charges "Loose conduct + lying"

196 Having previously agreed to the possibility that the pages prior to the reverse of the page numbered 14 record matters dealt with by the judicial committee prior to BCH's appeal on 19 July 1989,[368] Mr Ali agreed that the notes record BCH confessing to the judicial committee to abusing BCG.[369] Mr Ali agreed that in spite of having confessed to the sexual abuse of his daughter, BCG, BCH was subsequently disfellowshipped by the committee on grounds relating only to his extra-marital relationship and not to the sexual abuse of BCG.[370]

Submissions in relation to the evidence before the judicial committee

197 Each of Messrs Ali, Bowditch and De Rooy told the Royal Commission that owing to the passage of time, they were unable to recall specific details or the sequence of events in the case of BCG.[371]

198 Mr De Rooy denied in evidence that the judicial committee considering BCG's allegations was made aware of the allegations of abuse in respect of BCG's sisters.[372] He told the Royal Commission that had the judicial committee been made aware it would have acted.[373] Mr De Rooy's evidence was that, in spite of the allegations recorded in the notes, 'we did not know of that information'.[374] Mr De Rooy told the Royal Commission that his memory was vague and acknowledged that the notes were likely to be a more reliable record of what information was considered by the judicial committee at the time than his own memory, but insisted that the judicial committee was not aware of the additional allegations.[375]

199 Mr De Rooy also told the Royal Commission that it was his recollection that BCH did not confess to abusing BCG until the appeals committee meeting, however Mr De Rooy could not provide any explanation for the confession recorded in Mr Ali's notes.[376]

200 In the light of Mr De Rooy's concession as to the reliability of the notes, and Mr Ali's evidence as to their provenance and arrangement, it is submitted that where the notes are reasonably clear they should be accepted in preference to the recollection of the elders. In particular, it should be accepted that:

a) on or about 1 June 1989, the elders were advised by BCG and her mother that BCG's older sister and her two younger sisters had each been sexually abused by BCH, and

b) between 12 and 19 July 1989, and before the judicial committee's decision to disfellowship BCH, BCH confessed to the judicial committee his sexual abuse of BCG.

201 It is submitted that contrary to evidence given before the Royal Commission by Messrs Ali, Bowditch, and De Rooy, the judicial committee had before it sufficient evidence in the form of the allegations of BCG's sisters to conclude, according to the evidentiary requirements set out in Pay Attention 1981,[377] that BCH had sexually abused BCG.

202 It is submitted that the judicial committee of Messrs Ali, Bowditch and De Rooy failed to take account of the evidence of BCG's sisters and of the confession of BCH in deciding the grounds upon which to disfellowship BCH.

The decision to disfellowship BCH

203 BCH was ultimately disfellowshipped, not for child sexual abuse, but for 'loose conduct' in relation to his extra-marital relationship and for 'lying' about it.[378]

The report to the Branch Office about the decision to disfellowship BCH

204 The report of the judicial committee to the Branch Office regarding the decision to disfellowship BCH referred only to the charges of 'loose conduct' and 'lying'.[379] The report did not mention BCG's allegation of child sexual abuse against BCH or the investigation undertaken by Messrs De Rooy, Ali, and Bowditch.[380]

205 Mr Bowditch was unable to explain why the report did not mention BCG's allegation of child sexual abuse.[381]

206 Mr De Rooy told the Royal Commission that the report did not refer to BCG's allegations because, in his view, the investigation into her allegations was still ongoing.[382] He agreed however that there can be no ongoing investigation of a disfellowshipped person.[383]

207 When asked what would have become of BCG's allegation had BCH not appealed the decision to disfellowship him, Mr De Rooy told the Royal Commission that he felt that BCG had the right to go to the police.[384]

208 Mr De Rooy was unable to recall if he supported or encouraged BCG to report her allegations to the authorities.[385]

5.4 BCH's appeal

209 On 19 July 1989, BCH sent a fax to Messrs De Rooy, Bowditch and Ali appealing the judicial committee's decision to disfellowship him for 'loose conduct' and 'lying'.[386] An appeal committee was convened and was comprised of three new elders, Joe Mirarziz,

Don Wilson and Jim Bennett.[387] The appeal committee elders were from other congregations in the area.[388] Mr De Rooy, Mr Ali and Mr Bowditch also attended the appeal committee meeting as observers.[389]

210 Mr Ali told the Royal Commission that BCG's allegations of sexual abuse resurfaced during the appeal committee meeting.[390] As a result, BCG was brought, alone, before BCH and the six male elders to be interviewed again.[391]

211 Messrs Bowditch and De Rooy told the Royal Commission that during the appeal committee meeting BCH confessed to abusing BCG.[392]

212 The appeal committee upheld the decision to disfellowship BCH for 'loose conduct' and 'lying', and added, relevantly, the ground of 'porneia' to reflect BCH's confession to 'gross sexual acts against' BCG on five or six occasions.[393]

213 In spite of the decision of the appeal committee to add the ground of 'porneia', the form recording BCH's disfellowshipping only recorded the charges of 'loose conduct' and 'lying'.[394] In oral evidence, Mr De Rooy accepted that this was an oversight.[395]

214 Mr Bowditch told the Royal Commission that the Mareeba Congregation was not informed of the reason for BCH's disfellowshipping.[396]

215 Mr De Rooy and Mr Ali told the Royal Commission that, despite BCH's admission to the appeal committee, they did not consider reporting the matter to police.[397] Mr Ali and Mr Bowditch accepted that the result of this was that BCH, a man they knew to have confessed to child sexual abuse, was left at large in the community.[398]

BCG's reaction after BCH's disfellowshipping

216 BCG told the Royal Commission that she was devastated by the decision of the original judicial committee to disfellowship BCH on grounds unrelated to his sexual abuse of her.[399] It appeared to her that BCH's abuse of her did not qualify as wrongdoing in the eyes of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[400]

217 Mr Ali's handwritten notes of the original investigation and judicial committee record that BCG was counselled by the elders against speaking to others, including her soon to be fiancé, about her case.[401] Mr De Rooy told the Royal Commission that the counsel was aimed at protecting the confidentiality of the matter and that this was intended to be for BCG's benefit.[402] Mr De Rooy accepted that such counsel may have had the effect of making BCG feel silenced.[403]

218 BCG told the Royal Commission that, following BCH's disfellowshipping, many people in the congregation accused her of lying about BCH's abuse and that, as a result, she felt worthless, helpless and embarrassed.[404]

219 BCG told the Royal Commission that after and as a result of her experience of the committee meetings with the elders, she attempted suicide.[405] BCG said that she reported her suicide attempt to the elders as it was considered a sin by the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[406] BCG gave evidence that she was chastised by Mr De Rooy for attempting suicide because it was viewed as a serious wrongdoing.[407] Mr De Rooy was unable to recall speaking to BCG about her attempted suicide.[408]

Available findings on the investigation and judicial committee processes following BCG's disclosure

F17 The elders did not explain to BCG the purpose of their investigation and their meetings with BCG such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

F18 It was traumatising for BCG to be required by the elders to tell what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of sexually abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCG disclosing the full extent her abuse.

F19 It would have been supportive of the elders to offer BCG the opportunity of the support and involvement of other women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

F20 During their judicial committee investigation or proceedings the elders received evidence that BCH had abused BCG's elder sister and her two younger sisters, but they took no action in relation to that evidence.

F21 The evidence presented to the judicial committee of BCH having abused his other daughters satisfied the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules with regard to sufficiency of evidence to establish that BCH had abused BCG, but the elders wrongly ignored that evidence and accordingly failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

F22 In the course of the judicial committee process, and before the elders reached a conclusion on BCH's guilt in relation to his extra-marital conduct, BCH confessed to having abused BCG.

F23 The elders inexplicably and wrongly ignored BCH's confession to having abused BCG and thereby, within the precepts of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules and procedures, failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

F24 BCG was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

F25 The appeal committee's requirement that BCG give evidence of her sexual abuse by her father to a group of seven men including her named abuser was unjustified and traumatising to BCG and should never have happened.

F26 The failure by the elders to report BCH's sexual abuse of BCG to the police had the result that BCH remained at large in the community and a risk to children, and reflects that the elders were not concerned with child safety but rather with keeping their organisation 'clean'.

F27 The judicial committee's failure to uphold BCG's complaint of abuse by BCH conveyed to BCG that the organisation tolerated child sexual abuse within its ranks.

F28 The advice given by the elders to BCG that she not speak about her abuse to anyone had the effect of silencing her.

F29 The elders' treatment of BCG was unsympathetic and unsupportive and left her feeling worthless and helpless.

5.5 The reinstatement of BCH

220 In February 1990, less than eight months after the appeal committee's decision to disfellowship him, BCH applied to the Beenleigh East Congregation for reinstatement as a Jehovah's Witness.[409]

221 Mr Spinks and Mr Monty Baker were both elders in the Beenleigh East Congregation at the time that BCH applied for reinstatement.[410]

222 In a letter dated 19 March 1990, the elders of Beenleigh East Congregation wrote to the Mareeba elders seeking further information about the circumstances of BCH's disfellowshipping.[411] That letter did not refer to or seek further information in relation to BCH's sexual abuse of BCG.[412]

223 Mr Baker said that he and his fellow elders at the Beenleigh East Congregation must have been told about the sexual abuse because it was discussed at the first meeting of the Beenleigh East judicial committee.[413] Mr Baker said that the primary concern of the

Beenleigh East judicial committee was nevertheless BCH's conduct in relation to the charges of 'loose conduct' and 'lying'.[414]

224 In a letter dated 23 April 1990, the elders at the Mareeba Congregation replied to the Beenleigh East elders recommending that BCH's application for reinstatement be rejected on the basis that BCH was not repentant for his wrongdoing.[415]

225 Mr De Rooy accepted that although the letter of 23 April 1990 referred to BCH 'sexually molesting his two eldest daughters', the reasons given by the Mareeba elders for rejection of BCH's reinstatement application were concerned only with the continuing relationship between BCH and another woman.[416] Mr De Rooy did not accept that the absence of a reference to child sexual abuse in their reasons suggests that the Mareeba judicial committee did not take the child sexual abuse allegations seriously.[417]

226 In around June of 1990, the Beenleigh East judicial committee rejected BCH's first application for reinstatement on the basis, Mr Spinks said, that BCH had not displayed 'godly sadness' or have a record of 'works that befit repentance'.[418] In its report of 15 June 1990, the committee noted that BCH 'denied any incest' and claimed that his confession before the appeal committee at Mareeba had been made 'under pressure'.[419]

227 Between September 1990 and April 1992, BCH sent a series of letters to elders from the Mareeba, Beenleigh East and St George Congregations, as well as to the Australia Branch Office. In each letter BCH made a plea for reinstatement.[420]

228 In April 1992, both the Branch Office and elders from the Mareeba Congregation sent letters to the St George Congregation, where BCH was at the time attending, advising that the elders at St George should display caution in believing any display of repentance by BCH.[421]

229 On 19 October 1992, elders from the St George Congregation wrote to the Mareeba Congregation recommending that there were now 'ample reasons' to support BCH's reinstatement, including that he had expressed 'sincere remorse over his past conduct'.[422]

230 By 4 November 1992, elders from the Mareeba Congregation had agreed to 'go along with [the St George Congregation's] recommendation for reinstatement'.[423]

231 BCH was reinstated on 13 November 1992.[424] Mr De Rooy said that despite agreeing to BCH's reinstatement, he was 'very hesitant' about BCH being reinstated at the time.[425]

232 Mr De Rooy accepted that an important component to consider in any decision to reinstate a perpetrator of child sexual abuse is whether or not the perpetrator apologised to the victim.[426] Mr De Rooy said that, as far as he could recall, BCH never issued such an apology to either BCG or her older sister.[427]

233 It is submitted that in circumstances where Mr De Rooy remained hesitant about agreeing to reinstate BCH and where BCH had not showed repentance by apologising to BCG,[428] the elders from Mareeba Congregation should not have agreed to reinstate BCH in 1992.

BCG's reaction to BCH's reinstatement

234 BCG said that when she learned that her father had been reinstated, she told Mr De Rooy that she was concerned for the safety of the congregation and that she intended to report the matter to the police.[429] BCG said that Mr De Rooy responded that if she reported to police, she would be disfellowshipped.[430] Mr De Rooy could not recall this conversation with BCG and did not accept that he might have said that to BCG.[431]

5.6 BCG's correspondence with the Branch Office

235 On 19 December 1995, BCG wrote to the Branch Office expressing concern about her father's premature reinstatement.[432] In her letter, BCG informed the Branch Office that she was concerned that BCH would sexually abuse other children within the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[433]

236 On 26 February 1996, the Service Desk at the Branch Office responded to BCG, telling her that they would investigate the matter and counselled her to have faith in Jehovah and the elders in her congregation.[434]

237 BCG told the Royal Commission that upon receiving the Branch Office's letter, she felt angry, upset and let down.[435] BCG told the Royal Commission that she had already put her faith in the elders when she reported the abuse to them but felt that they didn't protect or support her.[436] Mr Geoffrey Jackson told the Royal Commission that he expected any letter from a Branch Office to be written with a spirit of love and concern, and that the Australia Branch's letter did not, on its face, reflect that love and concern.[437]

238 On 25 July 1996, the Service Desk at the Branch Office wrote to the body of elders at the Mareeba Congregation asking whether the fact that BCH had not apologised to BCG was a factor taken into consideration in the decision to reinstate BCH.[438] In its letter the Service Desk noted that it undertook to BCG to follow up on this matter, and asked the body of elders to reassure BCG that this was the case.[439]

239 There is no evidence that the Jehovah's Witness organisation took any action subsequent to its letter of 25 July 1996 to address the concerns expressed by BCG in her letter, to respond to her letter, or to offer her support.

Available findings on the reinstatement of BCH

F30 BCH was reinstated as a Jehovah's Witness little more than three years after he had been disfellowshipped for, amongst other things, five or six counts of sexual abuse of his daughter.

F31 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of the risk that BCH posed to children, paid little regard to the fact that he had been disfellowshipped because of child sexual abuse, and was focussed principally on his extra-marital relationship.

F32 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of BCH's failure to apologise to BCG, a factor relevant to consideration of sincere repentance, or of what BCG might have had to say about BCH being reinstated.

F33 The decision to reinstate BCH was disrespectful and unsupportive of BCG.

F34 The Branch Office's response to BCG on 26 February 1996 caused BCG to feel angry, upset and let down, and did not convey support and concern to BCG on the part of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.

5.7 BCG's report to police

240 In or around 1998 or 1999, BCG decided to leave the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[440] BCG said that, as a result of this decision, she was shunned, ostracised and actively avoided by members of her local congregation.[441]

241 After leaving the Jehovah's Witness organisation, BCG reported the abuse by her father to the police.[442] In around 2001, criminal proceedings commenced against BCH in relation to his sexual abuse of BCG.

242 The Royal Commission heard evidence from Mr Jason Davies, who was then a case lawyer with the Queensland Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) assigned to the case of BCH. Mr Davies told the Royal Commission that in preparing the case for prosecution he became concerned that the inculpatory admissions made by BCH during the committee meetings would be rendered inadmissible at trial.[443] Mr Davies said that his concern arose in relation to BCH's admission because of the circumstances in which it was made and that an incentive to early confession was the prospect of reduced punishment.[444] Mr Davies said that after preparing the indictment he had no further involvement in the case, but that it was reported to him that ultimately BCH's inculpatory statements had been excluded on voir dire at the first trial.[445]

243 BCH's first trial resulted in a hung jury while his second trial was declared a mistrial.[446] After a third trial which concluded in December of 2004, BCH was convicted for the unlawful and indecent assault and attempted rape of BCG and was sentenced to three years' imprisonment.[447]

244 The Royal Commission heard that the elders from the Mareeba Congregation who had presided over the committee meetings and appeal committee meetings gave evidence at the first trial of BCH.[448]

245 BCG told the Royal Commission that her experience of the three criminal trials was significantly less traumatic than her experience sitting through the committee meetings.[449]

Available findings on the impact of the judicial committee process on criminal proceedings against BCH

F35 The judicial committee and appeal committee processes that preceded BCG reporting her abuse by her father to the police complicated the criminal proceedings because of the numbers of people involved in those processes and the telling and retelling of the experience.

5.8 The second disfellowshipping of BCH

246 The Royal Commission heard evidence from Mr Allan Pencheff who was an elder in the Loganholme Congregation between 1991 and 2005.[450]

247 Mr Pencheff told the Royal Commission that following BCH's reinstatement in 1992, BCH started attending the Loganholme Congregation in Queensland.[451]

248 In a letter dated 17 December 1992, the Mareeba Congregation recommended certain restrictions be placed on BCH due to the 'gravity of the wrongs committed' but did not refer to BCH's charge of child sexual abuse, nor recommend any restrictions regarding BCH's exposure to children.[452]

249 Mr Pencheff gave evidence that at the time BCH joined the Loganholme Congregation he was restricted from answering at meetings and giving talks from the platform.[453] Mr Pencheff said that he was not aware of any reason to restrict BCH's contact with children.[454] He said that he only became aware of BCH's history of child sexual abuse when criminal proceedings were commenced against BCH in 2001.[455]

250 In circumstances where Pay Attention 1991 provided that privileges could be 'restored progressively when it is determined that the individual has progressed spiritually …',[456] it is submitted that by omitting reference to the nature of the 'sin' for which BCH had been disfellowshipped the elders at the Mareeba Congregation made it impossible for the elders at the Loganholme to apply restrictions commensurate with the gravity of the 'sin' and to properly assess if BCH had made spiritual progression in accordance with the direction in Pay Attention 1991.

251 On 1 November 2002, the Service Desk at the Branch Office wrote to the Loganholme Congregation advising that BCH had 'recently been prosecuted for sexually interfering with' BCG and her younger sister.[457] In its letter, the Service Desk noted that until 'his recent guilty plea' BCH had consistently denied that he had sexually abused his daughters.[458] It is not clear why the Service Desk was under the impression that BCH had pleaded guilty, as there is no evidence to suggest that he did so at any time other than before the Mareeba judicial and appeal committees.

252 The Service Desk instructed two elders of the Loganholme Congregation to meet with BCH to investigate his lying to elders about the abuse of his daughters.[459] The Loganholme elders were instructed that if BCH refused to confess to his wrongdoing, he should be informed that he would likely be disfellowshipped for sexually abusing BCG's younger sister as well as for dishonesty.[460]

253 In a memorandum to the Service Desk dated 23 January 2003,[461] Mr Toole (writing from the Legal Department) observed that the primary issue before the Loganholme judicial committee in 2003 was BCH's lying, as opposed to his sexual abuse of BCG.[462] Mr Toole did not accept that it was reasonable to conclude from his memorandum that he considered BCH's dishonesty as being more serious than the child sexual abuse.[463]

The decision to disfellowship BCH for lying

254 Mr Pencheff gave evidence that he was one of the two elders that met with BCH and later chaired the Loganholme judicial committee that was established to consider whether to disfellowship BCH for lying.[464]

255 Mr Pencheff told the Royal Commission that the Loganholme judicial committee accepted the allegations of BCH's three daughters as sufficient evidence to establish that in addition to abusing BCG, BCH had also abused BCG's three sisters.[465]

256 In March 2003, despite accepting the truth of the allegations of BCH's three daughters, and the instruction from the Service Desk that upon conviction BCH 'will likely be disfellowshipped for sexually abusing' BCG's younger sister, the elders at Loganholme Congregation disfellowshipped BCH for 'deliberate, malicious lying and bearing false witness' and not for child sexual abuse.[466]

257 Mr Pencheff did not accept that the reasons for BCH's disfellowshipping recorded in the judicial committee's report suggest that, at the time, the judicial committee considered the charge of lying to be more serious and pressing than a charge of 'porneia' or child sexual abuse.[467] Mr Pencheff said that the charge of child sexual abuse and the charge of dishonesty went 'hand in hand' and that the judicial committee took the charge of child sexual abuse very seriously.[468]

258 It is submitted that the reasons recorded in Mr Toole's memorandum to the Service Desk,[469] the notification of disfellowshipping form,[470] and the judicial committee's report regarding their decision to disfellowship BCH,[471] do not support Mr Pencheff's evidence that the Loganholme judicial committee did not consider a charge of lying to be more serious than one of child sexual abuse.

259 It is submitted that despite having evidence that BCH had sexually abused BCG's three sisters, the judicial committee disfellowshipped BCH for dishonesty in relation to child sexual abuse, not for the child sexual abuse itself, and that this decision prioritised the charge of dishonesty over the charge of child sexual abuse.

Available findings on the risk management and second disfellowshipping of BCH

F36 When BCH was reinstated no restrictions were placed on him which were relevant to his risk to children despite his established history of child sexual abuse.

F37 BCH was disfellowshipped a second time for lying in relation to child sexual abuse rather than for child sexual abuse itself.

F38 The reasons canvassed and then given for the second disfellowshipping of BCH show that those from the Jehovah's Witness organisation who were involved were more concerned about a charge of lying than they were about BCH's sexual abuse of his daughters.

5.9 BCH's repeated requests for reinstatement

260 Since at least May 2006 BCH has continued to make repeated applications for reinstatement, firstly to the Loganholme Congregation in Queensland, and later to the Kalamunda Congregation in Western Australia.[472]

261 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that the Service Desk has been closely involved in providing guidance to the elders on the respective judicial committees that have been responsible for considering BCH's applications for reinstatement in the Loganholme and Kalamunda Congregations.[473] Mr Spinks said that '[c]lear direction had been given to the elders that, until [BCH] fully acknowledges his sins of child abuse and lying in connection with these offences, it would be difficult for the committees or the victims to consider that he was repentant'.[474]

262 As at the date of the public hearing, BCH remained disfellowshipped as a Jehovah's Witness. [475]

5.10 Impact of abuse

263 BCG told the Royal Commission that she experienced depression during her teens and that after she was sexually abused by her father her depression became worse. BCG attempted suicide as a result of her experience of the committee meetings with the elders in the Mareeba Congregation.[476] BCG stated that, at the time, she couldn't bear the judgement and public vilification by those around her.[477]

264 BCG told the Royal Commission that she has at times feared being ostracised, shunned and vilified by those around her. She said that she has always lived in fear of her father, and that she had lived in fear of Jehovah.[478]

265 BCG told the Royal Commission that during the criminal proceedings against her father, she was terrified that Jehovah would kill her for having reported to the police and for bringing reproach upon his name.[479]

5.11 Redress

266 In her written statement, BCG told the Royal Commission that the current beliefs and practices of the Jehovah's Witness organisation – specifically the two-witness rule, the practice of not reporting to authorities outside the organisation, and the factors taken into account when reinstating an alleged perpetrator of child sexual abuse – appear to favour and even protect paedophiles.[480]

267 BCG told the Royal Commission that in her view it was essential that uniform mandatory reporting laws are introduced across Australia to apply to organisations like the Jehovah's Witnesses in order to protect children.[481]

268 BCG also gave evidence that the Jehovah's Witness organisation needed to be made financially accountable in order to redress the suffering of past, present and future victims of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation.[482]

Part 6 A Scriptural approach to child sexual abuse policy

6.1 Policies based on the Scriptures

269 The Jehovah's Witnesses organisation relies primarily on Bible passages to set policies and practices.[483] The Jehovah's Witnesses organisation says that it has had Bible-based policies on child sexual abuse for over 30 years and that it is only authorised to address child sexual abuse in accordance with Scriptural direction.[484] These policies have been refined and periodically addressed in various publications over the past several decades.[485]

6.2 Governing Body responsible for Scriptural interpretation and policy formulation

Interpreting the Scriptures

270 Mr Jackson gave evidence that the primary role of the Governing Body is to interpret the Scriptures.[486] He confirmed in evidence that the Governing Body's interpretation of the Scriptures in relation to particular issues might change or develop from time to time and confirmed that one example of such development was in relation to the relaxation of the prohibition on blood transfusions to allow for blood fractions.[487]

271 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that the Branch Committee is not involved in Scriptural interpretation because it is the Governing Body which provides the definitive Scriptural interpretation.[488] Mr O'Brien said that he was not aware of there being any scope for the Australia Branch to adopt a different Scriptural interpretation to that provided by the Governing Body.[489]

Formulation and promulgation of policy

272 Mr Jackson agreed that all policies of the Jehovah's Witness organisation are subject to Scriptural principles and that the Governing Body approves all policies to ensure that they are in keeping with the Scriptures.[490]

273 The Governing Body gives final approval for new publications and audio and video programmes.[491] Mr Jackson agreed that the Governing Body gives final approval for such publications as the:[492]

a) Awake! and Watchtower magazines

b) Shepherd the Flock elders' handbook

c) Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook

d) 2015 Branch Organization Manual

e) letters signed on behalf of the Governing Body, and

f) templates for letters to bodies of elders.

274 Branch offices around the world, including the Australia Branch Office,[493] may write articles for the Awake! and Watchtower publications, but the articles must be submitted to the Governing Body's Writing Committee for approval.[494]

275 Mr Jackson and Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that policy letters issued by the Governing Body may be adjusted locally by branch offices to reflect the requirements of local laws.[495] Mr Jackson said that it would be unusual for a branch office to publish its own manual or guidelines in relation to responding to allegations of child sexual abuse.[496]

276 From at the least the 1990s, the Australia Branch Office has, under the direction of the Governing Body,[497] periodically issued directives in the form of letters addressed to all bodies of elders providing instruction on how to respond to allegations of child sexual abuse.[498]

6.3 Australia Branch Committee authority to produce or revise policy

277 Mr Jackson said that it is the Governing Body's expectation that the branch offices around the world will act in accordance with the procedures and guidelines set out in the 2015 Branch Organization Manual.[499] Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that 'the theocratic or Scriptural direction that the Governing Body provides, is the same in every branch and for all Jehovah's Witnesses, worldwide'.[500]

278 Mr O'Brien explained that the Branch Committee faithfully implements and follows the direction of the Governing Body.[501] Mr Toole said that Jehovah's Witness congregations in Australia take their direction and instructions from the Branch Office.[502]

279 Mr Jackson explained that although there is an expectation that branch committee members will follow the direction of the Governing Body, 'there are provisions for those branch committees to get back to us if they see that there is something that doesn't work, and we can adjust it accordingly'.[503]

280 In contrast to what is set out above, Mr Spinks' evidence was that as long as the Australia Branch Office doesn't stray from the Scriptures, it has the 'full authority to produce documents, to clearly set out for seminars, letters to elders, letters to publishers, what needs to be made clear locally'.[504] Mr Spinks said that the Australia Branch has the authority to 'determine something different from what is set out in the [current documents] that have come down from New York'.[505]

281 There is no evidence to support Mr Spinks' version on the authority of the Australia Branch Office to publish things differently from, or without the approval of, the Governing Body. To the contrary, documents in evidence include an exchange of correspondence between the Australia Branch Office and the Governing Body's Service Committee where the former seeks from the latter agreement to the inclusion of an article on a particular subject in a newsletter.[506] There is also correspondence demonstrating that the Governing Body's committees set policies and procedures and guidelines for dealing with issues arising in relation to child sexual abuse for the Australia Branch.[507]

282 In the circumstances, it is submitted that the Royal Commission should prefer the documentary evidence and the oral evidence of Messrs Jackson, Toole and O'Brien to that of Mr Spinks regarding the extent of a branch office's authority to determine policies and procedures.

Available findings on the authority of the Governing Body

F39 Mr Spinks' evidence that the Australia Branch has full authority to produce documents, seminars, letters to elders and letters to publishers without the approval or agreement of the Governing Body is rejected.

F40 The Governing Body retains authority in respect of all publications in the name of the Jehovah's Witness organisation and any view or perspective contrary to that of the Governing Body is not tolerated.

6.4 Flexibility of Scriptural interpretation

283 Mr O'Brien gave evidence that although the Jehovah's Witness organisation is governed by first century Biblical principles, Jehovah's Witnesses believe that many of those principles 'are timeless, in any place, any time'.[508]

284 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that if the learnings of science in relation to sexual abuse were in conflict with the Jehovah's Witnesses' understanding of the Bible, then '[a]bsolutely the Bible will prevail'.[509] He also gave evidence that where there is 'clear Scriptural arrangement' or 'clear instructions in the Scriptures', the Jehovah's Witness organisation's approach to the application of the Bible will not change as society changes.[510]

285 While Mr Jackson[511] and Mr Spinks[512] both accepted that the Governing Body may change its interpretation of the Scriptures from time to time, several witnesses, including Mr Jackson, told the Royal Commission that there was no scope for flexibility in the interpretation of the Scriptures in relation to:

a) the two-witness rule[513]
b) the practice of shunning[514]
c) the practice of disfellowshipping unrepentant individuals and reproving repentant individuals[515]
d) the reinstatement of repentant individuals,[516] and

Part 7 Current systems, policies and procedures for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse

7.1 Documents said to record current policy and procedure

286 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that the current polices of the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation for dealing with an accusation of child sexual abuse are outlined in:[518]

a) the Bible (the English edition published by the Jehovah's Witness organisation is the New World Translation of the Holy Scriptures)

b) the current elders' Handbook entitled Shepherd the Flock of God[519]

c) Jehovah's Witness organisation publications available to all congregants approaching baptism,[520] such as Organized to Do Jehovah's Will[521]

d) updated guidelines issued by the Governing Body to all branch offices in August 2013 regarding how service desks should field questions from elders regarding child abuse matters (the 2013 Service Desk Guidelines),[522] and

e) letters sent to all bodies of elders, in particular the letter of 1 October 2012,[523] which consolidated into one letter the spiritual advice and guidance provided in various letters from preceding years as to how Jehovah's Witnesses handle allegations of child abuse.[524]

287 Mr Spinks and Mr O'Brien also told the Royal Commission that a pivotal Watchtower article entitled 'Let Us Abhor What is Wicked' published in January 1997 clarifies in Biblical terms the principles to which a congregation should have regard in considering how a 'child molester' should be viewed and treated.[525]

7.2 Training

288 Elders within the Jehovah's Witness organisation are given periodic training on the implementation of its policies and procedures.[526] The training takes the form of one-day programmes or seminars called Kingdom Ministry Schools.[527]

289 Messrs De Rooy, Ali, Bowditch and Doug Jackson each told the Royal Commission that from the 1990s they had received specific instruction in the form of discussions at elders' schools and training courses on responding to child sexual abuse.[528]

290 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that aside from what is published in the Jehovah's Witness organisation's literature, congregational elders are not given specific training on identifying child sexual abuse.[529]

7.3 Initial response to an allegation of child sexual abuse

Congregation should report wrongdoing

291 Organized to do Jehovah's Will instructs members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation that 'gross sins' should be reported to the elders because they threaten the moral cleanness of the congregation.[530] A person may approach the congregational elders 'either to confess their own sin or to report what they know regarding the wrongdoing of others'.[531]

292 Organized to do Jehovah's Will also instructs members that once a matter has been reported to the elders, 'you will have taken the matter as far as you can', that the matter should be left in the hands of the elders, and that one should 'trust in Jehovah that it will be resolved'.[532]

Types of Scriptural wrongdoing that include child sexual abuse

293 The official position of the Jehovah's Witness organisation is that it abhors child sexual abuse and that it will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts.[533]

294 Elders are instructed that child sexual abuse includes:

> … sexual intercourse with a minor; oral or anal sex with a minor; fondling the genitals, breasts, or buttocks of a minor; voyeurism of a minor; indecent exposure to a minor; soliciting a minor for sexual conduct; or any kind of involvement with child pornography. Depending on the circumstances of the case, it may also include "sexting" with a minor. "Sexting" describes the sending of nude photos, seminude (sic) photos, or sexually explicit text messages electronically, such as by phone.[534]

295 The Jehovah's Witness organisation also instructs elders that child sexual abuse is captured by one or more of the following Scriptural offences:

a) porneia, which includes sexual intercourse, oral or anal sex, 'immoral use of the genitals, whether in a natural or perverted way, with lewd intent'[535]
b) brazen or loose conduct, which is conduct which reflects 'an attitude that betrays disrespect, disregard, or even contempt for divine standards, laws, and authority' and includes child sexual abuse,[536] and
c) gross uncleanness, which can include, to the extent that an adult involves a child in the viewing, 'an entrenched practice of viewing, perhaps over a considerable period of time, abhorrent forms of pornography that is sexually degrading', including child pornography.[537]

Elders to report immediately to the Branch Office / Legal Department

296 Upon receipt of an allegation or complaint of child sexual abuse, two elders from the congregation should immediately contact the Branch Office Legal Department for legal advice.[538] Mr Toole said that this is a direction issued by the Governing Body to elders serving throughout the world.[539] The direction to call the Legal Department applies

'even' in circumstances where the abuse alleged is historical, and where the allegation is based on the testimony of only one witness. [540]

Branch Office Legal Department to advise on legal obligations

297 The Branch Office Legal Department will provide to the congregational elders 'legal advice based on the facts and the applicable law', including in relation to any mandatory reporting obligations applicable to the congregational elders.[541]

Guidance provided by the Service Department / Desk

298 After calling the Legal Department, the elders may be directed to contact the Service Department for assistance with any questions regarding theocratic or judicial aspects of the case, how to protect children, and how to spiritually comfort and support the victim.[542] The Service Department also provides guidance on when and how elders should interview a young victim of child abuse.[543]

299 The 2013 Service Desk Guidelines provide for the guidance that should be offered when an elder is calling in relation to reports from publishers of an awareness that a person in an appointed role has 'molested a child in the past'.[544] Those Guidelines say that the elders should be informed of any legal obligation to report to authorities that may apply, and that 'individuals should not be discouraged from reporting matters to the authorities but should be reminded of the need for confidentiality when speaking with others, thus avoiding a charge of slander'.[545]

300 Mr Spinks gave evidence that in the first instance the advice given to congregational elders reporting an incident of child sexual abuse is generic advice 'from the published material', followed by a request that the elders provide the Service Desk with details in writing to enable the Service Desk to assist them.[546] Mr Spinks said that the generic advice offered is set out on page 131 of the elders' handbook, Shepherd the Flock, which reads as follows:[547]

> Child abuse is a crime. Never suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or other authorities. If you are asked, make it clear that whether to report the matter to authorities or not is a personal decision for each individual to make and that there are no congregation sanctions for either decision. Elders will not criticize anyone who reports such an allegation to the authorities. If the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so. – Gal. 6:5.[548]

301 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that it was not the practice of the Service Desk to put or confirm in writing the advice given in the first instance to elders.[549]

302 Although the Shepherd the Flock handbook advises that '[t]he branch office will … give direction based on the circumstances involved in each situation',[550] Mr Spinks accepted that the position is that following provision of generic advice to elders by the Service Desk, 'then it is over to the elders as to what they do' and that the Service Desk does not offer 'specific advice in a particular situation'.[551]

303 However, it was the evidence of Mr Horley in particular, but also of Messrs De Rooy, Bello and Doug Jackson, that they as congregational elders specifically rely upon the advice of the Branch Office in handling complaints of child sexual abuse.[552] Mr Horley told the Royal Commission that he would need to seek advice and take direction from the Branch Office on how to proceed in relation to matters involving reporting to police,[553] application of the two-witness rule,[554] interviewing of survivors,[555] flexibility of Scriptural interpretation,[556] fairness of the process,[557] and how he might proceed if faced with BCB's situation again today.[558]

304 Mr Horley also said that there may have been changes to the process, but that those changes are not recorded in the elders' handbook, and that is where the Branch Office may offer further advice when elders contact it as directed.[559]

305 It is submitted that the present practice of the Service Desk of offering generic advice about how to handle a complaint of child sexual abuse is unlikely to provide sufficient guidance to congregational elders who are directed to contact the Branch Office for, and expect, specific guidance[560] in handling such a complaint. It is further submitted that there is therefore a risk that congregational elders with little or no experience of handling complaints of child sexual abuse are left without proper guidance to deal with such complaints, thereby exposing victims of abuse to the risk of further trauma as a result of inexperienced handling of their complaints.

7.4 Investigation of allegations of child sexual abuse

Two elders to investigate every allegation

306 Elders are instructed that, having carefully reviewed the letter to all bodies of elders of 1 October 2012[561] and paragraphs 18-21 of Chapter 12 of the Shepherd the Flock handbook,[562] two congregational elders should investigate every allegation of child sexual abuse.[563]

Victim to give testimony before the elders and the accused

307 As a part of their investigation, the elders are instructed that they should speak to the accused about the allegation.[564] If the accused denies the allegation, then the elders 'should try to arrange a meeting with him and the accuser together'.[565] In the case of an allegation of child sexual abuse, the elders are directed to contact the Branch Office before arranging a meeting with the child and the accused.[566]

308 Mr Spinks gave evidence that since the mid-1990s the Jehovah's Witness organisation has 'recognised that a victim or a survivor should not have to confront their abuser'.[567] The only document which Mr Spinks was able to identify in which this policy was stated was a 'S-337' form dated 1998[568] which had recently been located by an older member of the Service Department stuck inside his copy of the superseded Pay Attention 1991 elders' handbook.[569]

309 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that the S-337 form was an outline of what circuit overseers would go through in their meetings with bodies of elders in the applicable six month period and that the policy would not have been restated in subsequent S-337 forms.[570]

310 In the circumstances, the document cannot be said to be a current record of policy and is of very limited relevance. Be that as it may, it provides as follows:[571]

> 1. How can the person who is a witness to a serious sin aid both the wrongdoer and the congregation? (The witness should make sure the responsible elders become aware of it. Usually best to approach the person involved first, though it is not wrong to go directly to elders. He should

In most cases, he will have opportunity to hear their testimony and reply. After presenting accusation and its source, the committee will give the accused opportunity to respond. However, if, perhaps due to distance, it is impractical for the witness to be present, this should not prevent the committee from proceeding.

311 The paragraphs extracted from the S-377 form above appear to mirror very closely the instruction offered to elders in Pay Attention 1991.[572] The paragraphs, however, expand upon Pay Attention 1991 in two respects. First, in the context of the requirement that a witness should confront the accused before approaching elders, the S-377 form specifies that child victims of molestation should not be required to confront the accused. It is submitted that on its face the S-377 form exemption for children who are victims of sexual abuse applies only to children (i.e. not when child victims are adults) and it does not apply beyond the requirement that a person in the first instance confront the person who has wronged them, let alone to the stage at which elders are investigating a complaint. Secondly, the form provides for an exemption from presentation of an allegation before the accused and the committee if such presentation is impractical. This latter provision was later incorporated into the Shepherd the Flock elders' handbook,[573] and as with the provision in Shepherd the Flock, it is submitted, appears only to provide for exemption in circumstances of practical difficulty (such as distance) rather than when the witness is a victim of child sexual abuse.

312 Mr Spinks gave further evidence that a statement written by the victim and given to the investigating elders would be sufficient at the investigative stage of a matter.[574] He agreed that insofar as the S-337 form supported that policy, it only did so in respect of the investigative stage as opposed to the judicial hearing stage of a matter.[575]

313 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that an accuser facing their abuser via written statement 'conforms perfectly with the Scriptural requirement'.[576] The Scriptural requirement referred to is presumably that recorded in Pay Attention 1991 as

'[a]ccusers should be willing to assume their responsibility, as was required in Israel (Deut. 17:6, 7; 19: 16-21)'.[577] The first of those references provides that 'the hand of the witnesses should be the first to come against him to put him to death' and the second provides that those who make false allegations must be 'removed' from the congregation.

If the accuser or accused refuses to meet with the elders

314 The Shepherd the Flock handbook provides that if the accused denies an allegation of wrongdoing and he or his accuser refuses to speak to the elders, 'the elders will leave matters in Jehovah's hands (Deut.19:15-17; 1 Tim. 5:19, 24, 25 …)'.[578]

315 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that if someone accused of a crime refused to answer an allegation, he would be disfellowshipped on a charge of brazen loose conduct, which is 'an absolute disregard for the authority and standards'.[579]

Interviewing children

316 The 2013 Service Desk Guidelines address when elders should interview a young child victim of sexual abuse. Specifically, the Guidelines set out the advice that should be offered to elders who call the Service Desk for advice about interviewing a child.[580] The Guidelines provide, for instance, that if there is 'more than one accuser and thereby already sufficient evidence to handle the matter judicially … there is likely no need to interview the young child'.[581]

317 Mr Spinks accepted that on the evidence before the Royal Commission, in circumstances where elders are unable to interview a child because it would be too traumatizing or the child's parents do not consent, and there was no confession or other evidence,[582] then the elders are unable to take judicial action.[583]

318 Mr Spinks also agreed that it was quite probable that elders involved in interviewing a child victim of sexual abuse would not have any specialised training in dealing with child victims of trauma.[584]

Establishing the veracity of an allegation

319 As was the position in 1991, elders are not authorized to form a judicial committee in order to take congregational action unless the child sexual abuse is proven according to Biblical standards which are satisfied by evidence of:[585]

a) a confession from the accused, which 'may be accepted as conclusive proof without other corroborating evidence. (Josh 7:19)'[586]

b) the two-witness rule, which appears to have been modified slightly by the 1 October 2012 letter to require that the witnesses are 'credible'[587]

c) the testimony of two or three witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing,[588] or

d) strong circumstantial evidence testified to by at least two witnesses.[589]

320 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that in some cases a combination of the four Scriptural criteria for establishing the truth of an allegation 'may be used as a basis for taking congregational action'.[590] Mr Spinks did not specify the type of circumstances in which such an approach might be taken.

321 Elders are instructed that the testimony of youths may be considered by the investigating elders, who must 'determine whether the testimony has the ring of truth'.[591] The 2013 Service Desk Guidelines advise elders to have regard to certain criteria as set out in the Shepherd the Flock handbook in assessing the veracity of a child's allegation.[592] Those criteria include the level of maturity of the child or youth, the consistency of the child's memory, and the reputation of the child's parents.[593]

322 The testimony of 'unbelievers and disfellowshipped or disassociated ones' may also be considered, but the elders are advised to weigh any such testimony carefully.[594] Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that the reason for this direction to elders is because 'someone who is not a [Jehovah's] Witness may have no difficulties at all about telling a lie'.[595]

Oral and further evidence about the flexibility of the two-witness rule

323 It was Mr O'Brien's evidence that simply because the two-witness rule applies does not mean that a victim is not believed or that the elders don't take precautions.[596]

324 Messrs Horley, De Rooy, Ali and Bowditch each said that notwithstanding that they believed BCB's and BCG's allegations of abuse, they were bound by the two-witness rule in handling the respective complaints.[597]

325 Mr Spinks and Mr O'Brien both said that the two-witness rule is a Scriptural direction that the Jehovah's Witnesses do not have the authority to change.[598]

326 Mr Spinks accepted that more often than not, there will only be one witness to an incident of sexual abuse.[599] Mr Spinks also told the Royal Commission that he had no reason to question the proposition as published in the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own publications that allegations of sexual abuse are almost always justified.[600]

327 Mr Jackson's evidence was that there is a Scriptural basis to the two-witness rule. He referred specifically to Matthew 18:16, Deuteronomy 19:15, 2 Corinthians 13:1 and 1 Timothy 5:19.[601]

328 Mr Jackson was asked about the extent to which Deuteronomy 22:23-27 should inform the Scriptural foundation of the two-witness rule.[602] Deuteronomy 22:23-27 offers the example of a man raping a woman in a field in circumstances where there are no witnesses to the rape and where in spite of the absence of a second witness, the man is to be put to death. It was put to Mr Jackson, and he accepted, that that Scripture contemplates a case where there are no witnesses to the rape other than the woman herself.[603] It was also put to Mr Jackson, and he agreed, that only one witness was sufficient, in those circumstances, for the man to be put to death.[604] Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that added to the single witness in the situation contemplated by Deuteronomy 22:23-27 was the 'circumstance' of the rape.[605] Mr Jackson said that the Jehovah's Witnesses had 'already acknowledged that circumstances can also be one of the witnesses'.[606] The principal 'circumstance' of the rape was that there was no third-person witness, as is usually the case with instances of child sexual abuse.

329 It was suggested to Mr Jackson that this Scripture provided the basis for the Governing Body not to apply the two-witness rule in the case of sexual abuse, or that it called into question the proper foundation to the two-witness rule in the case of sexual abuse. Mr Jackson's answer was to say that the Jehovah's Witnesses believe that there is a proper foundation to the rule because of the number of times that it is emphasised in the Scriptures.[607] Mr Jackson did not say that there is no prospect of modifying the application of the two-witness rule within Scriptural requirements so as to make it inapplicable to cases of sexual abuse.

330 In a statement provided to the Royal Commission after the close of the public hearing, Mr Jackson offered an alternative explanation of Deuteronomy 22:23-27 to that which he had accepted in oral evidence.[608] In his statement Mr Jackson explained that the man's guilt had been judged at an earlier stage in Deuteronomy, and that the referenced verses dealt only with establishing guilt (or absence thereof) on the part of the woman.[609] In his statement, Mr Jackson did not seek to explain the reason for the difference between his oral and written evidence as to context of Deuteronomy 22:23-27.

331 It is submitted that there is little utility in attempting to resolve the conflict between Mr Jackson's oral and his subsequent written evidence on the subject of the relevance of Deuteronomy 22:23-27 to the flexibility of the two-witness rule. However, it is open to the Royal Commission to note the difficulty experienced by even a member of the Governing Body in arriving at an interpretation of Deuteronomy 22:23-27 which renders it irrelevant to the application of the two-witness rule.

332 Mr Jackson was asked to what extent the Jehovah's Witness organisation was bound by the Scriptures to maintain and apply the two-witness rule.[610] He did not respond to the question, instead telling the Royal Commission that he 'thought that that had already been established in the hearings, but, if not, certainly that is something that we need to follow up'.[611]

333 Following his oral evidence on the subject of Deuteronomy 22:23-27, Mr Jackson was taken to the Shepherd the Flock handbook and to the example regarding witnesses to adultery.[612] It was put to Mr Jackson, and he agreed, that the example in the handbook that two witnesses observing the opportunity for adultery, as opposed to two witnesses directly observing the adultery itself, demonstrates circumstances where the two witnesses to the opportunity will be sufficient to establish the case of adultery.[613]

334 It was then put to Mr Jackson that the same principles should apply in the case of child sexual abuse.[614] Mr Jackson did not respond directly to the proposition and instead told the Royal Commission that it was 'a very large question and … something that we would need to consider carefully'.[615]

335 Mr Jackson nevertheless agreed that circumstantial or corroborating evidence such as the evident trauma of a victim of child sexual abuse 'would need to be taken into account' as corroborating evidence in the determination of the veracity of an allegation.[616] It was not clear however if it was Mr Jackson's evidence that the witness of the evident trauma experienced by a victim of child sexual abuse could therefore constitute the required second witness.[617] Mr Jackson said that the Jehovah's Witness organisation is interested in following up such matters after the Royal Commission.[618]

336 It is submitted that Mr Jackson was evasive and unhelpful in assisting the Royal Commission to understand whether there is scope for interpretation of the two-witness rule such that would allow for action to be taken in circumstances where there is only one direct witness to an incident of child sexual abuse.

337 It is further submitted that the current position is that where the victim is the only witness to an incident of child sexual abuse and the abuser does not confess, the Jehovah's Witness organisation will not take action until such time as a second child is abused in similar circumstances by the same accused person. It is submitted that this position is untenable and is completely at odds with the organisation's expression of abhorrence of child sexual abuse.

338 Accordingly, the Jehovah's Witness organisation should be encouraged to explore the possibility adverted to by Mr Jackson of considering a more flexible interpretation of the two-witness rule such that would allow for the acceptance of circumstantial and corroborating evidence, such as the evident trauma of a victim of child sexual abuse.

Oral evidence that wrongdoing must ultimately be established by elders

339 Mr Jackson gave evidence that the ultimate decision to establish the nature and the occurrence of wrongdoing in the investigation of an allegation of child sexual abuse, must be made by the investigating elders.[619] Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that the scriptural basis for this requirement is the headship principle in 1 Corinthians 11:3.[620]

340 Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that there is 'no leeway whatsoever' in the Jehovah's Witnesses system of beliefs for allowing women to be elders.[621] Mr O'Brien's evidence was to like effect,[622] as was that of Mr Spinks.[623] Mr Jackson went on to tell the Royal Commission that the Bible teaches that a judge must be a man but was, at the time, unable to provide a specific scriptural reference in support of his understanding.[624]

341 In his written statement provided to the Royal Commission following the close of the public hearing, Mr Jackson offered the relevant scriptural references to which he adverted but was unable to provide during the hearing. Specifically, he referred to various books of the Old Testament which, he said, describe judges and priests as being all male.[625] Mr Jackson said that although the Mosaic Law of the Old Testament ended '[o]n Pentecost 33 C.E.', its principles 'guided the first century Christian congregation and served as the context for future practices'.[626] Mr Jackson explained that it is on this basis that the apostle Paul 'identifies only male members of the congregation as potential elders' in 1 Timothy 3:1.[627]

342 It should be noted by the Royal Commission that, in his statement, Mr Jackson referred only to those books of the Old Testament in which men are described as judges, and did not refer to Judges 4:4-5 which tells of the female judge, Deborah. Specifically, the verses report that Deborah, 'a prophetess, the wife of Lappidoth, was judging Israel at that time' and that the 'Israelites would go up to her for judgment'. Since a woman judge was apparently accepted in the Old Testament, it is not apparent why women should not be judges of 'Christian' guilt or innocence in the Jehovah's Witness organisation.

343 Mr Jackson accepted that it would be possible for the Jehovah's Witness organisation to consider, through research and checking the Scriptures, whether the process could be modified to allow women to be involved in the decision as to whether an allegation was true or false.[628]

344 It is submitted that the current position is that the ultimate decision to establish the veracity of an allegation of child sexual abuse must be made by investigating elders and that an elder must be a man. The Jehovah's Witness organisation should however be encouraged to explore the possibility adverted to by Mr Jackson of developing the process to allow women to be involved in deciding the truth or otherwise of a sexual abuse allegation, and that there is real and identified scope for the organisation to do so in accordance with the Scriptures.

The role of women in the investigation of an allegation of child sexual abuse

345 Mr O'Brien accepted that women bring a different perspective and understanding to that of men to an issue such as whether or not a young girl or woman was sexually assaulted.[629]

346 Mr O'Brien said that at the investigative stage of a matter there is no Biblical requirement that a victim of child sexual abuse present his or her allegation in person to three elders.[630] He told the Royal Commission that the question of whether women could be involved in the investigation process requires further consideration. Specifically, he advised that 'if it's based upon the Bible standards, then [the Branch Committee] would present that as one of the recommendations from the Commission' and that he didn't 'see why a woman couldn't be involved in the process, particularly in establishing the victim's statement, so she doesn't have to face three men'.[631]

347 Mr Jackson agreed that an elder may find it difficult to appreciate exactly how a young woman making an allegation of child sexual abuse might feel in making that allegation.[632]

348 Mr Jackson said that there is no Biblical impediment to women being involved in the investigation of alleged sexual abuse.[633] He told the Royal Commission that in circumstances where elders cannot talk to a victim because perhaps to do so would traumatise the victim too much, two women close to the victim may take the victim's testimony and convey it to the investigating elders.[634] Mr Jackson agreed, however, that one of the tasks of elders who hear allegations of child sexual abuse is to measure the credibility of the person alleging the abuse.[635]

349 It is submitted that Mr Jackson's evidence is not entirely consistent with the position clearly set out in Shepherd the Flock (and referred to above) that should an accuser refuse to meet with elders, then the matter can proceed no further and is 'left in Jehovah's hands'.[636]

350 It is submitted that the current process of investigation doesn't provide for, or even allow, the involvement of women as investigators or even to receive a complainant's statement and pass it on to the investigating elders. Further, in the light of Mr Jackson's evidence that an elder, and therefore not a woman in the congregation, must determine the credibility of a witness, there is limited scope for the involvement of women in the investigation.

351 It is nevertheless submitted that the Jehovah's Witness organisation should be encouraged to explore ways in which women can be involved in the investigation of allegations of child sexual abuse, in particular to avoid the need for a complainant to have to make a statement directly to or in the presence of elders. Mr Jackson's evidence that there is no Biblical impediment to women being involved in the investigation and that two women close to the victim may take the victim's testimony and convey it to the investigating elders, is a positive indication that the Jehovah's Witness organisation may be able to improve this aspect of the existing procedure even within what they perceive to be their Scriptural strictures.

Where there is insufficient evidence to substantiate the allegation

352 Where according to the Scriptural rules there is insufficient evidence to substantiate an allegation of child sexual abuse, the matter is held in abeyance and elders are directed to 'remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused'.[637] In this event, no further action is taken in relation to the complaint and the matter is 'left in Jehovah's hands'.[638]

Where there is sufficient evidence to substantiate the allegation

353 If sufficient evidence is discovered, the body of elders will assign a judicial committee to administer Scriptural discipline to the wrongdoer.[639] Child sexual abuse is recognised as an offence for which a judicial committee should be formed.[640]

Available findings on the investigation process

F41 There are no circumstances in which the survivor of a sexual assault should have to make her allegation in the presence of the person whom she accuses of having assaulted her, and, contrary to the present position, the documents, manuals and instructions produced by the Jehovah's Witness organisation should make this clear.

F42 The requirement that two or more eyewitnesses to the same incident are required in the absence of a confession from the accused, the testimony of two or three witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, or strong circumstantial evidence testified to by at least two witnesses (i.e. the two witness rule):

a) means that in respect of child sexual abuse which almost invariably occurs in private, very often no finding of guilt will be made in respect of a guilty accused
b) causes victims of child sexual abuse to feel unheard and unsupported when it results in allegations of child sexual abuse not being upheld
c) is a danger to children in the Jehovah's Witness organisation because its consequence is that very often nothing is done about an abuser in the organisation
d) does not seem to be applied by the Jehovah's Witness organisation in the case of an accusation of adultery, which suggests that adultery is taken more seriously by the organisation than child sexual abuse, and
e) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation with a view to abandoning it or at least reformulating it to ensure that safe decisions as to someone being guilty of child sexual abuse can be made more easily.

F43 The requirement that only elders (i.e. men) can participate in the making of decisions in the investigation process on whether or not someone has committed child sexual abuse:

a) is a fundamental flaw in that process which weakens the decisions by excluding women, and

b) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to ensure a meaningful role for women.

7.5 Establishment of a judicial committee

Formation of a judicial committee

354 If wrongdoing is serious enough and it has been established by investigating elders that there is sufficient evidence of the wrongdoing having been committed, at least three elders will form a judicial committee to determine if the accused is genuinely repentant.[641]

355 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that ultimately the adjudication process will require three men because the elders must be men and it is the elders who are shepherds and who make the judicial decisions.[642]

356 When deciding if a judicial committee is necessary in the case of historical wrongdoing, the elders are to consider, among other things, whether the person confessed voluntarily, whether the matter is widely known, and if the lives of others are affected.[643] In relation to the latter consideration, a life might be affected if, for example, child sexual abuse or adultery is involved.[644]

357 In cases involving allegations of child sexual abuse, elders are directed to contact their circuit overseer who will designate an experienced elder from a congregation in the circuit to sit on the judicial committee.[645]

Purpose of a judicial committee

358 The purpose of a judicial committee is for the elders to establish if the accused person is genuinely repentant and to determine the appropriate penalty having regard to that person's degree of repentance. Elders on a judicial committee are charged with safeguarding the congregation and provide assistance to the wrongdoer.[646]

Confidentiality of a judicial committee

359 Elders are instructed that the fact of a judicial committee should not be disclosed to persons not entitled to know and '[s]trict confidentiality must be maintained to avoid unnecessary entanglement with secular authorities who may be conducting a criminal investigation of the matter'.[647]

360 Mr Toole agreed that passing information or making a report to secular authorities would not produce an entanglement with those authorities.[648]

7.6 Judicial committee hearing procedure

Process explained to the accused

361 An accused person is invited to attend a meeting with the judicial committee and the elders are instructed to make clear to the accused that the meeting is a judicial hearing.[649] Elders are directed to try and put the accused at ease and invite him to make a personal statement.[650]

362 There is no specific provision in the Jehovah's Witness organisation's documents that directs the elders to ensure that the accuser, when appearing before the judicial committee, is also at ease.

Accuser to present allegation in presence of the accused 363 If the accused maintains that he or she is innocent, then 'the witnesses to the wrongdoing should be presented and their testimony should be given in the presence of the accused'.[651] The Shepherd the Flock handbook provides that:

> It is best that the witnesses give their testimony in person. However, it may be that the witnesses live a great distance away or for some reason are not able to be physically present. If so, their testimony may be presented in the hearing of the accused by a secure phone call or perhaps submitted in writing and read to the accused. The accused should be given the opportunity to respond to the testimony.[652]

364 On its face, the reference to 'witnesses' in this provision includes the person who complains of having been abused (save perhaps in the rare case where there are sufficient other witnesses to not require the victim to be a witness). The result is that as the provision stands, it is only in the case of the victim living a great distance away or there being some other reason of practicality that prevents a witness from being physically present that her evidence can be taken by telephone or submitted in writing. This raises the question of requiring the victim to give evidence in the presence of the three (male) members of the judicial committee and her abuser.

652 Exhibit 29-0003, WAT.0003.001.0001 at 0091 [2] (Tab 120).

365 Mr Toole accepted that the judicial committee process does not lend itself to a young abused person being full and frank about the details of her abuse.[653] That stands to reason given the obvious difficulty that a young woman, for example, would have in recounting to three elders intimate details of a sexual nature.

366 Despite what is stated in Shepherd the Flock as quoted above, each of Messrs Spinks, Toole and O'Brien gave evidence that a victim of child sexual abuse does not these days need to face her abuser in a judicial committee unless she wants to.[654] Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that a victim need not be involved after she has provided a statement to the elders detailing her abuse.[655] Mr Jackson agreed that there are no circumstances in which the survivor of a sexual assault should have to make her allegation in the presence of the person whom she accuses of having assaulted her.[656]

367 It is submitted that the evidence of Messrs, Spinks, Toole and O'Brien is not supported by the available documentary evidence. That is to say, there is nothing in the documents which sets out the judicial committee process that provides for a complainant to give evidence only by way of statement other than what is recorded above. The Jehovah's Witness organisation is meticulous in setting out its processes in writing in various manuals and letters, and in ensuring that uniform processes are used throughout the world. Accordingly, to the extent that it suggests deviation from what is provided for or allowed under the documented processes, the evidence of the witnesses cannot be accepted.

Presence of support person

368 The Shepherd the Flock handbook instructs that those wishing to attend to provide moral support should not be allowed to do so. It relevantly provides that the judicial committee will:

> [H]ear only those witnesses who have relevant testimony regarding the alleged wrongdoing. Those who intend to testify only about the character of the accused should not be allowed to do so. The witnesses should not hear details and testimony of other witnesses. Observers should not be present for moral support.[657]

369 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that the Jehovah's Witness organisation does allow a person complaining of child sexual abuse to have a support person present.[658]

370 Mr Spinks said that the passage in the Shepherd the Flock handbook disallowing support persons applied to the accused and did not apply to child sexual abuse matters.[659] He agreed in evidence that the passage was confusing and told the Royal Commission that it could be better written to make clear that the prohibition on moral support applied only to the accused.[660]

371 It is submitted that the present documented position is that a victim is not allowed to be accompanied by a support person when appearing before a judicial committee. To the extent that this is not the case, the documents should be revised to reflect the true procedure and allowances in respect of support for a victim of child sexual abuse.

Available findings on the judicial committee process

F44 Under the current documented judicial committee process, if the evidence of the complainant is to be taken into account then she must give evidence in person unless she lives a great distance away or for some other reason is not able to be physically present.

F45 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to have the evidence of a complainant of child sexual abuse give evidence remotely or by way of a written statement should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

F46 Under the current documented judicial committee process, a complainant of child sexual abuse is prohibited from having someone present with her in the judicial committee process to offer support.

F47 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to allow a complainant of child sexual abuse to be accompanied by a support person of her choosing should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

F48 The current documented process for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness organisation is focussed largely on the rights and comfort of the accused, with little regard to the requirements of a victim of abuse.

7.7 Assessment of repentance

372 Having heard the testimony of the witnesses to the wrongdoing and/or the confession and personal statement of the accused, the judicial committee elders are instructed to convene alone to consider the degree of repentance of the accused.[661]

373 The primary task of the elders on a judicial committee in circumstances where guilt has been established and where the wrongdoer is genuinely repentant, is to rehabilitate and restore the wrongdoer irrespective of the gravity of the wrongdoing or sin.[662]

374 The Jehovah's Witnesses consider that 'repentance involves a deep regret over a damaged relationship with Jehovah, remorse over the reproach brought upon Jehovah's name and people, and a sincere longing to come back into God's favour'.[663] The Shepherd the Flock handbook provides that the judicial committee's decision as to degree of repentance of a wrongdoer should not 'be determined by the notoriety of the wrong.[664] The judicial committee should look for clear works of repentance commensurate with his wrongdoing. (2 Cor.7:10, 11)'.[665]

375 The Shepherd the Flock handbook provides elders with a non-exhaustive list of indicators of genuine repentance to which they might have regard when assessing the repentance of a wrongdoer.[666]

376 Mr Spinks gave evidence that the risk of re-offending is not part of any assessment of repentance and acknowledged that in a court-setting there would likely be expert evidence before the decision-makers as to that risk.[667]

Available findings on the management of risk

F49 The failure of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to take into account the risk of re-offending when considering whether an offender is repentant, and consequently in deciding whether to merely reprove rather than to disfellowship, or whether to re-admit someone who has previously been disfellowshipped, does not adequately take account of considerations of child safety and should be revisited.

7.8 Sanctions for wrongdoing – deletion

377 The Shepherd the Flock handbook provides that if it comes to light that a serving elder or ministerial servant has committed a disfellowshipping offence such as child sexual abuse, he would likely be disqualified from serving 'for many years'.[668] Deletion of an elder is announced to the congregation and the circuit overseer is required to report deletion to the Branch Office.[669]

378 In his first written statement, Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that an elder or ministerial servant is immediately removed if he is found to have engaged in child sexual abuse.[670]

7.9 Sanctions for wrongdoing - reproval

379 If a judicial committee determines that a wrongdoer is genuinely repentant, including in cases of child sexual abuse, then it reproves the wrongdoer.[671]

Announcement of reproval - public or private

380 Reproval is a form of discipline that allows the wrongdoer to remain a member of the congregation[672] and which involves telling the accused that he is reproved either entirely in private or before those aware of the wrongdoing.[673] It is a sanction intended to discipline the wrongdoer and warn the onlookers that wrongdoing has been committed.[674]

381 The judicial committee determines whether to make the announcement of reproof publicly or privately.[675] If the wrongdoing is widely known or is likely to become widely known in the congregation, the elders are instructed that a public announcement will 'safeguard the reputation of the congregation'.[676] Alternatively, if the elders consider that the 'congregation needs to be on guard concerning the repentant wrongdoer', for example, in cases involving child sexual abuse, then announcing the reproof publicly will 'serve as a protection for the congregation'.[677]

382 While the fact of reproof may be announced, the grounds of the reproval are not.[678]

Application of restrictions

383 A person who is judicially reproved is disqualified from special privileges, such as serving in a position of authority.[679] Judicial restrictions are also imposed on those who are reproved, which restrictions might include being counselled by the elders about appropriate behaviour with children.[680]

384 The Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook provides that restrictions are removed in time 'as the individual's spiritual recovery becomes manifest'.[681] However, more recent directives advise elders not to extend privileges 'hastily' and that a person who has been found to have committed child sexual abuse may never be recommended to receive privileges.[682]

Practical effect of reproval as a sanction

385 Mr O'Brien agreed with the proposition that the practical effect of reproval is that a known offender is left 'in the congregation and in the family, if the offender is in a family'.[683]

Available findings on sanctions - reproval

F50 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is found to be repentant and for that reason merely reproved rather than disfellowshipped he remains in the congregation and a risk to children in the congregation.

F51 The system of not announcing the reasons for reproval means that members of the congregation are not warned about the risk that such a wrongdoer poses to children in the congregation.

F52 The sanction of reproval therefore does nothing to protect children in the congregation and in the broader community.

7.10 Sanctions for wrongdoing - disfellowshipping

386 If the wrongdoer is unrepentant for committing a 'gross sin', he is to be disfellowshipped from the congregation.[684] To be disfellowshipped means to be excommunicated from, or cast out of, the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[685] Congregation members are directed not to associate with disfellowshipped persons.[686]

387 The purpose of disfellowshipping is to 'protect the flock and safeguard the cleanness of the congregation'.[687] When a person is disfellowshipped, the branch office is to be notified.[688]

388 Unless the disfellowshipped person appeals the judicial committee's decision to disfellowship, the judicial committee explains to the person the need for genuine repentance and advises as to the steps the person ought to take in order to be reinstated as a Jehovah's Witness.[689]

Announcement of disfellowshipping

389 When a person is disfellowshipped for child sexual abuse, an announcement is made to the congregation to the effect that the person is 'no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses'.[690] The announcement is made to the congregation so that it knows not to associate with the disfellowshipped person.[691]

390 While the fact of disfellowshipping is announced, the grounds are not.[692]

Practical effect of disfellowshipping

391 Mr O'Brien agreed with the proposition that 'disfellowshipping leaves a known offender in the family and/or at large in the community'.[693]

Available findings on sanctions - disfellowshipping

F53 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is disfellowshipped he remains in the community and a risk to children in the community.

F54 The sanction of disfellowshipping does nothing to protect children in the community.

7.11 Appealing a disfellowshipping decision

392 Disfellowshipping decisions may be appealed within seven days.[694] Appeal committees are formed 'even if there seems to be no valid basis for it'[695] comprising, to the extent possible, impartial elders from a different congregation and selected by the circuit overseer, who hear the case ab initio.[696]

7.12 Reinstatement as a Jehovah's Witness

393 A disfellowshipped person may be reinstated into the congregation after the passage of 'sufficient' time if the judicial committee determines that the individual is truly repentant and the reason(s) for their removal from the congregation have been abandoned.[697]

394 The decision to reinstate is always made by the judicial committee that decided to disfellowship the person.[698] Where the disfellowshipped person applies for reinstatement in a new congregation, the bodies of elders in both the new and old congregation are expected to communicate and exchange relevant information.[699]

395 The Shepherd the Flock handbook instructs elders to apply restrictions in all cases of reinstatement.[700]

7.13 Support for survivors of child sexual abuse

Role of elders

396 Congregational elders are instructed to be kind, tender, empathetic, compassionate and patient when dealing with survivors of child sexual abuse.[701]

397 The Jehovah's Witness organisation recognises that elders are not mental health professionals or therapists and counsels against elders taking on such a role.[702] Elders are instead described as 'spiritual shepherds', whose role is to ensure that a survivor's worth is not 'diminished by the shameful way they were treated' and to convey that 'the important thing is how Jehovah views them'.[703]

398 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that '[a]lmost every elder would use on their shepherding calls visiting a victim of any kind' Jehovah's Witness articles and Scriptures that are specific to the needs of the victim.[704] He suggested that the Jehovah's Witness organisation could write and ask circuit overseers to make specific enquiries in their circuit congregations about victims of child sexual abuse, and make sure that the proper Scriptures are being used to console those victims.[705]

399 Elders are cautioned against meeting alone with 'a sister who is a victim of abuse, suffers from depression, or for any other reason is in a delicate emotional state' as a woman in such a state 'may be more vulnerable and may be prone to develop improper feelings toward an elder meeting with her'.[706]

Role of women in survivor support

400 While noting that 'a sister would not get involved in matters that need the attention of the elders', the Shepherd the Flock handbook advises elders that on occasion, a female survivor of child sexual abuse may approach an older woman in the congregation for help and emotional support.[707]

Access to professional counselling / medical services

401 The Jehovah's Witness organisation recognises that some survivors of child sexual abuse require professional medical attention and condones the seeking of such assistance to the extent that it does not conflict with Bible principles.[708]

402 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that the types of therapies that might conflict with Bible principles do not include '[m]ainstream therapy, normal psychiatric, psychological therapy', but might include 'some of the more extreme and radical therapies'.[709]

403 Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that he is not aware of any policy that positively states that elders should advise survivors of child sexual abuse of their right to seek professional psychological assistance.[710]

404 It is submitted that the present position of the Jehovah's Witness organisation is that elders should not discourage survivors of child sexual abuse from seeking professional support from outside of the organisation, nor should they encourage it or actively advise as to a person's right to do so.

7.14 Reporting to authorities

Brief overview of relevant reporting regimes

405 Each state and territory in Australia has now enacted 'mandatory reporting laws'. These laws require designated persons outside of a child's family to report known and suspected child sexual abuse to child welfare agencies.[711] The mandatory reporting regime has developed throughout Australia over a 40 year period since 1969.[712] Currently, the laws share many features across jurisdictions: the duty is obligatory, must be immediately complied with, and applies to suspected past and present abuse; and the report destination is usually the jurisdiction's department of child protection.[713]

406 The approach to mandatory reporting is not currently uniform across Australia and the relevant laws were created in different jurisdictions at different times.[714] Consequently, several significant differences remain across jurisdictions,[715] including the categories of persons who are obliged to make reports.[716] The reporting duty is normally applied to professions which typically deal with children in the course of their work (such as teachers, police, doctors and nurses).[717] In the Northern Territory, however, the duty applies to every adult.[718] In South Australia the duty has been specifically extended to apply to ministers of religion,[719] 'although the duty does not extend to information communicated in the course of a religious confession'.[720]

407 Mandatory reporting laws are distinct from provisions making it a crime not to report criminal conduct to the authorities. These crimes are referred to as concealment offences. It used to be that the common law crime of misprision of a felony made it an offence for anyone to conceal his or her knowledge of the commission of a felony, but that offence has been abolished in most Australian jurisdictions.[721] In New South Wales, s 316 of the Crimes Act 1900 (NSW) makes it a criminal offence for a person with knowledge or belief that a serious indictable offence has been committed to not report to authorities information that may materially assist in securing the apprehension or prosecution or conviction of the offender. Similarly in Victoria, s 327 of the Crimes Act 1958 (Vic) makes it a criminal offence for a person to not disclose to a police officer information that leads the person for form to a reasonable belief that a sexual offence has been committed. Both jurisdictions provide a defence of reasonable excuse for withholding information[722] and exempt clergy members who obtain the information in the course of their profession[723] or a religious confession.[724]

Mandatory reporting and the Jehovah's Witness organisation

408 Since at least 1995, congregational elders have been instructed to contact the Branch Office Legal Department to ascertain if any reporting obligations apply in respect of an allegation of child sexual abuse.[725] Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia considers itself bound by mandatory reporting legislation in Victoria, South Australia and the Northern Territory.[726]

409 Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that in 1999 the world headquarters of the Jehovah's Witness organisation clarified that '[w]here the law does not obligate elders to report cases that come to their attention, there is no need for them to do so …'.[727] Mr Spinks gave evidence that it is not the practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to report child sexual abuse to police,[728] nor has the organisation ever claimed 'to have instructed the elders to go to the authorities'.[729]

410 In August of 2002, members of all congregations in Australia were advised by the Branch Office that congregational elders have long been instructed to report allegations of child sexual abuse 'where required to by law to do so, even when there is only one witness'.[730] In October of 2002, the Australia Branch Office Legal Department issued a letter to all bodies of elders clarifying that '[w]hether or not they are "required by law to [report]", can only be determined at the time when the elders contact the Society after receiving a report of child abuse'.[731]

411 It is submitted that in the light of the letter of October 2002 and other directives issued only to elders, the letter of August 2002 to all Jehovah's Witnesses is misleading as to the true position of the organisation in relation to reporting child sexual abuse to authorities, that true position being that elders do not report to authorities unless directed to do so by the Branch Office.

412 Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that he has been taking calls from elders to the Legal Department for at least the last two years. He said that he discusses with the elders calling for advice what mandatory reporting obligations might apply.[732]

413 In a letter dated 10 January 2012, all bodies of elders in South Australia were advised by the Branch Office Legal Department of new mandatory reporting obligations and of the need to immediately contact the Branch Office upon receipt of any allegations of child abuse.[733]

Concealment offences and the Jehovah's Witness organisation

414 Mr Spinks gave evidence that in recent weeks it has been explained to him that some states impose criminal sanctions on those who do not report knowledge of a criminal offence, i.e. concealment offences as distinct from mandatory reporting obligations.[734] Mr Spinks said that he understood that in resolving the truth of an allegation of child sexual abuse, through the Jehovah's Witness investigative and judicial process, an elder's state of knowledge changes from being knowledge of an accusation of a criminal offence to knowledge of the commission of a criminal offence.[735] That is to say, it is clear that in circumstances where elders have found a sexual offence to have been committed where concealment offences exist they are prima facie obliged to report to the police.

415 Mr Toole gave evidence that before being called before the Royal Commission, it had been his understanding that the 'prevailing' legislation governing reporting of child sexual abuse was the state and territory mandatory reporting legislative schemes.[736] He said that it had been a 'wake-up call' to learn that the concealment offences applied independently of the mandatory reporting provisions.[737] He told the Royal Commission that once the public hearing was concluded the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia would be engaging senior counsel to advise on any reporting obligations, including those arising under the criminal law.[738]

416 Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that if the law required it, then the Jehovah's Witness organisation would be happy to report child sexual abuse to authorities.[739] It was put to him that in NSW at least, the legislation had required reporting of such crimes since 1990, and before that the common law had imposed a similar obligation.[740] Mr

Toole said that although he understood what was put to him, the Jehovah's Witness organisation has not reported child sexual abuse on the understanding that only the mandatory reporting laws applied.[741] Mr Toole confirmed that the organisation's understanding was also his understanding.[742]

417 It is implicit in Mr Toole's confession to a 'wake-up call' that prior to being called to give evidence before the Royal Commission he did not advise elders from New South Wales of their obligations under the concealment laws. It follows that where elders in NSW formed the view that child sexual abuse had occurred they were obliged under sanction of the criminal law to report those cases to the police.

418 Mr Toole should accordingly be referred to the Law Society of New South Wales for possible investigation.

Available findings on reporting

F55 Prior to this case study, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia did not advise congregational elders of their obligations to report the commission of criminal offences to the police under s 316 of the Crimes Act 1900 (NSW).

F56 This report is referred to the Law Society of New South Wales in relation to the conduct of Mr Toole in having failed to advise congregational elders of their obligations to report their knowledge of the commission of certain criminal offences to the police.

Reporting to secular authorities more generally

419 Elders are instructed that, in the absence of mandatory reporting obligations, it is the right of the individual to decide whether to report child sexual abuse to the police or other secular authorities.[743] The Shepherd the Flock handbook instructs elders that:

> … If you are asked, make it clear that whether to report the matter to the authorities or not is a personal decision for each individual to make and that there are no congregational sanctions for either decision...[744]
> [emphasis added]

420 The 2013 Service Desk Guidelines direct the Service Desk to advise elders not to discourage individuals from reporting matters to the authorities, but that they should remind individuals of the 'need for confidentiality when speaking with others, thus avoiding any charge of slander'.[745]

421 Mr Spinks said that the Service Desk does not instruct elders to report to the authorities.[746]

422 Messrs Spinks, Toole and O'Brien each gave evidence that Jehovah's Witness elders do not have the right Scripturally to usurp a victim's 'right' to report an allegation of child sexual abuse to the authorities, and as such, elders do not themselves report allegations of child sexual abuse to authorities.[747]

423 Mr Spinks said that the Scriptures that support the Jehovah's Witness organisation's position in relation to reporting to authorities are 2 Corinthians 1:24 and Galatians 6:5.[748]

424 2 Corinthians 1:24 provides, 'Not that we are the masters over your faith, but we are fellow workers for your joy, for it is by your faith that you are standing'. In and of itself, it is not at all apparent how this passage prohibits elders from reporting child sexual abuse to secular authorities. Furthermore, it is submitted that application of the passage as Mr Spinks suggests appears inconsistent with the organisation's own teachings about the role of elders, which is as a 'shepherd' to the 'flock' with an obligation to care for the flock's safety.[749]

425 Galatians 6:5 provides that '[f]or each one will carry his own load'. Again, it is not at all apparent how this passage prohibits elders from reporting child sexual abuse to authorities. In fact, it is submitted that the preceding verses[750] suggest that the 'one' being told to 'carry his own load' is not a victim of a serious crime; rather the preceding verses suggest that the counsel is intended to apply to a wrongdoer bearing responsibility for his wrongs.

426 It is accordingly submitted that the Royal Commission should not accept Mr Spinks' evidence regarding the Scriptural basis for the position of the Jehovah's Witness organisation regarding not reporting crimes to the authorities.

Further evidence of Mr Spinks

427 Mr Spinks gave evidence that when a child is in a situation where the threat of harm remains, the Service Desk instructs elders to speak to the parent or guardian of that child and assist that person to 'do all they can, including going to the authorities, if that's what … the guardian/parent is willing to do … and remind them that they … will have the full support of the elders in doing that'.[751]

428 Mr Spinks said that if the elders are not in a position of being able to take judicial action, for example if there is only one witness to the alleged abuse or if it is too traumatising for the victim witness to speak to elders, then '[t]he parents would be reminded that it's their absolute right to take this to the authorities, and the elders will support them in it'.[752]

429 It is submitted that Mr Spinks' evidence that elders are told to make sure that survivors of child sexual abuse and their families have the absolute right to report to the authorities should not be accepted. Mr Spinks' evidence in this regard is not credible in the light of his earlier evidence that the advice given to elders by the Service Desk is generic advice as read out from page 131 of the Shepherd the Flock handbook.[753] The relevant paragraph provides that survivors and their families should be advised of the right to report to authorities if they ask.[754]

430 Insofar as elders reporting to authorities themselves is concerned, Mr Spinks said that if there were uniform mandatory reporting requirements across Australia, then the Jehovah's Witnesses 'will willingly and happily comply'.[755]

Further evidence of Mr Toole

431 In his written statement, Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that the Branch Committee instructs the Legal Department to direct elders to clearly explain to a victim of child sexual abuse and/or to the victim's family, that they have an absolute right to report the matter to authorities.[756] Mr Toole gave evidence that it was his understanding that this instruction was given by the Branch Committee in harmony with the direction given in the letter to all bodies of elders of 1 October 2012, although he was unable to identify that direction in the letter.[757] Instead, Mr Toole told the Royal Commission that the instruction from the Branch Committee was 'in the spirit of what's being discussed' in the letter of 1 October 2012.[758]

432 Mr Toole accepted that the Legal Department does not have any written instruction from the Branch Committee to direct elders to explain to a victim or her family, their right to report abuse to authorities.[759]

433 Mr Toole gave evidence that in at least the last two and a half years he has taken three to four calls regarding allegations of child sexual abuse every month.[760] He told the Royal Commission that in each case where he provides advice to elders and where there is no mandatory reporting obligation, it is his practice to instruct elders to:

> … go back to the victim or their family and explain to them very clearly that they have the absolute right to be able to go and report this matter to the > authorities. That's their privilege and they need to understand that, and that you will support them in whatever decision they make.[761]

434 Although Mr Toole gave evidence that elders in the Jehovah's Witnesses do not have the right, Scripturally, to take away an individual's right to decide whether to report a child sexual abuse complaint to the police,[762] he later agreed that 'in some circumstances, there would be a need for elders to report to the authorities'.[763] Mr Toole said further that the Legal Department will do 'whatever needs to be done to protect a child', and that '[i]f it means going to the police, we would have no hesitation in going to the police'.[764]

Further evidence of Mr O'Brien

435 Mr O'Brien agreed in evidence that the fact that the Jehovah's Witness organisation's disciplinary procedures can leave a perpetrator of child sexual abuse at large in the community 'can only be resolved with systematic reporting to the authorities'.[765]

436 Mr O'Brien gave evidence that elders in the Jehovah's Witness organisation do not see that they have the right, Scripturally, to take away the right of a victim or parent of a victim to report child sexual abuse to police, by themselves reporting child sexual abuse to the police.[766] However he later told the Royal Commission that the organisation would report a complaint of child sexual abuse to the police 'if the child remains at risk and there is no responsible adult within the family to remove [the child] from further risk of abuse'.[767] Mr O'Brien said that he did not personally have any experience or knowledge of a matter being reported to police by the organisation.[768]

437 Mr O'Brien accepted in evidence that, unlike child protection authorities, the Jehovah's Witness organisation does not have the power to intervene in a family situation to ensure protection of the child.[769]

Evidence of Mr Jackson

438 It was Mr Jackson's evidence that where a child remains at risk of abuse, 'the elders should encourage the guardian of the child, or whoever is in that family arrangement who is not the perpetrator, to notify the authorities'.[770] It was put to Mr Jackson that there is a Jehovah's Witness practice of not reporting child sexual abuse allegations to the authorities unless required by law to do so.[771] Rather than responding to the proposition, Mr Jackson said that he was 'not familiar with the statistics or the general practice …'.[772]

439 Mr Jackson was asked if there was a Scriptural basis to the practice or policy of the Jehovah's Witness organisation of not reporting child sexual abuse to authorities unless required to do so by law.[773] He explained in response that there 'is a spiritual dilemma' arising out of the question of reporting to authorities.[774] Mr Jackson said that one aspect of that dilemma arises when an elder learns of an allegation of child sexual abuse and must consider his obligation of confidence in accordance with the Scriptural guidance in Proverbs 25:8-10.[775] Another aspect of the dilemma, he explained, was the Scriptural requirement in 1 Peter 5:2-3 that an elder 'does not have the authority to lord it over or take over control of a family arrangement' where a survivor or her guardian has the right to decide if they want to report to authorities. [776]

440 Mr Jackson said that the spiritual dilemma to which he referred arises out of the conflict between the elders' adherence to those Scriptural principles and the desire to 'make sure that children are cared for'.[777]

441 Mr Jackson did however accept that it would be possible for the Jehovah's Witness organisation to consider adopting a policy which says that in cases where there are others at risk, a report must be made to the authorities.[778]

442 Mr Jackson nonetheless qualified his evidence in relation to the capacity for the Jehovah's Witness organisation to require elders to report to authorities and said that there were 'Scriptural factors that maybe make that a little complicated, and it would certainly be a lot easier if we had mandatory laws on that'.[779]

Documentary evidence

443 As dealt with in Part 2 above, the Royal Commission received evidence that of 1,006 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse identified by the Jehovah's Witness organisation since 1950, not one was reported by the organisation to secular authorities.[780]

Submissions in relation to reporting to authorities

444 It is not possible, on the available evidence, to conclude that it is the practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to:

a) positively advise victims and/or their families of their right to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the authorities, and/or

b) encourage victims and/or their families to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the authorities.

Available findings on the Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy on reporting

F57 It is the policy and practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to not report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities unless required by law to do so.

F58 The basis for this policy is said to be respect for the 'right' of the victim to herself decide whether to make a complaint to the authorities.

F59 That basis has no justification where the victim is still a minor at the time that the abuse comes to the attention of the organisation, or where there are others who may still be at risk at the hands of the alleged abuser.

F60 Since the organisation cannot remove an alleged abuser from the family or take other positive steps to safeguard children in the family from continuing risk, the organisation should have a policy to report all allegations of child sexual abuse to the authorities unless an adult victim specifically requests that a report not be made and there is no appreciable risk of children being abused.

7.15 The evidence of Mr Davies, formerly of the Queensland DPP

445 Mr Davies, formerly of the Queensland DPP,[781] gave evidence that his experience of the internal processes of the Jehovah's Witness organisation with respect to allegations of child sexual abuse gave him cause for concern from a prosecutorial perspective for the following reasons:

a) the delay in allegations coming to police attention caused by the internal handling of child sexual abuse complaints and the acceptance by the organisation that there is no need to refer such allegations to secular authorities[782]

b) the questionable admissibility of inculpatory statements made by the accused during the disfellowshipping process owing to the incentive of a reduced penalty if an admission as to the alleged conduct is made[783]

c) the impact on the survivor of the internal handling of their complaint, in particular in relation to the number of people to whom the survivor is required to disclose the details of their complaint,[784] and

d) as a consequence of the number of people involved in handling a complaint, the potential for contamination of the survivor's evidence before it reaches the police.[785]

Available findings on the impact of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's processes on criminal processes

F61 The internal processes of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for handling allegations of child sexual abuse cause significant delay in a complaint coming, if ever, before authorities.

F62 Admissions made by an accused during the investigative and/or judicial committee process administered by the Jehovah's Witness organisation may not be admissible in criminal proceedings because of the circumstances in which they are made, including that incentives such as reduction in penalty are offered if an admission is made.

F63 The number of people to whom a survivor of child sexual abuse is required to divulge the detail of her complaint exacerbates the trauma already suffered by a survivor of such abuse.

F64 There is significant risk of contamination of a survivor's evidence as a result of the number of times and circumstances in which a survivor is required to divulge the detail of her complaint before her abuse is, if ever, reported to the authorities.

7.16 Redress and acknowledgment

446 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia does not have a redress scheme for responding to and potentially compensating victims of child sexual abuse in Australia because, to date, it has never received a claim.[786]

447 Mr O'Brien gave evidence that the involvement of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in a collective redress scheme would require the approval of the 26 members of Watchtower Australia and the Governing Body.[787] Mr O'Brien said that he would recommend that the Jehovah's Witness organisation establish a redress scheme of its own to care for victims of child sexual abuse.[788]

448 In the context of humanitarian relief, Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that 'the Governing Body is happy for our organisation to spend money helping persons … who [have] been traumatised or affected in a bad way'.[789] Mr Jackson said in evidence that, subject to the Scriptures, participation of the Jehovah's Witness organisation with other institutions in a coordinated redress scheme is 'not something that is totally out of the option pool'.[790]

449 Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that although Jehovah's Witnesses try to 'keep a high moral standard' and 'treat victims in a loving way', he had not personally been involved in Governing Body discussions regarding consideration of the issue of an apology to survivors of child sexual abuse.[791] He said in evidence that he was unable to speak 'collectively for everybody' but the Governing Body has 'apologised on other matters in the past' and so an apology to survivors of child sexual abuse 'is perceivable'.[792]

450 Mr Jackson agreed with the proposition put to him that 'it is very important for people in such senior positions as [his] to really have a good understanding of the perspective of a survivor of abuse'.[793] He also said that empathised with BCG. However, he had neither read the statements nor heard the evidence of BCG, nor did he seem to be aware of the fact that BCG was a woman,[794] purportedly on account of being too busy. However he had clearly taken considerable time to follow the evidence of Jehovah's Witness witnesses.[795] Mr Jackson accordingly failed to live by the principle that he said he regarded as important, namely that he should have a good understanding of the perspective of a survivor of abuse, and his stated empathy with BCG was hollow.

Available findings on Mr Jackson's stated empathy for survivors

F65 Mr Jackon's failure to have read or be familiar with the testimony of the survivor witnesses yet to have read or otherwise familiarised himself with the testimony of Jehovah's Witness witnesses belies his stated empathy for the survivors and his stated recognition of the importance of their perspectives.

Part 8 Current systems, policies, and procedures for preventing child sexual abuse

8.1 Parental responsibility

451 The Jehovah's Witness organisation considers that the primary responsibility for the protection of children lies with parents.[796] In his written statement, Mr O'Brien said that this is particularly so as the organisation does not have programmes or facilities that separate children from their parents.[797]

452 In his written statement, Mr O'Brien also told the Royal Commission that the Jehovah's Witness organisation believes that loving and protective parents are the best deterrent to child abuse.[798]

Education through publications

453 Mr O'Brien described the position of the Jehovah's Witness organisation as being that parental education of children about sex and the dangers of child sexual abuse can be a major factor in its prevention.[799] He said that the Jehovah's Witness organisation educates parents via study groups and publications to help protect their children from child sexual abuse.[800] The 2013 Service Desk Guidelines instruct the branch service desks to advise elders to 'periodically remind parents of the need to review with their children articles in the organization's publications'.[801]

454 A number of Awake! and Watchtower publications dating back to 1970 and produced by the Jehovah's Witness organisation address child sexual abuse.[802]

8.2 Information sharing

Sharing between congregations and the branch office

455 The Jehovah's Witness organisation offers theocratic guidance on the sharing of information between relevant bodies of elders through 'letters of introduction' when a member moves from one congregation to another.

456 When a 'known child molester' moves to another congregation, elders are instructed to send a letter of introduction (copied to the Branch Office) with full and complete information about the person's background and current situation to the elders of the new congregation.[803] The Branch Office, and not the congregational elders, determines whether or not a person is a 'known child molester'.[804] Whether or not a person is a 'known child molester' depends upon whether he is known by the congregation to be such and is therefore 'not "free from accusation" or "irreprehensible", nor does he have "a fine testimony from people on the outside". (1 Tim. 3:1-7, 10; 5:22; Titus 1:7)'.[805]

457 The Branch Office determines what information regarding the accusation may be shared with the new congregation.[806] For example, if 20 years have passed since a person sexually abused a child and the Branch Office has determined that the person can be appointed to a position of trust, then there is no need for information regarding the person's history of offending to be passed to a new congregation.[807]

Information requests from secular authorities

458 All elders are directed to immediately contact the Branch Office if approached by secular authorities requesting access to congregational records or seeking testimony from elders.[808] In November 2014, all bodies of elders were instructed never to 'reveal confidential information to anyone unless theocratic procedure requires it or the branch office has instructed you to do so', and were given examples of people who may seek such information as including police, government officials, school personnel, and family members.[809]

459 Elders are instructed that the reason for resisting production of confidential records to authorities, even when those records are sought under subpoena, prior to consultation with the Branch Office Legal Department is that the records may be protected by 'minister-communicant privilege' or legal professional privilege.[810]

Confessional privilege

460 In 1997 and 1999, the Australia Branch Office communicated with the headquarters of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in relation to the availability of confessional privilege when information or documents are sought by secular authorities from the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[811] The ultimate position of the organisation appears, at least in 1997, to have been that it would be appropriate to try to claim confessional privilege where a confession is obtained by a judicial committee and that any actions associated with that judicial committee, such as reporting to the body of elders and to the branch office, would form part of the confessional ritual for the purposes of any such claim.[812]

461 In oral evidence, Mr Toole agreed that it is possible that 'the confidentiality of the confession in the case of the Jehovah's Witnesses is very qualified' and that 'a lot of different people … end up having access to that information'.[813]

462 Mr Toole said that although for the past 15 years the Jehovah's Witnesses have taken the position of waiving confessional privilege when approached by authorities, there may be circumstances in which that position could change.[814]

8.3 Appointments to positions of authority in the organisation

Qualification

463 Elders and ministerial servants hold positions of trust within the congregation.[815] The Jehovah's Witness organisation offers theocratic guidance on the qualification of a known child molester for such positions of responsibility.[816] For instance, an elder must be a man who is 'irreprehensible, be free from accusation, and [has] a fine testimony from people on the outside'.[817] An elder should have a wife and children in subjection[818] and he should not have been recently reproved for wrongdoing.[819]

Inquiry as to candidate's history

464 Circuit overseers are responsible for the appointment of elders and ministerial servants following recommendation of candidates for appointment by congregational bodies of elders.[820]

465 If a man is nominated by his congregation's body of elders, the circuit overseer is instructed to inquire as to whether the man has a history of child sexual molestation'.[821] Prior to announcement of appointment as an elder in Australian states and territories where it is required, the candidate must obtain a working with children check (a WWCC).[822]

466 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that the Jehovah's Witness organisation complies fully with legislative requirements to ensure all relevant persons have the necessary clearances for working with children.[823] Mr Toole said that there are approximately 7,000 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in Jehovah's Witnesses congregations in Australia who have obtained child related police checks.[824]

467 Mr Toole accepted, and it is submitted, that to some degree the efficacy of the WWCC is undermined by the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses not to systematically report those in their midst accused of child sexual abuse.[825] That is because the system depends on reports being made to authorities in order to maintain the WWCC database. There is therefore an element of hypocrisy in the Jehovah's Witness organisation claiming credit for having obtained clearances for working with children for its elders and ministerial servants, but at the same time not reporting the offences of its elders and ministerial servants which would prevent them from being able to obtain working with children clearance.

Available findings on the system of prevention of child sexual abuse - WWCC

F66 The documented practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation of not reporting child sexual abuse to the authorities undermines the efficacy of the working with children check system, a system to which the organisation says it subscribes and with which it says it complies.

468 If a man has 'a history of child molestation' he is not automatically disqualified from appointment as an elder or ministerial servant. For instance, the 2013 Service Desk Guidelines provide that if a man molested a child in the 'distant past' and 'if there is no apparent outcry', he may be recommended for appointment as a ministerial servant.[826] Similarly, if a man is known to have sexually abused a child before he was baptised as a Jehovah's Witness, he is not necessarily disqualified from holding a position of responsibility in the congregation.[827]

469 Since at least 1998, elders have been instructed that it is 'best to wait at least 20 years since the last incident of child abuse was committed before retaining or appointing a former child abuser', although there may be exceptions to this, including if the abuse was committed prior to baptism.[828]

Reappointment of elders and ministerial servants

470 If 20 years have passed since the child sexual abuse and the man has served faithfully, there is no outcry from the congregation, and 'everything else points to his currently enjoying Jehovah's blessing', then the branch office may decide disqualification from service is not necessary. However, the 2013 Service Desk Guidelines warn that:

> if a former child molester continues in a position of responsibility, whether the sin occurred before or after baptism – there may be serious problems if he later molests a child. This could bring reproach on Jehovah's name …[829]

471 Since 1950, 28 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse were appointed to a position of authority after having been the subject of an allegation of child sexual abuse. Further, of 127 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse deleted as elders or ministerial servants as a result of allegations of child sexual abuse, 16 were later reappointed.[830]

8.4 Congregational risk management of known offenders

Counselling and monitoring of persons accused of child sexual abuse 472 Elders are instructed to counsel a person found to have committed child sexual abuse to:

> … refrain from displaying affection for children, to avoid hugging or holding children on their lap, never to be alone with a child (other than their own), not to allow children to spend the night in their home …[831]

473 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that soon after a reproof for child sexual abuse is imposed and an announcement made to the congregation, the elders may deliver a 'warning lecture' to the congregation about the type of sin and how to prevent it.[832] Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that, in this way, 'congregation members are aided in their ability to protect children from child sexual abuse'.[833]

474 Elders are instructed that a '"known child molester" should be told not to work alone with children in the field ministry … This serves to protect any minor who answers the door, the former abuser, and the reputation of the congregation'.[834]

475 If a person has been assessed by the judicial committee as displaying genuine repentance and is reproved, the judicial committee is to 'monitor the spiritual progress of the repentant wrongdoer'.[835]

476 If the Branch Office considers a person to be a 'predator', the Service Desk will advise congregational elders to meet with parents of 'minor children' in the congregation and issue a warning about the person.[836]

477 In circumstances where a person has been accused of child sexual abuse and the elders are not authorised to take judicial action, for example, because the person did not confess and there was only one witness to the conduct, the elders are instructed to 'remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused'.[837]

478 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that the elders would meet with a person against whom an allegation of child sexual abuse had been made but not proven and 'give very clear direction on what restrictions would apply to their association with children, with others in the congregation, and [the elders] would monitor that'.[838]

479 Mr O'Brien said that others in the congregation would not be aware of the restrictions placed upon a person against whom an allegation of child sexual abuse had been made.[839] He accepted that in those circumstances supervision of that person is therefore confined to when the elders or an elder is present to observe the person.[840]

480 Mr O'Brien gave evidence that the extent to which elders are able to discharge their obligation to care for the congregation is restricted by application of two-witness rule and that 'unless there is a second witness to a similar type of event, or the same event, then 'the elders' hands are tied with warning the person'.[841]

Evaluation of risk and treatment of offenders

481 Mr Spinks accepted that the processes used by secular society to evaluate the risk of re-offending were not used by the Jehovah's Witnesses.[842]

482 Mr Spinks also gave evidence that the Jehovah's Witnesses did not offer any kind of programmes for the professional treatment of offenders.[843]

483 Dr Monica Applewhite, who was engaged by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to provide expert evidence about its practices and procedures, told the Royal Commission that 'once somebody abuses, once their internal mechanisms of control have allowed them to cross that line once, I don't have confidence in those internal mechanisms of control for the future'.[844]

Available findings on the system of prevention of child sexual abuse – risk of reoffending

F67 The practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for the prevention of child sexual abuse, and in particular for the management of the risk of an abuser reoffending, do not take account of the actual risk of an offender reoffending and accordingly place children in the organisation at significant risk of sexual abuse.

8.5 Records management

484 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's current document retention policy provides that records concerning an individual accused of child molestation are to be indefinitely retained in the congregational confidential file.[845] Since 2009 the Australia Branch Office has required that all congregational documents relating to a matter of established child abuse be sent to the Branch Office.[846]

485 Mr Toole stated that indefinite retention of records relating to child abuse has been a long-standing practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[847]

486 Elders are also directed that records relating to the appointment and deletion of elders and ministerial servants should be kept indefinitely.[848]

Part 9 Additional issues

9.1 Accessibility and clarity of information regarding systems policies and procedures

Identification of body of documents recording current policy

487 Messrs Toole, Spinks and O'Brien told the Royal Commission that the letter to all bodies of elders dated 1 October 2012 is the document which offers current spiritual advice and guidance to elders on how to handle matters involving child sexual abuse.[849]

488 That letter to all bodies of elders instructs elders to destroy earlier letters regarding institutional handling of child sexual abuse.[850] The letter instructs elders to first have regard to the Shepherd the Flock handbook and to relevant Scriptural principles involved, and to consult the 1 October 2012 letter each time a matter of child abuse arises.[851]

489 Mr Spinks told the Royal Commission that current child sexual abuse policy is recorded in the 1 October 2012 letter, the Shepherd the Flock handbook, the 2013 Service Desk Guidelines, the Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook, and the Bible.[852] However, Mr Spinks also said that these documents do not represent the complete direction given to elders in relation to responding to allegations of child sexual abuse, but rather they are the relevant documents dealing with 'key issues'.[853] Mr Spinks acknowledged that it would be hard in those circumstances for anyone to know what the position is in relation to current policy and procedure.[854]

490 Mr Spinks agreed in evidence that it would be difficult for an elder to ascertain the current policy and on what material to rely in handling a matter, but he said that this is the reason elders are instructed to immediately contact the Branch Office when they receive an allegation of child sexual abuse.[855]

Clarity and accessibility to elders of current policy

491 The Royal Commission heard evidence that it is the practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to encourage survivors of child sexual abuse and their families to report the abuse to authorities. Mr Spinks did not accept that the true practice is in fact, as specified in the Shepherd the Flock handbook, that elders are instructed only to discuss reporting to authorities if asked.[856] Mr Spinks agreed that the Shepherd the Flock

handbook is one document that needs to change to reflect the actual policy of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[857]

492 Mr Spinks also accepted that the Shepherd the Flock handbook was 'confusing … to say the least' as to the policy on whether a survivor may be accompanied by a support person in a judicial committee proceeding.[858]

493 Mr Spinks was unable to identify where in the suite of documents said to record current policy, the Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy that an accuser need not face the accused in the investigative and judicial committee process was recorded.[859]

494 Mr Jackson agreed that the documents, manuals and instructions of the Jehovah's Witness organisation should make clear that a survivor of sexual assault should not have to make her allegation in the face of her abuser.[860]

495 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that one matter to which the Jehovah's Witness organisation could give greater consideration is the provision to elders of clearly and more specific and tailored information and documentation as to the process for the handling of investigations and judicial committees involving child sexual abuse.[861]

Clarity and accessibility to survivors and their families of information regarding systems, policies and procedures

496 Mr O'Brien gave evidence that a copy of Organized to do Jehovah's [Will] is issued to each member of the congregation prior to baptism.[862] He also told the Royal Commission that every member of the congregation is provided with a copy of the Watchtower library on CD, which is updated annually, includes publications going back many years, and is searchable.[863] Mr O'Brien also described the publicly available Jehovah's Witness organisation website as a mean of providing information to congregants.[864]

497 It would appear that only the letter to all congregations of 28 August 2002[865] has specifically addressed to all members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation the organisation's process for handling of complaints of child sexual abuse. The 1 October 2012 letter and the elders' Shepherd the Flock handbook are not available to publishers, and the 2013 Service Desk Guidelines are not even available to circuit overseers, elders and ministerial servants.

498 Mr Spinks accepted that a victim of child sexual abuse should have access to a clear policy and procedure about how to raise their allegation and how the Jehovah's Witness organisation will respond.[866] He also accepted that there was currently no document to which a victim of child sexual abuse could turn that would explain the process.[867]

499 Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that the Jehovah's Witness organisation could give greater consideration to provision of clear information about the processes to victims and their parents.[868]

Submissions in relation to clarity of information

500 It is submitted that the Jehovah's Witness organisation's current policies and procedures for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse are insufficiently documented and accessible to those responsible for their implementation.

501 It is submitted that the Jehovah's Witness organisation's current policies and procedures for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse are not sufficiently clear and accessible to those who might wish to make a complaint of child sexual abuse.

Available findings on the accessibility of procedures and policies

F68 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's documented procedures for reporting on and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse are deficient in that they are not documented in such a way as to be easily accessible in one document and available to all interested or affected parties and some matters that are stated to be the policies or practices of the organisation are not recorded at all.

9.2 Leaving the Jehovah's Witness organisation

502 The relevance of the question of leaving the organisation arises from the not improbable scenario of a survivor of abuse in the organisation wanting to leave the organisation – particularly if she feels that her complaint of abuse was not dealt with adequately or if her abuser remains in the organisation.

503 The Organized to do Jehovah's Will publisher's handbook provides explicitly that a person who no longer wishes to be known as a Jehovah's Witness, will by the action of stating as much, disassociate himself from the Jehovah's Witness organisation:

> The term "disassociation" applies to the action taken by a person who, although a baptised member of the congregation, deliberately repudiates his Christian standing, rejecting the congregation by his actions or by stating that he no longer wants to be recognised as or known as one of Jehovah's Witnesses. Because he is disassociated, his situation before Jehovah is far different from that of an inactive Christian, one who no longer shares in the field ministry. An inactive person may have failed to study God's Word > regularly, or…he may have lost his zeal for serving Jehovah. The elders as well as other concerned members of the congregation will continue rendering appropriate spiritual assistance to an inactive brother. (Rom. 15:1; 1 Thess. 5:14; Heb. 12:12) However, the person who disassociates himself by repudiating the faith and deliberately abandoning Jehovah's worship is viewed in the same way as one who is disfellowshipped. A brief announcement is made to inform the congregation, stating: "[Name of person] is no longer one of Jehovah's Witnesses".[869]

> [emphasis added.]

504 Jehovah's Witnesses are counselled against associating, fraternising or conversing with a person who has been disfellowshipped or who has disassociated.[870] This practice is known as shunning.[871]

505 Even family members are instructed not to associate with a disfellowshipped or disassociated relative, unless the association is unavoidable such as if they share a house with the person.[872]

506 Violation by a Jehovah's Witness of the decree against associating with a disfellowshipped or disassociated person may itself, in certain circumstances, be a disfellowshipping offence.[873]

507 Mr Jackson gave evidence that a person who no longer wants to be known as a Jehovah's Witness has the 'total freedom' of taking the action of disassociating.[874] He told the Royal Commission that '[i]f they don't want to apply to officially be removed as one of Jehovah's Witnesses, they can tell anyone they want that they are no longer a Jehovah's Witness'.[875]

508 Mr O'Brien said that an inactive Jehovah's Witness is not prohibited from free association with other Jehovah's Witnesses.[876]

509 Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that disassociation as described in the Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook simply gives a person 'the right to officially have an announcement made'.[877] He reiterated his earlier evidence that if they decide not to exercise the right to an announcement of disassociation, then they won't automatically be disassociated.[878]

510 Mr Jackson ultimately agreed that if a person 'definitely' no longer wants to be subject to the Jehovah's Witness organisation's discipline and rules, then they must actively leave the organisation by disassociating.[879] A person who merely becomes inactive, or 'fades', is still regarded to be a Jehovah's Witness by the organisation and is therefore still subject to its rules and disciplinary procedures. Such a person is therefore still susceptible to being disfellowshipped for some or other 'offence' under the rules of the organisation.

511 It is submitted that Mr Jackson's oral evidence is inconsistent with the position regarding disassociation published to Jehovah's Witnesses internationally in the form of the Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook. It is further submitted that the true position in relation to a person who no longer wants to be known as a Jehovah's Witness and who no longer wishes to be subject to the organisation's rules and regulations, is that as recorded in the Organized to do Jehovah's Will handbook.

Freedom of choice

512 Mr O'Brien agreed that Jehovah's Witnesses tend to know and associate closely with one another.[880] He told the Royal Commission that there is a strong sense of community within the organisation in Australia, members refer to each other as 'brother' and 'sister' and congregation members spend a lot of time together each week.[881] Mr O'Brien accepted that for a Jehovah's Witness, his or her social network is generally comprised of other Jehovah's Witnesses.[882]

513 Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that the Jehovah's Witness organisation recognises an individual's freedom to make religious choices.[883]

514 It was put to Mr O'Brien that as a Jehovah's Witness, a survivor of child sexual abuse may be faced with the impossible choice of staying in an organisation which is protective of their abuser, or of leaving the organisation and consequently losing their entire family and social network.[884] He told the Royal Commission that the decision to disassociate is a personal one and that a survivor of child sexual abuse could instead choose to become inactive and therefore retain their 'spiritual and familial association'.[885]

515 Mr O'Brien said in evidence, that in circumstances where the survivor wished to disassociate as a consequence of the intensity of her feelings from her experience, she would understand the implications of disassociation.[886] Mr O'Brien disagreed that 'it is incredibly hard for someone to leave [the Jehovah's Witness organisation] because of the huge pain, suffering, cruelty that she must face if she does leave'.[887]

516 Ultimately, Mr O'Brien told the Royal Commission that he could 'only be guided by what the Scriptures say'.[888]

517 Mr Jackson did not accept that putting people in the position of having to choose between their faith and their family and social network was contrary to that freedom of religious choice.[889] It was Mr Jackson's evidence that people are not forced to remain within the organisation.[890]

518 Mr Jackson agreed that in the case of a person baptized at a young age who wants to leave the Jehovah's Witness organisation, that person is faced with a stark choice, one consequence of which is that the person must leave everyone they know behind them.[891]

519 Mr Jackson accepted that the decision to disassociate and leave the Jehovah's Witnesses was a 'difficult' one that can be 'personally devastating because [a person] can lose their whole social network and their families'.[892]

520 However, both Mr Jackson and Mr O'Brien disagreed that the practice of shunning makes the Jehovah's Witness a 'captive organisation'.[893]

521 It is submitted that the Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy of requiring its adherents to actively shun those who leave the organisation makes it a 'captive organisation' whose rules regarding association with those who have chosen to leave the organisation impact the capacity of a survivor of child sexual abuse within the organisation to exercise their right to freedom of religion.

Scriptural basis for the practice of shunning

522 Mr Jackson told the Royal Commission that the Scriptural basis for shunning can be found in the passage starting at 1 Corinthians 5:1.[894] However, this passage deals explicitly with circumstances of sexual immorality existing in the congregation and Paul says that the man who committed the deed must be handed over to Satan 'so that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord' (verse 5). Paul also says that the congregation must 'stop keeping company with sexually immoral people' (verse 9).

523 The passage would therefore appear to provide some Scriptural basis to the practice of shunning those who have been found guilty of some or other gross sexual sin (within the rules of the organisation), but provides no basis at all for the practice of shunning those who merely seek to exercise their right to leave the organisation.

524 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's practice of shunning those who leave the organisation is also in conflict with Mr Jackson's evidence that Jehovah God is a compassionate God[895] and that Jehovah God recognises the worth and dignity of all human beings.[896]

Available findings on shunning

F69 Members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation who no longer want to be subject to the organisation's rules and discipline have no alternative than to leave the organisation which requires that they disassociate from it.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy of requiring its adherents to actively shun those who leave the organisation:

a) makes it extremely difficult for someone to leave the organisation
b) is cruel on those who leave and on their friends and family who remain behind
c) is particularly cruel on those who have suffered child sexual abuse in the organisation and who wish to leave because they feel that their complaints about it have not been adequately dealt with
d) is not apparently justified by the Scriptures which are cited in support of it
e) is adopted and enforced in order to prevent people from leaving the organisation and thereby to maintain its membership, and
f) is in conflict with the organisation's professed support for freedom of religious choice and the belief that Jehovah God is a compassionate God who recognises the worth and dignity of all human beings.

Part 10 Dr Monica Applewhite

525 At the request of the Jehovah's Witness organisation, the Royal Commission heard evidence from Dr Monica Applewhite who was engaged by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to provide an expert report on the response of the organisation to allegations of child sexual abuse.

10.1 Dr Applewhite's qualifications

526 Dr Applewhite holds a Bachelor of Science in Social Work from Texas Christian University and a Master of Science in Social Work and a PhD in Clinical Social Work from the University of Texas at Arlington.[897] Dr Applewhite's PhD is not specifically relevant to child sexual abuse.[898]

Published work

527 In oral evidence, Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that she has not authored any peer-reviewed articles or publications.[899]

528 The Royal Commission heard that Dr Applewhite has, over the course of her career, consulted with numerous organisations to identify and analyse the best practices of organisations in relation to preventing and responding to incidents of abuse.[900] Dr Applewhite told the Commission that she had never published the results of this analysis as the research methodology involved in the analysis was not up to the rigours of empirical research.[901]

10.2 Dr Applewhite's experience

529 In her report, Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that she has 'extensive experience working directly with sexual offenders who have perpetrated abuse in organisations, as well as 22 years of conducting root cause analysis of such cases for the purpose of determining the methods used by sexual offenders to access children within churches, schools and other organisations'.[902]

530 Dr Applewhite accepted that, since 2007, her work has primarily involved running educational programmes for independent and private schools in relation to the prevention of child sexual abuse and current standards of best practice.[903] Dr

Applewhite also accepted that her work in Australia has, for the most part, involved conducting educational programmes for Catholic education organisations.[904]

Previous experience as an expert witness for the Jehovah's Witness organisation

531 Dr Applewhite has previously been engaged by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to provide expert evidence in four separate civil liability cases – three in the United States and one in the United Kingdom.[905] Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that each of the civil cases related to claims for damages arising out of allegations of child sexual abuse and that, in each case, the Jehovah's Witness organisation was cited as a defendant.[906] Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that, in those cases, she had not been hired to give evidence critical of the organisation and could not recall ever having given evidence that was critical of the organisation.[907]

10.3 Dr Applewhite's expert report

532 Dr Applewhite agreed that her report constituted a documentary review of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's policies and procedures and that her report did not consider the practical implementation of those policies or procedures.[908]

533 Dr Applewhite's report was based on her review of documents provided to her by Watchtower Australia, publications that are available on the Jehovah's Witness organisation website (which date from 2000), and the witness statements of Mr O'Brien and Mr Toole.[909]

534 In preparing her report Dr Applewhite did not consider the statements of the survivor witnesses.[910] Dr Applewhite also said that she had not considered any independent studies or research about the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[911]

10.4 Dr Applewhite's written opinions

535 Dr Applewhite expressed three opinions in her report.

536 First, in paragraph 36 of her report, Dr Applewhite stated that:

> In my opinion, the current messages to those who have experienced abuse and the guidelines that have been provided to elders in congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses are consistent with, and in some respects better than, the current practices of religious organizations throughout the world.[912]

537 Secondly, in paragraph 45 of her report, Dr Applewhite stated that:

> In my opinion, Jehovah's Witnesses were well in advance of other religious organizations in providing educational materials to parents and families. The quality of the materials they provided during the 1980's [sic] and 1990's [sic] exceeded the standards of care for the time and continue to be more substantial than what many religious organizations offer parents and guardians today.[913]

538 Thirdly, in paragraph 46 of her report, Dr Applewhite stated that:

> In my own experience, I have not found examples in Australia of religious organizations that have provided parents, guardians, and the general public with the quality or consistency of information about prevention and response to sexual abuse or about how to support for [sic] those who have been abused that Jehovah's Witnesses have provided in their publications.[914]

539 Dr Applewhite acknowledged that her report did not identify the basis on which she had formed her opinions.[915] She accepted that her report failed to identify the 'current standards' of other religious organisations,[916] or to which 'religious organisations' she had had reference in writing her report.[917] Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that her understanding of material provided to parents and families about sexual development in children by other faith-based organisations was 'anecdotal'.[918]

540 Dr Applewhite accepted that it would be difficult for the Royal Commission to accept the opinions expressed in paragraphs 36, 45, and 46 of her report, because her report does not identify the basis on which the opinions were formed.[919]

541 At the request of senior counsel for Watchtower Australia, the Royal Commission granted Dr Applewhite permission to submit a supplementary report setting out the reasons for the opinions in her expert report.[920]

542 On 16 August 2015, Dr Applewhite wrote to the legal representative of Watchtower Australia and advised that she was unable to prepare a supplementary statement due to other commitments. She conveyed in her letter her belief that 'between the research that has already been undertaken by the Commission and the evidence provided by others who testified after [her], the questions [Watchtower Australia has] presented to [her] have been or shortly will be answered'.[921]

10.5 Dr Applewhite's errors on factual issues

543 In her report, Dr Applewhite addressed several factual matters in relation to which she was asked questions in oral evidence.

Factual issue: elders as 'fellow workers'

544 In her report, Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that:

> Jehovah's Witnesses teach that elders should avoid taking a superior position with reference to other congregation members. Elders are viewed as fellow workers by their fellow elders and by other congregation members.[922]

545 Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that her understanding of how congregation members view elders is based solely on materials and literature published by the Jehovah's Witness organisation and not on any empirical study of how the elders are actually viewed by members.[923]

546 Dr Applewhite accepted, as evidenced in the organisation's own documents, that Jehovah's Witnesses consider that elders are appointed by the Holy Spirit;[924] that elders have a leadership role within the congregation;[925] that congregation members entrust their spiritual life to the elders as shepherds of the flock;[926] and that elders are responsible for investigating reports of wrongdoing within the congregation, establishing judicial committees, making a determination as to wrongdoing and imposing sanctions on wrongdoers.[927] Despite the documentary evidence in relation to the role of elders, Dr Applewhite did not accept that elders are viewed as anything other than fellow workers by congregation members.[928] Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that the literature of the Jehovah's Witness organisation does not set elders apart as 'distinctive or in some ways [sic] superior' to other congregation members.[929]

547 It is submitted that, contrary to the evidence of Dr Applewhite, the literature and materials published by the Jehovah's Witness organisation sets elders apart from the rest of the congregation, and that it would be incorrect to conclude that elders are viewed as 'fellow workers' by ordinary congregation members. It is further submitted that in fact elders enjoy positions of great responsibility, power and influence and are probably regarded in that way by ordinary congregation members. Certainly, the experiences of both BCB and BCG support the view that elders are held up as having authority and power and certainly not as being 'fellow workers'.[930]

Factual issue: role of ministerial servants in providing pastoral care

548 In her report, Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that:

> Ministerial servants are members of the congregation who provide non-pastoral practical assistance and service to the elders and the congregation. Ministerial servants are not authorized to provide spiritual guidance, counselling or any other pastoral services to members of the congregation.[931]

549 However, documents in evidence suggest otherwise. Specifically, Organised to Do Jehovah's Will provides for circumstances where a ministerial servant might 'care for' a congregation book study group until such time as an elder is available to take over.[932] Shepherd the Flock also provides for circumstances where a ministerial servant will accompany an elder in visiting members of the congregation to provide spiritual guidance and counsel, particularly where a ministerial servant might be training to become an elder.[933]

550 Dr Applewhite did not accept the proposition that Organised to Do Jehovah's Will authorises ministerial servants to undertake pastoral care in certain circumstances,[934] but agreed that Shepherd the Flock does not exclude a ministerial servant from participating in pastoral care with an elder.[935] Nonetheless, Dr Applewhite ultimately did not accept that the evidence given in her report was incorrect.[936]

551 It is submitted that, contrary to Dr Applewhite's evidence, the literature and materials published by the Jehovah's Witness organisation envisage circumstances in which a ministerial servant might be authorised to provide pastoral care to members of the congregation.

Factual issue: role of elders and ministerial servants in relation to children

552 In her report, Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that:

> None of the responsibilities of a ministerial servant or elder allow or require that he be alone with children or otherwise separate from his or her family.[937]

553 From at least December 1998 the Jehovah's Witness organisation has instructed all bodies of elders that:

> Those who are appointed to privileges of service, such as elders and ministerial servants, are put in a position of trust. One who is extended > privileges in the congregation is judged by others as being worthy of trust. This includes being more liberal in leaving children in their care and oversight.[938]

554 Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that the above direction was meant as 'a warning to let elders know that families might be more trusting of a person and allow their children to be alone with someone who was a ministerial servant or an elder', and that it was her understanding that elders and ministerial servants were not meant to meet alone with women or children.[939] Dr Applewhite was unable to provide any reference in the Jehovah's Witness organisation's policies for this understanding and did not otherwise identify the source of her understanding.[940]

555 While there is a documented prohibition on an elder meeting alone with a woman who is a victim of abuse for fear that she might 'develop improper feelings' towards him,[941] there is no such documented prohibition, at least in evidence, against an elder or ministerial servant being alone with a child. Senior Counsel for Watchtower Australia undertook to locate the relevant reference and provide it to the Royal Commission.[942] As at the date of these submissions, no such reference has been provided.

556 It is accordingly submitted that, contrary to Dr Applewhite's evidence, there is no specific prohibition on elders and ministerial servants meeting alone with children.

Factual issue: the two-witness rule

557 Dr Applewhite agreed that child sexual abuse most often occurs in private, and that as a result, a survivor would have 'real difficulties' establishing that child sexual abuse had occurred according to a standard of proof that required two witnesses to the abuse.[943] Dr Applewhite further agreed that elders are not able to take any action where there is only one witness and the accused denies the allegation.[944] She acknowledged that in such circumstances, the effect of the application of the two-witness rule is that an alleged perpetrator remains, with his rights intact, in the congregation and able to interact with the survivor.[945] She agreed that that result is 'not a very good place to end up'. [946]

558 Dr Applewhite also accepted that the role of the two-witness rule in preventing allegations of child sexual abuse from being established has the potential to further traumatise survivors of child sexual abuse and to place the survivor's psychological well-being at a 'by no means … ideal place'.[947]

Factual issue: accused facing accuser and absence of support person

559 Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that it was the current practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to allow a survivor to write a letter rather than requiring her to present her allegation directly and in person to elders and the accused in a judicial committee hearing.[948]

560 Dr Applewhite said that her understanding of the current practice was based on the letter of 1 October 2012 to all bodies of elders and on the witness statement of Mr Toole.[949] She agreed that the direction in Shepherd the Flock was that a survivor would have to present her evidence before a three-man judicial committee and the accused, but she told the Royal Commission that it was her understanding that the direction had been modified by the letter of 1 October 2012 to the effect that testimony in person was not necessary.[950] It was put to Dr Applewhite, and she agreed, that the letter of 1 October 2012 did not in fact modify the direction in Shepherd the Flock in the way that she had understood.[951]

561 Dr Applewhite accepted that the Jehovah's Witness organisation's documented policies require a survivor to give their testimony before a judicial committee in the presence of the accused, unless the survivor lives 'a great distance away or for some reason [is] not able to be physically present'.[952]

562 In relation to the direction in Shepherd the Flock that 'observers should not be present for moral support', Dr Applewhite agreed that such a direction excludes a survivor from having someone with her during a judicial committee hearing to provide moral support.[953]

563 Dr Applewhite ultimately said that 'if it turns out that the practice that they have today does not allow someone to write a letter and they have to confront their offender and they have to sit in the room with no support it is not going to meet the standard of care'.[954] It submitted that Dr Applewhite's evidence that such a requirement of a survivor would not meet the standard of care, should be accepted.

Factual issue: reporting to authorities

564 In her report, Dr Applewhite told the Royal Commission that:

> Child sexual abuse is regarded as a crime by Jehovah's Witnesses. Elders are instructed to report crimes according to the law and never to discourage anyone from reporting abuse to law enforcement.[955]

955 Exhibit 29-0013, Statement of Dr Monica Applewhite, STAT.0606.001.0001 at [26].

565 Dr Applewhite agreed that she did not mean to imply in her report that elders are instructed to report crimes generally, but that it is the case that elders are instructed to report to authorities only after the Branch Office has advised if a mandatory reporting obligation applies in the particular case.[956]

566 Dr Applewhite later expressed her view that a mandatory reporting requirement should be introduced so that elders would not have the option to not report allegations of child sexual abuse to police.[957]

567 Dr Applewhite also told the Royal Commission that in her opinion, criminal sanctions are necessary in respect of perpetrators of child sexual abuse so that there are 'clear consequences' that will 'act as a deterrent'.[958]

10.6 Submissions in relation to the opinions proffered in Dr Applewhite's report

568 It is submitted that the Royal Commission cannot accept the opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite in paragraphs 36, 45 or 46 of her report, because:

a) those opinions are not supported by the reasons set out in her report, and

b) the facts and assumptions upon which Dr Applewhite's opinions are based are not identified in her report or in her oral evidence.

Available findings on Dr Applewhite's expert opinions

F71 The opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite in paragraphs 36, 45 and 46 of her report are rejected because they are not substantiated by identifiable facts and assumptions or by reasons.

F72 Dr Applewhite's report contains a number of factual errors with regard to her documenting of the relevant practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

F73 Dr Applewhite's report is therefore rejected.

10.7 Dr Applewhite's oral evidence: Finkelhor's Model

569 In her report, Dr Applewhite referenced articles in Awake!, which in turn referred to research conducted by Dr David Finkelhor,[959]who, Dr Applewhite agreed, is a 'credible' and 'leading researcher and academic writer in the field' of prevention of child sexual abuse.[960] Dr Applewhite explained that by including such references she had wanted to illustrate that, 'solid researchers […] are cited in the articles'.[961]

570 Dr Applewhite was shown a report published by the Australian Institute for Family Studies in June 2015 entitled 'Conceptualising the prevention of child sexual abuse' (the AIFS Report).[962] The AIFS Report identifies Dr Finkelhor's Four Preconditions Model (Finkelhor's Model), which was first published in 1984 and which has been used to understand the behaviour of child sexual abuse offenders.[963]

571 Dr Applewhite was familiar with Finkelhor's Model.[964] Dr Applewhite agreed that the following social/cultural factors that support three of the four preconditions for an individual to engage in child sexual abuse identified in Finkelhor's Model, exist within the Jehovah's Witness organisation. They are:

a) repressive norms about masturbation and extra marital sex[965]
b) weak criminal sanctions (in circumstances where mandatory reporting obligations do not apply and the Jehovah's Witnesses do not report to authorities)[966]
c) ideology of patriarchal prerogatives for fathers, at least in the sense of it being a patriarchal organisation[967]
d) barriers to women's equality,[968] and
e) strong ideology of family sanctity.[969]

572 In respect of Finkehor's fourth precondition[970] and its relevant social/cultural factors, Dr Applewhite said that she 'is not sure about' whether the Jehovah's Witness organisation or community can be characterised as exhibiting 'social powerlessness of children'.[971]

573 Dr Applewhite said that she would have to look at the matter more carefully before accepting that the identified social/cultural factors 'raised some flashing lights' or came together in a 'perfect storm' with regard to the risk of child sexual abuse occurring in the Jehovah's Witness organisation.[972]

10.8 Dr Applewhite's oral evidence: Standards of Best Practice

574 Dr Applewhite accepted a number of components to current standards of best practice in relation to raising and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within religious organisations. She accepted that religious organisations should have:

a) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse which is survivor focussed and designed to ensure that the child or adult survivor feels able to come forward and be comfortable in reporting the allegation[973]

b) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse that does not require a survivor to confront the alleged perpetrator of their abuse or be in the same room as the alleged perpetrator without support[974]

c) a system for preventing perpetrators of child sexual abuse from being put back in a position of trust with children[975]

d) an ability to take child-safe action in order to remove children from imminent danger, or a relationship with other authorities that have that ability,[976] and

e) strong and cooperative relationships with child protection authorities and with criminal justice authorities.[977]

575 Dr Applewhite accepted, and it is submitted, that the Jehovah's Witness organisation's current policies and procedures for raising and responding to child sexual abuse do not meet all the current standards of best practice.[978] She also accepted that 'there are better ways' for handling complaints than having a survivor tell her story to two and then three men without moral support with the accused being present,[979] and that the two-witness rule is 'problematic'.[980]

Available findings on Dr Applewhite's oral evidence

F75 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite in oral evidence that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her testimony before elders and her abuser would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

F76 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her allegation and testimony to three men without the presence of a support person would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

F77 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's current policies and procedures for raising and responding to complaints or allegations of child sexual abuse do not meet all current standards of best practice.

Part 11 Summary of available findings

Available findings on the Jehovah's Witnesses relationship with secular authorities

F1 The Jehovah's Witness organisation presents its members with conflicting and ambiguous teachings regarding their relationship with secular authorities, thereby fostering a distrust of such authorities.

Available findings on historical child sexual abuse data

F2 Since 1950, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia has received allegations of child sexual abuse against 1,006 of its members relating to at least 1,800 victims, and has in that period not reported a single allegation to the police or other authorities, even though 579 of those against whom an allegation was made confessed to having committed child sexual abuse.

F3 The Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia receives approximately three to four reports of allegations of child sexual abuse each month.

Available findings on BCB's first disclosure

F4 The elders bringing the man whom BCB accused of abusing her to her home was unjustified and traumatising for BCB and should not have occurred.

F5 Although the elders may have been following the documented procedure at the time and they may have believed that Scriptural principle required that the accuser face the accused with her allegations, it was distressing to and unsupportive of BCB to require that of her.

F6 It was distressing for BCB to be required by the elders to tell of what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCB disclosing the full extent of her abuse.

F7 It was inconsistent with the elders' professed sympathy for BCB for them not to have offered her the opportunity of the support and involvement of women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

F8 The elders did not explain to BCB the purpose of their investigation and the meetings with her such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

F9 The application of the two-witness rule meant that there was insufficient evidence for the elders to act against BCB's abuser even though they believed her, which left her feeling disbelieved and unsupported, and it left the abuser in the congregation where he may have been a risk to other children.

F10 Mr Horley telling BCB that she should not discuss her abuse with anyone left her feeling silenced and unsupported.

F11 BCB was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

F12 In circumstances where both investigating elders agreed that there was substance to BCB's allegations, they should have taken steps against Bill Neill, at least by imposing some restrictions on his activities involving children and thereby addressing the potential risk that he posed to other children.

F13 It was traumatic for BCB and inappropriate of Mr Horley for him to have required BCB to attend Bible study at Bill Neill's home when he knew that BCB accused Bill Neill of abusing her.

F14 The recommendation of the elders to the Branch Office that Bill Neill be reinstated as an elder 'once this has died down' and their expressed concern 'that there may also be worldly people who also know' demonstrates that they were more concerned about the reputation of Bill Neill and the congregation than about the risk that he posed to children.

Available findings on BCB's second disclosure

F15 It was wrong of Joe Bello, and contrary to the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own direction in that regard, to discourage BCB from reporting to the Royal Commission by asking whether she 'really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud'.

F16 The elders in BCB's present congregation should have supported BCB in her reporting to the Royal Commission if that is what she wanted to do.

Available findings on the investigation and judicial committee processes following BCG's disclosure

F17 The elders did not explain to BCG the purpose of their investigation and their meetings with BCG such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

F18 It was traumatising for BCG to be required by the elders to tell what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of sexually abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCG disclosing the full extent her abuse.

F19 It would have been supportive of the elders to offer BCG the opportunity of the support and involvement of other women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

F20 During their judicial committee investigation or proceedings the elders received evidence that BCH had abused BCG's elder sister and her two younger sisters, but they took no action in relation to that evidence.

F21 The evidence presented to the judicial committee of BCH having abused his other daughters satisfied the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules with regard to sufficiency of evidence to establish that BCH had abused BCG, but the elders wrongly ignored that evidence and accordingly failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

F22 In the course of the judicial committee process, and before the elders reached a conclusion on BCH's guilt in relation to his extra-marital conduct, BCH confessed to having abused BCG.

F23 The elders inexplicably and wrongly ignored BCH's confession to having abused BCG and thereby, within the precepts of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules and procedures, failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

F24 BCG was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

F25 The appeal committee's requirement that BCG give evidence of her sexual abuse by her father to a group of seven men including her named abuser was unjustified and traumatising to BCG and should never have happened.

F26 The failure by the elders to report BCH's sexual abuse of BCG to the police had the result that BCH remained at large in the community and a risk to children, and reflects that the elders were not concerned with child safety but rather with keeping their organisation 'clean'.

F27 The judicial committee's failure to uphold BCG's complaint of abuse by BCH conveyed to BCG that the organisation tolerated child sexual abuse within its ranks.

F28 The advice given by the elders to BCG that she not speak about her abuse to anyone had the effect of silencing her.

F29 The elders' treatment of BCG was unsympathetic and unsupportive and left her feeling worthless and helpless.

Available findings on the reinstatement of BCH

F30 BCH was reinstated as a Jehovah's Witness little more than three years after he had been disfellowshipped for, amongst other things, five or six counts of sexual abuse of his daughter.

F31 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of the risk that BCH posed to children, paid little regard to the fact that he had been disfellowshipped because of child sexual abuse, and was focussed principally on his extra-marital relationship.

F32 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of BCH's failure to apologise to BCG, a factor relevant to consideration of sincere repentance, or of what BCG might have had to say about BCH being reinstated.

F33 The decision to reinstate BCH was disrespectful and unsupportive of BCG.

F34 The Branch Office's response to BCG on 26 February 1996 caused BCG to feel angry, upset and let down, and did not convey support and concern to BCG on the part of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.

Available findings on the impact of the judicial committee process on criminal proceedings against BCH

F35 The judicial committee and appeal committee processes that preceded BCG reporting her abuse by her father to the police complicated the criminal proceedings because of the numbers of people involved in those processes and the telling and retelling of the experience.

Available findings on the risk management and second disfellowshipping of BCH

F36 When BCH was reinstated no restrictions were placed on him which were relevant to his risk to children despite his established history of child sexual abuse.

F37 BCH was disfellowshipped a second time for lying in relation to child sexual abuse rather than for child sexual abuse itself.

F38 The reasons canvassed and then given for the second disfellowshipping of BCH show that those from the Jehovah's Witness organisation who were involved were more concerned about a charge of lying than they were about BCH's sexual abuse of his daughters.

Available findings on the authority of the Governing Body

F39 Mr Spinks' evidence that the Australia Branch has full authority to produce documents, seminars, letters to elders and letters to publishers without the approval or agreement of the Governing Body is rejected.

F40 The Governing Body retains authority in respect of all publications in the name of the Jehovah's Witness organisation and any view or perspective contrary to that of the Governing Body is not tolerated.

Available findings on the investigation process

F41 There are no circumstances in which the survivor of a sexual assault should have to make her allegation in the presence of the person whom she accuses of having assaulted her, and, contrary to the present position, the documents, manuals and instructions produced by the Jehovah's Witness organisation should make this clear.

F42 The requirement that two or more eyewitnesses to the same incident are required in the absence of a confession from the accused, the testimony of two or three witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, or strong circumstantial evidence testified to by at least two witnesses (i.e. the two witness rule):

a) means that in respect of child sexual abuse which almost invariably occurs in private, very often no finding of guilt will be made in respect of a guilty accused
b) causes victims of child sexual abuse to feel unheard and unsupported when it results in allegations of child sexual abuse not being upheld
c) is a danger to children in the Jehovah's Witness organisation because its consequence is that very often nothing is done about an abuser in the organisation
d) does not seem to be applied by the Jehovah's Witness organisation in the case of an accusation of adultery, which suggests that adultery is taken more seriously by the organisation than child sexual abuse, and
e) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation with a view to abandoning it or at least reformulating it to ensure that safe decisions as to someone being guilty of child sexual abuse can be made more easily.

F43 The requirement that only elders (i.e. men) can participate in the making of decisions in the investigation process on whether or not someone has committed child sexual abuse:

a) is a fundamental flaw in that process which weakens the decisions by excluding women, and
b) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to ensure a meaningful role for women.

Available findings on the judicial committee process

F44 Under the current documented judicial committee process, if the evidence of the complainant is to be taken into account then she must give evidence in person unless she lives a great distance away or for some other reason is not able to be physically present.

F45 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to have the evidence of a complainant of child sexual abuse give evidence remotely or by way of a written statement should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

F46 Under the current documented judicial committee process, a complainant of child sexual abuse is prohibited from having someone present with her in the judicial committee process to offer support.

F47 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to allow a complainant of child sexual abuse to be accompanied by a support person of her choosing should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

F48 The current documented process for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness organisation is focussed largely on the rights and comfort of the accused, with little regard to the requirements of a victim of abuse.

Available findings on the management of risk

F49 The failure of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to take into account the risk of re-offending when considering whether an offender is repentant, and consequently in deciding whether to merely reprove rather than to disfellowship, or whether to re-admit someone who has previously been disfellowshipped, does not adequately take account of considerations of child safety and should be revisited.

Available findings on sanctions – reproval

F50 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is found to be repentant and for that reason merely reproved rather than disfellowshipped he remains in the congregation and a risk to children in the congregation.

F51 The system of not announcing the reasons for reproval means that members of the congregation are not warned about the risk that such a wrongdoer poses to children in the congregation.

F52 The sanction of reproval therefore does nothing to protect children in the congregation and in the broader community.

Available findings on sanctions – disfellowshipping

F53 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is disfellowshipped he remains in the community and a risk to children in the community.

F54 The sanction of disfellowshipping does nothing to protect children in the community.

Available findings on reporting

F55 Prior to this case study, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia did not advise congregational elders of their obligations to report the commission of criminal offences to the police under s 316 of the Crimes Act 1900 (NSW).

F56 This report is referred to the Law Society of New South Wales in relation to the conduct of Mr Toole in having failed to advise congregational elders of their obligations to report their knowledge of the commission of certain criminal offences to the police.

Available findings on the Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy on reporting

F57 It is the policy and practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to not report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities unless required by law to do so.

F58 The basis for this policy is said to be respect for the 'right' of the victim to herself decide whether to make a complaint to the authorities.

F59 That basis has no justification where the victim is still a minor at the time that the abuse comes to the attention of the organisation, or where there are others who may still be at risk at the hands of the alleged abuser.

F60 Since the organisation cannot remove an alleged abuser from the family or take other positive steps to safeguard children in the family from continuing risk, the organisation should have a policy to report all allegations of child sexual abuse to the authorities unless an adult victim specifically requests that a report not be made and there is no appreciable risk of children being abused.

Available findings on the impact of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's processes on criminal processes

F61 The internal processes of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for handling allegations of child sexual abuse cause significant delay in a complaint coming, if ever, before authorities.

F62 Admissions made by an accused during the investigative and/or judicial committee process administered by the Jehovah's Witness organisation may not be admissible in criminal proceedings because of the circumstances in which they are made, including that incentives such as reduction in penalty are offered if an admission is made.

F63 The number of people to whom a survivor of child sexual abuse is required to divulge the detail of her complaint exacerbates the trauma already suffered by a survivor of such abuse.

F64 There is significant risk of contamination of a survivor's evidence as a result of the number of times and circumstances in which a survivor is required to divulge the detail of her complaint before her abuse is, if ever, reported to the authorities.

Available findings on Mr Jackson's stated empathy for survivors

F65 Mr Jackon's failure to have read or be familiar with the testimony of the survivor witnesses yet to have read or otherwise familiarised himself with the testimony of Jehovah's Witness witnesses belies his stated empathy for the survivors and his stated recognition of the importance of their perspectives.

Available findings on the system of prevention of child sexual abuse – WWCC

F66 The documented practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation of not reporting child sexual abuse to the authorities undermines the efficacy of the working with children check system, a system to which the organisation says it subscribes and with which it says it complies.

Available findings on the system of prevention of child sexual abuse – risk of reoffending

F67 The practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for the prevention of child sexual abuse, and in particular for the management of the risk of an abuser reoffending, do not take account of the actual risk of an offender reoffending and accordingly place children in the organisation at significant risk of sexual abuse.

Available findings on the accessibility of procedures and policies

F68 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's documented procedures for reporting on and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse are deficient in that they are not documented in such a way as to be easily accessible in one document and available to all interested or affected parties and some matters that are stated to be the policies or practices of the organisation are not recorded at all.

Available findings on shunning

F69 Members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation who no longer want to be subject to the organisation's rules and discipline have no alternative than to leave the organisation which requires that they disassociate from it.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy of requiring its adherents to actively shun those who leave the organisation:

a) makes it extremely difficult for someone to leave the organisation
b) is cruel on those who leave and on their friends and family who remain behind
c) is particularly cruel on those who have suffered child sexual abuse in the organisation and who wish to leave because they feel that their complaints about it have not been adequately dealt with
d) is not apparently justified by the Scriptures which are cited in support of it
e) is adopted and enforced in order to prevent people from leaving the organisation and thereby to maintain its membership, and
f) is in conflict with the organisation's professed support for freedom of religious choice and the belief that Jehovah God is a compassionate God who recognises the worth and dignity of all human beings.

Available findings on Dr Applewhite's expert opinions

F71 The opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite in paragraphs 36, 45 and 46 of her report are rejected because they are not substantiated by identifiable facts and assumptions or by reasons.

F72 Dr Applewhite's report contains a number of factual errors with regard to her documenting of the relevant practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

F73 Dr Applewhite's report is therefore rejected.

Available findings on Dr Applewhite's oral evidence

F74 Dr Applewhite accepted the following components to current standards of best practice in relation to raising and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within religious organisations, namely that religious organisations should have:
a) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse which is survivor focussed and designed to ensure that the child or adult survivor feels able to come forward and be comfortable in reporting the allegation
b) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse that does not require a survivor to confront the alleged perpetrator of their abuse or be in the same room as the alleged perpetrator without support
c) a system for preventing perpetrators of child sexual abuse from being put back in a position of trust with children
d) an ability to take child-safe action in order to remove children from imminent danger, or a relationship with other authorities that have that ability, and
e) strong and cooperative relationships with child protection authorities and with criminal justice authorities.

F75 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite in oral evidence that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her testimony before elders and her abuser would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

F76 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her allegation and testimony to three men without the presence of a support person would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

F77 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's current policies and procedures for raising and responding to complaints or allegations of child sexual abuse do not meet all current standards of best practice.

1. Executive Summary of Submissions

1.1 Jehovah's Witnesses do not condone or cover up the abhorrent sin and crime of child sexual abuse. In fact, as is clear from the statistical summary quoted by Counsel Assisting the Royal Commission in his opening address, it is quite apparent that Jehovah's Witnesses have for at least the last 65 years taken a proactive role in investigating and documenting such abuse and taking action against proved abusers.

1.2 The investigation and judicial findings by Jehovah's Witnesses are part of an ecclesiastical process and are not intended to be a replacement for any criminal and/or civil inquiry.

1.3 Elaboration of these submissions and the reasons for them are set out in the sections below.

2. Organisation of submissions

2.1 These submissions are organised as follows:

(a) Part I is in the following sections:

(i) Part IA is an overview of the submissions and deals with some preliminary matters;

(ii) Part IB addresses the Royal Commission's Terms of Reference;

(iii) Part IC addresses the approach of Jehovah's Witnesses to child sexual abuse matters;

(iv) Part ID addresses some other important related matters; and

(v) Part IE is an overview of the appropriateness of Counsel Assisting's suggested findings and systemic considerations.

(b) Part II addresses each of the 77 findings that Counsel Assisting considers are available to be made on the evidence before the Royal Commission.

(c) Part III addresses further matters that Jehovah's Witnesses consider are appropriate for the Royal Commission to take into account.

(d) Part IV summarises the findings that Jehovah's Witnesses accept, those that they reject and those that they consider should be amended.

3. Part IA: An overview of the submissions and some preliminary matters

3.1 Below we set out, by way of an overview, matters that are relevant to the broader context in which the Royal Commission is operating and specific matters that are relevant to its findings and ultimately to its recommendations.

The significance of religious beliefs

3.2 It is estimated that there are over two billion persons around the world who, like Jehovah's Witnesses, believe in the existence of God and Jesus Christ. They rely principally upon the words of the Bible to guide them in their beliefs and their daily lives. They find comfort in their lives from their religious beliefs and look to the government to respect their religious beliefs. In this regard, Jehovah's Witnesses are no different in their expectations of the secular authorities than others.

3.3 Jehovah's Witnesses, like the members of other faiths, are law-abiding citizens of the countries in which they live. However, like all imperfect humans, an individual within the faith may commit a serious sin that is also a violation of the secular law. Jehovah's Witnesses invariably address such a breach according to their Bible-based religious beliefs and practices. For the reasons developed further below, it would be wrong to conclude that the religious principles, procedures and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses applied in dealing with matters of sin within their congregations were intended to supplant the criminal law or to provide an alternative system for dealing with criminal conduct.

3.4 Based on their understanding of the Bible's teachings, Jehovah's Witnesses are taught to respect the government and they do not isolate themselves from human society.[1] As was pointed out during the public hearings of the Royal Commission, Jehovah's Witnesses have as members, amongst others, lawyers, doctors, psychologists, policemen and policewomen, and members of many other occupations and callings.[2] When needed, Jehovah's Witnesses seek help from qualified professionals in the fields of law, medicine and mental health. Most Jehovah's Witnesses have family members who belong to other religions or who are atheists.[3]

Misconceptions about Jehovah's Witnesses

3.5 At times, Jehovah's Witnesses are the subject of misconceptions. When examined objectively, such views are found to be distorted or untrue.

3.6 For example, the relationship of Jehovah's Witnesses to the government is forthright. Jehovah's Witnesses obey the law and strongly advocate respect for government officials. Only in the rare instance when a secular law conflicts with God's law would one of Jehovah's Witnesses disobey a governmental authority.[4] This can be seen in the case of Jehovah's Witnesses in Nazi Germany who endured imprisonment and even execution rather than submit to the Nazi regime. On the other hand, as evidence of their respect for governmental authority, Jehovah's Witnesses report crimes to the authorities when required by law to do so, they seek legal recourse through the judicial system when they are wronged and they conscientiously pay their taxes.[5]

Religious Freedom in Australia

3.7 We are thankful that the Australian government is not antithetical to the holding of or the free exercise of religious beliefs. Indeed, many persons, such as the German Lutherans in South Australia, came to Australia to escape religious persecution in their homeland. Notably, section 116 of the Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act ("the Constitution") protects the free exercise of religion and precludes interference from Commonwealth laws.

3.8 It is in that broader context of freedom that one must understand religious practices. A person is free to practice his/her religious beliefs to the extent that such practice is not prohibited by law and not only to the extent that it is permitted by law. Logically, unless a religious practice or procedure is prohibited by law, a question that assumes an obligation to do something proceeds upon a false premise as to the free exercise of religion in Australia. Some of the questions asked and some of the points made by Counsel Assisting assumed that such an obligation existed.[6] The problem with this assumption is that an example was often offered as proof of the truth of an assumption, but the opposite is demonstrated by reliance upon another example, as the Commissioner, the Hon. Justice McClellan observed when he referred to the fact that some might desire a matter to be dealt with confidentially: [7]

> "But, Mr Jackson, many of these people don't want to go to the police because that involves potentially a public process, trial, and so on. It's very common that people don't want to go to the police."

3.9 We trust that the findings and recommendations made by the Commission will have a secure foundation and respect the freedom of belief and the free exercise of religion, as Constitutionally protected. It would, however, be unfortunate if findings or recommendations had the effect of denying to members of a faith the right to adhere to their beliefs or to freely exercise their religious choice. For example, an adherent may prefer that a matter be cared for within his/her faith. It would be unfortunate if findings or recommendations of the Royal Commission had a "chilling effect" on the disclosure of cases of abuse to ministers.

3.10 The High Court of Australia has often emphasised the need to protect minorities from the misuse of power.[8] Unpopular views do not necessarily equate to unlawful or illegal conduct. From an uninformed point of view, it is easy to say that a crime should always be reported to the authorities, but the legal system is not that simple. A number of factors may be involved, for example: What does the law require? What does the victim or his/her parents want to be done about the matter? What is the morally right thing to do? What do the Scriptures say about the matter? Ignoring any of these questions oversimplifies relevant considerations and results in positing a simplistic, untenable solution.

Two Universes of Discourse – two different concerns

Sins and Crimes

3.11 In the universe of discourse that is concerned with religious beliefs, a sin is a thought or conduct contrary to the tenets of a faith, as understood and practiced by its adherents. A sin is not always the same thing as a crime. Although, in many instances, it can, and obviously will, be. Jehovah's

Witnesses regard child sexual abuse as both an abhorrent sin and a crime.[9] Sinning does not have the same consequences either for a survivor of the conduct or for the sinner in the world of faith as a crime does in the criminal justice system. Within most religions, avoiding sinning, repentance for one's sins, the forgiveness of sins and compassion for the victim and sinner are central tenets. Many non-religious people sometimes will not, or cannot, understand how or why a Christian may forgive a repentant sinner and exercise compassion in so doing.

3.12 On the other hand, in the criminal law, repentance, forgiveness and compassion are not centrally important concepts, although they sometimes have a role to play in the sentencing and rehabilitation of convicted persons. Rather, the central concerns of the criminal law are with the prevention, investigation, prosecution, punishment of crimes and the rehabilitation of the criminal.[10] In that universe of discourse, the rules of evidence and the burden of persuasion are also central concepts.

3.13 One cannot equate the responses taken in a religious context involving a sinner and the responses/consequences for a perpetrator in the criminal context. One cannot measure the utility of the responses to child sexual abuse by a comparative exercise between the religious and secular arenas, as the Commissioner, the Hon. Justice McClellan observed.[11] To do so would be to proceed upon a false assumption, namely, that the two universes of discourse share the same objectives and processes and that the raison d'etre for them is the same. Neither time, nor space, unfortunately permits us to give all of the reasons why that is not so.[12]

3.14 When two universes of discourse co-exist, they can sometimes overlap but they do not necessarily share the same concerns, objectives, or means by which to achieve their ends. The appearance of Jehovah's Witnesses before the Royal Commission demonstrated something of the truth of the proposition. Jehovah's Witnesses sought to assist the Commission by explaining what

12 For example, and, to begin with, the world of religion is concerned with the avoidance of sin because it offends God and prevents a person from leading a virtuous life as a prelude to future blessings from God. In the criminal world, the avoidance of crime is seen as beneficial to the common good and not as a prelude to future blessings from God. "Repentance" is essential to a religion because once a person has sinned, it is essential that they realise the error of their ways, repent of their wrongdoing and seek forgiveness from God. Recognition of wrongdoing is relevant in the criminal law principally to the question of sentencing and rehabilitation of the individual. Whilst it may have had a religious origin, it is not used for that purpose in the criminal law.

they believe to be the appropriate way to deal with the sin of child sexual abuse. The Royal Commission, by contrast, is entrusted with, amongst other things, the responsibility for determining what institutions and governments do and should do, to better protect children, and not comparing religious approaches to dealing with sin.

3.15 Jehovah's Witnesses do not purport to offer an alternative process to the secular authorities' approach to the protection of children and to the punishment of criminal conduct. Nor do they seek to interfere with that process. The extent to which they are able to cooperate with governments is guided by their belief in the Scriptures and by such considerations as the establishing of wrongdoing and the role of repentance.

3.16 If governments wish for greater assistance in dealing with child abuse matters, they must say so, because it is unrealistic to expect that people of faith are attempting to achieve the same objectives as the criminal law in their dealings with, and treatment of, sinners. There is nothing new in that statement and governments are well aware of the need to balance the different approaches — the sanctity of what is said in the confessional being a well-known example.

Religious belief and another's "reality"

3.17 In the universe of religious discourse, belief and reality are two central distinctions that it is important to observe. A person is entitled to have a belief in the existence of a thing or an event even if someone else does not share that belief. Our laws proceed upon the assumption that, for the most part, a person is entitled to have his/her beliefs respected even if those beliefs do not apparently conform with that which is perceived to be someone else's "reality".

3.18 The fact that not all share the beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses (such as the belief in the existence of God and that the Bible is the Word of God) does not mean that the beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses are wrong, misguided, or unworthy of respect. Whether they are approved by secular authorities is a different question, involving different considerations.

3.19 Many of the questions asked of witnesses in the Royal Commission proceeded upon an unstated and false assumption that, at all times, both questioner and witness either shared or should share the same views and objectives.[13] As a result of that assumption, the questioner and witness were often at cross-purposes. The two universes of discourse do not readily overlap. Moreover, acknowledging the force of a particular point of view of a questioner or respecting that point of view about the efficacy of the criminal law is not synonymous with acknowledging wrongdoing by one of Jehovah's Witnesses, or that it is wrong to hold a different view about their faith's response to sinners.

Religious doctrine and freedom of religious belief

3.20 A significant amount of time was spent in the Commission considering and debating doctrinal matters. It is understood that such doctrinal matters were considered relevant by Counsel Assisting to a consideration of the response by Jehovah's Witnesses to child sexual abuse.

3.21 To the extent that such doctrinal matters were relevant to the Commission's Terms of Reference then, of course, there was not, nor could there be, any objection to, or legitimate complaint about the time spent investigating such matters.

3.22 To the extent that there was debate about whether Jehovah's Witnesses views or interpretation of Scripture was wrong,[14] such debate went beyond what was necessary, and will, in our view, not ultimately prove to be helpful to the Commission. It could also be perceived as betraying personal prejudice and was apt to give the wrong impression of the good work that the Commission is doing.

3.23 For example, whether a sinner's guilt is determined by congregation elders (men) appears to have no causal connection to whether child sexual abuse occurs within a family or outside of the family. It is a different question whether some insensitivity on the part of a man may cause hurt to another person's feelings. Such feelings are not to be ignored, but they do not amount to sexual abuse as understood. Moreover, no empirical or credible evidence, suggesting that a decision being made only by men was, or is, necessarily problematic, was placed before the Commission. Male judges (many of whom may be fathers) determine the guilt or innocence of defendants all over the world. No empirical evidence suggesting that men are not intellectually or emotionally equipped to determine the guilt or innocence of someone accused of child abuse was presented to the Commission. No empirical evidence suggesting that women are necessarily better equipped either intellectually or emotionally to do so was presented to the Commission. In the absence of evidence one way or the other, the choice of the gender of the persons involved in the decision-making process is an aspect of the free exercise of religion, which means that a person is entitled to believe and act in accordance with their beliefs,[15] even if those beliefs mean that congregation elders (men) determine a sinner's guilt.

The correct interpretation of Scripture is not relevant in this context

3.24 The outcome of an investigation into the causes of child sexual abuse and into institutional responses to the same need not, nor should it, depend upon whether a person's interpretation of a particular passage in Scripture is correct or not. The interpretation, right or wrong, is what it is. The correctness of Scriptural interpretation is not within the Terms of Reference of this Commission. More to the point, Jehovah's Witnesses abhor child sexual abuse as a sin and a crime, and have published significant amounts of literature about the subject over several decades.[16] Unlike some, Jehovah's Witnesses did not and do not deny the existence of the problem, they keep records concerning such conduct, they investigate such conduct, and in accordance with their religious beliefs, they discipline members of their faith who abuse minors.

3.25 For the reasons given above, it would be an error to consider that Jehovah's Witnesses adhere to their principles, procedures, and practices with the intent of supplanting the criminal law or to provide an alternative system for dealing with criminal conduct.

Adulthood and preserving the dignity of choice

3.26 It is trite that our laws also assume that an adult person is free to make choices and to accept personal responsibility for their actions. An adult survivor of sexual abuse should not be denied the choice to initiate or make a complaint to the secular authorities. Two points may immediately be made. First, the Commission's own literature accepts that anonymous complaints of abuse can be made.[17] Secondly, it is a relevant consideration that not all sexual misconduct, although morally repugnant, can be equated. As the evidence of the former prosecutor Mr Davies revealed, the secular authorities in Queensland appeared not to have the resources to deal with all complaints of sexual misconduct that were reported.[18] Inevitably, government resources for the investigation and prosecution of child sexual abuse are limited.

3.27 Our laws also assume that it is the right of a parent to initiate or make a complaint on behalf of a child. Jehovah's Witnesses are correct in respecting parental rights and such rights are recognised by Australian laws and international instruments.

4. Part IB: The Royal Commission's Terms of Reference

4.1 While the scope of the Royal Commission's Terms of Reference is broad, we believe that they can be summarized by two key questions: (1) What can and should be done to better protect children from sexual abuse? and (2) What are, and what should be, the best responses to take when it occurs? In our view, all findings and recommendations ought ultimately be relevant to those two questions and the efficacy of any suggested responses ought to be measured against the achievement of the objectives implicit in those two questions. To do otherwise would distract from the objectives of the Commission.

4.2 Jehovah's Witnesses sought to address such questions with the assistance of the highly qualified independent expert, Dr Monica Applewhite. Dr Applewhite's views are consistent with the views of experts already called by the Commission, and her 22 years of experience in the study of child sexual abuse matters, which exceeds many others, should be helpful. In such circumstances, it would be most unfortunate if the Commission were to accept the suggested finding by Counsel Assisting that her report should be rejected.

4.3 We take the view, for the reasons set out at length below, that many of the suggested findings made by Counsel Assisting will not, in fact, assist the Commission in its task, and ought not to be made for that and other reasons. Where we consider that the suggested finding or an amended finding will be of assistance to the Commission because they assist the Commission in answering those relevant questions, then either the findings suggested are not opposed, are amended, or a new finding is suggested. As was stated at the outset, Jehovah's Witnesses are endeavouring to fully cooperate with the Commission.

Constraints of the Terms of Reference

4.4 The Commission's Terms of Reference impose constraints upon its investigations, the most obvious being that it is investigating child sexual abuse and not sexual misconduct towards adults. It is also investigating "institutions", not families, and "institutional contexts", not family contexts. It must also have regard for the fact that many religious organisations provide services and support for children and their families that are beneficial to the children's development. The Commission should be principally concerned with systemic failures.

4.5 The two cases investigated to some extent fell inside the Commission's Terms of Reference, but they both, to some extent also fell outside those Terms of Reference, as will be elaborated upon in more detail below. A significant point that should be made about these cases is that they could not purport to be representative of all of the issues that require investigation and the way they are now addressed by Jehovah's Witnesses. First, because of the introduction of mandatory reporting in some Australian states; second, because with the passage of time more has been learned about dealing with such matters, and responses have changed since the late 1980's and early 1990's. Third, the cases highlighted the circumstances of only the two individuals concerned.

4.6 Child sexual abuse is a matter of concern to any right thinking parent or adult, and to see it only as an "institutional" problem would be to miss an essential truth: that much abuse occurs within families. The reasons why one person within a family might abuse another vary. That is not to say that institutions cannot be helpful in addressing the problem, but it helps to put the response of institutions into context.

5. Part IC: The approach of Jehovah's Witnesses

Co-operation and assistance

5.1 Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia, the legal entity used by Jehovah's Witnesses to facilitate their worship in Australia, co-operated fully with the Royal Commission. It provided some 65 years of records and three witnesses who testified before the Commission. In addition, several congregation elders flew in from around Australia to give evidence in the form of witness statements and oral evidence.

5.2 Congregation elders who gave evidence did so to the best of their ability, in some instances about events occurring some 27 to 33 years ago, including whether conversations even occurred. The witnesses readily acknowledged the force of the different points of view expressed by Counsel Assisting and other counsel, and they acknowledged where appropriate, not only perceived shortcomings in responses, but they also expressed a genuine willingness to learn from past shortcomings.

5.3 One of the difficulties the witnesses encountered in answering questions was with the passage of time. The two cases concerned events occurring between 1982 and 1988. That is between 27 to 33 years ago. It would be surprising, given the passage of time, if a person could remember any details, let alone the precise details, of conversations or events occurring so long ago. No Court today would expect such accuracy of memory of an adult survivor or of a witness to whom the adult survivor spoke, given the lengthy passage of time.

5.4 Moreover, as is well known to the Commission, many of the attitudes, values, and beliefs of 27 to 33 years ago are quite different from those commonly held today towards the prevention, investigation, and prosecution of child sexual abuse. In the context of the criminal justice system, much has changed in the last 30 years concerning the investigation and prosecution of crimes against children. Such crimes are now investigated much more sympathetically and there are procedures in place to enable the giving of evidence by video link or with support. Such procedures did not exist 27 to 33 years ago in all Australian states. In a similar way, Jehovah's Witnesses have improved how they handle the matter of child abuse.

Prevention of Child Sexual Abuse ("CSA") and parental responsibility

5.5 Jehovah's Witnesses consider that the prevention of child sexual abuse must start with educating parents, so that they can actively educate their children about the dangers of abuse and protect them from the same even from within the family.[19] In that regard, their approach is supported both as a matter of common sense and by specialists in the field of prevention of child sexual abuse. It is self-evident that the State simply does not have the resources to prevent child sexual abuse from occurring and it must look to others, including individuals, parents, families, and institutions to assist in that regard. The State is far more likely to achieve that objective if it respects the role of parents than if it shifts the responsibility to the shoulders of others. Indeed many international and national laws recognise that parents and care-givers have the primary responsibility in such matters.[20] The position of Jehovah's Witnesses is consistent with that approach. They believe that parents are in the best position to protect their children.

5.6 When child sexual abuse does occur, Jehovah's Witnesses take the matter seriously. Congregation elders investigate every instance or complaint whether involving a meeting attender, a congregation member, a ministerial servant, or an elder.

Reporting to the secular authorities

5.7 Jehovah's Witnesses regard child abuse as both an abhorrent sin and a crime. Jehovah's Witnesses consider it is the right of the victim and/or the victim's parents to report. The reporting of the crime to the secular authorities by victims or their parents is not discouraged. Elders report such matters to the secular authorities in those States where it is required by law to be reported (mandatory reporting). Regardless of reporting requirements, an elder can report a crime to secular authorities if he believes there is a risk to a child.[21]

To similar effect is the view taken by the Royal Commission. See e.g. Royal Commission Interim Report Vol 1 at page 9, paragraph 4.3.

5.8 The decision to take away that right from a victim or the parents of a child must be left to the legislatures of each State or the Federal Parliament. The consequences of doing so may be thought to be good or adverse. It may reveal more cases of abuse, in which case the question will be whether the governments will provide the resources to ensure that such matters will be investigated and followed through (only 20% of the matters reported in Queensland could be followed up, according to the testimony of Mr Davies)[22]. On the other hand, victims and their families may hesitate to seek the assistance of ministers out of fear of the consequences of coming forward (hence the need for anonymity in some cases of reporting).[23]

5.9 Recognition of the right of the adult survivor to make the decision whether to report is important or the adult survivor may feel disempowered and further traumatised.

5.10 If a child is unable to report the matter to the secular authorities and the parents are unable or unwilling to do so,[24] then an elder may feel compelled to report the matter to the authorities, particularly if he believes there is a risk to a child.[25] Furthermore, it is apparent from the number of cases where the secular authorities have been involved that reporting to the authorities by Jehovah's Witnesses takes place.[26]

26 Some 383 complaints were made to and investigated by the secular authorities: See Exhibit 29-0021, WAT.0018.001.0001_R at 0009 [10] (the letter from Milton Bray & Associates to the Commission dated 20 July 2015) wherein it stated: " by searching key words (ie. police, child services, authorities, charge, court, welfare etc.) in the Case Files and upon careful review of the information contained therein, my client was able to establish that 383 alleged perpetrators have been dealt with by either the police or secular authorities in the respective States or Territories in which they reside." No evidence was put to the contrary.

Reporting within the faith

5.11 As was acknowledged in the Commission, there are times when victims may wish to have their matter dealt with confidentially within the faith.[27] To deny them that opportunity may disempower the victims and may lead to further traumatisation.

5.12 As explained above and elsewhere, Jehovah's Witnesses do not purport to offer a competing or alternative process for dealing with crime; rather their internal religious process deals with sin and its consequences based on their religious beliefs and practices.

Investigation of CSA by elders: procedural matters

5.13 There are established practices and procedures within the Jehovah's Witnesses faith for dealing with the abhorrent sin of child abuse. The present day practices and procedures were canvassed in some detail by Mr Rodney Spinks in his evidence.[28] As was readily apparent from his evidence, the procedures are flexible and can be adapted to the individual's circumstances.[29]

5.14 A victim of child sexual abuse is not required to confront his/her abuser.[30] It is possible that in the past, on occasion, local elders asked victims to confront the accused, just as happened within the criminal justice system at that time.[31]

31 In their inquiry into children and the legal process, the ALRC and HREOC heard significant and distressing evidence that child witnesses, particularly in child sexual assault cases, are often berated and harassed to the point of breakdown during cross-examination: Australian Law Reform Commission and Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission, Seen and Heard: Priority for Children in the Legal Process, ALRC 84 (1997), [14.111] and [14.50].
The Wood Royal Commission heard a number of similar complaints in relation to treatment of child witnesses: Royal Commission into the New South Wales Police Service, Final Report, Vol 5 (1997), [15.92].
Similar comments were also made to the VLRC in its inquiry into reform of sexual offences law and

Since at least 1998, elders have been instructed not to require victims of molestation to confront the accused.[32]

5.15 Although not demonstrably a problem for elders in practice, the fact that all of the practices and procedures are not contained in one document was acknowledged as an area for improvement, and Jehovah's Witnesses are in the process of considering that suggestion.

Evidential matters

5.16 It is not an evidential requirement that a child or adult survivor confront their abuser and, unfortunately, there was some confusion about that aspect of the matter during the Royal Commission hearings.[33]

5.17 The evidential requirements for the establishment of sin are based upon Scripture.[34] In the absence of a confession, the testimony of two witnesses is required to prove the charge.[35] However, sin can also be established if there are two witnesses to the same kind of wrongdoing even though each individual is a witness to a separate incident. The admission of guilt by the sinner is sufficient and no eyewitnesses are required.[36]

5.18 Jehovah's Witnesses consider that the requirement for two witnesses is not a matter for debate as it is based on Scriptural requirements found in the Mosaic Law and reiterated by Jesus Christ and the Apostle Paul.[37] Even when the requisite Scriptural evidence is lacking, elders nevertheless take precautionary measures.

procedure: Victorian Law Reform Commission, Sexual Offences: Final Report (2004).
In NSW, child complainants (who were under the age of 16 at the time of the alleged offence and are currently under the age of 18 years) have only recently, since after 2003, been exempt from giving oral evidence under any circumstances at committal proceedings thus saving them from being cross-examined at committal: s.91(8) Criminal Procedure Act 1986 (NSW).

5.19 If ministers of religion are covered by a mandatory reporting regime, Jehovah's Witnesses comply with the legislation.[38] As was stated at the Royal Commission on several occasions, where reporting is mandated congregation elders report even in those cases where there is insufficient Scriptural evidence to take congregation judicial action.

Responses

Handling CSA offenders within the faith

5.20 Jehovah's Witnesses handle the sin of child sexual abuse based on Scripture and the circumstances of each case. This may result in a variety of disciplinary measures based on the circumstances of the sin, the circumstances of the victim, repentance or the lack of it on the part of the sinner, and other related Scriptural considerations.[39]

5.21 So long as there is no violation of the secular law, the handling of the sin of child abuse by Jehovah's Witnesses based on Scripture cannot be faulted from a secular point of view. The principles are somewhat analogous to those operating in the criminal justice system, save that, once a person has served his/her time in prison and is released, there is often no supervision of that person and no further assistance offered to such a person let alone protection for the community. That is not the case within the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation. The communities of Jehovah's Witnesses are small enough that a sinner will be understood to have sinned by those within the community. A truly repentant sinner will cooperate with the elders in respecting any restrictions imposed for the protection of others.

Mr Davies' evidence

5.22 Mr Davies' evidence has to be understood in light of the following matters. First, Mr Davies was a relatively inexperienced lawyer in a junior supporting role and was expressing a personal point of view based on his experience in one case.[40] Secondly, his view about the admissibility of evidence was not shared by his immediate senior.[41] Thirdly, his observation was a truism of no real consequence in the prosecution of the matter, although it gave context. The same observation could be made about abuse occurring within any faith in which all of the persons involved shared the same faith. Fourthly, it would be wrong to draw, based upon the limited evidence presented, some general conclusions applicable to all future cases involving Jehovah's Witnesses as the quality and quantity of the evidence could not justify a generalised conclusion.

Expert's assistance

5.23 As part of Case Study 29, Jehovah's Witnesses offered the assistance of Dr Monica Applewhite, an independent expert from the United States. Dr Applewhite is not a member of the Jehovah' Witnesses organisation. She gained her three academic qualifications from universities that are not associated with the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation and she had 22 years of relevant field experience.[42] Although a challenge was made to her independence, there was no evidence that she was not independent, nor that she was not suitably qualified. In fact, Dr Applewhite made several concessions that some might have thought were adverse to Jehovah's Witnesses.

5.24 Dr Applewhite, because of her travelling constraints, gave evidence before Mr Spinks gave his evidence. Several of her comments that may appear to be concessions need to be revisited in light of Mr Spinks' subsequent evidence. Her testimony and the suggested findings by Counsel Assisting are examined in greater detail in Part II below.

6. Part ID: Some other important matters

Then and Now

6.1 The abuse in the two cases occurred between 1982 and 1988. The attitudes, values and beliefs surrounding child sexual abuse 27 to 33 years ago in the criminal justice system were quite different then to the way they are now.[43] In the 1980's, a female complainant might have or would have had her allegations investigated by male detectives, most likely have a male prosecution counsel, be cross-examined by male defence counsel, give evidence in public before a jury comprising men and women, all of whom would be strangers and, given the requirement of proving guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, sometimes see a perpetrator walk free from the courtroom. Until the law changed, it used to be a requirement that evidence given by a child complainant always required corroboration and juries were warned not to act upon their evidence unless it was corroborated.[44]

6.2 The point is that, in the last 27 years the criminal justice system has come to understand that the way in which it dealt with sexual abuse cases could have resulted in further trauma to victims. It would be unfair to judge what occurred in the cases of BCB and BCG in light of contemporary attitudes, values, and beliefs, when 27 years ago the secular authorities either offered or delivered no better response.[45]

The two cases and improving responses

6.3 Jehovah's Witnesses are sympathetic to victims who experience traumatic events. If abuse is to be prevented from happening, then why it occurred in the two cases and the motivations of those who perpetrated these wrongs need to be considered.

6.4 In terms of the responses to the accounts of abuse brought forward by the two victims, the responses by the elders were, in part, a product of their backgrounds, in part a product of the times, and in part, a product of the connections between the victims and the abusers. Whether the secular authorities would have acted differently is open to question[46] as we did not hear from any prosecutor of his/her experience in the 1980's of prosecuting sexual abuse cases.

6.5 Improving responses to child sexual abuse is something that can be achieved, and Jehovah's Witnesses have improved and will continue to do so. The fact that Jehovah's Witnesses respond to the sin of child sexual abuse is something that should not be discouraged, but encouraged. Material published under the auspices of the Australian Government revealed that in one study of sexual assault cases between 1990 and 2005, possibly only 1 in 10 matters were seen through to conclusion by prosecutorial authorities.[47] In other words, resorting to the criminal justice system is not a "cure-all" of the problem.

Section 316 Crimes Act 1900 (NSW)

6.6 Counsel Assisting raised a question about s.316 of the Crimes Act 1900 (NSW). Jehovah's Witnesses presently consider that s.316 does not apply where a victim complains to an elder that he or she has been abused, because, at that stage, the elder's knowledge is not the "knowledge" required by the section, although it may satisfy the "belief" required by the section. Nevertheless, the elder is not required to report the same to the authorities because of the application of the qualification in s.316(1) of "without reasonable excuse" when those words are considered and understood in light of the requirements of s.316(4) of the Act, s.127 of the Evidence Act 1995 (NSW) and the beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

6.7 The combined effect of the qualification in s.316(1) and s.316(4) of the Act and s.127 of the Evidence Act 1995 (NSW) is that where an elder forms the belief in the "course of practising or following a profession, calling or vocation …" he has a "reasonable excuse" within the meaning of s.316(1) to not report the information and thus no offence is committed; that interpretation is supported by the section's natural meaning, the highest common law authorities, its legislative history, and a consideration of the section by the NSW Law Reform Commission.

6.8 Consequently, Mr Toole was correct in thinking that elders who were informed of complaints were not required to report the matter to the authorities. In any event, in the absence of an authoritative determination by a Court of competent jurisdiction about whether a requirement exists in the

and civil law countries … shows that, despite legal and procedural reforms, victims/survivors are dissatisfied with the criminal justice system."' circumstances contemplated (and none is referred to by Counsel Assisting) there is no basis for any criticism or referral to the Law Society of New South Wales even if questions of professional competence to advise on such matters were within the Commission's Terms of Reference, which, clearly, they are not.

7. Part IE: The suggested findings of Counsel Assisting

7.1 The suggested findings by Counsel Assisting are problematic in the sense that, they often seem to assume a connection between child sexual abuse and beliefs of Jehovah's Witnesses in circumstances where there is no obvious connection and none is identified by Counsel Assisting.

7.2 For example, consider the suggested findings on "shunning" in F69 and F70. One can ask rhetorically, if an adult person is "shunned" or avoided because he or she has formally disassociated or resigned from the faith, how is the same connected to the prevention of sexual abuse of a child or a response to child sexual abuse? In our submission, it is not or at least, it is not obvious that it is and no evidence connecting the same was placed before the Commission. In fact, the opposite was the case. Mr Monty Baker, an adult who was disfellowshipped, said that being shunned "... wasn't really a problem for me …".[48] Indeed, as a matter of common sense, an adult person who makes a decision must expect that the consequences that ordinarily follow upon such a decision will be attracted.

7.3 When considered against the broader matters mentioned above, it will be seen that several of the findings suggested by Counsel Assisting are indeed problematic. The problems with the findings can be broken down into the following broad categories.

7.4 First, some of the findings are too broadly stated to be of assistance to the Commission. An example is suggested finding F1. The finding does not identify what is the "teaching" that is supposed to be "conflicting" and "ambiguous". It does not refer to relevant literature of Jehovah's Witnesses which address the view taken of the superior authorities[49] and, in any event, one may ask rhetorically, how does or would such a broad finding assist the Royal Commission in its difficult task of making recommendations that will be acted upon by governments so as to reduce the incidence of sexual abuse and to better respond to it?

7.5 Secondly, some of the suggested findings are based on events that occurred 27 years ago and they do not reflect what Jehovah's Witnesses do today, nor are they reflective of any systemic issues within the faith. In such circumstances, the Commission is not given the assistance to which it is entitled.

7.6 Thirdly, some of the findings are either not supported by any reliable, credible or empirical evidence or are inconsistent with evidence given in the Commission, in some cases by persons called by Counsel Assisting. For example, suggested findings F43(a) and (b). No evidence was presented which could support such a finding, nor is it within the Commission's Terms of Reference.

7.7 Fourthly, some of the findings even if, arguably, within purview of the Terms of Reference could not realistically, or meaningfully, be properly investigated because there is no means by which any reliable evidence could be ascertained. For example, suggested finding F70. There appears to be no Term of Reference that requires the Commission to investigate the "shunning" of adults. Nor could, or will such a finding, assist the Commission in making recommendations about what changes ought to be made so as to reduce the incidence of child sexual abuse or to better respond to child sexual abuse, as the so-called "shunning" arises not because of any abuse of a child but because of a decision to reject the beliefs of a faith.[50]

Appropriate findings and systemic considerations

7.8 Jehovah's Witnesses have repeatedly expressed the desire to cooperate fully with the Commission and are sympathetic to victims of child sexual abuse.

7.9 One of the most important questions is: What should be done today to better protect children? Another is: What can be done to better respond to cases of child sexual abuse when they occur? In answer to those two questions, findings addressed to systemic issues could be made.

7.10 It has also been accepted that, whatever procedure is adopted, the procedure should respect the rights of the victim and should not further traumatise the victim. The present-day practices of Jehovah's Witnesses attempt to address such concerns.

7.11 If it is borne in mind that the Commission's findings and recommendations will be read by persons around the world, it emphasises the importance of dealing with "systemic", and not isolated, issues.

7.12 The Commission's task of studying institutional responses to child abuse requires findings as to what Jehovah's Witnesses do:

(a) to prevent child sexual abuse from occurring;

(b) to protect children from further abuse when it occurs;

(c) to report such abuse to the authorities;

(d) to deal with the perpetrators of such abuse; and

(e) to alleviate the impact of such abuse.

7.13 In respect of such questions, the short answers are:

(a) Jehovah's Witnesses have for several decades published and disseminated literature warning of the dangers of child abuse and helping parents to protect their children from abuse.[51] Jehovah's Witnesses will continue to do so.

(b) Jehovah's Witnesses endeavour to protect children from abuse.[52] To that end, they encourage parents to protect their children. They respect that the victim or his/her parents may decide to seek professional help.

(c) While most of the 1,006 case files of abuse occurred in jurisdictions where there was no legal obligation for ministers of religion to report, contrary to Counsel Assisting's assertion, the files on hand confirm that close to 400 cases of abuse have been reported to secular authorities by victims or others. In some cases, the victims or their families have exercised their right not to report the matter to the secular authorities and their decision has been respected by congregation elders. In still other instances, the victims or their families have later decided to report the matter and congregation elders have provided support.

Jehovah's Witnesses, consistent with Australian and international instruments, consider that it is the right of the survivor and/or the survivor's family to report the matter to secular authorities.[53] Where the secular authorities require that it be reported by elders, the elders report the matter to the authorities.[54]

(d) Those who commit the sin of child abuse are reproved and placed under restrictions or disfellowshipped.[55] Even if reinstated, the wrongdoer will be placed under continuing restrictions in order to protect children.[56]

(e) Like organisations in the secular arena, the procedures and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses have been improved and changed over the last 27 years in an endeavour to better respond to and alleviate the impact of child sexual abuse.

7.14 Detailed answers are contained in Part II which Part responds to the proposed findings by Counsel Assisting.

8. Conclusions to Part I

8.1 All of the matters referred to above are relevant to the context in which the Commission operates, to the findings that it will or should make and to whether the Commission's report and recommendations will receive the reception they ought fairly to receive. Some of them are of greater importance than others in their impact upon the two principal questions identified above concerning prevention and responses to child abuse.

8.2 The Commission's report will be read by many in Australia and around the world as it would seem to be both the largest and most thorough inquiry of its type anywhere in the world. Its views will no doubt influence future generations of Australian legislators and others.

8.3 If the Commission's views are to be respected around the world, as they undoubtedly will and should be, it is of the utmost importance that those reading the Commission's report and recommendations understand that its approach to the universal problem of child sexual abuse is free of any perception that the findings and recommendations it makes are antithetical to the religious beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

8.4 Ultimately, any findings or recommendations ought to be measured against their practical efficacy in achieving the objectives of the Commission as set out in its Terms of Reference namely, to better protect children from sexual abuse and to have better responses if it should occur.

8.5 Jehovah's Witnesses view child sexual abuse as both a sin and a crime. They have fully cooperated with the Commission in fulfilling its task, and are committed to continuing their efforts to prevent child sexual abuse.

9. Part II Summary of available findings

9.1 Part II responds in detail to the proposed findings of Counsel Assisting in Parts 1-10 of Counsel Assisting's Submissions ("CAS"); reference to a paragraph within Counsel Assisting's Submissions are identified as "CAP" followed by the paragraph number, for example "CAP 114".

CAS Part 1: Overview of Jehovah's Witnesses

Available findings on Jehovah's Witnesses' relationship with secular authorities

9.2 Counsel Assisting considers that the following finding is available on the evidence:

F1 The Jehovah's Witness organisation presents its members with conflicting and ambiguous teachings regarding their relationship with secular authorities, thereby fostering a distrust of such authorities.

9.3 The evidence referred to by Counsel Assisting at CAS 1.3 does not and, could not, justify such a finding. The suggested finding is not, in any way, relevantly connected to either preventing or responding to child sexual abuse by Jehovah's Witnesses. It follows, the proposed finding, has little direct bearing on the Terms of Reference.

9.4 The tangential relevance appears to be that if the finding that Jehovah's Witnesses have a "distrust of authority" is accepted, it justifies a further implied finding that Jehovah's Witnesses only deal with child sexual abuse internally and are reluctant to report child abuse to authorities because of that distrust. The logic is flawed. It is based on the conflation between dealing with the sin of sexual abuse and the crime of sexual abuse and Counsel Assisting's lack of understanding of the faith's teachings on the Scriptures.

9.5 Counsel Assisting selectively refers in CAS 1.3 to "doctrinal teachings" as supporting the proposed finding. Counsel Assisting does not, however, identify with any specificity the "teachings" or in what way they are "conflicting" or "ambiguous" such as to justify a conclusion that Jehovah's Witnesses 'mistrust' such authorities (or that they only deal internally with sexual abuse matters or would not report child sexual abuse to the secular authorities because of that mistrust).

9.6 The relationship between Jehovah's Witnesses and secular authorities is set out in Mr O'Brien's first statement.[57] In Annexure 2, he clearly sets out the position of Jehovah's Witnesses in society. In part it notes (emphasis added):

> …..Jehovah's Witnesses believe that it is their Christian responsibility to be good citizens. Hence they honour and respect government authority. Through their publications and witnessing work, they encourage their neighbours to be law-abiding. However, when a government demands what is in direct conflict with what God commands, the Witnesses do not comply. They "obey God as ruler rather than men."— Acts 5:29; Romans 13:1-7.[58]

9.7 This position is consistent with Mr Spinks' evidence as to obedience to Scripture over secular law. That evidence, relied upon by Counsel Assisting, was given in the context of a discussion of Jehovah's Witnesses currently being imprisoned because of their beliefs in several countries and, historically, in Nazi Germany.

9.8 In harmony with Romans 13:1-7, Jehovah's Witnesses comply with mandatory reporting laws. Thus, Counsel Assisting's reliance on the text cited from Keep Yourselves in God's Love is mistaken.[59] The reference to "governments" and "authorities" in the cited passage is directly relevant to a Jehovah's Witnesses' response where such institutions demand obedience to what is in direct conflict with God's commands. Any attempt to use such texts to support an implied proposition that Jehovah's Witnesses' response to child sexual abuse is explained by a "mistrust of authority", is disingenuous and a blatant misapplication of the text.

9.9 The belief of Jehovah's Witnesses that God's law supersedes man's law in no way prevents them from reporting child sexual abuse when required to do so by secular law. Relevantly, as regards child sexual abuse, the position of Jehovah's Witnesses is unequivocal: they encourage obedience to the law.[60]

9.10 It is also to be kept firmly in mind that a misunderstanding and misrepresentation of the faith's official position by a member of the faith (or a former member) as to the relationship between Jehovah's Witnesses and the secular authorities does not represent the official teachings of Jehovah's

Witnesses, just as a misrepresentation by a legal practitioner of the relevant principle to be extracted from a case would not represent the official view of, for example, the High Court or the New South Wales Court of Appeal.

CAS Part 2: Historical Child Sexual Abuse

Available findings on historical child sexual abuse data

9.11 Counsel Assisting considers that the following two findings are available on the evidence:

F2 Since 1950, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia has received allegations of child sexual abuse against 1,006 of its members relating to at least 1,800 victims, and has in that period not reported a single allegation to the police or other authorities, even though 579 of those against whom an allegation was made confessed to having committed child sexual abuse.

9.12 The actual statistic referred to (1,006) needs to be understood in the following context for the following reasons.

9.13 First, it is wrong to assert that 1,006 were "members" since, of those, approximately 200 persons were involved in child abuse, or were the subject of an allegation, prior to their becoming Jehovah's Witnesses.[61]

9.14 Secondly, there is no evidence that 1,800 persons were, in fact, victims. An allegation does not mean that a person is a victim. It is well known that in parenting disputes in the context of family law, unfounded allegations of sexual abuse of children may be made.[62] Not all such allegations are substantiated, nor are they necessarily true.

9.15 Thirdly, Jehovah's Witnesses have a broad definition of sexual misconduct that includes, for example, "sexting" between minors.[63] Elders are instructed to call the branch office if they learn that a minor is involved in "sexting".

9.16 Fourthly, when an allegation is made by an adult survivor of child sexual abuse, it is not the right of an organisation to make a report on that adult's behalf unless the adult requests that it be done. Adults have the right to make such a choice and organisations are not entitled to deny them that right.

9.17 Fifthly, becoming one of Jehovah's Witnesses is voluntary. Its organisational structure, modelled on the first century Christian congregation, exists to serve God's purposes. The faith is not an agency or instrumentality of government entrusted with the responsibility for the supervision and care of children.

9.18 Sixthly, while most of the 1,006 case files referred to by Counsel Assisting occurred in jurisdictions where ministers of religion were not mandated reporters, congregation elders are directed to adhere to mandatory reporting regimes when they apply to ministers of religion.[64]

9.19 While Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia is not legally obligated to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the secular authorities, since August 25, 1989, congregation elders have been directed to contact the branch office in relation to compliance with reporting requirements.[65] Further, congregation members are free to report such matters to the secular authorities and many have done so, as is apparent from information provided to the Commission.[66]

9.20 The suggested finding is unlikely to assist the Commission in making appropriate recommendations about what can be done to better respond to child sexual abuse because it is not placed into any factual context. A mere recitation of numbers will not assist the Commission.

9.21 It should be noted that in many cases, victims or their families did not want the secular authorities involved. In still other cases, the victim may have chosen not to report the abuse until later in life, by which time he or she is an adult.

F3 The Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia receives approximately three to four reports of allegations of child sexual abuse each month.

9.22 In order to ensure that allegations of child sexual abuse are properly handled by congregation elders, they are instructed to contact the branch office if they learn of any broadly-defined sexual misconduct involving minors. The evidence given by Mr Toole was, when read in context, that he received three to four calls a month about “allegations” of child sexual abuse and not reports of ”actual” child sexual abuse.[67]

9.23 No inquiry was made during the public hearing as to the circumstances of each of the calls made by the elders to the branch office in order to determine if the report involved a non-Witness perpetrator, occurred before the wrongdoer’s association with Jehovah’s Witnesses, if the allegation was historical in nature, or if it was in fact, by definition, child sexual abuse.

CAS Part 3: BCB

Available findings on BCB’s first disclosure

9.24 Counsel Assisting considers that the following 11 findings are available on the evidence:

F4 The elders bringing the man whom BCB accused of abusing her to her home was unjustified and traumatising for BCB and should not have occurred.

F5 Although the elders may have been following the documented procedure at the time and they may have believed that Scriptural principle required that the accuser face the accused with her allegations, it was distressing to and unsupportive of BCB to require that of her.

F6 It was distressing for BCB to be required by the elders to tell of what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCB disclosing the full extent of her abuse.

F7 It was inconsistent with the elders’ professed sympathy for BCB for them not to have offered her the opportunity of the support and involvement of women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

F8 The elders did not explain to BCB the purpose of their investigation and the meetings with her such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

F9 The application of the two-witness rule meant that there was insufficient evidence for the elders to act against BCB’s abuser even though they believed her, which left her feeling disbelieved and unsupported, and it left the abuser in the congregation where he may have been a risk to other children.

F10 Mr Horley telling BCB that she should not discuss her abuse with anyone left her feeling silenced and unsupported.

F11 BCB was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

F12 In circumstances where both investigating elders agreed that there was substance to BCB’s allegations, they should have taken steps against Bill Neill, at least by imposing some restrictions on his activities involving children and thereby addressing the potential risk that he posed to other children.

F13 It was traumatic for BCB and inappropriate of Mr Horley for him to have required BCB to attend Bible study at Bill Neill's home when he knew that BCB accused Bill Neill of abusing her.

F14 The recommendation of the elders to the Branch Office that Bill Neill be reinstated as an elder 'once this has died down' and their expressed concern 'that there may also be worldly people who also know' demonstrates that they were more concerned about the reputation of Bill Neill and the congregation than about the risk that he posed to children.

9.25 It is submitted that the evidential basis for suggested findings F4 to F14 contained in paragraphs 109 to 152 of the submission by Counsel Assisting require the following additions, deletions and amendments.

9.26 On a global basis the honesty, candour, and quality of the elders' evidence should be acknowledged by the Commission along the lines of that reported by Janet Fife-Yeomans at page 32 of "The Daily Telegraph" on 1 August, 2015: While people from other churches dragged to the Royal Commission have obviously been coached by PR gurus and lawyers in how to present themselves and say the right thing, the Jehovah's Witnesses were totally devoid of artifice.

9.27 CAP 111: For accurate context, it should be added that the offending conduct occurred when BCB was staying at the Neill home. BCB was staying at the Neill home because of her friendship with Bill Neill's daughter. As such it is submitted that the offending conduct did not arise because of Bill Neill being in a position of authority over BCB.

9.28 Without minimising its offensiveness, it is submitted that the offending conduct (inappropriate kissing and the touching of BCB's breasts through her clothing) committed when BCB was under the age of 18 would amount in criminal law to indecent assault. This point is made, not to condone or minimise the conduct, but to put it into its correct legal context. Counsel Assisting did not comment on or clarify this fact with the Commission. Even so, it should be noted that the congregation viewed the wrongdoing seriously and took congregation action.

9.29 Further, the offending conduct initially reported to the congregation was that of indecent assaults and not sexual assaults.

9.30 It is also submitted that BCB was a married adult when the congregation elders learned of the misconduct of Bill Neill and subsequently met with her.

9.31 CAP 112: The statement that Bill Neill discouraged BCB from forming friendships with non-Jehovah's Witnesses is of no particular significance to child sexual abuse.[68] Many years ago (and even in some cultures today), a relationship or even a friendship with a person of a different faith was frowned upon.

9.32 Further, the statement that BCB left high school encouraged by the Neill family has no evidential basis, but even if it did, it has no causal connection to child sexual abuse.[69]

9.33 Further, the implication that the Neills discouraged BCB from fraternising with non-Jehovah's Witnesses is contradicted by the fact that BCB had non-Jehovah's Witness friends whilst at school and was working in a bank with non-Jehovah's Witnesses at the time of the offending conduct.[70]

9.34 CAP 113: The statement that Bill Neill groomed and sexually abused BCB is legally inaccurate and should be amended to indecently assaulted.

9.35 Further, the statement that BCB felt unable to disclose the abuse because of Bill Neill's position of authority in the congregation is incomplete. In paragraph [25] of her statement, BCB states that Bill Neill was the head of the household and that she felt that she could not tell anyone as if she did it would upset Bill Neill's wife, Bronwyn, and their daughter, BCE, as well as members of the congregation.[71] According to her own statement, all of these factors influenced BCB's decision not to disclose what was happening to her.

9.36 CAP 115: For accurate context it should be added that BCB was an adult, of 23 or 24 years of age, when she first disclosed this matter.

9.37 CAP 116: For accurate context it should be added that at the time of receiving the complaint Mr Horley was 31 years of age, he had been an elder for only 3 years[72] and it was the first time that he had dealt with a complaint of sexual abuse.[73]

9.38 CAP 118: For accurate context it should be added that when this matter was reported to Mr Horley he immediately sought the advice and guidance of the circuit overseer, Mr Douglas Jackson.[74]

9.39 CAP 122: For accurate context it should be added that BCB's evidence was that "Max [Horley] was very supportive and kind".[75]

9.40 It should also be added that BCB's evidence as to being "pressed" by Mr Horley amounted to BCB saying that Mr Horley simply repeated what BCB had previously told him and that she confirmed this.[76]

9.41 CAP 123: For accurate context, BCB's reference to "a room full of men" in her statement should be understood to mean Mr Douglas Jackson, Mr Horley and her abuser, Bill Neill. It should also be added that BCB's husband, BCC, was also present to support BCB. It should also be noted that BCB knew Mr Douglas Jackson and Mr Horley at that time.

9.42 CAP 127: For accurate context, it should be added that BCB did not feel comfortable disclosing the full extent of her abuse to anyone at that time, including her husband, BCC.[77]

9.43 CAP 128: For accuracy it should be added that the assertion of BCB that nobody explained to her the purpose of either meeting should be contrasted with Mr Douglas Jackson's evidence, which is cited at CAP 134.[78]

9.44 For accuracy, it should also be stated that:

(a) BCB gave evidence that she did understand that it was her word against Bill Neill's and that the elders were trying to find out what happened.[79]

(b) As one of Jehovah's Witnesses, BCB would have received a copy of the publication "Organised to Accomplish Our Ministry"[80] at some point before her baptism in 1986. At page 145 of that publication, an overview is provided of the process of how the elders investigate and deal with cases of wrongdoing within the congregation.[81]

9.45 CAP 129: For accurate context the following should be added:

(a) Within weeks of BCB's complaint, Bill Neill was removed as an elder in the congregation and BCB was present at the congregation meeting when this fact was announced;

(b) This announcement conveyed that Bill Neill had been disciplined, and/or sanctioned,[82]

(c) Those with knowledge of the investigation of Bill Neill, including BCB, would have known why Bill Neill had been removed,[83] and

(d) The publication "Organised to Accomplish Our Ministry" at page 141[84] explains that the removal of an elder is reflective of his failing to meet Scriptural standards for elders.

9.46 CAP 132: Accordingly, for accurate context the statement "and prevented her from disclosing the full extent of her abuse" should be removed.[85]

9.47 CAP 133: It is submitted that the adjective "totally" should be removed.

9.48 CAP 136: It is submitted that the statement, Mr Horley denied that he was trying to cover the matter up, should be removed as the question and answer surrounding this are not relevant or based on any evidence in the proceedings.

9.49 Further, it should be added that Mr Horley gave evidence that the purpose of his request was to limit the spread of gossip[86] and that BCB was free to talk to others within the congregation including the elders or a mature woman from within the congregation.[87]

9.50 CAP 137: In light of the previous submission, this paragraph should be amended to read, Mr Horley accepted that BCB could have felt silenced and unsupported by his instruction not to speak with others about her abuse.

9.51 CAP 143: For accuracy, the following should be added:

(a) BCB said that there was at least one other Bible study group held at the Kingdom Hall in Narrogin.[88]

(b) BCB did not recall who it was that conveyed to her that she had to continue attending the Bible study group at Bill Neill's house, and it might have been her mother. BCB said that BCC had said to her it might have been Mr Horley but BCC was not called to give evidence as to this even though he was present at the public hearing in a support role.[89] Further, this was not put to Mr Horley before the Royal Commission.

(c) There was no compulsion as to which Bible study group, if any, BCB should attend.

9.52 It is further submitted that the statement that Mr Horley organised the Bible study held at Bill Neill's house should be removed as it is not based on any evidence in the proceedings.

9.53 In light of the previous submissions, it is submitted that CAP 143 be amended to read, BCB gave evidence that even after she had disclosed her abuse by Bill Neill, she continued to see Bill Neill several times a week at congregational meetings.

9.54 CAP 144: For accuracy, it should be added that BCB's evidence was that Mr Horley asked her not to talk out of respect for the Neill family. The other members of the Neill family were her friends, including Mrs Neill, whom BCB said she "loved like a mother".[90]

9.55 The evidence does not support the assertion that BCB was in fact encouraged to respect her abuser.

9.56 In light of the foregoing submissions, it is submitted that CAP 144 be amended to read, BCB gave evidence that she was left feeling unsupported by the congregation and that she felt she was instead being encouraged to respect her abuser.

9.57 CAP 149: For accurate context, it should be added that Mr Horley gave evidence that it would take many years for that to occur, if ever,[91] and that in fact Bill Neill was not reappointed until 2001 to the Warnbro Congregation, a period of 10 years.

9.58 CAP 152: For accuracy, it should be added that:

(a) Mr Horley's evidence was that his aim in removing Bill Neill as an elder was to protect every member of the congregation from Bill Neill,[92] and

(b) Mr Douglas Jackson's evidence was that in dealing with Bill Neill, steps would have been taken to ensure that he wouldn't get into that situation again.[93]

Suggested revised and amended findings

9.59 In the light of the foregoing submissions, it is submitted that the following additions, deletions and amendments are required to Counsel Assisting's recommended findings contained at F4 to F14.

9.60 Suggested finding F7 should be amended to: As BCB had the support of her husband who was present with her, the fact that the elders did not offer her the opportunity to have women involved in the process is not inconsistent with the elders' professed sympathy for BCB.

9.61 Suggested finding F8 should be amended to: Elders investigating BCB's complaints could have ensured that BCB understood the purpose of their investigation and the meetings with her.

9.62 Suggested finding F9 is contrary to the evidence and should not be made for the reasons set out in paragraphs 9.197 to 9.227.

9.63 Suggested finding F10 is not supported by the evidence before the Commission and as such should not be made for the reasons set out in paragraphs 9.48 and 9.50.

9.64 Suggested finding F11 should be amended to: Elders investigating BCB's complaints could have advised BCB of her right to report abuse to authorities.

9.65 Suggested finding F12 should be amended to: After Bill Neill was removed as an elder, the elders could also have imposed appropriate restrictions on his involvement with children.

9.66 Suggested finding F13 is not supported by the evidence and as such should not be found by the Commission. See also paragraph 9.51 and 9.52 above.

---

92 Transcript of M Horley, T15217:9-24 (Day 147).
93 Transcript of D Jackson, T15253:26-29 (Day 148).

9.67 Suggested finding F14 should be amended to: The recommendation of the elders to the branch office that Bill Neill be reappointed as an elder 'once this has died down' and their expressed concern 'that there may also be worldly people who also know' were inappropriate and did not reflect the policy and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Available findings on BCB's second disclosure

9.68 Counsel Assisting considers that the following two findings are available on the evidence:

F15 It was wrong of Joe Bello, and contrary to the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own direction in that regard, to discourage BCB from reporting to the Royal Commission by asking whether she 'really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud'.

F16 The elders in BCB's present congregation should have supported BCB in her reporting to the Royal Commission if that is what she wanted to do.

9.69 It is submitted that the evidential basis for suggested findings F15 and F16 contained in CAP 153 to 159 of the submission of Counsel Assisting require the following additions, deletions and amendments set out below in order that they fairly and accurately represent the evidence given before the Commission.

9.70 CAP 155: For accurate context, the following evidence given by Mr Bello should be added:

(a) that the conversation was an informal conversation with BCB's husband, BCC, not BCB;

(b) that the question was rhetorical;

(c) that the words used by Mr Bello were, not did BCB really want to drag Jehovah's name through the mud, but, what would that accomplish other than dragging Jehovah's name through the mud; and

(d) that when BCC said that it was about closure and financial compensation Mr Bello accepted BCB's right to do so and said he could see BCC's point that it could achieve a measure of closure for BCB.[94]

9.71 BCC did not give evidence on this issue.

[94] Transcript of J Bello, T15273:11-26 (Day 148).

9.72 CAP 156. This paragraph is not supported by the evidence before the Commission and should not be asserted by the Commission.[95]

9.73 CAP 157: The reference to Upset by Mr Bello's visit, should be removed. There was no evidence that this was the reason for BCB writing her letter.

9.74 CAP 159: It is submitted that this paragraph is irrelevant and should be removed.

9.75 For greater accuracy, it should be added that Mr Bello gave evidence that the elders in Kingsley Congregation gave a great deal of support to BCB and BCC, as well as forwarding BCB's letters to the branch office.[96]

9.76 In the light of the foregoing submissions, we now submit that the following additions, deletions and amendments are necessary to Counsel Assisting's recommended findings contained at F15 to F16.

9.77 For the reasons stated above, suggested finding F15 is not supported by the evidence given before the Commission and should not be made.

9.78 For the reasons stated above, suggested finding F16 is not supported by the evidence given before the Commission and should not be made.

CAS Part 5: BCG

Available findings on the investigation and judicial committee processes following BCG's disclosure

9.79 Counsel Assisting considers that the following 13 findings are available on the evidence:

F17 The elders did not explain to BCG the purpose of their investigation and their meetings with BCG such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

F18 It was traumatising for BCG to be required by the elders to tell what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of sexually abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCG disclosing the full extent her abuse.

F19 It would have been supportive of the elders to offer BCG the opportunity of the support and involvement of other women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

95 Transcript of J Bello, T15273:11-36 (Day 148).
96 Exhibit 29-0005, Statement of Joseph Bello, STAT.0594.001.0001_R at [5.5] and [5.10].

F20 During their judicial committee investigation or proceedings the elders received evidence that BCH had abused BCG's elder sister and her two younger sisters, but they took no action in relation to that evidence.

F21 The evidence presented to the judicial committee of BCH having abused his other daughters satisfied the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules with regard to sufficiency of evidence to establish that BCH had abused BCG, but the elders wrongly ignored that evidence and accordingly failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

F22 In the course of the judicial committee process, and before the elders reached a conclusion on BCH's guilt in relation to his extra-marital conduct, BCH confessed to having abused BCG.

F23 The elders inexplicably and wrongly ignored BCH's confession to having abused BCG and thereby, within the precepts of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules and procedures, failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

F24 BCG was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

F25 The appeal committee's requirement that BCG give evidence of her sexual abuse by her father to a group of seven men including her named abuser was unjustified and traumatising to BCG and should never have happened.

F26 The failure by the elders to report BCH's sexual abuse of BCG to the police had the result that BCH remained at large in the community and a risk to children, and reflects that the elders were not concerned with child safety but rather with keeping their organisation 'clean'.

F27 The judicial committee's failure to uphold BCG's complaint of abuse by BCH conveyed to BCG that the organisation tolerated child sexual abuse within its ranks.

F28 The advice given by the elders to BCG that she not speak about her abuse to anyone had the effect of silencing her.

F29 The elders' treatment of BCG was unsympathetic and unsupportive and left her feeling worthless and helpless.

9.80 It is submitted that the evidential basis for suggested findings F17 to F29 contained in CAPs 164 to 219 require the following additions, deletions and amendments.

9.81 CAP 167: For accurate context, it should be added that the offending conduct was committed by BCG's father, BCH. As such it is submitted that the offending conduct did not arise from BCH being in a position of authority linked to the Jehovah's Witnesses' faith.

9.82 CAP 167: Further, the only evidence of these assertions came from BCG. As such, it is submitted that they should be preceded by, BCG gave evidence that.

9.83 CAP 168: The only evidence of these assertions came from BCG. As such, it is submitted that they should be preceded by, BCG gave evidence that.

9.84 CAP 170: Paragraphs 37 and 38 of BCG's statement indicate that BCG did not, at any time, indicate that she wished to discuss sexual abuse allegations with the elders. In her statement BCG states only:

(a) I need to talk about some stuff that's happened between me and dad,[97] and

(b) I want to talk to you about things in my family that you don't know about. What my father is doing.[98]

9.85 Consistent with this, in 2001 at the committal proceedings against BCH, BCG gave evidence of a conversation she had with Mr Ali. BCG's evidence was that she told Mr Ali that, you need to come and talk to the family, there's things you don't know about in the family, you need to come and talk to us.[99]

9.86 CAP 171: For accuracy, Mr Ali's evidence in relation to BCG's complaint should be added. Mr Ali's evidence in this regard was:

(a) I'm sorry, but I can't recollect that;[100]

(b) Generally, if it was something of a minor concern, yes;[101] and

(c) If this did really happen – I'm not doubting that it did – then it would be consistent with myself to follow through and have a discussion with her, and to also approach the parent if it was something of concern, yes.[102]

9.87 CAP 172: For accuracy, it should be added that when Mr Bowditch was asked by Counsel Assisting whether he would have told BCG that he could not talk to her without BCH being present he answered categorically, I would never have said that.[103]

9.88 Further it should be added that, during questioning by Counsel Assisting on this issue, Mr Bowditch answered variously:

(a) I didn't know how serious it was, and as she was a young adult, I would have spoken to her anyway.[104];

(b) No, I would speak to her with somebody else, like my wife, in a room that's close or – you know – in an adjoining room;[105] and

(c) I still would not have said that. I would have let the person talk to me.[106]

9.89 It is therefore submitted that CAPs 170 to 172 are without foundation and should be removed.

9.90 CAP 174: It should be added that BCG gave evidence in 2001 at the committal proceedings against BCH. BCG stated that her allegations arose in the context of another investigation of BCH, saying [another woman] was involved…so was BCK, so was Mum. BCJ was there…lots of people in there. There were lots of other events going on as well.[107]

9.91 CAP 175: BCG's statement that she was alone and without support is not accurate. It should be added that BCG had the support of her then fiancé BCJ, who was present at the Kingdom Hall during the judicial committee meeting.[108] In this regard Mr Ali stated that BCJ was present all the time.[109] At times during the judicial process BCG's mother, BCI, and sister, BCK, were also present.[110]

9.92 Further it is submitted that the elders dealing with this matter had a close association with BCG[111] and at all times sought to put BCG at ease. Further, the elders sought to reassure and support BCG during this process. [112]

9.93 Mr de Rooy gave evidence that, "We had known her for such a long time, she was like our family",[113] and that the elders "felt very much for her".[114] Mr Ali and Mr Bowditch also gave evidence that the elders were well known to BCG and that they were there to protect her.[115]

9.94 CAP 177: BCG's statement that the elders were friends of her father requires context. There was no evidence before the Commission of any particular relationship. To the contrary, the evidence was that all members of the congregation, including BCG, were treated similarly.[116]

9.95 BCG's evidence in 2001 at the committal proceedings against BCH should also be added, being that she was reluctant to speak of BCH's abuse to the elders because, "they're not supposed to say anything to anyone else but sometimes they tell their wives and it will get around to everybody".[117]

9.96 It should be added that all of the elders gave evidence that they believed BCG.[118] Mr Bowditch gave evidence that he told BCG that he believed her one hundred percent.[119]

9.97 Further, the elders did not drop BCG's allegations once the decision was made to disfellowship BCH, but rather continued to investigate and press the allegations at BCH's appeal relating to the other matter before the judicial and appeal committees.[120]

9.98 CAP 178: The verb "forced" should be changed to "required" consistent with CAP 179.

9.99 CAP 179: It should be added that the elders gave evidence that BCG involved herself voluntarily in the process of confronting her father and wanted to put her allegations to him face-to-face.[121]

9.100 CAP 181: For accurate context it should be added that at the first meeting the elders were concluding an investigation, which had been on foot for some time in relation to BCH's alleged marital infidelity.[122]

9.101 That meeting was formed to deal with that earlier complaint.[123]

9.102 The complaint was dealt with and a finding made against BCH.[124]

9.103 During that judicial committee meeting BCG made her more serious complaint against BCH.[125]

9.104 During that judicial committee BCG made hearsay allegations relating to BCH and her sisters.[126]

9.105 During that judicial committee meeting, at all times, BCH denied the allegations.[127]

9.106 Following the judicial committee meeting the elders continued to investigate BCG's complaints.[128]

9.107 BCH appealed the earlier judicial committee findings regarding his marital infidelity.[129]

9.108 During the subsequent appeal committee meeting, the elders questioned BCH at length about BCG's complaints following which BCH confessed.[130]

9.109 It should be added that BCG gave evidence-in-chief in 2001 at the committal proceedings against BCH, concerning the appeal committee meeting:[131]

And then Kevin Bowditch said – he said, "Before you close up can we – can BCG just" – he called me BCG, I think. Just he gave – admit it 'cause I never heard him admit it. In there Joe Marazza [sic] said "Yeah". I think – and he – 131 Transcript of BCG at committal proceedings against BCH, QLD.0068.001.0736:15-40.

Kevin Bowditch said that, "I think that it would be good for BCG's sake", or for my sake, BCG's sake to hear that. And I was like absolutely bowled over because the last one he kept saying that I was lying and everything. In the second committee they – they asked him well – they asked him, did he abuse me, something to that effect, and he said, "Yes". He had his head down like this. I did—

You're indicating that he had his hands over his face? – Yeah, like that, with his hands on his knees and he said, "Yes, I did step out of line". And then another thing that Joe Marazza [sic] said, because one of his things – his little things was that I seduced him. Joe Marazza [sic] said, "Okay". Not – he said this was no – no insult at me and it's not that they didn't believe me, they do believe me, that he said to BCH, my father, that if that was the case, which it wasn't, that it would be his right as a father to not do that. He would still be wrong in doing that and he fairly gave him heaps. Well, I thought he did. I thought it was good to see. And they still decided to disfellowship him.

9.110 It should be added that during cross-examination at the committal proceedings against BCH, BCG gave the following evidence, concerning the appeal committee meeting:

…Kevin Bowditch said, "Before you finish up or before" you know they go on "Can BCG or BCG just hear him admit what he's done for her sake" and then they asked him the question did he touch me or molest or whatever to that effect and he said, "Yes, I did. I did step out of line" and he had his hands on his forehead bending over on his knees.

All right?- - And I was quite surprised that he actually admitted it because he was adamant that he didn't do it.

Okay. Any other conversations you recall that evening? - - Yes. A – Joe Morassis [sic] really got cranky at him. I remember that and said to him how disgusting it was that I had to turn to some other young brother in the congregation to – for protection from my own father and as the matter with the seducing business brother Joe Morrasis [sic] said to me that he knows that it did not happen – that I did not seduce my father. So, he was in no way saying that I did. So, I – you know, that was clear and he said to my father that if it was the case that that did happen that it was his job as a father not to be doing that and it was wrong for him to do that anyway but acknowledged that it did not happen like that.[132]

9.111 The appeal committee then confirmed the earlier judicial committee findings and added the more serious finding of porneia in relation to BCG's complaints.[133]

9.112 CAP 183: For accurate context it should be added that, although the elders were bound by their Biblical principles, Mr Spinks[134] and Mr Geoffrey Jackson both gave evidence that the elders were always encouraged to act in harmony with their consciences to protect the victim and that their individual conscientious decisions would be respected. The elders in BCG's matter demonstrated this to be the case, since they continued to pursue BCG's allegations in spite of insufficient evidence at the time, until further evidence became available in the form of a confession by BCH.

9.113 CAP 184 to CAP 193: Counsel Assisting's submission relating to Mr Ali's notes and the evidence relating to BCK appearing at the judicial committee appear to be framed in such a way as to unfairly impugn the evidence of Mr Ali, Mr de Rooy and Mr Bowditch. The fact that BCK did attend at some point and did make a complaint against BCH is conceded and not in issue. As such, this should simply be stated as a fact leading to Counsel Assisting's suggested findings at F20 and F21 on that issue.

9.114 CAP 194 to CAP 196: Counsel Assisting's submission relating to Mr Ali's notes and the evidence relating to whether BCH confessed during the earlier judicial committee meeting also appear to be framed in such a way as to unfairly impugn the evidence of Mr Ali, Mr de Rooy and Mr Bowditch.

9.115 Counsel Assisting's reliance on the notes and Mr Ali's and Mr de Rooy's evidence relating to them is ill-conceived and likely to mislead the Commission.

9.116 The notes did not form part of the proposed tender bundle for the public hearing.

9.117 The notes were written in 1989.

9.118 Without notice, Mr Ali and then Mr de Rooy were questioned in relation to those 26 year old notes.

9.119 Both Mr Ali and Mr de Rooy had little recollection of the notes and did their best to assist the Commission.

9.120 It should be added that Mr Ali and Mr de Rooy were witnesses of truth consistent with the earlier submission at 9.26.

9.121 For context in relation to those notes, Mr Ali gave evidence in 2003 at the first trial of BCH where he was asked about the alleged confessions contained on page 14 of the notes. Mr Ali's evidence was as follows:[135]

Now, I'm also going down to the bottom of that page, and I'm trying to find out when this refers to. "BCH has admitted to all things and also said that whatever BCG had said on molesting was true." Do you see that there? - - I do.

Do you have some independent recollection now having looked at that note as to what was said and when it was said? - - This was the so-called witnesses that had on hearsay. Apparently BCG had mentioned to them that what had happened to her concerning her dad, what her dad did to her, this is the individuals mentioned there were – if you noticed on the fourth line on the bottom, "Ian and Janette", his wife ---

Yeah? - - and "Janette tells BCH that he tells her" ---

I understand, I understand. So that's some hearsay comment that you've recorded? - - Yes.

---of witnesses? - - Yes.

That's not anything that you heard said by BCH? - - No, she had claimed BCH had molested her.

That's okay, But you didn't hear her say anything to that effect? - - No, no.

Because all these notes concern times before we get to the appeals committee, don't they? - - They do.

[135] Transcript of Mr Ali at first trial of BCH, QLD.0068.001.1017:50 – 1018:22.

HER HONOUR: Who are Ian and Janette? - - They are friends of the family, of the BCG's family.

9.122 Mr Ali also gave evidence at the first trial of BCH that the notes were taken at some point while the judicial committee meetings were in progress, including the meeting in which the decision to disfellowship BCH was taken, after the investigative stage had concluded, and were not contemporaneous to all the events described therein.[136]

9.123 In their statements to the Commission, Mr Ali, Mr de Rooy and Mr Bowditch each stated that BCH's confession only occurred at the appeal committee hearing.

9.124 The evidence of Mr Ali, Mr de Rooy and Mr Bowditch was consistent with that position.

9.125 Paragraphs 43 to 53 of BCG's statement are clearly inconsistent with any confession being forthcoming from BCH at the judicial committee meeting.

9.126 It should also be noted that during BCG's evidence at the trial of BCH, BCG volunteered matters that could adversely affect the reliability of her evidence in that and any subsequent proceedings. [137]

9.127 The evidence of BCG at the Commission did not address this issue, nor did Counsel Assisting ask any questions relating to an alleged admission by BCH at the judicial committee meeting.

9.128 It would be clearly unfair for Counsel Assisting to rely on the notes to make findings of fact in these circumstances.

9.129 Further, it is implausible that BCH would have appealed the judicial committee findings relating to loose conduct if he had confessed to these more serious allegations.

9.130 Further, it is implausible that the appeal committee would have noted and acted on BCH's confession to these allegations during the appeal committee meeting if BCH had already made such confessions.

137 BCG's evidence at the first trial of BCH in 2003 [QLD.0068.001.1106:20-30 and QLD.0068.001.1116:40-50].

9.131 It is therefore submitted that CAPs 194 to 202 should be removed.

9.132 It is therefore submitted that suggested findings F22 and F23 should not be made.

9.133 CAP 200: For abundant caution, the submission of Counsel Assisting should not be accepted and should be removed.

9.134 CAP 202: For abundant caution it should be added that at the conclusion of the judicial committee meeting into BCH's marital infidelity, the elders continued to investigate BCG's allegations until such time as BCH confessed at the appeal committee meeting.

9.135 Further, the only sister of BCG to give any evidence to the elders was BCK.[138]

9.136 CAP 203: The word "ultimately" should be replaced with "immediately".

9.137 CAP 204: This submission is not relevant and is misleading. The report related to the concluded investigation into BCH's marital infidelity. Investigations were continuing into BCG's complaint. The report was received by the Service Desk on 7 August 1989. The Service Desk also received, on 7 August 1989, the report of the appeal committee which dealt with BCG's complaint.[139]

9.138 CAP 206: The sentence, He agreed however that there can be no ongoing investigation of a disfellowshipped person is not relevant, is misleading and should not be made. There is clear evidence that following the judicial committee meeting the investigation into BCG's complaints continued and the complaints were taken up during the appeal committee meeting.

9.139 Further, Mr de Rooy's evidence should be added, that the disfellowshipping of BCH would only have taken effect after an announcement to the congregation that BCH was disfellowshipped, which would only be made after the expiration of the 7 day period to appeal the decision of the judicial committee.[140]

9.140 CAP 208: It is submitted that this paragraph is not relevant and should be removed.

9.141 CAP 210: For accuracy, it should be added that BCG's then fiancé, BCJ accompanied BCG to the Kingdom Hall and remained at the premises to support BCG.[141]

9.142 It should also be stated that of the 6 elders, Mr Ali, Mr de Rooy and Mr Bowditch were well known to BCG (see 9.92 and 9.93 above) and Mr Don Wilson was the father of BCG's best friend.[142]

9.143 CAP 213: For accuracy it should be added that this document appears to be the original notification from the judicial committee that had not been updated to reflect the subsequent finding of the appeal committee.

9.144 CAP 216: It is submitted that this statement is inaccurate and should be removed.

9.145 CAP 219: It should be added that Mr de Rooy emphatically denied that he would have chastised BCG for her attempted suicide, and stated, I would not ... at all think of chastising someone who felt like that. That is just not part of how I shepherd and help ones who are distressed like that.[143]

9.146 In light of the foregoing, we now submit that the following additions, deletions and amendments are necessary to Counsel Assisting's recommended findings contained at F17 to F29.

9.147 F17: This suggested finding is not supported by the evidence and should not be made.

9.148 F18: This suggested finding should be amended to remove, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCG disclosing the full extent of her abuse.

9.149 F19: This suggested finding should be amended to reflect the evidence in relation to BCG.

9.150 F20: This suggested finding should be amended to remove, but they took no action in relation to that evidence.[144]

Available findings on the reinstatement of BCH

9.160 Counsel Assisting considers that the following four findings are available on the evidence:

F30 BCH was reinstated as a Jehovah's Witness little more than three years after he had been disfellowshipped for, amongst other things, five or six counts of sexual abuse of his daughter.

F31 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of the risk that BCH posed to children, paid little regard to the fact that he had been disfellowshipped because of child sexual abuse, and was focussed principally on his extra-marital relationship.

F32 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of BCH's failure to apologise to BCG, a factor relevant to consideration of sincere repentance, or of what BCG might have had to say about BCH being reinstated.

F33 The decision to reinstate BCH was disrespectful and unsupportive of BCG.

F34 The Branch Office's response to BCG on 26 February 1996 caused BCG to feel angry, upset and let down, and did not convey support and concern to BCG on the part of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.

9.161 It is submitted that the evidential basis for suggested findings F30 to F34 contained in CAP 220 to 233 require the following additions, deletions and amendments.

9.162 CAP 220: replace less than with almost.

9.163 CAP 231: replace BCH was reinstated in 13 November 1992 with 3 years after being disfellowshipped by the Mareeba Congregation BCH was reinstated in the St George Congregation.

9.164 CAP 234: replace Mr de Rooy could not recall this conversation with BCG and did not accept that he might have said that to BCG with Mr de Rooy's evidence was:

(a) *That he did not recall the question of going to the Police being discussed at any tim*e;

(b) That he did not make any comment as to this; and

(c) That he was not surprised that BCG reported the abuse to the Police some years later.[145]

9.165 Further, when cross-examined at length by Counsel Assisting on this matter, Mr de Rooy maintained his position and added further support for his position by explaining that in his opinion the prohibition on taking legal action against fellow Jehovah's Witnesses did not apply in the case of matters such as child sexual abuse.[146]

9.166 It is therefore submitted that the last two sentences of CAP 234 should be removed.

[146] Transcript of R de Rooy, T15584:6-T15587:27 (Day 151).

9.167 In the light of the foregoing, we now submit that the following additions, deletions and amendments are necessary to Counsel Assisting's suggested findings contained at F30 to F34.

9.168 F30: should be replaced with: BCH was reinstated as one of Jehovah's Witnesses three years after he had been disfellowshipped for, amongst other things, child sexual abuse of his daughter and adultery.

9.169 F31: should be replaced with: The religious decision to reinstate BCH as a member of the congregation was based on his demonstration of repentance, rather than on other factors.

9.170 F32: should be replaced with: BCG felt that the decision to reinstate BCH as a member of the congregation did not take into consideration whether BCH had personally apologised to BCG for child sexual abuse.

9.171 F33: should be replaced with: BCG felt that the decision to reinstate BCH in the St George Congregation did not take her feelings into consideration.

9.172 F34: should be replaced with: Although the letter from Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia to BCG dated 26 February 1996 acknowledges her feelings and conveys concern for BCG, due to a misunderstanding of the meaning of the Scripture shared with her, BCG felt, angry, upset, and unsupported.[147]

Available findings on the impact of the judicial committee process on criminal proceedings against BCH

9.173 Counsel Assisting considers that the following finding is available on the evidence:

> F35 The judicial committee and appeal committee processes that preceded BCG reporting her abuse by her father to the police complicated the criminal proceedings because of the numbers of people involved in those processes and the telling and retelling of the experience.

9.174 The suggested finding will not assist the Commission in its task of making recommendations on systemic issues concerning either the prevention of, or better responses to, child sexual abuse. The suggested finding seems to be based upon the views of an inexperienced lawyer (Mr Davies) in the one case involving BCG. One example does not reflect the existence of a systemic problem in responding to complaints of child sexual abuse. Moreover, it is important to see things in context. It is sometimes a feature of criminal trials that they can be factually and legally complicated and evidence can be contaminated by speaking to others, but, as is evident from the testimony of many adult survivors, it does not necessarily prevent the conviction of a perpetrator. Furthermore, some adult survivors will want to speak to someone about what has happened to them. Not listening to an adult survivor, or informing them that they ought not speak about what has happened to them, has the potential to further traumatise a survivor.

[147] Exhibit 29-0003, QLD.0068.001.1409_R;
Transcript of G W Jackson, T15993 (Day 155).

9.175 The problem is not that a survivor should not speak to several persons,[148] it is whether the listener may influence or contaminate the survivor's views about what occurred. For example, it is well known that if a matter is reported to the police, the survivor may have to tell their story to several persons including the investigating officer, the medical examiner, one or more detectives, prosecution counsel and possibly others. In the case of young children who often first report such matters to their parents, some degree of contamination may be inevitable. Speaking out is often the first step to recovery for a victim and the suggested finding, if made, has the potential to have a "chilling effect" on speaking out simply because of the way in which ideas are conveyed in short hand by persons.

Available findings on the risk management and second disfellowshipping of BCH

9.176 Counsel Assisting considers that the following three findings are available on the evidence:

F36 When BCH was reinstated no restrictions were placed on him which were relevant to his risk to children despite his established history of child sexual abuse.

F37 BCH was disfellowshipped a second time for lying in relation to child sexual abuse rather than for child sexual abuse itself.

F38 The reasons canvassed and then given for the second disfellowshipping of BCH show that those from the Jehovah's Witness organisation who were involved were more concerned about a charge of lying than they were about BCH's sexual abuse of his daughters.

9.177 The evidence concerning BCH was that he abused only his own children when they were vulnerable to abuse. There was no evidence that BCH abused any child apart from his own. There was no evidence given that BCH was a risk to any other children and there is, therefore, no evidential, or any other basis, for suggested finding F36 and it ought not be made. BCH's actions should be condemned with a finding but, in the absence of evidence, there is no basis for a broader finding.

[148] As the Royal Commission observed in its Interim Report Vol 2 at page 4, one of the factors that encourages disclosure of abuse includes being asked in a sensitive and appropriate way by a trusted adult. Elders within the Jehovah's Witnesses are trusted adults and it is noteworthy that 1,006 cases were disclosed to the organisation.

9.178 It will be recalled that one of the witnesses[149] gave evidence that it is not possible to separate out the lie from the content of the lie[150] and an attempt to do so is artificial. If a person lies about being a child abuser, when they have been found to have committed the sin of child abuse, the lie is evidence that the person is unrepentant and, an unrepentant person will be disfellowshipped for the failure to admit their first wrongdoing and not for the lying. It follows that, suggested finding F37 proceeds upon an artificial distinction and it will not be of assistance to the Commission in its task of making recommendations on systemic issues.

9.179 The Commission ought not make suggested finding F38 because it relies upon a view of the evidence that was expressly denied by the elders involved in making the relevant decisions.[151] In this case, Counsel Assisting misinterprets the reasons why the elders disfellowshipped BCH. This exemplifies why secular bodies should not second-guess the reasons for disciplinary decisions of ecclesiastical bodies.

9.180 It should be noted that Counsel Assisting, according to F35, criticises the elders for interviewing BCG which he contends "complicated the criminal proceedings" and then takes exception to the fact that the elders did not speak to her two young sisters who were also victimised by BCH. Mr Pencheff testified that the judicial committee refrained from interviewing these two other victims out of deference to the ongoing criminal proceedings.[152]

CAS Part 6: A Scriptural Approach to Child Sexual Abuse Policy

Available findings on the authority of the Governing Body

9.181 Counsel Assisting considers that the following two findings are available on the evidence:

[149] Mr A C Pencheff.
[150] See the evidence of Mr A C Pencheff: Transcript of A C Pencheff, T15650:30-40 (Day 152).
[151] See the evidence of Mr A C Pencheff: Transcript of A C Pencheff, T15650:30-T15651:12 (Day 152).
[152] Transcript of A C Pencheff, T15647:8-10 (Day 152).

F39 Mr Spinks' evidence that the Australia Branch has full authority to produce documents, seminars, letters to elders and letters to publishers without the approval or agreement of the Governing Body is rejected.

9.182 It may be recalled that the tenor of Mr Spinks' evidence was that, from a Scriptural perspective, the Governing Body has primacy regarding the response to sexual abuse but each branch office, including the Australia branch office, had responsibility to ensure compliance with the local legal requirements and other sensitivities of the jurisdiction, and several examples of where that had occurred were given to the Commission by Mr Toole and Mr Spinks.[153] It follows from the foregoing that, the suggested finding F39 proceeds upon an inaccurate view of Mr Spinks' evidence and, in fairness to him and Jehovah's Witnesses, it should not be made.

9.183 In any event, however, the suggested finding is not, in any way, relevantly connected to either preventing or responding to child sexual abuse by Jehovah's Witnesses. It follows that, the proposed finding, has little direct bearing on the Terms of Reference and is of no real assistance to the Commission.

9.184 The proposed finding misrepresents Mr Spinks' evidence in several respects:

(a) First, Counsel Assisting fails to include in the finding the important qualification that Mr Spinks makes (despite referring to that qualification in CAS 280). The qualification is in the following terms that:[154]

> "As long as we [that is, the Australia branch] don't stray from the Scriptures which is the primary role of the Governing Body worldwide, the Australia branch has full authority to produce documents, to clearly set out ... what needs to be made clear locally".

(b) Secondly, Counsel Assisting does not refer to Mr Spinks' evidence that elaborates on the proposition that Governing Body approval is not required where, by way of example, there is a mandatory reporting requirement.[155]

(c) Thirdly, Counsel Assisting takes out of context the statement that the "Australian branch does have that authority".[156] The statement is referrable to ensuring that "things that are specific to the countries – sensitivities, cultural issues, legal implications" are taken into account in publications and policies.[157]

9.185 There is no justification for a finding that Mr Spinks gave evidence to the effect that the Australia branch had full authority to publish without approval or agreement of the Governing Body.

9.186 To the contrary, it leads ineluctably to the conclusion that the process was collaborative. Further, Mr Spinks' evidence was consistent with the evidence of Messrs Jackson, Toole and O'Brien. As Mr Geoffrey Jackson stated:[158]

> …we would expect the general framework of what we do to be published as approved by the Governing Body. But, you see, when we say "published" letters are published by the local branches that indicate any variance that may need to take place with regard to those policies.

9.187 Furthermore, the finding fails to distinguish between a branch office publishing documents where there was established Scriptural direction and where local requirements entailed deliberations and correspondence between the Governing Body and the branch.

9.188 As to the former, the evidence shows the Australia branch regularly produced letters to elders and letters to publishers without seeking the review or approval of the Governing Body.[159] As the content of such letters is based on Bible principles and the publications and guidelines provided by the Governing Body, and the Service Department is giving specific directions in a local context, there is no expectation or requirement on the part of the Governing Body to review or approve such letters.

9.189 Finally, the suggested finding is not, in any way, relevantly connected to either preventing or responding to child sexual abuse by Jehovah Witnesses. It follows that, the proposed finding, has little direct bearing on the Terms of Reference and is of no real assistance to the Commission.

F40 The Governing Body retains authority in respect of all publications in the name of the Jehovah's Witness organisation and any view or perspective contrary to that of the Governing Body is not tolerated.

9.190 The submissions in response to suggested finding F39 above are repeated. It is inaccurate to suggest that "all" publications in the name of the organisation of Jehovah's Witnesses are subject to the Governing Body's authority. It was clear from the evidence given before the Commission that the Governing Body allows local branch offices to modify letters as necessary to conform with local requirements and circumstances. Therefore, it is inaccurate to suggest that "all" publications in the name of the organisation of Jehovah's Witnesses are subject to the Governing Body's authority.

9.191 However, an available finding F40 concerning the authority of the Governing Body, which is consistent with the evidence of Mr Geoffrey Jackson and Mr Spinks, is that:

> "The Governing Body retains authority in respect of the general principle and framework of all publications in the name of Jehovah's Witnesses, and any view or perspective contrary to the Bible is not tolerated."

CAS Part 7: Current Systems, Policies and Procedures for Responding to Allegations of Child Sexual Abuse

Available findings on the investigation process

9.192 Counsel Assisting considers that the following three findings are available on the evidence:

F41 There are no circumstances in which the survivor of a sexual assault should have to make her allegation in the presence of the person whom she accuses of having assaulted her, and, contrary to the present position, the documents, manuals and instructions produced by the Jehovah's Witness organisation should make this clear.

9.193 Jehovah's Witnesses agree that a child victim of sexual abuse should not have to confront their abuser. Jehovah's Witness procedures and practices did not and do not require such a confrontation. In those cases where the adult survivor wishes to confront the abuser, however, different considerations may be involved.[160]

[160] Transcript of R P Spinks, T15686 (Day 152).

9.194 The suggested finding refers to what may have happened in one particular case of an adult survivor, rather than to the long-standing policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses that do not require a victim to confront his/her abuser. The suggested finding is misleading concerning the policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses. The suggested finding implies that:

(a) Jehovah's Witnesses presently require a survivor of a sexual assault to make her allegation in the presence of the accused; and

(b) The documents, manuals and instructions produced by Jehovah's Witnesses are unclear about whether a survivor of sexual assault must face the accused, both of which are contrary to oral testimony[161] given before the Commission and documentary evidence[162] provided to the Commission.

9.195 In addition, the suggested finding is misleading. As Ms Gallagher, Counsel for BCB, acknowledged that Jehovah's Witnesses do not require a survivor of a sexual assault to make her allegation in the presence of the accused:[163]

> Q. As it stands now, just as practicalities, if a young child comes forward, or there is complaint from a young child, of course they would not face their abuser - is that so?
>
> A. That's correct
>
> Q. So there's a statement, or the allegation would be put in writing in some way; is that right ?
>
> A. That can be the case, yes.

9.196 An available finding F41, consistent with the documents produced to the Commission and the evidence of each of Messrs Geoffrey Jackson, Spinks, O'Brien and Toole is as follows:

"Jehovah's Witnesses have not and do not presently, require the survivor of a sexual assault to make his/her allegation in the presence of the person whom he/she accuses of having assaulted him/her, unless the survivor wishes to do so; and Jehovah's Witnesses have acknowledged the need for this position to be clearly documented."

F42 The requirement that two or more eyewitnesses to the same incident are required in the absence of a confession from the accused, the testimony of two or three witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, or strong, circumstantial evidence testified to by at least two witnesses (i.e. the two witness rule):

(a) means that in respect of child sexual abuse which almost invariably occurs in private, very often no finding of guilt will be made in respect of a guilty accused

9.197 The suggested finding at F42(a) is a criticism of the Bible's rule of evidence for establishing sin.[164] Counsel Assisting asserts that because abuse occurs in private, "very often no finding of guilt will be made". If that assertion were true, then one would expect to see that in the vast majority of cases, there would be no finding of guilt of a person within the faith. That assertion is not supported by the statistical evidence presented to the Commission[165] and is not supported by the experience in the secular arena.

9.198 First, the function of the investigative process carried out by Jehovah's Witnesses is to determine whether evidence exists, by reference to Scriptural standards for sin, such that a judicial committee should be formed. This is not a procedure to determine if an individual is guilty of a crime. If a judicial committee is formed, its function is to establish the facts and then to ascertain the attitude of the wrongdoer, that is, whether he or she is repentant.[166]

9.199 Secondly, no evidence was presented to the Commission that, by virtue of such conduct occurring in private, very often no finding of guilt will be made notwithstanding that the Commission received documents concerning all allegations of such conduct and that nearly 580 persons confessed to some form of sexual abuse or misconduct.[167]

9.200 Thirdly, the conclusion sought to be drawn does not follow from the premises. If two persons are both assaulted in private and both come forward with 164 Proverbs 28:13; Matthew 18:16; Deuteronomy 19:15; 2 Corinthians 13:1; 1 Timothy 5:19.

165 According to the letter from the Solicitor Assisting the Commission only 125 out of 1,006 case files were prevented from proceeding to a judicial committee. Approximately some 579 alleged perpetrators confessed to having committed child sexual abuse: Exhibit 29-0021, WAT.9999.013.0003_R (Letter from T. Giugni of Royal Commission to Milton Bray dated 16 July 2015 at paragraphs 16-17).

reports, the matter of guilt is established. If it occurs in private and a confession or admittance of guilt occurs, guilt will also be established.

9.201 Fourthly, the suggested finding is based on an incorrect assumption that no precautionary actions are taken when there is insufficient Scriptural evidence of the sin occurring. It is also based on an incorrect and unrealistic assumption that the investigation processes followed by secular authorities often result in a finding of guilt in respect of an accused, which is widely acknowledged not to be the case by members of the police force, legal profession and judiciary. For example:

(a) the secular judicial system failed to make a finding of guilt against [BCH] in two separate trials, and only succeeded on the third attempt, as stated:

> there were three trials – the first resulted in a hung jury, the second a mistrial, and then the third a conviction.[168]

(b) Mr Davies gave evidence that about 80 per cent of matters reported to the State of Queensland child protection authority were not acted on as

> They didn't reach the thresholds necessary for child protection statutory action.[169]

9.202 The suggested finding F42(a) should be amended to read:

> "In the case of any alleged serious sin, including child abuse, judicial committees are formed on the basis of the Scriptural standard of evidence of either a confession or substantiation by two or more witnesses. – Proverbs 28:13; Deuteronomy 19:15; Matthew 18:16; 2 Corinthians 13:1; 1 Timothy 5:19."

F42 [The two witness rule]:

b) causes victims of child sexual abuse to feel unheard and unsupported when it results in allegations of child sexual abuse not being upheld

9.203 The suggested finding F42(b) is presumably based upon the testimony of the two witnesses BCB and BCG but the testimony of these two witnesses does not in fact support the suggested finding.

[168] Transcript of J P Davies, T15421:31-33 (Day 149).
[169] Transcript of J P Davies, T15426:46-T15427:2 (Day 149).

9.204 First, in her evidence, BCB stated[170] that when she told Max Horley about what had happened to her, "…Max was very kind and supportive. He told me that what has happened was not my fault and that I shouldn't blame myself", although BCB also states that,[171] "Overall however, I remember that I didn't feel supported". Nevertheless, nowhere in her statement does BCB assert that the existence of the two witness rule caused her to feel either "unheard" or "unsupported".

9.205 Moreover, it is not possible to draw such an inference based upon the experience of these two witnesses, whose abuse occurred in the 1980's. Every person's responses in life are unique to that person. Some may consider it "unfair" or "disappointing" or they may be "angry" but they may not consider that they have been "unheard" or "unsupported".

9.206 Secondly, there is no causal connection between an evidential requirement that there be two witnesses or other Scripturally sufficient evidence to a sin and a victim's feelings about the abuse they have suffered and whether they feel "unheard" or "unsupported". The fact is that survivors do have a voice and they are heard by elders and their complaints are investigated. Additionally, victims and their families are provided with ongoing spiritual support and comfort.[172]

9.207 Thirdly, even in the secular arena, it is well known that many allegations of sexual abuse are not upheld[173] – the secular system is not necessarily condemned as "causing" victims to feel "unheard" or "unsupported" when their allegations are not upheld.

9.208 Fourthly, even if it were true, no process dealing with the crime of child sexual abuse could abandon a requirement that some evidence be presented. Whether the Scriptural requirement that there be a confession or two witnesses to establish sin should be altered is beyond the Terms of Reference of the Commission and contrary to the fundamental right of freedom of religion enshrined in the Constitution.

173 For example, BCG reported that "It took six years and three trials before he [BCH] was finally convicted for the indecent assault of me": Transcript of BCG, T15293:42-43 (Day 148);
See also the Report prepared for the Royal Commission, "Sentencing for Child Sexual Abuse in Institutional Contexts", July 2015, p. 1: "A criminal justice response to CSA entails a long and difficult process of reporting, detection, prosecution, trial and disposition. Sentencing is one of the final stages of this process, however the number of people convicted and sentenced of CSA represents a very small proportion of those who commit such offences. Attrition rates are very high and accordingly very few offenders are held to account, and only a small number of victims can be vindicated through this process."

9.209 The suggested finding is not supported by the evidence. An alternate suggested finding F42(b) consistent with the evidence of the two survivor witnesses is:

> "Based on the testimony of the two survivor witnesses: (i) Although BCB did not feel supported overall, her testimony was that [an elder involved in Scriptually caring for her accusation] was "very kind and supportive. He told me that what has happened was not my fault and that I shouldn't blame myself"; and (ii) Although BCG felt unsupported when her allegations of child sexual abuse against her father, BCH, were not Scripturally established at the time of the first congregation judicial hearing, it should be noted that BCH was found guilty of the sexual abuse of his daughter by the congregation appeal committee within the following two weeks."

F42: [The two witness rule]:

c) is a danger to children in the Jehovah's Witness organisation because its consequence is that very often nothing is done about an abuser in the organisation

9.210 No credible or reliable or tested evidence was in fact presented to the Commission to support such a generalised finding that the Scriptural requirement for two witnesses "is a danger to children" and it ought not be made. It also ought not be made for the following additional reasons.

9.211 First, there is no causal connection between the existence of a rule of evidence and whether children within a religious community are at risk of sexual abuse and the assumption that the two are connected is not borne out by any evidence presented to the Commission. It is tantamount to saying that, the requirement of proof of criminal guilt "beyond a reasonable doubt" means that "very often nothing is done about an abuser" secularly if they are not convicted; or that, the hearsay rule should be abandoned because it means that "very often" a truthful person is not relied upon. The rules of evidence are based upon the experience of the Courts in dealing with matters over at least two centuries. The Scriptural rules of evidence are thousands of years old. One aspect of the rules of evidence is to ensure a fair trial of allegations and to ensure that innocent persons are not wrongly convicted.

9.212 Secondly, it neglects the fact that a significant number of persons have been prosecuted by the secular authorities regardless of the existence of the two witness rule and the suggested finding does not have regard to that consideration.[174] As an example, notably, the elders cooperated with the prosecution against BCG's father.[175]

9.213 Thirdly, it also overlooks the fact that in the small communities of Jehovah's Witnesses, an allegation of wrongdoing will not go unnoticed or unheeded. The experiences of both BCB and BCG establish the opposite and other members of the community of Jehovah's Witnesses became aware of the wrongdoing caused to BCB and BCG and support was provided to them.

9.214 Fourthly, such a finding is, in fact, contrary to the evidence given by Mr Spinks and others (as set out in the passages below) that a person suspected of child sexual abuse can be the subject of restrictions.[176]

9.215 Fifthly, the only consequence of the "two witness rule" in this context, is that it may preclude elders from "taking a specific action, judicial action" in respect of the accused.[177]

9.216 However, the event that triggers Jehovah's Witnesses to take protective action for a victim (and other at risk children) is an allegation of child sexual abuse. Elders are instructed to investigate every allegation of abuse.[178] In every case where an allegation of child sexual abuse is made, Jehovah's Witnesses instigate a range of measures to protect children:

(a) The safety of the victim and other children in congregations of Jehovah's Witnesses is the first concern of elders, the Australia branch and the Governing Body;[179]

(b) The elders are directed to call the Service Department to "discuss the situation and work out how best to be able to protect the child";[180]

(c) The branch office informs congregation elders that steps need to be taken to protect the child;[181]

(d) The branch office Service Department gives clear advice to the elders on the need to protect the child;[182]

(e) If the abuser is an elder or ministerial servant, he is deleted and does not continue to function in this capacity;[183]

(f) The conduct and activities of the accused are closely monitored and the elders implement the directions set out in paragraph 11 of the Letter to Bodies of Elders dated October 1, 2012 Re: Child Abuse;[184]

(g) The elders may warn the accused or place restrictions on his contact with children; and subsequently disfellowship the accused for breaching those restrictions;[185]

(h) Two elders may be assigned to meet with the parents of minor children in order to provide a warning as set out in paragraph 13 of the Letter to Bodies of Elders dated October 1, 2012 Re: Child Abuse;[186]

(i) If an elder ultimately believes a child is in danger, and the parent or guardian is unwilling to protect the child, the elder can report the matter to the police.[187]

9.217 At all times during this process, the stated policy of Jehovah's Witnesses is that:

> "If the victim wishes to make a report [to the authorities], it is his or her absolute right to do so."[188]

9.218 In addition, the suggested finding is based on an incorrect and unrealistic assumption that the investigation processes followed by secular authorities often result in the conviction and/or removal of an abuser from the community, which is widely acknowledged not to be the case by staff in child protection authorities, members of the police force, legal profession and judiciary.

F42 [The two witness rule]:

d) does not seem to be applied by the Jehovah's Witness organisation in the case of an accusation of adultery, which suggests that adultery is taken more seriously by the organisation than child sexual abuse

9.219 The suggested finding "that adultery is taken more seriously by the organisation than child sexual abuse" is contrary to the oral evidence given by Mr M Baker, formerly one of Jehovah's Witnesses, called by Counsel Assisting. Mr Baker, who had no reason to give evidence favourable to Jehovah's Witnesses having been disfellowshipped and shunned by others, acknowledged that adultery was not regarded as more serious than child sexual abuse.[189]

9.220 Indeed, no oral evidence of any person with any authority or relevant experience to speak on such matters was presented to the Commission in which it was asserted that it was the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses to take adultery more seriously than child sexual abuse. No one would seriously contend that adultery was a more serious sin than the sin of sexual abuse of a child.[190]

9.221 For those and other reasons, the assumption regarding the evidence required for establishing adultery is incorrect and is not supported by the oral testimony that was placed before the Commission[191] and the literature published and disseminated by Jehovah's Witnesses.[192]

9.222 The suggested finding "that adultery is taken more seriously by the organisation than child sexual abuse" is incorrect[193] and ought not be made.[194] Jehovah's Witnesses have for decades warned against the abhorrent sin of child abuse[195] and have advised that in order to protect a child, the sinner may 193 See footnotes 190-192 above.

194 The only possible basis for such a conclusion was the confusing cross examination of the elders on the judicial committee who only had confirmation of the sin of adultery for which they disfellowshipped BCH. When confirmation of the child abuse of BCG was established at the appeal of that decision the disfellowshipping was upheld on the basis of the additional charge of porneia (child abuse).

195 See footnote 16 above.

need to go to jail,[196] and Jehovah's Witnesses will not protect an abuser.[197] No one in Australia today is sent to jail for committing adultery.

F42 [The two witness rule]:

e) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation with a view to abandoning it or at least reformulating it to ensure that safe decisions as to someone being guilty of child sexual abuse can be made more easily.

9.223 The evidential requirements laid down in Scripture for establishing sin are not matters that can be "revisited" or "abandoned" by Jehovah's Witnesses;[198] just as belief in the Bible's record of Jesus Christ curing the blind or resurrecting the dead cannot be abandoned by Christians, notwithstanding modern-day evidence that such miracles are not humanly possible; nor will the criminal justice system abandon the requirement to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, although many no doubt think that such a requirement allows some who are guilty to go free.

9.224 Moreover, the free exercise of religion protected by s.116 of the Constitution means that a person is free to hold a religious belief and is free to act upon that religious belief in respect of matters of sin without interference from the secular authorities.[199] It would be beyond the scope of the Terms of Reference of the Commission to require a member of a religious faith to "revisit" or "abandon" their beliefs in order to satisfy another person's idea of what constitutes a "safe" decision.

9.225 This suggested finding is based on a number of incorrect assumptions. A "safe decision" is not necessarily one that "can be made more easily". In the case of Jehovah's Witnesses, a determination of guilt in respect of a sinner is based on their understanding of Scriptural evidentiary requirements.

9.226 The suggested finding is inconsistent with the religious beliefs of the 68,000 Jehovah's Witnesses living in Australia and 8.2 million Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide (since Jehovah's Witnesses are united in their religious beliefs and practices, irrespective of their nationality).

9.227 In any event, the investigative processes to determine whether a serious sin occurred that are followed by Jehovah's Witnesses do not purport to supplant the secular authorities, to whom a victim or his/her parents remain free at all times to report a crime.

F43 The requirement that only elders (i.e. men) can participate in the making of decisions in the investigation process on whether or not someone has committed child sexual abuse:

a) is a fundamental flaw in that process which weakens the decisions by excluding women, and

b) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to ensure a meaningful role for women

9.228 As set out in Part I, no empirical or credible evidence has been placed before the Commission suggesting that a decision made only by men was or is necessarily problematic.

9.229 In relation to F43(b), Jehovah's Witnesses repeat their submissions in response to suggested finding F42(e). It would be inconsistent with and contrary to the free exercise of religion in Australia for the Commission to find that the members of a religious institution must "revisit" a Scriptural belief.

9.230 It is beyond the scope of the Commission's Terms of Reference to make findings on what is or is not a "meaningful role" for women within the belief system of Jehovah's Witnesses.

9.231 In any event, as noted at CAP 351, Mr Geoffrey Jackson gave evidence:

> "that there is no Biblical impediment to women being involved in the investigation and that two women close to the victim may take the victim's testimony and convey it to the investigating elders."

9.232 However, with regard to making decisions or judgments in the Christian congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses, this responsibility is assigned to the men who are appointed as elders.

Available findings on the judicial committee process

9.233 Counsel Assisting considers that the following five findings are available on the evidence:

> F44 Under the current documented judicial committee process, if the evidence of the complainant is to be taken into account then she must give evidence in person unless she lives a great distance away or for some other reason is not able to be physically present.

9.234 The suggested finding is contrary to the oral evidence of Mr Spinks, who advises elders about such matters, is not supported by any documents referred to by Counsel Assisting and conflates several stages of the process that is involved.

9.235 Counsel Assisting's submission that the oral evidence of Messrs Spinks, O'Brien and Toole "cannot be accepted" is based on an incorrect assumption that there are no documents available to support the oral evidence of the witnesses and is disingenuous.

9.236 The suggested finding is factually incorrect; it is contrary to the following documents produced and explained to the Commission:

(a) The reference to Shepherd the Flock of God ("Elders' Handbook") chapter 7, paragraph 2 [200] in the suggested finding is taking the reference out of context. As testified by Mr Spinks, this is a reference to congregation judicial action in general and is not specific to handling child sexual abuse.

(b) A specific documented reference to there being no need for a victim of child sexual abuse to confront his/her abuser are found at:

(i) Elders' Handbook chapter 5, paragraph 38.[201] The point is that victims of child sexual abuse are not required to meet with the abuser, and their testimony may be "submitted in writing and read to the accused".[202]

F45 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to have the evidence of a complainant of child sexual abuse give evidence remotely or by way of a written statement should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

9.237 The stated willingness of Jehovah's Witnesses on this issue is formalised and documented, and has been since at least 1995, as set out in response to F44 above.

9.238 Every elder has a personal copy of the Elders' Handbook which states a victim of child sexual abuse does not need to give evidence in person: Elders' Handbook, chapter 5, paragraph 38.[205] Elders have also received training at schools and during regular circuit overseer's visits concerning this issue.[206]

9.239 Elders have been directed to contact the Service Department whenever an allegation of child sexual abuse is made, whereupon they are advised by elders in the Service Department who are experienced in handling child sexual abuse matters and walked through how to handle the matter, as set out in Annexure 2 to the Statement of R P Spinks.[207]

9.240 Counsel Assisting has relied too much on one case from 27 years ago [BCG] and has not provided any evidence to substantiate the proposed finding in relation to current or recent practice.

9.241 Although the current position is clearly documented, incorporated into the training of elders, and advised by the Service Department to elders, Jehovah's Witnesses have agreed to consider incorporating all of the relevant references into a single document.

9.242 The finding F45 should read:

> "Jehovah's Witnesses should continue to make clear their long-standing policy that, where desired, a victim may provide evidence remotely or by way of a written statement to elders investigating and to those subsequently handling an allegation of child abuse."

F46 Under the current documented judicial committee process, a complainant of child sexual abuse is prohibited from having someone present with her in the judicial committee process to offer support.

9.243 This suggested finding is incorrect and is based on Counsel Assisting's misunderstanding of the Elders' Handbook chapter 7, paragraph 3 statement that,[208] "Observers should not be present for moral support", which is actually referring to moral support for the accused, not for a witness/victim.

9.244 Mr Spinks' evidence was (emphasis added):[209]

> "Our application of it, in practice, in the service department, has always been for the accused, who is trying to defend himself against the allegations, to not have observers there for moral support, other than the specific witnesses. We don't want the survivor there as a witness at that judicial hearing."

9.245 At CAS 370, Counsel Assisting has taken the words of Mr Spinks out of context. The transcript shows that the context in which Mr Spinks acknowledged that the passage in the Elders' Handbook "is confusing," means that it could be "confusing" to those who are not Jehovah's Witnesses.[210] Mr Spinks was clear in his understanding of the Elders' Handbook and was also clear about the current practice and application of the section by congregation elders.[211]

9.246 In circumstances where a victim chooses to confront an accused during the judicial committee process, he/she is not prohibited from having a trusted individual present with them for moral support.

9.247 Accordingly, the suggested finding F46 should not be made.

F47 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to allow a complainant of child sexual abuse to be accompanied by a support person of her choosing should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

9.248 This suggested finding is based on the incorrect assertions that a complainant of child sexual abuse must be present at a judicial committee hearing and that the complainant is prohibited from having a trusted individual with them for moral support. No such requirement or prohibition exists, as set out in the responses to F45 and F46 above.

9.249 As set out above, if a victim wishes to have a support person present in any situation, there is nothing that prevents that from occurring.

F48 The current documented process for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness organisation is focussed largely on the rights and comfort of the accused, with little regard to the requirements of a victim of abuse.

9.250 This suggested finding is based on incorrect assertions and should not be made for the following reasons.

9.251 Given the evidence provided by Messrs Spinks and Toole about the process for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse and the documented requirements concerning such responses, Counsel Assisting's suggested finding should not be made.

9.252 Evidence was given that when a complaint of sexual abuse was made, the first priority was the protection of children.[212] The next step was to notify the Legal Department in order to comply with any reporting requirements.[213] The next step involved the Service Department and emphasised the protection of children.[214]

9.253 A victim is not required to confront the accused and can give their version of events by letter.[215] The victim is entitled to and receives comfort and support at each stage of the process.[216]

9.254 The subsequent steps involved investigating the complaint and addressing the complaint.[217] Natural justice requires that a person accused of sexual abuse be given the opportunity to respond to a complaint. A person accused of child sexual abuse is permitted to state their version of events in a calm and dispassionate atmosphere.

9.255 Ample documentary evidence was put before the Commission demonstrating that, when an allegation is made of child abuse, the child must be protected[218] and the abuser dealt with even if it means that an abuser goes to jail.[219]

9.256 The purpose of dealing with a sinner in accordance with Scriptural requirements is to enable the sinner to understand, and repent of, their wrongdoing and to make amends to God. Of necessity, the process must respond to the sinner just as the various requirements in a criminal trial respond to an alleged offender. It is, for example, well known that an accused person in a criminal trial has the presumption of innocence in their favour and that the prosecution must prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt.

9.257 This suggested finding is also incorrect because:

(a) It is based on quoting a sentence out of context from the Elders' Handbook chapter 7, paragraph 1.[220] While not specifically dealing with child sexual abuse cases, that paragraph[221] says that elders should "try to put the accused at ease" when meeting with him/her, "Even if the accused is belligerent."

(b) To suggest that elders acting in a Christian manner when disciplining a wrongdoer in any way relates to the requirements of a victim of abuse is gratuitous and unhelpful to the process.

(c) It fails to have regard to the Bible as the primary document used by Jehovah's Witnesses when responding to allegations of child sexual abuse; and which Counsel Assisting has repeatedly acknowledged is followed closely by Jehovah's Witnesses.

(d) It fails to have regard to the documents referred to in response to suggested finding F44 above, which are sensitive to the needs of a victim of abuse.

(e) It fails to have regard to the extensive material published by Jehovah's Witnesses and provided to the Commission, which forms part of the documented policy of Jehovah's Witnesses when responding to allegations of child sexual abuse, and which focuses on how best to meet the needs of a victim of abuse.

Available findings on the management of risk

9.258 Counsel Assisting considers that the following finding is available on the evidence

F49 The failure of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to take into account the risk of re-offending when considering whether an offender is repentant, and consequently in deciding whether to merely reprove rather than to disfellowship, or whether to re-admit someone who has previously been disfellowshipped, does not adequately take account of considerations of child safety and should be revisited.

9.259 Jehovah's Witnesses do take into consideration the likelihood of whether an offender will repeat his sin in considering whether to disfellowship or to subsequently reinstate. Moreover, the request that Jehovah's Witnesses "revisit" their handling of these matters is nothing less than an impermissible request to subordinate the fundamental right of freedom of religion of Jehovah's Witnesses, as protected by the Constitution, to secular law and, moreover, is beyond the Terms of Reference of the Commission.

9.260 If a person is truly repentant, then, by definition, they are asserting that they are unlikely to sin again because they have an understanding of their wrongdoing and do not want to repeat it. An assessment that someone is truly repentant involves an assessment of the risk of re-offending. Thus, and contrary to the suggested finding, "repentance" takes into account the "risk of re-offending".

9.261 Further, neither psychiatrists, nor psychologists, have a monopoly on the prediction of human behaviour.[222] Indeed, every day of the week, ordinary people predict with some accuracy the behaviour of others and, by and large, our daily experiences demonstrate the accuracy of such predictions.

9.262 Moreover, no one can predict with certainty the actions of another person in the future and it is wrong to suggest otherwise.[223] For example, in the Veen case, the High Court of Australia overturned a sentence of life imprisonment for manslaughter and Veen's sentence was reduced to 12 years imprisonment.[224] Veen was subsequently released on licence and several months later killed again in very similar circumstances to his first killing and was again sentenced to life imprisonment.[225] On the second occasion, the High Court upheld the sentence of life imprisonment. Veen's actions demonstrated his propensity to kill in some situations but predicting with certainty that he would do so, was acknowledged as not being possible.[226]

9.263 Furthermore, the suggested finding and CAP 376 in the Submission of Counsel Assisting need to be put in context. The question that Counsel Assisting put to Mr Spinks was: [227]

> "The difference in a civil court setting, for example, is that there are likely to be expert reports from psychologists and others as to the risk of reoffending. That wouldn't be part of your judicial process--", to which Mr Spinks replied, "That's true."

9.264 Of course, the judicial process of Jehovah's Witnesses is not a "civil court setting" but rather it is determining whether a person has sinned and their response to such sinning. Jehovah's Witnesses do not purport to offer an alternative system of criminal justice in which prevention, prosecution, punishment and rehabilitation are the primary considerations.

9.265 In any event, there is no evidence that the Scriptural principles applied by Jehovah's Witnesses in determining repentance place children at risk. On the contrary, the documentary and oral evidence of the witnesses and Dr Monica Applewhite showed that considerations of child safety are of paramount importance irrespective of whether a sinner is reproved, disfellowshipped or reinstated – see, for example, the considerations of child safety applied by Jehovah's Witnesses to individuals who are reproved, disfellowshipped and/or reinstated at paragraphs 4.10 – 4.21 in Annexure 2 to the Statement of R P Spinks.[228]

9.266 Mr Spinks gave evidence concerning the specific case of [BCH] in which Jehovah's Witnesses have refused to reinstate (that is, re-admit) him as a congregation member for a total of 15 years because of taking into account his failure to fully acknowledge his offences and considerations of child safety.

9.267 On the other hand, the secular authorities released [BCH] from prison and into the community after 3 years, apparently without monitoring his activities in the community after he was released. While the congregation disciplinary process is in no way a substitute for a 'civil court setting' or any action on the part of authorities, the suggested finding that congregation action "does not adequately take into account considerations of child safety" is inconsistent with the evidence before the Commission.

Available findings on sanctions – reproval

9.268 Counsel Assisting considers that the following three findings are available on the evidence:

> F50 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is found to be repentant and for that reason merely reproved rather than disfellowshipped he remains in the congregation and a risk to children in the congregation.

9.269 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding is unsupported by facts and conclusory. It should therefore not be made. It is correct to say and the same was acknowledged[229] that, in some circumstances, a person who has committed an offence and is reproved may remain in the congregation (subject to restrictions)[230] but the same may be, and, often is, true whether the offender is dealt with within a religious community or in the general community (unless imprisoned). The mere presence of an offender within a congregation does not necessarily entail that other children in a congregation or the community are at risk. A lot would depend upon the circumstances of the offender and the offending.

9.270 Such a broad finding viz. that a reproved person "remains ... a risk to children" is not supported by the evidence given to the Commission and inaccurately represents Jehovah's Witnesses' stand on the matter, for the reasons set out below.

9.271 There is in fact no policy stating that Jehovah's Witnesses should not report child sexual abuse to the secular authorities, nor is there evidence of a practice not to report allegations of child sexual abuse; each allegation is dealt with on its merits. Jehovah's Witnesses' position is that victims and their parents are free to report child sexual abuse. Moreover, congregation elders report allegations when required to do so by law or if they consider a child is at risk and its parent or guardian fails to take the necessary protective action.

9.272 The suggested finding fails to have regard to the following evidence given to the Commission by witnesses:

(a) There are special considerations applied by Jehovah's Witnesses when determining allegations of child sexual abuse, for an example as set out in paragraph 4.8 in Annexure 2 to the Statement of R P Spinks,[231] which states:

> "In the case of a practice of child abuse, the individual would unlikely "be able to demonstrate sufficient repentance to the judicial committee at the time of the hearing. If so, he must be disfellowshipped" [Elders' Handbook chapter 7, paragraph 9]."[232]

(b) Paragraph 62 in the Statement of T J O'Brien[233] which states:

> "Elders have been directed that any Jehovah's Witness who sexually abuses a child is either to be disfellowshipped from the congregation or is to receive severe discipline, part of which will always include a public announcement for the protection of the congregation."

9.273 In addition, if the reproval "involves an elder, ministerial servant, pioneer, special pioneer and/or any other position of status in the congregations, the branch office is notified since a person who is reproved by a judicial committee of elders automatically ceases to qualify for such assignments."[234]

9.274 Measures are taken by Jehovah's Witnesses to protect children in the congregation when a sinner is reproved (rather than disfellowshipped) – which protective measures are set out at paragraphs 4.10 – 4.21 in Annexure 2 to the Statement of R P Spinks.[235]

9.275 At all times an adult survivor or a child victim and his/her parents retain their full right to report the matter to the police; and are advised by the elders to take whatever protective action is necessary, including reporting the matter to the authorities if that is their desire.

9.276 Irrespective of whether a parent or guardian of an abused child takes responsible action, if a congregation elder believes that children are at risk, then the elder can inform the authorities so that children are protected.[236]

9.277 The structure, activities and meetings for worship of Jehovah's Witnesses minimise the potential for a child abuser to pose any risk to other children. Dr Monica Applewhite gave evidence to the effect that different child protection/prevention considerations apply when an institution does not have the care or guardianship of children.[237]

9.278 Confirming this, as Mr O'Brien noted in his statement:[238]

> "We do not have any programs in which we take custody of children from their parents. We do not have Sunday Schools, youth groups, camps or social activities that separate children from parents. All of our congregation meetings involve entire family groups. Children, even teenagers, are not separated into groups from parents. Nor do we have secular educational schools, orphanages, hospitals, day care centres and the like. We believe that loving and protective parents are the best deterrent to child abuse. We continue to educate parents and provide them with valuable tools to help them educate and protect their children.-Deuteronomy 6:6, 7."

9.279 In addition to whatever action is taken by the authorities, a suggested finding that congregation disciplinary action, the removal of all congregation privileges and assignments, and a public announcement of the disciplinary reproval contributes to a risk to children in the congregation is unsubstantiated and indicates that the Commission is recommending a stricter internal process for Jehovah's Witnesses than for any other faith-based organisation.

9.280 There is no evidence that the Scriptural principles applied by Jehovah's Witnesses when determining the sanctions to be imposed on a sinner place children at risk. The suggested finding F50 should not be made.

F51 The system of not announcing the reasons for reproval means that members of the congregation are not warned about the risk that such a wrongdoer poses to children in the congregation.

238 Exhibit 29-0024, First statement of T J O'Brien, STAT.0592.001.0001_R at 0014_R at [67].

9.281 It is correct to say that the reasons for reproval of an individual are not announced but the fact of reproval of an individual is announced to the congregation and the individual will also be placed under severe restrictions (as Mr O'Brien mentioned in his oral testimony).[239] The congregation is thus alerted to the fact that the particular individual has engaged in conduct that is deserving of censure or condemnation. In such circumstances, it would be surprising if members of a congregation were to act as if nothing had occurred and they were not wary of the individual.

9.282 Such an announcement would alert any parent in the congregation to be wary of such an individual. The restrictions placed upon the individual would also safeguard the members of the congregation. Additionally, in most instances a talk will subsequently be given in the congregation about the need for vigilance or care for children in relation to such behaviour.

9.283 For those reasons, including the additional ones set out below, the suggested finding should not be made.

9.284 This finding is unavailable on the evidence presented to the Commission. The reasons and evidence set out in response to suggested finding F50 above are repeated.

9.285 The risk to members of the congregation cannot accurately be measured but, having regard to the reasons and evidence set out in response to F50, it is considered that the risk may be minimal because an announcement is made that the individual concerned has been reproved and in most instances a talk will subsequently be given in the congregation about the need for vigilance and care for children in relation to such behaviour.[240]

9.286 The finding fails to have regard to the evidence submitted to the Commission whereby, if required, "two elders should be assigned to meet with the parents of minor children in order to provide a warning." - Letter to Bodies of Elders, October 1, 2012 paragraph 13.[241]

9.287 The Commission failed to provide any evidence of how the same is not true of abusers who are released into the community without a public announcement warning of the risk to children in the community.

9.288 Jehovah's Witnesses are unaware of any faith-based or community organisation that is authorised to unilaterally and publically announce the details of offences or internal disciplinary action taken against a member or an attendee, and the Commission did not proffer any evidence of same.

9.289 To the extent that the Commission seeks to find or recommend that Jehovah's Witnesses announce the reasons for any reproval publicly to the congregation, the Commission's recommendation must comply with the relevant privacy legislation (the Australian Privacy Principles) and such other law which may apply to a public announcement of this nature.

9.290 On risk, see also the evidence of Mr Baker (formerly one of Jehovah's Witnesses) who in his statement said: [242]

> "Child sexual abuse is considered abhorrent to the congregation. Zero tolerance is applied to this sin. As a result of this stance, all members of the congregation would be vigilant to any hint of this activity and would report their suspicions to a member of the Body of elders for further examination. If an incident of such gravity like this was to occur, the congregation would be given a speech at the first available opportunity to make them aware of this particular serious sin. Without naming names of the offender or the victim, the congregation would be encouraged to see the need to keep the congregation clean remembering they represent the name of the Holy Sovereign God Jehovah. (1 Peter 1:16)"

9.291 Finally, Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F51, if adopted, would impermissibly subordinate the fundamental right of freedom of religion of Jehovah's Witnesses, as protected by the Constitution, to a secular requirement not demanded of any other faith-based group and would be beyond the Terms of Reference of the Commission.

F52 The sanction of reproval therefore does nothing to protect children in the congregation and in the broader community.

9.292 No evidence was, in fact, presented to the Commission to establish such a finding, and suggested finding F52 should therefore not be made. In addition, the matters set out in response to suggested findings F50 and F51 above are repeated.

[242] Exhibit 29-0017, Statement of M Baker, STAT.0605.001.0001_R at 0002 [2b].

9.293 A more accurate statement concerning reproval is that: "a reproved person remains a member of a congregation subject to such restrictions as are placed upon that person. Whether such a person may be a risk to the broader community is not something that can be known and was not investigated in the Commission".

Available findings on sanctions – disfellowshipping

9.294 Counsel Assisting considers that the following two findings are available on the evidence:

> F53 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is disfellowshipped he remains in the community and a risk to children in the community.

9.295 As mentioned above, Jehovah's Witnesses do not have such a policy or practice. The approach taken by Jehovah's Witnesses is that the decision whether or not to report belongs to the victim and his/her parents, rather than to the congregation.

9.296 The statistical evidence confirms that some 383 instances of the 1,006 case files provided to the Commission also involved the secular authorities.[243]

9.297 The suggested finding proceeds upon two assumptions, the truth of which were not established in the Commission. First, the assumption that in all cases, a person who has been disfellowshipped has not also been dealt with by the secular authorities and imprisoned and, second, the assumption that such a person may or will seek to abuse children in the community.

9.298 Evidence presented to the Commission is to the contrary. For example, according to the statistics, some 161 persons were actually convicted of offences involving child sexual abuse and some 383 cases involved the authorities.[244]

9.299 The broad finding is unavailable having regard to the following evidence:

[243] Please see footnote 26 above.

[244] Please see footnote 26 above.
See also Exhibit 29-0021, WAT.9999.013.0011_R, Appendix A, at [9].

(a) There is no policy stating that Jehovah's Witnesses should not report child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities: see above paragraphs.

(b) Disfellowshipping from the congregation is in no way a substitute for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse to the police. The evidence of Jehovah's Witnesses repeatedly highlighted this point.

(c) It is based on an inaccurate and unrealistic assumption that a report to the police will result in an abuser being removed from the community (that is, imprisoned), which is widely acknowledged is often not the case.

(d) It is not supported by evidence of any causal link between child sexual abuse and the Bible-based disciplinary procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses.

9.300 For the reasons set forth above, suggested finding F53 should not be made.

F54 The sanction of disfellowshipping does nothing to protect children in the community.

9.301 No evidence was presented to support the suggested finding.

9.302 The purpose for disfellowshipping is primarily spiritual; related to keeping a congregation spiritually clean, which is a matter of religious belief, separate to the protection of children in the community. Disfellowshipping is a Bible-based, congregation disciplinary process and is not a substitute for criminal proceedings. Additionally, as a religious procedure, consideration of this activity is outside the scope of the Terms of Reference of the Commission: 1 Corinthians 5:13 and Statement of Mr O'Brien.[245]

9.303 The suggested finding is not supported by evidence of any causal link between child sexual abuse and the Bible-based disciplinary procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses.

9.304 The suggested finding wrongly assumes a broad obligation upon Jehovah's Witnesses "to protect children in the community" but fails to identify how such an obligation exists. To the extent that mandatory reporting legislation exists in a State or Territory, Jehovah's Witnesses will continue to comply with their obligations; and to give their full support to survivors who report to the authorities.

[245] Exhibit 29-0024, First statement of T J O'Brien, STAT.0592.001.0001_R at 0019 at [89].

Available findings on reporting

9.305 Counsel Assisting considers that the following two findings are available on the evidence:

> F55 Prior to this case study, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia did not advise congregational elders of their obligations to report the commission of criminal offences to the police under s 316 of the Crimes Act 1900 (NSW).

9.306 Counsel Assisting raised a question about s.316 of the Crimes Act 1900 (NSW). Jehovah's Witnesses presently consider that s.316 does not apply where a victim complains to an elder that they have been abused, because, at that stage, the elder's knowledge is not the "knowledge" required by the section, although it may satisfy the "belief" required by the section. Nevertheless, the elder is not required to report the same to the authorities because of the application of the qualification in s.316(1) of "without reasonable excuse" when those words are considered and understood in light of the requirements of s.316(4) of the Act, s.127 of the Evidence Act 1995 (NSW) and the usages and rituals of the Jehovah's Witnesses faith.

9.307 The combined effect of the qualification in s.316(1) and s.316(4) of the Act and s.127 of the Evidence Act 1995 (NSW) is that where an elder forms the belief in the "course of practising or following a profession, calling or vocation …" they have a "reasonable excuse" within the meaning of s.316(1) to not report the information and thus no offence is committed; that interpretation is supported by the section's natural meaning, the highest common law authorities, its legislative history, and a consideration of the section by the NSW Law Reform Commission.

9.308 Consequently, Mr Toole was correct in thinking that elders who were informed of complaints were not required to report the matter to the authorities. It follows that he is not in error. In any event, in the absence of an authoritative determination by a court of competent jurisdiction about whether a requirement exists in the circumstances contemplated (and none is referred to by Counsel Assisting) there is no basis for any criticism or referral to the Law Society of New South Wales even if questions of professional competence to advise on such matters were within the Commission's Terms of Reference, which, clearly, they are not.

9.309 Jehovah's Witnesses are currently seeking advice from Senior Counsel in relation to the Crimes (General) Amendment (Concealment of Offences)

Regulation 1998 (NSW) cl 2, Sch 1. and its application in relation to mandatory reporting laws and related matters.

9.310 Accordingly, this suggested finding F55 should not be disregarded.

F56 This report is referred to the Law Society of New South Wales in relation to the conduct of Mr Toole in having failed to advise congregational elders of their obligations to report their knowledge of the commission of certain criminal offences to the police.

9.311 For the reasons set out in response to suggested finding F55 above, there is no basis for any criticism of Mr Toole's professional competence or a referral to the Law Society of New South Wales of the submission by Counsel Assisting or any report.

Available findings on the Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy on reporting

9.312 Counsel Assisting considers that the following four findings are available on the evidence:

F57 It is the policy and practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to not report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities unless required by law to do so.

9.313 There is no policy and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses to not report child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities. This suggested finding and the submissions CAPs 419, 421, 422, 424 and 425 on which it is based, misrepresent what is the actual approach of Jehovah's Witnesses in Australia. Jehovah's Witnesses do not take it upon themselves to report such matters as they consider that it is the right of the victim or his/her parents to do so.

9.314 The present practice of Jehovah's Witnesses on reporting to the secular authorities is based on a number of important considerations which Mr Geoffrey Jackson explained[246] and others also explained. In summary, these are:

(a) Jehovah's Witnesses comply with the law – to the extent mandatory reporting laws apply to ministers of religion (or similar) in a given State or Territory.

[246] Transcript of G W Jackson, T15965:16-T15967:22 (Day 155).

(b) Jehovah's Witnesses respect the right of an adult survivor to decide for him/herself whether or not to report a complaint to the secular authorities.

(c) Jehovah's Witnesses respect the right of a family of the child victim to report the matter to the secular authorities.

(d) Jehovah's Witnesses will take all steps necessary to protect a child from abuse and an abuser will not be protected.

(e) Jehovah's Witnesses do report matters to the police as the police have dealt with a significant number of cases involving some Jehovah's Witnesses.

9.315 The safety of the victim and other children is paramount. In cases where the parent or guardian of a minor fails to take necessary measures to protect the child, a congregation elder can inform the authorities for the protection of the child or other children.[247]

9.316 Mr Toole was unequivocal in his evidence:[248]

> We would do it if we thought it was necessary to protect the child, unhesitatingly. If I came across a situation and the only way that I believed I could protect a child that was in danger - I would have absolutely no hesitation at all in going to [the] authorities, even though I'm not required by a mandatory reporting law.[249]

9.317 In addition, Counsel Assisting's suggested finding fails to account for the policy and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses as set out in the following oral and documentary evidence:

(a) "In any circumstances, where the elders learn that the victim remains in danger of further abuse, the elders are reminded that, 'First, the child—and other children too—must be protected from any further abuse. This must be done whatever the cost.' Awake! January 22, 1985, page 8".[250]

(b) The policy Letter to All Bodies of Elders dated October 1, 2012, states: "Regardless of whether the law requires the elders to report an accusation to the authorities, steps need to be taken to protect children."[251]

(c) The evidence of Mr Spinks (who is the senior Service Desk member in the Service Department at the Australia Branch) informs elders "to go back to the guardian/parent and assist them to do all they can, including going to the authorities, if that's what the parent – the guardian/parent is willing to do, including going to the authorities, and remind them that they – the individual, that they have the full support of the elders in doing that."[252]

(d) Contrary to Counsel Assisting's submission at CAPs 424 and 425, Mr Spinks did not testify that 1 Corinthians 1:24 and Galatians 6:5 "prohibit" Jehovah's Witnesses from reporting child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities. These submissions misrepresent the transcript of Mr Spinks.[253] To the extent that Counsel Assisting relies on his own understanding and interpretation of these Scriptures to make submission CAP 426, the analysis is unnecessary and unhelpful to the work of the Commission.

(e) Careful analysis of the case files reveals the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses includes numerous incidents of members of the organisation reporting child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities, although not required by law to do so.[254]

(f) The published procedure states: "Never suggest to anyone that they should not report an allegation of child abuse to the police or authorities ... If the victim wishes to make a report, it is his or her absolute right to do so."[255]

(g) The support given by congregation elders to parents/guardians as the primary caregiver(s), "including going to the authorities," is clearly stated in evidence before the Commission.[256]

9.318 Accordingly, this suggested finding F57 should not be made.

F58 The basis for this policy is said to be respect for the 'right' of the victim to herself decide whether to make a complaint to the authorities.

9.319 As stated above in response to suggested finding F57, Jehovah's Witnesses do not have a policy and practice to not report allegations of child sexual abuse to the secular authorities, unless required by law. The policy and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses is based upon a number of considerations, one of which is, the right of the child, or the child's parents, to decide whether to report matters to the secular authorities.

9.320 The suggested finding wrongly implies there is something legally or morally wrong with respecting the right of the victim to decide whether to report the abuse (except if a child is in danger and his/her parent or guardian fails to take protective action or to the extent that mandatory reporting laws apply, in which case elders will report). It would be improper and contrary to the Commission's Terms of Reference, for a finding of the Commission to disregard the victim's rights.

9.321 The suggested finding fails to acknowledge that, in respecting the right of a victim to personally decide whether to report, it is submitted that Jehovah's Witnesses are following what is considered best practice today, as acknowledged by NSW Health, victim support groups, the testimony of some victims of abuse, the Commission's provision for reports to be made anonymously, and many other professional sources.

9.322 Mr Spinks' evidence was that the approach taken by Jehovah's Witnesses is consistent with the approach recommended in Sharing the un-shareable: A resource for women on recovering from child sexual abuse, which states: [257]

> It is each survivor's decision whether or not to report the abuse. Many survivors choose not to report and this should be respected.

9.323 Mr Spinks' further evidence was: [258]

> …. the publication that is given to victims here at the Commission from NSW Health, … says, "The victim should be given the right to determine whether it is to go to the authorities or not", and that booklet that is handed to the victims says, "And their wish in that matter should be respected." Now, that's religiously [is] the approach that we have taken for the reasons that have only been sort of briefly described, … but we accept, when the State says, "You are required to mandatorily report that offence", that Jehovah's Witnesses will … willingly and happily comply. In the meantime, we've got that ethical challenge of respecting the individual's right, as the New South Wales brochure says, and as the Scriptures say.

9.324 Jehovah's Witnesses propose the following alternate finding, which they submit is consistent both with their approach and widely-acknowledged need to respect the right of a victim to determine if she/he wishes to report the abuse:

[257] Published by Education Centre Against Violence, NSW Health 201 at p.21.
[258] Transcript of R P Spinks, T15665:25-45 (Day 152).

"Jehovah's Witnesses respect the right of a survivor or victim of abuse (or their parent or guardian) to decide for him or herself whether or not to report the abuse to the authorities."

F59 That basis has no justification where the victim is still a minor at the time that the abuse comes to the attention of the organisation, or where there are others who may still be at risk at the hands of the alleged abuser.

9.325 The consequence of the suggested finding by Counsel Assisting is that it would sweep away the rights of victims/survivors to determine whether they wish to report their abuse and disempower them.

9.326 It is accepted that a victim or the parents of a child may choose not to report the matter to the secular authorities. The fact that some decide not to report does not represent a "systemic" failure on the part of Jehovah's Witnesses to comply with their legal obligations.

9.327 Accordingly, suggested finding F59 ought to be disregarded.

F60 Since the organisation cannot remove an alleged abuser from the family or take other positive steps to safeguard children in the family from continuing risk, the organisation should have a policy to report all allegations of child sexual abuse to the authorities unless an adult victim specifically requests that a report not be made and there is no appreciable risk of children being abused.

9.328 The suggested finding ought not be made as it is tantamount to a recommendation that would sweep away the rights of the victim and the victim's family to report such matters contrary to Australian and international instruments recognising the rights of children and families.[259]

9.329 In addition, the mere reporting of such a serious allegation to the secular authorities could potentially destroy the family unit in circumstances where the allegation was subsequently found to be unjustified and relatively recent experience in both Australia[260] and the United Kingdom has demonstrated that

[259] For example, the Children and Young Persons (Care and Protection) Act 1998 (NSW) ss. 9(2)(a)-(c), 10(1) and 31; similar legislation exists in other States/Territories of Australia;
Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989 (entered into force for Australia on 16 January 1991), Articles 12, 14 and 16; and Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) Resolution 2005/20, annex, Guidelines on Justice in Matters Involving Child Victims and Witnesses of Crime 2005, Articles 5, 6 and 8.

[260] See e.g. Sullivan v Moody (2001) 207 CLR 562.

not all allegations are true, even when made by reputable secular authorities.[261]

9.330 Moreover, Jehovah's Witnesses are not an agency or instrumentality of government but a voluntary faith-based association of individuals. As stated above, and specifically in response to F57, Jehovah's Witnesses comply with the relevant legislation and Counsel Assisting's proposed finding is not helpful to the Commission.

9.331 The submissions in response to F57 are repeated, which demonstrate that the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses is based on several important considerations, including religious beliefs and practices which are based on Scriptural principles.

9.332 In responding to whether a report should made to authorities in situations where it is deemed that others are at risk, Mr Geoffrey Jackson stated that it was:

> "a possible thing for us to consider, and I think, already, the assumption is there, that if any elder was to see that there was some definite risk, that their conscience would move them to do that. But the point I was trying to make, Mr Stewart, is there are other scriptural factors that maybe make that a little complicated, and it would certainly be a lot easier if we had mandatory laws on that."[262]

9.333 Jehovah's Witnesses submit that despite repeated statements that they do and will continue to comply with mandatory reporting and would welcome uniform laws in this regard, Counsel Assisting has consistently chosen to criticise their Bible-based religious beliefs and practices rather than the lack of uniform mandatory reporting laws.

9.334 Jehovah's Witnesses propose the following alternate finding:

> "The Scripturally-based beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses require that they obey the laws pertaining to child abuse. In jurisdictions that require it, they obey laws requiring the reporting of such allegations to the authorities. Elders of Jehovah's Witnesses will obey any newly-enacted laws requiring ministers of religion to report allegations of child abuse."

Available findings on the impact of the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation's processes on criminal processes

9.335 Counsel Assisting considers that the following four findings are available on the evidence:

F61 The internal processes of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for handling allegations of child sexual abuse cause significant delay in a complaint coming, if ever, before authorities.

9.336 The only evidence given of any delay was that given by Mr Davies in his statement and oral evidence before the Commission. Mr Davies was then a junior lawyer (three years qualified) who had worked on only the one case involving Jehovah's Witnesses. That evidence alone does not warrant such a finding and no other reliable or credible evidence was provided to the Commission that could provide support for such a "systemic" finding. It follows that it ought not be made.

9.337 Specifically, it places too much weight on the personal observations and a brief historical file note of a single witness, Mr Jason Davies, in relation to his experience in one case in 2001 that is, some 14 years ago. For the reasons given above, the evidence of Mr Davies, does not demonstrate any systemic problems with the approach of Jehovah's Witnesses to dealing with child sexual abuse and no such finding could ever be made in a Court based upon his limited experience in such matters.

9.338 Moreover, there are many reasons why a victim may delay in reporting the abuse that occurred to them as a child. The Commission is aware of the research on the issue of delayed reporting.[263] There is no empirical evidence that the practices and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses contribute to a delay in reporting.

9.339 Accordingly, suggested finding F61 should not be made.

F62 Admissions made by an accused during the investigative and/or judicial committee process administered by the Jehovah's Witness organisation may not be admissible in criminal proceedings because of the circumstances in which they are made, including that incentives such as reduction in penalty are offered if an admission is made.

[263] The Commission itself noted that, "on average it took the victim's 22 years to disclose the above, men longer than women.": Interim Report Volume 1, paragraph 3.1.

9.340 The suggested finding raises several debatable propositions of law and fact which were not canvassed during the public hearing and ultimately must depend upon the specific case. The admissibility of confessions in a criminal case depends upon the circumstances in which the confession was given and as to whether duress was applied or "incentives" were offered by persons in authority which resulted in the person's will being overborne to such an extent that the confession or admission could not be said to be voluntary.[264]

9.341 The judicial procedure adopted by Jehovah's Witnesses does not involve either the application of duress to a person or the offering of "incentives" in "reduction of penalty". It is, with respect, wrong to view "reproval", as contrasted with "disfellowshipping", as "incentives" or as "penalties". In a religious organisation, a person can choose to accept that they have sinned and repent of their sins and be reproved for sinning or they can deny the sin, notwithstanding evidence to the contrary, and be disfellowshipped. A disfellowshipped person can subsequently demonstrate their repentance and be re-admitted to the faith. A person of faith would not see "reproval" rather than "disfellowshipping" as an "incentive" and there was no evidence to suggest otherwise.

9.342 The finding is based on the testimony of a single non-expert witness, Mr Jason Davies. The claim that "incentives such as a reduction in penalty are offered if admission is made" are not a part of the religious belief system and teachings of Jehovah's Witnesses, and the Commission provided no evidence or a single example of this being the case. In fact, the Court case Mr Jason Davies was referring to involving BCG included the testimony of the elders involved in the congregation judicial committee process and resulted in a criminal conviction.

9.343 In the case files provided to the Commission, of the 383 cases known to have had the involvement of the secular authorities, 161 (or 42%) resulted in a conviction.[265] There was no evidence provided to support the claim that congregation procedures inhibit conviction rates.[266]

9.344 Accordingly, this suggested finding F62 should not be made.

266 In Comparison: "Fitzgerald's study of the attrition of sexual offences in the New South Wales criminal justice system found that, of the very low number of sexual offences that are actually reported to the police (7,500 in 2004), only 10 per cent resulted in a guilty finding." Freiberg, A, Donnelly, H and Gelb, K, 2015, Sentencing for Child Sexual Assault in Institutional Contexts, Royal Commission into Institutional Responses to Child Sexual Abuse, Sydney. Page 18. (emphasis added)

F63 The number of people to whom a survivor of child sexual abuse is required to divulge the detail of her complaint exacerbates the trauma already suffered by a survivor of such abuse.

9.345 It is not possible to make such a broad finding based upon the evidence provided to the Commission of a single junior assistant prosecutor. It may be possible to make a finding that it has been the experience of some survivors of child sexual abuse that the re-telling of the story of their abuse can or may exacerbate the trauma that they have already suffered.

9.346 In the secular arena, a victim of child sexual abuse may have to repeat their story on several occasions to the initial interviewer, possibly to detectives, possibly to counsel or the instructing solicitors and, most probably, in Court.

9.347 The two cases presented by the Commission are from decades ago and there was no evidence submitted by the Commission in relation to current practice. In fact, Mr Spinks said regarding the current practice:

> ... in this day and age and for a long time, we would not have a victim or a survivor of child abuse in a judicial hearing.[267]

He further stated:

> ... you will find numerous examples of where the parents or guardians have provided the statement without intervention from the elders ...[268]

9.348 Accordingly, this suggested finding F63 should not be made.

F64 There is significant risk of contamination of a survivor's evidence as a result of the number of times and circumstances in which a survivor is required to divulge the detail of her complaint before her abuse is, if ever, reported to the authorities.

9.349 Counsel Assisting incorrectly assumes that the policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses require a victim to divulge the details of his/her complaint to the elders before the matter can be reported to the authorities. To the contrary, the victim and his/her parent or guardian have the absolute right to report the matter to the authorities at any time they may wish to do so, whether before or after they seek the spiritual assistance of the elders in their congregation. In fact, whether to bring the matter to the attention of the elders is a personal decision for the victim and his/her parent or guardian.

9.350 Moreover, the proposed finding involves an assessment of the risks associated with a person repeating their testimony. It is well-known that, in the secular arena, a complainant of sexual abuse may be "cross-examined" on discrepancies in their stories both by the prosecutorial authorities and by defence counsel. It is also true that some people need to speak about their adverse experiences whilst others "internalise" such experiences. Each person needs to be considered and dealt with individually.

9.351 The suggested finding is not relevant to the current practice or policy of Jehovah's Witnesses. A victim or survivor of child abuse would not need to be present in a congregation hearing or give their evidence a number of times. No evidence was presented to the Commission that the spiritual support of a survivor of child abuse would contaminate the survivor's evidence. Mr Davies' admission to his "naïve"[269] approach to the case of BCG and his summation based on "memory" does not present a clear understanding of the events relating to the one case decades ago. Mr Davies' opinions were speculative and unsubstantiated. The case of BCG did result in a conviction of her father and the testimony of the congregation elders assisted in this. Counsel Assisting failed to accept the testimony in relation to the current policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Available findings on Mr Geoffrey Jackson's stated empathy for survivors

9.352 Counsel Assisting considers that the following finding is available on the evidence:

> F65 Mr Jackson's failure to have read or be familiar with the testimony of the survivor witnesses yet to have read or otherwise familiarised himself with the testimony of Jehovah's Witness witnesses belies his stated empathy for the survivors and his stated recognition of the importance of their perspectives.

9.353 This suggested finding did not have regard to the following facts and matters:

(a) Written communications[270] between those instructing Counsel Assisting and the lawyers representing Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Australia was to the effect that Mr Geoffrey Jackson's views would be sought on "policy" matters and not that he would be called upon to offer testimony on specific cases.

(b) It was explained that, Mr Jackson was in Australia for personal reasons due to his father's terminal illness. In fact, Mr Geoffrey Jackson's father passed away on 30 September 2015. In the circumstances, the view was taken that Mr Geoffrey Jackson should not be additionally burdened during that difficult time.

(c) It was not put to Mr Geoffrey Jackson during his oral evidence that his failure to read or familiarise himself with the survivor's stories belied his empathy for such persons. Natural justice requires that a person be confronted with such a complaint during the public hearing if the suggested finding is to be made.

(d) The suggested finding can have no bearing on the two most important questions that must be addressed by the Commission concerning the prevention of child sexual abuse and to have better responses. The Commission is entitled to assistance to identify systemic issues and failings, not speculation about whether a person is or is not empathetic.

(e) Moreover, Mr Geoffrey Jackson addressed in a forthright manner questions of apology[271] and redress[272] and expressed his empathy for survivors of sexual abuse.[273] Such matters ought to result in a finding in his favour.

(f) The suggested finding should reflect what Mr Geoffrey Jackson himself explained:[274]

> I wasn't aware of the fact that I would be called before the Commission ... I haven't lived in Australia for 36 years, and I haven't certainly had a chance to look through the files ... The reason I came here was to care for my ailing father, and that has taken a lot of my time.[275]

275 Mr Geoffrey Jackson's father has since passed away.

F66 The documented practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation of not reporting child sexual abuse to the authorities undermines the efficacy of the working with children check system, a system to which the organisation says it subscribes and with which it says it complies.

9.355 The statistical evidence provided to the Commission indicated that some 383 cases were reported to the authorities[276] and in his evidence, Mr Toole stated that he had advised persons to report to the secular authorities to comply with mandatory reporting requirements.[277]

9.356 Accordingly, this suggested finding is too broadly stated and should not be made in the terms expressed.

Available findings on the system of prevention of child sexual abuse – risk of reoffending

9.357 Counsel Assisting considers that the following finding is available on the evidence:

F67 The practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for the prevention of child sexual abuse, and in particular for the management of the risk of an abuser reoffending, do not take account of the actual risk of an offender reoffending and accordingly place children in the organisation at significant risk of sexual abuse.

9.358 This suggested finding does not appear to have regard for the evidence given at the Commission. Showing an awareness of the danger, the policy states:

> "The elders should remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused ... The elders should be especially mindful of the activity of any who are known to have sexually abused a child in the past. They should also ensure that newly appointed elders are made aware of this caution." (Letter October 1, 2012, paragraphs 11 & 12.)

9.359 Additionally, the proposed finding fails to have regard to the evidence submitted to the Commission whereby, if required, "two elders should be assigned to meet with the parents of minor children in order to provide a warning." – Letter to Bodies of Elders, October 1, 2012 paragraph 13.

277 Transcript of V J Toole, T15760:32-35 (Day 153).

9.360 Mr Spinks testified:[278]

> "… do we understand that someone who has abused a child can offend again? Yes, very clearly! Does that move us to say that we will never allow a child abuser to return to the congregation? ... I think if that was the case no-one would be released from prison, there'd be no programs in place. So we are not naïve as to the fact that a child abuser can reoffend, and that's written in our own publications."[279]

9.361 In the case of BCG's father, he remains disfellowshipped from the congregation because of the considered risk of reoffending, for instance while he fails to accept responsibility for his actions.[280] The fact that a record is kept of any individual who associates with a congregation and has been accused of child sexual abuse or related offences, is a strong indication of the policy to monitor those accused and protect children in the congregation.

9.362 Accordingly, this suggested finding F67 should be disregarded.

CAS PART 9: Additional Issues

Available findings on the accessibility of procedures and policies

9.363 Counsel Assisting considers that the following finding is available on the evidence:

> F68 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's documented procedures for reporting on and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse are deficient in that they are not documented in such a way as to be easily accessible in one document and available to all interested or affected parties and some matters that are stated to be the policies or practices of the organisation are not recorded at all.

9.364 The recommendation to review documentation procedures is under consideration by Jehovah's Witnesses. However, to imply that policies or practices of the organisation are "deficient" is inconsistent with the evidence given by Mr Spinks to the Commission.[281]

281 Transcript of R P Spinks, T15685:25-29 (Day 152).

9.365 Accordingly, this suggested finding F68 that "Jehovah's Witnesses' documented procedures for reporting on and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse are deficient" should not be made.

Available findings on shunning

9.366 Counsel Assisting considers that the following two findings are available on the evidence:

F69 Members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation who no longer want to be subject to the organisation's rules and discipline have no alternative than to leave the organisation which requires that they disassociate from it.

9.367 The policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses do not require any individual who no longer wants to be subject to their "rules and discipline" to formally disassociate themselves. They can simply stop associating with the congregation. Such individuals are not shunned.

9.368 In any event, however, there appears to be no systemic connection between an adult making a decision to leave an organisation and child sexual abuse. Suggested finding F69 has no relevance to preventing, or improving responses to, child sexual abuse, and it is clearly outside the scope of the Terms of Reference of the Commission, and Counsel Assisting did not provide evidence to the contrary.

9.369 Jehovah's Witnesses attended the Commission's public hearing to assist the Commission with the task of addressing the prevention and responses to child sexual abuse. Jehovah's Witnesses were not asked to address questions regarding persons who wished to leave the organisation.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy of requiring its adherents to actively shun those who leave the organisation:

a) makes it extremely difficult for someone to leave the organization

9.370 One of the persons who gave evidence before the Commission, Mr Baker, formerly one of Jehovah's Witnesses and called by Counsel Assisting, did not suggest he had a problem in leaving the organisation.[282] Mr Baker was frank in his reasons for leaving. He sought to pursue a lifestyle that was incompatible with the way of life of Jehovah's Witnesses. Notwithstanding,

[282] Transcript of M J Baker, T15614:33-38 (Day 151): "... it wasn't really a problem for me ..."

Mr Baker expressed no hostility towards Jehovah's Witnesses, he did not seek to denigrate their beliefs, nor did he seek to belittle the faith. On the contrary, he expressed his disbelief at the number of and basis for the allegations.

9.371 No reliable and credible evidence was presented to support this broad suggested finding by Counsel Assisting and it contains a speculative value judgment - "extremely difficult" - about the motivations of adult persons.

9.372 Moreover, the suggested finding has no connection with preventing or responding to child sexual abuse and, furthermore, appears not to appreciate the difference between disassociation and inactivity. As was explained, if someone decides to no longer associate with Jehovah's Witnesses that is a personal decision and no disciplinary action is taken against that person.

9.373 For example, Mr Geoffrey Jackson stated:[283] "I thought I made it quite clear I don't agree with that supposition". We do not have a "so-called spiritual police force" to chase after ones who no longer want to be Jehovah's Witnesses."

9.374 For example, Mr O'Brien stated: [284] "They don't have to disassociate themselves to stop associating. They don't lose their spiritual or familial association by being inactive."

9.375 Accordingly, this suggested finding F70(a) should not be made.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy …:

b) is cruel on those who leave and on their friends and family who remain behind

9.376 No persons gave any evidence to the effect that the suggested finding was, or is, true in all cases in which a person leaves the faith. For that reason alone, such a broad finding cannot be made. In any event, "cruel" is an emotive and personal view of the impact of someone leaving the faith. For some of those who wish to leave, it may be "sad", "disappointing" or a "relief" or it may excite no adverse feelings at all. In other words, it will depend upon the individual's personal circumstances and their personal beliefs. In any event, the suggested finding is outside of the scope of the Terms of Reference of the Commission.

[283] Transcript of G W Jackson, T15980:24-42 (Day 155).
[284] Transcript of T J O'Brien, T15852:28-31 (Day 153).

9.377 Some persons may be perfectly happy to have left the faith and others behind. No adverse comment was made by or elicited from Mr Baker, formerly one of Jehovah's Witnesses, who had left the faith.[285]

9.378 Accordingly, this suggested finding F70(b) should not be made.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy …:

c) is particularly cruel on those who have suffered child sexual abuse in the organisation and who wish to leave because they feel that their complaints about it have not been adequately dealt with 9.379 No evidence was presented to substantiate the finding that "those who have suffered child sexual abuse in the organisation and who wish to leave because they feel that their complaints about it have not been adequately dealt with." Evidence to the contrary was provided by witnesses. (See the responses to suggested finding F69 above at paragraphs [9.367]-[9.369] and F70 above at paragraphs [9.370]-[9.378].)

9.380 Accordingly, this suggested finding F70(c) should not be made.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy …:

d) is not apparently justified by the Scriptures which are cited in support of it.

9.381 With respect, Counsel Assisting is not qualified to offer an authoritative opinion on the Scriptures and presented no supporting evidence for this opinion, which goes beyond the Terms of Reference of the Commission.

9.382 No recommendation by the Commission ought to be or could be based on a suggested finding made along such lines as it would, if enacted into law, infringe the protection afforded by s.116 of the Constitution, which concerns the free exercise of religion.[286]

9.383 Accordingly, this suggested finding F70(d) should not be made.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy…….

e) is adopted and enforced in order to prevent people from leaving the organisation and thereby to maintain its membership.

[285] Transcript of M Baker, T15614:17-38 (note in particular lines 33-34) (Day 151).
[286] See paragraphs 3.7-3.10 in Submissions above.

9.384 This suggested finding ought not be made because:

(a) there was no evidence given to the Commission upon which it could be based - no documents were or are referred to by Counsel Assisting and no oral testimony is referred to containing any admission which could support such a finding;

(b) it is not true as a matter of fact – Jehovah's Witnesses are a voluntary faith-based organisation that persons are free to join and to leave;

(c) Jehovah's Witnesses were not asked to address the Commission on such a question. Had it been raised beforehand, it could have and would have been addressed directly by testimony from persons inside and outside of the faith;

(d) it is not at all relevant to the Commission's Terms of Reference;

(e) it is an unfounded, unfair and unnecessary attack upon a voluntary faith-based organisation that is law-abiding and does much to promote lawful conduct within Australia and around the world through its exertions; and

(f) if the finding could not be made in a Court of law, it ought not be made by the Commission.

9.385 Evidence to the contrary was provided by witnesses. (See the responses to suggested finding F69 and F70(a) above at paragraphs [9.367]-[9.375]).

9.386 Accordingly, this suggested finding F70(e) should be disregarded.

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy …:

f) is in conflict with the organisation's professed support for freedom of religious choice and the belief that Jehovah God is a compassionate God who recognises the worth and dignity of all human beings.

9.387 The suggested finding F70(f) on "shunning" postulates a false conflict and for that reason should not be made. It is perfectly proper for a person of one faith to "avoid" or "shun" (the two are synonyms) another person who either refuses expressly (or implicitly) to accept the first person's beliefs or who denigrates their beliefs. Evidence was given during the Commission's public hearing in Case Study 29 that members of the faith have siblings in other faiths and they do not "shun" them.[287] The mere fact that someone chooses another faith does not mean that they are "shunned" — something more is required and that something more is a rejection (or denigration) of another's beliefs.

[287] Exhibit 29-0024, First statement of T J O'Brien, STAT.0592.001.0001_R at [4] and [25]; Transcript of V J Toole, T15795:29-31 (Day 153).

9.388 Even Mr Monty Baker (formerly one of Jehovah's Witnesses) understood that avoidance or shunning is based upon passages in the Bible.[288] He did not assert that it was inconsistent with Scripture, nor did he assert that it was "cruel".

9.389 As a matter of freedom of belief, any person in the secular arena would be entitled to "avoid" or "shun" a (self-asserted) "Christian" member of, for instance, a motorcycle gang who advocated and engaged in activities inconsistent with a Christian way of life. It is still possible for that person to support freedom of religious choice and to also recognise that even a bikie can choose a different form of life and may have different religious beliefs. The point of difference is when the bikie either expressly or by implication rejects or denigrates the person's beliefs and that leads to the avoidance. If such a right is recognised in the general community, why, one can ask rhetorically, should it be denied to a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses faith?

9.390 Accordingly, this suggested finding F70(f) should not be made.

CAS PART 10: Dr Monica Applewhite

Available findings on Dr Applewhite's expert opinions

9.391 Counsel Assisting considers that the following three findings are available on the evidence:

F71 The opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite in paragraphs 36, 45 and 46 of her report are rejected because they are not substantiated by identifiable facts and assumptions or by reasons.

9.392 Dr Applewhite was the only expert called to give evidence in Case Study 29 and the only expert who commented upon the practices of Jehovah's Witnesses. No other expert came forward to give evidence and no other expert contradicted Dr Applewhite's conclusions.

9.393 There was no evidence given that the conclusions expressed by Dr Applewhite were, in fact, incorrect, even if the reasoning by which she came to her views was not elaborated upon in her report.

9.394 Whether the conclusions expressed by Dr Applewhite will ultimately prove to be of assistance to the Commission is a matter upon which reasonable minds can differ when one bears in mind that, part of the Commission's task is to consider what can be better done to protect children; and when it is also appreciated that, religious bodies have a significant role in providing support that is beneficial to children and their families.[289]

9.395 The opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite should not be rejected simply because Counsel Assisting considers that the opinions are not substantiated. There is a clear distinction between being correct in one's opinion or conclusion and not justifying an opinion. The same distinction underlies those decisions of appellate courts when they do not agree with the reasoning (or lack thereof) of a trial judge but nevertheless agree with the overall conclusion or conclusions on particular issues reached by the trial judge. In such circumstances, the conclusion can stand even if the path by which it was reached was unknown.

9.396 Jehovah's Witnesses publish and disseminate a substantial amount of material in many different languages throughout the world. It is self-evidently better to encourage an organisation to continue warning against child abuse then it is to criticise what has been done to protect children.

9.397 Accordingly, this suggested finding F71 should be amended to read:

> The opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite in paragraphs 36, 45 and 46 of her report are accepted.

F72 Dr Applewhite's report contains a number of factual errors with regard to her documenting of the relevant practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

9.398 The factual errors were minor and limited in number, and, as was demonstrated in further questioning by counsel for Jehovah's Witnesses, the errors had no bearing upon the ultimate conclusions expressed by Dr Applewhite in her report.[290] It would be rare for any report not to contain an error of sorts; the important question is whether the error had a bearing upon the ultimate conclusion.

9.399 Accordingly, this suggested finding F72 should be amended to read:

[290] Transcript of Dr M L Applewhite, T15519:8-24; T15524:6-43 (Day 150).

Dr Applewhite's report contains a small number of inconsequential factual errors with regard to her documenting of the relevant practices and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses.

F73 Dr Applewhite's report is therefore rejected.

9.400 The reasons given by Counsel Assisting to support suggested findings F71 and F72 are not a reason to reject an expert's report (as suggested in F73). Even if correct, they could only ever be a reason for not basing action upon the report but not for rejecting it. There is no evidence that contradicts the expert's conclusions and there was ample documentary and oral evidence in support of them.[291]

9.401 Accordingly, this suggested finding F73 should be amended to read:

Dr Applewhite's report is therefore accepted.

Available findings on Dr Applewhite's oral evidence

9.402 Counsel Assisting considers that the following findings are available on the evidence:

F74 Dr Applewhite accepted the following components to current standards of best practice in relation to raising and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within religious organisations, namely that religious organisations should have:

a) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse which is survivor focussed and designed to ensure that the child or adult survivor feels able to come forward and be comfortable in reporting the allegation

b) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse that does not require a survivor to confront the alleged perpetrator of their abuse or be in the same room as the alleged perpetrator without support

c) a system for preventing perpetrators of child sexual abuse from being put back in a position of trust with children

d) an ability to take child-safe action in order to remove children from imminent danger, or a relationship with other authorities that have that ability, and

[291] See for example, Case Study 2, Transcript of Prof S W Smallbone, T1506:36-41, T1519:5-23, T1535:2-14 (Day 15);

e) strong and cooperative relationships with child protection authorities and with criminal justice authorities

9.403 It should be remembered that Dr Applewhite gave evidence before Mr Spinks gave his evidence about the present day practices of the Service Department at the branch office and that Dr Applewhite specifically did not comment upon the present day practices.

9.404 The procedures and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses meet criteria (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e).

9.405 As to 74(a) see the oral evidence of Mr Spinks.[292]

9.406 As to 74(b) see the oral evidence of Mr Spinks.[293]

9.407 As to 74(c) see the oral evidence of Mr Spinks.[294]

9.408 As to 74(d) see oral the evidence of Mr Toole[295] and Mr Spinks.[296]

9.409 As to 74(e), Mr Toole gave evidence of the assistance provided to the police and the fact that he was thanked for the assistance given by him and the elders concerned to the police.[297]

9.410 As the evidence of Mr Davies revealed,[298] it would be unrealistic to consider that the police and the prosecutorial authorities always had the resources to deal with all allegations of child sexual abuse and assistance from Jehovah's Witnesses has been welcomed and for which they have been thanked.[299]

F75 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite in oral evidence that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her testimony before elders and her abuser would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

9.411 The practice of Jehovah's Witnesses has, for some time, been that a victim of child sexual abuse is not required to present his/her testimony before elders (see response to suggested finding F44 above).

9.412 An adult survivor of child sexual abuse can, if they wish to, confront their abuser (see response to suggested finding F41 above).

9.413 What occurred in the cases of BCB and BCG was consistent with the standards applied by the secular authorities at that time, 27 to 33 years ago (see paragraphs 5.4, 6.1 and 6.2).

F76 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her allegation and testimony to three men without the presence of a support person would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

9.414 This suggested finding assumes that Jehovah's Witnesses' policies and practices prohibit a victim of child sexual abuse from having a support person present when he or she presents his/her allegation to the elders. As noted in response to suggested findings F46 above, this is not the case.

9.415 We also refer to the evidence of Mr Spinks where he discussed the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses, and stated clearly that a victim of child sexual abuse is not prohibited from having a support person present. Counsel Assisting's suggested finding is not the practice of Jehovah's Witnesses.[300]

[300] Transcript of R P Spinks, T15693:29-T15694:17 and T15695:2-14 (Day 152).

F77 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's current policies and procedures for raising and responding to complaints or allegations of child sexual abuse do not meet all current standards of best practice.

9.416 The suggested finding is far too sweeping and cannot be made. No specific current standard was investigated in any detail in Case Study 29, and no opportunity was provided to address any particular current standard of best practice for religious organisations. Moreover, this was never the subject of evidence before the Commission. Dr Applewhite was never afforded an opportunity to opine on this subject.

9.417 However, in accord with Scriptural principles, Jehovah's Witnesses are willing to review their policies and practices on child sexual abuse, including those having to do with the protection of children.

10. Part III: Some further matters

10.1 Ultimately, the Commission is required to make recommendations to the Australian Parliament about what can be done to better prevent child sexual abuse and what can be done to improve the responses to child sexual abuse. It is apparent that the Commission's task involves addressing systemic issues and failings and not isolated incidents of sexual abuse.[301]

10.2 A number of the suggested findings by Counsel Assisting do not seem to be directed towards "systemic" issues. It should be noted that in both cases the abuse took place in the context of the private home. In any event, the congregation elders viewed the wrongdoing seriously and took congregation action. Moreover, these cases are not representative of the present-day procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses when addressing child sexual abuse. Unfortunately, those assisting the Commission appear to have misunderstood the relevant Jehovah's Witnesses' documents, which would not be the case with congregation elders who understand and implement the direction contained in the documents with the support of the Service Department.

10.3 Jehovah's Witnesses are a law-abiding community, committed to love of neighbour.[302] They readily comply with mandatory reporting laws. They also obey any other statutes enacted to safeguard minors from sexual abuse.

10.4 Jehovah's Witnesses have demonstrated that they make adjustments where necessary and within the confines of their Scriptural beliefs. Several examples were given during oral testimony of what Jehovah's Witnesses are prepared to do: for example, to review procedures, to consider whether procedures and practices should be consolidated into one document, and to seek additional independent legal advice.

10.5 The very serious task entrusted to the Commission is not lost upon Jehovah's Witnesses and for that reason, amongst others, Jehovah's Witnesses have not sought to criticise any person doing their job. Jehovah's Witnesses consider, however, that some of the criticisms made by Counsel Assisting go beyond what is necessary to assist the Commission in fulfilling its task or what is required by the Terms of Reference. They appear to be unjustified attacks on Jehovah's Witnesses as a faith and the individual members thereof. These attacks seem to be the result of misinterpretations of the beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses and of the Bible and the law.

301 Letters Patent at pages 1 and 2.
302 Matthew 22:39; John 13:34, 35.

10.6 Proof of this can be seen by reference to suggested finding F56 concerning Mr Toole and the referral to the Law Society of New South Wales[303] and the suggested finding F65 concerning Mr Geoffrey Jackson's empathy for survivors.[304] It was not put directly to Mr Toole that, the fact that he did not advise elders who sought his advice to report a matter to the police pursuant to s.316 Crimes Act (NSW) was a breach of his professional or ethical obligations so that he was not given the opportunity then to defend himself against any criticism. Moreover, in the greater scheme of things neither Mr Toole's professional competence, nor Mr Geoffrey Jackson's personal empathy for survivors, will have any bearing upon the important questions and the tasks facing the Commission and its ultimate recommendations. Unfortunately, the effect upon the reader is to prejudice the reader against two law-abiding citizens in circumstances where the criticism is not justified or relevant but instead assumes a state of affairs that neither person was required to defend.

10.7 In addition to those two examples, suggested finding F70 (concerning membership of Jehovah's Witnesses) is also based on Counsel Assisting's misunderstanding of Jehovah's Witnesses' beliefs and practices. Further, this suggested finding is not related to either preventing or responding to child sexual abuse, and is a criticism that was not raised with Jehovah's Witnesses at any time before the suggested finding. The suggested finding ought not to have been made by Counsel Assisting and should be withdrawn.

[303] See paragraphs 9.305-9.311 in Submissions above.
[304] See paragraphs 9.352-9.353 in Submissions above.

11. Part IV: Summary of suggested findings that Jehovah's Witnesses accept and proposed amended findings

11.1 It is the submission of Jehovah's Witnesses that the findings that ought to be made should address the two important questions that the Commission is entrusted to deal with: prevention and responses at a systemic level. In so doing, it is, of course, appropriate to recognise the experiences of the survivors. To that end, Jehovah's Witnesses set out below what they consider to be accurate findings based on the evidence presented to the Commission and addressing what Jehovah's Witnesses do to prevent and respond to child sexual abuse.

11.2 As stated above, the findings that the Commission ought to be making in terms of prevention and responses are set out below.

Response to suggested findings on the Jehovah's Witnesses relationship with the secular authorities

11.3 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F1:

> F1 The Jehovah's Witness organisation presents its members with conflicting and ambiguous teachings regarding their relationship with secular authorities, thereby fostering a distrust of such authorities.

This is simply not true for the reasons given in paragraphs 9.3 to 9.10.

Response to suggested findings on historical child sexual abuse data

11.4 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F2:

> F2 Since 1950, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia has received allegations of child sexual abuse against 1,006 of its members relating to at least 1,800 victims, and has in that period not reported a single allegation to the police or other authorities, even though 579 of those against whom an allegation was made confessed to having committed child sexual abuse.

This suggested finding has no regard to matters raised in correspondence with the Commission providing context for the statistics, as explained in paragraphs 9.12 to 9.21.

11.5 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F3:

F3 The Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia receives approximately three to four reports of allegations of child sexual abuse each month.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.22 to 9.23, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

The Jehovah's Witness organisation may receive approximately three or four calls a month about child sexual abuse. No evidence was presented to determine if these reports involved non-Witness perpetrators, occurred before the wrongdoer's association with Jehovah's Witnesses, if the report was historical in nature, or if it was in fact pertaining to actual child sexual abuse.

Response to suggested findings on BCB's first disclosure

11.6 Counsel Assisting's suggested findings F4 – F6:

F4 The elders bringing the man whom BCB accused of abusing her to her home was unjustified and traumatising for BCB and should not have occurred.

F5 Although the elders may have been following the documented procedure at the time and they may have believed that Scriptural principle required that the accuser face the accused with her allegations, it was distressing to and unsupportive of BCB to require that of her.

F6 It was distressing for BCB to be required by the elders to tell of what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCB disclosing the full extent of her abuse.

This suggested finding should be amended to reflect the actual testimony of BCB, in both her oral testimony [Transcript of BCB, T15176:19-20 (Day 141)] and written statement [Exhibit 29-0001, Statement of BCB, STAT.0603.001.0001_R at [82]], respectively:

BCB "felt very, very uncomfortable" and it was "very distressing".

11.7 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F7:

F7 It was inconsistent with the elders' professed sympathy for BCB for them not to have offered her the opportunity of the support and involvement of women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

This suggested finding should be amended to read as follows, based on the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.30 to 9.42:

As BCB had the support of her husband who was present with her, the fact that the elders did not offer her the opportunity to have women involved in the process is not inconsistent with the elders' professed sympathy for BCB.

11.8 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F8:

F8 The elders did not explain to BCB the purpose of their investigation and the meetings with her such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

For the reasons given in paragraphs 9.43 to 9.45, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

Elders investigating BCB's complaints could have ensured that BCB understood the purpose of their investigation and the meetings with her.

11.9 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F9:

F9 The application of the two-witness rule meant that there was insufficient evidence for the elders to act against BCB's abuser even though they believed her, which left her feeling disbelieved and unsupported, and it left the abuser in the congregation where he may have been a risk to other children.

The suggested finding is contrary to the evidence and for the reasons explained in paragraphs 9.197 to 9.227, should be disregarded.

11.10 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F10:

F10 Mr Horley telling BCB that she should not discuss her abuse with anyone left her feeling silenced and unsupported.

The suggested finding does not accurately reflect BCB's evidence: see in addition paragraphs 9.48 to 9.50.

11.11 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F11:

F11 BCB was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

This suggested finding should be amended to read:

Elders investigating BCB's complaints could have advised BCB of her right to report abuse to authorities.

11.12 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F12:

F12 In circumstances where both investigating elders agreed that there was substance to BCB's allegations, they should have taken steps against Bill Neill, at least by imposing some restrictions on his activities involving children and thereby addressing the potential risk that he posed to other children.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.58, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

After Bill Neill was removed as an elder, the elders could also have imposed appropriate restrictions on his involvement with children.

11.13 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F13:

F13 It was traumatic for BCB and inappropriate of Mr Horley for him to have required BCB to attend Bible study at Bill Neill's home when he knew that BCB accused Bill Neill of abusing her.

This suggested finding does not accurately reflect the evidence given: see paragraphs 9.51 and 9.52.

11.14 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F14:

F14 The recommendation of the elders to the Branch Office that Bill Neill be reinstated as an elder 'once this has died down' and their expressed concern 'that there may also be worldly people who also know' demonstrates that they were more concerned about the reputation of Bill Neill and the congregation than about the risk that he posed to children.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.57 and 9.58, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

The recommendation of the elders to the branch office that Bill Neill be reappointed as an elder 'once this has died down' and their expressed concern 'that there may also be worldly people who also know' were inappropriate and did not reflect the policy and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses.

Response to suggested findings on BCB's second disclosure

11.15 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F15:

F15 It was wrong of Joe Bello, and contrary to the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own direction in that regard, to discourage BCB from reporting to the Royal Commission by asking whether she 'really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud'.

For the reasons given in paragraphs 9.70 to 9.71, this suggested finding is not supported by the evidence and ought to be disregarded.

11.16 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F16:

F16 The elders in BCB's present congregation should have supported BCB in her reporting to the Royal Commission if that is what she wanted to do.

This suggested finding is simply too broad, as outlined in paragraphs 9.69 to 9.75.

Response to suggested findings on the investigation and judicial committee processes following BCB's disclosure

11.17 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F17:

> F17 The elders did not explain to BCG the purpose of their investigation and their meetings with BCG such as to ensure that she had an understanding of that purpose, which left her confused and disempowered.

This suggested finding is not supported by the evidence and should not be made for the reasons set out in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145.

11.18 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F18:

> F18 It was traumatising for BCG to be required by the elders to tell what had happened to her to a group of men, including the man whom she accused of sexually abusing her, and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCG disclosing the full extent her abuse.

For the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145, this suggested finding should be amended to remove:

and it was not likely to, nor did it, result in BCG disclosing the full extent of her abuse.

11.19 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F19:

> F19 It would have been supportive of the elders to offer BCG the opportunity of the support and involvement of other women in the process of investigating her allegations of abuse.

This suggested finding should be amended to reflect the evidence in relation to BCG, as set out in paragraphs 9.90 and 9.91.

11.20 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F20:

F20 During their judicial committee investigation or proceedings the elders received evidence that BCH had abused BCG's elder sister and her two younger sisters, but they took no action in relation to that evidence.

This suggested finding should be amended to remove the following, based on the reasons given in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145:

but they took no action in relation to that evidence.

11.21 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F21:

F21 The evidence presented to the judicial committee of BCH having abused his other daughters satisfied the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules with regard to sufficiency of evidence to establish that BCH had abused BCG, but the elders wrongly ignored that evidence and accordingly failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

The suggested finding should be amended as follows, based on the explanation in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145:

The evidence presented to the judicial committee of BCH having abused BCG's elder sister satisfied the Scriptural standard with regard to sufficiency of evidence to establish that BCH had abused BCG.

11.22 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F22:

F22 In the course of the judicial committee process, and before the elders reached a conclusion on BCH's guilt in relation to his extra-marital conduct, BCH confessed to having abused BCG.

Based on the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

In the course of the appeal committee hearing, BCH confessed to having abused BCG.

11.23 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F23:

F23 The elders inexplicably and wrongly ignored BCH's confession to having abused BCG and thereby, within the precepts of the Jehovah's Witness organisation's own rules and procedures, failed to uphold BCG's complaint against BCH.

This is simply not true for the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145.

11.24 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F24:

F24 BCG was not told by the elders that she could, let alone should, report her abuse to the authorities.

For the reasons explained in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145, this suggested finding ought to be disregarded.

11.25 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F25:

F25 The appeal committee's requirement that BCG give evidence of her sexual abuse by her father to a group of seven men including her named abuser was unjustified and traumatising to BCG and should never have happened.

This suggested finding should be amended to remove the following, given the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145 and 9.193 to 9.196:

'The appeal committee's requirement', 'was unjustified' and 'and should never have happened'.

11.26 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F26:

F26 The failure by the elders to report BCH's sexual abuse of BCG to the police had the result that BCH remained at large in the community and a risk to children, and reflects that the elders were not concerned with child safety but rather with keeping their organisation 'clean'.

For the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145, this suggested finding should be amended to remove:

and a risk to children and reflects that the elders were not concerned with child safety but rather with keeping their organisation 'clean'.

11.27 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F27:

F27 The judicial committee's failure to uphold BCG's complaint of abuse by BCH conveyed to BCG that the organisation tolerated child sexual abuse within its ranks.

This suggested finding is not supported by the evidence, as explained in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145, and should be disregarded.

11.28 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F28:

F28 The advice given by the elders to BCG that she not speak about her abuse to anyone had the effect of silencing her.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145, this suggested finding should be amended by replacing:

'anyone' with 'everyone'.

11.29 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F29:

F29 The elders' treatment of BCG was unsympathetic and unsupportive and left her feeling worthless and helpless.

This suggested finding is simply untrue for the reasons set out in paragraphs 9.80 to 9.145.

Response to suggested findings on the reinstatement of BCH

11.30 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F30:

F30 BCH was reinstated as a Jehovah's Witness little more than three years after he had been disfellowshipped for, amongst other things, five or six counts of sexual abuse of his daughter.

This suggested finding should be replaced with the following, for the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.161 to 9.166:

BCH was reinstated as one of Jehovah's Witnesses three years after he had been disfellowshipped for, amongst other things, child sexual abuse of his daughter and adultery.

11.31 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F31:

F31 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of the risk that BCH posed to children, paid little regard to the fact that he had been disfellowshipped because of child sexual abuse, and was focussed principally on his extra-marital relationship.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.161 to 9.166, this suggested finding should be replaced with:

The religious decision to reinstate BCH as a member of the congregation was based on his demonstration of repentance, rather than on other factors.

11.32 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F32:

F32 The decision to reinstate BCH took no account of BCH's failure to apologise to BCG, a factor relevant to consideration of sincere repentance, or of what BCG might have had to say about BCH being reinstated.

This suggested finding should be replaced with the following, for the reasons given in paragraphs 9.161 to 9.166:

BCG felt that the decision to reinstate BCH as a member of the congregation did not take into consideration whether BCH had personally apologised to BCG for child sexual abuse.

11.33 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F33:

F33 The decision to reinstate BCH was disrespectful and unsupportive of BCG.

Given the explanation in paragraphs 9.161 to 9.166, this suggested finding should be replaced with:

BCG felt that the decision to reinstate BCH in the St George Congregation did not take her feelings into consideration.

11.34 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F34:

F34 The Branch Office's response to BCG on 26 February 1996 caused BCG to feel angry, upset and let down, and did not convey support and concern to BCG on the part of the Jehovah's Witness organisation.

For the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.161 to 9.166, this suggested finding should be replaced with:

Although the letter from Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia to BCG dated 26 February 1996 acknowledges her feelings and conveys concern for BCG, due to a misunderstanding of the meaning of the Scripture shared with her, BCG felt, angry, upset, and unsupported.

Response to suggested findings on the impact of the judicial committee process on criminal proceedings against BCH

11.35 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F35:

F35 The judicial committee and appeal committee processes that preceded BCG reporting her abuse by her father to the police complicated the criminal proceedings because of the numbers of people involved in those processes and the telling and retelling of the experience.

This suggested finding ought to be disregarded for the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.174 and 9.175.

Response to suggested findings on the risk management and second disfellowshipping of BCH

11.36 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F36:

F36 When BCH was reinstated no restrictions were placed on him which were relevant to his risk to children despite his established history of child sexual abuse.

Given the reasons set out in paragraph 9.177, this suggested finding should not be made.

11.37 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F37:

F37 BCH was disfellowshipped a second time for lying in relation to child sexual abuse rather than for child sexual abuse itself.

For the reasons outlined in paragraph 9.178, this suggested finding should not be made.

11.38 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F38:

F38 The reasons canvassed and then given for the second disfellowshipping of BCH show that those from the Jehovah's Witness organisation who were involved were more concerned about a charge of lying than they were about BCH's sexual abuse of his daughters.

This is simply not true, as set out in paragraph 9.179.

Response to suggested findings on the authority of the governing body

11.39 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F39:

F39 Mr Spinks' evidence that the Australia Branch has full authority to produce documents, seminars, letters to elders and letters to publishers without the approval or agreement of the Governing Body is rejected.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.182 to 9.189, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

The Australia Branch has authority to produce documents, seminars, letters to elders and letters to publishers in matters relating to its local jurisdiction as long as such do not express any view or perspective contrary to the Bible.

11.40 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F40:

> F40 The Governing Body retains authority in respect of all publications in the name of the Jehovah's Witness organisation and any view or perspective contrary to that of the Governing Body is not tolerated.

The suggested finding should be amended to read as follows, for the reasons given in paragraphs 9.190 to 9.191:

The Governing Body retains authority in respect of the general principle and framework of all publications in the name of Jehovah's Witnesses, and any view or perspective contrary to the Bible is not tolerated.

Response to suggested findings on the investigation process

11.41 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F41:

> F41 There are no circumstances in which the survivor of a sexual assault should have to make her allegation in the presence of the person whom she accuses of having assaulted her, and, contrary to the present position, the documents, manuals and instructions produced by the Jehovah's Witness organisation should make this clear.

As explained in paragraphs 9.193 to 9.196, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

Jehovah's Witnesses have not and do not presently, require the survivor of a sexual assault to make his/her allegation in the presence of the person whom he or she accuses of having assaulted him or her, unless the survivor wishes to do so; and Jehovah's Witnesses have acknowledged the need for this position to be clearly documented.

11.42 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F42(a):

F42 The requirement that two or more eyewitnesses to the same incident are required in the absence of a confession from the accused, the testimony of two or three witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing, or strong, circumstantial evidence testified to by at least two witnesses (i.e. the two witness rule):

a) means that in respect of child sexual abuse which almost invariably occurs in private, very often no finding of guilt will be made in respect of a guilty accused often no finding of guilt will be made in respect of a guilty accused

Based on the reasons in paragraphs 9.197 to 9.202, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

In the case of any alleged serious sin, including child abuse, judicial committees are formed on the basis of the Scriptural standard of evidence of either a confession or substantiation by two or more witnesses. – Proverbs 28:13; Deuteronomy 19:15; Matthew 18:16; 2 Corinthians 13:1; 1 Timothy 5:19.

11.43 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F42(b):

F42 [The two witness rule]:

b) causes victims of child sexual abuse to feel unheard and unsupported when it results in allegations of child sexual abuse not being upheld

This suggested finding should be amended to read as follows, for the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.203 to 9.209:

"Based on the testimony of the two survivor witnesses: (i) Although BCB did not feel supported overall, her testimony was that [an elder involved in Scriptually caring for her accusation] was "very kind and supportive. He told me that what has happened was not my fault and that I shouldn't blame myself"; and (ii) Although BCG felt unsupported when her allegations of child sexual abuse against her father, BCH, were not Scripturally established at the time of the first congregation judicial hearing, it should be noted that BCH was found guilty of the sexual abuse of his daughter by the congregation appeal committee within the following two weeks."

11.44 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F42(c):

F42 [The two witness rule]:

c) is a danger to children in the Jehovah's Witness organisation because its consequence is that very often nothing is done about an abuser in the organisation

This suggested finding is simply not true: see the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.210 to 9.218.

11.45 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F42(d):

F42 [The two witness rule]:

d) does not seem to be applied by the Jehovah's Witness organisation in the case of an accusation of adultery, which suggests that adultery is taken more seriously by the organisation than child sexual abuse

This is simply not true, given the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.219 to 9.222.

11.46 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F42(e):

F42 [The two witness rule]:

e) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation with a view to abandoning it or at least reformulating it to ensure that safe decisions as to someone being guilty of child sexual abuse can be made more easily.

Such a finding is beyond the Commission's Terms of Reference for the reasons given in paragraphs 9.223 to 9.227.

11.47 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F43:

F43 The requirement that only elders (i.e. men) can participate in the making of decisions in the investigation process on whether or not someone has committed child sexual abuse:

a) is a fundamental flaw in that process which weakens the decisions by excluding women, and

b) needs to be revisited by the Jehovah's Witness organisation to ensure a meaningful role for women

Such a finding is beyond the Commission's Terms of Reference, as explained in paragraphs 9.228 to 9.232.

Response to suggested findings on the judicial committee process

11.48 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F44:

F44 Under the current documented judicial committee process, if the evidence of the complainant is to be taken into account then she must give evidence in person unless she lives a great distance away or for some other reason is not able to be physically present.

The suggested finding is simply not true: see the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.234 to 9.236.

11.49 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F45:

F45 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to have the evidence of a complainant of child sexual abuse give evidence remotely or by way of a written statement should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

For the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.237 to 9.242, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

Jehovah's Witnesses should continue to make clear their long-standing policy that, where desired, a victim may provide evidence remotely or by way of a written statement to elders investigating and to those subsequently handling an allegation of child abuse.

11.50 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F46:

F46 Under the current documented judicial committee process, a complainant of child sexual abuse is prohibited from having someone present with her in the judicial committee process to offer support.

The suggested finding is untrue: see the reasons set out in paragraphs 9.243 to 9.247.

11.51 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F47:

F47 The stated willingness of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to allow a complainant of child sexual abuse to be accompanied by a support person of her choosing should be formalised and documented so that those running judicial committee processes and those affected by them are properly advised of the position.

The suggested finding contains incorrect assertions as set out in paragraphs 9.248 and 9.249 and ought to be disregarded.

11.52 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F48:

F48 The current documented process for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness organisation is focussed largely on the rights and comfort of the accused, with little regard to the requirements of a victim of abuse.

The suggested finding is simply not true: see the reasons given in paragraphs 9.250 to 9.257.

Response to suggested findings on the management of risk

11.53 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F49:

F49 The failure of the Jehovah's Witness organisation to take into account the risk of re-offending when considering whether an offender is repentant, and consequently in deciding whether to merely reprove rather than to disfellowship, or whether to re-admit someone who has previously been disfellowshipped, does not adequately take account of considerations of child safety and should be revisited.

This suggested finding ought to be disregarded given the reasons in paragraphs 9.259 to 9.267.

Response to suggested findings on sanctions - reproval

11.54 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F50:

F50 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is found to be repentant and for that reason merely reproved rather than disfellowshipped he remains in the congregation and a risk to children in the congregation.

There is no policy or practice and for the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.269 to 9.280, this suggested finding should not be made.

11.55 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F51:

F51 The system of not announcing the reasons for reproval means that members of the congregation are not warned about the risk that such a wrongdoer poses to children in the congregation.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.281 to 9.291, this suggested finding should not be made.

11.56 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F52:

F52 The sanction of reproval therefore does nothing to protect children in the congregation and in the broader community.

No evidence was placed before the Commission that could justify such a finding so for the reasons given in paragraphs 9.292 to 9.293, this suggested finding ought to be disregarded.

Response to suggested findings on sanctions - disfellowshipping

11.57 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F53:

F53 Since it is the policy or practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police (other than if required by law to do so), if a known abuser is disfellowshipped he remains in the community and a risk to children in the community.

There is no such policy or practice and for the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.295 to 9.300, this suggested finding should not be made.

11.58 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F54:

F54 The sanction of disfellowshipping does nothing to protect children in the community.

No evidence was provided to the Commission which could support such a finding and based on the reasons in paragraphs 9.301 to 9.304, this suggested finding should not be made.

Response to suggested findings on reporting

11.59 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F55:

F55 Prior to this case study, the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia did not advise congregational elders of their obligations to report the commission of criminal offences to the police under s 316 of the Crimes Act 1900 (NSW).

This suggested finding ought to be disregarded as explained in paragraphs 9.306 to 9.310.

11.60 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F56:

F56 This report is referred to the Law Society of New South Wales in relation to the conduct of Mr Toole in having failed to advise congregational elders of their obligations to report their knowledge of the commission of certain criminal offences to the police.

The report should not be referred to the Law Society of New South Wales for the reasons outlined in paragraph 9.311 and 10.6.

Response to suggested findings on the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation's policy on reporting

11.61 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F57:

F57 It is the policy and practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation in Australia to not report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police or other authorities unless required by law to do so.

There is no such policy and practice of Jehovah's Witnesses: see the reasons given in paragraphs 9.313 to 9.318.

11.62 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F58:

F58 The basis for this policy is said to be respect for the 'right' of the victim to herself decide whether to make a complaint to the authorities.

This suggested finding should be amended to read as follows, based on the reasons in paragraphs 9.319 to 9.324:

Jehovah's Witnesses respect the right of a survivor or victim of abuse (or their parent or guardian) to decide for him or herself whether or not to report the abuse to the authorities.

11.63 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F59:

F59 That basis has no justification where the victim is still a minor at the time that the abuse comes to the attention of the organisation, or where there are others who may still be at risk at the hands of the alleged abuser.

For the reasons set out in paragraphs 9.325 to 9.327, this suggested finding ought to be disregarded since it does not relate to the policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

11.64 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F60:

F60 Since the organisation cannot remove an alleged abuser from the family or take other positive steps to safeguard children in the family from continuing risk, the organisation should have a policy to report all allegations of child sexual abuse to the authorities unless an adult victim specifically requests that a report not be made and there is no appreciable risk of children being abused.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.328 to 9.333, this suggested finding should be amended to read:

The Scripturally-based beliefs and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses require that they obey the laws pertaining to child abuse. In jurisdictions that require it, they obey laws requiring the reporting of such allegations to the authorities. Elders of Jehovah's Witnesses will obey any newly enacted laws requiring ministers of religion to report allegations of child abuse.

Response to suggested findings on the impact of the Jehovah's Witnesses organisation processes on criminal processes

11.65 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F61:

F61 The internal processes of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for handling allegations of child sexual abuse cause significant delay in a complaint coming, if ever, before authorities.

This suggested finding cannot be made given the statistical evidence presented to the Commission, as explained in paragraphs 9.336 to 9.339.

11.66 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F62:

F62 Admissions made by an accused during the investigative and/or judicial committee process administered by the Jehovah's Witness organisation may not be admissible in criminal proceedings because of the circumstances in which they are made, including that incentives such as reduction in penalty are offered if an admission is made.

This suggested finding should not be made for the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.340 to 9.344.

11.67 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F63:

F63 The number of people to whom a survivor of child sexual abuse is required to divulge the detail of her complaint exacerbates the trauma already suffered by a survivor of such abuse.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.345 to 9.348, this suggested finding should not be made.

11.68 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F64:

F64 There is significant risk of contamination of a survivor's evidence as a result of the number of times and circumstances in which a survivor is required to divulge the detail of her complaint before her abuse is, if ever, reported to the authorities.

This suggested finding should be removed and replaced as follows given the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.349 to 9.351:

There may be a risk of contamination of a survivor's evidence as a result of the number of times and circumstances in which a survivor is required to divulge the detail of her complaint before her abuse is, if ever, reported to the authorities.

Response to suggested findings on Mr Jackson's stated empathy on survivors

11.69 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F65:

F65 Mr Jackson's failure to have read or be familiar with the testimony of the survivor witnesses yet to have read or otherwise familiarised himself with the testimony of Jehovah's Witness witnesses belies his stated empathy for the survivors and his stated recognition of the importance of their perspectives.

This suggested finding is completely untrue and should be amended to reflect what Mr Geoffrey Jackson himself explained, as elaborated on in paragraphs 9.353 and 10.6:

I wasn't aware of the fact that I would be called before the Commission ... I haven't lived in Australia for 36 years, and I haven't certainly had a chance to look through the files ... The reason I came here was to care for my ailing father, and that has taken a lot of my time.

Response to suggested findings on the system of prevention of child sexual abuse—WWCC

11.70 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F66:

F66 The documented practice of the Jehovah's Witness organisation of not reporting child sexual abuse to the authorities undermines the efficacy of the working with children check system, a system to which the organisation says it subscribes and with which it says it complies.

For the reasons given in paragraph 9.355, this suggested finding is too broadly stated and should not be made in the terms expressed.

Response to suggested findings on the system of prevention of child sexual abuse—risk of reoffending

11.71 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F67:

F67 The practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witness organisation for the prevention of child sexual abuse, and in particular for the management of the risk of an abuser reoffending, do not take account of the actual risk of an offender reoffending and accordingly place children in the organisation at significant risk of sexual abuse.

For the reasons in paragraphs 9.358 to 9.362, this suggested finding ought to be disregarded.

Response to suggested findings on the accessibility of procedures and policies

11.72 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F68:

F68 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's documented procedures for reporting on and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse are deficient in that they are not documented in such a way as to be easily accessible in one document and available to all interested or affected parties and some matters that are stated to be the policies or practices of the organisation are not recorded at all.

This suggested finding should not be made for the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.364 to 9.365.

Response to suggested findings on shunning

11.73 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F69:

F69 Members of the Jehovah's Witness organisation who no longer want to be subject to the organisation's rules and discipline have no alternative than to leave the organisation which requires that they disassociate from it.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.367 to 9.369, the finding should read:

A Jehovah's Witness who no longer wants to be subject to the organisation's rules and discipline may simply stop associating with the congregation without formally disassociating from the faith.

11.74 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F70(a):

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy of requiring its adherents to actively shun those who leave the organisation:

a) makes it extremely difficult for someone to leave the organisation

This suggested finding is incorrect: see paragraphs 9.370 to 9.375 and 10.7.

11.75 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F70(b):

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy…:

b) is cruel on those who leave and on their friends and family who remain behind

This is contrary to the evidence given by Mr Baker: see paragraphs 9.376 to 9.378 and 10.7.

11.76 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F70(c):

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy…:

c) is particularly cruel on those who have suffered child sexual abuse in the organisation and who wish to leave because they feel that their complaints about it have not been adequately dealt with

This is unsubstantiated: see paragraphs 9.379 to 9.380 and 10.7.

11.77 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F70(d):

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy…:

d) is not apparently justified by the Scriptures which are cited in support of it.

This is incorrect: see paragraphs 9.381 to 9.383 and 10.7.

11.78 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F70(e):

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy…:

e) is adopted and enforced in order to prevent people from leaving the organisation and thereby to maintain its membership.

As explained in paragraphs 9.384 to 9.386 and 10.7, this suggested finding ought to be disregarded.

11.79 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F70(f):

F70 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's policy…:

f) is in conflict with the organisation's professed support for freedom of religious choice and the belief that Jehovah God is a compassionate God who recognises the worth and dignity of all human beings.

There is no basis for such a finding: see paragraphs 9.387 to 9.390 and 10.7.

Response to suggested findings on Dr Applewhite's expert opinions

11.80 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F71:

F71 The opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite in paragraphs 36, 45 and 46 of her report are rejected because they are not substantiated by identifiable facts and assumptions or by reasons.

For the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.392 to 9.397, the suggested finding should read:

*The opinions expressed by Dr Applewhite in paragraphs 36, 45 and 46 of her report are accepted.

11.81 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F72:

F72 Dr Applewhite's report contains a number of factual errors with regard to her documenting of the relevant practices and procedures of the Jehovah's Witnesses.

The suggested finding should read as follows, based on the reasons given in paragraphs 9.398 to 9.399:

Dr Applewhite's report contains a small number of inconsequential factual errors with regard to her documenting of the relevant practices and procedures of Jehovah's Witnesses.

11.82 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F73:

F73 Dr Applewhite's report is therefore rejected.

For the reasons provided in paragraphs 9.400 to 9.401, the finding should read:

Dr Applewhite's report is therefore accepted.

Response to suggested findings on Dr Applewhite's oral evidence

11.83 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F74:

F74 Dr Applewhite accepted the following components to current standards of best practice in relation to raising and responding to allegations of child sexual abuse within religious organisations, namely that religious organisations should have:

a) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse which is survivor focussed and designed to ensure that the child or adult survivor feels able to come forward and be comfortable in reporting the allegation

b) a process for reporting allegations of child sexual abuse that does not require a survivor to confront the alleged perpetrator of their abuse or be in the same room as the alleged perpetrator without support

c) a system for preventing perpetrators of child sexual abuse from being put back in a position of trust with children

d) an ability to take child-safe action in order to remove children from imminent danger, or a relationship with other authorities that have that ability, and

e) strong and cooperative relationships with child protection authorities and with criminal justice authorities

These suggested findings should not be made since they do not relate to the policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses, as explained in paragraphs 9.403 to 9.410.

11.84 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F75:

F75 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite in oral evidence that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her testimony before elders and her abuser would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

For the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.411 to 9.413, this suggested finding should not be made since it has no direct relevance to the current policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses.

11.85 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F76:

F76 The opinion expressed by Dr Applewhite that requiring a survivor of child sexual abuse to present her allegation and testimony to three men without the presence of a support person would not meet the relevant standard is accepted.

This suggested finding ought to be disregarded since it has no direct relevance to the current policies and practices of Jehovah's Witnesses as explained in paragraphs 9.414 to 9.415.

11.86 Counsel Assisting's suggested finding F77:

F77 The Jehovah's Witness organisation's current policies and procedures for raising and responding to complaints or allegations of child sexual abuse do not meet all current standards of best practice.

For the reasons outlined in paragraphs 9.416 to 9.417, this suggested finding cannot be made.

MR STEWART: Your Honour and Commissioner, this is the 29th public hearing of the Royal Commission. This case study concerns the response of the church of the Jehovah's Witnesses and its corporation, the Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia, to reports of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness Church in Australia.

This case study will explore the experiences of two survivors of child sexual abuse and the Jehovah's Witness Church's response to their complaints of sexual abuse whilst they were members of the Jehovah's Witness Church.

The case study will also involve an examination of the systems, policies and procedures in place within the Jehovah's Witness Church and Watchtower Australia for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse, and the mechanisms in place to prevent child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness Church.

As will be seen, the Jehovah's Witness Church is a tightly controlled, rule-bound organisation, that seeks to keep its members in relative isolation from the rest of society. It has rules drawn from its own version of the Bible for, amongst other things, personal presentation, the avoidance of involvement in extra-curricular activities at school, maintenance of the constant awareness of the dangers of bad associations in the secular world, who is in the church and who is out of the church, and for family and home life.

For example, church doctrine places the father as head of the family with authority over his wife and children. The wife's role is that of helper or complement. The church teaches its members to be in subjection to it in all aspects of life.

The Jehovah's Witness Church is preoccupied with sin and sinning. If a congregation member becomes aware that another member has committed a serious sin, such as, as it is put, "fornication, adultery, homosexuality, blasphemy, apostasy, adultery and similar gross sins", he or she is obliged to report that to the congregation elders. In the case of lesser sins as between members, the church prescribes the steps that must be taken to reach a resolution. The more serious sins must be investigated by the elders who must pass judgment on the accused and his or her degree of repentance for the sin.

It is a system in which a group of men who are appointed from above, not by the congregation, stand in judgment over their fellow men, women and children on every aspect of their lives.

The result of this active involvement of the church in every aspect of the lives of congregation members is that there is no meaningful distinction between family and church. The family is part of the church and what happens in the family is governed by the church.

During the investigation of this case study, Watchtower Australia produced some 5,000 documents pursuant to summonses issued by the Royal Commission on 4 and 28 February 2015. Those documents include 1,006 case files relating to allegations of child sexual abuse made against members of the Jehovah's Witness Church in Australia since 1950 - each file for a different alleged perpetrator of child sexual abuse. Royal Commission officers have analysed the case files and have recorded the outcomes of their analysis. The results of the analysis, together with the experiences described by two survivor witnesses, illustrate the practical application and effect of the church's policies and directives in relation to handling of complaints and managing the risk of child sexual abuse. I will say more about the results of that case file analysis a little later.

The facts identified in these submissions are drawn from witness statements and documents that will be tendered or from testimony that is expected to be given during the public hearing. It is not expected that these facts will be particularly in contest. They are set out here as a guide to the evidence that will be led.

I will structure the submissions going forward in three parts. Firstly, I will address the background to the Jehovah's Witness institution. I will then consider the child sexual abuse policies and procedures of the Jehovah's Witness Church, and finally, I will consider the child sexual abuse survivors in the church and, in particular, those who will give evidence in this study.

So, turning, then, to the background to the church as an institution, the Jehovah's Witness Church was founded towards the end of the 19th century in Pennsylvania by a small group of bible students led by Charles Taze Russell. Russell had become disillusioned with mainstream Christianity, which he argued had strayed from the first century vision of Christianity described in the Bible. Between 1870 and 1879, Russell distributed his group's first century interpretation of the Bible through a periodical that is now called "The Watchtower - Announcing Jehovah's Kingdom". In 1884, the Zion's Watchtower Tract Society was incorporated and carried on the business of publishing and disseminating millenarian literature - that is, literature based on the belief that the end of the world is imminent.

Today the religion has a worldwide presence of 8.2 million active members in 239 countries. Over the last 25 years, the active membership of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide has increased from 4 million members in 1990.

The Jehovah's Witness Church has been active in Australia since 1896, with a branch office first established in 1904. The Australia branch office is based in Sydney and coordinates the activities of all congregations in Australia, New Zealand and some other islands.

The primary legal entity used by the Jehovah's Witness Church today is the Watchtower Bible and Tract Society of Pennsylvania. The headquarters of Watchtower Pennsylvania is in Brooklyn, New York, and is known as "Bethel", meaning "House of God". The activity of Jehovah's Witnesses worldwide is overseen by the Governing Body. The Governing Body is a council of eight men based at the headquarters in Brooklyn. It is at the apex of a highly centralised and hierarchical structure.

The Jehovah's Witnesses believe that the teachings promulgated by the Governing Body are based on God's word, and not devised by men. Teachings take the form of the Awake! and Watchtower magazines, letters containing directives to branch officers and elders, handbooks and other publications.

The Governing Body supervises more than 90 branches worldwide. A branch office is the headquarters for the Jehovah's Witness Church in a particular country or region and is also referred to as "Bethel".

Each branch office is supervised by a branch committee, which oversees districts within the branch. The Australia branch office is represented around Australia by circuit overseers who have pastoral responsibility for about 20 congregations - that is, a circuit. A circuit overseer travels weekly to different congregations in his circuit and is responsible for, among other things, ensuring that each congregation is complying with all theocratic direction given by the Governing Body. By

"theocratic", I mean a form of government in which God is recognised as the supreme civil ruler.

Congregations form the basic organisational unit of the Jehovah's Witness Church. Each congregation is overseen by a Body of Elders. Each congregation in Australia is, in the legal sense, a voluntary association, and is registered separately as a charity.

There are currently 817 congregations in Australia with over 68,000 active members. Over the past 25 years, the active membership of the church in Australia has grown 29 per cent from approximately 53,000 members in 1990. In the same period, Australia's population growth has been 38 per cent.

The Australia branch office relevantly comprises the following structures: first, a branch committee, an ecclesiastical Body of Elders that oversees and manages the operation of the Australia branch office; second, the legal department; and, third, the service department, which cares for all aspects of the spiritual activities of the Jehovah's Witness Church.

The function of each of the above structures is relevant to the Royal Commission's examination of the Jehovah's Witness Church's response to child sexual abuse in its ranks. The Royal Commission will hear evidence from three institutional witnesses who serve in each of these structures.

Terrence O'Brien is the coordinator of the Australia branch and a director and secretary of the Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia. He has actively served with the Jehovah's Witness Church for 40 years. Mr O'Brien will give evidence regarding the history and organisational structure of the Jehovah's Witness Church and he will provide an administrative perspective on the organisation's approach to the prevention and handling of child sexual abuse within Australia.

Rodney Spinks is the senior service desk elder who has served in the service department since January 2007. He is specifically responsible for inquiries related to child sexual abuse and for assisting congregation elders to implement the Australia branch office's guidelines for handling child abuse allegations and providing victim support.

Mr Spinks will give evidence about the role of the service department in processes that relate to handling complaints of child sexual abuse in the Jehovah's Witness Church in Australia.

Vincent Toole is a solicitor who has, since 2010, overseen the operation of the legal department of the Australia branch office. Mr Toole will give evidence regarding the role of the legal department in responding to allegations and managing the risk of child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness Church in Australia.

The Watchtower Bible & Tract Society of Australia is the legal entity which facilitates the production and distribution of Bible-based literature for the church throughout Australia. Watchtower Australia is a public company limited by guarantee and a registered charity.

Within each congregation, the members comprise elders, ministerial servants and publishers. A male publisher can make spiritual advancement by becoming a ministerial servant and then an elder.

Congregational responsibilities are split between elders and ministerial servants. Elders and ministerial servants are volunteer roles taken up by those men who have been actively involved in the congregation for a period of time. The Royal Commission will hear that the Jehovah's Witness Church does not have a salaried clergy and therefore considers that it has no employees. Appointments are based on scriptural qualifications and there is prescriptive guidance as to how a ministerial servant and an elder should serve, act and behave at all times.

Each congregation is overseen by a Body of Elders. Elders are appointed to shepherd the congregation and oversee spiritual matters. Their primary responsibilities include organising field work or door-to-door preaching, running congregational disciplinary committees, leading the congregation services and Bible studies and attending to the pastoral care of the congregation. It is said that elders must be experienced men who have displayed a pattern of integrity in their lives over a period of time as ministerial servants.

Ministerial servants predominantly provide administrative support and practical assistance to the elders and service to the congregation. They care for organisational tasks, such as acting as an attendant at congregation meetings, handling sound equipment, distributing literature and managing congregation accounts and general maintenance at the Kingdom Hall.

Members of the congregation are called publishers and call each other "brother" and "sister". Publishers may be baptised or unbaptised. Baptism is the symbol of the publisher's dedication to Jehovah. Unbaptised publishers are those who have not been baptised but have been given approval to join the congregation's formal ministry and to identify themselves publicly with the Jehovah's Witness Church.

Publishers who wish to devote many hours to field service preaching may be appointed as pioneers. Regular pioneers are exemplary congregation members who have volunteered to spend a certain amount of time in the public preaching activity each month. Special pioneers serve full time in preaching work and are selected from experienced, long-serving regular pioneers.

The evidence will show that the key imperative belief of the Jehovah's Witness Church is that the Bible is the inspired word of God. This means that Jehovah's Witnesses interpret the Bible literally and take living in accordance with Bible principles extremely seriously. It is expected that evidence will be given that the Jehovah's Witness Church is strongly theocratic, meaning that "almost all internal organisational rules as well as teachings are strictly based on biblical prescriptions on how best to live according to God's plans".

The English High Court has recently recognised that "[t]his distinguishes them from other religious denominations who use the bible to shape thinking, guide behaviour and teach lessons but do not use it directly to set policy and religious practices".

Being a Jehovah's Witness is a way of life for all members. The evidence will demonstrate that devotees are expected to adhere to all doctrines established by the Governing Body. These are a pervasive influence over almost every conceivable sphere of daily life. The strict code of moral conduct by which all members strive to live based on the scriptures is enforced by the highly formalised disciplinary process for dealing with wrongdoing within the church and its jurisdiction over all aspects of the life of Jehovah's Witnesses.

The Royal Commission will hear evidence of how a uniform set of doctrines prescribed by the Governing Body unites devotees in a tightly bonded community and separates them symbolically from the outside world. The Jehovah's Witness Church is a world-renouncing theology. Jehovah's Witnesses are counselled to keep separate from the world and to beware of secular associates who have no love for Jehovah. Further, the Royal Commission will hear evidence from two survivor witnesses who will say that they were not permitted to associate with people outside the Jehovah's Witness community and that non-Jehovah's Witnesses are referred to as "worldly people" and, as it is put, "not in the Truth".

The Royal Commission will hear evidence that separateness from the world is reinforced by various policies of the Jehovah's Witness Church. Jehovah's Witnesses are encouraged to strictly adhere to biblical principles to the exclusion of all else, including pursuit of further education. Jehovah's Witness parents are encouraged to school their own children in matters of sex education, because the alternative of school-based sex education is considered likely to result in immorality. The general practice of the Jehovah's Witness Church is to deal with allegations of child sexual abuse internally, without reference to secular authorities.

The Royal Commission will hear that the Jehovah's Witness Church is a millenarian Christian religion, meaning that they believe that the end of the world is near. Mr O'Brien will give evidence that the Jehovah's Witnesses have a doctrinal understanding of Bible prophecies regarding the "conclusion of the system of things", as it is put, which is also referred to as "the last days". Documents will be tendered which show that Jehovah's Witnesses believe that the only way to finally end child abuse is to, as they put it, "embrace God's Kingdom under Christ" and to "love God with all your heart and your neighbour as yourself" so as to be saved when the end comes.

The Royal Commission will receive evidence that all members are expected to teach and can lead bible study. Bible study is conducted in a variety of ways, including by house-to-house ministry or on the street. Mr O'Brien will give evidence that members evangelise to glorify God and are instructed to go and make disciples of all people. Jehovah's Witnesses view evangelising as a personal responsibility and the extent to which they engage in this activity is a personal decision that they make as an expression of their love for God.

Jehovah's Witnesses worship and praise Jehovah by attending organised meetings, bible study, Theocratic Ministry Schools and field service. Jehovah's Witness meetings are generally held in a place of worship called "Kingdom Hall". The Royal Commission will hear that each week, Jehovah's Witnesses around the world study the same passages in The Watchtower as directed by the Governing Body in preparation for the same program of worship at Kingdom Hall.

Documents will be tendered which show that Jehovah's Witnesses are counselled to demonstrate submission to Christ's headship by obedience to the elders, who are taken to be controlled by God for the purposes of accomplishing Jehovah's will. Mr O'Brien will give evidence that Jehovah's Witnesses accept the divine standard that "the head of every man is the Christ, in turn the head of a woman is the man".

The evidence will reveal that this belief is reflected in the patriarchal structure of the institution, where men hold positions of authority within congregations and headship in the family. Women are expected to defer to the authority of their husbands, and children are taught to obey their parents.

Moving on, then, to child sexual abuse policies and procedures, the Jehovah's Witness Church relies primarily on Bible passages to set its policies and practices. The Jehovah's Witness Church says that it has had Bible-based policies on child sexual abuse for over 30 years. Mr O'Brien will tell the Royal Commission that these policies have been refined and periodically addressed in various publications over the past several decades. Mr O'Brien will testify that the Governing Body is not involved in the administration and implementation of child sexual abuse policies and procedures in branch offices of the Jehovah's Witness Church.

The evidence will reveal that doctrinal information is transmitted by the Governing Body through the branch offices and Bodies of Elders to individual members. From at least the 1990s, the Australia branch office has, with guidance from the Governing Body, periodically issued directives in the form of letters addressed to All Bodies of Elders providing instruction on how to respond to allegations of child sexual abuse.

In 1991, a number of articles based on biblical principles for handling wrongdoing, including child sexual abuse, were compiled in a publication for elders called, "Pay Attention to Yourselves and All Your Flock". In 2010, that publication, "Pay Attention to Yourselves", was replaced with an updated compilation of articles entitled "Shepherd the Flock of God", which is now the primary text from which an elder takes guidance on his congregation.

Additional information in support of the Jehovah's Witness Church's theocratic policies is made available to congregation members through The Watchtower and Awake! magazines and other publications.

Rodney Spinks of the service department will give evidence that the current policies of the Jehovah's Witness Church for dealing with an accusation of child sexual abuse are outlined in the following four publications: firstly, the Bible - the English edition is the New World Translation of the Holy Scriptures; secondly, the Elders' Handbook; thirdly, Watchtower Society publications, such as Organised to Do Jehovah's Will; and, fourthly, letters sent to All Bodies of Elders. In particular, a letter dated 1 October 2012, which consolidated and replaced into one letter the spiritual advice and guidance provided in various past letters from preceding years as to how Jehovah's Witnesses handle allegations of child sexual abuse.

Evidence will be put before the Royal Commission that the current policies and procedures relating to child sexual abuse within the Jehovah's Witness Church are supplemented, in particular, by the following material: first, a pivotal Watchtower article entitled "Let us Abhor What is Wicked ", published in January 1997, which clarified in biblical terms the principles to which a congregation should have regard in considering how a child molester should be viewed and treated; and, secondly, updated guidelines issued by the Governing Body to all branch officers in August 2013 regarding how service desks should field questions from elders regarding child abuse matters.

Elders within the Jehovah's Witness Church are given periodic training on the implementation of its policies and procedures. The training takes the form of one-day programs or seminars called Kingdom Ministry Schools.

There will be evidence regarding the established disciplinary procedure adopted by the church for responding to allegations of child sexual abuse in Australia. Documents will be tendered and evidence given showing that the Jehovah's Witness Church considers that it is only authorised to address child sexual abuse in accordance with scriptural direction.

The Jehovah's Witness Church recognises child abuse to be a gross sin and crime. Its official position is that they abhor child sexual abuse and will not protect any perpetrator of such repugnant acts. Child sexual abuse is defined by the Jehovah's Witness Church as follows:

> Child sexual abuse generally includes sexual intercourse with a minor; oral or anal sex with a minor; fondling the genitals, breasts or buttocks of a minor; voyeurism of a minor; indecent exposure to a minor; soliciting a minor for sexual conduct; or any kind of involvement with child pornography. Depending on the circumstances of the case, it may also include "sexting" with a minor. "Sexting" describes the sending of nude photos, seminude photos, or sexually explicit text messages electronically, such as by phone.

According to the Jehovah's Witness Church, child sexual abuse is captured by the scriptural offences: firstly, "porneia", which is immoral use of the genitals between two people; secondly, "brazen or loose conduct", which includes fondling of breasts, explicitly immoral proposals, showing pornography to a child, voyeurism, indecent exposure; and, thirdly, gross uncleanliness, which is heavy petting.

Jehovah's Witnesses are taught from the Bible that they have a personal responsibility to report wrongdoing to elders, if the wrongdoer does not voluntarily come forward. Upon receipt of an allegation, elders are directed to immediately call the branch office for direction based on the circumstances of each case. Two elders from the congregation are also directed to immediately call the legal department for legal advice on mandatory reporting obligations.

The legal department is instructed to refer the elders to the service department for scriptural direction on theocratic or judicial aspects of the case, and how to spiritually comfort and support the victim. The service department also provides guidance on when and how elders should interview a young victim of child abuse.

Two elders are directed to investigate every allegation of child sexual abuse by speaking with the victim, the alleged offender, and any other witnesses, if necessary. The weight given to the testimony of youths is at the discretion of the investigating elders. Elders are not authorised to take congregational action unless the child sexual abuse is proven according to biblical standards which are satisfied by evidence of: a confession from the accused; or the testimony of two credible witnesses to the same incident; or the testimony of two witnesses to separate incidents of the same kind of wrongdoing; or strong circumstantial evidence testified to by at least two witnesses.

Where by those rules there is insufficient evidence to substantiate the alleged child sexual abuse, the matter is held in abeyance and the elders are directed to "remain vigilant with regard to the conduct and activity of the accused". In this event, no further action is taken in relation to the complaint, and the matter is left in Jehovah's hands. If sufficient evidence is discovered, the elders must determine whether a judicial committee should be appointed to give scriptural discipline to the wrongdoer. Child sexual abuse is recognised as an offence for which a judicial committee should be formed.

The Royal Commission will hear that over the past

65 years, the requirement that there be two or more witnesses has prevented at least 125 allegations of child sexual abuse from proceeding to a judicial committee. That is not unexpected, given that by its nature there are very seldom witnesses to child sexual abuse beyond the survivor and the perpetrator.

The judicial committee is comprised of three or more elders to determine, firstly, if the individual is guilty of violating God's laws; and, secondly, whether the individual is genuinely repentant. Repentance involves a deep regret over a damaged relationship with Jehovah, remorse over the reproach brought upon Jehovah's name, and a severe longing to come back into God's favour. Documents will be tendered which show that the Jehovah's Witnesses consider that the degree of repentance ought to be commensurate with the degree of deviation.

The Royal Commission will hear that since 1950, 563 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse were the subject of a judicial committee hearing.

The judicial committee has wide-ranging sanctions available to it to deal with proven wrongdoing. If the wrongdoer is unrepentant, he is to disfellowshipped from the congregation. To be disfellowshipped means to be excommunicated from, or cast out of, the Jehovah's Witness Church. Congregation members are directed not to associate with disfellowshipped persons. Disfellowshipping differs from disassociation, which is an action taken by an individual who no longer wants to be known as a Jehovah's Witness.

If the wrongdoer is judged to be genuinely repentant, the sanction is to administer reproof of the wrongdoer. Reproval may be public or private and is a lesser form of discipline that allows the wrongdoer to remain a member of the congregation. Public reproval is administered before onlookers and serves to discipline the wrongdoer whilst warning the congregation that wrongdoing has been committed. Private reproval involves telling the accused that he is reproved before only those aware of the wrongdoing. A person who is judicially reproved is disqualified from special privileges, such as serving in a position of authority. Judicial restrictions are also imposed on those who are reproved. The restrictions might include being counselled by the elders about appropriate behaviour with children.

A public announcement is made to the congregation regarding the fact, but not the grounds, of disfellowshipping or reproval.

The Royal Commission will hear that since 1950, 401 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse were disfellowshipped, 78 of whom were disfellowshipped on more than one occasion; and 190 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse were reproved, 11 of whom were reproved on more than one occasion.

Disfellowshipping decisions may be appealed within seven days. Appeal committees are formed even if there seems to be no valid basis for it, comprising, to the extent possible, impartial elders from a different congregation, who hear the case ab initio.

A disfellowshipped person may be reinstated into the congregation after the passage of sufficient time if the judicial committee determines that the individual is truly repentant and the reasons for their removal from the congregation have been abandoned. In all cases of reinstatement, documents will be tendered which show that congregational restrictions should be applied.

Since 1950, of 401 disfellowshipped alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse, 230 were later reinstated, 35 of whom were reinstated on more than one occasion.

The case study will explore a number of risk management measures that the Jehovah's Witness Church has in place regarding how a congregation might deal with a person against whom an accusation of "child molestation" has been made.

Mr O'Brien will give evidence that the Jehovah's Witness Church believes that loving and protective parents are the best deterrent to child abuse. Mr O'Brien's evidence will be that it is the position of the Jehovah's Witness Church that parental education of children about sex and the dangers of child sexual abuse can be a major factor in its prevention. He will say that the Jehovah's Witness Church continues to educate parents via study groups and publications to help protect their children from child sexual abuse.

Documents will be tendered which show that the Jehovah's Witness Church considers the primary responsibility for the protection of children lies with parents. Mr O'Brien will say that this is particularly so as the Jehovah's Witness Church does not have programs or facilities that separate children from their parents, such as schools or Sunday schools, and so on.

Mr O'Brien will give evidence that elders are directed to report allegations of child abuse to authorities where mandatory reporting laws apply. The Royal Commission will hear evidence from Vincent Toole, of the legal department, of his understanding of the various mandatory reporting obligations that apply across Australian States. Documents will be tendered which show that if no mandatory reporting obligations apply, elders are directed that they do not themselves need to report. The evidence will show that where a matter becomes known to the authorities, elders are directed to disclose information in their possession where legally required to do so, unless ecclesiastical privilege applies.

The Royal Commission will hear evidence that elders are directed never to discourage or sanction anyone from reporting an allegation of child sexual abuse to the authorities, and that if asked, they must make clear that this is a personal decision and a victim's absolute right. The Royal Commission will hear evidence from at least one survivor witness who, contrary to this policy, was discouraged from reporting her abuse to secular authorities by elders in the Jehovah's Witness Church. Documents will be tendered which show this is consistent with the Jehovah's Witnesses' policy not to resort to secular courts to resolve personal disputes with fellow Christians, but to rely on the elders.

Evidence will be put before the Royal Commission that of the 1,006 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse identified by the Jehovah's Witness Church since 1950, not one was reported by the church to secular authorities. This suggests that it is the practice of the Jehovah's Witness Church to retain information regarding child sexual abuse offences but not to report allegations of child sexual abuse to the police or other relevant authorities.

This case study will consider whether the practice of the Jehovah's Witness Church of not reporting allegations of child sexual abuse to secular authorities potentially exposes members of the church to criminal lightly for concealment of serious indictable offences under section 316 of the Crimes Act 1900 in New South Wales and failure to disclose sexual offences against minors under section 327 of the Crimes Act 1958 of the State of Victoria. The case study will consider the interaction of these offences with the confessional privilege provided for in section 127 of the Evidence Act 1995 of the Commonwealth and replicated legislation in force in New South Wales, Victoria, Tasmania and the Northern Territory.

It is anticipated that documents will be tendered before the Royal Commission which will show that the Australia branch office have considered that confessional privilege would apply in circumstances where the perpetrator confessed to a child sexual abuse. The Royal Commission will hear evidence of the circumstances in which confessions relating to child sexual abuse are made to elders within a congregation and documents recording the circumstances of such confessions then provided to the branch office.

Mr O'Brien will say that the Jehovah's Witness Church complies fully with legislative requirements to ensure all relevant persons have the necessary clearances for working with children. Mr Toole will give evidence that there are approximately 7,000 elders and ministerial servants currently serving in Jehovah's Witnesses congregations in Australia who have obtained child-related police checks.

The Jehovah's Witness Church offers theocratic guidance on the sharing of information between relevant Bodies of Elders through "letters of introduction" when a member moves from one congregation to another.

When a known child molester moves to another congregation, elders are instructed to send a letter of introduction with full and complete information about the person's background and current situation to the elders of the new congregation.

Where an accused does not classify as a known child molester because there was an allegation of child abuse but this was not scripturally proven, the branch office determines what information regarding the accusation may be shared with the new congregation.

Where a disfellowshipped person moves to a new congregation before applying for reinstatement, the new elders are directed to seek relevant information from the old congregation to determine genuine repentance for the purposes of any reinstatement application.

The Royal Commission will hear evidence that elders and ministerial servants hold positions of trust within the congregation. The Jehovah's Witness Church offers theocratic guidance on the qualification of a known child molester for such positions of responsibility.

Mr Spinks will give evidence that an Elder or ministerial servant is immediately removed if he is found to have engaged in child sexual abuse. Documents will be tendered at the hearing which show that elders are instructed to allow considerable time to pass before extending privileges of service to a former child abuser.

Since 1950, 28 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse were appointed to positions of authority after having been the subject of allegations of child sexual abuse. Further, of 127 alleged perpetrators of child sexual abuse deleted as elders or ministerial servants as a result of allegations of child sexual abuse, 16 were later reappointed.

In September 2014, the Jehovah's Witness Church revised its screening process for appointments to elder or ministerial positions. The current procedure requires the nominee to pass the service department's check for anything that may disqualify the individual from appointment and to answer certain questions regarding whether he has ever been involved with child sexual molestation.

Mr Toole will give evidence regarding the document retention policies of the Jehovah's Witness Church in relation to records of child sexual abuse. The current policy provides that records concerning an individual accused of child molestation are to be indefinitely retained in the congregational confidential file. The Royal Commission will hear evidence that this has been a long-standing practice of the Jehovah's Witness Church.

The Royal Commission has been contacted by 57 persons about child sexual abuse in the Jehovah's Witness Church. Of these, 34 are themselves survivors of child sexual abuse in the church.

The Royal Commission will hear evidence from two women, each of whom was sexually abused as a child in the Jehovah's Witness Church. Their cases are considered to be the most appropriate for the purposes of this case study. They are expected to testify about their experiences of: growing up as a Jehovah's Witness; being sexually abused by Jehovah's Witnesses who were in positions of authority; being discouraged from associating with non-Jehovah's Witnesses; the distress they experienced throughout the judicial committee hearing process, which involved being interviewed by a panel of males without any support; the blame that each accused sought to place on them as survivors; the absence of an explained purpose to the meetings and interviews to which they were subjected; and being discouraged from approaching authorities.

The Royal Commission will hear from both survivors that the impact of the child sexual abuse and the response of the Jehovah's Witness Church is ongoing.

I will summarise first the case of [BCB] and then the case of [BCG].

A person given the pseudonym [BCB] began associating with the Jehovah's Witness Church when she was 10 years old and was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness at age 18. Between 1980 and 1986, [BCB] regularly stayed overnight at the house of the Neill family, of whom the father was Bill Neill, one of two elders in the Narrogin congregation in Western Australia. [BCB]'s evidence will be that she attended weekly Bible studies led by Bill Neill at the Narrogin Kingdom Hall and his house.

From 15 years of age, [BCB] was groomed and sexually abused by Mr Neill. [BCB]'s evidence will be that Bill Neill remained a respected elder within the congregation whilst he continued to abuse [BCB]. Notwithstanding this abuse, it will be [BCB]'s evidence that she continued to respect Mr Neill and felt unable to disclose the abuse because of his position.

It will be [BCB]'s evidence that in about 1991 she disclosed Mr Neill's abuse to a Jehovah's Witness acquaintance. Thereafter, the other elder in the congregation, Max Horley, approached [BCB] about Mr Neill's conduct. Mr Horley then arranged a meeting with Bill Neill, [BCB] and [BCB]'s husband. The Royal Commission will hear that during this meeting, [BCB] endured Bill Neill making inappropriate jokes about his conduct that was the subject of the meeting. It will be [BCB]'s evidence that having to discuss her abuse in front of a room full of men, including the perpetrator, was very distressing. The Royal Commission will hear that [BCB] felt unable to report the full extent of Bill Neill's abuse at the meeting.

Max Horley organised a second meeting, which was attended by [BCB], [BCB]'s husband, Bill Neill and Doug Jackson, who was the circuit overseer for the Narrogin congregation. During this meeting, Bill Neill lacked remorse and sought to blame [BCB] for wearing revealing clothing. It will be [BCB]'s evidence that at both meetings she felt unsafe and uncomfortable disclosing the full extent of Bill Neill's abuse. Further, [BCB]'s evidence will be that neither the purpose nor the outcome of the meetings was ever explained to her by the elders.

The Royal Commission will hear evidence that following the committee meeting, Max Horley discouraged [BCB] from further disclosures of abuse "out of respect for the Neill family". [BCB]'s evidence will be that she was left feeling unsupported by the congregation and was instead encouraged to respect her abuser. The Royal Commission will hear that Bill Neill stepped down as an elder, but that the grounds were not announced to the congregation.

Notwithstanding abuse by Bill Neill, the Royal Commission will hear that [BCB] was still expected to attend Bible studies held at the Neills' house and continued to see Bill Neill several times a week at congregational meetings. The Royal Commission will hear that Bill Neill may have later been reappointed as an elder.

[BCB] will give evidence that in about July 2014, after she had indicated that she was considering reporting her abuse to the Royal Commission, Joe Bello, an elder in her congregation at the time, asked if [BCB] "really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud". The Commission will hear evidence that [BCB] felt brainwashed into believing that speaking with worldly people would bring reproach upon Jehovah's name. [BCB]'s evidence will be that, by reporting her story, she is riddled with guilt for betraying the Jehovah's Witness Church.

The Royal Commission will hear from three elders regarding their role in handling [BCB]'s allegation of abuse against Bill Neill.

Max Horley served as an elder in the Narrogin congregation from 1988. He will give evidence regarding his involvement in handling [BCB]'s allegations of child sexual abuse by Bill Neill, made in about 1991. Mr Horley's evidence will be that, in circumstances where Bill Neill denied any intentional conduct, the rule requiring two or more witnesses meant that [BCB]'s allegations could not be proven according to the scriptures. Ultimately, Bill Neill's removal as an elder was recommended by Mr Horley and Mr Jackson because [BCB]'s allegations had cast a cloud over Bill Neill's qualifications. Following Bill Neill's removal, he continued to attend meetings and was not placed on any specific restrictions. Documents will be tendered which show that the elders considered the spirituality and the seductiveness of the complainant in determining the complaint.

Doug Jackson served as a circuit overseer in Western Australia between 1990 and 1998. The Royal Commission will hear evidence regarding Mr Jackson's involvement in the judicial committee hearing into the allegations against Bill Neill during his visit to the Narrogin congregation in early 1992. Mr Jackson will give evidence regarding his recommendation that Bill Neill no longer met the scriptural qualifications for serving as an elder.

Notwithstanding Bill Neill's admission to improper conduct, a document will be tendered which shows that in the same letter that recommends his removal as an elder, Mr Jackson recommends that Bill Neill be reappointed "once this has died down and it appears that Brother Neill again has the freedom of speech."

Joe Bello has served as an elder since 1991. The Royal Commission will hear evidence regarding Mr Bello's involvement in providing shepherding care and assistance to [BCB] during visits to her family in 2012 following [BCB]'s disclosure of Bill Neill's abuse. Mr Bello will give evidence that he did not intend to discourage [BCB] from approaching the Royal Commission.

A person given the pseudonym [BCG] was baptised as a Jehovah's Witness when she was about 16 years old. The Royal Commission will hear evidence of [BCG]'s experience growing up in a strict Jehovah's Witness family. [BCG] will give evidence that her father, [BCH], was a highly regarded Jehovah's Witness who was appointed as a ministerial servant in the Mareeba congregation in Far North Queensland in about 1984. [BCG]'s evidence will be that her father was influential within the congregation because he was well respected amongst members.

As head of the household, [BCH] dictated and enforced compliance with household rules. [BCG] was not permitted to associate with anybody outside the Jehovah's Witness community and was taught from a young age that "worldly" people could not be trusted. [BCG] was not permitted by her parents to attend school after year 10, because choosing higher education over Jehovah was frowned upon by the Jehovah's Witness Church.

When she was 17, [BCG] was sexually abused by her father on a number of occasions over a two-week period whilst her mother and siblings were away. [BCG] tried to report her father's abuse to two elders within the Mareeba congregation, both of whom were friends of her father. [BCG] will give evidence that both elders refused to speak with [BCG] without her father being present. It was not until [BCG] found the courage to tell a male friend, who approached [BCG]'s father and the elders, that the matter was investigated by the elders.

[BCG] was interviewed by three elders, all friends of her father, on a number of occasions. On each occasion, [BCG] was alone, without any support, and on one occasion, her father was also present. [BCG]'s evidence will be that instead of being protected and supported as a victim, the elders primarily sat in judgment of her credibility as a witness and made her feel to blame.

[BCG] will give evidence that the elders forced her to directly confront her father with her abuse allegations. Her father's response was to threaten [BCG] and to blame her for seducing him.

The Royal Commission will hear that when [BCG] disclosed the abuse to her mother, her mother advised that her father had previously abused [BCG]'s older sister. At around the same time, [BCG]'s two younger sisters confirmed that they were also victims of their father's abuse. The Royal Commission will hear that although the elders were advised of the additional victims, they did not take them into consideration in their investigation.

[BCG]'s father was ultimately disfellowshipped, not for his sexual abuse of [BCG], but for unrelated, as it is put, "loose conduct" and "lying". [BCG] will give evidence that the elders would not consider the evidence of her sisters' abuse because they were not witnesses to the same event. [BCG] was devastated that her father's sexual abuse did not appear to qualify as wrongdoing in the eyes of the Jehovah's Witness Church.

[BCG]'s father immediately appealed his disfellowshipping. [BCG] was brought before an appeal committee alone to be interviewed again about the abuse. It was at this time that her father admitted the abuse and his disfellowshipping was upheld with grounds of "porneia" added.

The Royal Commission will hear that [BCG]'s father was reinstated after only a few years. [BCG] will testify that she was concerned for the safety of the congregation but was discouraged from reporting to the police and was herself threatened with disfellowshipping.

In December 1995, [BCG] wrote to Watchtower Australia regarding her father's premature reinstatement. Watchtower Australia responded in February 1996 by counselling faith in Jehovah and advising that it would make inquiries into the matters raised.

The Royal Commission will hear that when [BCG] eventually left the Jehovah's Witness Church, she was completely ostracised by members of her local congregation. [BCG] then reported her father's abuse to the police.

[BCG]'s father, [BCH], was ultimately convicted in 2004 for unlawful and indecent assault and attempted rape of [BCG] and sentenced to three years imprisonment.

[BCG]'s evidence will be that her experience of three criminal trials was easy compared to her experience of sitting through the judicial and appeal committee meetings.

The Royal Commission will hear evidence from the three elders of the Mareeba congregation - Dino Ali, Ronald de Rooy and Kevin Bowditch - regarding their role in handling [BCG]'s allegations of abuse by her father that she reported in about May 1989.

Dino Ali and Ronald de Rooy will give evidence that, in circumstances where [BCH] denied the allegations, the judicial committee was bound by the rule requiring two or more witnesses and did not have sufficient proof of the child sexual abuse to take judicial action. It was for this reason, the Royal Commission will hear, that [BCH] was ultimately disfellowshipped, not for child sexual abuse, but for "loose conduct" and for lying to the elders about his conduct.

Ronald de Rooy and Kevin Bowditch will give evidence that it was not until [BCH] confessed to the sexual abuse of [BCG] during the appeal committee hearing in 1989 that the grounds for [BCH]'s disfellowshipping were extended to include his sexual abuse of [BCG].

In 1990, [BCH] applied to the Beenleigh East congregation for reinstatement. The Royal Commission will hear evidence from Rodney Spinks and Monty Baker, both elders in the Beenleigh East congregation at that time, regarding their involvement on the judicial committee appointed to consider [BCH]'s reinstatement application.

Rodney Spinks will give evidence that [BCH]'s reinstatement application was rejected because he did not display "genuine repentance". Mr Baker will give evidence regarding the process of liaising with the Mareeba congregation, which was responsible for the decision to disfellowship [BCH], to obtain relevant information to assess [BCH]'s reinstatement application.

Allan Pencheff was an elder of the Loganholme congregation. He chaired the judicial committee that disfellowshipped [BCH] again in 2003 for lying. Mr Pencheff will give evidence that he was not aware of any reason to restrict [BCH]'s contact with children at the time [BCH] joined the Loganholme congregation, and that he only became aware of [BCH]'s abuse allegations when criminal proceedings were brought against him between about 2001 and 2004. The Mareeba congregation recommended certain restrictions be placed on [BCH] due to the gravity of the wrongs committed, but did not recommend any restrictions regarding [BCH]'s exposure to children.

Mr Toole will give evidence that in January 2003 he provided a memorandum to the service desk, which observed that the primary issue before the Loganholme judicial committee in 2003 was [BCH]'s lying as opposed to his sexual abuse of [BCG].

In about 2001, criminal proceedings commenced against [BCH] for child sexual abuse and, in 2004, he was convicted and sentenced to three years imprisonment. The Royal Commission will hear evidence from Jason Davies, a former Queensland DPP solicitor, regarding his involvement in the prosecution of the criminal proceedings against [BCH]. Mr Davies will give evidence of his obligations of the influence of the Jehovah's Witness faith on the behaviour of those involved in the criminal proceedings. Mr Davies' evidence will be that "matters of faith sometime [sic] take precedence over secular, moral obligations and norms", and that "the religious persuasion of those involved [in the criminal proceedings] was integral to understanding the behaviour of the accused, the victim and the witnesses, at least in their reluctance to go to the police". The Royal Commission will hear that the delay between the child sexual abuse and the time at which allegations came to police attention is in part attributable to the church's practice of dealing with offending internally in accordance with its theocratic rules, without referring matters to secular authorities.

The Royal Commission will hear of the repeated applications for reinstatement made by [BCH] following his release from prison and of the factors taken into consideration by the Jehovah's Witness Church in considering these applications. The Royal Commission will hear evidence of the involvement of the church's service desk in guiding the consideration of [BCH]'s pleas for reinstatement.

Mr O'Brien will give evidence that to date he is unaware of any claims for redress having been made in relation to child sexual abuse concerning the Jehovah's

Witnesses in Australia. Watchtower Australia does not hold any insurance policy which provides cover for any claims relating to child sexual abuse. Documents will be tendered which show that in 2008, Watchtower Australia considered the formation of a separate legal entity, apparently for the purposes of minimising liability in the case of litigation.

It is expected that the case study will provide the Royal Commission with insights into systemic issues within its terms of reference in the area of institutional responses to concerns and allegations about incidents of child sexual abuse. In particular, the systemic issues that are expected to be considered arising from this case study are the following:

1. The influence of theocratic beliefs on the way in which religious institutions handle complaints and manage the risk of child sexual abuse and their interaction with government authorities;

2. The management of complaints of allegations of child sexual abuse within an institution without reference to external authorities, and the impact that that approach may have on the institution's capacity to protect children;

3. The impact of an institution's internal disciplinary mechanisms on criminal processes;

4. The impact of the record-keeping practices of institutions on the ability of those institutions to manage the risk of child sexual abuse and to respond to victims of abuse;

5. The efficacy of mechanisms to prevent child sexual abuse;

6. The adequacy of systems to support and rehabilitate survivors of child sexual abuse.

This public hearing of the Royal Commission has been listed, obviously commencing today and until Friday 7 August.

THE CHAIR: Yes, thank you, Mr Stewart. I think we might take the short adjournment now so that the cameras can be reorganised.

MR STEWART: As your Honour pleases.

SHORT ADJOURNMENT

<EXAMINATION BY MR STEWART:

MR STEWART: Q. Do you have a copy of your statement dated 10 July 2015 with you?
A. Yes.

Q. Are there any amendments or corrections you would like to make to that statement?
A. No.

Q. Do you confirm the statement?

MR STEWART: I tender the statement, your Honour.

EXHIBIT #29-001 STATEMENT OF [BCB] DATED 10/07/2015

MR STEWART: Q. I would ask you, [BCB], to read your statement, perhaps commencing at the third paragraph.
A. "My full name is [BCB]. I was born on [REDACTED] 1967 and I am 47 years old. I am married to [BCC] and we have two daughters. My husband owns a business and I work for him keeping the books. I was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness when I was 18 years old.

I grew up on a farm near Wickepin in Western Australia. I lived on the farm until I was around 19 with my dad, my mum, and my younger brother.

In 1977, when I was about 10 years old, my mum became a Jehovah's Witness. Between about 1977 and 1979, my mum used to take me and my brother with her to a couple of Jehovah's Witness meetings each week in Corrigin. Corrigin was about an hour's drive away from where we lived.

My dad and I were quite close up until I was about 10 years old."

THE CHAIR: [BCB], would you like Mr Stewart to read your statement for you?

THE WITNESS: No, thank you, I should be all right.

THE CHAIR: If you need to pause, or if you want Mr Stewart or your husband to help, let me know.

THE WITNESS: Okay. I just need a minute. Can I just have a minute?

THE CHAIR: Would you like us to adjourn for a minute?

THE WITNESS: Just a minute, thank you.

THE CHAIR: We will adjourn very briefly. You let us know when you are ready. But if you want your husband to read or Mr Stewart to read, that is quite appropriate. We will take a brief pause and come back when you are ready.

SHORT ADJOURNMENT.

THE CHAIR: Q. Are you all right to go?
A. Yes. "My dad and I were quite close up until I was about 10 years old. However, when I started attending Jehovah's Witness meetings with my mum, we drifted apart emotionally. My dad wasn't a Jehovah's Witness and never attended Jehovah's Witness meetings with us. He never stopped my mum, my brother or me from attending Jehovah's Witness meetings.

In or around 1979, my mum and dad decided that I should go to high school in Narrogin. Narrogin was about an hour's drive from where we lived. Because I was at school in Narrogin, my mum decided to join the Narrogin congregation of Jehovah's Witnesses. My mum, brother and I attended meetings there every Wednesday, Friday and Sunday.

The Sunday and Wednesday meetings of the Narrogin congregation were held at the Narrogin Kingdom Hall and were attended by the whole congregation. At these meetings, one of the elders would usually deliver a public talk from the platform based on a reading from The Watchtower magazine or give a talk from the Bible. At these meetings, the elders would also lead question and answer sessions and give specific training about our door-to-door preaching.

The Wednesday meeting was referred to as the Theocratic Ministry School and children were allowed to give talks about the Jehovah's Witness beliefs at this meeting. I remember that I sometimes gave talks at these meetings.

The Friday meeting was referred to as book study and usually took place at someone's house. At this meeting, a small group of families would come together to discuss biblical scripture.

I first met Bill and Bronwyn Neill and their children at a large Jehovah's Witness party in or around 1979 when I was about 12 years old. Bill and Bronwyn had a daughter named [BCE] who was two years younger than me. [BCE] and I became very good friends.

In or around 1980, Bill Neill was one of two elders at the Narrogin congregation. At the time I understood that Bill's position as an elder gave him authority in the Jehovah's Witness community. He used to give talks at the weekly congregation meetings from the platform in the Kingdom Hall. The other elder in the Narrogin congregation at the time was Jack Shaylor.

I looked up to Bill because he was an elder. Everybody in the congregation respected and trusted Bill, including my mum.

Between about 1980 and 1986 I spent a lot of time with [BCE] at the Neill family house. I used to stay at [BCE]'s house at least once a week. Often, I would attend the Friday night book study meeting led by Bill at the Neills' house and then stay over at the Neills' house until the Sunday meeting at the Kingdom Hall. [BCE]'s mum, Bronwyn, treated me like a daughter and I felt really close to her. I used to call Bill "Uncle Bill".

I recall that the Neill family talked a lot about church issues in the house. They used to discuss their belief in Jehovah. Bill in particular used to explain that all ideas and ways of behaving should be figured out according to what the Bible says. I remember that Bill would discourage [BCE] and me from forming friendships with other children who were not Jehovah's Witnesses at school.

The Neill family always seemed to me to be an affectionate family, which I really liked. For example, everyone always kissed each other on the lips when they said good night or goodbye to one another.

I remember that Bill and Bronwyn were very open with their kids about sex. Bill would often make sexual jokes in front of me. My mum never talked about anything to do with sex. I had grown up understanding that it was not something that you were supposed to talk about.

In or around 1982, when I was about 14 years old, I was staying over at [BCE]'s house, as I did almost every week. I was having a shower and [BCE], who I often shared the bathroom with, said "What's that on your tummy?" I looked down and noticed I had a rash on my stomach. Despite me not wanting her to, [BCE] went and got her mum. I only had my knickers and a singlet on. Bronwyn said she wanted to show Bill. I said, 'I don't want him to see me'. I never let my dad see me in my knickers, so I was really embarrassed. Bill came and looked at my stomach and I remember feeling really uncomfortable about him seeing me like that.

Later in 1982, I was again staying over at [BCE]'s house. On this night, as I was saying good night to Bill in the hallway of their house, he kissed me good night on the lips. Initially, this did not seem unusual to me, but he then stuck his tongue into my mouth. I pulled away and looked at him in shock. He looked at me and gave me a queer smirk-type smile. I found myself half smiling back. I was so surprised by what he had done that I just froze. I didn't know what else to do.

Every time I stayed at the Neill family house after that night until the end of 1986, I had to endure Bill tongue-kissing me good night. This often occurred in the hallway just outside [BCE]'s bedroom.

Apart from putting his tongue in my mouth when I stayed over at [BCE]'s house, Bill's behaviour towards me did not seem to change. He continued to behave the same way around his family. He continued to leave the Jehovah's Witness meetings and to be respected by the rest of the congregation. Since nothing was said about what he was doing to me, I felt like I had to act like nothing was happening.

I really didn't know what to do. I was scared and ashamed. I felt that I was somehow responsible for what Bill was doing to me. I felt like I couldn't say anything about it, because I was worried that I would get into trouble and that Bill would belt me like he belted his kids when they were naughty.

I respected Bill because he was an elder. He was also [BCE]'s dad and head of the Neill household. But I had also come to fear him. Because of his position as an elder, I felt that I couldn't tell anyone about what he was doing to me. I felt that if I told someone, it would upset Bronwyn and [BCE] as well as the members of the congregation.

Every time I thought about bringing what was happening to me out in the open, the consequences were too scary, so I stopped thinking about it. I felt like no-one would believe me.

A few months later, after Bill had once again tongue-kissed me good night at his house, [BCE] said to me, 'Did my dad just kiss you for a long time?' I assumed that [BCE] must have seen Bill kiss me. I was scared of getting into trouble and so I said to her, 'Don't worry, it's okay.' I thought at the time that by not telling [BCE] what was happening, I was protecting her. I thought that if she found out, it might cause her family to break up. I now wish I had told her.

On one occasion in or around 1983, Bill and I were out doing door-to-door preaching together. I remember that at some point, we were alone in Bill's Kombi van. Bill said to me, 'What shall we do about our little problem?' I said to him, 'I don't know.' Bill then asked me, 'Do you want me to talk to Brother Shaylor about it? You know if I do that, though, your mum and dad will find out.' I replied no to Bill, because when he mentioned that my parents would find out, I got scared.

I was surprised that Bill suggested speaking to Brother Shaylor. At the time, I already felt guilty about what Bill was doing to me, but when Bill suggested speaking to Brother Shaylor, it removed any doubt in my mind that what was happening between Bill and me was my fault.

At the end of 1983, having completed year 10, I left high school. The following year, I studied a business course and in around April 1984 I got a job. [REDACTED]. I continued to stay at the Neill house regularly from around this time until the end of 1986.

One night, in or around 1984 when I was about 17, I stayed overnight at the Neill family house. While I was showering in the bathroom with the door locked, I heard a noise. I looked up and saw Bill perving on me over the top of the shower curtain. I guess he must have been standing on the basin to be able to see. I don't know how, but I assume that Bill had unlocked the bathroom door from the outside. I screamed 'Get out' at Bill and he left the room. Bill and I never spoke of the shower incident.

On another night also in 1984, and not long after the shower incident, I remember that Bill came into [BCE]'s room where she and I were making lots of noise and threw me over the bed. He started belting me across my buttocks with his belt. It really stung me and afterwards I had a dark red welt across my backside. Apart from the physical pain, I remember feeling humiliated, angry and shocked by what Bill had done.

On 26 October 1985, I was formally baptised as a Jehovah's Witness in a ceremony that involved being submerged in a pool of water. At the baptism, many of the other girls wore modest swimming costumes with T-shirts over the top. I remember that Bill refused to let [BCE] or I wear T-shirts over the top of our swimming costumes.

In or around 1985, when I was around 18, I noticed Bill's behaviour towards me became more sexual. He used to say things to me in front of his wife Bronwyn and in front of [BCE] like, 'You're a nymphomaniac', and, 'If you weren't in the Truth, you'd be a prostitute.' What he said didn't make sense to me, because I was a virgin.

I recall that on one occasion in or around the end of 1985, Bill tongue-kissed me in his lounge room. As he was doing it I heard Bronwyn say sharply 'Bill'. I remember thinking that we would be in trouble but nothing more was said about the incident by Bronwyn or Bill.

Up until the summer of 1985-1986, I thought Bill's behaviour was just something unpleasant that I had to put up with so I could have a good time with [BCE] and the rest of the Neill family, who I liked.

One day in the summer of 1985-1986, while I was in the pantry in the kitchen of the Neill family house, Bill came in, shut the door and started kissing me. As I was older by then, I felt able to try and resist his kissing. Bill yelled at me and said to kiss him. He pushed me up against the wall and told me to pull my dress up so that he could see my underwear. Thankfully, someone came into the kitchen at that point and Bill stopped and left me alone in the pantry.

In or around October 1986, I left my job [REDACTED] and I was very unhappy at the time because I was feeling pressured by people in the Narrogin congregation to preach full time.

After I left my job [REDACTED], I moved in to the Neill's house for a couple of months while I was looking for a new job in Narrogin. [BCE] was still living at home when I moved in with the Neill family.

Bill continued to harass me while I lived at the Neill house. At the same time, he remained a respected elder in the congregation. I became really resentful of him. I stopped referring to him as "Uncle Bill" and instead referred to him as "Bill". Looking back, I think this was my way of rebelling against him.

One day, at the end of 1986, when I was 19, I had been having a shower in the family bathroom at the Neills' house. Although the rule in the Neill house was not to lock the bathroom door, I used to lock the door because I wanted my privacy. That day, I had just stepped out of the shower and was naked when the door suddenly opened and Bill walked in. I don't know how Bill unlocked the door. I guess that he may have unlocked it with a knife or even his fingernail. I know that Bill didn't walk in by accident because of the way he quickly opened the door, closed it again behind him and stood against it, trapping me inside.

Bill then told me, 'Sit on the floor and open your legs.' I didn't want to do what he was asking but his manner was very threatening. I felt humiliated and scared." Angus, would you be able to read the next?

MR STEWART:

I felt humiliated and scared. Bill then started fondling me and put his finger in my vagina. He then told me to stand up and he proceeded to perform oral sex on me. I felt disgusted and uncomfortable. I knew that sex was something that people were meant to enjoy and I remember thinking that there must be something wrong with me because I didn't like what was happening.

The next day I was lying in bed in my room feeling sick when Bill came into the room. He said to me, "Did you like it?". I assumed he was referring to the bathroom incident. Pointing at his crotch he said to me, "It's better with this in." I asked him to leave and he did. Once he had left the room, I got up, packed my bags, and went home to my parents' farm without saying goodbye to [BCE].

In or around early 1987, I remember telling [BCE] that I had been seeing a couple of boys. Not long after I told her that, [BCE] told me that Bill wanted to talk to me about my relationship with boys. She told me to meet Bill at the Neill family house. Even though the meeting was at his house, I understood that I was being asked to see Bill in his capacity as an elder and that I had to do as I was told. I would never have chosen to speak to Bill about my relationships with boys otherwise.

When I got to his house, Bill asked me to wait in [BCE]'s room. He came into the room and asked me: "Can you show me your boobs?" Although I had come to expect this behaviour from Bill, I remember feeling shocked that he was asking me this. I remember that I let him look down my top. I don't know why I did what he asked. Looking back, I feel as though he could control me. Bill then said to me something like: "Can you make yourself orgasm?" I said "Yes" and he replied to me, "I thought so, you dirty bitch."

Bill was an elder for as long as I knew him. I wasn't able to see at the time, but everything he did to me was in complete disregard of all the Jehovah's Witness rules, some of which he preached, about sex and association between Brothers and Sisters.

In 1989, I told my now husband, [BCC], that Bill used to kiss me. I dreaded telling him and I couldn't bring myself to tell him any more detail about what happened than this. When I told him, he started asking me questions about what exactly had happened, and I said to him, "Don't worry, it's all over now." I didn't want to say anything more because I was scared that [BCC] would tell someone.

Later, in or around 1991, a Jehovah's Witness acquaintance of mine, [BCF], told me that she had been abused by her uncle and that she had tried to commit suicide. I told her what happened to me but I didn't mention any names. Somehow she guessed that I was talking about Bill. I freaked out and asked her not to tell anyone.

THE WITNESS: "I guess that [BCF] did tell others in the congregation as, a week or so later, a young elder from the congregation called Max Horley came to speak to me. Initially, I had no idea why he had come to see me, but he eventually revealed that he had come to talk to me about Bill and me. When he said this, I burst into tears.

I told Max about most of what Bill had done but I couldn't mention the final bathroom incident when Bill had had oral sex with me. I was so ashamed. Max was very kind and supportive. He told me that what had happened was not my fault and that I shouldn't blame myself.

Soon after, Max arranged a meeting with Bill, [BCC] and me at my house. I don't remember anyone explaining the purpose of the meeting to me. At that meeting, Max said to me, 'I believe Bill asked you if you wanted to see his penis, and you said no.' I assumed that he was referring to the incident in the bedroom the morning after Bill had oral sex with me in the bathroom, even though I had not told him about this incident myself. Bill looked at me and said, 'Don't you think I was joking?' And I said, 'I don't know.' I didn't understand why someone would joke about that sort of thing. Nobody at the meeting said anything about Bill's comment. I still don't understand why no-one at the meeting told Bill that you shouldn't joke about those sorts of things.

I did not talk about the incident in the bathroom at the first meeting. I didn't feel comfortable talking while Bill was in the room.

After that first meeting, I felt like there was a lot of stuff I had been unable to say in front of Bill. I decided to go to Max's house after the meeting to clarify things. As a result of our conversation at his house, Max organised a second meeting at my house.

The second meeting was attended by Max Horley, Doug Jackson, Bill, my husband [BCC], and me. Doug Jackson was the circuit overseer for the Narrogin congregation. Max told me this meeting was a "Committee meeting". I was not aware at the time what the purpose of the meeting was or why Doug Jackson was attending.

During the committee meeting, Bill was defensive. He said that I used to wear revealing clothing. I remember that Doug Jackson made it quite clear to both of us that the church has never allowed the victim's clothing as an excuse.

Throughout the meeting, Bill looked at me defiantly. I felt like he was challenging me to tell the full story of what he had done. I felt uncomfortable and could not bring myself to tell the elders everything that had happened. I felt like I was still Bill's victim. I was still so scared of saying anything that would get me or Bill into trouble.

I remember that at one point in the meeting, Max said to me, 'Is there anything else you wish to tell us?' I remember looking across the room at Bill and saying 'No'. It was already very hard to talk about sex in a room full of men. It was especially hard to talk about what Bill had done to me while he was sitting there in front of me. I didn't feel like it was a safe environment and I was scared of what the consequences would be if I told the whole truth. Perhaps if a Sister who I was comfortable with had been there too, it might have been easier.

At the end of the meeting, the elders asked Bill to say something to me, so he said, 'I'm sorry.' I took that to mean that he was sorry for everything that had happened, although his demeanour was not in any way remorseful and I could tell that he wasn't sorry.

Nobody explained to me what the outcome of the meeting was or if anything would happen to Bill as a result of what I had reported.

After the meeting, Doug Jackson gave me a magazine article that had been published by The Watchtower a few years before. He encouraged me to read through it. The article was about child sexual abuse. At the time, I don't think I had thought of what had happened to me as child sexual abuse, because Bill hadn't had sex with me. But reading that article made me realise that what happened to me was child sexual abuse.

I don't remember discussing contacting the police with anybody at that time either before or after the committee meeting.

Not long after the committee meeting, Bronwyn Neill rang me and asked me about my conversation with [BCF]. I said to Bronwyn, '[BCF] told me that she had been abused by her uncle and I told [BCF] what had happened to me.' Bronwyn said to me, 'Bill didn't abuse you.' I got scared, so I said to Bronwyn, 'I didn't actually say that.' What I told Bronwyn was true. I had never actually used the word 'abuse' when I spoke to [BCF] or during my discussions with elders as I hadn't understood at the time that I had been abused.

As soon as I got off the phone to Bronwyn, I rang Max Horley to tell him about what Bronwyn had said to me. He told me that he would sort it out. Later that day, Max rang me back and said to me, '[BCB], the Neills have asked that you not tell any more people about Bill out of respect for the family.' I respected Max and did as I was told. I didn't tell anyone else about what had happened to me, not even my best friend at the time. Thinking back, I now see that I was being asked to respect the man who had done those things to me, but nobody was offering me any respect or proper support.

A few weeks after the committee meeting, the elders announced to the congregation that Bill had stepped down as an elder. I was sitting in the congregation at the time. The elders did not announce to the congregation why Bill was standing down. Although I understood the reasons for privacy, I have since felt that people in the congregation should have been warned about someone like Bill.

After the committee meeting, I don't recall being offered any support by Doug Jackson or Max Horley, though it's possible that they may have said something to me. Overall, however, I remember that I didn't feel supported. No-one in the congregation talked to me about what had happened to me, and Bill's wife, Bronwyn, ignored me for some time. This was especially hard because I loved Bronwyn like a mother.

Even though I had reported what Bill had done, I was still expected to attend book study meetings that were being held at the Neills' house. I continued to see Bill several times a week at congregational meetings and at annual district conventions. Everything just seemed to carry on as normal, but I felt physically sick every time I saw Bill.

I continued to attend the Narrogin congregation for three more years and continued to see Bill at meetings during this period. In 1994, I moved out of the area and started attending a different Jehovah's Witness congregation.

I understand that Bill has since died, although I don't know when.

I still consider myself to be a Jehovah's Witness and, until very recently, attended meetings at the [REDACTED] congregation in Western Australia.

In or around December 2012, I provided a written statement to two elders in the [REDACTED] congregation. Their names are Joe Bello and David Wood. The statement summarised Bill's sexual abuse of me. I provided Joe and David with my statement as I thought that others might have also been abused by Bill and that my statement might be able to help support their cases.

In or around July 2014, Joe Bello came to visit [BCC] and me at my house on an unrelated matter. During this visit, I raised the subject of Bill's sexual abuse of me and told Joe that I was considering reporting my story to the Royal Commission.

Around the same time, Joe Bello rang and had a conversation with [BCC] on the phone. During the conversation, Joe said to [BCC], 'You should ask [BCB] if she really wants to drag Jehovah's name through the mud.' When [BCC] told me what Joe had said, I felt upset. It was not me that gave Jehovah a bad name; it was Bill.

For some time after the visit from Joe Bello I was quite upset. My mother encouraged me to write down my feelings, so I wrote a note recording my feelings at the time about Bill's sexual abuse of me, the response of the elders at Narrogin congregation, the response of the elders at the [REDACTED] congregation, and my reasons for reporting my story to the Royal Commission. Some time after, my mother handed this note to David Wood, one of the elders in the [REDACTED] congregation. The handwritten note is at WAT.0001.002.0497.

In around September 2014, I contacted the Royal Commission and reported my story. I have huge feelings of guilt about coming forward with my story. I feel as though I am betraying the Jehovah's Witnesses and bringing reproach on to them. When I speak to officers at the Royal Commission, my chest gets tight, I have heart palpitations, and I have difficulty breathing because of my anxiety about the betrayal.

Since reporting my story to the Royal Commission, I have stopped attending meetings at [REDACTED] congregation. I am sad about this, because it means that I no longer see a lot of my friends from the congregation. Telling my story to the Royal Commission has brought up a lot of feelings of anger in relation to what Bill did to me and the way I have been treated by the Jehovah's Witnesses.

I've spent too many years suffering over this whole situation. It has held me back from living a normal life and I really want to move on.

The abuse definitely changed who I was. It destroyed my confidence and my self-esteem. Even though the sexual abuse stopped when I was 19, I have continued to feel like Bill's victim well into my adult life.

I continued to keep Bill's sexual abuse of me a secret for a long time. Over the years of our marriage I have told [BCC] more detail of what happened with Bill. It wasn't until just before my nervous breakdown" - about 12 years ago - "that I finally confided fully in some of my friends. Once I started talking about what happened, it was like opening a can of worms and I became very ill. I was lucky to get help from a wonderful psychiatrist.

I've had a lot of therapy to address what Bill did to me, but I still have trouble feeling a sense of closure about what happened. I still feel that Bill was never made to face any consequences for what he did to me.

I feel like Bill's position as an elder contributed to his power over me. I now think that I was brainwashed into thinking that speaking to people outside the church or to the 'worldly' people would bring reproach upon Jehovah's name. I think that had I been allowed to speak to other non-Jehovah's Witness children at school, maybe someone might have reported what happened to me and I wouldn't have become the victim that I feel I am now.

As Bill is now dead, I don't have to worry about seeing him at Jehovah's Witness conventions any more. I still struggle with my thoughts and feelings about the abuse, but I have an amazing group of 'spiritual' sisters and friends, as well as my lovely husband, [BCC], and my two beautiful daughters.

I would like to see a number of things change in the way that the Jehovah's Witnesses deal with child sexual abuse. First of all, I would like the Jehovah's Witnesses to take allegations of child abuse more seriously and to report them to the police.

I also think that those victims that are brave enough to report to elders should be properly supported and protected. I definitely did not feel protected when I disclosed my abuse to Max Horley and Doug Jackson in 1991. I found the experience of reporting my abuse to a room full of men, including the man who had abused me, very distressing.

I have never been offered any compensation by the Jehovah's Witnesses for what happened to me. I have never made any claim for compensation because I didn't think that I would be entitled to any. I am worried about what others will think of me asking for compensation. I know that many people have been through worse suffering than me in their lives. I don't want more than I'm entitled to. I only want to be treated fairly as a victim of abuse that was perpetrated by a member of the Jehovah's Witnesses. I just want fair and just compensation for what Bill did."

MR STEWART: Q. I do have a few questions I want to ask by way of clarification or elaboration.

You speak in paragraph 12 of your statement - and perhaps that can come up on the screen - about meetings being held, including at someone's house. Were those meetings organised by the elders?
A. Yes.

Q. After Bill Neill had stood down - after the elders had met with you and so on, and he stood down, you say in paragraph 16 that you continued to attend meetings at the Neills' home. Did he, as presiding overseer - who organised those meetings, because he was no longer an elder? Were those meetings organised by --
A. They must have been organised by Max Horley.

Q. So those types of meetings, were they always organised by the elders --
A. Yes.

Q. -- in the congregation?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you ask not to have to continue attending meetings at the Neills' home?
A. I didn't - did I ask? I did ask to change book study groups, that's right. I asked to go to the one at the hall.

Q. Was that so that you did not have to attend at the Neills' home?
A. Yes, I didn't want to, because Bronwyn wasn't talking to me, and I didn't want to see Bill in their house.

Q. And who did you ask that of?
A. I don't remember, but maybe I spoke to my mum, maybe I asked Max. [BCC] said maybe I spoke to Max. I don't remember.

Q. All right. That's fine. You don't remember. Do you remember what response you got?
A. I was just told that I had to go there.

Q. If we scroll up to paragraph 17 on the statement, you say in the last sentence that you remember being discouraged from forming friendships with other children who were not Jehovah's Witnesses. This is when you were still at school?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you have an understanding of why you were discouraged from forming such friendships or what was said to be the teaching behind that?
A. There were a couple of scriptures. One was "bad association spoils useful habits", and the other one was that Jesus said that we are no part of this world, so - I had friends at school, they were nice girls. But we were just friends at school, not outside of school.

Q. And in what you were taught as a young girl growing up in the Jehovah's Witness Church, were you taught anything about the police or how to view or understand the police and their role?
A. No, I don't remember anything specifically being said about the police.

Q. You say in paragraph 30, at the end of 1983, having completed year 10, you left high school. Why did you leave high school at that time?
A. I - the Neills didn't encourage further education, and they encouraged us to either get married and have children or to pioneer, which is preach full time, and so I didn't really consider doing TAE, as it was in those days - didn't consider going to university; didn't - it wasn't a consideration for me. And so I was going to leave after year 10, but my dad said, "You don't have any qualifications to get a job," so he encouraged me to do a year 11 vocational business course, which was actually part of the school. And I'm glad he did that, because then I was able to get a good job.

Q. And your father was not part of the Jehovah's Witness Church; is that right?
A. No.

Q. And your experience of what the Neills told you - and presumably their daughters - about leaving school, was that something you experienced in other families in the Jehovah's Witness Church?
A. It just wasn't - university wasn't really talked about as an option. Most people just left after year 10 and got a job.

Q. If we could look at your paragraph 73, you say that after you contacted the Royal Commission and reported your story, you had huge feelings of guilt about coming forward with the story, and you felt as though you were betraying the Jehovah's Witnesses in doing so. Are you able to identify what is the source of that guilt? Why do you feel that it is a betrayal?
A. Because it's - it's an ugly story and it doesn't portray them in a very good light, like the people who dealt with my - the brothers who dealt with my situation, and I feel like I'm - I do feel like I'm dragging Jehovah's name through the mud.

Q. You have given in your statement some details of the impact that the abuse has had on your health. Is there anything you would like to add in relation to that or anything you would like the brothers to know about the effect of child sexual abuse?
A. Yes, I've been - when I had my breakdown - I was not well before that, I was going downhill for a long time before that. I was getting paranoid. I was thinking that - I was thinking that people at school - when I dropped the kids off at school, I was thinking that they were all talking about me and judging me. I was thinking that the neighbours were all judging me, talking about me. One morning, the lawnmower man came to mow the lawns and I thought he was going around to all the doors and windows and deliberately trying to scare me, and I went into the games room with the kids and hid behind the doll's house and I said to them, "Don't let him see me", and they were laughing and going "What's wrong with you mummy?" And I think I scared them a little bit, or they just thought I was being strange. And when I told my friend about what happened to me, because she - she knew, she guessed, that this is - when - the reason why I had my breakdown was because I told my close friend a little bit about what happened, and she knew who it was, and just - I got scared that it was all going to come out and everyone was going to know about it and it really scared me, and the next couple of weeks I lost 15 kilos because I was so anxious. I was really sick. I couldn't get out of bed. I had no energy. I was hyperventilating. I was breathing into a paper bag all day long, and one day - my dad was staying with me every day. They were probably scared for me. And he said, "Have you eaten anything today?" And I said "No", and he said, "You should eat something." So he made me a piece of toast and I was chewing it and chewing it, and I ended up having to spit it out because I had no saliva in my mouth, and thank goodness I ended up going to the psychiatrist and he put me on anti-depressants and - otherwise, I don't know what I would have done. I just wanted to go to sleep and not wake up. And I thought about taking sleeping pills, but - I just kept thinking about my husband and my kids and I couldn't do it to them.

MR STEWART: Thank you. I've no further questions, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: Does anyone else have any questions?

MR COYNE: No, your Honour.

MS GALLAGHER: I do, your Honour, if the Commission pleases.

<EXAMINATION BY MS GALLAGHER:

MS GALLAGHER: Q. [BCB], obviously I represent you before the Commission. If I could take you to your initial complaint, if you like, to [BCF]. You talk about it at paragraph 48 of your statement. She had indicated to you that she had suffered abuse from her uncle?
A. Yes.

Q. Then you told her, as you note in your statement, that something had happened to you. Is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you give her any details - not about the perpetrator, but about what had happened to you?
A. A little bit. Like I know I said in my statement that I told her what happened to me, but I didn't tell her everything that happened to me. I just said - I said, "Something similar happened to me."

Q. Did she give you the specifics of her abuse?
A. Not really - oh, it was a long time ago. I can't really remember exactly.

Q. When you say "something similar happened to me" --
A. Yes.

Q. -- did you tell her any more about what had happened to you?
A. Yes, I - well, I told her about how my friend's father had - used to stick his tongue in my mouth when he kissed me and that he came into the bathroom and perved at me. I think that might have been all that I spoke to her about. Oh, I did tell her about him coming into my room and wanting to show me his penis.

Q. Is the next thing that you can recall, just in relation to how these meetings came about with Max Horley and Doug Jackson and Bill Neill - is it the case that you were out preaching --
A. Yes.

Q. -- and Max drove up to you?
A. He drove up to me, yes. I was out in preaching work, and he drove up to me and said, "Can I come and visit you this afternoon?" And he wanted to visit my husband and I.

Q. Who were you with at the time, if anybody?
A. I think I was with my husband.

Q. Do you remember what you said to him when he asked, "Can I come and visit?"
A. Yes, I said he could come round that afternoon, yes.

Q. And did Max come alone to your home on that occasion?
A. Yes, yes, the first time.

Q. Do you remember what he said to you?
A. Yes, he started talking about, "If you told a friend something, some information that was quite serious, and they said you should tell the elders and you didn't" - hold on. I can't remember exactly how he said it.

Q. Did you eventually work out what he was talking about?
A. Yes, he was trying to - he was trying to - I think he was trying to explain that [BCF] was obviously feeling bad because she had told someone about what I had said and was worried about my reaction.

Q. And is it the case that you realised that he was talking about --
A. That's when I realised --

Q. -- the contact with Bill Neill?
A. -- that [BCF] had told somebody about what I had told her.

Q. And you burst into tears at that time?
A. Yes, yes.

Q. The next thing you recall, is it the case, is that there was a meeting with Max present; is that right, Doug Jackson and --
A. No, the next one was - the next meeting was Max and Bill and my husband and I.

Q. So Max and Bill and your husband and yourself?
A. Yes.

Q. So two elders were present?
A. Yes.

Q. But one of them was your abuser?
A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. And was that at your home?
A. That was in my lounge room.

Q. You were 22 at the time; is that right?
A. Yes, I think I was 22, yes. We had just been married for a couple of years.

Q. And you were both in the faith; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. You remain in the faith; is that right?
A. I'm taking a break at the moment.

Q. But at the time, you certainly, is it the case, didn't feel that you could question the process of what was occurring?
A. I was just doing as I was told.

Q. When you say you were just doing as you were told, do you mean from Max Horley?
A. Yes. I assumed that he knew the correct procedure, and I was just going along with what he said, because I respected him.

Q. Were you told by Max that if there had been indecent contact between you and Bill, that you could go to the police?
A. No.

Q. That you should go to the police?
A. No.

Q. That it was criminal behaviour --
A. No.

Q. -- that you were alleging?
A. No.

Q. When Bill Neill attended with Max, were you pressed for detail as to what Bill had done to you?
A. Yes, Max said, "I believe that Bill" - in the course of whatever they were asking me, he said, "I believe that Bill asked you if you wanted to see his penis." And I said

"Yes", and then Bill said - looked at me and said, "Do you think I was joking?" And I said, "I don't know."

Q. Did you feel at the time that you were really being invited to question your own belief in what had happened?
A. Yes. I was - I was questioning whether I misunderstood.

Q. The next meeting was also at your home; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. And present was Doug Jackson and Max Horley and Bill again?
A. Yes.

Q. Looking back on it now, how do you feel about the appropriateness of the first meeting - Max coming with Bill, your abuser, to your home?
A. I felt very, very uncomfortable. I couldn't say anything about what really happened, with him there, because I felt like he still had control over me in what I said, and that whatever I said would be - he would be cross-examining me and saying that it was my word against his.

Q. So when you say "he" would be cross-examining, you meant your abuser?
A. Bill.

Q. Bill Neill?
A. Yes.

Q. You were fearful of that, and, indeed, it did occur; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. In relation to the second meeting, you describe in your statement that Bill was defensive and, I think you describe, defiant as well?
A. Yes.

Q. Spoke about you wearing revealing clothing?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you feel the same way, in the sense that your version, your credibility, was being tested?
A. Yes, definitely.

Q. And that you weren't being supported in your version of events?
A. Yes. I didn't feel supported at all.

Q. Did you understand what the process was?
A. No.

Q. Did you understand why this was occurring, why these people were attending your home and violating your space, if you like, in relation to this inquiry?
A. I didn't question their methods, because I thought they would know the correct procedure, because they were the authority in the church, in the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Q. And did you understand it was an inquiry as to whether or not Bill should remain an elder? Was that ever explained to you?
A. Not really. I guess I still just thought it was my word against his and that they were just trying to find out what happened.

Q. Having been raised from 10 in the faith of Jehovah's Witnesses, did you understand the rules, if you like, about when someone makes an accusation against another, that is --
A. With minor incidents, you approach the person and try to sort it out with each other, if you can. If you can't, you - I know now that you can talk to two trusted friends, two trusted sisters in the congregation. I didn't understand that at the time, though. I don't know whether that was ever a rule?

Q. When I say "a rule", do you understand that reliance upon biblical teaching is noted for this, that for someone to be found guilty within the church of wrongdoing, or within the faith, they have to either have confessed or that there be two or more witnesses?
A. I don't - I didn't know any kind of - I didn't know that then.

Q. Can I ask you this: did you feel, when the two elders were at your home at the second meeting and Max was present with Doug and Bill - did you feel in control of the process?
A. No.

Q. Did you feel supported?
A. No, I didn't feel supported. I guess in a way I was trying to control it, because I didn't tell the full story.

Q. Yes. Do you feel now that you should have been encouraged at that time to go to the police?
A. Yes.

Q. Do you have an understanding now that Bill Neill's conduct towards you in relation to the tongue kissing is at least assaults of an indecent kind?
A. Yes.

Q. And that the incident in the bathroom where you were penetrated and oral sex performed upon you were arguably incidents of sexual intercourse without consent?
A. Yes.

Q. Just in relation to the process that took place, do you think you should have been confronted by your abuser at the time, in your own home?
A. No.

Q. And do you think there should have been females involved?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you feel, during the process, particularly when Bronwyn phoned you - someone that you loved and cared about, and indicated to you that Bill hadn't abused you - you have given evidence about phoning Max and telling him about that, and then Max calling you back and saying, "Please stop talking about this", effectively, out of respect for --
A. The family.

Q. -- the Neill family - did you feel that that was the emphasis, respect for the Neill family?
A. At the time, I just did as I was told.

Q. In relation to the issue of compensation, it's the case that you have spent seven years in therapy with a psychiatrist. You are no longer seeing a psychiatrist at the moment; is that right?
A. No.

Q. You are currently on antidepressants, you remain on antidepressants?

A. Yes.

Q. You are currently undergoing neuro-emotional therapy with a chiropractor?
A. Yes.

Q. All of those things of course cost you money; correct?
A. Yes.

Q. And you would welcome compensation, if it were offered by the Faith; is that right?
A. I would, yes.

Q. Is it the case that you are also grateful to the Royal Commission?
A. Absolutely. Absolutely.

MS GALLAGHER: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, thank you so much.

THE CHAIR: Does anyone else have any questions? .

MR COYNE: No, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: Thank you, [BCB]. Thank you for coming in and telling us your story. You are formally excused.

<THE WITNESS WITHDREW

MR STEWART: The next witness, your Honour, will be Max Horley.

THE CHAIR: Do you have any better copies of Mr Horley's statement? The ones we have are quite hard to read.

MR STEWART: That is being arranged, I am told, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: Mr Horley, it's necessary for you to be sworn. Will you take an oath on the Bible or an affirmation?

MR HORLEY: An oath on the Bible, thank you.

<MAXWELL FREDERICK HORLEY, sworn: [12.40pm]

<EXAMINATION BY MR STEWART:

MR STEWART: Would your Honour like me to wait until we have copies --

THE CHAIR: No, no, keep going.

MR STEWART: Q. Mr Horley, do you have before you a copy of your statement?

THE CHAIR: I think we need to identify him first.

MR STEWART: Q. What are your full names, Mr Horley?
A. Full name, Maxwell Frederick Horley.

Q. Do you have a copy of your statement dated 7 July 2015 before you?
A. Yes.

Q. Are there any corrections or amendments you would like to make to that statement?
A. No, I think it's complete.

Q. Do you confirm the statement as true and correct?
A. Yes.

MR STEWART: I tender the statement.

THE CHAIR: It will become exhibit 29-002.

EXHIBIT #29-002 STATEMENT OF MAXWELL FREDERICK HORLEY DATED 07/07/2015

MR STEWART: Q. You have been a Jehovah's Witness essentially your whole life; is that right?
A. That's correct.

Q. You have been a Dawesville congregation elder since November 2012, and you served there as secretary; is that right?
A. That's correct, yes.

Q. You were appointed an elder in the Narrogin congregation in 1988 and you served there as secretary too; is that right?

A. Yes. That's correct, yes.

Q. And there was only one other elder there at that time, and that was Bill Neill?
A. When I was first appointed there were two elders. One was quite elderly and I think he then moved back to Perth. So that left Bill and I. Later on, there were two other elders appointed, and we had a situation arose where they - one was stood down and one moved away, so that left Bill and I at the time that this incident occurred.

Q. And the first elderly elder that you referred to, who moved back to Perth, was that Jack Shaylor?
A. That's correct.

Q. When Bill Neill was stood down in 1992, you became the presiding overseer; is that right?
A. That's correct, yes.

Q. Speaking generally now, but in your experience, as secretary of a congregation, what files or records do you keep?
A. We keep copies of the letters that are sent from the branch; we keep publisher record cards that report all their time spent in the ministry, collate that information each month and send the details to the branch; we write letters when someone moves to another congregation, send a letter of introduction along with that. We also receive letters from other congregations when publishers move in. We keep records of committee cases that are held, judicial committee cases and things like that, of a sensitive nature, are kept on file, too, in case we need to refer back to them at a later time. But those are usually only seen by the ones acting on that committee at the time.

Q. Is there a file or a record for each member of the congregation?
A. No, only the publisher record card, which details how much time they've spent in the ministry each month.

Q. In respect of the files of a sensitive nature or records of a sensitive nature that you describe following committee hearings, judicial committee hearings, and so on, for how long are those retained?
A. I know we've had some information recently that after a certain period of time they are destroyed. But ones involving this particular type of case are supposed to be kept indefinitely.

Q. And who has access to those records?
A. If it's a judicial case, then only the committee members that served on that committee, I understand, have access to go into that. They are all kept in the same place, but in the congregation I serve in now, all of the elders have access to the congregation file if they need to refer back to some of the letters that are on there or other reports, and so on.

Q. And what information or records are passed on to the branch office?
A. The report each month for how much ministry is conducted by the congregation is compiled, and that is sent each month. Each year there is information logged about different activities that the congregation - how many publishers there are, how many unbaptised publishers, and so on. That's just a brief overview that's also sent to the branch. If we need - if they request information, then we might need to send a letter to them requesting that information; and sometimes for clarification of information we might contact them in that way.

Q. I gather from the documents I've seen that the congregation elders will also report to the branch on the outcome of judicial committee hearings?
A. Oh, that's correct, sorry, yes. Yes.

Q. If we could have a look at paragraph 2.2 of your statement, on page 2, you will see in the last line you mention victims being encouraged to report abuse. Are we to understand that as reports to the elders; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. Also, in 2.3, in the last sentence, you say:

The relevant Bible principles make it clear that failure to report another's wrongdoing can make one responsible before God, and this is emphasised to the congregation.

I take it again that the reference there to reporting another's wrongdoing is the report to an elder?
A. Yes, in Leviticus, those who become aware of a wrongdoing, not actually having done it themselves, but if they hear of it, then they report it to the elders so that if the person isn't forthcoming, then the elders can step in and handle it.

Q. So these references in these paragraphs to reporting - that's not reporting to the secular authorities?
A. No, it is just to the elders at that stage.

Q. Now, is it the expectation that a member of the church must report any other member's wrongdoing to the elders, or is it only particular types of wrongdoing?
A. The encouragement is, depending on the seriousness of it, I guess, too, that they go to the person that has committed the wrongdoing and encourage them to go to the elders first, and basically making a proviso that if they don't, then the person who has become aware of it will approach the elders and let them know of it. Does that make myself clear enough?

Q. So I can understand that in respect of, say, less-serious issues that arise between people. Are there particular kinds of transgressions or wrongdoing, or sins as I understand you would call it, that must be reported to the elders?
A. Sins that we would have brought to the elders' attention more are of the serious nature - things that could result in a judicial committee case being formed, so matters of a sexual nature and things like that.

Other matters, where it's just someone is upset at somebody, we would encourage them to go ahead and try and sort that problem out themselves. If it became worse and eventually the elders were called in to try and arbitrate, or whatever - but normally following the Bible principles, they try to work those situations out themselves.

Q. Can you assist by explaining where the line is drawn or how the line is drawn between what is of a more serious nature requiring reporting and what isn't?
A. Yes, the more serious-nature are things set out in the scriptures that could result in someone being removed from the congregation if they are unrepentant. So sexual immorality and all the stages and things that that covers - homosexuality, bestiality, all of those sorts of things.

Q. And that would include child sexual abuse?
A. Absolutely, yes.

Q. And those things are the ones, I take it, that are set out in the handbooks?
A. Yes, how we go about instituting the protocol and handling of those aspects, yes.

Q. Turning to the case specifically of [BCB], and perhaps we can have up on the screen paragraph 49 of [BCB]'s statement, you will see that [BCB] has said that you asked to speak to her on the basis of information you had received. Do you recall or remember the person [BCF] who is referred to there? That is a friend of hers to whom she had spoken. The first name of that person, which we are avoiding saying, should be on a list in front of you?
A. Yes. I remember, but I don't remember her coming to see me.

Q. Do you remember how you first got to hear of these issues that [BCB] raised in relation to Bill Neill?
A. From my recollection, it was [BCB] and [BCC] that came to see me at my home and tell me about the allegations.

Q. When you say from your recollection, you seem somewhat hesitant about that. Is that because of the passage of time?
A. Yes, yes.

THE CHAIR: Q. Mr Horley, this allegation, I take it, when it came to you, you would have seen as a serious one?
A. Absolutely. It was a huge breach of trust, your Honour.

Q. As a consequence, I assume it would have stood out for you at the time as something unusual?
A. At the time it was something that I hadn't dealt with before and, yes, it was a very serious nature. I took it as a huge breach of trust, not only for the person involved but for the whole congregation. It would have repercussions that would flow through.

Q. The matter was reported to you because you were in a position of responsibility?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you take any notes?
A. No, I didn't.

Q. Can you help us --

A. I may have done at the time, I'm sorry, but --

Q. You may have done?
A. I may have.

Q. Where are they now?
A. They would have been destroyed.

Q. Why?
A. We don't like to have any notes outside of what's kept on file in the congregation.

Q. Why don't you like to have notes of a serious allegation?
A. There are brief notes kept in the file, but all other notes are destroyed.

Q. Why is that?
A. I guess it's because we don't want them to fall into the wrong hands and other people to find them and they go through them.

Q. What are the "wrong hands"?
A. Well, we don't want our wives knowing what our stuff - what sort of things we are dealing with; we don't want other people in the congregation coming across that information.

Q. So you want to keep it secret to the elders; is that what it amounts to?
A. I don't know about "secret", but we want to try and limit the amount of people that have to have a look at that information, yes.

Q. And why is it that you want to limit the people who will have access to the information?
A. Just to protect them, I guess. We don't --

Q. Protect who?
A. Protect the person that's involved in it and the rest of the congregation, so that they don't have to know these - I don't know, it's just - it's the protocol that we've had and so we've just followed that information, yes.

Q. And would you do the same thing today if someone came and reported to you a serious allegation of sexual assault? Would you destroy any notes?

A. Yes, that's our practice.

Q. What about telling other authorities - are you aware of your obligations if someone tells you of a serious allegation of sexual assault?
A. We - if we have any hesitation, we contact the branch for advice on how we should proceed legally and scripturally. We don't attend - we don't report it to the police; I think we encourage them to do that, but we give them the assistance to do that if they need that.

Q. How do you encourage people to report to the police?
A. My understanding is a little bit unclear, because I've never had to do it, so I'm not fully aware on the process, but if it did come to me, I would be just saying, "Look, this is a matter that you need to talk to the police about, or the legal authorities, and pursue it that way."

Q. The allegation that came to you you accepted was serious. Have you, in your time as an elder, had any other people come to you to report a serious allegation of a sexual nature?
A. Not of sexual assault, but generally misconduct on their own part or someone that they know of.

Q. What do you mean by "misconduct"?
A. Well, if someone has committed immorality with somebody else, then that has been brought to my attention, either by the person that has done it, in the way of confession, or it may be that they have heard about it and brought it to my attention and we have investigated it and handled it that way.

THE CHAIR: Yes, Mr Stewart.

MR STEWART: Q. You said a moment ago to his Honour, Mr Horley, in relation to reporting to the police, that you would say to the person, "Look, this is a matter that you need to talk to the police about, or the legal authorities, and pursue it in that way." Now, what sort of matter would that be? What sort of matter, in your mind, would be one that you would say to someone they must go and report to the police?
A. It would be in the matters of an abuse situation, where someone had been forcibly - something like this instance or probably even worse, or if someone had been raped or, you know, that sort of a matter, where police proceedings would be needed.

Q. In this particular case, what were you told initially? You say you spoke with [BCB] and her husband. What was reported to you?
A. That the elder concerned had acted inappropriately whilst she had been staying at his home. From my recollection, it was more to do with the fondling of her breasts, but I think there was also an accusation about him watching her in the shower and - and that's - from the most of my recollection, I think there was some sort of inappropriate kissing of some sort, too, but --

Q. And these events occurred when she was a minor?
A. That's correct. She was staying at his home. She had finished school and was working at a [REDACTED], and because her family lived 45 minutes out of town she would stay with them during the week and go home to her family on the weekends.

Q. And did it occur to you that these were serious allegations that were made?
A. Any breach of trust, and particularly by an elder in that situation, was viewed very seriously.

Q. And that fondling the breasts of a minor, but, indeed, anyone without their consent, would be a crime?
A. I think that occurred to me at the time, and certainly has done since then, but the way that we handle it now is totally different to what we did back then.

Q. We will stick with back then for now.
A. Yes.

Q. And observing someone whilst showering without their consent is a serious allegation, not only within the church's view --
A. Absolutely.

Q. -- but even outside the church?
A. Mmm.

Q. And inappropriate kissing - in other words, by that I take it you mean tongue-kissing?
A. That's what I understand.

Q. Of a minor?

A. Yes.

Q. That's a crime, too. Did you appreciate that at the time?
A. Probably not like I should have done. Well, it shocked me to have that accusation brought to my attention. I knew it wasn't right. I didn't realise it might have been a criminal matter, though.

Q. And did you give any consideration to whether you should report it to the police?
A. I didn't, no.

Q. Did you give any consideration to whether [BCB] should be encouraged to report it to the police?
A. No, I didn't.

MR STEWART: Would this be a convenient time?

THE CHAIR: Very well, we will take the luncheon adjournment.

LUNCHEON ADJOURNMENT

MR STEWART: Your Honour, as I will probably be referring to it during the course of the afternoon, now would be a good time to tender the tender bundle. There should be two volumes at this stage and they can be tendered.

THE CHAIR: The tender bundle will be exhibit 29-003.

EXHIBIT #29-003 TWO-VOLUME TENDER BUNDLE

MR STEWART: Q. You spoke, Mr Horley, about receiving a report from [BCB] and her husband. There was a meeting, too, with you and Bill Neill and [BCB] and her husband where this matter was discussed; is that right?
A. I don't recall that particular meeting, no.

Q. [BCB] has given evidence with regard to that meeting. It's paragraph 51 of [BCB]'s statement. She gave further evidence about it orally earlier.
A. I'm sorry, I don't recall any of that.

Q. You're not saying it didn't happen?
A. No, I'm not saying it didn't happen. I don't recall it happening.

Q. Because it would be in keeping with the practice, wouldn't it, that an accuser must make the accusation to the accused, in the face of the accused; is that right?
A. It would have been done with another elder present. That's why - the only meeting I remember taking place was with Doug Jackson and myself and [BCB] and possibly her husband there and the accused, too.

Q. And Bill Neill as well?
A. Yes.

Q. So there was a meeting, in your memory, too, where [BCB] had to make her allegations to Bill Neill?
A. Yes.

Q. And with you and Mr Jackson present as well, and [BCB]'s husband?
A. I can't be positive that her husband was there, but, yes, that was - that meeting took place.

Q. Because it's a biblical principle for Jehovah's Witnesses, as I understand it, that an accused must be faced by the accuser, or has the right to be faced by the accuser; is that right?

A. That's the way we understood it at that time. Our process has changed slightly now that we - in certain circumstances, and in this case in particular, the accuser, in that situation, would not have to meet accused. They could do that separately.

THE CHAIR: Q. When did the process change?
A. During the 1990s, your Honour.

Q. Do you realise how inappropriate that process is?
A. Having the two meet together?

Q. Yes.
A. I can understand that, yes, and I guess that's why it had to change.

Q. You do understand the position it puts --
A. Absolutely.

Q. -- a young woman in, do you?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you, at the time, reflect on that, when it was happening that way?
A. No, I didn't. I was just following the procedure that we had in place.

MR STEWART: Q. On the question of it changing, which I'll come to in a moment, let's deal with what it was at the time you dealt with it. That was governed by the Pay Attention to Yourselves manual; is that right?
A. I can't recall whether that had been released yet. I had three handbooks prior to that, when I was first appointed as an elder, that we used to refer to, and the ks91 book basically compiled that information and had updates in it as well.

Q. We'll have a look at it. That's in the tender bundle, 29-003 and, in particular, it's at tab 80. Perhaps we can scroll down, and then on to the next page. As you've indicated, that was 1991. It is 1991. So that was applicable from 1991, I take it, and through until when Shepherd the Flock of God was published in 2010, if I'm not mistaken; is that right?
A. That's correct. But even though it's copyrighted 1991, the elder schools weren't all held in 1991, to my understanding. I think our elder school might have been taking place in 1992, after this event had already occurred.

Q. All right. Your inquiry into this was in early 1992, wasn't it?
A. Yes.

Q. Was there any change on this point; in other words, the point of the process of someone who has an accusation having to make it in the presence of the person against whom the accusation was made?
A. I don't believe so, at this stage.

Q. I'd be surprised if there was, because it comes from the Old Testament, doesn't it?
A. To establish, yes.

Q. It comes from Deuteronomy.
A. Okay.

Q. If we have look in tab 80, which we have, the Pay Attention to Yourselves and to all the Flock, and particularly at page 119, which has the Ringtail reference 0051, scroll down so that we have the heading at the top of the page. "Judicial Committee Hearing Procedure", and "After opening with prayer" and so on, the next bold heading, "Present the witnesses one at a time unless the wrongdoer confesses". In the second paragraph it says:

> Accusers should be willing to assume their responsibility, as was required in Israel.

That was the responsibility to face those whom they accused; am I right?
A. That's correct.

Q. I think, Mr Horley, you've got a copy of the New World Translation there with you, because that particular scripture, Deuteronomy, bears having regard to. Deuteronomy 17:6 and 7 says:

> On the testimony of two witnesses or of three witnesses the one who is to die should be put to death. He must not be put to death on the testimony of one witness. The hand of the witnesses should be the first to come against him to put him to death, and the hand of all the people afterward. You must remove what is bad from your midst.

From that, as I understand it, it was taken that the accuser must make the accusation in the face of the accused; is that right?
A. That's the understanding, yes.

Q. Then if we have regard to the next edition of the Elders' Handbook, the current one at tab 120, at page 89, Ringtail reference 0090, and scroll down to the foot of the page:

The chairman should invite the accused to make a personal statement. If the accused contends that he is innocent, the witnesses to the wrongdoing should be presented and their testimony should be given in the presence of the accused. It is best that the witnesses give their testimony in person.

So this is what has applied since 2010. So in the light of that, what is the change of the procedure that you are referring to, Mr Horley, because these documents don't seem to bear it out?
A. These are dealing with judicial committee cases of serious - in matters of serious wrongdoing that could result in removal from the congregation or disfellowshipping. The information or the way that we looked at handling the situation at the time was to establish what actually had taken place, so two elders investigate the matter and establish the facts, and try to decide whether it needs to go to a judicial committee hearing and, in this particular case, we couldn't establish - we didn't have either a confession or witnesses to the events to go to a judicial committee.

Q. You didn't have a second witness?
A. That's right.

Q. I'll come back to that. But dealing with this question --

THE CHAIR: Q. Would it be the same today, if you didn't have a second witness?

A. We would take our - we contact the branch first and follow their advice, but, as I think was brought out in the preamble this morning, that is still the procedure, that we'd have to establish it with two witnesses to be able to take it to a judicial committee hearing.

Q. So if there was an allegation of a rape, and even though you might have formed the view that the complainant was clearly telling the truth, having regard to what she said, if there was no other person to give evidence about the rape, it wouldn't go any further?
A. I would have to seek counsel from the society to handle that situation. I don't know how we would proceed. I've never had to come across that yet.

Q. Do you understand that a great many allegations of sexual assault --
A. Absolutely.

Q. -- are not witnessed by another person?
A. That's right, your Honour.

Q. How does your church handle that situation then?
A. Usually, it would be by interviewing the person and trying to get them to confess to the wrongdoing that had taken place. That's - that's generally been - in the instances I've been involved with, that's the solution that we've had so far. The person has - or we've had more than one witness, actually, to the event, but usually the ones that I've dealt with so far we've had a confession from the wrongdoer and we've been able to proceed to a judicial committee case from that.

Q. Are you saying to us that without that confession it couldn't go to a judicial committee?
A. I think - that's the understanding that I have at the moment, yes.

Q. Do you think that's a good place for the church to end up?
A. Not - not for the people that are bringing the accusations forward. It's a very sad situation for them.

Q. Would the church be accepting of that situation?
A. I'm - again, I'm not aware of what the intricate policies are on that, what we would be advised to do in that situation now. The information we have is that we approach the branch and we take direction from them on how to proceed. Whether that would go to a judicial committee or further investigation or whatever - I've never been in that situation, so I don't know what the advice would be from them.

Q. What about your own perspective, though, on it?
A. Well, I know --

Q. You've been an elder for many years. Do you think it's appropriate for the church to operate in that way?
A. I guess in matters of this nature it would be handled differently from some case where someone is admitting to sexual immorality, particularly when you've got a victim, and in particular a young victim like this, that, yes, it would need to be investigated fully and followed through with, yes.

THE CHAIR: Yes, Mr Stewart.

MR STEWART: Q. Just dealing still with the present situation, requiring a single witness, still on tab 120, which is Shepherd the Flock of God, but at page 72, Ringtail WAT.0003.001.0073 - if we could go back one page, to the previous page, you'll see the heading "Evidence Establishing Wrongdoing", and under that heading it then deals with what evidence is acceptable in order to decide whether a judicial committee should be formed. If we then go to paragraph 39 on WAT.0003.001.0073, it deals with the situation you were just addressing, Mr Horley:

> If the accused denies the accusation ...

And if you go about six or seven lines down, it says:

> If the accuser or the accused is unwilling to meet with the elders or if the accused continues to deny the accusation of a single witness and the wrongdoing is not established, the elders will leave matters in Jehovah's hands.

So the position would seem to be that that is the current position, 2010 and subsequent, that the single witness rule still applies.
A. That's correct.

Q. So to the extent that you said earlier that you thought that the current procedure may be different, that would not be right.
A. I stand corrected. I'd go on what the publication here says, yes.

Q. There's another aspect to the two-witnesses rule, as I understand it, because two references are given. One is in Deuteronomy and the other is in John, where it says if there are two witnesses, then guilt is regarded as established. Is the rule applied in that way, too; in other words, one witness is not enough and two witnesses are conclusive?
A. That's correct.

Q. What happens if there is a situation where there are two witnesses but you have grounds to disbelieve them?
A. To disbelieve them?

Q. Yes.
A. I don't know. I've never come across that. Yeah, interesting.

Q. Your understanding of the origin of this one-witness rule is that passage in Deuteronomy that I looked at earlier; is that right?
A. Going on the information there, it would be one of the references, yes.

Q. We'll ask other people this in due course, obviously from the branch office, but in your understanding, does the church have the flexibility to move from that, to say, "Well, that may have been the case back then, but in the modern world we recognise that the two-witnesses rule is a problem and we will not apply it anymore." Does the church have the flexibility to do that?
A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Because it's written in the scripture?
A. That's what we base our teachings on mainly, yes.

Q. But that same passage that I read you says that the accused [sic] must essentially throw the first stone to kill the accused. I take it you don't do that?
A. No, obviously not.

Q. So what's the distinction? Why flexibility on the one and not on the other?
A. Again, I'd take my advice from the branch on how we would proceed with a situation like that today. At the time we followed the procedures that we had in place, and I haven't had a modern or more modern example of how to proceed in that situation. But looking at what the publication says there, we would follow those directions after the advice of the branch.

Q. Something else that [BCB] says in her testimony - she says she had these meetings but no-one explained to her what the purpose was or how they fitted into any sort of procedure. Do you accept that?
A. I can't recall her questioning it at the time and I don't know exactly what was said in that meeting. It's basically just the allegations that I recall from that meeting.

Q. Do you accept this, at least, that for someone who is feeling vulnerable and struggling to give details of intimate things that have happened to her, that part of the support that might be offered is to ensure that it is explained to her just what process she is engaged in?
A. Yes, and there are support - support things in place to - to help a victim like that. The publications that come out through the 1990s that were available to everyone basically set out what those support practices were, and if she didn't feel comfortable coming to the elders to discuss those things, then it was possible for her to speak to a mature sister in the congregation, confide in her and draw comfort from her. If the mature sister didn't know how to handle the situation she might approach the elders to find direction and be able to help the one that was ailing.

Q. Even if an allegation had come to the elders in that way, via, as you describe it, a mature sister, you would still require the survivor of that abuse to put her allegations to the abuser in the abuser's presence?
A. Again, I think that's where the shepherding books have brought the information, in that they don't have to face the accused nowadays. It's - we can take her information from her and then we speak to the accused separately.

Q. Well, I don't see that in the shepherding book. I showed you the passage which seems to require exactly the opposite. Is there some other passage you wish to refer to?

A. I can't recall where it is offhand, but I thought that was the procedure that I've looked at in the past.

Q. The point is, though, that you do have a procedure, so even if the allegation comes through a mature sister, you then have a procedure to follow to investigate whether to accept those allegations or not; is that right?
A. The provision of her being able to speak to another sister was to provide the comfort after the fact, or to draw - yes, to try and have someone else to speak to her about it other than the elders, if she didn't feel comfortable talking to the elders.

Q. So are you saying in your understanding the elders would not have to speak to the victim herself?
A. No, that's not true. No, we would still have to handle it. If the matter hadn't been handled already, then the elders would have to speak to her and try and establish the facts and speak to the accused --

THE CHAIR: Q. I'm not sure I'm understanding. She speaks to a mature sister, but I think Mr Stewart is asking you whether the process of investigation after that would be the same, and that is, she would have to bring her accusation against the abuser before two elders?
A. That's correct.

Q. And that would be, in that circumstance, two men, the elders --
A. Yes.

Q. -- the alleged abuser and the woman; is that right?
A. My understanding of it is that the accused would not have to be present at that meeting. The two elders would discuss it with the victim, and we would speak to the accused person separately.

Q. But if it was only the woman's allegation, without any eyewitness to it, that would be where it would end unless the --
A. No.

Q. -- abuser --
A. Confessed.

Q. -- confessed. If he didn't confess, that's the end of it?

A. Yes.

Q. That's true today?
A. Yes.

Q. Let's assume that you had an allegation from a 12-year-old girl, say. Would it be the same process?
A. Well, again, I'd have to seek advice from the branch on that to see what our process would be, because the circumstances and all those things are involved in it; we would proceed following their direction.

Q. But I assume that from the manuals, from the written documents, the process, as you would understand it without seeking further advice, would require the 12-year-old girl to speak to two mature men --
A. Yes.

Q. -- to make her allegation?
A. In that case, presuming that her parents weren't the instigators of the case, then they would probably be there as a support for her as well.

Q. What do you mean by "instigators"? Do you mean if her father wasn't the abuser?
A. That's right.

Q. What's the point at which one's parents would not be there?
A. Again, not knowing exactly what the branch would direct, we would follow their direction on what they would advise in each individual circumstance. They may feel if the girl was old enough to make her own decisions and talk openly, that that would - yes. Again, I haven't dealt with a situation like that, so I can't really say.

MR STEWART: Q. Just to clarify, in saying that your understanding of the current procedure is that it would not be required that the victim makes allegations in the accused's presence, that would be in the investigation as to whether or not there should be a judicial committee; is that right?
A. That's my understanding, yes.

Q. Once a judicial committee is formed, once the decision is made to form a judicial committee, then those allegations or accusations would have to be made by the victim in the face of the abuser or the accused; is that right?

A. Yes, if he hadn't confessed to wrongdoing, then the witnesses are brought forward to add weight to the accusations.

Q. And one of the witnesses, obviously, would be the person who had suffered the abuse?
A. That's correct, yes.

Q. Can [BCB]'s statement at paragraphs 52 and 53 be shown, please. Here [BCB] is talking about what she was able to speak about. She says she did not talk about the incident in the bathroom, so one might say that's the most severe of the various incidents:

> I didn't feel comfortable talking while Bill was in the room. After that first meeting I felt that there was a lot of stuff I had been unable to say in front of Bill. I decided to go to Max's house after the meeting to clarify things.

Then there was a second meeting. The point is, do you accept that in the face of the person accused, it may be very difficult for a person who has suffered abuse to say everything that happened to them?
A. Absolutely, yes.

Q. And in front of other men as well, at least two elders; is that right?
A. That's true, yes.

Q. So it's not a process that is necessarily going to come out with the full story, is it?
A. Obviously not at the first meeting and, in this case, that's borne out, but - yep.

Q. If we can look at paragraph 62 of [BCB]'s statement, you'll see that this is dealing with a conversation after, as I understand it, Bill Neill had accepted the recommendation to stand down, and [BCB] says that you called her and said that the Neills had asked that she not tell any more people about Bill out of respect for the family. Do you recall that conversation?
A. Not the way it's presented here. I remember talking to [BCB], and the intent was that we didn't want any more gossip spreading through the congregation, and it wasn't to protect the Neill family; it was try and protect the congregation, keep it so that there wasn't so many people talking about it. We didn't want people in the community talking about it as well. We tried - we wanted to keep it as quiet as possible, not to try to cover it up, or anything like that, but just to try to stop the conversation.

Q. The essence of it, though, was to say to her that she should not talk to anyone else about it?
A. That was in the recommendation to her not to talk to others, as it would have been to the Neill family and anyone else that tried to raise the matter. We would have tried to keep it under wraps or keep it - yeah, try and limit the conversation about Neill.

Q. You appreciate she couldn't have spoken to anybody outside the congregation, could she, because she shouldn't be associating with them?
A. She was still working in the community. She had other people that she would have known, so it was possible to have spoken to other people.

Q. But to speak to them about something as intimate as this would be associating with them in a way beyond what her secular employment required?
A. That's correct, yes.

Q. Therefore, in the eyes of the church, she shouldn't do that; she shouldn't speak to anyone outside the Jehovah's Witnesses about this incident?
A. Whom she chose as associates was still left entirely to her. She may have had close friends. I don't think that's the case here, but, again, it was just to limit the conversation, we would have asked her not to spread things.

Q. Isn't it the case that she's not supposed to have close friends or associates outside of the Jehovah's Witnesses?
A. We discourage them from having close relationships with people outside of Jehovah's Witnesses, but whether they take that advice or not is entirely up to them. We don't police it; we don't go around with a big stick, beating them because they choose to associate with other people.

Q. The point is, though, from your perspective, that she should not be discussing something of this level of intimacy with someone outside of the Jehovah's Witnesses; am I right?
A. That was - that was basically the input, the intent behind that conversation, to try and limit the conversation.

Q. Yes, well, it's slightly different, isn't it? It's directed at the congregation. Are you saying she shouldn't talk about it to anyone else so that it protects the congregation; it doesn't get around within the congregation; is that right?
A. As well, yes. We wanted to limit the spread of the gossip about the --

Q. Do you see that leaves her with no-one she can talk to?
A. No. As I said before, she was able to talk to - if she could find someone that she could communicate and confide in, like a mature woman in the congregation, she was encouraged to do that. If she wanted to speak to the elders - either to myself or something like that - she could do that as well. We didn't - it was entirely just to try and stop the spread of gossip within and outside.

Q. That's the point, isn't it. You're saying two different things. On the one hand you're saying she's told not to tell anyone or speak to anyone; then, on the other hand, you're saying she can speak to someone. Now, which is it?
A. If she chose to speak to another sister, that would have to be done in confidence, so the woman that she spoke to would have to keep her confidence and not talk about it to anyone else either.

Q. Do you understand or appreciate how she felt silenced and unsupported by this instruction or request from you? Do you appreciate that?
A. Yes, I do.

Q. Of course, the teachings of the church are that victims of sexual abuse need to be treated with extreme thoughtfulness and kindness - I quoted from the Pay Attention to Yourselves. You're familiar with that, aren't you?

A. Yes.

Q. So, in this case, would you accept that you didn't meet that standard?
A. I didn't speak to her in a harsh manner. I feel sad if she interpreted it that way. I didn't mean to cut off any support or the feeling that she had support in the congregation and, as I said, the intent was purely to try and limit the conversation around the incident in the congregation and spreading further. But I in no way meant it to come across as harsh or leaving her with nowhere to go or anything like that.

Q. Well, did you offer to her alternatives? Did you offer to her a support person or support people who might assist her through this period?
A. I can't recall doing that at the time, no.

Q. You say that ultimately it was due to lack of clear proof from either party which left you and Doug Jackson unable to assemble a judicial committee and take the matter further. Was this, then, an instance of the application of the two-witnesses rule?
A. Yes.

Q. I'm just looking at how that rule was formulated back then. So that's back to tab 80, the Pay Attention to Yourselves and to All the Flock and, in particular, at page 111, which is Ringtail 43. "What kind of evidence is acceptable?" It sets out there:

> There must be two or three eyewitnesses, not just persons repeating what they have heard; no action can be taken if there is only one witness.

Then there are two biblical origins for that rule. Do you have an appreciation as to why that rule is still applied in the 21st century when availability of evidence and notions of proof have changed and developed?
A. I guess because we still stick to the Bible principles, we try to follow that line of reasoning. I'm trying to remember what the latest publication says on that type of evidence, too, but I still - I think the two or three witnesses is still - still the current teaching in the new book.

Q. In this particular case you've expressed the sympathy and concern you had for [BCB]. You didn't have any reason to disbelieve her, did you?
A. No, I didn't - as shocking as it was.

Q. She was clearly quite distressed?
A. Absolutely, yes.

Q. When you say in your statement that you didn't have clear proof, what sort of clear proof might there be in a case like this?
A. If the accused had said, "Yes, I did this," or, "Yes, I did that," or there was evidence that he had done something else along similar lines, then it would have.

Q. I'll take you to the documents in a minute, but as we'll see from those, it became a situation of you and Mr Jackson recommending to Mr Neill that he stand down; is that right?
A. That was the ultimate outcome, yes.

Q. Stand down as presiding overseer and as elder and, in a sense, be returned to be a normal congregation member - is that how we're to understand it?
A. That's right, yes.

Q. And an announcement was made to the congregation that he was standing down?
A. No. The wording would be that he had been removed as an elder. That terminology of "standing down" was something that was used commonly, but it was - always means they were removed from the congregation. It was not a decision that he made; it was a decision that was made by the elders in harmony with the branch decision as well. That recommendation was sent to the branch. The branch would write back and say, "Yes, that decision is accepted, he's no longer serving as an elder."

Q. So by saying he's removed as an elder, are you saying that necessarily conveys that that's been a decision by others about him, not his own decision?
A. Yes.

Q. So does it then necessarily convey some --
A. Disciplinary action.

Q. -- criticism or sanction of him?

A. Absolutely.

Q. So the congregation would typically be left not knowing --
A. The details.

Q. -- what had happened or what it was?
A. Yes.

Q. Would an announcement of the reasons for this decision not have assisted in protecting members of the congregation, at least knowing what it is that is being said about him?
A. Those that were aware of the situation would have known exactly why he was being removed. Those that weren't would have known that the congregation - that there would have been reasons for it, although not knowing the details. They trust in our decisions then to do that.

Q. Any particular steps taken to protect children in the congregation?
A. Are there now?

Q. No, then, following the decision to remove Bill Neill as an elder?
A. The publications that we have encourage families to discuss that situation with their children and to warn them and to be aware of the dangers. Appreciating that sometimes it's the father that instigates that, that makes it very difficult, but, still, the mother has a role in it as well. And in a situation if we can see a danger area, for example, if another young girl had been going to stay at Bill's place, then we would perhaps speak to the parents about that and warn them that that not be an appropriate place for them to let their daughter visit. We would probably even speak to the accused at that time and say, "It's probably better you don't have that person stay there," too.

Q. How big was the congregation at that time?
A. We had around 90 publishers.

Q. That's a typical size congregation, is it?
A. No. You can get a lot smaller. That one had originally been about 50. It had grown to 90 by that time. Visiting that congregation recently, there were around about 60 publishers at the time. So anywhere between 50 to 100 is fairly average.

Q. Just on the question of establishing what happened, you would accept, I take it, that police have better resources than you, as elders do, to investigate the commission of a crime?
A. And, yes, different training and abilities to do that as well. Yes, yes.

Q. And technology available to them - they have lawful authority, they can do things, they have expertise, you accept all of that?
A. Mmm.

Q. So should you not have at least told [BCB] that she has this option available to her, to go to the police, who may be able to get to the bottom of it?
A. I wasn't aware of the policies and procedures at that time. We hadn't - there was very little information available on whether we should go to the police or anything like that. I have to admit that I didn't consider that at the time.

Q. By policies and procedures, are you talking about internal to the church?
A. Yes.

Q. Because going down to the police station or phoning the police doesn't require a policy or procedure, does it?
A. I guess not, no. If I may say, if she had pursued that, I wouldn't have tried to stop her from doing it. As I said, I just wasn't aware of the situation at that time.

Q. Now, if we can look at the reports that you and Mr Jackson then sent to the branch, it's at tab 70 in the bundle. Have you had the opportunity to see this document in the last days or weeks?
A. Yes.

Q. You have? So you'll see it's dated 1 February 1992, addressed to Watchtower Society, which is the branch office, and on the second page, if we scroll to the end, you'll see that it's signed off by Doug Jackson as the circuit overseer and yourself as the secretary. I take it you signed that, did you?
A. Yes, that's my signature.

Q. And you agreed with what was in it?
A. Yes.

Q. If we go back to the first page, the third paragraph, or perhaps the start:

Dear Brothers,
I am writing in reply to your letter... concerning Brother William Neill now serving as an elder ...

And then it goes on. You will see the paragraph starting:

We also spoke to other brothers and sisters in the congregation who knew about the matter through another sister ...

You'll see it then says:

The sister who has spread the information has since left Narrogin. It appears that a number of brothers know about the matter and unfortunately there may be worldly people who also know but we are not sure.

This distinction between the brothers and the worldly people knowing - what is the relevance of that? Why did it matter if there were worldly people who knew?
A. I guess we didn't want anything to detract about - from the cleanness of the congregation.

Q. Are you concerned about the reputation of the congregation?
A. Yes, and Jehovah's name.

Q. Then the next paragraph:

After interviewing the brothers and sisters and reviewing the scriptures, Our Kingdom Ministry, November 1972, Question Box and the Watchtower November 15, 1977 ... we felt that "uncleanness" had been committed on several occasion but it was not "loose conduct".

Starting with "uncleanness", what was your conception of what uncleanness is, as distinct from loose conduct?

A. In this case, unintentional touching of the breast, as opposed to loose conduct, where it's brazen, a deliberate act.

Q. So you accepted that some acts had occurred, but you felt unable to accept that they were intentional; is that the point you got to?
A. The accused - that was all that he actually owned up to when the accusations were put to him. He said, "I may have touched her breasts when saying goodnight to her," but he didn't say anything about - well, he refused to admit to deliberately touching her.

Q. Then you say:

We felt that Brother Neill could not speak with confidence and we recommended to him that he step down as an elder due to those points which we reviewed with him.

What are you intending to convey there? How are we to understand that, that he was not able to speak with confidence?
A. He no longer had freedom of speech in front of the congregation. If he had to stand up and give counsel to the congregation relating to sexual matters, or, in particular, child abuse, then he would not have the confidence of the congregation, or he wouldn't have had freeness of speech in being able to say those sorts of things.

Q. That's because there were members in the congregation who knew this story?
A. That's true.

THE CHAIR: Q. You say in the letter that uncleanness had been committed on "several occasions". Do you see that?
A. Yes, I - I don't know if that's - would have been a little bit exaggerated there, but --

Q. Well, they're your words.
A. I've signed the letter, yes. That was - I wasn't the one that wrote it, but --

Q. Are we to understand that you were conveying that you accepted that there was accidental touching on several occasions?

A. I don't - I don't agree with the "several" occasions.

Q. But it's in the letter?
A. Yes, it is.

Q. Well, what are we to understand. Did you sign a letter that wasn't true?
A. I probably didn't think seriously enough about that wording at the time when I signed it. It was a generalisation of the situation and - yes, I guess, your Honour, I didn't take seriously the wording of it at that time.

Q. Well, here you were reporting on a serious allegation, but you say you didn't take the reporting, or the wording, seriously at the time?
A. I don't really know how to answer that, your Honour. It's - what you're saying is probably true, yes.

Q. How would you feel if you had made the complaint and the person who was reporting on the outcome didn't take seriously the wording in the letter that they were signing?
A. I can see the point that you're making, sir, yes.

Q. Tell me this: you told us earlier that apart from the touching of the breast allegation, [BCB] made other allegations to you; correct?
A. Yes, I believe so. Yes.

Q. There's no reference to those allegations at all in this letter, is there?
A. No.

Q. Why not?
A. I can't answer that, I'm sorry - not that I'm refusing to, it's just that I can't think of reasons why they're not in there.

MR STEWART: Q. When you record there "we recommended to him that he step down as an elder" and "He agreed to this", that seems to suggest you offered him the opportunity to step down, and he did, rather than you removed him. Is there a distinction to be had. How are we to understand that?
A. No, it's just an unfortunate choice of words there.

Q. So he was definitely deleted or removed?
A. Removed, yes.

Q. Then you say in the letter:

... we feel no further action or restrictions need apply.

Why was that? Did you consider there were actions or restrictions that might be imposed?
A. In the case of a judicial committee, restrictions against commenting and having parts on meetings and things are what we refer to as restrictions. At this time we didn't believe that Bill Neill needed to have those restrictions put upon him.

Q. What about not having church meetings, Bible studies, in his home? That strikes as an appropriate or potentially appropriate restriction which might offer some safety?
A. I agree, yes. I don't think that action was taken at the time.

Q. Well, it wasn't taken. The point is: did you consider it?
A. I can't recall considering it, no.

Q. Then if we look at the second-to-last paragraph on the second page, near the end of the paragraph, it says:

Also, brothers, I would recommend that once this has died down and it appears that Brother Neill again has the freedom of speech that he be recommended as an elder again so that he can be of help in the congregation as he has done in the past.

By this "dying down", you mean once the controversy has abated, I take it?
A. It would take a long time, many years in fact, for that - for that to have died down. Again, it's an unfortunate wording. In hindsight we would have worded that much differently to what it is there. Matters of this nature take many years, if ever, to die down completely.

Q. That was really the focus of your concern there, in taking action against Mr Neill was about his reputation; is that right?

A. Not at all.

Q. Well, his reputation in the congregation, his freedom of speech?
A. His - sorry, what was the question again?

Q. That was at the centre of your concern in deciding to remove him as an elder - his reputation in the congregation?
A. Not so much his reputation, but - oh, how can I word it?

Q. It appears your concern is with his efficacy as an elder?
A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?
A. That's right.

Q. Your concern as an elder there, as I understand it from this letter, was about the proper functioning of your organisation; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. It wasn't about the protection of children in your congregation?
A. Probably not.

Q. It wasn't about what support you could offer to [BCB]?
A. That must have had some bearing on it, but, yes, it was more with his qualifications to teach.

Q. You say in your statement that you understand that Bill Neill was later reappointed as an elder in a different congregation; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. As I understand it, you had nothing to do with that?
A. No, that's true.

Q. Under the existing practices, should you not have been consulted about that, having been the elder involved in his removal?
A. I was surprised at the time, yes.

Q. Then if we look at tab 74 of that bundle, this is now a letter from you earlier this year. You'll see it is to the service desk on 6 January 2015 and what you describe as

> ... a brief summary of events leading to the deletion of Brother Neill from serving as an elder in the Narrogin, WA, Congregation whilst I was serving there.

How did this letter come about?
A. I beg your pardon?

Q. How did this letter come about. What brought you to write this letter in 2015 to the branch?
A. Someone from the branch contacted me and asked me what my recollections were and would I please put them in a letter and send it to them.

Q. Was it explained to you why that information was being sought?
A. I think mention was made about the Royal Commission, but I thought it was one of the - one of the situations that was being looked at and it might proceed to the Royal Commission.

Q. By this time, of course, Bill Neill was deceased?
A. Yes.

Q. And you knew that?
A. Yes. I attended his funeral.

Q. And that was, as I understand it, about 11 years ago - would that be right?
A. Quite possibly. I don't know exactly the time, but, yes, that sounds about right.

Q. A goodly number of years ago?
A. Yes.

Q. Now, this correspondence is addressed to the service desk. I take it that it was someone from the service desk who contacted you in the way which you've mentioned?
A. Yes.

Q. In your understanding, what's the distinction between when you correspond with the service desk or the legal department?
A. It may have been a member of the legal department that contacted me, but the letter was addressed to the service department - service desk, yes.

Q. Moving away from this particular letter, generally as an elder when you're corresponding with the branch --
A. You send stuff to the service desk.

Q. -- it seems to me that some correspondence is with the legal department and some is with the service desk. I'm asking what your understanding is as to when you would communicate with the service desk as distinct from when you would communicate with the legal department?
A. If the legal department had said, "Send it to us at the legal department", that's how the letter would have been addressed. In this case they asked us to send it to the service department, or the service desk.

Q. But moving away from this letter, generally in your work as an elder, when would you contact the service desk as opposed to the legal department, and vice versa?
A. The legal department I would contact in cases pertaining to legal matters. Our information now is if a case of child abuse was raised, we would contact the legal desk straightaway. But, normally, anything goes through the service desk, then they assign it to the appropriate department from there.

Q. Just to understand you, so you'd contact the service desk but expect it to be passed on to the legal department, is that what you say?
A. They would decide if that's where it needed to go, yes. But as I said about contacting the legal department in matters pertaining to legal cases and things like that, if we needed direction in a hurry, that's who we'd contact.

Q. Generally, with regard to direction as to how to handle investigations and complaints, would that come from the service desk?
A. Yes.

Q. You say in that letter in the fourth paragraph:

> When [BCB] raised the allegations against Brother Bill concerning being touched inappropriately I viewed it very seriously. I listened to both to try and ascertain the facts ... Sadly, it became a matter of her word against his as there were no witnesses ... [BCB] was an attractive young sister and often got around the house in her nightwear as was the custom of the other children.

What do you consider to be the relevance of that observation?
A. That was one comment that Bill had made to me, that she was wearing her nightwear at the time.

Q. Well, it suggests that you thought that might have somehow lessened Bill Neill's culpability?
A. Not at all, no. In fact, it should have raised stronger warning bells than it did at the time, because it all - it pointed to the fact that he obviously had noticed it and he was affected by that.

Q. Because you accept, of course, that a child can't consent, can't validly consent to being sexually abused - you accept that, of course?
A. Yes.

Q. And can never be blamed for it?
A. Yes.

Q. That's in the church's own teachings, isn't it, that children can't seduce and should not be blamed?
A. Mmm.

MR STEWART: Those are my questions, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: Does anyone else have any questions?

MS GALLAGHER: Yes, I do.

<EXAMINATION BY MS GALLAGHER:

MS GALLAGHER: Q. My name is Gallagher and I represent [BCB].
A. Okay.

Q. Just in relation to the letter that counsel assisting was just referring to behind tab 74, you note in that letter, don't you - is that in front of you there?
A. Yes.

Q. Not only the part of the letter that was just referred to by counsel assisting, but you note also, don't you, that "Bill would kiss her good night as he did with his daughters" - do you see that there?

A. Yes.

Q. That was very much lessening Mr Neill's conduct, wasn't it? Do you understand what I mean by that? You know the allegation to have been, don't you, that he inserted his tongue into her mouth when he kissed her good night?
A. Bill never admitted to that. The way that he put it across was that he would say good night to all of the girls before they went to bed.

Q. So what about the accusation from the person who was abused - the accusation was, wasn't it, that the tongue was inserted into her mouth?
A. I believe so, yes. I can't - I can't recall that being said at the time, but it's quite possible that it was.

Q. You took no notes of your initial discussion with [BCB] and [BCC]?
A. No.

Q. Your recollection was that they came to your home, that is [BCB] and [BCC]; is that right?
A. That's what I recall, yes.

Q. You understand that [BCB]'s recollection is that you approached her after being told of an allegation from another member of the faith; correct?
A. That may be so. I don't recall that.

Q. And certainly if somebody has been told of an allegation of wrongdoing, the faith requires them to come forward and tell an elder; is that right?
A. Sorry, I don't understand that question.

Q. If somebody is told of a wrongdoing --
A. Yes.

Q. -- the Jehovah's Witness faith requires that person to inform an elder; isn't that so?
A. They give the - yes - the short answer, yes.

Q. And that's how you came - do you recall, that's how you came upon the information that there was an allegation of wrongdoing from Bill Neill, not from [BCB], but from another source?

A. No, I don't recall that.

Q. In some questions asked by counsel assisting, just as to taking Mr Neill to [BCB]'s home, your evidence was, is this correct, that you did not explain what the process was that was under way at that time; is that correct?
A. That's possible.

Q. Well, did you or did you not explain to her what was going on?
A. In the information here, it's put across that I went to see them with Bill on my own. I don't recall that happening. I thought I only went to see them with Doug Jackson and I don't recall it being in their home. Normally, those sort of events take place at the Kingdom Hall, which --

Q. You were 28 at the time, weren't you? Does that accord with your recollection?
A. I was about 30, 32.

Q. 32?
A. By 1992, yes.

Q. So still quite a young man?
A. That's right.

Q. How old was Bill Neill at the time, do you know?
A. I wouldn't like to hazard a guess.

Q. Certainly, he was more senior than you?
A. Absolutely, yes.

Q. He was a presiding overseer, wasn't he?
A. Yes.

Q. So that certainly if [BCB]'s recollection is accurate that you attended with Bill Neill, it would have been a situation where he would have been the most senior person in the room - do you agree with that proposition?
A. Certainly would have been the oldest, yes.

Q. Sorry?
A. He would have been the oldest and the most experienced from the church, yes.

Q. And the more senior member of the church in the room?
A. Mmm.

Q. And you know, don't you, that [BCB] and [BCC] were both quite devout at that time?
A. Yes.

Q. In the sense that it would have been obvious to you that you were, as an elder, trusted by them?
A. Yep.

Q. And that they were handing themselves over to your guidance - do you agree with that proposition?
A. Yes.

Q. So that, looking back on it now, can you see that taking the abuser to somebody's home is totally inappropriate?
A. Yes.

Q. Is it the case, sir, that the thrust of the inquiry in relation to somebody being involved in wrongdoing is to protect the congregation?
A. Yes.

Q. Could we go to tab 84 and page 0309, which is page 29, the second column. If I could refer you to the second column at about point 7 down the page, the sentence commencing:

It is not his status as an authority figure ...

Can you see that there in the second column?
A. No, not yet.

Q. I'm sorry, your Honour, I understand it is tab 84. I beg your pardon. It is Let Us Abhor What is Wicked. It is tab 85, page 29 in the top right of the page 0309. If you could go to the second column, about point 7 down that:

It is not his status as an authority figure ...

Do you see that, sir?

A. Not yet. Oh, yes.

Q.
It is not his status as an authority figure that should be of concern, but, rather, the unblemished purity of the congregation.

A. Yes.

Q. That was the purpose of your inquiry, wasn't it - to protect the congregation from Bill Neill?
A. Yes, yes.

Q. Not to protect [BCB]?
A. Well, her included in the congregation. She was part of the congregation.

Q. As a victim of abuse --
A. Yes.

Q. -- she wasn't protected, but as a member of the congregation you were seeking to protect her; is that right?
A. As well, yes.

Q. You indicated that you did not speak harshly to [BCB]. When you were being asked questions by counsel assisting he put to you that victims should be treated with kindness, and you agreed with that and indicated you didn't speak harshly to her?
A. Yes.

Q. Do you agree, though, that when a young woman has made allegations of sexual impropriety against an elder, that taking that elder to her is harsh treatment of her?
A. I can understand how she would view it that way, yes, and --

Q. Well, do you?
A. -- on the surface - if I try to put myself in her position, yes, I would feel exactly the same.

Q. In making this inquiry and going to her and having her face her abuser, or, that is, the accused face his accuser, it was all about disciplining Bill Neill, wasn't it?
A. Mmm-hmm.

Q. And certainly it's the case now that if there is a police inquiry on foot in regards to a matter, that disciplinary proceedings run parallel with that - do you agree with that?
A. I don't have any experience with that at this time, so I --

Q. In the sense that --
A. Sorry.

Q. -- if there is a police inquiry on foot, certainly members of the church and the congregation are told not to interfere with the police inquiry; is that right?
A. I would think that would be reasonable, yes. I don't remember instructions in that way, but it does make sense, yes.

Q. If you were to be confronted with this situation today, what would you do differently to what you did then?
A. The first thing would be to contact the branch for direction, look up any of the relevant information that we've got, the latest information, and proceed following their direction.

Q. Before contacting the branch, what would you do in relation to what you knew of the complaint?
A. Try and establish the facts from the information --

Q. How would you do that?
A. Often times, if someone comes to us, we hear the information just on a one-on-one, but I think the indications are that it's better to have two elders there so that we can present that to the branch with the two of us, like on a conference call or something.

Q. Specifically in relation to [BCB]'s situation, what would you do differently today, or would you conduct yourself in exactly the same way as you did?
A. No, I wouldn't do the same.

Q. What would you do differently?
A. Being the only other elder there, and if the circuit overseer wasn't due to visit like that, like he was in that case, I would have called an elder from another congregation and we would have heard her allegations together and then we would approach the branch for direction.

Q. Would you have a female, a sister, involved in relation to talking with the person who was making complaint about sexual impropriety?
A. That would be up to the person making the accusations, I would think. If she wanted to have someone there as a support, I think that would be the case.

THE CHAIR: Q. Mr Horley, I understand how the church is organised, but what the process means is that the investigation, in a case such as this one, of a woman's allegations is made entirely by men; correct?
A. I'm sorry, the --

Q. The investigation within the church is conducted entirely by men?
A. That's correct, yes.

Q. Do you think that's appropriate when the allegation comes from a woman, and maybe a young woman?
A. That's - that's the procedure that we have in place.

Q. I know, but I'm asking you a different question.
A. Well, that sort of comes into my personal feelings. I think I would still have to be bound by what the branch directs me to do.

Q. Secondly, as here, you, as an elder, were being asked to investigate allegations of a person who you had worked with as an elder.
A. Yes.

Q. Now, to an outsider, that doesn't seem like a fair process. Do you understand why that is?
A. Yes, and that's why we would have another elder there - in this case, the circuit overseer visited. He didn't know Bill as well as I did, so he tended to be a little bit more impersonal in the --

Q. Well, he might, but you are still there?
A. Yes.

Q. And you know this elder well and had worked with him.
A. Yes, and I remember at the time I was very shocked at the treatment or the allegations that were made against him. So, to me, he had betrayed me as much as the congregation - obviously not as much as the person that - the victim in this case, but, to me, it went against everything that we'd been taught and trained as as elders. Bill was a man that I had known for about 16 years, in growing up as a teenager in the congregation and looking to him and respecting him. Then being appointed as an elder, myself, being mentored by him in the way that we should treat the flock, with tenderness and care, and we were taught to be a hiding place, a refuge, somewhere they could go and seek help and to really care for their spiritual needs, and now this situation, Bill had completely betrayed all of those things. So it wasn't like I was looking at things from a siding with him. It was sticking with the teachings that I had been trained in and looking at it impartially and trying to look at it that way.

Q. You ultimately reported that his conduct was the result of accidental touching, didn't you?
A. That was his description.

Q. That's what you reported.
A. Okay.

Q. That's what you found.
A. Right.

Q. Correct?
A. That was - yes, that was only - that's all that he admitted to.

Q. Yes, and that's what your finding was. Now, again, to an outsider, could you see that an outsider may think that when someone who you know well is being investigated by you, that that may not be a fair process?
A. I can understand how they would see that, yes.

Q. Do you think that that's a process that the church should change?
A. I don't know how to comment on that. They may have made changes in that process - not according to the book that we have, but where it says that we contact the branch, then - then the direction that they give in that instance would - may give us further bearing on that.

THE CHAIR: Yes.

MS GALLAGHER: Q. I won't keep you much longer, Mr Horley, but have you come to know about the full extent of [BCB]'s allegation against Bill Neill?

A. No. I only know what was dealt with at the time.

Q. So you don't know that, for about three or four years, she was subject to indecent assaults, effectively, where she was tongue-kissed by this elder?
A. No, I'm not aware of that.

Q. That she was, on one occasion, forced to sit on the bathroom floor, spread her legs and have his finger inserted into her vagina?
A. No, I'm not aware of that.

Q. Does that come as a shock to you --
A. Absolutely.

Q. -- that she actually endured that, or experienced that at the hands of Bill Neill?
A. Yes, it's a shock, yes.

Q. And do you think the fact that it's only coming to light now has something to do with the process that you engaged in when she made an initial complaint?
A. I feel very saddened if that is the case.

Q. It's understandable that it would be - do you agree with that - in the sense that she's confronted with her abuser and somebody who she would know was close to her abuser, and you've just given that evidence. It's understandable that she wouldn't make full disclosure - that's correct, isn't it?
A. I can see what you're saying, yes.

Q. She needs a more nurturing and supportive environment in which to make full disclosure, doesn't she?
A. It would appear that way, yes, from what you're saying.

Q. What is the church going to do about that? Do you have any thoughts on that, going into the future?
A. I don't have any comments on how they arrive at the decisions that they make. I just follow the procedures that they have there in place. At the time we did the best we could with the information that we had. Now, handling the situation again might be completely different.

MS GALLAGHER: Thank you, your Honour, nothing further.

THE CHAIR: Does anyone else have any questions.

MR COYNE: No, your Honour.

MR TOKLEY: No, your Honour.

MR STEWART: Nothing further, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: Thank you, Mr Horley, you're excused.

THE WITNESS WITHDREW

MR STEWART: The next witness is Mr Doug Jackson.

THE CHAIR: Mr Jackson, it's necessary for you to be sworn. Will you take an oath on the Bible or an affirmation?

MR JACKSON: Affirmation.

THE CHAIR: Affirmation?

THE WITNESS: On the Bible.

THE CHAIR: It's your choice, which one would you do.

THE WITNESS: The Bible.

<DOUGLAS JAMES JACKSON, sworn: [3.31pm]

<EXAMINATION BY MR STEWART:

MR STEWART: Q. Will you state your full name, Mr Jackson?
A. Douglas James Jackson.

Q. And, Mr Jackson, do you have before you a copy of your statement dated 10 July 2015?
A. I do.

Q. Are there any amendments or corrections you'd like to make to the statement?
A. I don't think so.

Q. Will you confirm the statement as being true and correct?

A. I do.

MR STEWART: I tender the statement, your Honour.

THE CHAIR: That will be exhibit 29-004.

EXHIBIT #29-004 STATEMENT OF DOUGLAS JAMES JACKSON DATED 10/07/2015

MR STEWART: Q. You were baptised as a Jehovah's Witness in 1963; is that right?
A. Correct.

Q. You were appointed as an elder in the Swan Hill congregation in Victoria in 1971?
A. Correct.

Q. Having been a Witness for only four years; is that right?
A. Four years?

Q. You had been, when you were first appointed an elder?
A. Oh - no, 1963 I was baptised, 1971 an elder.

Q. In other words, only four years from being baptised to being an elder - I beg your pardon, that's my arithmetic there. I apologise. You subsequently served as an elder in other congregations in Victoria, South Australia and Western Australia; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. And in 1990 you were appointed by the Australia branch to serve as a circuit overseer?
A. Correct.

Q. What does that entail, Mr Jackson?
A. I would visit 20 congregations in a circuit - around 20, it could be less, could be more - and it involved giving - having at that time, which is not the case now, three meetings, Tuesday, Thursday and then one on Sunday with the congregation, and also a meeting that was held with the elders and ministerial servants with an outline from the governing body, and we'd share in the ministry as well during that particular week with various ones in the congregation.

Q. How many congregations would you typically have within your responsibility?

A. Around 20, but it could be more, it could be less. It just depends. In that circuit, I can't remember now.

Q. You were the circuit overseer responsible for the Narrogin congregation from 1990 to the end of 1992; is that right?
A. I don't think it was the end, but it was some time in 1992 that I changed, but I'm not too sure.

Q. But it's in that period that you had an involvement in the allegations by [BCB] against Bill Neill; is that right?
A. Correct.

Q. So it was in that capacity as circuit overseer responsible for, amongst others, the Narrogin congregation?
A. Correct.

Q. To your recollection, how big was the Narrogin congregation?
A. Oh, I'm not too sure - around 80.

Q. And you then served as circuit overseer until 1998; is that right?
A. That's correct - not on that circuit, though.

Q. And then as district overseer until 2014?
A. Correct.

Q. What is the role of a district overseer?
A. A district overseer is mainly looking after what we used to call circuit assemblies on weekends which were two days, and they took up the majority of our time, plus we'd share in the ministry with the circuit overseer as well - basically, it was giving talks at these circuit assemblies.

Q. Do you hold any position of responsibility in the church currently?
A. Only serving as an elder.

Q. In which congregation is that?
A. Windsor Gardens in South Australia.

Q. In your statement, paragraph 2.2, if we can call that up, you say:

From about the 1990s I recall that matters of child sexual abuse began to be dealt with as a special category and elders were directed to report any such complaints or allegations immediately to the Branch Office and to follow their direction in regard to reporting the matter to the authorities ...

Do you know what brought about that change?
A. I don't know for sure. I would say it was because of the situation of child abuse starting to be increased and these matters being brought to the fore.

Q. Was it that the particular issue was about giving direction with regard to reporting the matters to the authorities, or was it handling it more generally?
A. At that time, there was information relating to reporting the matter to the authorities, but that was brought about later on in the 1990s and into the 2000s.

Q. In paragraph 4.1 of your statement --
A. I don't seem to have that. Sorry.

Q. It should also be on the screen in front of you.
A. Oh.

Q. You say:

[BCB]'s case is the only case involving child sexual abuse in which I have ever been involved.

The records available to the Royal Commission suggest there has been another case. You are going to be shown a name. I am not wanting you to say the name out aloud, because I'd rather keep it confidential, but it's to see whether that perhaps jogs your memory as to another case that you were involved in?
A. No, sorry.

Q. It doesn't jog your memory? So as far as you can remember, sitting there now, there was just this one case of child sexual abuse in your years that you had to deal with?
A. Yes.

Q. You were the circuit overseer and in that capacity you were told by Max Horley about the allegations against Bill Neill; is that right?

A. Correct.

Q. Horley and Neill were the two elders of that congregation at that time - the only two elders; is that right?
A. As far as I can remember, I think that was the case, yes.

Q. Because Frank Shaylor had retired and moved back to Perth is evidence we've heard from Mr Horley?
A. Yeah, I - yeah.

Q. What do you recall Mr Horley telling you?
A. Well, as far as I know, it is that he approached me and mentioned to me regarding the allegations that had been made and that we - and then we decided that we were going to investigate it more.

Q. And what were the allegations?
A. Well, I was under the impression that it was just that Bill Neill had been watching [BCB] in the shower and, also, too, I think it was mentioning the touching of the breast once.

Q. That's the most you can remember of what Max Horley told you when he informed you about this matter?
A. I think that was the case, yes.

Q. At the stage that he informed you, what did he tell you that he had done about it up until then?
A. I would say that he would have investigated it, but I can't remember exactly what he said.

Q. Did he tell you whether he had met with [BCB] and/or with Mr Neill?
A. I would say that he would have met with both, yes, but I can't remember if he told me that.

Q. And then, as I understand it, you and he resolved to investigate the matter together; is that right?
A. Correct.

Q. What did you do in order to investigate it?
A. Well, we had meetings with [BCB] and with Mr Neill and, also, others knew about it and we also got some information from them as well within the congregation. I can't remember how many, but I know that possibly there was a few others as well.

Q. Do you remember what information they were able to give you?
A. I cannot remember that, no, just the allegations that had been made regarding the watching in the shower. I don't know if it dealt with touching of the breast or any other activity at all by him.

Q. Because there was no-one else who was a witness to these events, was there?
A. No, no.

Q. So you say you met with [BCB] and with Bill Neill. That was in a common meeting; is that right?
A. I can't recall whether it was, first of all, just through a common meeting, or whether we met separately with [BCB] and, also, with Bill Neill, and then even collectively, I'm not sure.

Q. [BCB] says that she was unaware of the purpose of the meetings that she was attending or what role those meetings were playing. Do you accept that?
A. Oh, no, I don't, because we would have told her why we were meeting because of her concern of what was happening.

Q. I'll come back to the question of what you would have told her, but dealing first with the question of what you actually remember, do you remember anything that you did tell her, or is it too long ago?
A. No, too long, I'm sorry.

Q. Reverting to the less safe ground, as it were, what do you say you would have told her?
A. How do you mean, what would I say?

Q. You started saying earlier, "I would have told her something about what the meeting was about." I'm just asking you --
A. I just said --

Q. You and I must try to not speak at the same time --
A. Sorry.

Q. -- Mr Jackson. What is it that you think you would have told her in explaining what the meeting or meetings were about?

A. Well, about the allegations that she made against Bill Neill.

Q. That you were investigating them?
A. Yes.

Q. And more than that?
A. Possibly we would have told her - asked her whether these were true, the watching in the shower and the touching of the breast as well. That would be - I'd say that's what I would have said the meeting was about.

Q. You would appreciate that what you were doing was part of a process which is set out in the church's documents and protocols; is that right?
A. Correct, yes.

Q. You and Mr Horley were doing an investigation to see whether there was sufficient evidence to establish these allegations as true which, had they been established, would have led to a judicial committee; is that right?
A. Yes, yes. Yes, that's true.

Q. And you were experienced in those matters - those procedural matters?
A. Well, it was the first situation that I've ever had where I was dealing with that type of thing.

Q. Well, specifically, child sexual abuse?
A. Yes, yes.

Q. But you'd had other investigations in relation to --
A. Yes.

Q. -- other serious allegations of one form or another, I take it?
A. Yes. Yes, but nothing like that.

Q. Perhaps adultery?
A. Yes.

Q. Or --
A. Yes.

Q. -- lying?

A. Yeah - not lying, but adultery, yes.

Q. And various others. So you were familiar with the procedure you were embarking on?
A. Yes.

Q. And you understand that [BCB] would not have been familiar with that procedure?
A. Correct.

Q. So she would have these two men - you and Mr Horley - asking her questions, but not knowing how that fitted in to an overall procedure?
A. That's correct, although in the publications, with situations like that, or adultery, lying, there is mention, even back then in the 1990s of the procedures, so the publications did have a bit of information regarding what would happen.

Q. Well, the publication you're referring to is the publication which is for elders - the Elders' Handbook, isn't it?
A. No, there's information in The Watchtowers and the Awake! relating to that. Even with child abuse, there's information there.

Q. Well, specifically, I'm addressing the procedures to be followed.
A. Oh, right, sorry.

Q. Because what [BCB] says is that she didn't know what these meetings were about or how they fitted in to any overall procedure, and you would accept that she wouldn't know that?
A. Well, as far as I can recall, maybe she didn't, but I thought I - we would have explained it to her.

Q. Well, all you've said you would have explained is that you were investigating her allegations and asked her --
A. Yes.

Q. -- whether they were true?
A. Yes.

Q. And she'd be left in the relative dark as to how that fitted into whether there might be a judicial committee, what might happen thereafter --

A. Yes.

Q. -- what evidence would be sufficient, what evidence would not be sufficient, do you agree?
A. Yes, correct

Q. And you see that that would leave her in a position of vulnerability and perhaps confusion?
A. Yes. I do now, yes.

Q. So you would accept that in investigative procedures such as this, an important component to support someone who is making allegations of abuse is to fully apprise them of the procedure and what's happening so they feel comfortable in it?
A. Yes, and I think that's what we've been trained to do more so in these later years.

Q. Mr Jackson, back to the particular meetings that you had, do I understand you to say that you're not sure whether there was a meeting that had [BCB] and Mr Neill in at the same time, or do you accept that there was such a meeting?
A. I cannot recall it, but I'd say, yes, there was.

Q. That would be the normal procedure at that time, wouldn't it?
A. Yes.

Q. Would that be the normal procedure even today, in other words, that someone who is making serious allegations against someone must be prepared to make them in their presence?
A. Well, now it's a matter of, first of all, hearing both sides separately and then maybe trying to get them together to see if it's correct or not.

Q. Even hearing them separately, if you then decided as part of that preliminary investigation that there was sufficient evidence and to convene a judicial committee, you would then have to put them together; is that right - in other words, the witnesses, including the abused, would have to speak in the presence of the accused?
A. Well, not - yes, but not necessarily always the case. It could be that, you know, there was convincing evidence from others as well. Yes, you put them under pressure if you put them both together.

Q. That's my point. You say if there were two other witnesses of the incident, not the person who was abused, and the perpetrator hasn't admitted or confessed - you have two other witnesses. In that situation you may not have to have the person who has suffered the abuse giving evidence in the presence of the accused; is that right?
A. Yes.

Q. But where there isn't that situation, where there aren't two independent witnesses, then she would have to? She would have --
A. Yes.

Q. -- to give evidence in the presence of the accused?
A. Yes. I just can't remember whether we did or whether we didn't under those circumstances.

Q. Well, you didn't - to be fair, what you were doing, you hadn't reached judicial committee stage --
A. No.

Q. -- and you never did; is that right? But talking generally now, even the present position is that if a judicial committee is formed, leaving aside the situation where one has at least two other independent witnesses, the victim of the abuse would have to bear witness or give evidence in the face of the accused; is that right?
A. Yes, yes.

Q. And that's set out in the Shepherd the Flock of God --
A. Yes.

Q. -- handbook, isn't it?
A. Yes.

Q. And you yourself I think accepted a moment ago that that puts a lot of strain and pressure on the person who has suffered, doesn't it?
A. Yes, it does, and that's where, even now, we're encouraged - if there's some type of support, for example, in child abuse, maybe the parents, the husband or wife, or other supports, maybe a close friend, something like that. It just depends on the circumstances.

THE CHAIR: Q. Mr Jackson, do you have any knowledge of the developments in the investigation and trial of sexual assault matters in the ordinary course?

A. No, sorry, I don't, your Honour.

Q. You don't know anything about the research which has led to changes in process so that victims don't have to face the alleged abuser in the course of the trial?
A. I don't, but I'd say that's why our organisation has changed where it's not necessarily doing that anymore, and that we do have a support with us, if required.

Q. It's not a question of support; it's a question of the traumatic circumstance for a victim --
A. Yes.

Q. -- in having to confront --
A. Yes.

Q. -- their alleged abuser. You understand?
A. Yes.

Q. You say that's now understood by your church?
A. I'd say - I'd say it would be, yes.

Q. When you say you say it would be, can you point to anything that confirms that it is understood?
A. Well, offhand, no, I can't, sorry, but I'd say the way that now we are dealing with matters that we must be taking that into consideration.

Q. Perhaps you can explain that to me? How are you dealing with matters that suggests you're taking that into consideration?
A. In a situation of child abuse then, one, we would have some type of support there maybe from - not "maybe", but from those sources, either friend, parents, husband, wives, and maybe we don't - because I haven't been involved with them, maybe we don't directly have that one-on-one, where we used to many times, if it was just one-on-one basis of one accusation against the other.

Q. I'm not sure I'm understanding, but the civil courts have come to understand that the trauma that can be involved for a victim in having face-to-face contact with the alleged abuser - it can be a very traumatic experience.
A. Yes.

Q. Does your church understand that?

A. I would say yes, they do now, yes.

Q. How would it be accommodated then if the investigation is in relation to an allegation by a woman that she was abused by a man in the church?
A. Well, first of all, we would - maybe two would listen to her and get some comments from her about the allegation and then we would see the person separately and talk to that individual.

Q. Then what would you do after that?
A. Well, we'd contact the branch if we felt there was - those allegations were correct and were truthful and follow the procedures, either talking to the legal side of the branch, and then take the procedure or take the information from them that they would give us.

Q. When you say you'd take those steps if you thought the allegation was truthful, if you just have an interview with a female complainant, who says she's the victim, and then follow that with an interview with the alleged abuser, would that be sufficient for you to be able to determine that the allegation was truthful?
A. Yes, it would.

Q. So you wouldn't need a second witness?
A. Not necessary under those circumstances like that.

Q. Is that a significant change from some years ago?
A. Very significant, yes.

Q. Is that change relevant to sexual assault and other types of misconduct, or only sexual assault?
A. Well, offhand, I'm not too sure just how to answer that, because I'm not aware of it, and I haven't been involved in anything lately and I'm just not sure the material really has any - that we have had anything relevant to that.

THE CHAIR: Yes, Mr Stewart.

MR STEWART: As your Honour pleases.

Q. Mr Jackson, are you familiar with the manual or guide Shepherd the Flock of God? Can we have tab 120 on the screen, and particularly at Ringtail 90, otherwise page 89. This has applied since 2010; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. It's essentially a guide to elders; is that right?
A. Yes, it is.

Q. And as to how to handle various situations. You'll see this particular chapter, chapter 7, sets out the judicial hearing procedure - do you see that?
A. Yes.

Q. Towards the foot of that page you'll see in paragraph 2:

> The Chairman should invite the accused to make a personal statement. If the accused contends that he is innocent, the witnesses to the wrongdoing should be presented and their testimony be given in the presence of the accused. It is best that the witnesses give their testimony in person.

Then --
A. I just haven't got that coming up. I've got 2, but not the rest of it.

Q. The top of the next page. There is the possibility then:

> However, it may be that the witnesses live a great distance away or for some reason are not able to be physically present. If so, their testimony may be presented in the hearing of the accused by a secure phone call or perhaps submitted in writing and read to the accused.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you saying that that exception might also be used to allow, in cases of child sexual abuse, or sexual assault generally, the accuser to not be in the presence of the accused?
A. Here it's if the person lives a long distance away, but it can still - again, you're looking at the circumstances of the case and just the emotional condition of the person.

THE CHAIR: Q. I think Mr Stewart is suggesting to you that that is not to be found in this document.
A. Oh, I'm using the principle of that, though, just with your question.

Q. I think he's putting to you that the principle is not there, either.
A. No. Okay, so maybe then it doesn't apply.

Q. Well, he'd like to know what the true position is.
A. This is the position here where it says:

> However, it may be that the witnesses live a great distance away or for some reason are not able to be physically present.

So I can't go beyond that. But sometimes situations arise where, you know, the emotional state of the person, we try to help them as much as we can.

Q. This document proceeds, you'll see in the previous page I think it is, the starting point for the judicial hearing procedure is to try to put the accused at ease. Do you see that?
A. Yep, I do, thank you.

Q. Then in the first paragraph those words are placed in heavy type. Do you see that?
A. Yes.

Q. There is no mention there, or anywhere, of how you manage the victim, is there - or the accuser?
A. No, but we have had Watchtowers that relate to how we need to be very conscious of the person as well as regards to the way that they are going through what they're going through, the emotional state.

Q. Well, you mean that the person who brings the allegation may be suffering considerable stress --
A. Sorry, no, I thought you meant the person. Yeah.

Q. My question is directed to: there doesn't seem to be any acknowledgment that the person who brings the allegation may be suffering stress and need assistance. Do you see that?
A. Yes, yes. Yeah.

Q. Can you help me --
A. That's correct.

Q. -- with why that's not there?
A. No, I can't. Sorry, no.

THE CHAIR: Mr Stewart, I think we'll come back in the morning.

MR STEWART: I have just one question about this page that's open, if I might.

Q. At page 90, Ringtail 91, just on this question, you see paragraph 3 on this question of observers, I understood you to say that your understanding is that the present position is that observers can be present to give moral support, but you see this document says expressly observers should not be present for moral support. Do you see that?
A. Yes, yes. Yes, but --

Q. This is the guide you have to follow, isn't it?
A. Yes, it is, but again, there have been information as regards to situations where, for example, parents, if they have been asked, they can go there, through letters that we've had, where they have been told - we have been told that if it is a minor, parents can be there, a husband or wife, if the guilty party wants to have them there, they can do that. But, again, that does say that there. I'm just quoting other information that we've had, for example, letters later than 2010.

THE CHAIR: We'll come back to that in the morning. We'll adjourn until 10 o'clock.
